Tom – Thanks for the cooperation Kim and I got at CJCF yesterday. I write to urge prompt action regarding [REDACTED]. I am not a clinician but I have been representing mentally ill inmates for 37 years. Mr. [REDACTED] strikes me as extremely mentally ill. More importantly, he seems to be experiencing excessive seclusion – particularly in the Observation Cell on Oak – which appears to make him worse.

I do not have his file. Only my interview. He reports that he is taking significant psych meds. Staff and the client both reported that he bangs his head frequently. He had fresh head injuries as I spoke to him. Something drives him to self destructive behavior and whatever has been tried so far does not seem to be working. I certainly got the impression that he remains at a current risk of seriously harming himself. I ask that DYS, Dr. Weisman and Dr. Glindmeyer take a careful look at this young man and act promptly to ensure his safety and adequate treatment. Thanks very much.

I will certainly check into this asap. I do know that for the documents requested by Dr. Weisman (which were listed in your summary as due on Jan. 6th), we were following her mid-January deadline because we were working under the understanding that she needed documents for a report and plaintiff's counsel needed different documents for the Jan. 29th conference. I'll get back to you with a response.

Subject: Fwd: Summary of parties' agreement re: follow-up to Glindmeyer and Weisman reports

Hi Judy,

We need some further explanation from you. You said in your recent email that Defendant has provided all of the documents and met all of the deadlines agreed to in chambers. I am forwarding the email that I sent out to everyone on Dec. 22nd. It includes an attached summary of the parties' agreement in chambers.

As far as we can tell, DYS has not provided any of the documents and information on the second page of the attached summary.

Additionally, DYS has not provided the items listed on the first page under the heading "QA/QI and peer review for mental health" or under the heading "discipline for youth on the mental health caseload". [Note that we agreed with Dustin's alternate definition of "frequent flyers," which he included in an email response to this Dec. 22nd email.]

I have also attached a short memo that Dr. Weisman wrote up for Will explaining what she is able to report on (by Monday) based on what she's been provided so far, and what she's not able to report on.

It seems as though DYS has overlooked quite a few of the items that were included in this summary. Can you please explain what happened?

Thanks,
Terry and Will

Dear DYS administrators, DYS counsel, S.H. counsel, and DOJ,

On Thursday we discussed various follow-up items from the reports written by Dr. Glindmeyer and Dr. Weisman. I have attached a summary.

If anyone needs clarification on any of the items in the summary, please let us know by close of business on Monday.

The deadline for the documentation itemized in the attached summary is January 6th. If you need a couple of extra days, let us know -- we have some wiggle room on that deadline, but we are aiming to circulate our final mental health and psychiatry reports on Jan. 13th, so we'll need all of the documentation sometime on the week of January 6th. We plan to file the final reports with the Court before January 25th.

Thanks,
Terry

Silvia and Bo,

It was a pleasure speaking with the two of you this morning and I believe our conversation was very productive. Before I addressed the potential for contracting with Kelly with Director Reed, I wanted to drill down and see exactly what we are dealing with and looked at the numbers for November.

Out of the 10 young men that were referenced in Kelly's report, the following five are all that remain at Scioto: [REDACTED], with the caveat that [REDACTED] is scheduled to be released tomorrow.

The following represents the seclusion HOURS for the month of November for the above youth:

[REDACTED] 4.5 hours
[REDACTED] 1.45 hours
[REDACTED] 142.3 hours (Act of Violence)
[REDACTED] 80.93 hours (Act of Violence)
[REDACTED] 1.0 hour

As you can see, the seclusion hours are not alarming for these youth. After reviewing this email, please advise if your position has changed.

Judy:

I've reviewed your letter and the email from Al. I've also discussed the allegations with Dr. Weisman. Here is my opinion.

1. Andi did not step outside of her monitor boundaries in following up on this kid's situation as reported to us by Al. In fact, I explicitly asked her to do so. Al reported his concerns about youth ██████ and requested that DYS and the monitors look into it. The concerns Al reported relate precisely to ██████ ssue that remains in this case--seclusion of youth with mental health disorders. Al informed us that ██████ mother was actively involved with him and therefor she would be a good source of information ██████ s. We are authorized to gather information from any source we deem necessary such as staff, youth, advocates, oversight bodies and family members. We have done so throughout the span of this case and we will continue to do so.

2. Andi maintains that she didn't release private medical information to anyone without the youth's consent. I have no reason to believe she did. Andi didn't have any private medical information to release.

3. Andi maintains that she didn't render psychological services or a psychological evaluation. I have no reason to believe she did. She never spoke with this youth. And when she spoke with his mother, she was merely gathering information relevant to her review of the seclusion of youth on the mental health case load.

5. There is nothing slanderous about Andi's statement in her report. She is reporting what ██████ mother stated to her. However, we will adjust the tone of that statement before submitting the report to ██████ for the record.

There have been many situations in the past where in the course of our monitoring we have uncovered an individual case that required urgent attention or that an urgent case is brought to our attention by plaintiffs council or other individuals. When that happens, we try to get it to the attention of the appropriate DYS officials as soon as we can. This was simply another one of those instances and it appears that this youth is now getting the attention he needed. How is that not a good thing? I assure you that is what Judge Marbley expects of us.

I am willing to seek Judge Marbley's opinion on this matter or you can bring it to him directly. But I advise you to drop this distraction and get refocused on resolving the remaining substantive issues in the case. The Attorney General's office has been trying to get Dr. Weisman removed from this case for over a year. Rather than shoot the messenger, I suggest you address the message.

Will Harrell

Dear Judy – Will shared with us your letter requesting Dr. Weisman’s resignation. Plaintiffs do not agree to your request. As you may know from previous disputes the agreement of Plaintiffs’ counsel is necessary in order to remove a member of the monitoring team. We have not even been advised of the facts of the underlying dispute.

Here is what I know. Because of concern for one youth’s safety, I requested DYS and the monitor team experts to look into the circumstances of a specific youth I interviewed last Friday. The youth called his mother who in turn called me. She had information on his history. I passed her name and number to Will and the monitor experts and it is my understanding that Will requested that Dr. Weisman talk to the mother. There is absolutely nothing wrong with those actions. It is not unusual. It has always been our practice to permit members of the monitoring team to access information from persons with knowledge. See e.g., Doc. 108 at page 82 where Monitors are allowed “unobstructed access to staff and youth and other persons having information relevant to the implementation of this Stipulation.” I spoke with the youth’s mom this morning and she reports that she speaks with her son by phone frequently and visits at least once a month. She seems genuinely excited that he will get effective treatment as result of the current efforts. It seems to me everyone is working to make that happen.

As far as I know the needs of the youth are now being evaluated. That was the goal. There is no basis here for DYS to seek anyone’s resignation. Please call me to discuss the matter.

RE: Use of Programmatic Restraints and Restructuring of Progress Unit

Dear Attorneys for S.H. and the Department of Justice:

DYS has decided to make the following changes to the Progress Unit:

First, the Progress Unit will be restructured in such a way that any youth admitted to Progress will be placed on Transition Phase I. Further, any youth demoted from Transition Phase II will be demoted only to Transition Phase I. No youth will be demoted from Transition Phase I.

Second, incidental to this change, DYS will no longer be using programmatic restraints.

These changes will be formalized and incorporated into policy as soon as possible. During this transition time, DYS will neither admit nor demote youth into Phase I, nor will it use programmatic restraints.

Thank you for your continued input and patience as DYS makes these changes.

Very truly yours,

MIKE DeWINE

RE: Results of Seclusion Analysis

DATE: November 8, 2013

As you know, while I was on site at Scioto during the week of October 14, 2013, I became curious about the accumulation of seclusion hours for certain youth. While on site, I noted that the IH Officer and Superintendent used a tempered approach in the number of seclusion hours ordered as a sanction for individual AOVs (e.g., they did not order the maximum permissible, but more often something less). However, I also noticed that the same youth's names kept coming up in the documentation, over and over again.

I did not have time to further investigate this while I was on site, so upon returning home, I requested additional documents to examine this "accumulation" question. Using the AMS seclusion reports for the entire 6-month monitoring period, I calculated the number of hours/days each youth spent in seclusion. At first, I simply estimated the number of days the youth was in custody during that time, e.g., if he had any seclusion time during the month of June, I assumed he was there for the entire month. Once I obtained the preliminary results, I felt the need to make the analysis more precise and requested the exact admission and release dates for each youth so that I could know the precise number of days in custody, and therefore the proportion of that time that the youth spent in seclusion.

The results of this analysis are summarized in the table below. It includes youth whose total seclusion hours/days was 10% or more of their time in custody during the 6-month period. [Note: the total time in seclusion was not consecutive.] Of course, the AMS records show that there are some youth who spent very little time in seclusion. However, the AMS records also show that there are a number of youth who spent a considerable amount of time (20, 30, 40, nearly 50 days) in seclusion. Depending on how long the youth was in custody, this could amount to significant proportions of his time at Scioto.

As you know, I have serious concerns about the use of seclusion as a sanction:

- The risk of self-harm increases when youth are isolated. Approximately ½ of the suicides that occur in juvenile correctional facilities occur among youth who are in disciplinary seclusion.
- Isolation has the potential to exacerbate mental illnesses.
- Seclusion suppresses violent behavior in the moment, but does nothing to address the underlying causes of it. Instead, youth often emerge from seclusion feeling angry, frustrated and irritable—likely the very emotions that triggered their violent behavior in the first place.

- Seclusion disengages youth from the people and programs that they need to access in order to develop the awareness, skills and desire to control their violent behavior.

Although I believe it to be ineffective, when youth experience seclusion in very small doses, I don't necessarily believe it is harmful. However, when youth's exposure to seclusion accumulates, as it has for the youth listed in the table below, I believe the risk of harm is much more significant.

I offer these data as a starting point for a conversation about how to mitigate these risks for the youth who have chronic, aggressive misconduct. Obviously, preventing the misconduct via effective treatment is the best solution. Dr. Glindmeyer is reviewing these youth's mental health records and may be able to make some recommendations toward that end. When treatment is not sufficient, finding ways to address the youth's behavior that are compatible with, rather than counterproductive to, the goal of rehabilitation seems essential.

I plan to summarize these results in the upcoming Monitor's Report, but hope that we can initiate a problem-solving discussion about where to go from here in the meantime.

Respectfully,

Kelly Dedel, Ph.D.

RE: Facility Closure

I want to inform you of the Department's decision to close the Scioto Juvenile Correctional Facility (SJCF) on May 3, 2014. Over the course of the past two years, the DYS population has dropped from an average of 685 youth in October 2011 to 525 youth in October 2013. With a 23 percent drop in population, closing the facility improves the efficiency of our operations.

As of yesterday, there were 38 youth at SJCF (20 males and 18 females who reside separately). Male youth will be gradually reassigned to the remaining facilities according to their security, educational and programming needs. I am confident that our staff is well-equipped to handle these youth safely and effectively. We are evaluating the appropriate placement options for our female youth, including placement at private residential facilities and Community Corrections Facilities (CCFs), and will certainly keep you informed as the plan advances.

We are required to follow all layoff procedures according to union contracts and the Ohio Revised Code; however, we will offer a DYS position to all staff impacted by this closure and who are not ready to retire. During the next few weeks, we will work closely with the affected bargaining unit and exempt staff to identify positions for which they are qualified.

Thank you for your cooperation and support. Please do not hesitate to contact us with any questions or concerns by emailing questions@dys.ohio.gov.

S.H. v. Reed

Re: Compliance with Consent Order Provisions regarding Mental Health

Submitted by: Andrea Weisman, Ph.D.

December 16, 2013

Sub-topic II.C.1.a. QA/QI and peer review for mental health and psychiatry

Mental Health Compliance Rating – Partial Compliance

Methodology: Peer Review forms were received from each facility: CJCF – N=6, CHJCF – N=8, Scioto – N=7, IRJCF – N=6.

Observations: These reviews are titled Clinical File Reviews and reflect provider's assessment of 14 areas of concern including, whether the ITP is strength-based, whether there is evidence that parents/guardians have been communicated with, whether the SOAP format was utilized in the documentation of group and individual sessions, etc. The newly created form provides check boxes (Compliant, Non-Compliant and N/A). Problems noted include: when non-compliant or N/A is checked there frequently is no narrative explaining why the rating was given. In addition, there are numerous examples of unchecked boxes or multiple responses to the same question. This check box approach does not really get at the quality of treatment provided or the clinical efficacy of their interventions. In order to determine the efficacy of treatment, DYS would, for example, need to look at such issues as whether the Sex Offender program is working, and for which populations of youth is it working? Are there racial, intelligence, psychiatric diagnostic factors that correlate with youth's ability to complete the program in a timely way. DYS would also need to examine such issues as what sub-groups of youth are effectively participating in their CBT curriculum or individual therapy, as evidenced by youth engaging in fewer acts of violence or meeting treatment objectives. And DYS would be advised to look at whether group and individual services are being offered at the recommended frequency, also by the demographic variables identified above.

In addition, Behavioral Health Peer Review forms specifically focused on ITPs were received from CJCF (N=16). These forms assess the ITP objectives in terms of the acronym SMART: Specific (What do we want them to accomplish?), Measurable (Concrete criteria established to measure progress. How much, how many, how will I know when it is accomplished), Attainable (Plan the steps and associated timeframe wisely), Realistic (Is the youth willing and able to meet the objective?) and Timely (Are the time frames associated with objective). This is a form that collects provider's responses on 5 separate Likert scales which range from strongly disagree to strongly agree (with "neutral" in the center of the scale. Most providers rated the ITPs as meeting SMART expectations.

Since ITPs were also presented for review, it was possible to determine the accuracy of ratings on the SMART Peer review forms. For example, one form which rated the ITP positively on all indicators, in fact contained an objective that read "Learn and practice Skill Card #12: Following instructions and Skill Card #1: Listening over the next 30 days." In still another, the objective read "(Youth) and I will continue working together in individual sessions to identify his coping skills, coping strategies, common thinking errors and his goals, dreams and hopes for the future. This social worker plans on continuing to provide regular support, encouragement and advice in order to aid (youth) in balancing his thinking. We will complete the CBT packet entitled "Functional Behaviors – Making Choices that Work." Neither of these objectives identifies the new skill the youth will learn. I have provided consistent feedback over the years : Talking about completion of skill cards or CBT packets is not the same thing as skill acquisition. If the objective is completion of an assignment, the providers aren't measuring whether the problem behavior has decreased when they monitor for progress. And referencing what the social worker will do to provide support and encouragement is also not appropriate for inclusion in the statement of an objective. As a consequence, this peer review process has not meaningfully addressed the integrity of the ITPs.

There are additional problems with the Peer Review process. Many of the SMART Review forms are inaccurately filled out. With some providers rating that they "strongly disagree" that an objective meets the SMART indicators while the accompanying narrative would suggest the provider actually found the objectives to be compliant in the context of SMART. Also, where "neutral" is provider's rating, there is frequently no narrative to explain the rating. It is substantially unclear what value is added with this rating, particularly if it has no narrative clarifying what the rating means.

While there are continuing difficulties with the QI processes, there is evidence that psychology supervisors are focused on improving ITPs. Both Drs. Dunphy and Hamning should receive particular praise for their efforts to improve the quality of ITPs as evidenced by their thoughtful feedback to clinicians in both Behavioral Health Staff Meeting minutes and on their supervision notes. However their efforts are not reflected in the documentation provided for review.

Required Action: DYS needs to provide additional training on the writing of ITPs and on the forms in used for their peer review process.

Sub-topic II.C.1.e. Case formulation, fidelity to treatment provided to treatment model, treatment planning and treatment teams

Compliance Rating: Partial Compliance – Case formulation, treatment planning and treatment teams

Compliance Rating: Non- Compliant - Fidelity to treatment provided to treatment model

Methodology: Four Individual Treatment Plans (ITP) from each of the four facilities were reviewed. CJCF presented an additional 13 ITPs along with their Peer Review documentation. This documentation was sufficient to comment on case formulation, treatment planning and treatment teams. There was no documentation offered for review of fidelity to treatment provided to treatment model.

Observations: Treatment planning and ITPs continue to be a challenge for all facilities. Although we'd previously identified problems with the conceptualization and encoding of ITPs, and asked DYS to produce ITPs that was responsive to this observation, none of the currently reviewed ITPs are strength-based, nor do they present goals or objectives in concrete, measurable terms. Examples across facilities include: Goal: "(Youth will address his pro criminal identify mindset and work towards identifying a non criminal identity." The corresponding objective is "(Youth and I will complete the packet "Problems with Authority in our individual sessions." Goal: "(Youth) will be able to maintain control over disturbing thoughts and feelings and related impulses that contribute to criminal behavior." The corresponding objective reads: "I will use CBT techniques to develop an understanding of and be able to identify in everyday situations, the ways in which thoughts feelings, behaviors and consequences are connected and related to each other." Goal: "Correct irrational thinking, which leads to anger and interpersonal problems." And again, the corresponding objective reads: "I will use materials from MAV and CBT groups, including thinking reports, to review the last 5 incidents of angry outbursts and all future incidents to identify the specific triggers that were connected with these incidents."

As has been discussed previously, a case formulation is the essential framework for the development of Individual Treatment Plans (ITP). Treatment goals need to reflect real world concerns – issues that must be addressed in order for the youth to return to the community. Objectives should be designed to develop and measure skill acquisition. Plans need to be assessed in terms of their efficacy in helping the youth acquire the desired skills, and revised monthly – or more often – if it becomes clear that the ITP is not working. Articulating objectives as the completion of paper and pencil tasks or studying Skill Cards does not address the development of new replacement behaviors. These are rather, strategies being employed in the service of the development of new skills, they are not in and of themselves, evidence of skill acquisition.

Required Action: Until ITPs are made more meaningful, mental health service delivery is compromised. The ITP is a roadmap, and if it doesn't outline what the staff is trying to achieve with the youth, there's no way for providers to assess whether the youth is improving. If DYS is to receive an improved compliance rating with regard to fidelity monitoring, they will have to produce evidence that they are engaging in such monitoring. This is a recommendation that has been made repeatedly over the years.

Sub-topic II.C.1.f. Behavior contracts

Compliance rating - Partial Compliance

Methodology: Five Intensive Behavior Contracts from each facility were reviewed.

Comments: As a general matter, there is noted improvement in the Intensive Behavior Contracts. There is consistency across facilities in their use of a newly revised Intensive Behavior Contract format. The Contracts now evidence only one or two target behaviors, some document the frequency of occurrence of the noxious behavior, and all offer both incentives and consequences. All Contracts are now scheduled for review 7 days from the date of its signing, and, Contracts evidence attempts to articulate goals in incremental steps: "I (youth) agree I will perform the following behavior: maintain a distance of an arm's length when upset, use respectful language when discussing my issue, and maintain a low voice volume 1 out of 3 times," "I will maintain an arm's length of space between myself and all female staff 1 out of 2 times."

There are however, some continuing challenges with the Contracts. In particular, the incentives are not sufficiently incentivizing: "I will earn an extra snack provided by the UM or SW at a predetermined time," "I can listen to 15 minutes of music in my SW or psychologist's office," "15 minutes with an MP3 player on her unit," "I will earn 10 minutes in my room." As has been noted previously, incentives should be both proximate to the production of the desired behavior and should be sufficiently incentivizing so as to be rewarding to the youth. An extra 10 minutes in one's room at the end of a week of not engaging in target behaviors just not enough of a carrot for an adolescent. Incentives should be meaningful and determined in collaboration with the youth. In order to be maximally rewarding, as previously noted, they should also be more proximate to the production of desired behavior – like daily.

In addition, all Contracts begin with the statement that "I (youth) enter into the following contract in order to create and maintain order and harmony in the facility." In point of fact, Behavior Contracts are entered into in order to enhance the youth's ability to engage in replacement behaviors - that is, new behaviors that replace the target behaviors. If and when successful, it is likely that it will facilitate “order and harmony in the facility,” however, that is not the purpose of the Contracts.

Contracts reviewed were developed from July through October. None were signed by the youth, clinician, UM, or supervisory behavioral health staff. No evidence was provided that any of the Contracts were reviewed. As such, it is impossible to know whether these Contracts were implemented, or if revising these Contracts was just a training exercise for the practitioners. As a consequence, it is impossible to determine if these Contracts are more efficacious than their predecessors. To determine the efficacy of the Contracts, DYS would have to track whether the youth met the goal and got the reward, or didn't meet the goal and got the consequence.

Required Action: DYS needs to provide documentation that reviews of the behavior contracts is occurring and that they are reducing the target behaviors.

Sub-topic II.C.1.h. Discipline for youth on the mental health caseload through the intervention hearing process

Compliance Rating – Partial Compliance

Since my preliminary recommendations in November, 2013, no new documentation has been presented for review regarding discipline for youth on the mental health caseload. We were advised that DYS has revised their policy “Intervention Procedures for Youth with Mental Illness, Cognitive or Developmental Disabilities (policy 303.01.04). Policy now requires that clinicians attend intervention hearings if: there are mental health and/or developmental issues that may have impacted the youth's behavior at the time of the rule violation, and if there are mental health and/or developmental issues that should be considered regarding disposition of the youth if found proven.

This was recommended in our earlier Mental Health findings report, and it is all to the good that DYS is incorporating this recommendation into their operating procedures.

I have substantial concern however, that DYS is continuing to seclude mentally ill youth who are charged with rule infractions. While some amount of room confinement may be appropriate in some instances, when mentally ill youth are secluded, especially for protracted periods, they suffer harmful consequences. When a mentally ill youth winds up in seclusion, it is incumbent on the practitioners to modify the ITP appropriately to extinguish the behavior. If the youth continues in seclusion without a corresponding modification of his/her ITP, the seclusion will just exacerbate the behavior problems DYS is seeking to extinguish.

In a Behavioral Health Staff Meeting note from Dr. Hamning at Scioto (8/21/13), he documents that “half of the kids are in seclusion (on Buckeye) a good majority of time.” In particular, I have concern about how youth who were transferred off the Progress Units – all of whom were on the mental health caseload - are being managed in their new units. Historically – before DYS undertook drastic reforms to change the PROGRESS Unit program design – the PROGRESS Unit and SMUs before it exacerbated challenging youth behavior by keeping youth locked in their cells for most or all of the day, for weeks or months on end. Dr. Hamning’s note raises concerns that the youth who have transitioned out of the PROGRESS Unit are still being managed with long stays in seclusion, by way of the IRAV and sanction seclusion processes rather than by way of a maximum security housing unit. If DYS’s treatment interventions have not evolved enough to identify why these youth and others with serious mental health issues are behaving in the ways that they are, it is more likely that these youth will spend significant lengths of time in seclusion, an intervention that actually undermines the effectiveness of treatment.

In order to establish whether or not this is occurring, it will be necessary to review AMS logs, ITPs, Behavior Management Plans and seclusion hours for all the youth who transferred off Progress to other units.

Of course the concern extends to other mentally ill youth in DYS facilities.

Since DYS’s announcement regarding the closure of Scioto, plaintiffs have expressed their concern “that youth on the mental health caseload who did not receive adequate treatment in the PROGRESS Unit will now be dispersed to the remaining institutions and continue to have deficient case formulation, treatment planning, behavior contracts, excessive discipline and excessive segregation. Similar youth who would have otherwise been transferred to the PROGRESS unit may be facing the same problem.” It is clear to me that the deficiencies in behavioral health care led to high rates of seclusion for youth at Scioto, and that the same deficiencies exist at the other three DYS facilities. What I do not know from the documentation I have been provided is whether youth with mental illnesses are experiencing high rates of seclusion at the other three DYS facilities. Given the recent closures of both the PROGRESS Unit and Scioto JCF, plaintiffs’ question regarding whether youth with behavioral challenges at other facilities spend a significant portion of their DYS stays in seclusion is a valid one. Such a determination, however, could be made only after a more thorough review of the AMS data and treatment files of mental health caseload youth who have experienced multiple Intervention Hearings over the last six months.

Required Action: By mid-January DYS should produce documentation that identifies the seclusion hours for “frequent fliers” and indicate whether they are on the mental health caseload. This, along with their ITPs and Intensive Behavior Management Plans will help to determine if IDTs are addressing the behavior that has led to seclusion, and the harmful effects of seclusion itself.

CIVIL ACTION NO:
2:08-cv-475

DECLARATION OF PAUL DEMURO

Paul DeMuro declares as follows under penalty of perjury:

1. My name is Paul DeMuro. I submit this declaration in support of the United States' motion for a temporary restraining order. My address is 1201 Futch Creek Rd., Wilmington, N.C. 28411. I have been retained by the United States to, among other things, provide my opinion whether limitations proposed by the United States on the use of seclusion of juveniles are reasonable, appropriate, and capable of being implemented rapidly without causing significant disruption to security and operations in a juvenile justice facility.
2. I have over forty-three years of experience in juvenile justice and child welfare services. I have been superintendent of a large urban, secure juvenile detention center, as well as superintendent of a large training school for juvenile delinquents. I have served as Assistant Commissioner of the Massachusetts Department of Youth Services, overseeing all parole supervision for adjudicated juveniles in Massachusetts. In the late 1970's, I was appointed by the Governor of Pennsylvania to serve as the Commissioner of Children and Youth in Pennsylvania. As the Commissioner, I supervised the superintendents of Pennsylvania's juvenile justice institutions, including all of the state's secure institutions for the most violent juvenile offenders. As Commissioner, I developed state regulations that governed the operation of secure county juvenile detention centers. I have developed public and contract residential and non-residential programs for delinquent youth, including model secure treatment programs for violent offenders.
3. I am knowledgeable about contemporary juvenile justice and child welfare program standards, policies and practices. For over six years I served as the Federal Court monitor in a class action case in Florida, overseeing on a regular basis conditions of confinement in Florida's secure juvenile correctional institutions. I held a similar appointment for the Federal District Court in Oklahoma. As Federal Court monitor, I monitored Florida's and Oklahoma's secure institutional and community programs for youths and reported to the Federal Court. More recently, I have served as a Federal Court monitor in a New Orleans secure juvenile detention case, and I presently serve as a Federal Court Monitor in Mississippi in a case involving a secure commitment program for youth tried and convicted as adults. The use of disciplinary seclusion is severely limited in both the New Orleans and Mississippi secure programs. I have been appointed as a mediator in a number of cases to help resolve class action juvenile justice and child welfare cases. As a consultant, I routinely evaluate juvenile justice and child welfare programs and services. I have reviewed juvenile justice institutions, including juvenile justice secure institutions and child welfare programs in Alabama, Arizona, California, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Illinois, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, New Jersey, New York City, North Carolina, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, South Dakota and Texas. I have evaluated a variety of state and county run juvenile correctional institutions, including secure juvenile facilities, for the United States Department of Justice (the "DOJ"). My clients have included state juvenile justice agencies, state child welfare agencies, county juvenile justice agencies, the U.S. Department of Justice, the National Juvenile Detention Association (now part of the National Partnership for Juvenile Services), and private Foundations. I have co-edited an anthology regarding violent offenders (Violent Juvenile Offenders, 1984) and have co-authored a book regarding the problems of overcrowding in the California Youth Authority's secure institutions (Reforming the CYA, 1988). I have written a number of reports and articles concerning young offenders and secure institutional and alternative programs designed to serve them. Exhibit I contains my cv and my consulting prospectus, which contains a list of my publications. Exhibit II identifies court cases in which I have served as an expert witness or court-appointed expert/monitor.

4. The opinions expressed in this declaration are based on my experience in the field and my knowledge of juvenile justice standards, policies and practices. I have not reviewed Ohio Department of Juvenile Corrections' ("DYS") policies or practices, nor have I reviewed DYS data or records or interviewed Ohio staff or juveniles. However, it is clear that the use of seclusion in juvenile institutions causes more harm than good and, therefore, the use of and the duration of seclusion should be limited to the absolute minimum degree possible.¹ Youth in isolation cannot participate in programs designed to address their problems. In essence youth who are perceived as being most in need of rehabilitative services are, when they are in isolation, denied access to those supportive interventions. In addition, isolation has direct negative consequences. Youth in isolation are more likely to commit suicide and/or to self mutilate than youth in the general population. Youth in isolation often become depressed; many youth in isolation become angry and more agitated and thus even more resentful of staff. The use of isolation is counterproductive. Isolated youth often feel more depressed and desperate. Locking a youth in a cell does not reduce a youth's acting out. Its use only makes matters worse.

5. I understand that the United States has proposed the following limitations on the use of seclusion at facilities operated by DYS. (My specific observations regarding them are set forth in italics):
 - A. Refrain from secluding any boy with an identified mental health disorder for more than 24 hours without providing him, outside of his confinement area and during normal facility programming times, at least four hours of programming (e.g., mental health counseling, exercise, education or combinations thereof);
 - B. Refrain from imposing more than three consecutive days of seclusion in any form (e.g., prehearing seclusion and intervention seclusion) on any boy with an identified mental health disorder. In fact, the pre-hearing time should be limited to the degree possible. Youth should not be placed in seclusion on a pre-hearing basis if they are in control. All youth in seclusion either on a pre-hearing basis or on a disciplinary basis should be out of the confinement area/cell for at least four hours in any given twenty-four hour period during normal programming time. There is no evidence to suggest that longer periods of seclusion improve a youth's behavior. In fact the available evidence strongly points in the exact opposite direction, for all youth, and particularly for youth with mental health problems.
 - C. Refrain from imposing more than three days of seclusion in any form within a 30-day period on any boy with an identified mental health disorder without first:
 1. Conducting a comprehensive mental health treatment review of the boy that includes the treatment team meeting and reviewing the boy's mental health treatment plan to consider and address potential problems with the plan and its implementation. The treatment review should include the key staff responsible for the youth (including the security, clinical and educational staff). In all possible cases the specific youth should participate in the treatment review. The purpose of the review/meeting would be to develop a specific and detailed behavioral plan that is designed to safely supervise the youth in the program – without relying on seclusion/isolation;

2. Obtaining the prior written approval of the Deputy Director of DYS responsible for Facility programming; and
 3. Providing written notice to the United States and monitor within 24 hours of a youth exceeding three days of seclusion within a single month, describing the amount of seclusion, reason for seclusion, treatment provided in response to seclusion, whether the youth's behavior intervention plan was modified or created, and alternatives to seclusion that were rejected.
- D. Refrain from imposing restraints as an alternative to seclusion.
6. In my opinion, these limitations are reasonable, appropriate, and capable of being implemented in a short period of time without causing significant disruption to security and operations.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct.

EMPLOYMENT HISTORY

1983 - to present. Founder and principal staff of a small, flexible consulting firm that provides a variety of policy, program, management and conflict resolution services to private and public youth serving agencies. Clients include the US Justice Department, federal Courts, state and county agencies, private foundations, public interest attorneys and the private Bar.

1979 - 1983. Vice-President for Program Services, National Council on Crime and Delinquency. Responsible for field related activities of nationally prominent criminal justice agency. Managed national projects, maintained liaison with other national and state organizations; conducted policy and evaluation studies; supervised and delivered technical assistance to state and local juvenile justice agencies. Prepared and delivered testimony to US Congress and state legislative bodies. Prepared publications; developed and offered training to professional staff. While with NCCD, directed two national juvenile justice projects: (1) Citizen Advocacy Network project, a $1.5 million dollar, four state effort to involve local citizens in efforts aimed at improving their juvenile justice systems; (2) Violent Juvenile Offender Research and Development Project, a $3.5 million dollar project aimed at testing innovative interventions for violent offenders: developed program models and request for proposals; supervised competitive bidding process; and oversaw all fiscal and program reporting to the US Justice Department.

1978 - 1979. Commissioner of Children and Youth, Pennsylvania Department of Public Welfare. Responsible for $300 million dollars of state funding to provide management and program supports for services to over 35,000 children and youth. Policy and program responsibilities included the state's day care, child welfare and juvenile justice programs. Prepared budgets, developed regulations, drafted legislation and represented the Governor's office in local, state and national negotiations. Supervised the state training school system.

1975 - 1978. Director, Office of Corrections Education. Created and directed this office which had fiscal, planning and evaluation responsibility for educational programs in the state's run adult and juvenile correctional institutions which held over 9,000 offenders.

1973 - 1975. Director, Unified Delinquency Intervention Services, Illinois Department of Children and Family Services. Planned and implemented this nationally recognized model that serves adjudicated youth. UDIS diverts youth from institutional placement by using a network of community-based placements and strong case management.

1970 - 1973. Massachusetts Department of Youth Services (DYS). With DYS held three positions of increasing responsibilities: Assistant Commissioner for Aftercare (1972 - 73), supervised all non-institutional programs for adjudicated youth (e.g., parole, group homes, non-residential interventions, etc.). Supervised seven regional offices with 220 staff and a purchase of service budget of $5 million; Director of Non-Residential Programs (1971 - 72), developed and administered a statewide network of non-residential interventions providing educational, vocational, counseling and mentoring supports to more than 1000 youth living at home or in foster care. Sponsors of programs included churches, community groups and traditional youth serving agencies. Superintendent, Shirley Industrial School (1970- 71), responsible for 125 bed reform school for "hard core" delinquents aged 14 - 18.

1963 - 1970. University English Instructor, Ohio State University (1965 - 70); Villanova (1963 -1965).
