1 Blind bridles prevent horses from seeing directly behind them or to the side, which allows more anxious horses to focus only on what is happening in front of them.

2 Head numbers attach to the top of the bridle to designate the horse's number in the race program. The number on the head number will correspond to the number on the racing saddle pad.

3 An overcheck is a strap that attaches to a bit in the horse's mouth, goes over its head and between its ears, and hooks to the harness. The overcheck may be lengthened or shortened to allow the head to be raised or lowered to the height the trainer chooses.

4 Saddle pads (racing saddle pads) lie over the back of a horse and attach to the harness to identify the horse's number in the race program. The number will correspond with the head number.

5 Hopple hangers consist of eight straps which hold the hoppers in place and at a certain height. Side hangers go down the sides of the horse's belly, while the rear hangers attach to the crupper on the horse's back and go down its back legs; front hangers loop over the horse's neck and buckle across the chest.

6 Driving colors are worn by the driver in a race. The designs are specific to each driver, so no matter what horse they may be driving, at whatever track, they always wear the same colors.

7 Driving helmets protect a driver's head, should they be involved in an accident. Helmets go through a rigorous approval process and are painted to match a driver's colors.

8 Whips are used to encourage horses to move forward, should they shy away from an object or think the race is done.

9 Race bikes (or sulkies) are lightweight and aerodynamic, used only for fast training, qualifying or racing. Drivers are extremely close to the horse, with their feet nearly touching the horse's hind legs when the horse is in full stride.

10 Tendon boots guard against injury to the front legs between the knee and ankle and may be worn by trotters and pacers.

11 Hoppers (pronounced hobbles) are loops that go around the horse's legs to keep it on stride. Kept at a specific height by the hopple hangers, they can be lengthened or shortened depending on the horse's size, stride and ability. The right front leg and right rear leg will be linked together with the same hopple as will the left front and left rear legs.

Common Equipment Worn by the Trotter

1 Open bridles allow a horse to see in all directions. Bridles are made of various straps, either leather or synthetic, that fit over the head of the horse, allowing the driver to control the horse through the use of a driving bit.

2 Headpoles attach to a ring on the head halter (which is underneath the bridle) and run the length of the horse's neck to the harness. They prevent the horse from bending its neck while turning its head; if the horse wants to carry his head to the left, the trainer places the headpole on the right side.

3 Buxtons (also known as breast collars) are designed to keep the harness in place. Three points of attachment will prevent the harness from moving further back than the ideal position, just behind the withers.

4 Suspenders attach to the knee boots to ensure that they stay in place.

5 Harnesses are the basic equipment that every horse wears to jog, train and race. They consist of the saddle (the part that goes on the horse's back just behind the withers), the girth (which goes underneath the belly and is tightened to keep the saddle in place), the crupper (a loop that goes from the saddle back to underneath the tail to prevent the saddle from moving forward) and the saddle pad (which cushions the saddle on the withers).

6 Driving lines are the steering mechanism for the driver to determine the direction and speed of the horse. The lines attach to the driving bit in the horse's mouth, run through the turrets on either side of the harness and extend back to the driver. Handholds attach to the lines and are utilized to give more control.

7 Jog carts are heavy-duty and used for everyday jogging and training. They keep the trainer further away from the horse and are generally more comfortable to sit in than a race bike.

8 Trotting boots (also known as hind shin boots) provide hind leg protection by covering the ankle up to, and sometimes including, the hock. Some have "speedy cuts" which protect the inside of the pastern, the area between the ankle and hoof.

9 Scalpers are made of a rubber/gummy material and cover the front of the hind hoof, the coronet band and part of the pastern. Because of their diagonal gait, trotters are prone to "scalping" their hind feet with their front feet.

10 Knee boots are worn by both trotters and pacers who strike the insides of their knees.

11 Bell boots are made of a rubber/gummy material which goes over the entire front hoof to protect a horse from hitting itself; they may be worn by both trotters and pacers. Some trainers put a pair or two of bell boots on a trotter for extra weight up front to help stabilize its stride.
