The Waldorf Astoria has earned its reputation as a hot scene for society's elite over the course of a hundred-plus years operating in New York City, with icons from Queen Elizabeth II to Elizabeth Taylor enjoying stays at the midtown Manhattan fixture. The establishment claims that all of the US presidents from Herbert Hoover to Barack Obama have spent a night at in its presidential suite, rock band The Who reportedly earned a lifetime ban following a debauched 1968 visit (though they must've gotten back in the hotel's good graces at some point, later performing at the 1990 Rock & Roll Hall of Fame Induction ceremony at the Waldorf), and Paris Hilton lived there throughout her childhood in the '80s and '90s.

Originating as side-by-side establishments founded by rival members of the same family, cousins John Jacob Astor IV and William Waldorf Astor joined forces to create the Waldorf Astoria in 1897. In addition to merging names, they connected the two German Renaissance–style buildings with a 300-foot marble corridor known as Peacock Alley. The hotel was forced to relocate from its spot on swanky Fifth Avenue when both wings were razed to make way for the Empire State Building, reopening two years later in 1931 on nearby Park Avenue. Designed by architecture firm Schultze and Weaver, the 47-story new build was constructed in the Art Deco style and was known as the largest luxury hotel in the world at the time. President Hoover offered his early approval via radio broadcast from the White House, describing the debut as “an event in the advancement of hotels,” and declaring it “an exhibition of courage and confidence to the whole nation.”

Hoover wouldn't be the only big name to award the hotel a seal of approval; the Waldorf Astoria counted enough celebrity regulars in its guestbook that several suites would go on to be named for the prominent cultural figure who had stayed there, including the likes of Cole Porter and the Duke and Duchess of Windsor. In 2017, the hotel shut down for large-scale renovations and is currently projected to reopen in late 2024. The architecture teams at Skidmore, Owings & Merrill; alongside Building Conservation Associates, Inc; and Higgins Quasebarth & Partners LLC are charged with reimagining the landmark establishment, with plans to update its interiors and offer luxury condominiums starting from $1.8 million—a price tag fit for the hallowed halls once walked by Marilyn Monroe and Frank Sinatra. Inventor Nikola Tesla was a resident at the hotel's original location during the Gilded Age. He reportedly paid an overdue bill to the Waldorf with what he claimed was a model for a "death beam," a weapon he aimed to provide to the US government for defense purposes. According to History.com, the hotel was later granted Tesla's laboratory Wardenclyffe to serve as partial payment for the eccentric engineer's debts.

Cole Porter

Composer and songwriter Cole Porter and his wife Linda Lee Thomas lived at the Waldorf Towers (the hotel's luxury suites meant for long-term stays) for years. His time at the establishment inspired the musician to name-drop it in a song, penning the lyrics "You're the top, you're a Waldorf salad," for his 1934 tune "You're the Top," from hit musical Anything Goes. The music legend's six-bedroom residence at the Towers's suite 33A housed his 1907 Steinway grand piano. A sacred artifact of the Waldorf Astoria's history, the hotel is restoring the instrument and will return it to the Clock Lobby upon reopening.

The late Queen of England stopped by the Waldorf on her 1976 visit to New York City. She enjoyed a luncheon at the hotel's grand ballroom before retiring to suite 42R—on the very top floor, naturally—the hotel's Royal Suite. Legend has it that the original suite meant for Her Majesty became unavailable when a guest became ill, so the hotel quickly arranged the creation of a new Royal Suite to accommodate.

The Who

Keith Moon, drummer for the English rock band The Who, had a documented affinity for cherry bombs and reportedly deployed one during a stop into the Waldorf. As music journalist Tony Fletcher wrote in his biography Dear Boy: The Life of Keith Moon, the establishment was “clearly unnerved at the prospect of letting The Who stay in their esteemed premises” and demanded cash upfront, which “proved to be less than forthcoming.” The band stood around waiting for the issue to be resolved until Moon “‘blew the door off the hinges and got my luggage,’ following which, The Who were promptly kicked out of, and banned from, New York’s illustrious Waldorf Astoria.”
