Secretary of State Bruce McPherson Announces Activities and Events to Celebrate National Archives Month

SACRAMENTO, CA - Archives Month celebrates California's history and draws attention to the vast collection of historical treasures kept in California's archival collections. It is part of a nationwide celebration of Archives Month designed to raise public awareness and appreciation of archives, what archivists do and why archives are important.

Secretary McPherson said, "As a fourth generation Californian I have a deep appreciation for California's history. One of the most enjoyable parts of my job is my role as the keeper of our state archives. I hope many Californians take advantage of this month to explore our state's unique and remarkable history available in our state archives."

In the official proclamation designating October as Archives Month, Governor Schwarzenegger said, "Californians benefit greatly from archive collections because they have the chance to discover valuable information about society, learn the state's history, and appreciate various aspects of past communities... Whether a resident is interested in finding a court document, oral history or footage of a legislative session, our archives are a practical place to start searching."

To mark Archives Month, the California State Archives will be hosting the following events:

- California State Archives Open House on Saturday, October 7th from 4:00-8:00 p.m. featuring special exhibits and tours of the archives
- Family History Day on Saturday, October 14th from 8:30 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. featuring short classes on genealogy, preserving family papers, and other topics and tours of the archives

Both events will be at the State Archives, 1020 "O" Street, in Sacramento.
