of conditions on the ground allowing for economies in the United Nations operation, he said that his Government strongly supported the Council's decision to expand the police contingent in such a way as to avoid any increase in the Operation's cost.³⁷

The representative of Brazil stated that his delegation had supported the resolution because it reiterated the international community's commitment to helping Mozambique to achieve a peaceful and lasting internal settlement. The resolution also underlined the need to continue to monitor expenditures carefully, a concept to which his Government was firmly attached. However, of far greater importance was the fact that the Council had made it clear that, whatever adjustments were to be introduced, the purpose of those operations could never be put in jeopardy. His delegation was not convinced that a withdrawal of military troops should occur merely to offset cost increases generated by the deployment of the police contingent. Moreover, a premature withdrawal could put the whole peace process at risk and was likely to create far greater difficulties than any savings generated from military cutbacks. The Council, he said, must take into account prevailing circumstances facing the Operation, and should not be lured by possible savings which, in the long run, might be self-defeating.³⁸

Decision of 21 April 1994: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

In a letter dated 21 April 1994,³⁹ the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General of the following:

I received earlier this month a letter from the Permanent Representative of Mozambique requesting the assistance of the Security Council in the appointment of the international members of the Mozambique Electoral Tribunal as provided for in the Mozambique Electoral Law. The letter advised that the Electoral Law provides that the international members of the tribunal shall be appointed by you on the recommendation of the Security Council.

Ambassador Afonso also called on me and explained that it was the view of his Government that the best assistance that the Security Council could provide on this matter would be for it to forward to you a list of potential candidates from which you could make your selection.

The members of the Council considered this request and agreed that they should facilitate the Mozambique electoral process to the extent they were able. Council members undertook to consider a number of potential candidates and to submit to you such names as they considered appropriate.

Following their consideration of the matter, the members of the Council have asked me to forward to you the attached list of names of persons from which you might wish to choose three persons who would be suitable for appointment as international members of the Mozambique Electoral Tribunal.

Decision of 5 May 1994 (3375th meeting):
resolution 916 (1994)

On 28 April 1994, pursuant to resolutions 882 (1993) of 5 November 1993 and 898 (1994) of 23 February 1994, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a report on ONUMOZ.⁴⁰ The Secretary-General noted that despite a number of important advances made during the reporting period in the implementation of the peace process, including the beginning of demobilization on 10 March 1994 whereby 55 per cent of government and 81 per cent of RENAMO soldiers had been cantoned, the swearing into office of the new army high commanders and the training of some 2,000 soldiers, the process had been marked by substantial delays. On 8 April 1994, however, both parties had met and had agreed that the Government would expedite the assembly of its troops and that RENAMO would accelerate the pace of demobilization. The announcement on 11 April 1994 by the President of Mozambique that the general elections would be held on 27 and 28 October 1994 constituted a significant step forward. It also signified the intention of the Mozambican parties to adhere to the time frame set by the Security Council for the completion of the process. Despite some concerns relating to problems of logistics, finance, the identification of party representation and free access to all districts of Mozambique, the Secretary-General was confident that free and fair elections were possible, subject to a few minimal conditions, such as, inter alia, free access by the National Elections Commission and its subsidiary bodies to all areas in the country, the widest possible participation of political parties at all levels of the electoral process, and their total and unconditional commitment to accept the results of the elections.

The Secretary-General reported that considerable progress had been made in resettling internally displaced persons and Mozambican refugees returning from neighbouring countries. He indicated in that regard that he would speed up the mine-clearance programme to ensure sufficient progress in the coming months in the movement of internally displaced persons and returnees, and to facilitate the election campaign. Continued assistance for those schemes and for the reintegration of demobilized soldiers into civil society was crucial in the overall efforts to achieve long-lasting peace in Mozambique.

Stressing the vital role played by ONUMOZ, he recommended the extension of its mandate, at a reduced strength, until 31 October 1994.⁴¹ He also proposed that all military, police and most of the support personnel of the Operation should begin repatriation immediately after the expiration of the mandate, and the liquidation of the mandate would be completed by 31 January 1995.

At its 3375th meeting, on 5 May 1994, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Mozambique, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Nigeria) then drew the attention of the members of the Council to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of its prior consultations.⁴² He also drew their attention to a letter dated 12 April 1994 from the representative of Mozambique addressed to the Secretary-General,⁴³ informing him that the elections would be held in Mozambique on 27 and 28 October.

The representative of Mozambique said that as the target date approached, his Government's attention was focused on what remained to be done in order to eliminate all obstacles to the full implementation of the provisions of the Agreement. The cantonment of the forces had yet to be completed, and RENAMO had yet to provide the number of its combatants to be demobilized in situ. With regard to the formation of the Mozambican Defence Force, the Mozambican authorities were still far from overcoming the consequences arising from systematic delays, and achieving the troop strength provided for under the Agreement. He stressed that the issue was of critical importance for the creation of the appropriate environment for the holding of general elections. He further stated that even the 30,000 troops, called for in the Agreement, were insufficient to discharge fully their responsibilities in a country as big as Mozambique; any further reduction of that figure might seriously affect the ability of the country to defend itself. His Government, he added, fully agreed with the principle of setting a firm deadline for the cantonment and demobilization of forces, taking into account the realities in the field, the calendar for the formation of the new Mozambican Defence Force, and the electoral campaign. That would require that both the Government and RENAMO work closely together with ONUMOZ to achieve consensus on those critical issues. He further said that his Government was particularly disturbed by the growing attempts by RENAMO to bring new and extraneous issues to the commitments under the Agreement which could undermine its implementation and lead to unforeseen consequences. In conclusion, he contended that despite all the challenging tasks ahead, the major political conditions for the timely completion of the Operation were in place. It was only necessary to assist and encourage the parties to translate their political will into practical steps.⁴⁴

Speaking before the vote, the representative of Brazil said that the role of ONUMOZ had been vital in the political and military areas, and expressed concern, about curtailing the Operation's military component, and thus jeopardizing a peace process which was very close to becoming a success story. His delegation shared the Secretary-General's assessment that the drawdown of the infantry component was also premature. Referring to resolution 898 (1994), which established that no reduction in the force total of ONUMOZ would be undertaken if that prevented its mandate from being effectively discharged, he said that his delegation would have preferred a course of action different from the one envisaged in the draft resolution. His delegation would, nonetheless, vote in favour for two basic reasons: on the one hand, because of the great interest in and commitment of Brazil to the evolution of the political process in Mozambique and, on the other, because the draft resolution renewed the commitment of the international community to help Mozambique in its quest for peace and internal political stability.⁴⁵

The draft resolution was thereupon put to the vote and was adopted unanimously as resolution 916 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 782 (1992) of 13 October 1992 and all subsequent resolutions,

9. Commends in this respect the agreement between the President of Mozambique, Mr. Joaquim Chissano, and the President of the Resistência Nacional Moçambicana, Mr. Afonso Dhlakama, on 8 April 1994, that the Government of Mozambique would expedite the assembly of its troops and that

12. Calls upon the parties to ensure that the maximum possible number of soldiers is trained for the new Mozambican Defence Force before the elections take place, and also calls upon the Government of Mozambique to provide logistical and technical support for the formation of the new Mozambican Defence Force, including regular remuneration for the troops, and to begin the transfer of central defence facilities to its command;

16. Notes with appreciation the response of the international community to the humanitarian assistance needs of Mozambique, and appeals to the international community to continue to provide appropriate and prompt assistance for the implementation of the humanitarian programmes carried out in the framework of the General Peace Agreement;

17. Reiterates its encouragement to the international community to provide appropriate and prompt assistance for the implementation of the demobilization scheme as a complement to the existing efforts being made in the framework of the humanitarian assistance programme;

18. Commends the efforts of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and other humanitarian agencies operating in Mozambique, and urges all Mozambican parties to continue to facilitate their unimpeded access to the civilian population in need and to continue to cooperate with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other humanitarian agencies in pursuing ongoing programmes to assist the remaining displaced persons and refugees to be resettled;

19. Decides to renew the mandate of the Operation for a final period until 15 November 1994 at the strength described in paragraphs 22, 24 and 25 of the report of the Secretary-General of 28 April 1994, subject to the proviso that the Security Council will review the status of the mandate of the Operation by 15 July 1994 based on a report by the Secretary-General, as described in paragraph 55 of his report of 28 April, and also by 5 September 1994 based on a further report by the Secretary-General;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Security Council is kept regularly informed about the implementation of the General Peace Agreement, in particular about assembly and demobilization;

21. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United States stated that his Government expected both sides to cooperate with ONUMOZ in verifying the number of troops remaining to be processed both at the assembly areas and at the non-assembly sites and to do everything possible to hasten their demobilization. Also of concern were the difficulties being experienced with the formation of the new army. Since underdevelopment and a stagnant economy were the real threat to Mozambique's security, careful consideration should be given to creating a smaller new national army. Another matter of concern was the apparent lack of cooperation of the Mozambican police authorities with ONUMOZ civilian police observers. The United Nations police component, he said, had an essential role to play in assisting the Mozambican police to establish the conditions for free and fair elections, and therefore their deployment must be facilitated in every possible way.⁴⁶

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that the decision just taken by the Security Council clearly directed the Mozambican parties to expedite the full implementation of the Agreement. Of special significance were questions relating to the assembly and demobilization of troops and the creation of a new army. In that connection, he stressed the importance of the provisions of the resolution urging the parties effectively to correct the imbalances and disproportions and calling upon them to comply with the timetable to help strengthen the climate of trust and cooperation between them at that key stage in the settlement.⁴⁷

The President speaking in his capacity as the representative of Nigeria said that the resolution just adopted was not only timely but also very appropriate. First, it rightly extended the mandate of ONUMOZ beyond the election date, to allow sufficient time for the operations to wind down. Secondly, it called upon the parties, in particular RENAMO, to comply fully with all the provisions of the Agreement, expedite the assembly of troops and accelerate the pace of demobilization of troops. Thirdly, with regard to the FADM, the resolution called upon the parties to ensure that the maximum possible number of soldiers would be trained before the elections. Finally, the resolution welcomed the deployment of the United Nations police observers, as authorized in paragraph 2 of resolution 898 (1994) of 23 February 1994, and stressed the importance the Council attached to the fullest cooperation of the parties with the ONUMOZ police observers.⁴⁸

Decision of 19 July 1994 (3406th meeting):
statement by the President

On 7 July 1994, pursuant to resolution 916 (1994) of 5 May 1994, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a report on ONUMOZ,⁴⁹ in which, inter alia, he elaborated upon the timetable for the closing of the Mission and the withdrawal of its military and civilian personnel.

The Secretary-General reported that significant progress had been made, especially in the electoral sphere where the preparations for the elections were generally proceeding in accordance with the established timetable. Registration of voters had begun on 1 June 1994 and was progressing satisfactorily. He was, however, concerned by the delays in the assembly and demobilization of troops and in the training and formation of the new army. He recalled that the Security Council in its resolution 916 (1994) had urged the parties to meet the target dates of 1 June and 15 July 1994, respectively, for the completion of the assembly of forces and demobilization. While RENAMO had accepted the deadlines, the Government had declared that it would not be able to meet the target dates set by the Council and that it would conclude the assembly of its troops by 1 July and their demobilization by 15 August 1994. The Secretary-General stated, in that regard, that it was imperative that the assembly and demobilization of troops on both sides be accelerated dramatically to meet the established deadline. He warned that if they were not completed by the agreed date, and if a large number of the soldiers selected for the formation of the Mozambican Defence Force were left in the assembly areas, there was a danger of having three armies in the country during the election period. That in turn could pose a serious problem to stability and thus to the holding of free and fair elections and the peaceful formation of the new government.

The Secretary-General recalled that the withdrawal of ONUMOZ civilian and military personnel was scheduled to begin immediately after the October elections and to conclude before the end of January 1995. He noted, however, that the withdrawal plan was conditional upon (a) the successful holding of peaceful, free and fair elections on 27 and 28 October 1994; (b) the announcement of the election results no later than 12 November 1994; and (c) the timely establishment of a new Government. Should a second ballot be required for the election of the President, the Council might need to adjust the timetable for the withdrawal of certain elements of the Operation.

At its 3406th meeting, on 19 July 1994, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Mozambique, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Pakistan) then drew the attention of the members of the Council to the text of a letter from the representative of Mozambique, addressed to the Secretary-General,⁵⁰ transmitting a statement by the Head of the Government Delegation to the Ceasefire Commission on 4 July 1994, in Maputo, on the ongoing peace process in Mozambique. The President stated that after consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁵¹

The Security Council notes with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General of 7 July 1994 on the United Nations

Operation in Mozambique. It commends the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the personnel of the Operation for their efforts in support of the implementation of the General Peace Agreement for Mozambique. They continue to have the full backing of the Council.

The Council welcomes the significant progress made in the implementation of the General Peace Agreement, in particular in the electoral sphere, but remains concerned at continuing delays in the implementation of some major aspects of the Agreement. The Council is especially concerned at the delays which continue to occur in the demobilization of forces and in the formation of the new Mozambican Defence Force. In this context, the Council reiterates its call in resolution 916 (1994) of 5 May 1994 to the parties to comply fully with all the provisions of the Agreement.

It is essential that the demobilization of all forces be completed by 15 August 1994, as agreed by the parties, and that the difficulties of forming, before the elections, the Mozambican Defence Force at the strength agreed in the General Peace Agreement be addressed quickly and with flexibility.

The Council is encouraged by the recent announcement of the decision of the Mozambican Government to turn over the assets, including equipment and facilities, of the Mozambique Armed Forces to the Mozambican Defence Force by 15 August 1994, and reiterates the importance of the Government providing all necessary support to the establishment of the Mozambican Defence Force.

The Council underlines the importance to the peace process of the rehabilitation of areas with a large returning population, including through an effective mine clearance programme. In this regard, it urges that high priority be given to mine-clearance activities and related training.

The Council, in its resolution 916 (1994), decided to renew the mandate of the Operation for a final period until 15 November 1994 and welcomed the announcement by the President of the Republic of Mozambique that elections would take place on 27 and 28 October 1994. It reaffirms the importance it attaches to the elections taking place on these dates and stresses the need for additional decisive steps to that end. In this context, the Council stresses that there is no margin for further delay in demobilization and in the formation of the Mozambican Defence Force. The Council expects the parties to continue to cooperate with the Operation and with each other to ensure full and timely implementation of the General Peace Agreement.

The Council reiterates the importance of the extension of civil administration throughout Mozambique, which is essential for the holding of free and fair elections. In this context, it reaffirms its call to all parties, especially the Resistência Nacional Moçambicana, to allow all political forces in the country unimpeded access to the areas under their control, in order to ensure free political activity throughout Mozambique.

The Council expresses its intention to endorse the results of the elections provided the United Nations reports them as free and fair, and reminds all the Mozambican parties of their obligation under the General Peace Agreement fully to respect the results.

The Council will consider sending a mission, at an appropriate time, to Mozambique to discuss with the parties how best to ensure full and timely implementation of the General Peace Agreement and that the elections take place on the dates agreed and under the conditions set out in the Agreement.

The Council will continue to monitor developments in Mozambique closely and requests the Secretary-General to ensure that it is kept informed on a regular basis.

Decision of 4 August 1994: note by the President

In a note dated 4 August 1994,⁵² the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General of the following:

1. The President of the Security Council has the honour to refer to the statement made by the President at the Council's 3406th meeting, on 19 July 1994, in connection with the item entitled "The situation in Mozambique: report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Operation in Mozambique".

2. The statement indicated, in particular, that the Council would consider sending a mission, at an appropriate time, to Mozambique to discuss with the parties how best to ensure fully and timely implementation of the General Peace Agreement for Mozambique.

3. In accordance with that decision, the President held consultations with the members of the Council. Following those consultations, the members agreed that the mission will depart for Mozambique on 6 August 1994, for a duration of approximately five days, and that it would be composed of the following nine members of the Council: Brazil, China, Czech Republic, Djibouti, New Zealand, Nigeria, Oman, Russian Federation and United States of America. The mission would, inter alia:

(a) Convey to the leaderships of the Government of Mozambique and the Resistência Nacional Moçambicana the concern of the Council at the delays in the implementation of major aspects of the General Peace Agreement;

(b) Underline the necessity of completing the demobilization of all forces by 15 August 1994, as agreed by the parties;

(c) Underline the need for the parties to ensure that the elections take place on the dates agreed and under the conditions set out in the Agreement;

(d) Stress the intention of the Council to endorse the results of the elections, provided that the United Nations reports them as free and fair;

⁵² S/1994/931.

(e) Remind all the parties of their obligation under the Agreement fully to respect the results of the elections;

(f) Stress the full support of the Council for the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative;

(g) Submit to the Council a report of the mission's findings during the visit.

Decision of 7 September 1994 (3422nd meeting):
statement by the President

On 26 August 1994, pursuant to resolution 916 (1994) of 5 May 1994, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a further report on ONUMOZ,⁵³ in which he described the progress achieved in the implementation of the peace process and the situation in Mozambique. The Secretary-General also focused on the mission of the Security Council which had visited Mozambique from 7 to 12 August 1994, noting that it had had a very positive impact on the peace process and that he fully shared many of its observations and recommendations presented to the Council.

The Secretary-General noted that several of the difficulties he had mentioned in his earlier reports had been overcome. The process of assembly of soldiers from both parties had been concluded, and their demobilization was almost complete. A number of decisions had been taken with regard to the formation of the new army, and more than three quarters of the estimated eligible voter population had been registered for elections. At the same time, there was growing concern about the security situation in the country, which had deteriorated in recent months. He stated that rioting among soldiers had become frequent and violent, and that criminal activity and banditry had increased.

The Secretary-General stated that the transition period that lay ahead for Mozambique would not be an easy one. It would require, above all, statesmanship and a commitment to accommodate various interests. Equally important would be the need to ensure secure and stable conditions in the country. That would call for a determined effort to continue training and properly equipping the new national army and upgrading the national police. While stressing that the primary responsibilities in that regard rested with the Government, he called upon the donors to provide assistance in those areas, even after the elections. Also of critical importance was the need to put in place adequate arrangements for the coordination of all humanitarian and rehabilitation programmes during the transition phase after the departure of ONUMOZ. In that connection, he indicated that consultations would be held between the United Nations Office for Humanitarian Assistance Coordination and United Nations agencies, as well as with the Government and donors to ensure the effective implementation of those programmes.

The Secretary-General further stated that, as the peace process approached its "final leg", it would be incumbent upon all concerned to redouble their efforts to ensure that the elections were conducted in a free and fair manner. He reminded all parties of their obligation to respect the results of the elections and said that the United Nations, for its part, was determined to continue to actively pursue the full implementation of the Agreement and to facilitate the efforts of the people of Mozambique to bring it to a successful conclusion.

In a letter dated 29 August 1994,⁵⁴ addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representatives of Brazil, China, the Czech Republic, Djibouti, New Zealand, Nigeria, Oman, the Russian Federation and the United States transmitted to the Council the report of the Security Council mission established pursuant to the statement made by the President of the Security Council at its 3406th meeting on 19 July 1994. The mission visited Mozambique from 7 to 12 August 1994 and carried out its work in accordance with the terms of reference decided upon by the Council.⁵⁵ Its programme of work included,⁵⁶ inter alia, meetings with the President of Mozambique, the leadership of RENAMO and FRELIMO and representatives of 16 other registered parties,⁵⁷ as well as with ONUMOZ senior staff, ambassadors of Security Council member countries and of African countries, and the representative of the Organization of African Unity. The mission touched on all issues affecting the implementation of the general peace agreement, including demobilization, formation of the Mozambican Defence Force, the elections, security problems, humanitarian and refugee issues, mine clearance, the relationship between ONUMOZ and the Government and the Operation's role after the elections and beyond 15 November 1994. It also heard various requests for assistance.

The mission formed a positive impression of the pace of the peace process, especially with regard to demobilization but noted difficulties relating to the formation of the Mozambican Defence Force and delays in the mine clearance programme. In that regard, the Mission recommended that the international community assist with additional trainers for the Defence Force and that the mine-clearing equipment remained in the country. The Mission was also encouraged by the commitment of the parties to hold the elections as scheduled. It recommended that the Security Council reiterate its call on the parties to respect the results of the elections once declared free and fair by the international community and to further encourage them to reach an understanding to promote post-electoral stability and respect for the rules of democracy.

At its 3422nd meeting, on 7 September 1994, the Security Council included the reports of the Secretary-General and of the Security Council mission in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Mozambique, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Spain) drew the attention of the members of the Council to the report of the mission and stated that, after consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁵⁸

The Security Council welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 26 August 1994 on the United Nations Operation in Mozambique, and notes with appreciation the report and oral briefing of the mission it sent to Mozambique to discuss with the parties how best to ensure full and timely implementation of the General Peace Agreement for Mozambique. It commends the mission for accomplishing its objectives, as set forth by the President of the Council on 4 August 1994.

The Council is satisfied, at present, with the pace of the peace process, including demobilization of all forces, which will be completed shortly. It maintains a cautious optimism that Mozambicans will be able to fulfil the goals of the peace process, achieving democracy, lasting peace, and responsible, representative government in their country.

The Council welcomes the fact that the leaders of the main political parties in Mozambique and the National Elections Commission have confirmed their commitments to take all steps necessary to ensure the holding of elections on 27 and 28 October 1994, as scheduled. It underlines the importance of ensuring that the voter registration process reaches as many Mozambicans as possible. Those parties who have concerns about the implementation of aspects of the electoral process should pursue them through the National Elections Commission. The Council reiterates its intention to endorse the results of the Mozambican elections provided the United Nations declares them free and fair and reminds all the parties of their obligation under the General Peace Agreement fully to respect those results as well as the principles of democracy.

The Council reaffirms the importance of proceeding as expeditiously as possible with the formation and training of the new Mozambican Defence Force. It notes with satisfaction that both the Government of Mozambique and the Resistência Nacional Moçambicana have accepted the fact that the initial size of the Mozambican Defence Force will be consistent with training and recruitment constraints during the pre-election period. It encourages the Government of Mozambique speedily to complete the transfer of the requisite authority and assets from the Mozambique Armed Forces to the Mozambican Defence Force. The Council calls upon Member States to help provide military training and appropriate equipment to the Mozambican Defence Force.

The Council expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for providing a detailed revised timetable for the phased withdrawal of civilian and military personnel of the Operation as set out in his report. The Council concurs with the Secretary-General that the Operation should be deployed over a wider area of the country, keeping in mind the need to assist the Government in maintaining security, particularly in the crucial period before, during and immediately after the elections.

The Council notes the importance of ensuring that the Mozambican police have the resources required to maintain security in the country, in particular in the post-electoral period. It urges that the Mozambican police be provided with these resources, and calls upon Member States to assist in this regard by contributing to the training and equipment needs of the police.

The Council expresses concern at the limited progress made to date in the area of demining. It welcomes efforts to revitalize that programme and urges all concerned to accelerate training and mine-clearance activities and work with the relevant Mozambican authorities towards the establishment of a national demining capability, including the possibility of leaving demining equipment in Mozambique after the withdrawal of the Operation, subject to the appropriate arrangements.

The Council invites the Secretary-General to report on the final disposition of the assets of the Operation within the framework of the withdrawal of the Operation.

The Council encourages the parties to continue their efforts in good faith to ensure post-electoral harmony on the basis of the observance of the democratic principles accepted by them in the General Peace Agreement as well as on the basis of the spirit and letter of that Agreement.

The Council notes that the post-election period will be an important and delicate time, during which the international community will need to assist the Mozambicans in the rehabilitation and development of their country, and in this regard calls upon the Secretary-General to report to the competent United Nations bodies on what further role the United Nations can perform.

The Council commends the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative in moving the peace process forward. It expresses its gratitude to the Special Representative and his dedicated staff for the assistance rendered to the mission sent by the Council to Mozambique.

Decision of 21 October 1994 (3444th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3444th meeting, on 21 October 1994, the Security Council included in its agenda the item entitled "The situation in Mozambique". After the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Mozambique, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (United Kingdom) then stated that after consultations among the members of the Council he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁵⁹

The Security Council has been following closely the progress made by the Government of Mozambique and the Resistência Nacional Moçambicana towards the implementation of the General Peace Agreement for Mozambique. It commends them and the people of Mozambique for what has been achieved.

The Council believes that the necessary conditions have now been established for the holding of free and fair elections on 27 and 28 October 1994 under effective national and international monitoring. These elections, by providing the Mozambican people with an opportunity fully to exercise their right to vote, hold out the prospect of securing for them lasting peace, stability and democracy.

The Council appeals to all concerned to ensure that the election campaign and the subsequent voting are conducted in a calm and responsible manner; that the elections are held freely and fairly; that those in authority act with complete impartiality in order to avoid any allegation of fraud; and that the election days and their aftermath are characterized by the absence of violence or the threat of violence. It also appeals to all parties to respect the safety and security of the officials of the National Elections Commission and the international election observers and to assist them in carrying out their mandate.

The Council reiterates its intention to endorse the results of the elections should the United Nations declare them free and fair, and reminds the parties of their obligation, under the General Peace Agreement, fully to abide by the results.

The Council trusts that the parties will be guided, after the elections, by the spirit of reconciliation as well as the principles of democracy and the need to work together in harmony to reconstruct their country, thereby enabling the international community to continue to support Mozambique as it pursues rehabilitation and reconstruction.

The Council takes this opportunity to express its appreciation to the Secretary-General, his Special Representative and the personnel of the United Nations Operation in Mozambique, and calls upon the parties to continue to cooperate with them to ensure the fulfilment of the mandate of the Operation, including verification of their complete demobilization and disarmament.

Decision of 15 November 1994 (3458th meeting):
resolution 957 (1994)

In a letter dated 9 November 1994⁶⁰ addressed to the President of the Security Council, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Council the text of the preliminary statement by his Special Representative for Mozambique, dated 2 November 1994, on the first multiparty elections in Mozambique, which were held from 27 to 29 October 1994.⁶¹ According to the statement, the polling process had been peaceful and conducted in a well-organized manner, with few technical problems. The United Nations had not received any reports of major irregularities, incidents or breaches of the Electoral Law which could have adversely affected the validity of the elections. Voter turnout had been "massive", with more than 90 per cent of registered voters going to the polls in some provinces. The three-day poll had been characterized by a remarkable absence of violence, intimidation or coercion, and the extension of polling by one day had offered ample opportunity to all who wished to vote to do so. However, since the polling had been extended for an additional day until 29 October 1994, the deadline for the publication of the final electoral results was now set for 13 November 1994.

The Secretary-General recalled that he had indicated that the withdrawal of ONUMOZ would begin after the elections and would be concluded by the end of January 1995. He had also mentioned that, in accordance with the provisions of the general peace agreement, the presence of the United Nations in Mozambique would be required until such time as the new Government took office. He therefore recommended that its mandate be extended for technical reasons until such time as the new Government was installed, which was expected to take place by 15 December 1994. During that period, ONUMOZ would continue its good offices functions, as well as its verification and monitoring activities.

At its 3458th meeting, on 15 November 1994, the Security Council included the letter from the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Mozambique, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (United States) then called the attention of the members of the Council to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of its prior consultations,⁶² and to the further report of the Secretary-General on ONUMOZ⁶³ and the report of the Security Council mission established pursuant to the statement made by the President of the Security Council at the 3406th meeting, on 19 July 1994.⁶⁴ The draft resolution was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 957 (1994), which reads:

Decision of 14 December 1994 (3479th meeting):
statement by the President

By a letter dated 1 December 1994 addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁶⁶ the representative of Mozambique requested a meeting of the Council on the situation in Mozambique to be convened on 9 December or soon thereafter, but not later than 15 December. He also informed the Council that the new Assembly of the Republic of Mozambique and the President of Mozambique would be inaugurated on 8 and 9 December 1994.

At its 3479th meeting, on 14 December 1994, the Security Council included the letter from the representative of Mozambique in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Mozambique, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Rwanda) then drew the attention of the members of the Council to a letter dated 13 December 1994 from the representative of Mozambique addressed to the Secretary-General.⁶⁷ The President also stated that, after consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁶⁸

The Security Council welcomes the installation of the President of the Republic of Mozambique and the inauguration of the new Assembly of the Republic of Mozambique following the first Mozambican multiparty elections, as provided for in the General Peace Agreement for Mozambique, that were held on 27, 28 and 29 October 1994, which were declared as having been free and fair and were endorsed by the Council in its resolution 960 (1994) of 21 November 1994.

The Council congratulates the people and the parties of Mozambique for their peaceful fulfilment of the goals set out in the General Peace Agreement. It encourages them to continue their efforts in good faith to ensure post-election harmony on the basis, inter alia, of the observance of democratic principles. It believes that, with the new governmental structure in place, the foundations have been laid to secure lasting peace, stability, national reconciliation and democracy.

The Council commends the Secretary-General, his Special Representative and the United Nations Operation in Mozambique and its staff for their fulfilment of the mandate of the Operation and for their efforts in assisting the successful achievement of the objectives of the General Peace Agreement.

The Council notes that, the Operation having completed its mission, its mandate has come to an end and the Operation will be finally withdrawn from Mozambique by 31 January 1995 in accordance with Council resolution 957 (1994) of 15 November 1994. In this connection, it looks forward to the report of the Secretary-General on the final disposition of the assets of the Operation within the framework of the withdrawal of the Operation, as requested in its statement of 7 September 1994. In that context, it also expresses the hope that effective arrangements for the disposition and, as appropriate, the destruction of weapons and the establishment, with the assistance of the United Nations, of a national demining capability will be in place prior to the final withdrawal of the Operation, and that consideration will be given to leaving demining and other equipment in Mozambique after the withdrawal, subject to the appropriate arrangements.

The Council emphasizes that the post-election period will be an important and delicate time, during which there is a continuing need for the international community to assist the Government and people of Mozambique in the reconstruction and redevelopment of their country. It notes the intention of the Secretary-General to report to the competent United Nations bodies on future United Nations activities in Mozambique. It urges all States and relevant international organizations to contribute actively to these efforts.

(3494th meeting)

At its 3494th meeting, on 27 January 1995, the Security Council included the item entitled “The situation in Mozambique” in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Brazil, Canada, Egypt, Japan, Mozambique and Portugal, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The representative of Mozambique noted that that meeting was the last of a series of Security Council meetings on Mozambique during the past two years. His delegation was honoured to participate in those deliberations, especially because the participants were assembled not to express concerns but rather to state that at last their collective mission had been successfully accomplished, despite all the hurdles. It was time for a final assessment of the whole process, so as to draw lessons that would certainly help the United Nations address similar operations in future and to collectively exchange views on the Operation in Mozambique and on how best the role of the Organization in peacekeeping operations could be enhanced. His delegation was convinced that peacekeeping forces would be successful only if they enjoyed the support of the parties involved. He felt that they must strictly adhere to fundamental principles outlined by the General Assembly and to the terms of reference as approved by the Security Council and in line with the agreement reached by the parties. The speaker then outlined some areas of concern for which the support of the Council was required. Those included, inter alia, the issue of the formation of the Mozambican Force, the strengthening of the national police and the consolidation of the judicial system. He also drew the Council’s attention to growing concerns over a possible threat to peace that might result from the consequences of a new and renewed drought in Mozambique and in the southern African region as a whole. In that regard, he expressed the appreciation of his Government for the role played by the Security Council and the international community in mitigating the devastating consequences of man-made and natural calamities which had ravaged the region. He encouraged the Council to keep that issue under permanent review. His Government believed that the holding of the first multiparty elections and the withdrawal of UNOMOZ should not be regarded as ends in themselves. They were only the culmination of an important phase of the whole peace process. In his Government’s view, the need for the international community to continue to assist the people and the Government of Mozambique in consolidating peace and stability was more acute than ever before.⁶⁹

The representative of Botswana, speaking on behalf of the 11 States members of the Southern African Development Community,⁷⁰ stated that the success story of Mozambique could not be told without acknowledging the pivotal role played by the United Nations and the international community as a whole. However, the end of the mandate of ONUMOZ and its complete withdrawal should not signal the end of their assistance to Mozambique. The recurring theme of post-conflict peacebuilding — that there was an inexorable link between peace and development — had great significance and relevance for that country. Continuous support should be given for social and economic development to ensure that there was no reversal of the gains made so far. There was an urgent need for enhanced cooperation with the Mozambican authorities in the reintegration of ex-combatants into civilian life. In addition, the country was littered with anti-personnel landmines. The idea that the mine-clearing equipment in use should be left behind when ONUMOZ finally withdrew was most welcome. The leaders of Southern Africa were working very hard to ensure that their region was not subjected to another war, after the resolution of conflicts in Mozambique, South Africa and Angola. The attainment of peace and democracy in Mozambique had consolidated the fundamental political changes which had swept the subregion in the past five years.⁷¹

The representative of the United States stated that the Operation’s success demonstrated that, with commitment and determination, peacekeeping could work and assist the transition from “the horrors of war to the blessing of peace”. The success also refuted the arguments of those who claimed that United Nations peacekeeping was “a needless expenditure of money and blood with nothing to show for it". He contended that after ONUMOZ had fulfilled its mandate and completed its withdrawal, the United Nations still had a role to play. In that connection, he urged the Government of Mozambique to collaborate with the United Nations in the destruction and disabling of weapons collected or found, so that they did not find their way into the black market and from there into neighbouring countries.⁷²

The representative of France, speaking on behalf of the European Union, said that the successful conclusion of the peace process would not have been possible without the determination of the two parties. He also noted the role of the United Nations, the countries of the region and the troop contributors. The European Union, for its part, had spared no effort and intended to continue to promote peacebuilding in Mozambique. He recalled that 80 per cent of the election expenses had been defrayed by the European Union, which also provided 200 observers in addition to those serving as United Nations observers. The speaker urged the Secretary-General to ensure that the United Nations specialized agencies would replace the blue helmets to coordinate the development and growth of the country. The European Union attached great importance to genuine national reconciliation, and it hoped that sincere cooperation between the majority and the opposition would be among the new Government's priorities.⁷³

The representative of Brazil recalled that his Government had consistently stressed its position that ONUMOZ, as well as any other peacekeeping operation, should be established and deployed in the name of the United Nations as a whole, and not of the Security Council alone. His delegation had repeatedly underscored the two main policy principles that had guided its position. First, peacekeeping operations must be aimed at contributing to alleviating tensions and promoting peace in regional conflicts that posed a threat to peace and stability; and secondly, they must be absolutely impartial in order to implement their mandates successfully. The success story of ONUMOZ had allowed his country to draw some conclusions on ongoing and future United Nations efforts in the field of peacekeeping. To be effective, such operations had to be adequately staffed and equipped; and delays in their deployment were to be avoided at all costs. Most important was the need to persevere in the search for peace when the commitment to national reconciliation prevailed among the parties. No precipitate reduction or withdrawal of the personnel of any operation should occur without prior determination of the impact on the operation's capability to discharge its mandate successfully.⁷⁴

The representative of Canada stated that he was encouraged by the role that the United Nations had played in Mozambique. It had demonstrated once again the readiness of the international community to help implement the numerous and varied provisions of a comprehensive peace agreement. It also confirmed how much could be accomplished through multilateral action if the mandates set by the Council were achievable, the time frames remained realistic, the approach flexible and the commitment to peace among the parties involved was genuine. He also acknowledged and commended the contribution of Mozambique's neighbours. The informal cooperation that existed on security issues in the region and the conclusion of more formal economic cooperation arrangements had contributed significantly towards building confidence in the prospect of a more secure, democratic and prosperous future for southern Africa. Canada was encouraged by those developments and supported the efforts under way to enhance the capability of regional organizations and OAU, not only to contribute to the resolution of conflicts but, more importantly, to prevent other conflicts.⁷⁵

9. The situation in Burundi

Initial proceedings

Decision of 25 October 1993 (3297th meeting): statement by the President

By a letter dated 25 October 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹ the representatives of Cape Verde, Djibouti and Morocco requested the convening of an urgent meeting of the Council to consider the situation in Burundi, following the military coup d'état of 21 October in that country. Similar requests were received from the representatives of Burundi and Zimbabwe, the latter in his capacity as Chairman of the Group of African States, by letters of the same date addressed to the President of the Council.² The representative of Burundi also asked the Council to take urgent and energetic measures to restore peace and ensure the return of constitutional order in his country.

At its 3297th meeting on 25 October 1993, the Security Council included those letters in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Burundi, Egypt, Mali and Zimbabwe, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Brazil) then drew the attention of the members of the Council to several other documents,³ including a letter dated 22 October 1993 addressed to the Secretary-General in which the representative of Burundi informed him that, on the night of 20-21 October 1993, a group of soldiers had attacked the Presidential palace and the residences of a number of political leaders and that the President and other Government leaders had been executed.

The President then stated that, after consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁴

² S/26626 and S/26630, respectively.

³ Letters dated 22 October 1993 from the representative of Egypt (S/26623) and 22 October 1993 from the representative of Burundi (S/26628), both addressed to the President of the Security Council; and letter dated 25 October 1993 from the representative of Mali to the Secretary-General (S/26632).

The Security Council expresses its grave concern at the military coup of 21 October 1993 against the democratically elected Government of Burundi, and condemns it.

The Council deeply regrets and strongly condemns the acts of violence and the loss of life which have been caused by the perpetrators of the military coup. It demands that they desist forthwith from taking any action which would exacerbate tension and plunge the country into more violence and bloodshed, which could have serious implications for peace and stability in the region.

The Council demands that the perpetrators of the military coup cease all acts of violence, reveal the whereabouts and fate of Government officials, release all prisoners, return to their barracks and put an immediate end to their illegal act, with a view to the immediate reinstatement of democracy and constitutional rule in Burundi.

The Council pays tribute to the deceased President of Burundi, Mr. Melchior Ndadaye, and members of his Government for their supreme sacrifice for democracy. Those responsible for their violent deaths and other acts of violence should be brought to justice.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to monitor and follow closely the situation in Burundi, in close association with the Organization of African Unity, and report to the Council thereon urgently. In this context, it takes note with appreciation of the dispatch by the Secretary-General of a Special Envoy to Burundi.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Decision of 16 November 1993 (3316th meeting): statement by the President

By a letter dated 2 November 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁵ the Secretary-General informed the Council that his Special Envoy had arrived in Bujumbura on 27 October and had met with the surviving members of the Government which had taken refuge in the French Embassy compound. They had informed him that the coup d'état was continuing and that they had no intention of resuming their functions until an international force was deployed in the country to protect them and to ensure that the army, in which they no longer had any confidence, returned to barracks. His Special Envoy had subsequently met with the Army Command. As one of the confidence-building measures, he had suggested the appointment of a Special Representative; the suggestion had received general support. On 29 October, his Special Envoy was informed that the Government had re-established its authority but would continue to operate from the French Embassy compound.

The Secretary-General recalled that, in a presidential statement issued on 25 October 1993,⁶ the Council had requested him to monitor the situation in Burundi, in close association with the Organization of African Unity (OAU). In that context, he informed the members of the Council that in a communiqué adopted by the Regional Summit on the situation in Burundi,⁷ held at Kigali on 28 October 1993, the Summit, inter alia, had asked him, in consultation with the Secretary-General of OAU, to set up an international force for confidence-building and for stabilizing the situation in Burundi, to be composed of forces drawn essentially from African countries chosen in consultation with the Government of Burundi. He therefore announced his intention to hold consultations with the Secretary-General of OAU, to explore common areas of cooperation, and to appoint a Special Representative for Burundi.

By a letter dated 4 November 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁸ the representative of Burundi reiterated his Government's request for the dispatch of an international force to Burundi. He contended that the presence of such force would help to dispel mistrust and would encourage the hundreds of thousands of Burundian refugees and the many displaced persons to return to their homes. He therefore requested the convening of an urgent meeting of the Council to examine his Government's request.

At its 3316th meeting, on 16 November 1993, the Security Council included the above letter in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Burundi and Rwanda, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The President (Cape Verde) then stated that, after consultations with the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁹

The Security Council continues to follow with deep concern the developments in Burundi, which have threatened that country's nascent democracy, and caused widespread violence and bloodshed.

The Council reiterates its condemnation of the abrupt and violent interruption of the democratic process initiated in Burundi and demands the immediate cessation of acts of violence.

The Council warmly commends the Prime Minister and the other members of the Government of Burundi for their courage, and the spirit of reconciliation they have demonstrated at this very difficult moment.

The Council is alarmed at the grave humanitarian consequences of this tragedy, which has resulted in the movement of over 700,000 refugees into neighbouring countries and an increasing number of internally displaced persons throughout the country. The Council appeals to all States, international agencies and other humanitarian organizations to provide prompt humanitarian assistance to the affected civilian population in Burundi and neighbouring countries.

The Council notes with satisfaction the immediate response of the Secretary-General to this situation by the dispatch of a Special Envoy on a good offices mission to facilitate the return of the country to constitutional rule, and welcomes the appointment by the Secretary-General of a Special Representative for Burundi. The Security Council also welcomes the efforts of the Organization of African Unity to assist the Government of Burundi in its efforts to restore democratic institutions, rebuild confidence and stabilize the situation.

The Council expresses gratitude to the States which provided shelter in their diplomatic compounds to the members of the Government of Burundi and also expresses its gratitude for the technical assistance provided by those countries to ensure the security and safety of the members of the Government.

The Council encourages the Secretary-General to continue using his good offices through his Special Representative and to consider dispatching in his support as soon as possible a small United Nations team, within existing resources, to Burundi for fact-finding and advice with a view to facilitating the efforts of the Government of Burundi and the Organization of African Unity.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to keep it informed as appropriate on the situation and the progress of the United Nations good offices mission. It also requests the Secretary-General to report, at the earliest, with recommendations on the possible establishment of a voluntary fund to assist in the dispatch of an Organization of African Unity mission as announced by the Secretary-General of this organization.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Decision of 29 July 1994 (3410th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3410th meeting, on 29 July 1994, the Security Council resumed its consideration of the item. After the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Burundi, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The President (Pakistan) then stated that, after consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹⁰

For the last few months, the Security Council has been following closely the tense and volatile situation in Burundi, based on briefings by the Secretariat. The Council appreciates the efforts made in Burundi to maintain peace in the country under very difficult circumstances and, in this context, commends the civilian and military authorities concerned.

The Council welcomes the ongoing cooperation between the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations to assist in maintaining peace in Burundi. In this connection, the Council encourages the Secretary-General to continue using his good offices through his Special Representative.

The Council is deeply concerned by the humanitarian problems created as a result of the arrival of tens of thousands of refugees in the northern provinces of Burundi.

The Council supports the ongoing political dialogue in Burundi aimed at reaching an early agreement on presidential succession. It calls upon all parties to reach rapidly a settlement based on democratic principles.

The Council condemns those extremist elements who continue to reject the ongoing negotiations and seek to block progress towards a peaceful settlement. In this context, the Council is alarmed by the recent violence in Bujumbura and reiterates the terms of its presidential statements of 25 October and 16 November 1993. The Council demands that all parties cease immediately any incitement to violence or ethnic hatred.

The Council encourages all those who support a peaceful solution to persist in their efforts. It further calls upon all Burundians, especially political, military and religious leaders, to do their utmost for the success of the ongoing political dialogue.

The Council looks forward to reports on Burundi from the Secretary-General and will remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 25 August 1994 (3419th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3419th meeting, on 25 August 1994, the Security Council continued its consideration of the item entitled "The situation in Burundi". After the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Burundi, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The President (Russian Federation) then stated that, after consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹¹

The Security Council considered the oral report of its fact-finding mission to Burundi which visited Bujumbura on 13 and 14 August 1994 and the subsequent briefing by the Secretary-General. The Council takes note of the observations and recommendations contained therein.

The Council welcomes the ongoing negotiations in Burundi aimed at reaching an early agreement on presidential succession, overcoming the long-lasting constitutional crisis and establishing stable democratic institutions in the country. The Council urges all parties to these negotiations to display maximum political will for a speedy settlement of existing differences and to make every effort to accomplish this objective by the scheduled date of 26 August 1994.

The Council follows closely the current negotiations and deplores the attempts of any party to block progress towards political settlement, which is essential for stability in the country and for the prevention of outbreaks of violence.

The Council reaffirms its condemnation of those extremist elements who attempt to undermine the national reconciliation. The Council calls upon all the parties in Burundi to reject any undemocratic or extremist solutions in the settlement of their political differences.

The Council considers that impunity from justice is one of the most serious problems which contributes to the deterioration of the security situation in Burundi. For this reason, it attaches importance to the strengthening of the national judicial system. The Council also attaches importance to the deployment in Burundi of civilian observers responsible for monitoring the establishment of a more secure environment.

The Council is alarmed at the extent of the humanitarian crisis in Burundi. It is concerned with recent attacks against foreigners in Burundi, including those involved in humanitarian relief operations and belonging to the diplomatic community. It calls upon the authorities and all parties in Burundi to provide safety and security for all personnel involved in the relief efforts and other international personnel.

The Council encourages the Secretary-General to continue to keep under close review ways and means of using available resources to sustain and enhance the international humanitarian efforts in Burundi and to promote national reconciliation there. It likewise encourages the Organization of African Unity and States Members of the United Nations to redouble their efforts in this regard, including through political contacts.

The Council commends the Secretary-General and his Special Representative for Burundi, as well as the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, for their tireless efforts, within their respective competences, to contribute to the resolution of political, humanitarian and other problems of this country.

The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 21 October 1994 (3441st meeting):
statement by the President

On 11 October 1994, pursuant to a decision taken by the Security Council following informal consultations on 16 September 1994, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Burundi.¹² On the political level, the Secretary-General noted that since 6 April 1994, the date on which the Presidents of Burundi and Rwanda were killed in a plane crash when returning from a regional peace conference held in the United Republic of Tanzania, there had been constant rumours that Burundi was on the verge of succumbing to a crisis as serious as that which Rwanda had just experienced. He had therefore followed the situation very closely. His Special Representative had set himself the task of convincing the political class in Burundi that there was no advantage in giving an ethnic or political connotation to that accidental tragedy. He appeared to have succeeded since the situation, although still fragile, was not really explosive. Political life had revolved around the selection of a president. A forum of recognized political parties and representatives of the civil society, called Forum of the Negotiations, was established to deal with power-sharing and the modalities for the election of a new president and was able to reach, on 10 September, a first agreement on power-sharing. 10 of the 13 political parties signed a Convention of Government, which provided for a Government of 25 members (55 per cent from the Hutu majority) appointed by the President; a four-year transitional period; the appointment of a Prime Minister from among the opposition; and the creation of a National Security Council of 10 members, equitably divided between the Front pour la démocratie au Burundi (FRODEBU) and the opposition. On 18 September, a second agreement was reached on the modalities for appointing a new president. Mr. Sylvestre Ntibantunganya was sworn in as President on 1 October, following his election by the National Assembly, and two days later, Mr. Anatole Kanyenkiko was confirmed as Prime Minister. A new coalition Government was constituted on 5 October 1994.¹³

The Secretary-General further reported that the security situation in the country remained extremely unstable. Clashes between security forces and armed Hutu rebels occurred very frequently and armed attacks on notables, especially Hutus, were common. He noted that the climate of insecurity was linked to the investigations and revenge in connection with the crisis of October 1993: the Hutu believed that the investigations were not impartial, were essentially directed against them and disregarded the civilian and military personnel involved in the coup d'état whereas the Tutsi believed that they were partial and did not take into account the perpetrators of the massacres subsequent to the coup d'état. In the meantime, a clandestine radio was operating intermittently, inciting hatred among the Hutu population and encouraging it to take up arms against the Tutsi.

The Secretary-General also noted that over one million people from Burundi and Rwanda needed humanitarian assistance. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees was continuing to look for lasting solutions. However, it was clear that those solutions could only be found within the framework of a comprehensive political solution and a regional approach. Therefore he had sent a mission to the area to examine the situation from a regional angle.

The Secretary-General observed that although the situation had stabilized somewhat with the election of a new President, it nevertheless remained precarious and the international community should therefore continue encouraging the moderates to re-establish democracy in Burundi. He therefore recommended the following: the maintenance in Zaire, with the Government's agreement, of a military presence capable of rapid intervention should the situation in Burundi deteriorate suddenly; deployment of a contingent of guards to protect personnel from the humanitarian organizations; stepping-up of technical assistance to enable the Government of Burundi to begin reconstruction; deployment of human rights observers to facilitate the process of national reconciliation; strengthening the office of his Special Representative; organization of a regional summit; and increased visits to Burundi by eminent persons to show the support of the international community.

At its 3441st meeting, on 21 October 1994, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Burundi, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The President (United Kingdom) then stated that, after consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹⁴

The Security Council has considered the situation in Burundi, on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General of 11 October 1994. It recalls its earlier presidential statements on this subject, most recently that made on 25 August 1994. It warmly welcomes the election and swearing in of the President, the confirmation in office of the Prime Minister and the formation of the new coalition Government. It believes that this represents an important step forward in the stabilization of the situation in Burundi. It calls upon all parties in Burundi to cooperate in the work of re-establishing democracy and stability.

The Council remains concerned that, despite the important political progress that has been made, much remains to be done if the climate of insecurity described by the Secretary-General in his report is to be dispelled and the country set firmly on the path of reconciliation and reconstruction. The Council deplores the fact that extremist elements continue to threaten national reconciliation, including through the operation of a clandestine radio station inciting ethnic hatred and violence. It reaffirms the importance of bringing to justice those responsible for the coup d'état of 21 October 1993 and subsequent inter-ethnic massacres and other violations of international humanitarian law. In this regard, it also encourages the Secretary-General to pursue his suggestion that United Nations assistance be provided to the Government of Burundi in strengthening its judicial system.

The Council commends the role played by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, including in helping the new coalition Government to organize a national debate early in 1995 on the problems of relations between the two communities. The Council attaches importance to the success of this initiative. In this regard, it welcomes the Secretary-General's intention to strengthen the office of the Special Representative.

The Council believes the international community must continue to give priority to the restoration of stability and the promotion of national reconciliation in Burundi. In this context, it recognizes the work of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the office he has established in Burundi and notes the important role human rights monitors might play. It welcomes the recent increase in the number of Organization of African Unity military observers in Burundi. It encourages the Organization of African Unity, United Nations agencies and Member States to continue their involvement in Burundi and to intensify political contacts and visits. It notes the importance of increased technical assistance from the international community as the coalition Government tackles the critical tasks of reconciliation and reconstruction.

The Council remains deeply concerned at the plight of refugees and displaced persons in Burundi. It commends the continuing efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other humanitarian bodies to address this problem. It welcomes the Secretary-General's sending of a special envoy to study the refugee crisis from a regional perspective and looks forward to any recommendations that the Secretary-General may have as a result of that initiative.

The Council calls upon the authorities and all parties in Burundi to ensure the safety and security of all personnel involved in the relief efforts and other international personnel.

In the statement made by the President of the Security Council on 14 October 1994 on the situation in Rwanda, the Council encouraged the Secretary-General to pursue consultations as to how the United Nations could assist in the preparation and convening of an international conference to look into the problems of the subregion. The Council believes that the holding of such a conference would be of real value in the context of Burundi.

The Council stands ready to consider further any detailed proposals which the Secretary-General may have. The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 22 December 1994 (3485th meeting):
statement by the President

By a letter of 26 October 1994 addressed to the Secretary-General,¹⁵ the representative of Burundi, referring to paragraph 48 of the report of the Secretary-General dated 11 October 1994, said that his Government welcomed the suggestion to establish a "humanitarian base" at Bujumbura airport, but that consideration should be given to those persons already displaced and to the question of coordinating humanitarian aid. Concerning the proposal to maintain a military presence in Zaire, it expressed confidence in its own ability to deal with any eventuality and contended that such presence should be designed to help the Government of Zaire to maintain peace and security in the Zairian province of Kivu, disarm the armed bands and deter any subversive elements from moving towards Burundi and Rwanda. His Government rejected the deployment of a contingent of guards to protect the humanitarian organization teams in Burundi, since the OAU observer mission in Burundi and the security forces were already performing that task. While it did not object in principle to the strengthening of the office of the Special Representative, it preferred that such action focus on logistical aspects and to have the human contribution in the form of missions by consultants. His Government supported the deployment of human rights observers in Burundi.

At its 3485th meeting, on 22 December 1994, the Security Council continued its consideration of the item on its agenda.

After the adoption of the agenda, the President (Rwanda) stated that, following consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹⁶

The Security Council continues to follow closely developments in Burundi. It is concerned about the escalation of violence in Burundi, both in Bujumbura and in the countryside, which threatens to destabilize further an already fragile situation and could endanger the stability of the subregion. It calls upon all those concerned to refrain from violence. It supports fully the efforts of the Burundian authorities in seeking to ensure that those committing or inciting the commission of acts of violence are held accountable for their actions and that the militias that are still operating both in Bujumbura and in the countryside are disarmed.

The Council encourages the Government, the National Assembly, the political parties and all others concerned in Burundi, and in particular the army, to respect and give support to the Convention on Governance of 10 September 1994 and thus avoid jeopardizing the delicate balance and relative stability in place since its implementation.

The Council welcomes the continuing efforts being made to bring about further political progress in Burundi, and underlines the importance of continuing to resolve all outstanding issues through dialogue on the basis of the agreements reached thus far by the political parties. It urges all sides to reject confrontational tactics, violence or extremism and to work towards compromise and conciliation in a spirit of national unity which transcends ethnic origins.

The Council commends the Secretary-General for his efforts and expresses appreciation for the work done by his Special Representative, and the Organization of African Unity, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, for their efforts, within their respective competences, to contribute to the resolution of the problems of Burundi.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to keep it fully informed of developments in Burundi.

The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 31 January 1995 (3497th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3497th meeting, on 31 January 1995, the Security Council resumed its consideration of the item. After the adoption of the agenda, the President (Argentina) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a letter dated 25 January 1995 from the representative of Burundi, addressed to the President of the Security Council.¹⁷

He then stated that, after consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹⁸

The Security Council, which has been following closely developments in Burundi, has learned with concern that the situation in the country has deteriorated considerably over the last few days.

In this context, the Council deeply deplores the pronouncements made by the leadership of one political party which calls for the withdrawal of the Prime Minister and the overthrow of his government by all means available.

The Council denounces such attempts to threaten by way of intimidation the coalition Government which was established in line with the Convention on Governance of 10 September 1994. It further condemns the extremist groups that continue to undermine the national reconciliation process.

The Council calls upon all parties and others concerned, in particular the national security forces, to refrain from committing acts of violence and to give support to the Government institutions established in line with the above-mentioned Convention.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep it fully informed of developments in Burundi. The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 9 March 1995 (3506th meeting):
statement by the President

By a letter dated 28 February 1995 addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹⁹ the members of the Security Council mission to Burundi²⁰ transmitted the report on their mission to Bujumbura, on 10 and 11 February 1995, in accordance with a decision taken by the Security Council during informal consultations on 6 February 1995.²¹ The mission had followed up on work done by an earlier Council mission to Burundi.²²

The mission noted that the political and security situation in the country remained precarious and was potentially explosive due to the unwillingness of Tutsi and Hutu extremist elements, both within the coalition Government and outside it, to accept the power-sharing arrangements contained in the Convention on Governance. Those extremists had usurped the political initiative, at the expense of the moderate elements who constituted the majority of the population and had been silenced through threat and intimidation. Further aggravating the situation was the fact that the security forces, which were mainly Tutsi, formed an independent power centre, and their support of the coalition Government could not be taken for granted. Moreover, the culture of impunity persisted and there had been no political or judicial accountability of those directly involved in the coup attempt and subsequent massacres. In addition, the judicial system, which had largely collapsed, was often perceived as being partial. Those factors jeopardized the survival of the coalition Government, the Convention, and peace and security in Burundi and in the region as a whole.

The mission therefore recommended the prompt establishment of an international commission of inquiry into the October 1993 events, as proposed by the Government and augmenting the United Nations presence in Burundi to assist the Government in building an impartial judicial system, training civilian police forces and establishing an effective administrative presence in the provinces. It also recommended that the number of OAU observers should be substantially increased and that human rights monitors should be deployed throughout the country, as requested by Burundi.

The mission supported the holding of a national debate with the participation of all segments of the society, as a means of fostering political dialogue. It further recommended the continuation of visits to Burundi of high-level international delegations to underscore international concern and diffuse tension. Some members of the mission were of the opinion that, in order to promote political stability and national reconciliation, the Security Council should explore the possibility of imposing selective sanctions against individuals believed to belong to extremist groups in Burundi.

At its 3506th meeting, on 9 March 1995, the Security Council included the report of the Security Council mission to Burundi in its agenda and invited the representative of Burundi, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (China) then drew the attention of the members of the Council to the following documents: a letter dated 23 February 1995 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council,²³ transmitting the report of the preparatory fact-finding mission to Burundi dated 20 May 1994; a letter dated 6 March 1995 from the representative of Burundi addressed to the President of the Security Council,²⁴ transmitting the reaction of his Government to the mission's report; and a letter dated 8 March 1995 from the representative of Burundi addressed to the Secretary-General,²⁵ transmitting a copy of the Agreement embodying the Convention on Governance of 10 September 1994.

The President then stated that, following consultations among the members of the Council, he

The preparatory fact-finding mission was sent by the Secretary-General in response to a request made by the Government of Burundi, to investigate the coup d'état of October 1993 and to consider what activities future missions or an expanded United Nations political presence could undertake to encourage a return to civil peace. had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the members of the Council:²⁶

The Security Council has considered the reports of its mission to Burundi which visited Bujumbura on 10 and 11 February 1995 and welcomes the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the mission of 28 February 1995. It expresses its appreciation to the mission members for their efforts.

The Council recalls its earlier statements on the situation in Burundi, in particular that of 31 January 1995. It remains deeply concerned that a climate of insecurity continues to prevail in Burundi. It condemns the activities of those, both within and outside the country, who seek to nullify the agreed power-sharing arrangements contained in the Convention on Governance of 10 September 1994 by resorting to undemocratic methods such as intimidation and incitement to violence, as well as guerrilla activities and subversive political activity. Such actions have threatened peace, stability and national reconciliation.

The Council reaffirms its support for the Convention on Governance and for the coalition Government established under it. In this connection, it notes the appointment of the Prime Minister and his Cabinet and urges all parties in Burundi to work together to ensure stability in the country.

The Council reaffirms the view that impunity is a fundamental problem in Burundi, one which seriously endangers security in the country, and stresses the importance it attaches to assistance being given to help to strengthen the national judicial system. In this context, it underlines the role that could be played by an international commission of inquiry into the 1993 attempted coup d'état and into the massacres that followed, established in accordance with the Convention on Governance.

The Council strongly reaffirms its support for the implementation of the provisions of the Convention on Governance calling for the holding of a national debate with the participation of all segments of the society in Burundi, as a means of fostering political dialogue.

The Council underlines the importance of assisting the Government of Burundi in its efforts to restore stability and promote national reconciliation. In this context, it encourages the Secretary-General, in consolidation with the Government of Burundi, to augment the United Nations presence in the country, in order to assist the Government of Burundi in strengthening the national judicial system, training civilian police forces and establishing an effective administrative presence in the provinces. It commends the important role played by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General.

The Council reiterates that improving the security situation in Burundi must be given high priority. It encourages the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in consultation with the Government of Burundi and in close coordination with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, to reinforce the office he has established in Burundi. Consideration could also be given to the role human rights monitors could play.

The Council also recognizes the significant contribution made by the military observers of the Organization of African Unity. It encourages the Organization of African Unity, in consultation with the Government of Burundi, to increase their number further and calls upon the international community to assist the Organization of African Unity in this regard.

The Council further calls upon all parties in Burundi to cooperate with international observers and other personnel by ensuring unimpeded access to all parts of the country.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep it fully informed of developments in Burundi. The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 29 March 1995 (3511th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3511th meeting on 29 March 1995, the Security Council resumed its consideration of the item on its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (China) stated that, after consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:²⁷

The Security Council is deeply concerned about the escalation of violence in Burundi. It condemns the murders of the Minister of Energy and Mines and the former Mayor of Bujumbura by extremists and deplores the ensuing ethnic killings of many people, which have caused thousands to flee their homes. It stresses the futility of resorting to violence and condemns the activities of the extremist elements who try to destabilize the country and threaten the whole region. It encourages all States to take the measures deemed necessary to prevent them from travelling abroad and receiving any kind of support. It reaffirms its determination to support the Convention on Governance of 10 September 1994; the provisions of which constitute the institutional framework for the necessary national reconciliation. The Council calls upon all political parties, military forces and all elements of civil society fully to respect and implement the Convention in a spirit of dialogue, moderation and compromise.

The Council urges all parties to work together to further the dialogue. It underlines the urgency of organizing, in accordance with the Convention on Governance, a national debate with the participation of all elements of the nation with a view to consolidating national reconciliation and restoring democracy. It invites the Secretary-General to help the various political parties and elements of civil society to initiate this comprehensive consultation.

The Council warns that those who commit crimes against humanity are individually responsible for their crimes and will be brought to justice. The Council specifically warns that, if acts of genocide are committed in Burundi, it will consider taking appropriate measures to bring to justice under international law any who may have committed such acts.

The Council reaffirms its view that the perception of impunity is a fundamental problem in Burundi, one which seriously endangers security in the country. The Council expresses once again its grave concern at reports indicating that systematic, widespread and flagrant violations of international humanitarian law have been committed in Burundi.

The Council recalls the statement by its President of 9 March 1995: in which the Council, inter alia, underlined the role that could be played in Burundi by an international commission of inquiry into the October 1993 attempted coup d'état and into the massacres that followed. It requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council on an urgent basis on what steps should be taken to establish such an impartial commission of inquiry.

The Council favours measures to restore a state of law and improve the functioning of the judicial system. It also favours the organization of a round table of donors. It urges States to provide for these projects financial contributions directly or through a trust fund to be created for this purpose.

The Council supports the reinforcement of the action decided by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and welcomes the dispatching of experts.

The Council pays tribute to the actions taken by the Organization of African Unity. It calls upon the Organization of African Unity and its members in the subregion to continue to use their influence to help to stabilize the situation in Burundi. It further calls upon all States, in particular neighbouring States, to refrain from supplying or allowing the transit of arms and to deny sanctuary and any other assistance to those extremist elements which seek to destabilize the situation in Burundi.

Aware of the close interconnection between various humanitarian and political problems in the region and of the risk of subsequent destabilization, the Council reaffirms its support for a regional conference on peace, stability and security and calls upon the countries of the region to convene such a conference as a matter of urgency.

The Council remains seized of the matter. It will consider taking action as the situation demands.

Decision of 28 August 1995 (3571st meeting):

By a letter dated 28 July 1995 addressed to the President of the Security Council,²⁸ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Council the report of the Special Envoy appointed to examine the feasibility of establishing either a commission on the truth or a judicial fact-finding commission in Burundi.²⁹ The report concluded that neither a commission on the truth on the Salvadorian model nor an international judicial commission of inquiry, with a mandate limited to purely judicial matters, would be an adequate response to put an end to impunity in Burundi. However, an international judicial commission of inquiry could be viable and useful if its mandate guaranteed that its conclusions and recommendations would be implemented. The commission would be empowered not only to undertake a judicial inquiry but also to make recommendations of an institutional nature in the legal, political, and/or administrative fields. The cooperation of the Burundian authorities, including their explicit commitment to implement the commission's recommendations would be required. Finally, the commission should be established by a resolution of the Security Council and the United Nations should verify that its recommendations were implemented.

On that basis, the Secretary-General recommended the establishment of a three-member commission of inquiry, appointed by him, with a threefold mandate: (a) to establish the facts relating to the assassination of the President of Burundi, the subsequent massacres, and other serious acts of violence and political crimes committed since that date; (b) to recommend modalities for the trial and punishment of persons it had identified as being responsible for those offences; and (c) to recommend measures of a legal, political or administrative nature, including those requiring legislative or constitutional reform, to prevent any repetition of those acts and eradicate impunity in Burundi. He further observed that the full cooperation of the Government of Burundi would be needed and described the modalities for such cooperation.

²⁹ In the statement by the President of the Security Council of 29 March 1995 (S/PRST/1995/13), the Council requested the Secretary-General to report to it on an urgent basis on what steps should be taken to establish an impartial commission of inquiry into the October 1993 attempted coup d'état in Burundi and into the massacres that followed.

At its 3571st meeting on 28 August 1995, the Security Council included the letter from the Secretary-General in its agenda. After the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Burundi, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The President (Indonesia) then drew the attention of the members of the Council to the text of a draft resolution submitted by Argentina, the Czech Republic, France, Germany, Honduras, Italy, the Russian Federation, Rwanda, the United Kingdom and the United States.³⁰ He also drew their attention to the following other documents: a letter dated 23 February 1995 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council,³¹ transmitting the report of the preparatory fact-finding mission to Burundi; the report of the Security Council mission to Burundi;³² and letters dated 8 and 23 August 1995 from the representative of Burundi addressed to the President of the Security Council on the establishment and the terms of reference of the international judicial commission of inquiry for Burundi.³³

The representative of Burundi said that the initiative for the establishment of the commission of inquiry came from his Government in search of an impartial international arbiter. He stated that, following the President's assassination in October 1993, the political parties that clung to the notion that he had been assassinated because of his Hutu origins, had shown themselves to be avid proponents of "ethnic cleansing" aimed at the Tutsi, who were wrongly accused of being allied with the army. That view had been firmly rejected by the opposition, which objected that the President had been elected Head of State of all the national groups. Faced with those opposing positions, Burundi's political leadership had decided to turn to an international forum in order to determine those guilty of murdering the President and part of the population. Clearly, the President's assassination was a political crime and the systematic annihilation of social and human groupings on the basis of their ethnic affiliation a crime against humanity. The speaker further stressed that the success of the work of the commission would depend on close cooperation with the Government of Burundi, its security forces, and the national judicial system. The commission would have to resist any temptation to exceed its mandate, as delineated in the terms of reference proposed by the Government, and set out in the draft resolution before the Council. Moreover, it should avoid any compromise of national sovereignty and any interference in the internal affairs of his country.³⁴

Speaking before the vote, the representative of China stated that his delegation endorsed the proposed establishment of an international commission of inquiry in principle and would therefore support the draft resolution. The international community should, however, fully respect the independence and sovereignty of Burundi and should not interfere in its internal affairs. It must also heed and respect the views of the Burundian Government in connection with the establishment of the commission. In that context, he expressed his delegation's reservations in relation to some elements of the commission's mandate, which was rather extensive and, in certain aspects, touched upon Burundi's sovereignty and internal affairs.³⁵

The representative of Botswana contended that failure to deliver justice on time had now resulted in a self-perpetuating situation. His delegation was deeply distressed by the politically motivated killings that had become a feature of life in Burundi and shared the concern that the creeping culture of killings which threatened to take root in Burundi, must be stopped and reversed. He emphasized that the perpetrators of the coup attempt of October 1993 and the massacres which followed, had to be brought to justice. At the same time, he warned that the matter must be dealt with carefully. The work of an international, independent and impartial Commission should at the end of the day help foster national reconciliation and political stability in Burundi. He stressed that the cooperation of the Government of Burundi was not only vital but the key to the successful outcome of the commission's work and the follow-up mechanisms since it would have to implement the recommendations. Operative paragraph 1 (a) and (b) and operative paragraph 5 (a) to (f) constituted the spirit and essence of the work of the commission.³⁶

The draft resolution was thereupon put to the vote and was adopted unanimously as resolution 1012 (1995), which reads:

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Preparatory Fact-finding Mission to Burundi of 20 May 1994,

Having further considered the report of the Security Council mission to Burundi of 28 February 1995,

Recalling the statement by the President of the Security Council of 29 March 1995, in which the Council, inter alia, underlined the role that could be played in Burundi by an international commission of inquiry into the 1993 attempted coup d'état and into the massacres that followed,

Welcoming the letter dated 28 July 1995 from the Secretary-General to the President recommending that such a commission of inquiry be created by resolution of the Council,

Taking into account the initiative of the Government of Burundi in calling for the establishment of an international judicial commission of inquiry as referred to in the Convention on Governance,

Recalling the letter dated 8 August 1995 from the Permanent Representative of Burundi to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council, noting with interest the letter of the Secretary-General dated 28 July 1995,

Taking note of the fact that the parties in Burundi, in the Convention on Governance, agreed, without prejudice to the outcome of the independent national and international investigations, to call the massacres which followed the assassination of the President of Burundi on 21 October 1993 genocide,

Deeply concerned that impunity creates contempt for law and leads to violations of international humanitarian law,

Expressing once again its grave concern at reports indicating that systematic, widespread and flagrant violations of international humanitarian law have been committed in Burundi,

Stressing the importance of strengthening, in cooperation with the Government of Burundi, the Burundian judicial system,

Reiterating its profound concern over the resumption of radio broadcasts inciting ethnic hatred and violence, and recognizing the need for ending such broadcasts,

Recalling that all persons who commit or authorize the commission of serious violations of international humanitarian law are individually responsible for these violations and should be held accountable,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to establish, as a matter of urgency, an International Commission of Inquiry, with the following mandate:

(a) To establish the facts relating to the assassination of the President of Burundi on 21 October 1993, the massacres and other related serious acts of violence which followed;

(b) To recommend measures of a legal, political or administrative nature, as appropriate, after consultation with the Government of Burundi, and measures with regard to the bringing to justice of persons responsible for those acts, to prevent any repetition of deeds similar to those investigated by the Commission and, in general, to eradicate impunity and promote national reconciliation in Burundi;

2. Recommends that the Commission of Inquiry be composed of five impartial and internationally respected, experienced jurists who shall be selected by the Secretary-General and shall be furnished with adequate expert staff, and that the Government of Burundi be duly informed;

3. Calls upon States, relevant United Nations bodies and, as appropriate, international humanitarian organizations to collate substantiated information in their possession relating to acts covered in paragraph 1 (a) above, to make such information available as soon as possible and to provide appropriate assistance to the Commission of Inquiry;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the establishment of the Commission of Inquiry, and further requests the Secretary-General, within three months from the establishment of the Commission, to submit an interim report to the Council on its work and to submit a final report when it completes its work;

5. Calls upon the Burundian authorities and institutions, including all Burundian political parties, to cooperate fully with the Commission of Inquiry in the accomplishment of its mandate, including responding positively to requests from the Commission for security, assistance and access in pursuing investigations, including:

(a) Adoption by the Government of Burundi of any measures needed for the Commission and its personnel to carry out their functions throughout the national territory with full freedom, independence and security;

(b) Provision by the Government of Burundi of all information in its possession which the Commission requests or is otherwise needed to carry out its mandate and free access for the Commission and its staff to any official archives related to its mandate;

(c) Freedom for the Commission to obtain any information the Commission considers relevant and to use all sources of information which the commission considers useful and reliable;

(d) Freedom for the Commission to interview, in private, any persons the Commission judges necessary;

(e) Freedom for the Commission to visit any establishment or place at any time;

(f) Guarantee by the Government of Burundi of full respect for the integrity, security and freedom of witnesses, experts and any other persons who help the Commission in its work;

6. Calls upon all States to cooperate with the Commission in facilitating its investigations;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to provide adequate security for the Commission in cooperation with the Government of Burundi;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to establish, as a supplement to financing as an expense of the Organization, a trust fund to receive voluntary contributions to finance the Commission of Inquiry;

9. Urges States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute funds, equipment and services to the Commission of Inquiry including the offer of expert personnel in support of the implementation of the present resolution;

10. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United States pointed out that the resolution had been drafted in close consultation with the Burundian authorities. His delegation had acted out of its abiding humanitarian concern in stemming the systematic, widespread and flagrant violations of international humanitarian law which had plagued Burundi in the aftermath of the October 1993 assassination of its President. The continuing instability in the area demonstrated the importance and the urgency of fostering reconciliation and accountability for human rights abuses. He hoped that the commission would establish the facts and recommend measures to prevent any repetition of deeds similar to those being investigated and to eradicate impunity in Burundi. It was however up to the Government to decide on what measures were taken. He trusted that the Secretary-General would appoint commissioners from different judicial backgrounds and that all in Burundi would cooperate fully and openly with them.³⁷

The representative of France stated that the Commission's mandate would be to make recommendations so that the guilty would be brought to justice and that the acts of violence would not be repeated. However, attempting to break the cycle of impunity would not be enough to restore stability to Burundi and the rest of the region. National reconciliation in Burundi, as well as in other countries of the region, required the implementation of measures on a vaster scale. The questions of refugees, regional overarmament, economic development and institutional consolidation in all those countries had to be viewed in a larger framework. He hoped that the Security Council would soon consider the idea supported by his Government of organizing a regional conference on peace, stability and development in the Great Lakes region, as a first step towards healing the wounds of that part of Africa.³⁸

The representative of the United Kingdom said that the resolution sent a clear message that those responsible for grave violations of humanitarian law would be held responsible for their actions. His Government therefore strongly supported the establishment of a Commission of Inquiry. It also believed that the strengthening of the Burundian judicial system was vital to the stability of the country and looked forward to receiving the Commission's recommendations on the measures necessary to prevent any repetition of the 1993 events. He announced that his country would make a 20,000 sterling pounds contribution to the Commission's Trust Fund.³⁹

The representative of Rwanda said that Burundi was part of the Great Lakes region and as such its problems could not be resolved without taking into account the current events in other countries of the subregion. Unlike the other subregions of Africa, the countries of the Great Lakes had experienced the institutionalization of a culture of impunity. The region was now considered a powder keg and a source of refugees. He reiterated that the United Nations and the Security Council could not solve the problems of the subregion without involving the regional and subregional organizations. It was therefore necessary to provide them with material, technical and financial support so that they could better fulfil their role which was indispensable and complemented that of the United Nations and the Security Council. Noting that Burundians bore primary responsibility for their future, he appealed to the United Nations and to the international community to support the existing institutions in the country. While having voted in favour of the resolution, his delegation had important questions on the role of the Commission and the results it would be able to achieve.⁴⁰

10. Agreement signed on 4 April 1994 between the Governments of Chad and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya concerning the practical modalities for the implementation of the Judgment delivered by the International Court of Justice on 3 February 1994

Decision of 14 April 1994 (3363rd meeting): resolution 910 (1994)

At its 3363rd meeting, held on 14 April 1994 in accordance with the understanding reached in its prior consultations, the Council included in its agenda two letters dated 6 and 13 April 1994 addressed to the Secretary-General from the representatives of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Chad,¹ respectively, transmitting the text of an Agreement signed at Surt, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on 4 April 1994 between their two Governments, on the practical modalities for the implementation of the Judgment delivered by the International Court of Justice on 3 February 1994 regarding the territorial dispute between Chad and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.² The Council also included on its agenda a letter dated 13 April 1994 addressed to the President of the Security Council from the Secretary-General.³ Article 1 of the Agreement provided that operations for the withdrawal of the Libyan administration and troops would commence on 15 April 1994, under the supervision of a mixed team of Chadian and Libyan officers. It would end on 30 May 1994 at 0000 hours. The article further provided that United Nations observers would be present throughout the Libyan withdrawal operations and would establish that the withdrawal was actually effected. In a letter dated 7 April 1994, annexed to his letter dated 13 April 1994, the representative of Chad requested the Secretary-General to take the measures necessary for the deployment of the observers provided for in the Agreement. In his letter, the Secretary-General informed the President of the Security Council that he intended to send a reconnaissance team to the area, on a United Nations aircraft, to conduct a brief survey of conditions on the ground in order to prepare recommendations to the Council on the possible role of the United Nations. In that regard, he was requesting the Governments of Chad and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to render to the team all practical assistance.

Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (New Zealand) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.⁴ The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 910 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Taking note of the letter dated 6 April 1994 from the Permanent Representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General and the letter dated 13 April 1994 from the Permanent Representative of Chad to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General, and the annexes thereto,

Welcoming the agreement signed at Surt, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on 4 April 1994 between the Governments of Chad and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya concerning the practical modalities for the implementation of the Judgment delivered by the International Court of Justice on 3 February 1994 regarding the Aouzou Strip,

Having considered the letter from the Secretary-General dated 13 April 1994 advising of his intention to send a reconnaissance team to the area to conduct a survey of conditions on the ground regarding the possible deployment of United Nations observers to monitor the withdrawal by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya from the area in question,

Recognizing that the team will need to travel to the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya by United Nations aircraft and that this will require an exemption from the provisions of paragraph 4 of Council resolution 748 (1992) of 31 March 1992, and acting, in this respect, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that paragraph 4 of resolution 748 (1992) shall not apply in respect of United Nations aircraft flying to or from the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya for the purpose of conveying the Secretary-General's reconnaissance team;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution

Decision of 4 May 1994 (3373rd meeting):
resolution 915 (1994)

At its 3373rd meeting, on 4 May 1994, the Council included in its agenda a report of the Secretary-General dated 27 April 1994 on the agreement to implement the Judgment of the International Court of Justice of 3 February 1994.⁵ The Secretary-General recommended, on the basis of the conclusions of the reconnaissance team, the deployment of a group of United Nations observers in the Aouzou Strip for a period of approximately 40 days, to monitor the withdrawal of the Libyan administration and forces in accordance with the 4 April agreement.⁶ The reconnaissance team already in the area would become the advance party of the operation. A representative of the United Nations Development Programme would assist in assessing the potential humanitarian situation in the Aouzou Strip after the withdrawal.

Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Nigeria) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.⁷ The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 915 (1994), which reads:

Recalling its resolution 910 (1994) of 14 April 1994,

Welcoming the signing on 4 April 1994 at Surt, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, by the representatives of the Republic of Chad on the one hand and of the Great Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya on the other hand, of the agreement relating to the implementation of the Judgment of the International Court of Justice of 3 February 1994,

Taking note of the letter dated 6 April 1994 from the Permanent Representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General and the letter dated 13 April 1994 from the Permanent Representative of Chad to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General, and the annexes thereto,

Noting that the agreement signed at Surt provides that United Nations observers shall be present during all the Libyan withdrawal operations and shall establish that the withdrawal is actually effected,

Determined to assist the parties in implementing the Judgment of the International Court of Justice concerning their territorial dispute and thereby to help promote peaceful relations between them, in keeping with the principles and purposes of the Charter of the United Nations,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General of 27 April 1994,

A

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the provisions of article 1 of the above-mentioned agreement;

2. Decides to establish the United Nations Aouzou Strip Observer Group, and authorizes the deployment for a single period of up to forty days, starting from the date of the present resolution, of nine United Nations observers and six support staff to observe the implementation of the agreement signed on 4 April 1994 at Surt in accordance with the recommendations of the Secretary-General and in accordance with paragraph 9 of resolution 907 (1994) of 29 March 1994;

3. Calls upon the parties to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General in verifying implementation of the provisions of the agreement of 4 April 1994 and, in particular, to grant the Group freedom of movement and all the services it requires in order to fulfil its functions;

B

Recognizing that the Group will need to travel to the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya by air and that this will require an exemption from the provisions of paragraph 4 of resolution 748 (1992) of 31 March 1992, and acting, in this respect, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

4. Decides that paragraph 4 of resolution 748 (1992) shall not apply in respect of aircraft flying to or from the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya for the purpose of conveying the Group;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 748 (1992) concerning the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya of flights made to or from the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya in accordance with the present resolution;

C

6. Invites the Secretary-General to keep it informed as appropriate of the progress of the mission and to report at the time of its completion;

7. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Decision of 13 June 1994 (3389th meeting):
resolution 926 (1994)

At its 3389th meeting, on 13 June 1994, the Council included in its agenda a report of the Secretary-General dated 6 June 1994 on the United Nations Aouzou Strip Observer Group (UNASOG),⁸ submitted pursuant to resolution 915 (1994) of 4 May 1994. The Secretary-General noted that the withdrawal and evacuation of Libyan forces were carried out according to the schedule agreed upon by the reconnaissance team and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya/Chad mixed team. He also reported that, on 30 May 1994, the two countries had signed a joint declaration in which they had stated that the withdrawal of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya administration and forces from the Aouzou Strip had been effected as of that date to the satisfaction of both parties. The Secretary-General observed that the accomplishment of the mandate of UNASOG demonstrated the useful role, as envisaged by the Charter, which the United Nations could play in the peaceful settlement of disputes when the parties cooperated fully with the Organization. He concluded by saying that UNASOG, having successfully completed the task assigned to it by resolution 915 (1994), departed from the area on 5 June 1994, and the mission could therefore be considered as terminated.

Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Oman) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.⁹ He also drew attention to a note verbale dated 2 June¹⁰ and a letter dated 7 June 1994¹¹ addressed to the Secretary-General by the representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 926 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 915 (1994) of 4 May 1994,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 6 June 1994;
2. Commends the work of the members of the United Nations Aouzou Strip Observer Group;
3. Notes with appreciation the cooperation extended by the Government of Chad and the Government of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to the Group in accordance with the provisions of the agreement signed at Surt, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on 4 April 1994;
4. Decides to terminate the mandate of the Group with immediate effect.

11. The situation in Sierra Leone

Initial proceedings

Decision of 7 February 1995: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

In a letter dated 1 February 1995 addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹ the Secretary-General informed the Council that the Head of State of Sierra Leone, by a letter dated 24 November 1994, had formally requested his good offices to facilitate negotiations between his Government and the forces of the Revolutionary United Front (RUF). To that effect, the Secretary-General dispatched, on 15 December 1994, an exploratory mission to Sierra Leone. The mission noted the serious deterioration of the situation in the country and warned that if it continued, the conflict in Sierra Leone would further complicate the problem of bringing peace to Liberia and could have a general destabilizing effect in the region. Based on the mission's findings, the Secretary-General decided to appoint Mr. Berhanu Dinka (Ethiopia) as his Special Envoy for Sierra Leone for an initial period of three months to work with the parties concerned towards a negotiated settlement of the conflict.

In a letter dated 7 February 1995,² the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General that his letter concerning the appointment of Mr. Dinka had been brought to the attention of the members of the Council and that they had welcomed the decision contained therein.

Decision of 27 November 1995 (3597th meeting): statement by the President

On 21 November 1995, pursuant to a number of requests from members of the Security Council, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Sierra Leone covering the period since the Government of that country had formally requested his good offices in November 1994.³

In summarizing the events that had occurred in Sierra Leone, the Secretary-General recalled, in his report, that the conflict in Sierra Leone had begun in March 1991, when the forces of RUF had launched attacks to overthrow the Government of the All Peoples' Congress (APC) headed by President Joseph S. Momoh, causing the death of thousands of civilians, while thousands more were internally displaced and were refugees in Guinea and Liberia. Later, on 29 April 1992, the Government of President Momoh was overthrown by a military coup and the National Provisional Ruling Council had been established with Captain Valentine E.M. Strasser as the Chairman of the Council and Head of State. After the coup, RUF had nevertheless continued its conflict with the new government and attacks on towns, villages and major highways had escalated to unprecedented levels and spread throughout the country. The Secretary-General further recalled that on 24 November 1994, Chairman Strasser had formally requested his good offices to bring the Government of Sierra Leone and RUF to negotiations, with the United Nations serving as an intermediary in that process.⁴

In his report, the Secretary-General further emphasized that in spite of the raging internal conflict, some positive trends were emerging which, if assisted, would contribute to the re-establishment of peace and stability. He referred, in particular, to the democratization of the political process, including transition to an elected civilian Government within a fixed time frame, which he deemed worthy of the international community's support. Since the Government of Sierra Leone had set out a programme of transition towards democratic constitutional rule in November 1993, a number of steps had been taken, including the establishment of an Interim National Electoral Commission and the holding in August 1995 of a National Consultative Conference on Elections with the participation of all political parties, representatives of the Government and the civil society. As a result of the decisions of the Conference, the Electoral Commission was ready to begin voter registration and to finalize preparations for the elections to be held on 26 February 1996. Serious financial constraints, however, endangered that process. Concerned that the postponement of the elections might result in escalating violence and halt the process altogether, the Secretary-General urged Member States to respond generously to the appeal that would be made at a donors' conference on 30 November. For his part, he had instructed the Electoral Assistance Division to work closely with other United Nations agencies and programmes, in particular the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), to assist the Electoral Commission in coordinating international observers during the elections and in strengthening national observer groups.

The Secretary-General also reported on the negotiation of a settlement with RUF, which was the second element of the two-track political approach of the Government of Sierra Leone. He noted that, since the meetings of 24 November and 4 and 7 December 1994 between representatives of the Government and RUF, the peace talks had not resumed. He stressed that his Special Envoy had spared no effort to establish contact with RUF in close coordination with the Organization of the African Unity (OAU), the Commonwealth and other organizations. The OAU and Commonwealth delegations and his Special Envoy had issued a joint statement in February 1995 calling on RUF to meet with them. Although his envoy had been able to communicate with RUF, he had not yet met face-to-face with its leader, Mr. Foday Sankoh. The Secretary-General therefore recommended that the international community urge RUF to take advantage of his good offices and to initiate a process of negotiation. Meanwhile, he intended to retain his Special Envoy whose efforts to establish a dialogue between the Government and RUF and to support the democratization process would be closely coordinated with OAU and the Commonwealth.

The Secretary-General also dealt in his report with the economic, security and humanitarian situation in Sierra Leone. With respect to the security situation, he pointed out that the Government had expressed its desire to demobilize part of its army, whose strength had increased from 3,000 to around 14,000 as a result of a massive recruitment drive. That was imperative, but it was also vital to reintegrate the demobilized soldiers into society as productive citizens. The Secretary-General had instructed the Department of Humanitarian Affairs and UNDP to field a team of experts to prepare, in collaboration with the Government, an action plan for the demobilization and reintegration of combatants. International assistance was required to accomplish that task. As to the humanitarian situation, the Secretary-General noted that it remained critical. Nearly 2 million people out of 4,477 million had been internally displaced and only about 1.1 million received assistance with any degree of regularity, owing to security constraints. The gap between the resources made available by the international community for humanitarian assistance and the needs of the affected population was widening. Moreover, delivering relief assistance became almost impossible when humanitarian convoys were targeted. The Secretary-General therefore suggested that members of the Council might consider admonishing those responsible for attacking relief convoys and urging them to refrain from such deplorable actions.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General reiterated his call on Member States to provide the fullest possible material and financial support to the Electoral Commission so that the elections could be held on schedule. Although there were legitimate security concerns, experience had shown in other places, such as Cambodia and South Africa, that the democratic process should not be held hostage to the intransigence of any particular group.

At the 3597th meeting, on 27 November 1995, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General on the situation in Sierra Leone in its agenda. After the adoption of the agenda, the Security Council invited the representative of Sierra Leone, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

At the same meeting, the President (Oman) stated that, following consultations among members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁵

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 21 November 1995 on the situation in Sierra Leone. It is deeply concerned at the conflict in that country and at the suffering resulting from it, in particular that of the nearly two million internally displaced Sierra Leoneans. It calls for an immediate end to the fighting.

The Council expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his offer of good offices in Sierra Leone and urges the Revolutionary United Front to take advantage of that offer, thus enabling both parties to enter into negotiations. It thanks the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for his efforts to that end, in close coordination with the Organization of African Unity, the Commonwealth, the Economic Community of West African States, and other organizations and neighbouring States supporting the negotiations and the process of democratization in Sierra Leone, and welcomes the Secretary-General's decision that his Special Envoy's mission should continue for the time being.

The Council stresses the importance it attaches to a coordinated international effort to alleviate the humanitarian situation in Sierra Leone. It welcomes the Secretary-General's efforts in this regard and his initiative in preparing, in collaboration with the Government of Sierra Leone, an action plan for the demobilization and reintegration of combatants.

The Council underlines the need for generous humanitarian assistance in a situation in which nearly half the population of the country have been internally displaced, and calls upon Member States to provide such assistance. The Council commends those humanitarian agencies active in Sierra Leone. The Council deeply deplores attacks on humanitarian convoys and demands that those responsible cease such actions immediately.

The Council welcomes the programme of transition to democratic constitutional rule set by the Government of Sierra Leone, which is crucial to the restoration of peace and stability in that country. It expresses its strong support for the work of the Interim National Electoral Commission in preparing for the elections to be held on 26 February 1996. It welcomes the assistance being given by the United Nations to the Commission at the request of the Government of Sierra Leone, and calls upon Member States to provide the fullest possible material and financial support to the Commission in order to ensure the success of the elections, with the broadest possible participation.

The Council urges the Secretary-General to continue to monitor closely the situation in Sierra Leone.

12. Central America: efforts towards peace

A. The situation in El Salvador

Decision of 9 February 1993 (3172nd meeting): statement by the President

On 23 December 1992, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a report on the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL),¹ in which he informed the Council that the armed conflict between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN) had formally been brought to an end on 15 December 1992, in accordance with the adjustment in the timetable for implementing the Peace Accords for El Salvador which the two sides had agreed to on the basis of his proposal of 23 October 1992.² That had been preceded by the legalization of FMLN as a political party. The Secretary-General stated that, during the preceding weeks, the parties had, in general, complied with their commitments, as reported informally to the members of the Security Council. He stressed, however, that much remained to be done to implement, under ONUSAL supervision, a number of provisions of the Peace Accords, especially the programmes for effective land transfers and for the reintegration into civilian life of ex-combatants, the establishment and international supervision of the National Public Security Academy, the establishment and deployment of the National Civil Police with the corresponding phasing out of the existing National Police, the completion of the reduction of the Armed Forces and the concentration in the Forum for Economic and Social Consultation of long-term plans for the development of El Salvador. It was important that both parties, and the international community, persevere in their efforts to ensure punctual implementation of the remaining provisions of the Peace Accords. The National Commission for the Consolidation of Peace played a central role in that regard and had to be supported and strengthened by both parties. The Government of El Salvador and FMLN would also have a continuing responsibility to foster political stability and the climate of détente and reconciliation referred to in the Accords, particularly in the former zones of conflict. In the Secretary-General's view, the presidential, legislative and municipal elections, due to be held in March 1994, would be the logical culmination of the peace process.

At its 3172nd meeting, on 9 February 1993, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Morocco) drew the attention of the members of the Council to several letters from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council. By a letter dated 7 January 1993,³ the Secretary-General informed the Council of the measures taken by the Government of El Salvador to implement the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Commission on the Purification of the Armed Forces relating to the status of 102 officers. He noted that the measures adopted in relation to 15 of those officers did not comply with the recommendations and were thus not in conformity with the Peace Accords. He had therefore asked the President of El Salvador to regularize the position of those 15 officers. By a letter dated 26 January 1993,⁴ the Secretary-General informed the Council that the Government of El Salvador had requested the United Nations to verify the forthcoming general elections in El Salvador and recommended the acceptance of that request. By a letter dated 29 January 1993,⁵ the Secretary-General reported to the Council, that despite prior assurances, FMLN had not completed the destruction of its weapons by the agreed deadline and that it was therefore not yet in compliance with the Peace Accords.⁶

The President then made the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁷

The Security Council welcomes with satisfaction the important progress made thus far towards the full implementation of the peace accords for El Salvador and the cooperation shown by the parties to this end. The Council takes note of the report of the Secretary-General of 23 December 1992, in which he indicates that the armed conflict between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN) was formally brought to an end on 15 December 1992. The Council emphasizes this event, which puts an end to more than 10 years of armed conflict.

However, the Council expresses concern at the observations made by the Secretary-General in his letter dated 7 January 1993 to the President of the Security Council, by which he reported on the situation with regard to the implementation of the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Commission concerning the purification of the armed forces of El Salvador and, basically, at the fact that those recommendations have yet to be fully complied with despite prior assurances by the Government of El Salvador. The Council also expresses concern at the indication in the letter dated 29 January 1993 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council that the FMLN, despite prior assurances, did not complete the destruction of its weapons by the agreed deadline and that it is therefore not yet in full compliance with its undertakings under the peace accords.

In this connection, the Council emphasizes the solemn nature of the undertakings made by each of the parties when they signed the peace accords and reaffirms the obligation of the parties to comply fully and in a timely fashion with those undertakings.

The Council welcomes with satisfaction the decision of the Government of El Salvador to request the United Nations to verify the forthcoming general elections and the intention of the

Secretary-General, communicated in his letter dated 26 January 1993 to the President of the Security Council, to recommend to the Council that it accede to this request.

The Council strongly urges the parties to persist in their determination to complete the process of bringing peace and national reconciliation to El Salvador and to continue cooperating with the Secretary-General in the efforts that he is making to ensure that the peace accords are implemented fully. To that end, the Council will follow closely the progress and results of those efforts.

Decision of 18 March 1993 (3185th meeting): statement by the President

At its 3185th meeting, on 18 March 1993, the Security Council included in its agenda the item entitled "Central America: efforts towards peace". After the adoption of the agenda, the President (New Zealand) made the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁸

The Security Council welcomes the recent efforts to apply fully the peace accords in El Salvador and acknowledges the sense of responsibility and cooperation demonstrated by the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional to reach this objective.

In this context, the Council welcomes the submission of the report of the Commission on the Truth and of its recommendations intended to prevent the repetition of the acts of violence committed during the twelve years of armed confrontation, as well as to create confidence in the positive changes caused by the peace process and stimulate national reconciliation.

The Council underlines the need for the parties, in accordance with the peace accords, to comply with the recommendations contained in the report of the Commission on the Truth, as well as all other obligations which remain to be implemented. In addition, it calls upon Salvadorian society to continue acting with the responsibility which it has demonstrated throughout this process, in order to contribute to the consolidation of internal peace and the maintenance of a genuine and lasting atmosphere of national harmony.

The Council invites the Secretary-General to keep it informed regarding the implementation of the parties' pending commitments. It reiterates that it will continue to follow closely the evolution of the peace process in El Salvador and that it stands ready to assist the parties as appropriate to achieve the successful completion of that process.

Decision of 27 May 1993 (3223rd meeting):

On 21 May 1993, pursuant to resolution 791 (1992) of 30 November 1992, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a report on all aspects of the operations of ONUSAL.⁹ The report also described the status of implementation of the Peace Accords by the Government of El Salvador and by FMLN.

The Secretary-General confirmed that the long-delayed implementation of the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Commission on the Purification of the Armed Forces was on its way to completion as reported in his letter of 2 April 1993.¹⁰ He also reported that the release, on 15 March 1993, of the report of the Commission on the Truth, which was entrusted with the task of investigating serious acts of violence that had occurred since 1980, had led to the adoption of extreme positions and rising tension as the High Command of the armed forces, the President of the Supreme Court, highly placed Government officials and some political leaders, as well as segments of the media, rejected the findings and recommendations of the Commission. There was strident criticism of the United Nations and renewed publication of anonymous threats against ONUSAL. The President of El Salvador had stated his willingness to comply strictly with those recommendations of the Commission which fell within his competence, were consistent with the Constitution and in harmony with the Peace Accords, and contributed to national reconciliation. Meanwhile, spokesmen of the Government had accused the Commission of having exceeded its mandate. FMLN, on its part, had stated that, notwithstanding a number of reservations about the report, it accepted the recommendations in their entirety. In the light of that reaction, the Secretary-General had instructed that a detailed analysis be made of the Commission's recommendations and the actions required to carry them out. He was communicating the analysis¹¹ to the Government and FMLN as well as to the National Commission for the Consolidation of Peace. It was critical to the process that both parties exercised leadership in that regard.

The Secretary-General stated that, 16 months after the ceasefire had taken effect, the peace process in El Salvador had advanced significantly and was on course. Among its achievements were full respect by both parties for a prolonged ceasefire, the celebration of the formal end of the armed conflict on 15 December 1992, and the conversion of FMLN from an armed movement into a political party. That success had been accompanied by significant progress towards other principal objectives, including the establishment of civilian control over the military, the beginnings of the establishment of a civilian police force, the reunification of Salvadorean society and the democratization of national institutions, with full respect for human rights.

The path to national reconciliation had not been without difficulties, but the predominant characteristic of the Salvadorean peace process had thus been its irreversibility. However, intensified efforts were still required on both sides to accelerate the lands transfer programme, which was proceeding at a slow pace and with serious financial difficulties, the reintegration into civilian life of ex-combatants, the establishment of the National Civil Police with the corresponding phasing out of the present National Police, and the recovery of assault weapons, of which large numbers remained in unauthorized hands.

The Secretary-General emphasized that the successful conclusion of the peace process could be achieved only if the necessary financing was forthcoming. He noted that the programmes relating to land and the new police, which were central to the Peace Accords, lacked financial support and required an urgent response from both the international community and the Government.

In his view, the elections in 1994 were likely to be the culminating point of the entire peace process. It was only through free and fair elections that peace would be consolidated in El Salvador. Following a request made by the Government of El Salvador for observation of the elections by the United Nations and in the expectation that the Council would accede to that request, the Secretary-General had sent a mission to El Salvador in April to assess requirements. On the basis of the mission's findings, he recommended that the Council enlarge the mandate of ONUSAL to include the observation of the electoral process and authorize the addition to the Mission of an Electoral Division.¹² He also recommended that the Council renew the mandate of ONUSAL until 30 November 1993. It would be his intention to recommend, by that date, a further renewal of the Mission's mandate to enable it to complete its verification of the elections and to remain in El Salvador for a short transition period immediately thereafter.

At its 3223rd meeting, on 27 May 1993, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. After the adoption of the agenda, the President (Russian Federation) drew the attention of the members of the Council to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's consultations.¹³

Speaking before the vote, the representative of Spain supported the recommendations of the Secretary-General, particularly the addition to ONUSAL of an Electoral Division, so that the United Nations could closely follow and assist the entire electoral process until after the elections of March 1994. What was being carried out in El Salvador was what the Secretary-General in his Agenda for Peace had called "post-conflict peacebuilding", which involved the strengthening of governmental institutions and national reconstruction. That required not only commitment by the parties concerned, but also the active and continuing assistance of the international community. For its part, Spain would continue to support the peace process, both individually and collectively, with the other Friends of the Secretary-General.¹⁴

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 832 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 637 (1989) of 27 July 1989,

Recalling also its resolutions 693 (1991) of 20 May 1991, 714 (1991) of 30 September 1991, 729 (1992) of 14 January 1992, 784 (1992) of 30 October 1992 and 791 (1992) of 30 November 1992,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General of 21, 24 and 25 May 1993,

Noting with appreciation the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General to support the full implementation of the agreements signed by the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional to re-establish peace and promote reconciliation in El Salvador,

Welcoming the observation by the Secretary-General that sixteen months after the ceasefire, the peace process in El Salvador has advanced significantly and is on course, and that significant progress has also been made towards other principal objectives of the peace accords,

Emphasizing that determined efforts are required of both parties to ensure that the remaining problems do not become obstacles to the continuing fulfilment of their undertakings,

Noting that the Government of El Salvador has requested the United Nations to verify the next general elections, scheduled to be held in March 1994, and that the Secretary-General has recommended that this request be accepted,

Stressing the necessity, in this as in other peacekeeping operations, to continue to monitor expenditures carefully during this period of increasing demands on peacekeeping resources,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Welcomes the continuing adaptation by the Secretary-General of the activities and strength of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador, taking into account progress made in implementing the peace process;
3. Decides, on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General and in accordance with the provisions of resolution 693 (1991), to enlarge the mandate of the Observer Mission to include the observation of the electoral process due to conclude with the general elections in El Salvador in March 1994, and requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to this effect;
4. Also decides that the mandate of the Observer Mission, enlarged in accordance with the present resolution, will be extended until 30 November 1993 and that it will be reviewed at that time on the basis of recommendations to be presented by the Secretary-General;
5. Endorses the view of the Secretary-General, contained in his letter dated 26 January 1993 to the President of the Security Council, that the general elections of March 1994 should constitute the logical culmination of the entire peace process in El Salvador;
6. Urges the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional to respect and implement fully all the commitments they assumed under the peace accords, including, inter alia, those related to the transfer of lands, the reinsertion into civilian society of ex-combatants and war wounded, the deployment of the National Civil Police and the phasing out of the National Police, and the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Commission on the purification of the armed forces and the Commission on the Truth;
7. Reaffirms its support for the Secretary-General's use of his good offices in the El Salvador peace process;

¹² See also S/25812/Add.1.

¹⁴ S/PV.3223, pp. 2-7.

8. Calls upon both parties to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General's Special Representative and the Observer Mission in their task of assisting and verifying the parties' implementation of their commitments, and requests the parties to continue to exercise utmost moderation and restraint, especially in the former zones of conflict, in order to promote the process of national reconciliation;

9. Urges all States, as well as the international institutions in the fields of development and finance, to contribute generously in support of the execution of the peace accords and the consolidation of peace in El Salvador;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council fully informed of further developments in the El Salvador peace process and to report on the operations of the Observer Mission, at the latest before the expiry of the new mandate period;

11. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United States, stressing that the growth of democracy enhanced the security of all, strongly supported the resolution which extended the ONUSAL mandate and expanded it to include supervision of the upcoming elections in El Salvador. She urged both sides to implement fully their respective obligations under the Accords and noted in this regard the importance of full compliance with those provisions regarding the proper disposition of weapons. In conclusion she reaffirmed her country's commitment to help the people of El Salvador to consolidate the peace they had created and called upon others to also pledge assistance.¹⁵

Noting that the elections would probably represent the culmination of the whole peace process, the representative of France called on the parties to continue to cooperate in order to ensure that the Peace Agreement lead to total success, that is, the restoration of democracy. In this regard it was essential that a number of measures be carried out in full and as quickly as possible such as the land transfer programme, the reinsertion of former combatants into civilian life, the replacement of the national police force by the new police, the destruction of weapons and the implementation of the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Commission and the Commission on the Truth.¹⁶

until completion of the electoral process in March 1994. He stressed that national reconciliation would require the full cooperation of the parties and their compliance with the political, economic, social and legal aspects of the commitments assumed under the Peace Accords, which were clearly set forth in operative paragraph 6 of resolution 832 (1993). Peace would also require the generous support of friendly countries and international organizations to the economic reconstruction of the country.¹⁷

Decision of 11 June 1993 (3236th meeting):
statement by the President

By a letter dated 8 June 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹⁸ the Secretary-General informed the Council about developments relating to the discovery of a weapons cache in Managua on 23 May. At the invitation of the Nicaraguan Government, the Secretary-General's Special Representative in El Salvador and members of ONUSAL had travelled to Managua to assist in the disposal of the arms and in the investigation launched by the Nicaraguan authorities. The Secretary-General stated that evidence collected so far, together with the explicit acknowledgement by the leadership of the responsible FMLN group, had confirmed that the arms were the property of that group and that some of its members were involved in their maintenance. Leaders of the same FMLN group had also provided information about the existence in Nicaragua of other clandestine deposits containing considerable amounts of weapons. Specialists from ONUSAL were working with a Nicaraguan team to itemize the war materiel found in those deposits and dispose of it.

The Secretary-General emphasized that the maintenance of clandestine arms deposits, for whatever reason, was a cause of serious concern and that the non-inclusion of those arms in the final inventory presented by the FMLN to ONUSAL raised serious questions of confidence and trust. He noted, however, that the FMLN was cooperating with ONUSAL to locate and eliminate possible remaining arms caches in El Salvador and had agreed to the destruction of the last remaining sophisticated weapons on its inventory on 4 June, scheduled to coincide with full compliance by the Government with the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Commission, at the end of June.

At its 3236th meeting, on 11 June 1993, the Security Council included the letter in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Spain) made the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹⁹

The Security Council takes note with concern of the letter of the Secretary-General dated 8 June 1993 regarding the existence in Nicaragua of a weapons cache belonging to the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN), discovered on 23 May 1993.

The Council considers that the maintenance of clandestine arms deposits is the most serious violation to date of the commitments assumed under the peace accords signed at Mexico City on 16 January 1992 and agrees with the Secretary-General that this is a cause of serious concern.

The Council reiterates its demand that the peace accords be complied with fully and promptly. In this context, the Council again urges the FMLN to comply fully with its obligation to provide a complete inventory of its arms and munitions both inside and outside El Salvador and surrender them in accordance with the provisions of the peace accords, and to continue to cooperate in this regard with the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador.

The Council notes with satisfaction the cooperation of the Government of Nicaragua in itemizing and disposing of the war materiel found.

The Council expects that the parties to the peace accords will continue their efforts to complete the peace process and achieve national reconciliation in El Salvador.

Decision of 12 July 1993: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

On 29 June 1993, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a further report on ONUSAL,²⁰ regarding the discovery, at locations inside and outside El Salvador, of illegal arms deposits belonging to FMLN. The Secretary-General stated that ever since the discovery of the first illegal arms cache in Managua on 23 May, he had made continuous efforts, directly and through ONUSAL to establish the facts, to ensure that all remaining clandestine caches were declared to it and their contents destroyed, and to limit the repercussions on the peace process of that very serious violation of the Peace Accords. On 12 June 1993, in a letter addressed to FMLN, he had expressed his distress at learning that the final inventory of weapons presented to ONUSAL by FMLN had been grossly inaccurate and had urged FMLN to take action to ensure that all arms caches inside and outside El Salvador were located and their contents destroyed, and that any weapons still in possession of FMLN militants were similarly handed over to ONUSAL for destruction. In reply, FMLN had informed him that it would cooperate with ONUSAL in locating and destroying all its remaining weapons within a period of 45 days beginning on 21 June 1993, that is by 4 August.²¹

The Secretary-General also informed the Council that, on 11 June 1993, he had received a letter from the President of El Salvador in which he stated, inter alia, that the conduct of FMLN had violated not only the commitments it had assumed, but also the constitutional provision prohibiting the existence of armed groups, which might be a reason to disband FMLN as a political party. The President had also expressed the view that the gravity of the breach by FMLN of its commitments warranted a resolution by the Security Council.

The Secretary-General further stated that the seriousness of the situation could not be over-emphasized. It had raised questions of confidence and trust and could seriously undermine the peace process. In his view, however, the cancellation or suspension of FMLN's status as a political party could itself deal a severe blow to the peace process. The transformation of FMLN into a political party and the full reintegration of its members into the civil, political and institutional life of the country were at the very core of the Peace Accords. It was, likewise, imperative to avoid a disruption of the electoral process, in which it was essential that FMLN had every opportunity to participate. While welcoming FMLN's acceptance of its responsibility in the events and its full cooperation in the ensuing investigation, the Secretary-General noted that FMLN would have to demonstrate anew its commitment to the peace process and that confidence would only be fully restored upon the complete disclosure by FMLN of all its holdings in arms and munitions and their subsequent destruction by the date indicated. The Secretary-General concluded by saying that it was an indication of the strength and irreversibility of the peace process and a credit to both parties that a serious incident of that nature had not been allowed to derail the implementation of the Peace Accords.

By a letter dated 12 July 1993,²² the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General of the following:

I have the honour to inform you that the members of the Security Council have taken note with appreciation of your report of 29 June 1993 regarding the recent discovery, at locations inside and outside El Salvador, of illegal arms deposits belonging to the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN).

The members of the Council express their continuing concern regarding this grave violation of the peace accords and agree with your opinion that the maintenance of clandestine arms deposits by the FMLN has raised questions of confidence and trust and that the seriousness of this situation cannot be overemphasized.

The members of the Council reiterate their view that both parties should comply fully with their respective obligations under the peace accords, and especially that the FMLN should provide a complete inventory of all its arms and munitions both inside and outside El Salvador and deliver them to the United Nations Observation Mission in El Salvador for their destruction in accordance with the provisions of the peace accords.

The members of the Council note the FMLN's promise to disclose all its holdings of arms and munitions and subsequently to destroy them by 4 August 1993. They stress that the complete disarmament of the FMLN and the reintegration of its members into the civil, political and institutional life of the country form an essential part of the peace process.

The members of the Council share your assessment that it is an indication of the strength and irreversibility of the peace process that a serious incident of this nature has not been allowed to derail the implementation of the peace accords. They also agree with your view that the cancellation or suspension of the FMLN's status as a political party could deal a severe blow to the peace process.

The members of the Council welcome the letter²³ dated 22 June 1993 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Nicaragua addressed to you and expect that the Government of Nicaragua will comply with its international obligations to prevent the use of its territory for the illegal storage or trans-shipment of arms and other war materiel and to investigate fully all the illegal arms deposits discovered in Nicaragua, including possible links to international terrorism.

The members of the Council welcome your intention to keep the Council informed of further developments, especially the actions the FMLN has promised to complete by 4 August 1993.

Decision of 13 July 1993: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

By a letter dated 7 July 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,²⁴ the Secretary-General referred to his letter of 2 April 1993,²⁵ by which he had informed the Council about recent developments in the implementation of the provisions of the Peace Accords relating to the purification of the armed forces. In that letter, he had informed the Council that the President of El Salvador had agreed to a plan to regularize the situation of the last 15 high-ranking officers in respect of whom the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Commission on the Purification of the Armed Forces had not yet been implemented. The arrangement would, when implemented, bring the Government of El Salvador into broad compliance with the Ad Hoc Commission's recommendations. Following verification by ONUSAL, the Secretary-General was in a position to confirm that the Government of El Salvador had taken the steps that it had promised to comply with those recommendations.

By a letter dated 13 July 1993,²⁶ the President informed the Secretary-General that his letter dated 7 July 1993 had been brought to the attention of the members of the Security Council who had welcomed his confirmation that the Government of El Salvador had complied with the Ad Hoc Commission's recommendations. They believed that the actions taken by the Government of El Salvador represented a significant achievement in the consolidation of the peace process in El Salvador.

²³ S/26008. In that letter, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Nicaragua stated, inter alia, that "by adopting domestic or international legislation; by inviting international bodies to verify the itemizing and disposal of war materiel; and by instituting criminal proceedings against those accused, the Government of the Republic of Nicaragua is demonstrating its indisputable devotion to peace and its attachment to international law, as a contribution to the peace process in the Central American region".

Decision of 5 November 1993 (3306th meeting):
statement by the President

By a letter dated 3 November 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,²⁷ the Secretary-General informed the Council of the assassination of two leaders of FMLN on 25 and 30 October, respectively. The killings substantiated the concerns referred to in the last report of the Division of Human Rights of ONUSAL, dated 15 September 1993,²⁸ which had noted, in particular, that politically motivated human rights violations had become more open, as well as in his report of 14 October 1993 on the implementation of the recommendations of the Commission on the Truth.²⁹ They also confirmed the need for immediate implementation of the recommendation of the Commission that a thorough investigation of private armed groups be undertaken immediately. Consequently, the Secretary-General had instructed the Director of the Division of Human Rights of ONUSAL, with supplementary expert assistance to work with those concerned in order to assist the Government in the implementation of the recommendation. While responsibility for the investigation lay with the Government, it was the Secretary-General's view that the National Counsel for the Defence of Human Rights could also play an important role. The implementation of other recommendations of the Commission on the Truth also needed to be accelerated.

In addition, the Secretary-General recalled the difficulties relating to the formation and deployment of the National Civil Police described in his report of 14 October 1993. He stressed, in particular, that it was essential that the provisions of the Peace Accords regarding the National Academy for Public Security and the National Civil Police be scrupulously fulfilled and that ONUSAL be allowed to carry out its verification mandate unimpeded. He also recalled the delays and difficulties in the electoral process, described in his report of 20 October 1993,³⁰ and expressed the hope that the Government and the institutions involved would make every effort, with the assistance of ONUSAL, to overcome existing deficiencies and to ensure that the registration of voters was as comprehensive as possible. In the Secretary-General's view, the recent murders had brought into sharper focus the need to step up the implementation of the Peace Accords in order to set the stage for a genuinely free and fair electoral process, as had been recognized by the Government and FMLN at their high-level meeting of 8 September.

At its 3306th meeting, on 5 November 1993, the Security Council included the letter in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Cape Verde) made the following statement on behalf of the Council:³¹

The Security Council has learned with shock and concern of the violent deaths in recent days in El Salvador of two leaders and other members of the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN), as well as one member of the Alianza Republicana Nacionalista party. It notes, in this respect, that the Director of the Human Rights Division of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL) has referred in his last two reports to what appears to be a pattern of politically motivated murders, a development all the more serious in light of the upcoming electoral process. The Council insists that this violence has to stop.

The Council deems it essential that the authorities of El Salvador take all necessary measures so that those responsible for the killings be promptly brought to justice, with a view to preventing such events from occurring in the future. It welcomes the technical cooperation that Member States are extending to the competent Salvadorian authorities, at their request, in order to assist them in the investigation of these criminal acts.

The Council notes with particular concern that the Secretary-General, in his report of 14 October 1993 on the implementation of the recommendations of the Commission on the Truth, underscored the significance of cases of killings over the past few months that seemed to follow patterns that could indicate a resurgence of illegal armed groups, whose activities had diminished following the signature of the peace accords in January 1992.

In this regard, the Council takes note with approval of the Secretary-General's decision, as reported in his letter dated 3 November 1993 to the President of the Council, to direct the Human Rights Division of ONUSAL to work with the El Salvador Human Rights Prosecutor in order to assist the Government of El Salvador in implementing the recommendation of the Commission on the Truth that a thorough investigation of illegal armed groups be undertaken immediately.

The Council further underlines the importance of full and timely implementation of all the provisions of the peace accords. It remains concerned about delays occurring in several instances, namely, the phasing out of the National Police and full deployment of the National Civil Police, the implementation of the recommendations of the Commission on the Truth and the transfer of lands and other reintegration programmes, which are essential for the development of a solid framework and a new climate for the respect of human rights in El Salvador.

The Council also calls upon all parties to continue their efforts to make the March 1994 elections representative and successful. It recognizes the progress that has been made in registering thousands of voters, but, taking into account the delays and problems reported by the Secretary-General in his report of 20 October 1993, it calls upon the Government and all concerned to ensure that all qualified voters who have applied will receive the necessary documents in time to vote. It welcomes the steps taken by the Secretary-General to assist in this process through the Electoral Division of ONUSAL.

The Council welcomes the agreement reached between the Government and the FMLN on the need to speed up the implementation of the provisions of the peace accords and, accordingly, urges all parties concerned to accelerate the fulfilment of their commitments under those accords before the electoral campaign gets under way. It expects ONUSAL to be allowed fully to carry out its verification mandate unimpeded. The Council will continue to follow developments in El Salvador with close attention.

Decision of 30 November 1993 (3321st meeting):
resolution 888 (1993)

On 23 November 1993, pursuant to resolution 832 (1993) of 27 May 1993, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a further report on ONUSAL activities during the period 22 May to 20 November 1993, and the status of implementation of the Peace Accords.³² He stated that while the implementation of the Peace Accords had, on the whole, progressed well, several key aspects, such as the land transfer and reintegration programmes, continued to suffer serious delays. Moreover difficulties affected the operations of the National Public Security Academy, the deployment of the National Civil Police and the phasing-out of the National Police. The collection of weapons previously issued for the exclusive use of personnel of the Armed Forces of El Salvador and held by private individuals had also been very seriously delayed.

While acknowledging the complexity of establishing a completely new police force and transferring responsibility for public order to it in the aftermath of a long civil war and in the middle of a crime wave, the Secretary-General noted that ONUSAL reports created the impression that, at some levels in the Government, there might be a lack of commitment to the objective enshrined in the Peace Accords. That was reflected in the denial to the National Civil Police of the necessary logistical and technical resources, the introduction into that force of military personnel, the prolongation of the existence of the National Police and the denial to ONUSAL of the information it required for verification purposes. The Secretary-General also warned that the severe delays in fulfilling the promises of land and other benefits that were made to ex-combatants of both sides had given rise to tension, which could become a dangerous source of instability.

Furthermore, he reported that a number of murders and assaults in recent weeks had raised fears about the possible resurgence of illegal armed groups with political objectives, including the so-called death squads. It was therefore essential that there should be, as soon as possible, an impartial, independent and credible investigation into illegal armed groups, as recommended by the Commission on the Truth.

The Secretary-General was concerned that the electoral campaign should have begun in the climate described above and at a time when very important elements of the Peace Accords remained only partially implemented. He recalled that the timetable that formed part of the Accords had been drafted on the basis that the vast majority of the provisions would have been implemented well before the elections. He informed the Council that he had asked his Special Representative to obtain the agreement of the Government and of FMLN to a new timetable that would set the firmest possible dates for completing the implementation of the most important outstanding points in the Peace Accords. Even so, however, it was clear that it would not be possible to complete implementation of all such points before the elections. It was important, therefore, that the new Government should maintain its predecessor's commitment to implement the Accords in their entirety.

The Secretary-General further stated that the elections and the transition to the administration of the newly elected President would be a critically important period throughout which it was clearly necessary for ONUSAL to continue to carry out its verification and good offices functions. He accordingly recommended that the Security Council extend the ONUSAL mandate for a further period of six months, until 31 May 1994. He noted that beyond that date, it would probably be desirable to keep the Mission in existence, at reduced strength, for a further period of a few months to verify the full implementation of any major points in the Peace Accords which remained outstanding at that time.

At its 3321st meeting, on 30 November 1993, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of El Salvador, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Cape Verde) then drew the attention of the members of the Council to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.³³

Before the vote, the representative of Spain took note of the Secretary-General's view that a reduced ONUSAL presence would probably be necessary after the elections so as to allow it to fulfil its mandate.³⁴ Similarly the representative of Venezuela stated that ONUSAL could and should continue to cooperate in the El Salvador process of peace and national reconciliation, even beyond the term of its renewed mandate.³⁵

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 888 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Welcoming the Secretary-General's observation that the peace process in El Salvador has advanced and that significant progress has been made towards other objectives of the peace accords,

Concerned at the continuing problems and delays in implementing several important components of the peace accords, including, inter alia, those related to the transfer of lands, the reintegration into civilian society of ex-combatants and war disabled, the deployment of the National Civil Police and the phasing out of the National Police, and the recommendations of the Commission on the Truth,

Also noting with concern the seemingly politically motivated murders of members of the different political parties, including the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional and the Alianza Republicana Nacionalista, Noting that El Salvador has entered a critical phase in the peace process and that political parties have just begun a campaign for the March 1994 elections, which should take place in a peaceful environment,

Noting recent progress in voter registration, and stressing the importance of all registered voters being issued relevant credentials so as to enable broad participation in the elections,

Welcoming the commitment of the presidential candidates to peace and stability in El Salvador, of 5 November 1993, as referred to in paragraph 92 of the further report of the Secretary-General,

Welcoming also the recent announcement by the Government of El Salvador to expedite the implementation of the land transfer programme,

Welcoming further the work of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador and noting its vital importance to the entire peace and reconciliation process in El Salvador,

16. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of France deemed it too early to say what should be the role of the United Nations in El Salvador after the elections and the installation of the new Government but stressed that it would be especially useful to continue to provide assistance in the area of human rights, so as to ensure the necessary transition, along the lines of what was done in Cambodia. In France's view the Centre for Human Rights should be entrusted with that mission. The establishment of an integrated United Nations Office could also be considered.³⁶

All speakers called for the full and speedy implementation of the Peace Accords. They expressed concern at the human rights situation and called for a thorough investigation of illegal armed groups.³⁷

Decision of 10 December 1993: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

In a letter dated 7 December 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,³⁸ the Secretary-General referred to his letter of 3 November 1993,³⁹ in which he had expressed concern over recent cases of arbitrary execution in El Salvador and the need for the immediate implementation of the recommendation of the Commission on the Truth regarding the investigation of illegal armed groups, as well as to his decision to instruct the Director of the Human Rights Division of ONUSAL to work with those concerned in order to assist the Government in implementing that recommendation. Recalling the statement by the President of 5 November 1993, the Secretary-General reported that in November he had dispatched a mission to El Salvador which had held extensive consultations with all concerned. Considerable progress had been made towards an agreement on the principles for the establishment of a Joint Group for the investigation of politically motivated illegal armed groups.⁴⁰ The Secretary-General further indicated that it had been later agreed that the members of the Joint Group would be two independent representatives of the Government of El Salvador nominated by the President of the Republic, the National Counsel for the Defence of Human Rights and the Director of the Human Rights Division of ONUSAL. The President of El Salvador had nominated the two representatives with the approval of the National Counsel, and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General was satisfied that they were well qualified for the task. The mechanism for the investigation of illegal armed groups had thus been duly conformed and might commence its work immediately. The text of the principles for the establishment of the Joint Group was attached to his letter.

By a letter dated 10 December 1993,⁴¹ the President informed the Secretary-General of the following:

The members of the Security Council welcome your letter of 7 December 1993 concerning the establishment of a Joint Group for the investigation of politically motivated illegal armed groups, composed of two independent representatives of the Government of El Salvador nominated by the President of the Republic, the National Counsel for the Defence of Human Rights and the Director of the Division of Human Rights of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL).

The members of the Council support the "Principles", attached to your letter, which will give the Group an independent, impartial and non-political character. The members of the Council also support your role in ensuring the effectiveness and credibility of the investigation.

The members of the Council consider it of the utmost importance that all necessary measures are taken to facilitate the task of the Joint Group so that the recommendation of the Commission on the Truth regarding the full investigation of the illegal armed groups is promptly implemented. They call upon all parties in El Salvador to cooperate fully in this respect.

The members of the Council will continue to follow closely the situation in El Salvador and request you to keep them informed on developments in this matter.

Decision of 7 April 1994 (3360th meeting):
statement by the President

By a letter dated 28 March 1994, addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁴² the Secretary-General raised with the members of the Council continuing concerns regarding the implementation of certain aspects of the Peace Accords. These concerns which he had already conveyed to the Council in his report of 23 November 1993, related to public security, including the deployment of the National Civil Police and the phasing out of the National Police; the reintegration into society, through transfers of land and other programmes, of estranged groups including former combatants; and the constitutional reforms recommended by the Commission on the Truth. The Secretary-General stressed that four months later, little progress had been achieved in those areas. He believed it essential to have an updated agreement between the parties on a timetable for the implementation of pending matters so that the process should suffer no further delays during the transition to the new Government. He expressed the hope that the Council could support his efforts in those areas on which action was urgently required.

On 31 March 1994, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the activities of the Electoral Division of ONUSAL, providing a general assessment of Election Day, 20 March 1994.⁴³

The Secretary-General stated that the general conduct of the electoral process and the campaign had many positive aspects: massive expansion of the electoral rolls; participation by the political parties throughout the process and at all levels of the electoral authorities; peaceful exercise of the right to organize, of the right to freedom of expression and of the right of assembly; publicity by the parties in all the media; conduct of campaign activities without violent incident; and proper functioning on the part of the security forces and the armed forces. There were serious difficulties, however, in organizing the voting and preparing the electoral roll. The training provided to polling stations teams and to party monitors had also been inadequate. Since there was going to be a second round of voting for the presidential election, the anomalies recorded should be eliminated. In that regard he introduced a series of practical recommendations based on the views expressed by ONUSAL in a letter dated 24 March addressed to the Supreme Electoral Tribunal.

Although the high visibility and frequency of the problems observed on Election Day may have helped to leave a negative impression of the overall process, the Secretary-General stressed that the irregularities noted should not be mistaken for significant manipulation of the election. In fact where the presidential election was concerned, no party had rejected the results and the ONUSAL observers had not recorded any fraudulent acts that could have had a significant impact on the outcome. With respect to assembly and municipal elections, local challenges should not affect the overall validity of the electoral process. According to a statement made by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on 21 March, the elections had taken place under appropriate conditions in terms of freedom, competitiveness and security and could be considered acceptable, despite serious flaws regarding organization and transparency.

At its 3360th meeting, on 7 April 1994, the Security Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General and the letter from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council. The President (New Zealand) made the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁴⁴

The Security Council has received the report of the Secretary-General of 31 March 1994 on the observation of the elections in El Salvador on 20 March 1994 by the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador. It has also received the letter from the Secretary-General dated 28 March 1994 in which he draws to the attention of the Council his continuing concerns regarding problems in the implementation of the peace accords in El Salvador.

The Council congratulates the people of El Salvador on the peaceful and historic elections held on 20 March 1994. It notes that the Special Representative of the Secretary-General stated on 21 March 1994 that in general the elections on 20 March 1994 had taken place under appropriate conditions in terms of freedom, competitiveness and security and that, despite serious flaws regarding organization and transparency, the elections could be considered acceptable. The Council calls upon those concerned to take the necessary measures, as recommended by the Secretary-General, to correct those shortcomings which appeared in the first round and thus to guarantee a genuine and indisputable expression of the will of the people in the second round of the presidential elections to be held on 24 April 1994.

The Council calls for the full implementation of the peace accords. It shares the concerns expressed by the Secretary-General that progress is still required regarding the implementation of the points highlighted in his letter of 28 March 1994, particularly in relation to public security, including the deployment of the new National Civil Police and the phasing out of the National Police; the reintegration into society through transfers of land and other programmes of estranged groups, including former combatants; and the constitutional reforms recommended by the Commission on the Truth, especially as they relate to the reform of the judiciary. The Council urges those concerned to make every effort to ensure that further delays in those areas are avoided and distortions corrected, so that the process can gain momentum, the provisions of the peace accords be duly implemented and the goals of the peace process fully achieved.

Decision of 26 May 1994 (3381st meeting):

On 11 May 1994, pursuant to resolution 888 (1993) of 30 November 1993, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a further report on ONUSAL activities covering the period 21 November 1993 to 30 April 1994.⁴⁵ The report also gave an account of the implementation of the Peace Accords.

The Secretary-General recalled that intensive consultations with the parties concerned had culminated in the establishment on 8 December 1993 of a Joint Group for the Investigation of Politically Motivated Illegal Armed Groups. The Joint Group was to present a report with its findings and recommendations at the end of May 1994. The Secretary-General noted that, according to the most recent report of the Division of Human Rights, murders analogous to those committed during the final months of 1993 had not recurred. He added, however, that notwithstanding the relative improvement in the human rights situation, violations of the right to life, due process and other fundamental rights had continued. He also recalled that the first post-conflict elections had been held on 20 March 1994 under generally acceptable conditions, without major acts of violence, although serious flaws regarding organization and transparency had been detected. Those flaws, however, had not had an effect on the final outcome. A second round had been held on 24 April 1994 and had resulted in the election of Mr. Armando Calderón Sol, who would take office on 1 June 1994.

While acknowledging that there had been notable advances, above all in the integration of FLMN into the political life of El Salvador and in the completion of the elections, the Secretary-General stated that there were serious shortcomings in the implementation of the Peace Accords because of delays in the agreed timetable. He recalled that the timetable that formed part of the Peace Accords provided that almost all aspects of the Accords would have been implemented before the new Government assumed office. The main exceptions were deployment of the National Civil Police and demobilization of the National Police to be completed on 28 July and 31 October 1994, respectively and the land transfer programme which would have to be extended into 1995. That would have required at least a vestigial presence of ONUSAL after 1 June 1994.

The unresolved issues were of such importance, however, as to make it even more necessary for ONUSAL to remain in existence for a further period with sufficient capacity to verify implementation of the outstanding provisions of the Accords and to make its good offices available to help resolve difficulties that might arise in that regard. In that connection, the Secretary-General recalled that when the Government of El Salvador and FMLN had asked the Secretary-General, in early 1990, to assist them in their efforts to achieve a negotiated solution to their conflict, they had set as goals not only the cessation of the armed confrontation but also the promotion of democracy, unrestricted respect for human rights and the reunification of Salvadorean society. He also noted that ONUSAL had been established to verify and promote compliance with the agreements entered into by the parties, which included not only the Peace Accords taken as a whole, but also the recommendations of the Commission on the Truth. He believed therefore that the mandate of ONUSAL should be extended for a further six months until 30 November 1994. During that period, the size of the Mission was to be reduced as rapidly as implementation of the outstanding agreements permitted.

Meanwhile, the Secretary-General appealed to the Government of El Salvador and to all those concerned to make the effort necessary to ensure that their remaining commitments were implemented with the least possible delay. In that regard, four areas required urgent attention: agreement on measures to enhance the civilian character of the National Civil Police and to increase its strength; accelerated demobilization of the National Police and its completion by the end of 1994; a solution to the problem of human settlements; and arrangements to ensure that those entitled to land under the land transfer programme had access to agricultural credit and technical assistance. Turning to the financial needs of post-conflict peacebuilding, the Secretary-General once again appealed to the international community for continued financial support for the peace-related programmes.

By a letter dated 24 May 1994 addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁴⁶ the Secretary-General informed the Council that on 19 May the two parties in the El Salvador peace process had reached agreement on a new "Timetable for the implementation of the most important outstanding agreements".⁴⁷ He also informed the Council that the President-elect of El Salvador had reiterated his personal commitment to the terms of the Peace Accords and his desire to see them implemented without delay.

At its 3381st meeting, on 26 May 1994, the Security Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General and the letter from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council. After the adoption of the agenda, the President (Nigeria) drew the attention of the members of the Council to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.⁴⁸

Speaking before the vote, the representative of the United States stated that the step taken by the Council in renewing the mandate of ONUSAL signified not only the continued success of that operation for the international community but, moreover, a triumph for the people of El Salvador. Welcoming the commitment made by the President-elect of El Salvador to the Peace Accords, he stressed that much remained to be done in implementing important elements of those Accords. It was his delegation's belief that ONUSAL could and would continue to provide important assistance and advice during the final stage of implementation of that process. Welcoming also the intent of the Secretary-

⁴⁷ Ibid., annex.

⁴⁸ S/1994/613.

General to continue reducing ONUSAL as it met its objectives, the speaker stressed the importance of continued monitoring of the Mission's expenses, a key element in the sound management of any peacekeeping operation.⁴⁹

According to the representative of China, the United Nations experience in El Salvador proved that the success of a peacekeeping operation depends, first and foremost, on the parties' sincerity and political will to resolve the conflict and achieve reconciliation. In the final analysis, the role of peacekeeping operations was one of complementing and promoting the process.⁵⁰

The representatives of Brazil, Spain and Argentina supported the renewal, with the necessary adjustments, of the verification and good offices activities of ONUSAL, at that crucial moment in the consolidation of peace in El Salvador. They called on the parties to fully comply with the new timetable they had agreed upon.⁵¹

The representative of the Russian Federation believed that, with the holding of elections, ONUSAL had in principle carried out its major task. At the same time, the draft resolution was needed because unresolved problems remained after the election. He attached great importance, inter alia, to the submission by the Secretary-General, by 1 November 1994, of a report on the fulfilment and the completion of the ONUSAL mandate, on the modalities for its progressive withdrawal and on the preparation by the Secretary-General, in consultation with competent specialized agencies, of modalities for assistance to El Salvador, within the framework of the Peace Accords, for the post-ONUSAL period. That would allow for a smooth transition from a peacekeeping operation to the normal activity of the United Nations specialized agencies to render assistance to that country.⁵²

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 920 (1994), which reads:

Noting with appreciation the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General to support the full and early implementation of the agreements signed by the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional to maintain and consolidate peace and promote reconciliation in El Salvador,

Welcoming the Secretary-General's observation that there have been notable advances in the process of national reconciliation, particularly the integration of the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional into the political life of El Salvador,

Concerned at the continuing delays in fully implementing several important components of the peace accords, including, inter alia, the deployment of the National Civil Police and the phasing out of the National Police, the questions related to the transfer of lands, the reintegration into civilian society of ex-combatants and war disabled and several recommendations of the Commission on the Truth,

Noting with satisfaction, in this context, the conclusion on 19 May 1994 of an agreement between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional on a timetable for the implementation of the most important outstanding agreements,

Welcoming the commitment of the President-elect of El Salvador, reiterated before the Secretary-General, to comply fully with all peace accords and to consolidate national reconciliation, as reported in the letter from the Secretary-General dated 24 May 1994,

Welcoming also the work of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador, and noting its vital importance to the peace and reconciliation process in El Salvador,

8. Stresses the need to ensure that, under appropriate verification by the United Nations, the police and public security provisions of the peace accords are scrupulously observed, in particular the completion of the demobilization of the National Police, as well as the enhancement of the civilian character of the National Civil Police, in accordance with the timetable agreed by the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional; consultation with competent specialized agencies, to prepare modalities for assistance to El Salvador, within the framework of the peace accords, for the post-Mission period;

15. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of France stated that ONUSAL enjoyed the full confidence of the parties to continue to supervise certain aspects of the Peace Accords, especially in the field of public security. On the other hand, he believed that the economic and social aspects of the Accords, some of which might be concluded after 1995, could be dealt with by specialized agencies of the United Nations. France therefore urged the Secretariat to approach those institutions, particularly the United Nations Development Programme, in order to take measures which would allow for a takeover from ONUSAL in El Salvador during the stage of consolidating peace. He noted that the United Nations was in demand throughout the globe. Its resources were scarce and valuable and should be preserved for those situations which were truly relevant to peacekeeping. Therefore, the Security Council needed to know how to put an end to an operation when circumstances no longer justified its continuation.⁵³

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that, while the international community could and should continue to assist El Salvador in the implementation of the Peace Accords, it could not and should not become a substitute for action by the people of El Salvador themselves. ONUSAL had important tasks to perform in the coming months but it was working itself out of a job, and the process of winding down had to also move ahead. The United Nations future role in El Salvador would not be in peacekeeping but in the fields of development and human rights. His Government would back international efforts to establish a coordinated framework for continued United Nations assistance to El Salvador once ONUSAL had withdrawn.⁵⁴

The President, speaking in his capacity as representative of Nigeria, stated that the issue was not whether to terminate a mission whose task was completed but how to wind up a successful operation, or what appeared to be a successful operation, in such a way and at such a time that the actions taken by the Security Council would not be self-defeating.⁵⁵

⁵³ Ibid., pp. 6-7.

Decision of 16 September 1994 (3425th meeting): statement by the President

On 26 August 1994, pursuant to resolution 920 (1994) of 26 May 1994, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a further report on ONUSAL.⁵⁶ The report contained an account of the status of implementation of outstanding commitments under the Peace Accords as well as the steps taken to reduce the size of ONUSAL and contain its costs.

As regards the implementation of the Peace Accords, the Secretary-General stated that since his inauguration on 1 June 1994, the President of El Salvador had taken steps to ensure compliance with the outstanding provisions of the accords. A turning point appeared to have been reached in the area of public security. After recent events had revealed the involvement in criminal activities of individuals or groups within the public security apparatus, the Government had promptly denounced the existence of organized crime and expressed its determination to take decisive action against all those involved. In addition, the appointment of a new Vice-Minister for Public Security and a new Director-General of the National Civil Police should help strengthen that institution and improve its performance. The President of El Salvador had also decided to accelerate the demobilization of the National Police. After a two-month extension of its mandate, the Joint Group established to investigate politically motivated illegal armed groups had completed its work and submitted its report. Despite a four-week delay, the election by consensus of the new Supreme Court was a laudable achievement and paved the way for the much-needed reform of the judicial system. The Secretary-General further stated that since 1 May 1994, the Legislative Assembly had functioned with the participation of FLMN as the country's second political force and that of other political parties. He noted that the establishment of FMLN as a fully legal party in the political and civil life of the country provided striking evidence of El Salvador's transformation from a country riveted by conflict into a nation on the path to reconciliation.

The Secretary-General also reported that while the new Government's attitude was an encouraging indication of its commitment to the peace process, several difficult issues remained to be resolved in order to ensure compliance with pending obligations under the Peace Accords. The justice and police sectors would continue to require careful attention, as well as the armed forces had to abide fully by their new mandate under the constitution. Moreover, the virtual paralysis of the land-transfer programme, delays and distortions in other reintegration programmes and the unresolved problem of the human settlements were a source of increasing concern.

Concerning the measures taken to contain the costs of ONUSAL, the Secretary-General reported on the phasing-out of military and police personnel and announced his intention to start reducing the substantive civilian staff in the light of developments over the coming months. Air transport expenses had also been drastically reduced and a substantial reduction of the vehicle fleet was under way. He stated that the phasing out of personnel and equipment was being closely correlated with the needs of existing missions, as well as with the planning for new missions.

He concluded by observing that the conditions necessary to ensure the full and final implementation of the Peace Accords for El Salvador seemed to be in place, although difficulties in carrying out outstanding obligations should not be underestimated. The Security Council should be in a position to evaluate progress in that regard on the basis of the report that he would present to it at the end of October 1994.

At its 3425th meeting, on 16 September 1994, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. After the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of El Salvador, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The President (Spain) then made the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁵⁷

The Security Council has received the report of the Secretary-General of 26 August 1994 on the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador, submitted pursuant to resolution 920 (1994) of 26 May 1994. The Council is encouraged by the Secretary-General's observation regarding

El Salvador's transformation from a country riven by conflict into a nation on the path to reconciliation.

The Council welcomes the steps taken by the President of El Salvador, since his inauguration on 1 June 1994, to ensure compliance with the outstanding provisions of the peace accords. It notes that, while some delays and difficulties still persist, progress has been achieved in areas of the agreement on a timetable for the implementation of the most important outstanding agreements, of 19 May 1994, relevant to the strengthening and modernization of the democratic institutions of El Salvador.

The Council reaffirms the need to ensure that, under appropriate verification by the Mission, the police and public security provisions of the peace accords are scrupulously observed. In particular, the Council expects that the Government of El Salvador will accelerate the demobilization of the National Police, as foreseen in the peace accords and as announced by the President of El Salvador.

The Council also shares the Secretary-General's concern at the limited progress of the land-transfer programme, delays and distortions in other reintegration programmes and the unresolved problem of the human settlements, which was originated in the course of the conflict. The Council calls for the removal of remaining obstacles and the prompt fulfilment of the programmes, in conformity with the timetable agreed by the parties. It calls upon States, as well as international institutions, to contribute promptly and generously in support of those programmes.

The Council reiterates the need for full implementation of the recommendations of the Commission on the Truth. In this regard, it welcomes the unanimous election of an independent Supreme Court of Justice as an important step in the process of reform of the judicial system.

The Council welcomes the steps taken by the Secretary-General to reduce the size of the Mission to the lowest possible level of personnel and to contain its costs, consistent with the effective performance of its duties. The Council reaffirms the commitment undertaken by the United Nations to verify the implementation of the peace accords and, in this context, expresses the hope that significant further progress will be made in implementing the accords.

On 31 October 1994, pursuant to resolution 920 (1994) of 26 May 1994, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a further report on ONUSAL,⁵⁸ in which he provided an overall assessment of the peace process in its political, institutional and socio-economic dimensions and evaluated the effort required to ensure, as far as possible, its irreversibility. He stated that, despite real progress towards democracy and development, certain issues remained to be resolved before all pending commitments under the Peace Accords were met. Those issues related to the full deployment of the National Civil Police; the completion of the demobilization of the National Police; the reform of the judicial and electoral systems; the transfer of land to former combatants and the conclusion of some important economic reintegration programmes for their benefit; the implementation of the recommendations of the Commission on the Truth; and the completion of the ongoing process to extend all public services to the former zones of conflict. The Government, as well as the leadership and a large majority of the Armed Forces, had expressed their commitment to comply with the outstanding elements of the Peace Accords. That evidence of sustained political will was encouraging, but had to be matched by concrete action and the capacity to activate still recalcitrant sectors within the administration. The joint declaration made on 4 October 1994 by the Government and FMLN, which reconfirmed the commitment of both signatories to complete implementation of the Peace Accords, bore witness to that political will. The parties intended to work out promptly specific agreements on outstanding issues and to send a joint mission to donor countries to seek the funds required to finance the programmes.

He further stated that the United Nations undertaking in El Salvador had been innovative in a variety of ways. The Organization had played a central role in the negotiation of the Peace Accords and overseen a multidimensional peacekeeping and peacebuilding operation in the design of which it had played a key part. It remained engaged in the transition from peacekeeping to post-conflict peacebuilding. That involved not only security-related aspects, such as the replacement of the old police by a new national civil police following reform of the Armed Forces, but also key institutional reforms designed to entrench the rule of law and provide a solid framework to guarantee respect for human rights. The United Nations also supported a complex set of reintegration programmes. In endorsing the Secretary-General's negotiating efforts and subsequently the Peace Accords themselves, the Security Council had accepted the request of the parties that the United Nations verify compliance with all the agreements reached therein. The Council had confirmed that acceptance and had done so again recently in the presidential statement of 16 September 1994. It was thus essential to retain ONUSAL for one further mandate period, albeit at a much reduced strength, to ensure that the incomplete undertakings were fully implemented, particularly until the National Police was completely disbanded and the National Civil Police fully deployed and operational. Those goals should be accomplished in about five months. At that time, it would be possible to consider how best to approach the remaining verification duties incumbent upon the Organization which, although not involving United Nations military or police personnel, would nevertheless concern critical and sensitive components of the Peace Accords. The Secretary-General therefore recommended to the Council the extension of ONUSAL until 30 April 1995, at which date that part of its functions which required military and police personnel would have been completed. Before the Mission's termination, he would present to the Council his thoughts on possible mechanisms to maintain United Nations verification thereafter, as well as information on technical assistance programmes in various fields that would contribute to the long-term political and social stability in the country. This approach responded to a widely held view that the termination of ONUSAL should not mark the end of United Nations efforts to consolidate peace in El Salvador.

At its 3465th meeting, on 23 November 1994, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. After the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of El Salvador, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (United States) then drew the attention of the members of the Council to the text of a draft resolution submitted by Colombia, Mexico, Spain, the United States of America and Venezuela.⁵⁹ She also drew their attention to two letters from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Council dated 11 August and 6 October 1994,⁶⁰ transmitting, respectively, the report by the Joint Group for the Investigation of Politically Motivated Illegal Armed Groups and the Joint Declaration signed on 4 October by the Government of El Salvador and FMLN in which they had agreed to cooperate to ensure compliance with all the Peace Accords by 30 April

1995 at the latest, and to reiterate their request that ONUSAL be extended until that date.

The representative of El Salvador gave a historical account of the Central American and Salvadorean crisis, of the peace process in Central America and of the United Nations' involvement therein. He noted that the United Nations had entered into an historic phase in Central America by becoming involved and participating in the solution of internal conflicts in sovereign States. He further noted that, at the time of the adoption of the Geneva Agreement on 4 April 1990, the peace process in El Salvador had entered a new stage, in which the United Nations would not only be an observer but also a major player as the Secretary-General was asked to exercise his good offices. After the conclusion of the Peace Accords, pursuant to a sovereign decision of the Government of El Salvador and the political will of the FMLN, the participation of the United Nations included the delicate function of international verification on the ground that the commitments entered into by the parties following the end of the armed conflict were being complied with. Under Security Council resolution 693 (1991) of 20 May 1991, ONUSAL was established with a mandate initially limited to verification of compliance with the San José agreement on human rights, and later expanded, under resolution 729 (1992) of 14 January 1992, to include verification of the cessation of the armed conflict and cooperation in the field of law and order. The representative of El Salvador stated that ONUSAL had performed an extraordinary and praiseworthy role and was generally considered as one of the most successful peacekeeping operations ever developed by the United Nations. He concluded by pointing out that the peace process had not yet been completed and expressed his country's confidence that it would continue to enjoy the cooperation and solidarity of the international community, which were essential to the transition from peacekeeping to post-conflict peacebuilding.⁶¹

Speaking before the vote, the representative of Spain proposed that the Council should maintain ONUSAL until 30 April 1995, albeit with a considerable reduction of its strength, which should not, however, impede the effective fulfilment of its responsibilities. He hoped that, by that date, the

National Civil Police would have been fully deployed and the former National Police demobilized. The implementation of other components of the Peace Accords might require a longer period of time. The speaker shared the view of the Secretary-General that it was essential that the United Nations fulfil its commitment to the people of El Salvador to verify full compliance with the Peace Accords. The coming end of ONUSAL should thus in no way signify the end of the efforts by the United Nations in El Salvador nor its turning its back on those commitments. The next report of the Secretary-General should, inter alia, contain his analysis of the ways and means by which the United Nations would continue its verification activities.⁶²

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 961 (1994), which reads:

Recalling its resolution 637 (1989) of 27 July 1989,

Recalling also its resolutions 693 (1991) of 20 May 1991, 714 (1991) of 30 September 1991, 729 (1992) of 14 January 1992, 784 (1992) of 30 October 1992, 791 (1992) of 30 November 1992, 832 (1993) of 27 May 1993, 888 (1993) of 30 November 1993 and 920 (1994) of 26 May 1994, and recalling also the statement by its President of 16 September 1994,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 31 October 1994,

Having considered also the report of the Joint Group for the Investigation of Politically Motivated Illegal Armed Groups of 28 July 1994, as contained in the annex to the letter from the Secretary-General dated 22 October 1994,

Noting the request of the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional for a further extension of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador in the joint declaration dated 4 October 1994, as contained in the annex to the letter from the Secretary-General dated 10 October 1994,

Concerned by delays in implementing several important elements of the peace accords, particularly those regarding the National Civil Police and the completion of demobilization of the National Police, as well as those related to the transfer of lands, the implementation of programmes to facilitate the reintegration into civilian society of ex-combatants and war disabled, the problems of human settlements, the reform of the judicial and electoral systems, and several recommendations of the Commission on the Truth, ⁶² Ibid., pp. 8-9.

Noting with appreciation the accomplishments of the Mission to date and the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General, his Special Representative and the Mission to support the full implementation of the agreements signed by the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional to maintain and consolidate peace and promote reconciliation in El Salvador,

Welcoming the ongoing efforts of the Secretary-General to contain the costs of the Mission,

Welcoming also the continuing commitment by all concerned directed towards reconciliation, stability and development in political life in El Salvador, as noted by the Secretary-General in his report of 31 October 1994,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 31 October 1994;

2. Reaffirms the importance of full and timely implementation of all aspects of the peace accords, including the recommendations of the Commission on the Truth, and appropriate follow-up to the findings of the Joint Group for the Investigation of Politically Motivated Illegal Armed Groups;

3. Expresses concern that important elements of the peace accords remain only partially implemented;

4. Calls upon all concerned to cooperate fully with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador in their task of verifying implementation by the parties of their commitments;

5. Urges the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional to redouble their efforts to comply with the agreement on a timetable for the implementation of the most important outstanding agreements so as to complete implementation of all aspects of the peace accords within the period of the timetable, and requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council informed on a regular basis of the status of implementation of outstanding commitments and Mission operations;

6. Urges all States and the international institutions engaged in the fields of development and finance to contribute promptly and generously in support of the implementation of all aspects of the peace accords, as requested jointly by the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional;

7. Approves the recommendations by the Secretary-General in his report of 31 October 1994 regarding the implementation by the Mission of its mandate;

8. Decides to extend the mandate of the Mission for one final period until 30 April 1995;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report by 31 March 1995 on the Mission, including on the fulfilment and completion of its mandate and on modalities for its withdrawal, to be completed by 30 April 1995, in a manner consistent with the effective performance of its duties;

10. Reaffirms the commitment undertaken by the United Nations to verify full implementation of the peace accords, welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to consider ways for the United Nations to discharge its remaining verification duties, and invites the Secretary-General, in consultation with competent specialized agencies, regional organizations and Member States, to prepare modalities for further assistance to El Salvador, within the framework of the peace accords, for the period after 30 April 1995;

11. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

After the vote, the representative of Argentina stated that the fact that the peace process had attained the degree of maturity needed to obviate the need for the direct attention of the Security Council was, from any standpoint, a healthy sign. The commitment of the United Nations to that process stood, however, irrespective of the Council's direct involvement. Resolution 961 (1994) provided for mechanisms to address the future of cooperation and assistance by the Organization prior to the end of the ONUSAL mandate.⁶³

The representative of Brazil also underlined that United Nations assistance would be required after the completion of the ONUSAL mandate.⁶⁴

The representative of China pointed out that the land transfer and reintegration programmes were essential to the consolidation of the peace process. He called on the parties to enter immediately into negotiations for concrete solutions. The international community and the United Nations agencies should fulfil their commitments, so as to ensure the successful completion of the peace process.⁶⁵

The representative of France stated that the end of the ONUSAL mandate did not mean that the United Nations would no longer take an interest in El Salvador. Rather, during the new phase of consolidating peace, it would be up to the United Nations specialized agencies to assist in the recovery of the country and particularly in the strengthening of its institutions.⁶⁶

The President, speaking in her capacity as representative of the United States, urged all parties to act on the Council's call to redouble efforts to see all aspects of the Peace Accords implemented before the end of March 1995. She stated that the end of the United Nations peacekeeping operation did not mean that the international community was abandoning its responsibilities to ensure full implementation of the Peace Accords. The Council was simply acknowledging that in El Salvador a new phase had been reached. The resolution made it clear that that final extension would be sufficient to complete the peacekeeping mandate in El Salvador, that the personnel staffing ONUSAL would be withdrawn by the end of the five-month period and that such assistance as may be appropriate after the Mission ended on 30 April 1995 would be developed through consultations among the appropriate technical agencies and the Member States. Noting that it was time to consider what would come after peacekeeping, the speaker welcomed the intent of the Secretary-General to consider the proper mechanism by which the United Nations would comply with its obligation to verify full implementation of the Peace Accords.⁶⁷

Decision of 17 February 1995: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

By a letter dated 6 February 1995, addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁶⁸ the Secretary-General stated his conviction that, in view of lingering discontent at the failure to implement some parts of the peace agreements, it was essential to put in place, following the disbandment of ONUSAL per se, a mechanism to continue the verification responsibilities and the good offices function that ONUSAL had carried out to date. He proposed to arrange for the establishment of a small team, which would have the capability to provide good offices, to verify implementation of the outstanding points on the peace agreements and to provide a continuing flow of accurate and reliable information in order to keep the Security Council informed as necessary. He would ensure that close cooperation with the Resident Representative of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in El Salvador continued so as to maintain a truly integrated approach in the post-conflict peacebuilding phase. He noted, however, that the team would have to maintain a separate identity, given its inherently political tasks and responsibilities and the fact that verification and good offices required an independence and impartiality that could prove difficult to reconcile with the role of UNDP as a partner of the Government.

By a letter dated 17 February 1995,⁶⁹ the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General that his letter dated 6 February 1995 concerning the arrangement that he proposed to put in place following the termination of ONUSAL had been brought to the attention of the members of the Security Council. They had welcomed his proposal that verification responsibilities and the good offices function be carried out under his authority, in the manner proposed by him.

Decision of 28 April 1995 (3528th meeting):
resolution 991 (1995)

On 24 March 1995, pursuant to resolution 961 (1994) of 23 November 1994, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a report on the fulfilment and completion of the mandate of ONUSAL and modalities for its withdrawal, and on ways for the United Nations to discharge its remaining verification duties.⁷⁰ He described ONUSAL activities during the period 1 November 1994 to 20 March 1995, and assessed the status of implementation of various aspects of the Peace Accords. The Secretary-General stated that preparations to dismantle ONUSAL were well under way. The United Nations would shortly be closing down a paradigmatic, multifunctional peacekeeping operation 45 months after the opening of the pioneering human rights-monitoring mission that had been its initial stage, and 39 months after the formal ceasefire that had accompanied full deployment. While much had been achieved, a number of commitments remained to be honoured. They pertained to such important aspects of the Peace Accords that they could call into question the irreversibility of the peace process as a whole as long as they were unfulfilled. In that regard, the Secretary-General referred, in particular, to the completion of agreements regarding land transfer and other reintegration programmes, the approval of legislative measures recommended by the Commission on the Truth and the strengthening of the National Civil Police, the National Counsel for the Defence of Human Rights, the judiciary and the electoral system.

On that basis, the Secretary-General stated that a strong case could have been made for maintaining ONUSAL after the date of final expiry of its mandate. He had refrained, however, from making such a recommendation in the light of clear indications from members of the Council that the time had come to bring ONUSAL to a close. It was against that background that he had submitted to the Council on 6 February 1995 his proposal to put in place in El Salvador a small team that would conduct the remaining verification and good offices responsibilities following the withdrawal of ONUSAL.⁷¹ He stressed that the need to put that mechanism in place and to make sure that it was able to carry out its difficult task was critical to the consolidation of peace. At the time he had put his intention to the Council, assurances had been given that substantial progress would take place before 30 April 1995. Subsequent delays and new difficulties might warrant a somewhat larger team.

At its 3528th meeting, on 28 April 1995, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. The Council invited the representatives of Brazil, Colombia, El Salvador, Mexico, Spain and Venezuela, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Czech Republic) then drew the attention of the members of the Council to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.⁷²

The representative of El Salvador stated that ONUSAL constituted a successful management operation by the United Nations and a historic landmark for his country and the Organization. He recalled that in 1990 the Salvadorean war was at a crucial point. It was the will of both parties and the active mediation of the United Nations that had made it possible to reach the necessary political solution. He commended the Secretary-General's effort and initiative to maintain a significant high-level presence in El Salvador and noted that the implementation of the few aspects of the Peace Accords still pending was closely linked to institutional development, in particular, the judicial and electoral reforms. From then onwards, it was a matter of bringing to a proper conclusion, through the Peace Accords, the specific issues still pending, such as the granting of land to

ex-combatants and landholders, and of fulfilling with a lesser sense of urgency the timetable set for the more institutional aspects.⁷³

During the debate, other speakers praised the contribution of ONUSAL to the peace process but expressed concerns about the fact that a number of commitments under the Peace Accords remained still to be fulfilled. They stressed the importance for the United Nations and the international community of continuing to assist the peace process, and supported the Secretary-General's proposal to maintain a small team to carry out the remaining verification of the implementation of the Peace Accords, as well as to provide good offices, after the termination of the ONUSAL mandate.⁷⁴

Before the vote, the representative of the Russian Federation stated that his country attached great importance to the fact that, within the context of the continuing United Nations presence in El Salvador after the end of the peacekeeping operation, provision had been made for a combined approach to the tasks that needed to be done during the post-conflict peacebuilding stage. In that effort, close cooperation would be needed between El Salvador and UNDP, and also with the specialized agencies and the international financial institutions.⁷⁵

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 991 (1995), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions and the statements by its President on the question of El Salvador,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 24 March 1995,

Having considered also the report of the Director of the Human Rights Division of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador of 18 April 1995,

Recognizing with satisfaction that El Salvador has evolved from a country riven by conflict into a democratic and peaceful nation,

Paying tribute to those Member States which contributed personnel to the Mission,

Recalling the letters from the Secretary-General dated 6 February 1995 and the President of the Security Council dated 17 February 1995,

1. Pays tribute to the accomplishments of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador, under the authority of the Secretary-General and his Special Representatives;

2. Welcomes the continued commitment of the Government and people of El Salvador to reconciliation, stabilization and the development of political life in El Salvador;

3. Urges the Government of El Salvador, the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional and all concerned in El Salvador to accelerate the pace of implementation of the peace accords and to work together to achieve fulfilment of outstanding commitments in order to ensure the irreversibility of the peace process;

4. Reiterates its call that States and international institutions continue to provide assistance to the Government and people of El Salvador as they consolidate the gains made in the peace process;

5. Affirms, in accordance with paragraph 8 of resolution 961 (1994), that the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador will terminate as of 30 April 1995.

After the vote, the representative of the United States stated that the end of the exceptional work of ONUSAL in El Salvador was not a sign of flagging international interest but a vote of confidence that the Salvadorean people could complete the implementation of the Peace Accords without direct international supervision. Resolution 991 urged both former combating sides to accelerate their efforts to implement fully the remaining chapters of the Peace Accords. They had a solemn responsibility to do so. The international community would continue to assist with those efforts.⁷⁶

Welcoming the Secretary-General's proposal to set up a small political team, the representative of the United Kingdom made it clear that that did not represent a continuation of the peacekeeping mission but was part of a wider effort by the United Nations and the international community to consolidate the achievements of ONUSAL, to help with the rebuilding of El Salvador's institutions and to address El Salvador's development needs.⁷⁷

B. The situation in Guatemala

Decision of 31 January 1994: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

By a letter dated 17 January 1994 addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁷⁸ the Secretary-General transmitted the text of the "Framework Agreement for the Resumption of the Negotiating Process between the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca" signed in Mexico City on 10 January 1994,⁷⁹ in the presence of the United Nations observer to the peace process. Among the changes introduced by that new agreement, was the parties' request that the Secretary-General appoint a representative to serve as Moderator of the bilateral talks, a request which he intended to accept. The parties had also concurred that the United Nations should be requested to verify the implementation of all agreements reached by them. It had been made clear to them at the meeting in Mexico City that the latter request would in due course require decisions by the relevant intergovernmental bodies of the United Nations. Should the forthcoming negotiations succeed in producing an agreed settlement of the conflict in Guatemala, the Secretary-General would recommend that the United Nations agree to verify implementation of the relevant agreements.

By a letter dated 31 January 1994,⁸⁰ the President of the Council informed the Secretary-General of the following:

The members of the Security Council take note with appreciation of your letter dated 17 January 1994 and the annex thereto, concerning the Framework Agreement for the Resumption of the Negotiating Process between the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca.

The members of the Council welcome the agreement reached by the parties and express the hope that an early and fair settlement of the conflict in Guatemala can be attained.

The members of the Council will welcome any further communications on developments regarding the matter.

13. The question concerning Haiti

Decision of 16 June 1993 (3238th meeting): resolution 841 (1993)

By a letter dated 7 June 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹ the representative of Haiti stated that, despite the international community's efforts, constitutional order had not been re-established in Haiti because the de facto authorities continued to obstruct all the initiatives that had so far been proposed. He requested that the Security Council make universal and mandatory the sanctions against the de facto authorities, adopted at the Ad Hoc Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Organization of American States (OAS), and recommended in various General Assembly resolutions, giving priority to the embargo on petroleum products and the supply of arms and munitions.

At its 3238th meeting, on 16 June 1993, the Council included that letter in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of the Bahamas, Canada and Haiti, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Spain) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by France, the United States and Venezuela.² He further drew their attention to a letter dated 14 June 1993, addressed to the President of the Council from the representative of Cuba,³ in which the latter informed the Council of his Government's view on the draft resolution before the Council. In that letter, he recalled that, at the time when repeated efforts had been made to secure the Security Council's authorization of electoral assistance to Haiti, in September 1990, the unanimous opinion of the Group of Latin American and Caribbean States had been that such assistance was not an issue related to international peace and security and could not, therefore, come under the aegis of the Council. On that occasion and subsequently, when further attempts had been made in 1991 to involve the Council in Haiti following the coup d'état there, it had been determined, pursuant to the Charter, that the General Assembly was responsible for action on the matter, concerning the approval of electoral assistance for Haiti as well as support for the measures taken by the appropriate regional organization in accordance with its constituent charter. With reference to the draft resolution before the Council and its characterization of the situation of the Haitian refugees as a threat to peace and security in the region, Cuba considered the matter to be a purely humanitarian question, which had to be solved through the relevant international organizations and bodies. Accordingly, that question did not fall within the mandate accorded to the Council under the Charter. Cuba's support for a return to constitutional order in Haiti and for its sole legitimate representative, President Aristide, did not prevent it from categorically repudiating the adoption of measures concerning the internal situation of Haiti by the Council, whose primary responsibility was the maintenance of international peace and security as set forth in Article 24 of the Charter, a context which did not embrace the situation prevailing in Haiti. In his delegation's view, the actions that were being sought of the Council were illegal under the Charter and established a dangerous precedent, which only served to buttress the repeated attempts to extend the authority and mandate of the Council beyond those laid down in the Charter.

The representative of Canada noted that the overthrow of the democratically elected Government of President Aristide had been universally condemned by the international community and that only a firm and unequivocal response from the international community would produce the conditions necessary for the return of democracy to Haiti. While OAS had demonstrated patience and resolve in condemning the interruption of the democratic process and in implementing concrete measures designed to restore that process, it had to be recognized that there were limits to the tools available to it. The OAS embargo on trade with Haiti was not binding on countries which were not members of the organization, thus reducing its impact and allowing the illegal regime in Port-au-Prince to cling to power. Acknowledging that reality, OAS had found it necessary to seek the support of the United Nations. Canada strongly supported the efforts of the past six months of the Special Envoy of OAS and the United Nations to reach a negotiated settlement. She further stated that the international community shared the responsibility to create the conditions necessary to ensure the success of the mediation mission of the Special Representative of OAS and of the United Nations. By supporting the limited sanctions in the draft resolution, the purpose of which was to advance the negotiating process, the Council would send a clear message. She added that the situation in Haiti was a threat to peace and security in the region and Haiti's neighbours were daily subjected to the consequences of it. The Government of Canada therefore considered it legitimate and necessary that the Council respond positively to the call by President Aristide and impose an embargo on the delivery of oil supplies in order to bring about a speedy conclusion to that situation. There was no other way to bring about the end of the illegal regime. She noted that the principal elements of the draft resolution — an embargo on the delivery of petroleum and petroleum products, arms and munitions, and the freezing of the assets of the Haitian State — had already been covered by the embargo earlier decreed by OAS.⁴

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 841 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Having received a letter dated 7 June 1993 from the Permanent Representative of Haiti to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council requesting that the Council make universal and mandatory the trade embargo on Haiti recommended by the Organization of American States,

Having heard a report of the Secretary-General on 10 June 1993 regarding the crisis in Haiti,

Taking note of resolutions MRE/RES.1/91, MRE/RES.2/91, MRE/RES.3/92 and MRE/RES.4/92 adopted by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the member countries of the Organization of American States, and resolution CP/RES.594 (923/92) and declarations CP/DEC.8 (927/93), CP/DEC.9 (931/93) and CP/DEC.10 (934/93) adopted by the Permanent Council of the Organization of American States,

Taking note in particular of resolution MRE/RES.5/93 adopted on 6 June 1993 at Managua by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the member countries of the Organization of American States,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 46/7 of 11 October 1991, 46/138 of 17 December 1991, 47/20 A of 24 November 1992, 47/143 of 18 December 1992 and 47/20 B of 20 April 1993, ⁴ S/PV.3238, pp. 6-8.

Strongly supportive of the continuing leadership of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States and of the efforts of the international community to reach a political solution to the crisis in Haiti,

Commending the efforts undertaken by the Special Representative for Haiti of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, Mr. Dante Caputo, to establish a political dialogue with the Haitian parties with a view to resolving the crisis in Haiti,

Recognizing the urgent need for an early, comprehensive and peaceful settlement of the crisis in Haiti in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and international law,

Recalling its statement of 26 February 1993, in which it noted with concern the incidence of humanitarian crises, including mass displacements of population, becoming or aggravating threats to international peace and security,

Deploring the fact that, despite the efforts of the international community, the legitimate Government of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide has not been reinstated,

Concerned that the persistence of this situation contributes to a climate of fear of persecution and economic dislocation, which could increase the number of Haitians seeking refuge in neighbouring Member States, and convinced that a reversal of this situation is needed to prevent its negative repercussions on the region,

Recalling, in this respect, the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter, and stressing the need for effective cooperation between regional organizations and the United Nations,

Considering that the above-mentioned request of the representative of Haiti, made within the context of the related actions previously taken by the Organization of American States and by the General Assembly of the United Nations, defines a unique and exceptional situation warranting extraordinary measures by the Council in support of the efforts undertaken within the framework of the Organization of American States,

Determining that, in these unique and exceptional circumstances, the continuation of this situation threatens international peace and security in the region,

Acting, therefore, under Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Affirms that the solution of the crisis in Haiti should take into account the above-mentioned resolutions of the Organization of American States and of the General Assembly of the United Nations;

2. Welcomes the request of the General Assembly that the Secretary-General take the necessary measures in order to assist, in cooperation with the Organization of American States, in the solution of the crisis in Haiti;

3. Decides that the provisions set forth in paragraphs 5 to 14 below, which are consistent with the trade embargo recommended by the Organization of American States, shall come into force at 0001 hours eastern standard time on 23 June 1993, unless the Secretary-General, having regard for the views of the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, has reported to the Council that, in the light of the results of the negotiations conducted by the Special Representative for Haiti of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, the imposition of such measures is not warranted at that time;

4. Decides also that if at any time after the submission of the above-mentioned report of the Secretary-General, the Secretary-General, having regard for the views of the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, reports to the Council that the de facto authorities in Haiti have failed to comply in good faith with their undertakings in the above-mentioned negotiations, the provisions set forth in paragraphs 5 to 14 below shall come into force immediately;

5. Decides further that all States shall prevent the sale or supply, by their nationals or from their territories or using their flag vessels or aircraft, of petroleum or petroleum products or arms and related materiel of all types, including weapons and ammunition, military vehicles and equipment, police equipment and spare parts for the aforementioned, whether or not originating in their territories, to any person or body in Haiti or to any person or body for the purpose of any business carried on in or operated from Haiti, and any activities by their nationals or in their territories which promote or are calculated to promote such sale or supply;

6. Decides to prohibit any and all traffic from entering the territory or territorial sea of Haiti carrying petroleum or petroleum products, or arms and related materiel of all types, including weapons and ammunition, military vehicles and equipment, police equipment and spare parts for the aforementioned, in violation of paragraph 5 above;

7. Decides also that the Committee of the Security Council established by paragraph 10 below may authorize, on an exceptional case-by-case basis under a no-objection procedure, the importation, in non-commercial quantities and only in barrels or bottles, of petroleum or petroleum products, including propane gas for cooking, for verified essential humanitarian needs, subject to acceptable arrangements for effective monitoring of delivery and use;

8. Decides further that States in which there are funds, including any funds derived from property, (a) of the Government of Haiti or of the de facto authorities in Haiti, or (b) controlled directly or indirectly by such Government or authorities or by entities, wherever located or organized, owned or controlled by such Government or authorities, shall require all persons and entities within their own territories holding such funds to freeze them to ensure that they are not made available directly or indirectly to or for the benefit of the de facto authorities in Haiti;

9. Calls upon all States and all international organizations to act strictly in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution, notwithstanding the existence of any rights or obligations conferred or imposed by any international agreement or any contract entered into or any licence or permit granted prior to 23 June 1993;

10. Decides to establish, in accordance with rule 28 of its provisional rules of procedure, a committee of the Security Council consisting of all the members of the Council to undertake the following tasks and to report on its work to the Council with its observations and recommendations:

(a) To examine the reports submitted pursuant to paragraph 13 below;

(b) To seek from all States further information regarding the action taken by them concerning the effective implementation of the present resolution;

(c) To consider any information brought to its attention by States concerning violations of the measures imposed by the present resolution and to recommend appropriate measures in response thereto;

(d) To consider and decide expeditiously requests for the approval of imports of petroleum and petroleum products for essential humanitarian needs in accordance with paragraph 7 above;

(e) To make periodic reports to the Security Council on information submitted to it regarding alleged violations of the present resolution, identifying where possible persons or entities, including vessels, reported to be engaged in such violations;

(f) To promulgate guidelines to facilitate implementation of the present resolution;

11. Calls upon all States to cooperate fully with the Committee in the fulfilment of its tasks, including supplying such information as may be sought by the Committee in pursuance of the present resolution;

12. Also calls upon States to bring proceedings against persons and entities violating the measures imposed by the present resolution and to impose appropriate penalties;

13. Requests all States to report to the Secretary-General by 16 July 1993 on the measures they have initiated for meeting the obligations set out in paragraphs 5 to 9 above;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Committee, and to make the necessary arrangements in the Secretariat for that purpose;

15. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council, not later than 15 July 1993, and earlier if he considers it appropriate, on progress achieved in the efforts jointly undertaken by him and the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States with a view to reaching a political solution to the crisis in Haiti;

16. Expresses its readiness to review all the measures in the present resolution with a view to lifting them if, after the provisions set forth in paragraphs 5 to 14 above have come into force, the Secretary-General, having regard for the views of the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, reports to the Council that the de facto authorities in Haiti have signed and have begun implementing in good faith an agreement to reinstate the legitimate Government of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide;

17. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

After the vote, the President stated that he had been asked by the members of the Council to say that the adoption of resolution 841 (1993) was warranted by the unique and exceptional situation in Haiti and should not be regarded as constituting a precedent.

The representative of France qualified the situation before the Council as one of “total blockage” and expressed the hope that the adoption of sanctions against Haiti would make it possible to bring the perpetrators of the coup d’état to the negotiating table, in order to restore constitutional order in Haiti. He also hoped that it would not be necessary for the Council to tighten those measures if no tangible result emerged from the talks that the Special Representative wished to continue with the parties.⁵

The representative of Venezuela stated that the situation in Haiti was undoubtedly a threat to international peace and security, in particular in the Caribbean basin. It was not a question of interference in Haiti’s internal affairs. The legitimate and constitutional Government of Haiti — that of President Aristide — had asked the members of the Council to act. Efforts must not flag until the lawful authorities of Haiti were restored to power and were accorded the same consideration and support which the United Nations had shown in other extreme cases elsewhere in the world. He further noted that the provisions of the embargo imposed by OAS had not been respected because they were not binding. The action on which the Council had decided was unquestionably a sign of cooperation between the United Nations and a regional organization, namely OAS. It was also the first time that the Council had adopted a resolution implementing Chapter VII in connection with a country in the American hemisphere. The speaker contended that OAS had attempted to apply measures aimed at bringing about a negotiated settlement since the beginning of the crisis in Haiti. There had not been any initiative, mission, meeting or declaration that had not been undertaken within the framework of OAS. All that remained, therefore, was recourse to the Security Council. The only way to strengthen the embargo was to make it binding and universal, which in turn required action on the part of the Council. In that respect, he emphasized that the embargo was not being pursued as an end in itself, but as a means to give the Special Representative an additional deterrent so that the negotiations would continue and would achieve the goal sought by all.⁶

The representative of Pakistan explained that his delegation voted in favour of resolution 841 (1993) in the belief that the mandatory measures contained therein were in conformity with the recommendations made by OAS and that such extraordinary measures by the Council were necessary due to the threat to international peace and security emanating from the continuation of the situation in Haiti. In his delegation's view, the Council had acted under exceptional circumstances in that particular case. His delegation's vote was therefore without prejudice to the position which it might take on future resolutions of the Council in a similar situation.⁷

Similarly, the representative of Brazil contented that resolution 841 (1993) made it clear that the situation in Haiti was unique and exceptional due to a conjunction of factors, including the request by the legitimate Government of Haiti that the Council make universal and mandatory the measures recommended by OAS and the fact that action had already been taken in that same direction by OAS and by the General Assembly. That prior action provided a framework which warranted the extraordinary consideration of the matter by the Council and the equally extraordinary application of measures provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter.⁸

The representative of the United States stated that the Council had acted decisively to underline the international community's demand for a return to democratic legitimacy in Haiti. In taking the extremely serious step of imposing mandatory sanctions, it was sending a clear and resounding message. At the same time, her delegation was aware that sanctions alone were not a solution to the Haitian tragedy. Rather, the adoption of tough sanctions represented a further step by the international community to put pressure on those who stood in the way of a solution. In the final analysis, however, the international community could not solve the Haitian crisis. Only the Haitians themselves could do that. She called on all sides to negotiate seriously for a settlement.⁹

The representative of China contended that the crisis in Haiti was essentially a matter which fell within the internal affairs of that country, and therefore should be dealt with by the Haitian people themselves. The Haitian crisis had, however, acquired a new dimension with the latest developments. Under those circumstances, the representative of Haiti, acting within the context of the related actions previously taken by OAS and by the General Assembly, had requested the Council to take urgent measures to redress the crisis in Haiti. Similar requests had been made by OAS and by Latin American and Caribbean countries to support the efforts made by the regional organization. The resolution just adopted had also made it clear that the Council, in dealing with the Haitian crisis, would fully heed and respect the views of the relevant regional organization and countries in the region, and that any action by the Council should be complementary to, and supportive of, the actions by the relevant regional organization. He concluded by pointing out that his delegation's support for resolution 841 (1993) did not in any way alter China's consistent position, according to which it did not favour the Council's handling of matters which were essentially internal affairs of a Member State and disapproved of resorting lightly to such mandatory measures as sanctions by the Council.¹⁰

On 12 July 1993, pursuant to resolution 841 (1993), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti,¹¹ in which he reported on progress achieved in the efforts jointly undertaken by him and the Secretary-General of OAS with a view to reaching a political solution to the crisis in Haiti. The Secretary-General informed the Council that his Special Envoy had obtained the agreement of the President of Haiti and of the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of Haiti to meet with him at Governors Island, New York. The meeting took place from 27 June to 3 July 1993 and concluded with the signing of a 10-point Agreement containing the following arrangements: (1) organization under the auspices of the United Nations and OAS of a political dialogue between representatives of the political parties represented in the Parliament, with the participation of representatives of the Presidential Commission; (2) nomination of a Prime Minister by the President of the Republic; (3) confirmation of the Prime Minister by the legally reconstituted Parliament and his assumption of office in Haiti; (4) suspension, on the initiative of the United Nations Secretary-General, of the sanctions adopted under resolution 841 (1993) and the suspension, on the initiative of the Secretary-General of OAS, of the other measures adopted at the OAS Ad Hoc Meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs, immediately after the Prime Minister was confirmed and assumed office in Haiti; (5) implementation, following the agreements with the constitutional Government, of international cooperation, including assistance for modernizing the Armed Forces of Haiti and establishing a new Police Force with the presence of United Nations personnel in those fields; (6) granting of an amnesty by the President of the Republic within the framework of the National Constitution; (7) adoption of a law establishing the new Police Force and appointment, within that framework, of the Commander-in-Chief of the Police Force by the President of the Republic; (8) exercise by the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of Haiti of his right to early retirement and appointment of a new Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces by the President of the Republic; (9) return to Haiti of President Aristide on 30 October 1993; and (10) verification by the United Nations and OAS of fulfilment of all the commitments contained in the Governors Island Agreement.¹² With regard to the last point, the Secretary-General intended to entrust verification of the Agreement to his Special Envoy. Concerning human rights, he would propose that the arrangements for the International Civilian Mission in Haiti (MICIVIH) remain in effect.¹³ Regarding sanctions, he recommended that the Council endorse the proposal to suspend the sanctions immediately after the Prime Minister was confirmed and assumed office in Haiti. He also recommended that the Council decide that the suspension of the sanctions should be automatically terminated if at any time he, having regard to the views of the Secretary-General of OAS, reported to the Council that the parties to the Agreement or any authorities in Haiti had failed to comply in good faith with the Agreement. In that respect, he specified that failure to comply with the undertakings would include, inter alia, numerous violations of the human rights and fundamental freedoms set forth in the international instruments to which Haiti was a party and in the Constitution of Haiti. He added that, immediately after the return of President Aristide to Haiti, he would report to the Council with a view to the sanctions being lifted definitively and that the Secretary-General of OAS had informed him that he would take parallel action with respect to the measures adopted by that organization. On the question of a United Nations presence in Haiti to assist in the modernization of the armed forces and the establishment of a new police force provided for in the Agreement, the Secretary-General would report to the Council with his recommendations after the necessary consultations with the constitutional Government of Haiti.

By a letter dated 15 July 1993,¹⁴ the President of the Council (United Kingdom) informed the Secretary-General of the following:

The members of the Council have considered those parts of your report of 12 July 1993 which are within the competence of the Council. They expressed their deep appreciation for your efforts and those of your Special Representative to achieve a peaceful settlement to the crisis in Haiti and declared their readiness to give the fullest possible support to the Agreement signed on Governors Island, New York, on 3 July 1993.

The members of the Council earnestly hope that the inter-Haitian dialogue which is beginning in New York this week will facilitate rapid progress towards the achievement of the objectives of the Agreement. They look forward to the full implementation of all stages of that Agreement and confirm their readiness to suspend the measures imposed by resolution 841 (1993) of 16 June 1993 immediately after the confirmation of the Prime Minister and his assumption of his functions in Haiti. They agree that provision will also need to be made for the automatic termination of such suspension if at any time you, having regard for the views of the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, report to the Council that the parties to the Agreement, or any authorities in Haiti, have failed to comply in good faith with the Agreement. They declare their readiness to terminate the measures imposed by resolution 841 (1993), on receipt of a report from you, immediately after the return of President Aristide to Haiti.

The members of the Council stand ready to take the necessary action urgently upon receipt of your recommendations for the presence of United Nations personnel in Haiti to assist in the modernization of the armed forces and the establishment of a new police force, in accordance with point 5 of the Agreement.

Decision of 27 August 1993 (3271st meeting):
resolution 861 (1993)

On 13 August 1993, pursuant to resolution 841 (1993), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a follow-up report to his report of 12 July 1993.¹⁵ The Secretary-General reported that following the signature of the Governors Island Agreement, the Special Envoy had invited the representatives of the main political forces in Haiti and of the political blocs in Parliament to participate, together with the members of the Presidential Commission, at a political dialogue to discuss the agenda set forth in point 1 of the Agreement. The dialogue had taken place in New York from 14 to 16 July 1993 at the conclusion of which the participants had signed a document known as the New York Pact.¹⁶ That document provided for a political truce of six months' duration, a procedure to enable Parliament to resume its normal functioning, and agreements for the early confirmation of the Prime Minister nominated by the President to head a Government of national concord, and for the adoption of the legal instruments necessary for ensuring the transition. Those undertakings were subject to verification by the United Nations and by OAS. The Secretary-General further reported that, on 24 July 2003, President Aristide had informed the Presidents of the two chambers of Parliament of his intention to nominate Robert Malval as Prime Minister.

On 26 August 1993, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a follow-up report to his report of 13 August 1993,¹⁷ in which he informed the Council that, the process of confirmation of the Prime Minister-designate of Haiti, Mr. Robert Malval, had been completed and that the latter had assumed his functions. Accordingly, the Secretary-General recommended that the measures imposed in resolution 841 (1993) be suspended immediately. He also recalled that the suspension would automatically be terminated and sanctions reimposed if at any time he, having regard to the views of the Secretary-General of OAS, reported to the Council that the parties to the Governors Island Agreement or any authorities in Haiti had failed to comply in good faith with the Agreement. Some of the circumstances that would lead him to conclude that such a breach had occurred had been spelled out in his reports of 12 July and 13 August 1993. He further recalled that, immediately after the return of President Aristide to Haiti on 30 October 1993, he would report to the Council with a view to the sanctions being lifted definitively.

At its 3271st meeting, on 27 August 1993, the Council included the report of the Secretary-General dated 26 August 1993 in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Haiti, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (United States) drew the attention of the members of the Council to the reports of the Secretary-General dated 12 July and 13 August 1993,¹⁸ as well as to a letter dated 15 July 1993 addressed to the Secretary-General from the President of the Council.¹⁹ She also drew their attention to a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.²⁰

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 861 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 841 (1993) of 16 June 1993,

Commending the efforts undertaken by the Special Representative for Haiti of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States,

Having considered the relevant parts of the report of the Secretary-General of 12 July 1993,

Taking note with approval of the Governors Island Agreement between the President of the Republic of Haiti and the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of Haiti, including the provisions of point 4, under which the parties agreed that the sanctions should be suspended immediately after the Prime Minister is confirmed and assumes office in Haiti,

Having also considered the report of the Secretary-General of 13 August 1993 on the New York Pact of 16 July 1993,

Having received the report of the Secretary-General of 26 August 1993 indicating that the Prime Minister of Haiti has been confirmed and has assumed office in Haiti,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the measures set out in paragraphs 5 to 9 of resolution 841 (1993) are suspended with immediate effect, and requests all States to act consistently with this decision as soon as possible;

2. Confirms its readiness, as noted in the letter dated 15 July 1993 addressed to the Secretary-General from the President of the Security Council, to terminate immediately the suspension of the measures referred to in paragraph 1 above if at any time the Secretary-General, having regard for the views of the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, informs the Council that the parties to the Governors Island Agreement or any other authorities in Haiti have not complied in good faith with the Agreement;

3. Expresses its readiness to review all the measures in paragraphs 5 to 14 of resolution 841 (1993) with a view to lifting them definitively once the Secretary-General, having regard for the views of the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, informs the Council that the relevant provisions of the Agreement have been fully implemented;

4. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

After the vote, the representative of France stated that his Government was pleased that the progress of democracy in Haiti had enabled the Council to suspend the sanctions imposed by resolution 841 (1993), as set out in the resolution itself and as stipulated in the Governors Island Agreement. He expressed the hope that the process towards democracy would be completed and that the Council would then finally be able to lift the sanctions. In that way, the Council would be demonstrating to all that it could act in accordance with the developments it observed. He also noted that Haiti's progress towards democracy was in large part the result of cooperation between the United Nations and OAS, which set an example whose repetition and extension would benefit all.²¹

The President, speaking in her capacity as representative of the United States, stated that, at the time the Council imposed sanctions on Haiti, the goal had clearly been to help restore the democratic Government that had been stolen from the people of Haiti. The Governors Island Agreement, signed two weeks later, was a clear demonstration that sanctions had worked. Both at OAS and at the United Nations, the ratification of President Aristide's chosen Prime Minister was a triumph for multilateral diplomacy, which had been put at the service of democracy and human dignity. The suspension of sanctions was not only a success, but also a first in recent years for the Security Council members had shown that they would be serious in responding to serious progress. That was a message to those who continued to stonewall the Council. In suspending sanctions, Council members had also shown that that economic tool was both flexible and effective, and that the Council could act quickly and decisively. She added that the success also provided a glimpse into the future of a greater vision her Government saw for the United Nations. That vision was not only to reform those States which had spurned the community of nations and to embrace the new democracies that so wished to become good citizens in that community, but also to restore failed States so that they too could rejoin it.²²

The representative of Haiti stated that the ratification of President Aristide's designated Prime Minister was a major victory for OAS and for the United Nations, and in particular for the Security Council, whose resolution 841 (1993) was decisive in the development of the matter. However, the situation in Haiti was still extremely precarious, with a renewed outbreak of human rights violations, as indicated by the last report of the International Civilian Mission. His delegation hoped that the Council would remain vigilant against any attempts to wreck the process of establishing democracy in Haiti.²³

Other speakers also highlighted the importance of the cooperation between the United Nations and OAS, and the need to continue such a partnership until a definite solution to the crisis in Haiti had been achieved. Some expressed concern at the human rights situation in Haiti.²⁴ Others emphasized the role that should be played by other United Nations organs with regard to economic and social assistance to Haiti.²⁵

Decision of 31 August 1993 (3272nd meeting):
resolution 862 (1993)

On 25 August 1993, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report concerning Haiti,²⁶ in which he put forward recommendations for the consideration of the Council concerning United Nations assistance in the modernization of the Armed Forces as well as in the establishment of a new police force, as provided for under the Governors Island Agreement. Those recommendations had been made pursuant to a letter of 24 July 1993 from President Aristide and were based on advice from his Special Envoy and the “Friends of the Secretary-General for Haiti”. Pending adoption of the necessary legislation for the creation of the new police force, including the appointment of a Commander-in-Chief of the Police, an estimated 567 United Nations police monitors would assist the Government in monitoring the activities of those members of the Armed Forces who were carrying out police functions. In consultation with the Government of Haiti, the United Nations would, at a later stage, assist in the establishment of a Police Academy and in the training of a new generation of police officers there. The task of modernizing the Armed Forces would be discharged by training teams of 12 trainers each, with an average of 60 trainers being present in Haiti at any given time. In addition, a military construction unit with a strength of approximately 500 people would be deployed to work with the Haitian military to carry out construction projects. Those tasks would be carried by the mission to be known as the United Nations Mission in Haiti (UNMIH). The Secretary-General recommended therefore that the Council authorize the establishment of UNMIH for an initial period of six months, to be dispatched as soon as the conditions set up in the Governors Island Agreement were met. The duration of the Mission would be subject to periodic review, in the light of the progress achieved in the restoration of democracy in Haiti.

At its 3272nd meeting, on 31 August 1993, the Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council’s prior consultations.²⁷

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 862 (1993), which reads:

Recalling its resolutions 841 (1993) of 16 June 1993 and 861 (1993) of 27 August 1993,

Recalling also the Governors Island Agreement between the President of the Republic of Haiti and the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of Haiti, of 3 July 1993, contained in the report of the Secretary-General of 12 July 1993, and the letter dated 24 July 1993 from the President of the Republic of Haiti to the Secretary-General,

5. Urges the Secretary-General to enter expeditiously into discussions with the Government of Haiti on a status-of-mission agreement to facilitate the early dispatch of the United Nations mission in Haiti, if and when the Council so decides;

6. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

After the vote, the representative of France stated that resolution 862 (1993) allowed the international community once again to note its will to ensure the return of democracy to Haiti. He hoped that the advance team provided in the resolution could be sent immediately to its theatre of operations to prepare for the arrival of a larger United Nations mission. It was important for the Council to be provided quickly with the additional information it had requested, in order to take a final decision concerning the United Nations Mission in Haiti.²⁸

The representative of Venezuela noted that the measures in resolution 862 (1993) had been identified and agreed to by the Haitians themselves. The Council was therefore working in accordance with those understandings and with full respect for the sovereignty of Haiti. Emphasizing the need to follow up on the recommendations of the advance team, he noted that that initiative by the Council was part of a process which, as a result of the express will of the Government of Haiti, had involved the United Nations and OAS from the beginning. Unlike other similar operations, that one had reflected the security measures and the guarantees that had been found suitable and agreed upon by the parties in the process which guided the Special Envoy. For that reason, he believed that the organizational and budgetary safeguards in paragraphs three, four and five of resolution 862 (1993) should not be interpreted as restrictive or as conditions of the commitment to set up UNMIH expeditiously.²⁹

The representative of Spain stated that, with the adoption of resolution 862 (1993), the Council was demonstrating its determination to actively assist the legitimate Government of Haiti and the Haitian people in their task of restoring and consolidating their democratic institutions. In that respect, he noted that the democratization of the police forces and the military establishment was related to the international civil mission which was already functioning in Haiti under the auspices of the United Nations to supervise genuine respect for human rights. The assistance of the United Nations in those matters, in cooperation with OAS, and coordinated by the Special Envoy, was important for two reasons: firstly, the United Nations was responding promptly to a request by the legitimate Government of Haiti and supporting that Government's desire to modernize and professionalize its security and armed forces, in accordance with the provisions of the Governors Island Agreement; and secondly, the democratization of those institutions was an essential element in lending a seal of permanence to the period of democracy which was beginning.³⁰

The President, speaking in her capacity as representative of the United States, stated that the provision of United Nations military and police personnel was a tangible sign that the Council's commitment would not end with the restoration of constitutional government, but would continue until democratic institutions were firmly in place. It was also a calming presence during the transition period. Noting that the Secretary-General's report of 15 August 1993 provided a well-considered formula to cultivate an enduring solution, she looked forward to the speedy dispatch of the United Nations advance team and to its assessment of the situation, followed by the establishment of UNMIH.³¹

meeting): statement by the President

At its 3278th meeting, on 17 September 1993, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. After the adoption of the agenda, the President (Venezuela) stated that, following consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:³²

The Security Council deplores the recent upsurge in violence in Haiti, particularly the events of 11 and 12 September 1993, when at least a dozen people were assassinated, including a prominent supporter of President Aristide, during a church service.

The Council is deeply concerned at these developments as well as at the existence of organized armed civilian groups in the capital which are attempting to interfere with the new constitutional Government's proper assumption of its functions.

The Council considers it imperative that the constitutional Government of Haiti assume control over the security forces of the country, and that those responsible for the activities of the organized armed civilian groups throughout the country, and particularly in Port-au-Prince, be held personally accountable for their actions and removed from their functions. It also urges the Haitian authorities to take immediate measures with a view to disarming these groups.

The Council strongly calls upon the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces, also in his capacity as signatory to the Governors Island Agreement, to carry out his responsibilities to the fullest by ensuring immediate compliance with the letter and the spirit of the Agreement.

The Council will hold the Haitian military and security authorities personally responsible for the safety of all United Nations personnel in Haiti.

Unless there is a clear and immediate effort by the security forces to put an end to the present levels of violence and intimidation, and unless the above requirements are met, the Council will have no alternative but to consider that the authorities responsible for public order in Haiti are not complying in good faith with the Agreement.

Therefore, should the Secretary-General, in accordance with resolution 861 (1993) of 27 August 1993, and having received the views of the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, inform the Council that, in his opinion, there is a serious and consistent non-compliance with the Agreement, the Council will immediately reinstate those measures provided for in its resolution 841 (1993) of 16 June 1993 appropriate to the situation, with particular emphasis on those measures aimed at those deemed responsible for the non-compliance with the Agreement.

The Council reaffirms that all the parties in Haiti are bound to comply with their obligations under the Agreement, as well as with those embodied in the relevant international treaties to which Haiti is party and in all relevant Council resolutions.

The Council will closely monitor the situation in Haiti in the coming days.

Decision of 23 September 1993 (3282nd meeting): resolution 867 (1993)

On 21 September 1993, pursuant to resolution 862 (1993), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on Haiti, in which he provided additional information on the proposed establishment of UNMIH.³³ The Secretary-General reported that, in accordance with resolution 862 (1993), an advance team of military, police and civilian specialists, led by his Special Envoy, had been dispatched to Haiti on 8 September 1993. First, the team had been instructed to undertake a detailed survey as a basis for the preparation of the report, and secondly, a small group of military and police officers were to remain in Haiti, after the return of the main body of the advance team on 12 September 1993, with the task of making preparations for the eventual deployment of the Mission in Haiti. His Special Envoy had met with a number of Haitian officials representing the Constitutional Government as well as the Armed Forces, including the Prime Minister and Commander-in-Chief of the Haitian Armed forces. Both sides had confirmed their desire to pursue the implementation of the Governors Island Agreement, including those provisions which foresaw the participation of the United Nations. He noted that notwithstanding the assurances given by both sides regarding their readiness to cooperate with the United Nations in the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Governors Island Agreement, they continued to be divided by deep mistrust and suspicion. Meanwhile, the political and social climate in Haiti continued to be characterized by widespread violations of human rights and other instances of violence. The Secretary-General fully concurred with the opinion of his Special Envoy, according to which there was an urgent need to demonstrate through concrete steps the commitment of the international community to the solution of the Haitian crisis. He hoped, therefore, that the Council would agree to the urgent establishment of UNMIH in line with his earlier recommendations.

The Secretary-General recalled that the main objective of United Nations cooperation in the police sector was to assist in the establishment and organization of a national police force separate from the Armed Forces. In the first phase, pending the creation of such a police force, the police members of UNMIH would monitor the performance of the existing security forces. In particular, they would verify that the existing security forces respected human rights as well as the letter and spirit of the political accord. That initial phase of the Mission was estimated to require six months. As soon as feasible, and if possible before the completion of the initial phase, the scope of UNMIH activities in the police sector would be expanded to include training of the members of the new police force.³⁴ Concerning assistance for the modernization of the Armed Forces, the Secretary-General stated that the military operation would be carried out in three phases: the first consisting of the movement of military units and the installation of a base camp; the second covering training of military personnel in various disciplines and the initiation of engineering and medical assistance projects; and the third phase involving expanded training, as well as engineering and medical projects enabling the Haitian military personnel to apply their newly acquired skills. It was estimated that all those activities could be conducted simultaneously and be completed within six months.³⁵ The training which would be provided to the Haitian Armed Forces was intended to enhance their capabilities in non-combat skills essentially in the areas relating to disaster preparedness and relief.³⁶ The strength of the military component of UNMIH, including military trainers, would need to be increased to approximately 700 personnel. Finally, his Special Representative in Haiti would be responsible for coordinating the work of UNMIH and of MICIVIH, both of which would function under his overall authority.

The Secretary-General noted that his recommendations for the deployment of UNMIH had been developed with a view to ensuring that the operation was cost effective. Some elements of the activities envisaged for UNMIH would have to be funded separately through the establishment of trust funds or other arrangements.³⁷ He reiterated his recommendation that the Council approve the establishment of UNMIH for an initial period of six months.

At its 3282nd meeting, on 23 September 1993, the Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by the United States³⁸ and read out revisions to be made to the draft in its provisional form. He also drew their attention to several other documents.³⁹

The draft resolution, as orally revised in its provisional form, was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 867 (1993), which reads:

Recalling its resolutions 841 (1993) of 16 June 1993, 861 (1993) of 27 August 1993 and 862 (1993) of 31 August 1993,

Recalling also the relevant resolutions adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations and the Organization of American States,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 21 and 22 September 1993 and the reports of the Secretary-General of 25 August and 26 August 1993, submitted pursuant to his reports to the Council of 12 July and 13 August 1993,

Taking note also of the letter dated 24 July 1993 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council conveying a proposal from the Government of Haiti requesting the United Nations to provide assistance in creating a new police force and in modernizing the Haitian armed forces,

Stressing the importance of the Governors Island Agreement of 3 July 1993 between the President of the Republic of Haiti and the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of Haiti towards promoting the return of peace and stability in Haiti, including the provisions of point 5, under which the parties call for assistance for modernizing the armed forces of Haiti and establishing a new police force with the presence of United Nations personnel in those fields,

Strongly supportive of the efforts to implement that Agreement and to permit the resumption of the normal operations of government in Haiti, including police and military functions, under civilian control,

Recalling the situation in Haiti and the continuing responsibility of the Council under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Concerned about the escalation of politically motivated violence in Haiti at this time of critical political transition, and recalling in this respect the statement of the President of the Security Council of 17 September 1993, 26 July 1993 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council (S/26/80), transmitting a letter dated 24 July 1993 from the President of Haiti to the Secretary-General; letter dated 14 September 1993 from the Secretary-General to the President of the General Assembly (S/26471), transmitting a declaration on the situation in Haiti adopted by the Permanent Council of OAS on 8 September 1993; and letter dated 21 September 1993 from the representative of Belgium to the Secretary-General (S/26482), transmitting a statement on Haiti issued by the European Community on 20 September 1993.

Considering that there is an urgent need to ensure conditions for the full implementation of the Governors Island Agreement and the political accords contained in the New York Pact as contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General of 13 August 1993,

1. Approves the recommendation of the Secretary-General contained in his reports of 25 August and 21 and 22 September 1993 to authorize the establishment and immediate dispatch of the United Nations Mission in Haiti for a period of six months subject to the proviso that it will be extended beyond seventy-five days only upon a review by the Council to be based on a report from the Secretary-General on whether or not substantive progress has been made towards the implementation of the Governors Island Agreement and the political accords contained in the New York Pact;

2. Decides that in accordance with the report of the Secretary-General of 21 and 22 September 1993, the Mission shall be comprised of up to five hundred and sixty-seven United Nations police monitors and a military construction unit with a strength of approximately seven hundred, including sixty military trainers;

3. Determines that the United Nations police monitors shall provide guidance and training to all levels of the Haitian police and monitor the way in which the operations are implemented in accordance with paragraph 9 of the report of the Secretary-General of 21 and 22 September 1993;

4. Also determines that the military component of the Mission in charge of modernization of the armed forces shall have the following roles:

(a) The military training teams shall provide non-combat training, as outlined in paragraph 17 of the report of the Secretary-General of 21 and 22 September 1993, to meet requirements determined through coordination between the chief of the Mission and the Government of Haiti;

(b) The military construction unit will work with the Haitian military to carry out projects, as specified in paragraph 15 of the report of the Secretary-General of 25 August 1993 and as described in paragraph 16 of his report of 21 and 22 September 1993;

5. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to place the peacekeeping Mission under the oversight of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, who also oversees the activities of the International Civilian Mission in Haiti, so that the peacekeeping Mission may benefit from the experience and information already obtained by the Civilian Mission;

6. Calls upon the Government of Haiti to take all appropriate steps to ensure the safety of United Nations personnel, as well as to ensure the freedom of movement and communication of the United Nations Mission in Haiti and its members as well as the other rights necessary for the performance of its task, and in this regard, urges the conclusion at the earliest possible stage of a status-of-mission agreement;

7. Notes that such safety and freedoms are a prerequisite for the successful implementation of the Mission, and requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council in the event that such conditions do not exist;

8. Calls upon all factions in Haiti explicitly and publicly to renounce, and to direct their supporters to renounce, violence as a means of political expression;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to dispatch the Mission on an urgent basis;

10. Encourages the Secretary-General to establish a trust fund or make other arrangements to assist in the financing of the Mission, along the lines and conditions outlined in paragraph 26 of the report of the Secretary-General of 21 and 22 September 1993, and to seek for this purpose pledges and contributions from Member States and others, and encourages Member States to make voluntary contributions to this fund;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to seek contributions of personnel from Member States for the civilian police and military components of the Mission, as specified in paragraph 18 of his report of 25 August 1993;

12. Expresses the hope that States will assist the legally constituted Government of Haiti in carrying out actions consistent with the restoration of democracy as called for by the Governors Island Agreement, the New York Pact and other relevant resolutions and agreements;

13. Expresses its appreciation for the constructive role of the Organization of American States in cooperation with the United Nations in promoting the solution of the political crisis and the restoration of democracy in Haiti, and in this context stresses the importance of ensuring close coordination between the United Nations and the Organization of American States in their work in Haiti;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit progress reports to the Security Council on the implementation of the present resolution by 10 December 1993 and 25 January 1994, thus keeping the Council fully informed on actions taken to implement the Mission;

15. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United States noted the role played by both the United Nations and OAS in Haiti. He said that the country was entering a period of fundamental change, during which its most important institutions had to be refashioned as the building blocks of a democratic society. Those institutions could not, however, be imposed from the outside. But with the consent of Haitian leaders, outsiders could help Haitian citizens. Furthermore, the establishment and maintenance of civil order by democratic means was essential to the future of Haiti, and helping that to occur was a central purpose of the United Nations mission. The international community expected the Governors Island signatories to meet their obligations in full, especially with respect to safeguarding the human rights of Haitian citizens and ensuring the safety of United Nations mission personnel in Haiti.⁴⁰

The representative of France stated that it was a matter of urgency for his delegation to vote for resolution 867 (1993). Noting that the positive developments, which were taking place in Haiti since July, reflected a spirit of compromise on the part of the leaders of the various factions, he said that it would be unfortunate if the atmosphere in Haiti were to deteriorate in an enduring way that would compromise the initial achievements in the process of national reconciliation. His country strongly condemned the recent acts of violence and human rights violations in Haiti, and called on those responsible to show restraint and to respect the rules of democracy. He noted that the decision to dispatch a military construction unit, while not specifically provided for in the Governors Island Agreement, would help involve the armed forces in the civilian work of rebuilding the country. He pointed out that the projects to be carried out in that framework would have to be financed by a special fund, which should be funded largely by the participants in the military construction unit.⁴¹

The President, speaking in his capacity as representative of Venezuela, stated that the establishment and immediate deployment of a United Nations mission in Haiti was an urgent operation because of the grave situation of violence and political intimidation that had re-emerged in Haiti. That situation impeded the effective functioning of the legitimate Government and the creation of a climate of tranquillity and stability, and hindered United Nations efforts to re-establish democracy in Haiti. The international community had committed itself to guaranteeing the implementation of the Governors Island Agreement and the New York Pact, and would not tolerate acts of defiance whose continuance would force it to reimpose the sanctions provided for in resolution 841 (1993). He reiterated his delegation's support for the presidential statement of 17 September

1993, which declared that anyone attempting to harm United Nations personnel in Haiti would be held personally responsible. In conclusion, he noted that the adoption by the Council of resolution 867 (1993) was but one of the steps necessary to restore democracy in Haiti.⁴²

Decision of 11 October 1993 (3289th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3289th meeting, on 11 October 1993, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. After the adoption of the agenda, the President (Brazil) stated that, following consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁴³

The Security Council is deeply concerned with the situation in Haiti and deeply deplores the events of 11 October 1993, when organized armed civilian groups ("attachés") threatened journalists and diplomats waiting to meet a contingent of the United Nations Mission in Haiti dispatched pursuant to resolution 867 (1993) of 23 September 1993. Moreover, the disturbance created by these armed groups and a lack of dock personnel prevented the landing at Port-au-Prince of the ship carrying the contingent. The Council considers it imperative that the armed forces of Haiti carry out their responsibilities to ensure that obstructions such as these to the safe and successful dispatch of the Mission end immediately.

The Council reiterates, in accordance with the statement of the President of 17 September 1993, that serious and consistent non-compliance with the Governors Island Agreement will prompt the Council to reinstate immediately those measures provided for in its resolution 841 (1993) of 16 June 1993 appropriate to the situation, with particular emphasis on those measures aimed at those deemed responsible for this non-compliance. In that context, the Council requests the Secretary-General to report urgently to the Council whether the incidents of 11 October constitute such non-compliance by the armed forces of Haiti with the Agreement.

The Council looks forward to the report of the Secretary-General and will closely monitor the situation in Haiti in the coming days.

Decision of 13 October 1993 (3291st meeting):
resolution 873 (1993)

On 13 October 1993, pursuant to the presidential statement of 11 October 1993, in which the Security Council had requested the Secretary-General to report to it whether the incidents of 11 October constituted serious and consistent non-compliance by the Armed Forces with the Governors Island Agreement, the Secretary-General submitted a report on the question concerning Haiti.⁴⁴ The Secretary-General noted that the incidents of 11 October 1993, which had prevented the deployment of a contingent of the military component of UNMIH arriving on board the vessel Harlan County, had been the culmination of a situation characterized by the repeatedly observed refusal on the part of the command of the Haitian authorities to facilitate the operation of UNMIH, to follow the instructions of the constitutional Government, and to put an end to the violence perpetrated by armed civilians with the complicity of the police. He also cited the attack on 5 October on the Prime Minister's office by armed civilians with the participation of members of the police force and the general strike declared on 7 October against UNMIH on the proposal of a group known as the Front pour l'avancement et le progres d'Haiti. Accordingly, he was compelled to inform the Council that the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of Haiti, as one of the parties to the Agreement, and the police chief and commander of the Port-au-Prince metropolitan area, as one of the "authorities in Haiti", had failed to fulfil the commitments entered into under the Governors Island Agreement. In the light of all the foregoing facts, which reflected serious and consistent non-compliance with the Governors Island Agreement, and having regard to the views of the Secretary-General of OAS, he considered it necessary, in accordance with resolution 861 (1993), to terminate the suspension of the measures set out in paragraphs 5 to 9 of resolution 841 (1993).

At its 3291st meeting, on 13 October 1993, the Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Barbados, Belize, Dominica, Grenada, Haiti and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.⁴⁵

Before the vote, the representative of the United States, referring to the incidents of 11 October 1993,

stated that the military leaders of Haiti had violated a solemn agreement which sought to resolve peacefully the governmental crisis in their country. United States troops on a United Nations mission had been prevented from entering Haiti by armed demonstrators acting with police and military support. Those troops, which had been invited by Haiti's Prime Minister, had not been sent to confront the military or police, but to provide technical and training assistance, as called for by the Governors Island Agreement. The United States had said from the outset that its participation depended upon the willingness of the Haitian military to provide a cooperative and secure environment. It had never suggested or threatened an intervention in Haiti over the opposition of the military, nor had that course of action ever been endorsed or proposed by President Aristide. Turning to the draft resolution, the speaker said that the decision to reimpose economic sanctions had not been taken lightly. Her Government would maintain the pressure for democratic change in Haiti in every manner possible, short of an armed intervention that no one wanted. It would continue to explore every avenue for a peaceful solution.⁴⁶

The representative of Venezuela took note of the fact that the military authorities of Haiti had not carried out in good faith the commitments assumed in the Governors Island Agreement. That lack of compliance with the obligations imposed in the Agreement obviously reflected a situation that was a threat to peace and security in the region and required the Council to take action under Chapter VII of the Charter. Accordingly, his delegation supported the reimposition of sanctions on Haiti. It was essential to send an unambiguous message to those who were challenging the authority of the Council and the international community, which had committed itself to guaranteeing the implementation of the Governors Island Agreement. The purpose of assisting in the return of democracy to Haiti was firm and there would be no hesitation to take all measures to ensure that that goal be attained.⁴⁷

⁴⁶ S/PV.3291, pp. 3-5.

⁴⁷ Ibid., pp. 5-7.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 841 (1993) of 16 June 1993, 861 (1993) of 27 August 1993, 862 (1993) of 31 August 1993 and 867 (1993) of 23 September 1993,

Deeply disturbed by the continued obstruction of the arrival of the United Nations Mission in Haiti, dispatched pursuant to resolution 867 (1993), and the failure of the armed forces of Haiti to carry out their responsibilities to allow the Mission to begin its work,

Having received the report of the Secretary-General of 13 October 1993 informing the Council that the military authorities of Haiti, including the police, have not complied in good faith with the Governors Island Agreement,

Determining that their failure to fulfil obligations under the Agreement constitutes a threat to peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides, in accordance with paragraph 2 of resolution 861 (1993), to terminate the suspension of the measures set out in paragraphs 5 to 9 of resolution 841 (1993) as of 2359 hours eastern standard time on 18 October 1993, unless the Secretary-General, having regard for the views of the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, reports to the Council that the parties to the Governors Island Agreement and any other authorities in Haiti are implementing in full the agreement to reinstate the legitimate Government of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide and have established the necessary measures to enable the United Nations Mission in Haiti to carry out its mandate;

2. Decides also that funds that are required to be frozen pursuant to paragraph 8 of resolution 841 (1993) may be released at the request of President Aristide or Prime Minister Malval of Haiti;

3. Decides further that the Committee of the Security Council established pursuant to paragraph 10 of resolution 841 (1993) shall have the authority, in addition to that set forth in the aforementioned paragraph, to grant exceptions to the prohibitions (other than those referred to in paragraph 2 above) referred to in paragraph 1 above on a case-by-case basis under the no-objection procedure in response to requests by President Aristide or Prime Minister Malval;

4. Confirms its readiness to consider urgently the imposition of additional measures if the Secretary-General informs the Security Council that the parties to the Governors Island Agreement or any other authorities in Haiti continue to impede the activities of the Mission or interfere with the freedom of movement and communication of the Mission and its members as well as the other rights necessary for the performance of its mandate, or have not complied in full with relevant Council resolutions and the provisions of the Agreement;

5. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of France saw no alternative to re-imposing the sanctions that had been lifted on 27 August 1993. He noted that a few days had been granted before the sanctions took effect, during which time he hoped that those in charge of the army and police in Haiti would decide to comply fully with the Governors Island Agreement, which should lead to the reinstating of the legal authorities and the return of President Aristide on 30 October 1993. If sanctions were to be lifted, those responsible for the impasse would have to give formal guarantees of their full cooperation with UNMIH, demonstrate that they were committed to strict compliance with the orders received from the constitutional Government, and immediately implement points 7, 8 and 9 of the Governors Island Agreement, which provided, in particular, that before the return of President Aristide, the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces should be replaced. He made it clear that if those provisions were not implemented within the necessary time frame, France would not hesitate to adopt additional measures against those responsible for the failure of the process.⁴⁸

The President, speaking in his capacity as representative of Brazil, stated that it was clearly the duty of the military and security authorities in Haiti to ensure conditions for UNMIH personnel to arrive safely in Haiti and afterwards to perform their tasks without any obstacles. OAS had condemned the acts of intimidation of 11 October 1993 as well as the lack of cooperation on the part of the military and police authorities to enable United Nations contingents to disembark in Haiti. He recalled that by resolution 861 (1993), the Council had indicated that the sanctions which had then been suspended would be reimposed should the Haitian security authorities fail to implement in good faith the provisions of the Governors Island Agreement. The Council had to thus respond appropriately, while making clear that it would continue to firmly support the restoration of legitimacy, democracy and the rule of law in Haiti. To do otherwise would not be consistent with the goals and principles of the Organization.⁴⁹

At its 3293rd meeting, on 16 October 1993, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Canada and Haiti, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by Canada, France, the United States and Venezuela⁵⁰ and to a letter dated 15 October 1993 addressed to the Secretary-General from the President of Haiti⁵¹ in which he noted the violations of the Governors Island Agreement, as certified in the Secretary-General's report of 13 October 1993, and requested the Council, under the authority vested in it by Chapter VII of the Charter, to call on Member States to take the necessary measures to strengthen the provisions of resolution 873 (1993).

The representative of Haiti contended that, since the signing of the Governors Island Agreement, groups of armed civilians, commonly known as "attachés" who were auxiliary personnel of the Armed Forces and the police were waging a terror campaign to intimidate anyone who wanted to help restore democracy in Haiti. The assassination of the Minister of Justice was very revealing of that sector's systematic opposition to the transition process and to the return of President Aristide. Calling on the international community to condemn that act and those responsible for it, he further stated that the international community had to make it clear that it was determined to carry out to the end the process of restoring democracy in Haiti. It was important that the Council monitor strictly the application of measures reimposed under resolution 873 (1993). The more those measures were respected, the faster and surer would be the results. The international community had to bring pressure to bear so that all the provisions of the Governors Island Agreement and the New York Pact would be complied with and Haiti would finally regain peace.⁵²

Speaking in explanation of vote, the representative of the United States noted that for the second time in four days, the Council was meeting to restate its commitment to the Governors Island

Agreement and to the peaceful return of elected President Aristide. The members of the Council had recognized the need to act promptly and firmly. The draft resolution under consideration called upon all States to cooperate in ensuring that no ships arrived in Haiti in violation of the economic sanctions previously adopted. While that decision might cause additional suffering to the Haitian people, the purpose of those sanctions was ultimately to relieve hardship and to liberate Haiti from the stranglehold being inflicted by a small group of men. Noting that the economic sanctions would not enter into effect until 18 October, she called upon Haiti's military leaders to take immediate steps to reaffirm their commitment to the Agreement. Noting also that there should be no doubt about the determination of the United States and the community of nations, she added that her Government would use its diplomatic and military power to see that economic sanctions worked and to ensure that those sanctions served to shield the flickering flame of Haitian democracy.⁵³

The representative of Venezuela stated that the international community had an irrevocable commitment to democracy in Haiti. That commitment would appear to be on the verge of coming to naught as a result of the behaviour of the military and police authorities of Haiti who continued to promote and encourage acts of harassment and aggression against the legitimate Government of Haiti and against the international community, as represented by OAS and the United Nations missions in Haiti. The recent events in Haiti and the general insecurity prevailing in that country constituted open contempt for the will of the international community, as expressed in Council resolutions, in its efforts to restore democratic order and its determination to ensure the conditions for the consolidation of democratic legality in that country. In particular, the grave new developments suggested the impossibility of translating into reality the commitment to ensure the return of President Aristide on 30 October 1993 and jeopardized the entire international effort to restore democracy in Haiti. In the face of those developments, there was no alternative but to exercise the options afforded by the Charter. In so doing, the Council adopted resolution 873 (1993), thus showing the international community's resolute determination. The draft resolution under consideration was aimed at complementing that resolution and at ensuring its effective implementation.⁵⁴

The representative of Spain stated that the draft resolution before the Council was based on Chapters VII and VIII of the Charter; its sole purpose being to ensure the effective enforcement of the embargo measures adopted under resolutions 841 (1993) and 873 (1993). He emphasized that the measures were not aimed at the people or the lawful Government of Haiti, whose President had requested the Council to ask Member States to take the necessary action to implement those measures, but rather at a minority that were oppressing the people of Haiti and standing in the way of compliance with the Agreements to which they had lent their assent. He further stressed the continuing validity of the presidential statement of 17 September 1993, in which the Council put the de facto authorities on notice that they would be held responsible for the security and safety of United Nations personnel in Haiti.⁵⁵

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 875 (1993), which reads:

Reaffirming its resolutions 841 (1993) of 16 June 1993, 861 (1993) of 27 August 1993, 862 (1993) of 31 August 1993, 867 (1993) of 23 September 1993 and 873 (1993) of 13 October 1993,

Taking note of resolutions MRE/RES.1/91, MRE/RES.2/91, MRE/RES.3/92 and MRE/RES.4/92 adopted by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the member countries of the Organization of American States, and resolution CP/RES.594 (923/92) and declarations CP/DEC.8 (927/93), CP/DEC.9 (931/93), CP/DEC.10 (934/93) and CP/DEC.15 (967/93), adopted by the Permanent Council of the Organization of American States,

Deeply disturbed by the continued obstruction to the dispatch of the United Nations Mission in Haiti, pursuant to resolution 867 (1993), and the failure of the armed forces of Haiti to carry out their responsibilities to allow the mission to begin its work,

Condemning the assassination of officials of the legitimate Government of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide,

Taking note of the letter dated 15 October 1993 from President Aristide to the Secretary-General, in which he requested the Council to call on Member States to take the necessary measures to strengthen the provisions of resolution 873 (1993),

Mindful of the report of the Secretary-General of 13 October 1993 informing the Council that the military authorities in Haiti, including the police, have not complied in full with the Governors Island Agreement,

Reaffirming its determination that, in these unique and exceptional circumstances, the failure of the military authorities in Haiti to fulfil their obligations under the Agreement constitutes a threat to peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapters VII and VIII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Calls upon Member States, acting nationally or through regional agencies or arrangements, cooperating with the legitimate Government of Haiti, to use such measures commensurate with the specific circumstances as may be necessary under the authority of the Council to ensure strict implementation of the provisions of resolutions 841 (1993) and 873 (1993) relating to the supply of petroleum or petroleum products or arms and related materiel of all types, and in particular to halt inbound maritime shipping as necessary in order to inspect and verify their cargoes and destinations;

2. Confirms that it is prepared to consider further necessary measures to ensure full compliance with the provisions of relevant Council resolutions;

3. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

After the vote, the representative of France stated that the unanimous adoption of resolution 875 (1993), which strengthened the measures contained in resolution 873 (1993), attested to the Council's unswerving determination to secure full implementation of the Governors Island Agreement. Those measures were part of a clear-cut political strategy that would also form the basis of the international community's reaction to subsequent developments in the situation in Haiti. He recalled that it was incumbent upon the military authorities in Haiti to restore public order, to ensure the safety of members of the legal Government, and to make it possible for UNMIH to be deployed without delay. It was not the first time that the Security Council had implemented measures calling for the use of maritime monitoring of the implementation of sanctions. In his delegation's view, those rules of engagement, which had proved their effectiveness, had to be based on established rules. He added that the withdrawal of the Commander-in-Chief of the Police Force and of the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of Haiti had to occur immediately, in keeping with items 7 and 8 of the Governors Island Agreement. His Government would continue to take steps to help bring about the return of President Aristide on 30 October and the full restoration of the rule of law in Haiti.⁵⁶

According to the representative of China, the Council, in handling the Haitian question, should fully solicit and respect the views of OAS and the Latin American countries and bring their full role into play. He stressed that the measures authorized in resolution 875 (1993) were special actions taken under the unique and exceptional circumstances in Haiti and should not establish a precedent. China's support for resolution 875 (1993) did not imply any change in its position, which held that all international disputes should be settled by peaceful means and opposed the use or threat of force. In carrying out measures authorized by the resolution, countries should only take actions commensurate with the specific situations prevailing at the time, strengthen coordination with the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative and keep the Council informed on a regular basis.⁵⁷

The representative of the Russian Federation noted that the military authorities in Haiti had followed a course of direct resistance to United Nations efforts to restore democracy in that country. Resolution 875 (1993) was an essential step to the expression of the Council's determination to complete the political settlement in Haiti, to ensure implementation of its previous decisions and to realize the international community's efforts to settle the protracted crisis in Haiti. That step was aimed above all at preventing an exacerbation of the situation in Haiti, which threatened to deteriorate even further. Calling upon the military authorities to return to a strict implementation of the terms of the Governors Island Agreement, he demanded the immediate removal of the obstacles to the deployment of the United Nations Mission and the establishment of all the conditions necessary for the Mission to begin its work.⁵⁸

The President, speaking in his capacity as representative of Brazil, stated that Council members had faced the need to address a unique and exceptional situation with equally exceptional and unique measures, particularly the authorization for Member States to use measures that might include the halting of inward maritime traffic, with the exclusive purpose of enforcing the sanctions related to oil and arms established in resolutions 841 (1993) and 873 (1993). That unique and exceptional character was not only a result of the extraordinarily deplorable political and humanitarian situation that prevailed in Haiti. It was embodied, above all, in the fact that the action decided upon by the Council was taken in response to a formal and explicit request by the legitimate Government of Haiti for the strengthening of the provisions of resolution 873 (1993). That request was essential for the Council to act as it did. In addition, the sui generis nature of resolution 875 (1993) had also been reflected in the fact that the measures, which it was intended to enforce, emanated originally from OAS, which had recommended to the United Nations that it give mandatory effect to the sanctions adopted at the regional level. Brazil supported resolution 875 (1993) on the understanding that it did not and would not constitute a precedent for the work of the United Nations. He added that the adoption of resolution 875 (1993) could be understood only as a means to ensure the strict implementation of the sanctions measures previously imposed by the Council in relation to the supply to Haiti of petroleum, petroleum products, arms and related materiel. It was thus clear that the authorization given in operative paragraph 1 of the resolution was restricted in scope, space and time by the clearly limited purpose, which constituted its raison d'être and was intended to have effect only until those sanctions measures were suspended or terminated.⁵⁹

Decision of 25 October 1993 (3298th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3298th meeting, on 25 October 1993, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. After the adoption of the agenda, the President stated that, following consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁶⁰

The Security Council reaffirms the necessity of full compliance with the Governors Island Agreement. It condemns the acts of the military authorities in Haiti, who continue to hamper the full implementation of the Agreement, in particular by permitting the development of acts of violence in violation of their obligations under the Agreement. It gives full support to the efforts of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, Mr. Dante Caputo, to put an end to the crisis and to ensure the return, without delay, of democracy and the rule of law in Haiti.

The Council, recalling points 7 and 8 of the Agreement concerning the departure of the Commander-in-Chief of the Haitian Armed Forces and the appointment of a new Commander of the police force, insists that these provisions be implemented without further delay.

The Council reiterates its support for the legitimate Government of Haiti and recalls that it holds the military authorities responsible for the security of that Government and of the members of Parliament. It also continues to hold the military authorities responsible for the safety and security of all United Nations personnel in Haiti.

The Council warns that, should the Agreement not be fully implemented, it will consider imposing measures additional to those imposed by resolutions 841 (1993) of 16 June 1993, 873 (1993) of 13 October 1993 and 875 (1993) of 16 October 1993.

The Council underlines the importance of the full implementation of the measures contained in the above-mentioned resolutions by all States, including nearby countries.

The Council will continue to monitor closely the situation in Haiti in the coming days.

Decision of 30 October 1993 (3301st meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3301st meeting, on 30 October 1993, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. After the adoption of the agenda, the President stated that, following consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁶¹

The Security Council continues to insist on full and unconditional compliance with the Governors Island Agreement and the early return of President Aristide and full democracy to Haiti, in accordance with the relevant resolutions and statements by the President of the Council. It reaffirms that the Agreement remains fully in force as the only valid framework for the solution of the crisis in Haiti, which continues to threaten peace and security in the region.

The Council is deeply concerned by the suffering of the Haitian people, which is a direct result of the refusal by the military authorities to comply with the Governors Island process.

The Council stresses that the signatories to the Agreement remain obligated to comply in full with its provisions. The Council condemns the fact that General Cedras and the military authorities have not so far fulfilled their obligations under that Agreement. It moreover deplores the fact that the Haitian military leaders have fostered and perpetuated in Haiti a political and security environment which prevents the return of President Aristide to Haiti as provided for in point 9 of the Agreement.

The Council expresses its support for the invitation by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States to all parties to meet next week solely to resolve the remaining obstacles to full implementation of the Agreement. Further, it reaffirms its determination to maintain and effectively enforce sanctions on Haiti until the commitments made on Governors Island are honoured, and to consider strengthening them, in accordance with its resolutions 873 (1993) of 13 October 1993 and 875 (1993) of 16 October 1993 and the statement of the President of the Council of 25 October 1993, if the military authorities continue to interrupt the democratic transition. In this regard, it requests the Secretary-General to report urgently to the Council.

Decision of 15 November 1993 (3314th meeting): statement by the President

On 11 November 1993, pursuant to the presidential statement of 30 October 1993, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the question concerning Haiti,⁶² in which he described the developments following the departure of the Harlan County and the withdrawal of UNMIH and MICIVIH. On 23 October 1993, a "Crisis Committee" led by the President of the Chamber of Deputies and comprising parliamentarians opposed to President Aristide, had proposed an 11-point compromise calling, inter alia, for a simultaneous vote on the acts concerning the amnesty and the police, the expansion of the Government and the elaboration by the Government of a protocol governing the presence of international missions. On 26 October, the Front National pour le Changement et la Démocratie (FNCD) parliamentary bloc, which supported President Aristide, had offered its own eight-point compromise. On 28 October 1993, President Aristide had addressed the General Assembly, calling, inter alia, for a complete and total blockade of Haiti and for the departure of the Haitian military leaders, upon which he would convene the parliament to vote on the bills on the police and the amnesty. In a statement to the press made on behalf of the Secretary-General, on 29 October 1993, the Special Representative had expressed regret that the timetable provided for in the Governors Island Agreement had not been respected, had announced that resort to article 149 of the Haitian Constitution would compel the Secretary-General to recommend to the Council the strengthening of the sanctions, and had proposed that a meeting be held to discuss the implementation of paragraphs 5 to 9 of the Governors Island Agreement. Such a meeting was later convened by the Special Representative but adjourned on 5 November 1993, due to the non-attendance of the army. Subsequently, in a statement to the press, the Special Representative had described as regrettable the absence of Haiti's armed forces. He had also pointed out that the Governors Island Agreement remained the basis for any settlement of the Haitian crisis and had reaffirmed the determination of the international community to persevere in seeking a negotiated settlement in the context of the Agreement.

At its 3314th meeting, on 15 November 1993, the Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Cape Verde) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a letter dated 12 November 1993 addressed to the President of the Council from the representative of Haiti,⁶³ transmitting the report of a meeting held from 9 to 11 November 1993 between President Aristide and a Government delegation, at which, inter alia, affirmed that the Government of Prime Minister Robert Malval remained in power with the absolute and complete confidence of the President of Haiti and that the Governors Island Agreement remained the sole framework for the resolution of the crisis and had to be implemented in its entirety; requested that the international community ensure the immediate return of MICIVIH and the deployment without delay of UNMIH; and insisted that the Haitian armed forces scrupulously honour their commitments undertaken within the framework of the Governors Island Agreement. The President then stated that, following consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁶⁴

The Security Council takes note of the report of the Secretary-General of 11 November 1993 on the question concerning Haiti and the letter dated 12 November 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council from the representative of Haiti.

The Council commends the efforts of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, Mr. Dante Caputo, takes note of his oral report made to the Council on 12 November 1993, and confirms its full support for his continued active diplomacy for resolving the crisis in Haiti.

The Council condemns the military authorities in Port-au-Prince for failing to comply fully with the Governors Island Agreement and in particular with points 7 to 9. It reaffirms that the Agreement constitutes the only valid framework for resolving the crisis in Haiti, which continues to threaten peace and security in the region.

The Council also reaffirms its support for the democratically elected President of Haiti, Mr. Jean-Bertrand Aristide, and for the legitimate Government of Mr. Robert Malval. It recalls that it holds the military authorities responsible for the security of the members of that Government and for the security of the personnel of the United Nations and the Organization of American States in Haiti.

The Council is deeply concerned by the plight of the Haitian people. It reaffirms that the military authorities in Haiti are fully responsible for this suffering which directly results from their non-compliance with their public commitments to the Agreement. It expresses its determination to minimize the impact of the present situation on the most vulnerable groups and calls upon Member States to continue and to intensify their humanitarian assistance to the people of Haiti. It welcomes in this regard the decision of the Secretary-General to dispatch a team of additional humanitarian personnel to Haiti.

The Council encourages the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, to work for the earliest possible return of the International Civilian Mission in Haiti. It requests the Secretary-General to continue planning for additional measures, including for an appropriate United Nations mission in Haiti to be deployed as conditions permit, consistent with the Agreement.

The Council stresses that the sanctions contained in resolutions 841 (1993) of 16 June 1993, 873 (1993) of 13 October 1993 and 875 (1993) of 16 October 1993 will remain in force until the objectives of the Agreement are fulfilled, including the departure of the Commander-in-Chief of the Haitian Armed Forces, the creation of a new police force permitting the restoration of constitutional order to Haiti and the return of the democratically elected President.

The Council reaffirms its determination, expressed in the above-mentioned resolutions, to ensure the full and effective enforcement of current sanctions. It welcomes measures taken to this effect by States on a national basis in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the relevant Council resolutions. In this regard, the Council is prepared to consider additional mechanisms and practical measures to help verify the full compliance with its decisions.

The Council reaffirms its determination to consider strengthening the measures regarding Haiti in accordance with its resolutions 873 (1993) and 875 (1993) and the statements of its President of 25 October and of 30 October 1993 if the military authorities continue to obstruct full compliance with the Agreement, thus preventing the restoration of lawful order and democracy in Haiti.

Decision of 10 December 1993: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

On 26 November 1993, pursuant to resolution 867 (1993), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on UNMIH, in which he addressed the issue whether or not substantive progress had been made towards the implementation of the Governors Island Agreement and the New York Pact.⁶⁵ The Secretary-General recalled that the mandate of UNMIH had been seriously undermined by various developments in Haiti which had constituted non-compliance by the Armed Forces of Haiti with the Governors Island Agreement and had, inter alia, prevented the disembarkation on 11 October 1993 of a contingent of the military component of the Mission. He also recalled that as a result of subsequent developments, including the withdrawal from Haiti of the advance elements of UNMIH, it had been decided to evacuate the bulk of MICIVIH from Haiti on 15 October 1993. The Secretary-General noted that the success of UNMIH depended on the full and active cooperation of both parties to the Governors Island Agreement. So far, the necessary cooperation had not been forthcoming from the Haitian military authorities as they had failed to live up to the commitments solemnly entered into under the Governors Island Agreement. In those circumstances, he was compelled to conclude that the mandate entrusted to UNMIH by resolution 867 (1993) could not be implemented until there was a clear and substantial change of attitude on the part of the Haitian military leaders. With the assistance of his Special Representative, he intended to continue the efforts, as requested by the Council, to bring about such a change of attitude with a view to ensuring the implementation of the Governors Island Agreement and the participation of the United Nations in the peace process, as envisaged in that Agreement.

By a letter dated 10 December 1993,⁶⁶ the President of the Council (China) informed the Secretary-General of the following:

The members of the Council welcome your report of 26 November 1993. Pursuant to resolution 867 (1993) of

⁶⁶ S/26864.

23 November 1993, they are continuing their review, on the basis of your report, and have found no reason why the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Haiti should not be continued for the full six-month period authorized by resolution 867 (1993).

Decision of 10 January 1994 (3328th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3328th meeting, on 10 January 1994, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Czech Republic) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a letter dated 15 December 1993 addressed to the Secretary-General from the representatives of Canada, France, the United States and Venezuela,⁶⁷ transmitting the text of the statement of conclusions adopted at the meeting of the "Friends of the Secretary-General for Haiti", held in Paris on 13 and 14 December 1993. The President then stated that, following consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁶⁸

The Security Council reiterates its deep concern for the plight of the Haitian people in the ongoing crisis and reaffirms its determination to minimize the impact of this crisis on the most vulnerable groups in Haiti.

In this context, the Council welcomes the imminent arrival in Haiti of a shipment of fuel approved by the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 841 (1993) concerning Haiti.

The Council also welcomes the role being played by the Pan-American Health Organization in the management, delivery and distribution of fuel for humanitarian purposes.

The Council attaches great importance to humanitarian assistance in Haiti, including the unimpeded delivery and distribution of fuel used for humanitarian purposes. It will hold responsible any authorities and individuals in Haiti who might in any way interfere with the delivery and distribution of humanitarian assistance under the overall responsibility of the Pan-American Health Organization or who fail in their responsibility to ensure that this delivery and distribution benefits the intended recipients, those in need of humanitarian assistance. The Council will also hold responsible any authorities or individuals in Haiti who endanger the personal security and safety of all personnel involved in such assistance.

The Council reaffirms once again its determination to ensure the return to constitutional legality in Haiti, on the basis of the implementation of its relevant resolutions. In this context, it shares the understanding of the Friends of the Secretary-General on the question of Haiti that the process as defined by the Governors Island Agreement, which provides, inter alia, for the return of President Aristide, constitutes the only viable framework for Haiti to emerge from the crisis and to lead to the establishment of a State under the rule of law.

Decision of 23 March 1994 (3352nd meeting):
resolution 905 (1994)

On 18 March 1994, further to his report of 19 January 1994,⁶⁹ the Secretary-General submitted a report on UNMIH,⁷⁰ in which he informed the Council that notwithstanding the continued efforts made on his behalf by his Special Representative and the Friends of the Secretary-General on the question of Haiti, there had been no change in the prevailing situation in Haiti that would have allowed the reactivation of UNMIH. Nevertheless, efforts to reach a solution to the political impasse continued unabated. Recent political developments in Haiti had shed encouraging light. Members of the Parliament had reached an agreement on 19 February 1994 on a plan to break the impasse and resume progress in implementing the Agreement.⁷¹ President Aristide, on the other hand, had expressed his concerns that such a plan would be contradictory to the Agreement and therefore could not be accepted by him. In those circumstances, the Secretary-General recommended that the Council consider authorizing the extension of the mandate of UNMIH in its existing form for a period of three months, which would allow for the possibility of reactivating the Mission with a minimum of delay, should the political impasse be breached and implementation of the Governors Island Agreement be resumed.

At its 3352nd meeting, on 23 March 1994, the Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (France) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.⁷² The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 905 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 841 (1993) of 16 June 1993, 861 (1993) of 27 August 1993, 862 (1993) of 31 August 1993, 867 (1993) of 23 September 1993, 873 (1993) of 13 October 1993 and 875 (1993) of 16 October 1993,

Deeply disturbed by the continued obstruction to the dispatch of the United Nations Mission in Haiti, pursuant to resolution 867 (1993), and the failure of the armed forces of Haiti to carry out their responsibilities to allow the Mission to begin its work,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General of 26 November 1993, 19 January 1994 and 18 March 1994,

Stressing the continuing importance of the Governors Island Agreement of 3 July 1993 between the President of the Republic of Haiti and the Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces of Haiti towards promoting the return of peace and stability in Haiti, including the provisions of paragraph 5, under which the parties call for assistance for modernizing the armed forces and establishing a new police force with the presence of United Nations personnel in these fields,

1. Takes note of the above-mentioned reports of the Secretary-General;
2. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Haiti until 30 June 1994;
3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council at such time as conditions may exist in Haiti for the deployment of the Mission for purposes consistent with paragraph 5 of the Governors Island Agreement and to make specific recommendations, taking into account circumstances at the time of the report, on the composition of the Mission and the scope of its activities within the overall personnel levels established in resolution 867 (1993);
4. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 6 May 1994 (3376th meeting):
resolution 917 (1994)

At its 3376th meeting, on 6 May 1994, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Canada, Haiti and Venezuela, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Nigeria) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by Argentina, ⁷² S/1994/325.

⁶⁹ S/1994/54. In that report, the Secretary-General informed the Council that, notwithstanding the efforts made by his Special Representative and the Friends of the Secretary-General for Haiti, there had been no substantial change of attitude on the part of the Haitian military leaders towards the implementation of the Governors Island Agreement that would have allowed the reactivation of UNMIH.

⁷¹ The plan was transmitted to the Council on 20 February 1994 (S/1994/203).

Canada, France, the United States and Venezuela,⁷³ and read out revisions that had been made to the draft in its provisional form.

The representative of Haiti stated that his Government welcomed the submission to the Council of a draft resolution containing measures along the lines of those requested by President Aristide, in particular in his address to the General Assembly on 28 October 1993 and in his letter of 9 March 1994 to the Secretary-General. The aim of the draft resolution was to force the leadership of the Haitian Armed Forces to abide by the commitments they made when they signed the Governors Island Agreement. He contended that the sudden arrival on the political scene in Haiti of a paramilitary organization known as the Front révolutionnaire pour l'avancement et le progrès en Haïti (FRAPH) coincided not only with a worsening of crime but also with unprecedented human rights violations. He expressed the hope that the draft resolution would have the desired result, even before it entered into force: the departure of the military and the immediate restoration of President Aristide to his legitimate functions. He concluded by launching an appeal to the international community to ensure that the sanctions provided for in the draft resolution were fully implemented, stressing that the success of that initiative depended on strict compliance with the draft resolution.⁷⁴

The representative of Canada stated that the existing sanctions had proved insufficient for achieving compliance by the Haitian military authorities with their obligations under the Governors Island Agreement. For that reason, Canada co-sponsored the draft resolution under consideration, which would impose a comprehensive commercial embargo and a number of measures aimed specifically at the military authorities and other supporters of the 1991 coup d'état. Noting that the effectiveness of the existing sanctions and the new measures in the draft resolution depended on full compliance by all States, she indicated that Canada was participating in the maritime interdiction force aimed at achieving full implementation of the sanctions. Also noting that sanctions violations across the land border between Haiti and the Dominican Republic reduced the impact of the measures adopted by the Council, the speaker supported the request by the Dominican authorities for United Nations assistance. In his view, international technical assistance, possibly including the deployment of international monitors, would help ensure that the Dominican Republic could effectively carry out its responsibilities. While some had argued that tougher sanctions would only aggravate the abysmal humanitarian situation in Haiti, the speaker was of the view that the plight of the Haitian population was due solely to the failure of the military authorities to fulfil their commitments. He also warned against any attempt to interfere with the delivery of international humanitarian assistance or to endanger the personal security and safety of those involved in such efforts.⁷⁵

The representative of Venezuela stated that the protection of human rights and the rejection of dictatorship could allow no settlement nor negotiations that might allow guilty parties to go unpunished. Although it was wise to bear realities in mind, and to look for ways out of a crisis, such efforts should not be prolonged to the point of becoming weakness. If the international community weakened its support or began to interpret the Governors Island Agreement and the New York Pact in such a way as to limit their scope, it would only prolong the crisis and the suffering of the Haitian people. He warned that any delay, any vacillation, any distortion of the fundamental objectives could have terrible consequences, such as human rights violations. He called upon all countries not to violate the sanctions regime and to punish any violations, so that the sanctions could be kept brief and would have greater impact on the guilty parties than on the Haitian people. Furthermore, the international community had to be ready to offer Haiti technical, administrative and material assistance in forging its political, economic and social democracy.⁷⁶

Speaking in explanation of vote, the representative of Argentina stated that the international community could not stand by in the face of horrendous violations of human rights, arguing that there had to be a reaction, which should come under the Charter. Because of its scope, the tragedy of Haiti went beyond the country's borders. The international community could not regard the serious, systematic violation of human rights within the territory of a given State as a purely internal matter. He noted that, for the first time, the measures provided in the draft resolution were personalized sanctions. Recent history showed that, with time and perseverance, economic sanctions could be effective. They isolated a country and, in that case, they pinned responsibility on those who had seized power. The draft resolution reflected the clear objective of the international community, with the united support of the Latin American and Caribbean region, of restoring democracy in Haiti. In that respect, he argued that democracy and human rights were closely related because democracy was the only system of government which, by definition, required respect for human rights and, furthermore, had internal mechanisms by which human rights abuses could be corrected. He added that, in order for the sanctions to make their fullest impact, there had to be appropriate monitoring on the high seas as well as on land.⁷⁷

The representative of Spain noted that the adoption of the draft resolution was set against the background of Haiti's deteriorating human rights situation. The embargo measures contained in it were not an end in themselves; rather they were an instrument to be used for the political objectives enshrined in the Governors Island Agreement and the New York Pact, which continued to be the obligatory frame of reference for a solution to Haiti's political and social crisis. Those measures were not directed against the Haitian people. On the contrary, the draft resolution was designed so that the burden of the sanctions would fall on those responsible for the crisis. The ultimate objective of the sanctions was to facilitate the restoration of democracy in Haiti and the return of President Aristide. He further recalled that the effectiveness of the sanctions would also depend on the scrupulous compliance by States with the Council's resolutions. As in other cases, it had to be recognized that the neighbouring countries would have to make a special effort and suffer considerable economic damage. It was, therefore, natural that the draft resolution should provide for the consideration of requests for assistance under Article 50 of the Charter.⁷⁸

The representative of the United States stressed that the draft resolution was the product of full cooperation among the Latin American and Caribbean States, the members of the Council, and the democratically elected Government of Haiti. Conscious that sanctions were a blunt instrument and the measures provided in the draft resolution had the potential of aggravating the suffering of the Haitian people, the United States and the international community were undertaking humanitarian-assistance measures on a massive scale. Sanctions were, however, one of the most potent weapons the international community had. The adoption of the draft resolution imposed upon member States a significant moral obligation — to persevere and enforce the sanctions so that they achieved their objective in the shortest possible time. At the same time, she recognized that the burden of enforcement did not fall equally on all States.⁷⁹

The draft resolution, as orally revised in its provisional form, was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 917 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 841 (1993) of 16 June 1993, 861 (1993) of 27 August 1993, 862 (1993) of 31 August 1993, 867 (1993) of 23 September 1993, 873 (1993) of 13 October 1993, 875 (1993) of 16 October 1993 and 905 (1994) of 23 March 1994,

Recalling its presidential statements of 11 October 1993, 25 October 1993, 30 October 1993, 15 November 1993 and 10 January 1994,

Noting resolutions MRE/RES.1/91, MRE/RES.2/91, MRE/RES.3/92, MRE/RES.4/92 and MRE/RES.5/93, adopted by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the countries members of the Organization of American States, and resolutions CP/RES.575 (885/92) and CP/RES.594 (923/92) and declarations CP/DEC.8 (927/93), CP/DEC.9 (931/93), CP/DEC.10 (934/93) and CP/DEC.15 (967/93), adopted by the Permanent Council of the Organization of American States,

Noting in particular resolution CP/RES.610 (968/93), adopted by the Permanent Council of the Organization of American States on 18 October 1993,

Bearing in mind the statement of conclusions adopted at the meeting of the four Friends of the Secretary-General on the question of Haiti, held in Paris on 13 and 14 December 1993,

Having examined the reports of the Secretary-General of 19 January and 18 March 1994 regarding the United Nations Mission in Haiti, ⁷⁹ Ibid., p. 7.

Reaffirming that the goal of the international community remains the restoration of democracy in Haiti and the prompt return of the legitimately elected President, Jean-Bertrand Aristide, under the framework of the Governors Island Agreement,

Stressing in this context the importance of a proper and secure environment for all legislative action agreed to in the Governors Island Agreement and the New York Pact, as well as preparations for free and fair legislative elections in Haiti, as called for in the Constitution, in the framework of the full restoration of democracy in Haiti,

Concerned at the continued failure of the military authorities in Haiti, including the police, to comply with their obligations under the Governors Island Agreement and at the violations of the related New York Pact committed by political organizations party thereto in relation to the disputed elections of 18 January 1993,

Strongly condemning the numerous instances of extrajudicial killings, arbitrary arrests, illegal detentions, abductions, rape and enforced disappearances, the continued denial of freedom of expression and the impunity with which armed civilians have been able to operate and continue operating,

Recalling that in its resolution 873 (1993), the Council confirmed its readiness to consider the imposition of additional measures if the military authorities in Haiti continued to impede the activities of the Mission or failed to comply in full with its relevant resolutions and the provisions of the Governors Island Agreement,

Reaffirming its determination that, in these unique and exceptional circumstances, the situation created by the failure of the military authorities in Haiti to fulfil their obligations under the Governors Island Agreement and to comply with relevant Security Council resolutions constitutes a threat to peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Calls upon the parties to the Governors Island Agreement and any other authorities in Haiti to cooperate fully with the Special Envoy of the Secretaries-General of the United Nations and the Organization of American States to bring about the full implementation of the Governors Island Agreement and thus end the political crisis in Haiti;

2. Decides that all States shall without delay deny permission to any aircraft to take off from, land in, or overfly their territory if it is destined to land in, or has taken off from, the territory of Haiti, with the exception of regularly scheduled commercial passenger flights, unless the particular flight has been approved, for humanitarian purposes or for other purposes consistent with the present resolution and other relevant resolutions, by the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 841 (1993) concerning Haiti;

(d) Other commodities and products authorized in accordance with paragraph 3 of its resolution 873 (1993);

8. Decides that the prohibitions in paragraphs 6 and 7 above shall not apply to trade in informational materials, including books and other publications, needed for the free flow of information, and further decides that journalists may bring in and take out their equipment subject to conditions and terms agreed by the Committee established pursuant to resolution 841 (1993);

9. Decides to prohibit any and all traffic from entering or leaving the territory or territorial sea of Haiti carrying commodities or products the export of which from Haiti or the sale or supply of which to Haiti would be prohibited under paragraphs 6 and 7 above, excepting regularly scheduled maritime shipping lines calling in Haiti with goods permitted under paragraph 7 and which are also carrying other commodities or products in transit to other destinations, subject to formal monitoring arrangements established with States cooperating with the legitimate Government of Haiti, as provided in paragraph 1 of resolution 875 (1993) and paragraph 10 below;

10. Acting also under Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations, calls upon Member States cooperating with the legitimate Government of Haiti, acting nationally or through regional agencies or arrangements, to use such measures commensurate with the specific circumstances as may be necessary under the authority of the Security Council to ensure strict implementation of the provisions of the present resolution and earlier relevant resolutions, and in particular to halt outward as well as inward maritime shipping as necessary in order to inspect and verify their cargoes and destinations and also to ensure that the Committee established pursuant to resolution 841 (1993) is kept regularly informed;

11. Decides that all States, including the authorities in Haiti, shall take the necessary measures to ensure that no claim shall lie at the instance of the authorities in Haiti, or of any person or body in Haiti, or of any person claiming through or for the benefit of any such person or body, in connection with the performance of a bond, financial guarantee, indemnity or engagement, issued or granted in connection with or related to the performance of any contract or transaction, where the performance of that contract or transaction was affected by the measures imposed by or pursuant to the present resolution or resolutions 841 (1993), 873 (1993) and 875 (1993);

12. Calls upon all States, including States not members of the United Nations, and all international organizations to act strictly in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution and the earlier relevant resolutions, notwithstanding the existence of any rights or obligations conferred or imposed by any international agreement or any contract entered into or any licence or permit granted prior to the effective date of the measures in the present resolution or earlier relevant resolutions;

13. Requests all States to report to the Secretary-General by 6 June 1994 on the measures they have instituted in implementation of the measures contained in the present resolution and earlier relevant resolutions;

14. Decides that the Committee established pursuant to resolution 841 (1993) shall undertake the following tasks in addition to those set out in resolutions 841 (1993) and 873 (1993) and in paragraph 3 above:

(b) To seek from all States, in particular neighbouring States, further information regarding the action taken by them concerning the effective implementation of the measures contained in the present resolution and earlier relevant resolutions;

(c) To consider any information brought to its attention by States concerning violations of the measures contained in the present resolution and earlier relevant resolutions and, in that context, to make recommendations to the Council on ways to increase their effectiveness;

(d) To make recommendations in response to violations of the measures contained in the present resolution and earlier relevant resolutions and provide information on a regular basis to the Secretary-General for general distribution to Member States;

(e) To consider and to decide upon expeditiously any application by States for the approval of flights or entry in accordance with paragraphs 2 and 3 above;

(f) To amend the guidelines referred to in paragraph 10 of resolution 841 (1993) to take into account the measures contained in the present resolution;

(g) To examine possible requests for assistance under the provisions of Article 50 of the Charter of the United Nations and to make recommendations to the President of the Security Council for appropriate action;

15. Reaffirms its request to the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Committee and to make the necessary arrangements in the Secretariat for this purpose;

16. Decides that, until the return of the democratically elected President, it will keep under continuous review, at least on a monthly basis, all the measures in the present resolution and earlier relevant resolutions, and requests the Secretary-General, having regard for the views of the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, to report on the situation in Haiti, the implementation of the Governors Island Agreement, legislative actions including preparations for legislative elections, the full restoration of democracy in Haiti, the humanitarian situation in that country, and the effectiveness of the implementation of sanctions, with the first report to be submitted not later than 30 June 1994;

17. Expresses its readiness to consider progressive suspension of the measures contained in the present resolution and earlier relevant resolutions, based on progress in the implementation of the Governors Island Agreement and the restoration of democracy in Haiti;

18. Decides that, notwithstanding paragraph 16 above, measures in the present resolution and earlier relevant resolutions will not be completely lifted until:

(a) The retirement of the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of Haiti, and the resignation or departure from Haiti of the Chief of the Metropolitan Zone of Port-au-Prince, commonly known as the Chief of Police of Port-au-Prince, and the Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces of Haiti;

(b) Completion of the changes by retirement or departure from Haiti in the leadership of the police and military high command called for in the Governors Island Agreement;

(c) Adoption of the legislative actions called for in the Governors Island Agreement, as well as the creation of a proper environment in which free and fair legislative elections can be organized in the framework of the full restoration of democracy in Haiti;

(d) The creation by authorities of the proper environment for the deployment of the United Nations Mission in Haiti;

(e) The return in the shortest time possible of the democratically elected President and maintenance of constitutional order;

these conditions being necessary for the full implementation of the Governors Island Agreement;

19. Condemns any attempt illegally to remove legal authority from the legitimately elected President, declares that it would consider illegitimate any purported government resulting from such an attempt, and decides, in such an event, to consider reimposing any measures suspended under paragraph 17 above;

20. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

After the vote, the representative of France stated that his Government wished to ensure that the imposition of new sanctions was seen first of all as a means to achieve a political result, and not as an end in itself. The objective was clear: to ensure that democracy regained its course in Haiti and to foster the return of President Aristide to his country. The Council had seen to it that that objective would not be achieved at the cost of the infliction of intolerable suffering on the Haitian people. Its intention had been to censure a minority, including through the use of measures that were exceptional in that they were aimed at individuals. It was in that spirit that the Council would conduct a regular review of the implementation of the sanctions, especially in regard to the humanitarian situation in Haiti. The speaker emphasized that the effectiveness of the sanctions would depend, to a large extent, on the manner in which the Dominican Republic applied resolution 917 (1994). He also considered it very important that the economy of Haiti not be brought to collapse by the sanctions regime, which had been why the Council had ensured that there were several exceptions to the sanctions. Lastly, his country believed that the restoration of democracy in Haiti, while presupposing the return of the duly elected President, also required the existence of a parliamentary institution designed and functioning in accordance with full respect for democratic constitutional principles.⁸⁰

The representative of Brazil stated that the action of the Council could only be understood in the light of the unique and exceptional character of the situation still prevailing in Haiti. Expressing concern that a comprehensive embargo might create additional suffering for the Haitian people, he stressed the importance of keeping under constant review any adverse consequences that the extremely serious measures taken by the Council might entail. He further stated that a sanctions regime could never be an end in itself and that it would be hard to conceive of the imposition of measures that affected an entire population being adopted in a political vacuum. He thus welcomed the firm and sound political basis of resolution 917 (1994) which aimed at the re-establishment of full democracy and the reinstatement of President Aristide. In that respect, the cooperation between the United Nations and OAS, which had proven to be a major tool in the international response to the illegal actions taken by the de facto authorities, should be effectively maintained until a final solution to the crisis was reached.⁸¹

According to the representative of China, the history of the United Nations had taught that sanctions

⁸¹ Ibid., pp. 8-9.

were not a panacea that could be applied whenever and wherever suitable, for want of a better solution. His country, based on its consistent position, did not favour the use of sanctions as a means of resolving conflicts. The sanctions regime contained in resolution 917 (1994) was, in the absence of other effective measures, an exceptional step taken under the highly unique circumstances then prevailing in Haiti and one which should not constitute any precedent. China's support for the resolution did not presuppose any change in its position vis-à-vis sanctions in general. Noting that the suffering inflicted upon the Haitian people was at least partially attributable to the sanctions already applied to Haiti by the Council and by other bodies, the speaker expressed concern about whether the newly introduced sanctions regime, if applied, could possibly increase that suffering. In that connection, the Council, the Secretary-General and OAS should, as they were bound to do by their moral duty, monitor closely the humanitarian situation in Haiti and take the necessary measures to alleviate the adverse effects of sanctions, should such concern translate into reality.⁸²

Decision of 11 May 1994: statement by the President

On 11 May 1994, the President issued the following statement to the media on behalf of the members of the Council:⁸³

The members of the Security Council strongly condemn the attempt to replace the legitimate President of Haiti, Jean Bertrand Aristide.

The members of the Council reaffirm, as stated in paragraph 19 of resolution 917 (1994) of 6 May 1994, that they condemn any such attempt illegally to remove President Aristide. They stress that participants in illegal governments in Haiti are subject to the measures provided for in paragraphs 3 and 4 of resolution 917 (1994), concerning travel restrictions and freezing of funds and financial resources.

The members of the Council reaffirm their determination to ensure full and effective compliance with measures contained in all relevant Council resolutions and reaffirm as well their commitment to the restoration of democracy in Haiti and the return of President Aristide, under the framework of the Governors Island Agreement.

On 20 June 1994, pursuant to resolution 917 (1994), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a further report on the question of Haiti.⁸⁴ The Secretary-General stated that since the adoption of resolution 917 (1994) on 6 May 1994, no progress had been made towards the implementation of the Governors Island Agreement. On the contrary, tensions had increased as a result of the installation of an illegitimate government, the growing impact of economic sanctions, the continued repression and the humanitarian crisis. The OAS Ad Hoc Meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs, held from 6 to 7 June, had reiterated the need for States members of OAS and the United Nations to support and reinforce such embargo measures as suspension of commercial flights and freezing of assets of the Haitian de facto regime and its supporters, and to suspend international financial transactions with Haiti. Further sanctions had been considered or implemented by individual Member States. On 10 June, the United States had banned all commercial flights with Haiti, as well as financial transfers to and from that country. Canada and Panama also had suspended their commercial flights with Haiti. Steps had also been taken on land to enforce the sanctions. At the request of the Dominican Republic, the Secretary-General had dispatched a team of technical experts to that country to assess the situation on its border with Haiti and make recommendations. On 15 June, the Committee, established by the Council under resolution 841 (1993), had adopted consolidated guidelines on the conduct of its work together with a comprehensive list of persons falling under the provisions of paragraph 3 of resolution 917 (1994). In a related development, the President of the Dominican Republic and the Secretary-General's Special Representative had announced that technical assistance in enforcing the embargo would be provided by several countries, under bilateral arrangements.

On 28 June 1994, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on UNMIH.⁸⁵ He recalled the statement of conclusions issued by the Friends of the Secretary-General for Haiti on 3 June 1994,⁸⁶ whereby they had expressed their determination to promote the full deployment of UNMIH when conditions permitted and envisaged the reconfiguration and strengthening of the Mission. They had also invited the Secretariat to prepare for the quick return of UNMIH to Haiti. The Secretary-General further noted the resolution adopted on 9 June 1994 by the OAS Foreign Ministers,⁸⁷ which called on all member States to support measures by the United Nations to strengthen UNMIH in order for it to assist in the restoration of democracy through the professionalization of the Armed Forces and the training of a new police force, as well as to help maintain essential civil order and protect the personnel of international and other organizations involved in human rights and humanitarian efforts in Haiti. The Secretary-General also stated that the further deterioration of the situation in Haiti had substantially changed the circumstances under which UNMIH had been planned. In the light of the recommendations adopted by the OAS Foreign Ministers, as well as the conclusions drawn by the Friends of the Secretary-General on Haiti, and bearing in mind the changing realities on the ground, he suggested that the Council might wish to consider modifying the original mandate established for UNMIH. In that case, it would be necessary to estimate the additional resources which would be required for the Mission to accomplish its new tasks. Meanwhile, in view of the continuing determination of the international community to remain actively involved in the efforts to resolve the crisis in Haiti, the Secretary-General recommended that the existing mandate of UNMIH be extended for a period of one month. That extension would enable the Friends of the Secretary-General on Haiti and the members of the Council respectively to undertake consultations among themselves and with the parties concerned on the possible strengthening of UNMIH and its role in the overall attempts of the international community to find a long over-due solution to the crisis.

At its 3397th meeting, on 30 June 1994, the Council included the report of the Secretary-General dated 28 June 1994 in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Canada and Venezuela, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Oman) drew the attention of the members of the Council to the report of the Secretary-General dated 20 June 1994,⁸⁸ as well as to a letter dated 7 June 1994 addressed to the President of the Council from the representatives of Argentina, Canada, France, the United States and Venezuela,⁸⁹ transmitting the statement of conclusions issued on 3 June 1994 by the Friends of the Secretary-General on Haiti. He further drew their attention to a draft resolution submitted by Argentina, Canada, France, the United States and Venezuela.⁹⁰

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 933 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 841 (1993) of 16 June 1993, 861 (1993) of 27 August 1993, 862 (1993) of 31 August 1993, 867 (1993) of 23 September 1993, 873 (1993) of 13 October 1993, 875 (1993) of 16 October 1993, 905 (1994) of 23 March 1994 and 917 (1994) of 6 May 1994,

Deeply concerned by the continued obstruction to the dispatch of the United Nations Mission in Haiti, pursuant to resolution 867 (1993), and the failure of the armed forces of Haiti to carry out their responsibilities to allow the Mission to begin its work,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General of 20 June and 28 June 1994,

Noting resolution MRE/RES.6/94, adopted unanimously by the ad hoc meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the countries members of the Organization of American States on 9 June 1994, which, inter alia, calls for a strengthening of the mandate of the Mission,

Recalling the terms of the Governors Island Agreement and the related New York Pact,

Recalling also the statement of conclusions of the Friends of the Secretary-General on the question of Haiti of 3 June 1994,

Welcoming the measures taken by Member States at the national level aimed at further strengthening the impact of sanctions,

Noting the importance of the rapid dispatch of the Mission as soon as conditions permit,

Condemning the recent escalation of violations of international humanitarian law and the naming of the so called "de facto III government",

Deeply concerned by the deteriorating humanitarian situation in Haiti, and stressing the need for increased assistance from the international community to meet the humanitarian needs of the Haitian people, ⁹⁰ S/1994/776.

Noting with concern that the situation in Haiti continues to constitute a threat to peace and security in the region,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Mission in Haiti until 31 July 1994;

2. Strongly deplotes the refusal of the military authorities to implement the Governors Island Agreement;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council as soon as possible, but no later than 15 July 1994, with specific recommendations on the strength, composition, cost and duration of the Mission, appropriate to its expansion and deployment, as recommended by the Secretary-General, after the departure of the senior Haitian military leadership as called for in resolution 917 (1994); such recommendations should include, inter alia, means by which the Mission could, in due course, assist the democratic Government of Haiti in fulfilling its responsibility to provide security for the international presence, senior Haitian government officials and key installations, and in assisting Haitian authorities to assure public order and in the holding of legislative elections to be called by the legitimate constitutional authorities;

4. Authorizes the Secretary-General to identify personnel, plan and make prior arrangements to enable the Security Council to authorize the rapid deployment of the Mission, once the Secretary-General reports to the Council and the proper environment for such a deployment has been created;

5. Invites Member States to prepare to provide promptly the troops, police, civilian personnel, equipment and logistical support required for the appropriate configuration of the Mission;

6. Decides to keep the situation in Haiti under constant review, and expresses its readiness to consider promptly any recommendations for a future United Nations mission in Haiti that the Secretary-General, as requested, may make concerning the deployment of the Mission in the light of developments;

7. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

After the vote, the representative of the United States stated that the resolution just adopted reaffirmed the international community's determination to provide assistance to restore democracy in Haiti and rebuild the country. It also reaffirmed its message that the military leaders had to go. To reinforce that message, the United States had taken additional steps, including a ban on all flights to and from Haiti, the freeze of Haitian assets and the cancellation of travel visas. It called upon all Member States to adopt similar measures. The speaker further noted that the adoption of resolution 933 (1994) acknowledged that the composition of UNMIH had to change and welcomed the Council's willingness to consider a strengthened United Nations mission. Her delegation looked forward to the Secretary-General's reporting as soon as possible to the Council on the specific means by which the United Nations mission could assist a restored democratic Government in Haiti to assure public order and ensure the protection of both the international presence and the legitimate Government.⁹¹

The representative of Brazil stated that while his delegation supported the thrust of resolution 933 (1994), which was a technical extension of the UNMIH mandate, it would have preferred an extension for a period longer than one month. He contended that sanctions against Haiti already imposed by the Council and by individual Member States would have benefited from more time to have been proven effective. The measures adopted by the United Nations and OAS had succeeded in putting pressure on the main target, namely the Haitian military authorities and their supporters. The Council should remain committed to the option chosen, while keeping under constant review the humanitarian situation. The speaker further expressed his belief that any decision regarding a modification in the original mandate of UNMIH should be carried out within the framework of a multilateral effort aimed at assisting the legitimate Government and the Haitian people in the transition period towards a normal life under constitutional rule.⁹²

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that while his delegation had joined the consensus on the question of UNMIH, it did have questions with regard to the mission, particularly in relation to specific recommendations regarding the strength, composition, cost and duration of the future activities of the Mission, as well as the question of financing of the measures proposed by the Secretary-General. He stressed that resolution 933 (1994) did not provide a basis for any action whatever, except for the submission of a report, without any preliminary decision by the Council on that score.⁹³

The representative of China stated that the first order of business was to take effective measures to deploy UNMIH as soon as possible, as authorized by resolution 867 (1993), so as to enable it to play its mandated role. Accordingly, his delegation had supported the Secretary-General recommendation that the mandate of UNMIH be extended and had voted in favour of resolution 933 (1994). At the same time, however, it had important reservations about the future expansion of the mandate and the scope of UNMIH provided for in the resolution and its vote in no way implied that China was undertaking any obligations in advance in that respect.⁹⁴

Decision of 12 July 1994 (3403rd meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3403rd meeting, on 12 July 1994, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. After the adoption of the agenda, the President (Pakistan) stated that, following consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁹⁵

The Security Council condemns the decision of the illegal de facto regime and the military leadership in Haiti to expel from the country the joint United Nations/Organization of American States International Civilian Mission in Haiti, whose work has the highest approbation of the Council and whose mandate was extended by the General Assembly on 8 July 1994.

The Council considers this action a serious escalation in the defiant stance of Haiti's illegal de facto regime towards the international community.

The Council condemns this attempt by the illegal de facto regime and the military authorities to avoid appropriate international scrutiny at a time of increasing indiscriminate violence against the civilian population in Haiti.

The Council rejects this attempt by the illegal de facto regime and the military authorities to defy the will of the international community. This provocative behaviour directly affects the peace and security of the region.

The Council continues to hold the military authorities and the illegal de facto regime individually and collectively responsible for the safety and security of the international presence in Haiti.

The Council stresses that this latest action by the Haitian military and the illegal de facto regime further reinforces the continued determination of the Council to bring about a rapid and definitive solution to this crisis.

The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 19 July 1994: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

By a letter dated 12 July 1994 addressed to the President of the Council,⁹⁶ the Secretary-General informed the Council that, following the decision of the de facto authorities in Haiti on 11 July 1994 to expel the international staff of MICIVIH from the country, he had decided, in consultation with the Acting Secretary-General of OAS and taking into consideration the security of the MICIVIH staff, that they would have to be evacuated from Haiti as of 13 July 1994.

By a letter dated 19 July 1994,⁹⁷ the President of the Council informed the Secretary-General that his letter dated 12 July 1994, has been brought to the attention of the members of the Security Council.

Decision of 31 July 1994 (3413th meeting):
resolution 940 (1994)

On 15 July 1994, pursuant to resolution 933 (1994), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on UNMIH,⁹⁸ in which he put forward his proposals for an expanded UNMIH. Such a force would need a maximum strength of just over 15,000 military personnel and about 550 civilian police personnel, with a mandate from the Security Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter that would permit the force to use coercive means, as necessary, in assisting the legitimate authorities to carry out public order functions. It would also require civilian personnel in support functions. The Secretary-General introduced three options. Under option one, the Council, with the consent of the legitimate authorities and acting under Chapter VII, would expand UNMIH and give it a revised mandate covering the additional tasks envisaged in resolution 933 (1994). In option two, the Council, at the request of the legitimate Government and also acting under Chapter VII, would authorize a group of Member States to establish and deploy a multinational or inter-American force to carry out the envisaged tasks. The force would be under the command and control of the Member States contributing to it and those Member States would be responsible for financing it. Alternatively, under option three, the Council could decide to divide the work between an international or inter-American force and UNMIH. As soon as the multinational or inter-American force had created a secure and stable environment, UNMIH would be deployed to carry out its mandate as envisaged. The Secretary-General noted that the assembly, equipment and deployment of a very large international force, for a period of unforeseen duration, would be beyond the then existing capability of the United Nations. He therefore did not recommend the first option. He further noted that if the Council were to choose the second or third option, it might wish to authorize the establishment of a small group of United Nations military and police observers to monitor the operations of the multinational force and as appropriate to make their good offices available.⁹⁹

The Secretary-General pointed out that the activities discussed in his report would form only part of the support and assistance which Haiti would need from the international community as soon as the legitimate authorities were restored. As provided for in the Governors Island Agreement, a major effort would be necessary to provide humanitarian assistance; to facilitate the return and reintegration of the refugees; to help the Haitian authorities to rehabilitate an economy damaged by sanctions and rebuild institutions and infrastructure; to promote respect for human rights; and to foster the economic and social development in Haiti. If his proposals were accepted, the Council would implicitly commit the international community to a long-term continuing programme of support to Haiti.

On 26 July 1994, pursuant to resolution 917 (1994), the Secretary-General submitted a report on the question of Haiti.¹⁰⁰ The Secretary-General noted that since his report of 20 June 1994, the situation in Haiti had deteriorated further as a result of actions taken by the illegal government there. He recalled that, on 11 July 1994, the de facto authorities had declared MICIVIH presence undesirable and had given 48 hours to its staff to leave the country, which they had done on the following day. With regard to the preparation of the legislative elections due in November 1994, the situation remained unchanged and the Chamber of Deputies, which had been due to resume its session on 13 June 1994, had not yet been able to meet. With regard to sanctions, France had announced on 12 July that it would suspend its commercial flights to and from Haiti. An observer group was expected to be deployed along the border between the Dominican Republic and Haiti to help implement the sanctions. The Secretary-General further noted that the humanitarian situation in the country had become more difficult, according to information received from the United Nations humanitarian affairs coordinator in Haiti. The human rights situation also remained worrisome, with reports coming out of the country indicating a continuation of abuses being committed against Haitians.

At its 3413th meeting, on 31 July 1994, the Council included the two reports of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Canada, Cuba, Haiti,¹⁰¹ Mexico, Uruguay and Venezuela, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President drew the attention of the members of the Council to a letter dated 29 July 1994 addressed to the Secretary-General from the representative of Haiti, transmitting a letter from President Aristide, in which he called on the international community to take prompt and decisive action, under the authority of the United Nations, to allow for the full implementation of the Agreement. The President further drew their attention to a draft resolution submitted by Argentina, Canada, France and the United States,¹⁰² as well as to a letter dated 30 July 1994 addressed to the President of the Council from the representative of Haiti,¹⁰³ informing him of the agreement of the Government of President Aristide with that draft resolution, which it considered an appropriate framework for the implementation of the Governors Island Agreement.

The representative of Haiti pointed out that despite the Security Council's re-imposition and strengthening of sanctions to compel the military leadership to respect its commitment, no progress had been made to that end. To the contrary, in recent months the military regime had become harder and it had increased repression and taken measures to limit civil liberties. Human rights violations had increased considerably and a state of emergency had been declared. Moreover, in defiance of the international community, the illegitimate Government had expelled MICIVIH and installed a provisional President. He further stated that, in the existing situation, his delegation believed that additional measures were necessary to put an end to the delaying tactics and arrogance of the military leadership in Haiti, which posed a direct threat to the authority of the Council. The draft resolution before the Council contained elements that would enable the international community to respond appropriately to the challenge presented by the Haitian military leaders. By stating the consent of the Government of President Aristide to the draft resolution, his delegation was calling on the international community to join it in defending its national sovereignty.¹⁰⁴

The representative of Mexico contended that although the Haitian military leadership had resisted the sanctions, there were signs that those were beginning to have their effect and should therefore be given enough time to produce the desired results. For that reason, Mexico had doubts about the timeliness of the draft resolution under consideration and regretted that the Council had decided that it was necessary to have recourse to the use of force to resolve the crisis in Haiti. History had shown that military intervention in that hemisphere had invariably been traumatic without necessarily attaining its objectives. It was unfortunate that the Secretary-General's report did not contain a full political expression of, or even a reference to the option of persevering in political and diplomatic efforts. More seriously, the report recognized that the Organization was not able to assume the role it should in an action of that kind, as reflected in the draft resolution. Accordingly, the actions proposed in the draft resolution were not provided for in the Charter. It was the speaker's view that, the crisis in Haiti was not a threat to peace, a breach of the peace or an act of aggression such as would warrant the use of force in accordance with Article 42 of the Charter. The foundations for the actions proposed, as could be seen from the Secretary-General's report, appeared to be previous practice or precedent. Every situation, however, was different. In the case of Haiti, it seemed contradictory to insist on the one hand on the unique character of the situation and, on the other, to cite precedents and concepts applied in other circumstances and geographical areas. The relevance of those precedents in the case of Haiti therefore appeared to be highly questionable. It was also troubling that the draft resolution did not contain any reference to the time-frame for the proposed action, as if carte blanche had been awarded to an undefined multinational force to act when it deemed appropriate. That seemed to be an extremely dangerous practice in international relations. Moreover, the draft resolution made scarcely any reference to Haiti's long-term needs in terms of institutional reconstruction and economic and social development and lacked the specific recommendations in that regard. While the Council might not be competent to make such recommendations, it should nevertheless invite the competent bodies of the United Nations system to adopt the necessary measures to that end. The speaker further noted that the Council had, since the beginning of the matter, been acting at the request of the lawful Government and that President Aristide was not opposed to the use of force to re-establish his rights and those of the Haitian people. However, while Mexico was aware of the difficulties and of the need to restore constitutional order and democracy to Haiti, it also believed that there were not sufficient elements to justify the use of force and, still less, to justify across-the-board authorization for the action of ill-defined multinational forces. In its opinion, the continuation of political and diplomatic efforts to achieve solutions consistent with the Charter continued to be the best alternative to bring about the return of constitutional law and the exercise of self-determination for the Haitian people.¹⁰⁵

Similarly, the representative of Cuba expressed concern about the draft resolution under consideration and the relevant reports of the Secretary-General, as well as with the formulation, which described the situation in Haiti as a threat to regional peace and security, something that was new and removed from the precepts established by the Charter concerning the authority of the Council. He also pointed out the extemporaneous forms and the stereotypes that were used as precedents in paragraph 4 of the draft resolution, the misuse of Chapter VII of the Charter, the omission of the fact that the return of President Aristide was a prerequisite for the restoration of democratic order, and the lack of any time-limits for the operation. Cuba considered that all avenues for finding a peaceful solution to the Haitian conflict had not yet been explored. In principle, it was resolutely opposed to military intervention as a means of solving internal conflicts. History had shown that military operations could not truly solve internal conflicts because they could not resolve the causes of conflict. Decisions of that nature went beyond the mandate of the Council, in accordance with Chapter VII of the Charter, which only authorized such powers in cases of an express threat to international peace and security. He argued that the mechanisms for the peaceful settlement of disputes contained in the Charter had to be retained, because a world policy that was sustained by the use of force was infeasible and extremely dangerous to international peace and security. If anything might signify in and of itself a fundamental threat to peace and security, it was military action of that kind in the Caribbean region. He also warned of the threat to the security and sovereignty of Cuba posed by that military deployment. For those reasons and because of its commitment to the principles of non-intervention and non-use of force or threat of force, Cuba was opposed to the draft resolution.¹⁰⁶

The representative of Uruguay affirmed the universal validity and the constant consolidation in relations between States of the principles of non-intervention and peaceful settlement of disputes, as complemented by the fundamental principle of the rule of international law. Uruguay's compliance with those principles had always prompted it to support and advocate a restrictive view of the application of the enforcement measures provided for in the Charter. Although it had supported the imposition of economic sanctions in accordance with Article 41 of the Charter, it did not support the application of military action provided for in Article 42. Neither did it believe that the internal political situation in Haiti projected externally in such a way as to represent a threat to international peace and security. It believed that the search for a peaceful solution had not been exhausted and that that was precisely the objective of the application of sanctions. For those reasons, while Uruguay pledged support for all measures directed towards restoring and strengthening democracy in Haiti by peaceful means, it would not support, within the framework of a restrictive interpretation of the principle of non-intervention, any military intervention in that country, whether of a unilateral or multilateral nature.¹⁰⁷

¹⁰⁷ Ibid., pp. 6-7.

The representative of Canada recalled that from the outset of the Haitian crisis, the United Nations had sought to restore democracy in that country through mediation and other diplomatic means as well as through a gradually more severe set of sanctions. Canada had supported and participated in those efforts at every step, as one of the Secretary-General's "Friends of Haiti". It had throughout the crisis stood at the side of the democratically elected President of Haiti, Jean-Bertrand Aristide, whose restoration it saw as a key element of the restoration of democracy in that country. The speaker noted, in that regard, the appeal by President Aristide to the international community for swift and determined action under the authority of the United Nations in order to permit the implementation of the Governors Island Agreement. Because living conditions in Haiti continued to decline seriously and brutal repression continued, the status quo could not be allowed to persist. It was for that reason that his Government had co-sponsored the draft resolution before the Council.¹⁰⁸

The representative of Venezuela stated that his Government, faithful to the tradition of defending the principle of non-intervention, could not support unilateral or multilateral military actions in any nation of the hemisphere, nor could it interfere with the sovereign will of any country. It believed, however, that not all the means of finding a peaceful solution to the situation in Haiti had been exhausted and associated itself with the efforts which the President of the Council could make to ensure that an operation of war be forestalled by an operation of peace.¹⁰⁹

Speaking in explanation of vote, the representative of Brazil considered that the crisis in Haiti was of a unique and exceptional character and could not be put on a par with other situations in which international peace and security had been threatened. That was a matter which had to be considered under the dual approach of strengthening democracy in the hemisphere and of the principles enshrined in both the United Nations and the OAS Charters. It was essential, therefore, to respect not only the democratic solidarity which had been built in the region but also the personality, sovereignty and independence of States within it. Peace and cooperation in the region had been possible because of strict observance of the principles of the peaceful settlement of disputes and non-intervention. Brazil considered that the draft resolution before the Council was not felicitous in the invocation of the criteria and the choice of means for attaining the goal of restoring democracy and reinstating the legitimately elected Government of Haiti under President Aristide. The situation in Haiti would warrant an expansion of UNMIH in order to implement fully the ideas originating from resolution 933 (1994), along the lines of the first option outlined in the Secretary-General's report of 15 July 1994. That option was put aside, perhaps too hastily, on the grounds that it would require additional time to take shape, the very time that could allow the sanctions to yield the desired effects. Brazil considered it indispensable that consultations be held among all members of the Council and the parties directly or indirectly concerned with a given situation, in order to enhance the legitimacy and effectiveness of the Council's decisions. Such consideration should have been paramount particularly in the case of Haiti, in view of its unique nature. For the first time in history, the Council was holding a discussion on the use of force under Chapter VII of the Charter in connection with a country of the Western Hemisphere. He observed that the issue under discussion in the Council had changed from that of the formation of a reconfigured United Nations peacekeeping force, which could be deployed with the aim of assisting in the recovery of Haiti once the de facto authorities had left, to that of the immediate establishment of a multinational force with the purpose of intervening in Haiti. Due to that abrupt shift, Brazil had serious difficulties with the draft resolution, in particular with operative paragraph 4, which contained language similar to that in resolution 678 (1990) regarding the Gulf War. That, however, was a situation of a totally distinct political and legal nature, in a different political and regional context. The speaker concluded by stating that the defence of democracy should always be consistent with principles governing relations between States and did not entail the recourse to force under the terms being considered by the Council. Those terms constituted a worrisome departure from the principles and customary practices adopted by the United Nations as regarded peacekeeping. For those reasons, his delegation would abstain in the voting.¹¹⁰

The representative of China stated that his delegation shared the view that the problem of Haiti constituted an element of instability in the region and therefore endorsed greater peaceful efforts on the part of the international community, especially the countries in the region, to facilitate an appropriate solution through political means. He could not, however, agree to the provision in the draft resolution before the Council concerning the authorization for Member States to adopt mandatory means under Chapter VII of the Charter to resolve the problem of Haiti. China did not agree with the adoption of any means of solution based on the resort to pressure at will or even the use of force. In his view, resolving problems such as that of Haiti through military means did not conform with the principles enshrined in the Charter and lacked sufficient and convincing grounds. The practice of the Council's authorizing certain Member States to use force was even more disconcerting because it would obviously create a dangerous precedent. For those reasons, his delegation would abstain in the voting.¹¹¹

According to the representative of Nigeria, the draft resolution under consideration took Council members to an entirely new level of external action to deal with the situation in Haiti and also to an entirely new territory in the Charter, in particular with regard to the use of Chapter VII. Several of his delegation's concerns had been addressed in the draft resolution, including, firstly, that the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Haiti should not be compromised. Respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Member States was the minimum basis of association by Members of the United Nations and should be observed in the case of all nations. Secondly, any collective action authorized in the draft resolution was country-specific. In view of the special character of the situation in Haiti, the adoption of the draft resolution should not be seen as a global license for external interventions through the use of force or any other means in the internal affairs of Member States. The overriding rationale for the proposed action under Chapter VII of the Charter in the draft resolution was predicated on the failure of the military Government in Haiti to honour the Governors Island Agreement and to fully implement Security Council resolutions, both failures of which threatened peace and security in the region. The adoption of the draft resolution by the Council should not, however, be construed as an abandonment of collective faith in the efficacy of diplomatic means and/or sanctions to help solve the problems in Haiti and elsewhere. With regard to the operation of the multinational force, he hoped that it would be a temporary one that was focused and subject-specific, and that the second phase of operations to be undertaken by UNMIH would commence soon enough so that the process of rehabilitation and reconstruction could begin in earnest.¹¹²

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted by 12 votes in favour to none against, with 2 abstentions¹¹³ as resolution 940 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 841 (1993) of 16 June 1993, 861 (1993) of 27 August 1993, 862 (1993) of 31 August 1993, 867 (1993) of 23 September 1993, 873 (1993) of 13 October 1993, 875 (1993) of 16 October 1993, 905 (1994) of 23 March 1994, 917 (1994) of 6 May 1994 and 933 (1994) of 30 June 1994,

Recalling the terms of the Governors Island Agreement and the related New York Pact,

Condemning the continuing disregard of those agreements by the illegal de facto regime, and the regime's refusal to cooperate with efforts by the United Nations and the Organization of American States to bring about their implementation,

Gravely concerned by the significant further deterioration of the humanitarian situation in Haiti, in particular the continuing escalation by the illegal de facto regime of systematic violations of civil liberties, the desperate plight of Haitian refugees and the recent expulsion of the staff of the International Civilian Mission in Haiti, which was condemned in its presidential statement of 12 July 1994,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General of 15 July and 26 July 1994,

Taking note of the letter dated 29 July 1994 from the legitimately elected President of Haiti and the letter dated 30 July 1994 from the Permanent Representative of Haiti to the United Nations,

Reiterating its commitment for the international community to assist and support the economic, social and institutional development of Haiti,

Reaffirming that the goal of the international community remains the restoration of democracy in Haiti and the prompt return of the legitimately elected President, Jean-Bertrand

Aristide, within the framework of the Governors Island Agreement,

Recalling that in its resolution 873 (1993) the Council confirmed its readiness to consider the imposition of additional measures if the military authorities in Haiti continued to impede the activities of the United Nations Mission in Haiti or failed to comply in full with relevant Council resolutions and the provisions of the Governors Island Agreement,

Determining that the situation in Haiti continues to constitute a threat to peace and security in the region,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 15 July 1994, and takes note of his support for action under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations in order to assist the legitimate Government of Haiti in the maintenance of public order;

2. Recognizes the unique character of the present situation in Haiti and its deteriorating, complex and extraordinary nature, requiring an exceptional response;

3. Determines that the illegal de facto regime in Haiti has failed to comply with the Governors Island Agreement and is in breach of its obligations under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council;

4. Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, authorizes Member States to form a multinational force under unified command and control and, in this framework, to use all necessary means to facilitate the departure from Haiti of the military leadership, consistent with the Governors Island Agreement, the prompt return of the legitimately elected President and the restoration of the legitimate authorities of the Government of Haiti, and to establish and maintain a secure and stable environment that will permit implementation of the Governors Island Agreement, on the understanding that the cost of implementing this temporary operation will be borne by the participating Member States;

5. Approves the establishment, upon adoption of the present resolution, of an advance team of the United Nations Mission in Haiti of not more than sixty personnel, including a group of observers, to establish the appropriate means of coordination with the multinational force, to carry out the monitoring of the operations of the multinational force and other functions described in paragraph 23 of the report of the Secretary-General of 15 July 1994, and to assess requirements and to prepare for the deployment of the United Nations Mission in Haiti upon completion of the mission of the multinational force;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the activities of the team within thirty days of the date of deployment of the multinational force;

7. Decides that the tasks of the advance team as defined in paragraph 5 above will expire on the date of termination of the mission of the multinational force;

¹¹² Ibid., pp. 10-11.

¹¹³ Brazil and China. Rwanda was not present at the meeting.

8. Decides that the multinational force will terminate its mission and the United Nations Mission in Haiti will assume the full range of its functions described in paragraph 9 below when a secure and stable environment has been established and the Mission has adequate force capability and structure to assume the full range of its functions; the determination will be made by the Security Council, taking into account recommendations from the States members of the multinational force, which are based on the assessment of the Commander of the multinational force, and from the Secretary-General;

9. Decides to revise and extend the mandate of the Mission for a period of six months to assist the democratic Government of Haiti in fulfilling its responsibilities in connection with:

(a) Sustaining the secure and stable environment established during the multinational phase and protecting international personnel and key installations;

(b) The professionalization of the Haitian armed forces and the creation of a separate police force;

10. Requests that the Mission assist the legitimate constitutional authorities of Haiti in establishing an environment conducive to the organization of free and fair legislative elections to be called by those authorities and, when requested by them, monitored by the United Nations, in cooperation with the Organization of American States;

11. Decides to increase the troop level of the Mission to 6,000 and establishes the objective of completing the Mission, in cooperation with the constitutional Government of Haiti, not later than February 1996;

12. Invites all States, in particular those in the region, to provide appropriate support for the actions undertaken by the United Nations and by Member States pursuant to the present resolution and other relevant Security Council resolutions;

13. Requests the Member States acting in accordance with paragraph 4 above to report to the Council at regular intervals, the first such report to be made not later than seven days following the deployment of the multinational force;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution at sixty-day intervals starting from the date of deployment of the multinational force;

15. Demands strict respect for the persons and premises of the United Nations, the Organization of American States, other international and humanitarian organizations and diplomatic missions in Haiti, and that no acts of intimidation or violence be directed against personnel engaged in humanitarian or peacekeeping work;

16. Emphasizes the necessity that, inter alia:

(a) All appropriate steps be taken to ensure the security and safety of the operations and personnel engaged in such operations;

(b) The security and safety arrangements undertaken extend to all persons engaged in the operations;

17. Affirms that the Council will review the measures imposed pursuant to resolutions 841 (1993), 873 (1993) and 917 (1994), with a view to lifting them in their entirety, immediately following the return to Haiti of President Jean Bertrand Aristide;

18. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

After the vote, the representative of the United States noted that resolution 940 (1994) built on earlier actions designed to relieve suffering in Haiti and promote the rule of law. The purpose was not to impinge upon the sovereignty of Haiti, but to restore the power to exercise that sovereignty to those who rightfully possessed it. The purpose was to enable Haiti, in the words of the Charter, to pursue "social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom". Resolution 940 (1994) authorized a two-phased approach. In the first phase, a multinational force, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, was empowered to restore legitimate authority to Haiti. That force, which the United States was prepared to organize and lead, would begin to professionalize the police and military and establish a stable and secure environment within which democratic officials and institutions could operate. In the second phase, UNMIH would assume the full range of its functions; continue professionalizing the Haitian armed forces and help build a new civilian police; assume responsibility for assisting the Government in assuring public order; assist in establishing an environment conducive to free and fair elections; and strive to complete its assigned tasks no later than February 1996. The timing of the transition from phase one to phase two would be determined by the Council after appropriate consultation, after a stable and secure environment had been established and the means for fulfilling the United Nations mission were at hand. She added that resolution 940 (1994) meshed well with her Government's policy, and that of the Council, of subjecting proposed new peace operations to rigorous review. Phase one built on the precedents of Kuwait and Rwanda while phase two established a United Nations mission of modest size with a clear and achievable mandate, operating in a relatively secure environment, with the consent of the Government, for a finite period of time. Moreover, the resolution was fully consistent with the views expressed by OAS.¹¹⁴

The representatives of France and the United Kingdom noted that resolution 940 (1994) authorized, in a first phase, the establishment of a multinational force mandated to facilitate the departure from Haiti of the rebel military authorities, as provided for in the Governors Island Agreement, and, in a second phase, the deployment of a peacekeeping force mandated to ensure a stable, secure environment to enable Haiti to return to the path of progress and democracy. The representative of France added that recourse to Chapter VII of the Charter as the basis for multinational action demonstrated a determination to complete successfully, by all necessary means, the tasks the Council had set itself. The intentions of the Council had not changed since 3 July 1993. It desired the complete implementation of the Governors Island Agreement, including the return of the lawfully elected President of Haiti, a radical reform of the Haitian military structure, and the resumption of economic assistance to Haiti. Also needed were the consolidation of institutions and the holding of new elections that would make it possible to restore democracy.¹¹⁵

The representative of Argentina stated that the mechanisms provided for by the Charter were clearly applied gradually and patiently — first the measures provided for in Chapter VI of the Charter and then those provided for in Chapter VII which did not imply the use of force. Neither the calls of the General Assembly in connection with human rights and the restoration of democracy, nor the enforcement measures provided for by the Council, nor the various efforts to negotiate had had any impact on the usurpers of power in Haiti. Every alternative available had been exhausted one by one. The maintenance of international peace and security, the strengthening and consolidation of democracy, and the full enjoyment of human rights in the region required resolute action to liberate the Haitian people from the oppression of the de facto Government, as specifically suggested in the Secretary-General's report of 15 July 1994. Although his delegation might have preferred a traditional peacekeeping operation, the options fell within the framework of the Charter and addressed that difficult situation. Of decisive and key importance was the fact that those options were in keeping with what the President of Haiti had requested. Argentina would therefore support the action stipulated in resolution 940 (1994). The speaker added that the Council was well aware that the solution to the Haitian crisis lay in the restoration of the democratic regime, which required respect and support for the sovereignty of the Haitian people. Moreover, an end must be put to a humanitarian crisis so vast, and atrocities so unspeakable, that the Council had determined that they could no longer be hidden behind a border. Noting that the situation in Haiti was a unique and exceptional one which could no longer be put off, he concluded that it was also a question of restoring to the people of Haiti — within the framework of the Charter and with the unequivocal support of the legitimate Government — the sovereignty of which it had been stripped.¹¹⁶

The representative of New Zealand underlined that the international community had not been precipitate in the matter of Haiti. Time had been given for sanctions to work. Clearly, they were not going to produce a quick departure by the illegal military regime. In the meantime, their effect was being felt mostly by the people of Haiti. That was why New Zealand supported the formal request by the legitimate Government of Haiti for decisive action to be taken by the United Nations to enable the legitimate Government of Haiti to be restored and constitutional order in that country to be re-established. However, it had a number of broad concerns about the manner in which the Council had come to deal with that and other recent situations. Firstly, New Zealand's preference had been for collective security to be undertaken by the United Nations itself. It provided the reassurance that small countries sought from the United Nations when Chapter VII of the Charter was being invoked. That did not mean that his delegation had reservations about the use of Chapter VII, either in the case of Haiti, or other specific cases where it was appropriate. His delegation also did not agree with the Secretary-General's conclusion that that was not feasible by the Organization in the case of Haiti. The resource and management difficulties that the United Nations faced were undeniable, but should be seen as challenges to be overcome, not as excuses for throwing in the towel and abrogating the responsibilities for international dispute settlement under United Nations auspices, which New Zealand and other Governments expected the Organization to fulfil. Secondly, in supporting a multinational intervention in Haiti, New Zealand hoped and expected that when the next call would come for international assistance to restore democracy or to protect people in a humanitarian disaster in some other small and distant country, the United Nations and all the members of the Council would not be found wanting.¹¹⁷

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that, in voting for resolution 940 (1994), his country took into account the fact that the resolution enjoyed the support of President Aristide. The Russian Federation attached great importance to the total transparency of the operation authorized by the Council for a multinational force in Haiti. Such transparency was essential to ensure complete confidence in the actions of the multinational force by the international community and support by the international community for that operation. In that connection, he noted that resolution 940 (1994) provided for close coordination between the multinational force and the advance team of UNMIH, for monitoring by United Nations observers of the operations of the multinational force and for verifying, as provided for in the Secretary-General's report of 15 July 1994, "the manner in which that force carried out the mandate conferred upon it by the Council". Of great importance also was the request contained in the resolution to the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the activities of the advance team of UNMIH. With regard to the concept of a two-phase operation, which the Russian Federation supported, his delegation emphasized that the Council would have to return to the question of the mandate and size of UNMIH and other issues of deployment and activities of the mission in phase two of the operation, which had financial implications when it adopted the corresponding decisions on the transition from phase one to phase two.¹¹⁸

Having noted that the situation in Haiti constituted a real and growing threat to peace, security and stability in the region, the representative of the Czech Republic stated that the effort by the international community to restore democracy to Haiti through peaceful, political means and through the imposition of economic sanctions had clearly failed. Resolution 940 (1994) was unique in so far as, for the first time in its history, the Council had authorized Member States to use all necessary means to restore democracy in a Member State and to create conditions for a better and more dignified life in its population. Attention had been given to the clarity of the mandate and the clear definition of both phases of the envisaged operation, the role of the United Nations observers in the operation, as well as its time frame. While his delegation believed that all important aspects of the mission should have been addressed in the resolution in a clear and satisfactory manner, it was pleased that the Council's actions had the full support of democratically elected representatives of Haiti. He noted also that the Council had committed itself to a long-term programme of support for Haiti, in respect of which there should be continuous close cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and OAS.¹¹⁹

The President, speaking in his capacity as representative of Pakistan, stated that the deteriorating situation in Haiti was both unique and exceptional and constituted a threat to peace and security in the region, requiring an exceptional response by the international community. He recalled a communiqué of the OAS Ministers dated 7 July 1994 urging all Member States to support measures by the United Nations to strengthen UNMIH, inter alia to assist in the restoration of democracy, as well as the letter dated 29 July 1994 addressed to the Secretary-General from President Aristide, in which the latter called for "prompt and decisive" action by the international community in the implementation of the Governors Island Agreement. He expressed regret, however, that, for well understood reasons, the Secretary-General could not recommend the first option contained in his report of 15 July 1994. He concluded by stating that resolution 940 (1994) was a warning to States that were using their state apparatus to carry out systematic campaigns of gross violations of fundamental human rights and civil liberties, particularly where such violations gave rise to tensions in the region and threatened regional peace and security.¹²⁰

The members of the Security Council deplore the rejection by the illegal de facto regime in Haiti of the initiative carried out under the instructions of the Secretary-General. Once again, the regime has discarded a possibility of peacefully implementing the Governors Island Agreement and the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, particularly resolutions 917 (1994) of 6 May 1994 and 940 (1994) of 31 July 1994.

Furthermore, the members of the Council reiterate their condemnation of the systematic repression, violence and violations of international humanitarian law carried out against the Haitian people. The recent assassination of Father Jean-Marie Vincent once again shows the climate of violence in Haiti, which continues to deteriorate under the illegal de facto regime.

Decision of 29 September 1994 (3430th meeting): resolution 944 (1994)

By a letter dated 27 September 1994 addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹²² the representative of the United States transmitted the first report of the multinational force in Haiti, dated 26 September 1994. The report covered the first week of operations of the force. It noted that the force, which had entered Haiti on 19 September 1994 without bloodshed, had taken several important steps towards establishing a secure and stable environment for the return of President Aristide and the full implementation of resolution 940 (1994). First, the Force had taken control of the Heavy Weapons Company of the Haitian armed forces and its armament. Secondly, it had initiated a weapons control programme and, lastly, military police units of the force were working with Haitian police headquarters, conducting mobile patrols and monitoring Haitian police activity. The force had also initiated a number of programmes to ameliorate potential causes of unrest and build a relationship of trust and friendship with the Haitian people, including by facilitating the pursuit of substantial humanitarian efforts and coordinating several civic operations to improve the Haitian people's quality of life.

At its 3429th meeting, on 29 September 1994, the Council included the letter in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the following: at the 3429th meeting, the representative of Haiti, at the 3430th meeting, the representatives of Canada and Venezuela. The Council considered the item at its 3429th and 3430th meetings.

At the 3429th meeting, on 29 September 1994, the President (Spain) drew the attention of the members of the Council to the following documents: two letters dated respectively 13 and 14 September 1994 addressed to the Secretary-General from the representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya,¹²³ in which it was stated that the threat of the use of force by the United States and its preparations for the invasion of Haiti, using to that end the Security Council and its resolutions as a cover for its policy of aggression towards Haiti, constituted a grave precedent that threatened international peace and security, a flagrant violation of the Charter, blatant intervention in the internal affairs of States and a threat to their security and independence, adding that what was taking place in Haiti was an internal affair which constituted neither a threat to or breach of the peace, nor an act of aggression justifying the use of force; a letter dated 20 September 1994 addressed to the Secretary-General from the representative of Germany,¹²⁴ transmitting the text of a statement by the European Union on Haiti, issued on 19 September 1994; and a letter dated 26 September 1994 addressed to the President of the Council from the representative of Haiti,¹²⁵ transmitting the text of a statement by President Aristide dated 25 September 1994, in which he called upon the Council to take the necessary measures to rehabilitate Haiti's communication and information systems in accordance with the provisions of resolution 841 (1994). He also called for the immediate easing of sanctions, while maintaining the measures specifically targeted at those obstructing the restoration of democracy and for an increase its humanitarian assistance to Haiti and a speedy distribution of aid.

The representative of the United States stated that with the coalition's deployment, the time had come to prepare for the resumption of normal economic activities in Haiti. The United States and Haiti had introduced a draft resolution in the Council to lift completely United Nations sanctions when President Aristide returned. The United States would also act expeditiously, consistent with resolution 917 (1994) and the "all necessary means" provision of resolution 940 (1994), to allow goods essential to the coalition's efforts to enter Haiti. In addition, it would lift all unilateral sanctions on Haiti, except those targeted on the coup leaders and their named supporters. In that regard, the speaker urged other nations that might have had unilateral sanctions, to take similar steps. He further stated that a top priority for the coalition was to enable the United Nations mission to enter Haiti promptly and under conditions that would allow it to assume its full responsibilities. Twelve observers from the United Nations Mission were already in Haiti to plan for the coordination of the transition of authority from the coalition to the United Nations Mission. Just as the coalition was fulfilling its mandate in Haiti, so the United Nations Mission had to be ready to assume responsibility when a safe environment had been secured. The support of the Council, of Member States and of the Secretary-General would be essential to ensure that the transition was seamless and effective. The mission in Haiti was a reminder of the importance of United Nations peacekeeping operations, in respect of which the United States had proposed reforms to improve the way in which they were financed, equipped and organized. In that connection, he noted that when the United Nations was asked to act, it had to be provided with the means for mounting successful missions in a timely manner. While the multinational coalition would establish, and the United Nations Mission would help maintain, a secure environment in Haiti, the broader international community had to provide Haiti with economic, humanitarian and technical aid that would spur and consolidate democracy. He stressed that the coalition's mission was not to reinvent or to provide new institutions, but to create conditions that would allow Haiti's legitimate institutions to return. The coalition, the United Nations Mission and economic assistance could not and should not be a substitute for determined efforts by the Government of Haiti and by its people to rebuild their country.¹²⁶

The representative of France stated that the time had come for Haiti to regain its rightful place in the international community. France believed that a very clear political signal needed to be sent out by a decision to lift the sanctions in accordance with the Council resolutions, to take effect the day after the return of President Aristide to Haiti. France, for its part, was prepared to lift the unilateral sanctions that it had imposed as soon as technical conditions made it possible.¹²⁷

The representative of Brazil reiterated that whatever action was taken should be fully consistent with the Charter of the United Nations and of OAS, and especially with the basic principle of non-intervention. Although his delegation had taken note that a traumatic military operation had been avoided in Haiti, his Government was concerned over the very fact that foreign military forces had been deployed in the territory of a Latin American country, which was a disturbing precedent. His country would support the democratic reconstruction of Haiti in full respect of its sovereignty and in compliance with the principles of non-intervention and self-determination.¹²⁸

At the 3430th meeting, on 29 September 1994, the President drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by Argentina, Canada, France, Haiti, Spain, the United States and Venezuela.¹²⁹

The representative of Haiti stated that the arrival at Port-au-Prince on 19 September 1994 of the first components of the multinational force authorized by resolution 940 (1994) had permitted a resumption of the process of restoration of democracy, in conformity with the Governors Island Agreement. The Parliament had met on 28 September 1994, for the first time since the coup d'état, to consider a draft amnesty law. The disarmament of the Army and the paramilitary forces had begun. High-calibre weapons had been confiscated, and the conduct of police had markedly improved. Those positive developments had prompted the Council to consider the lifting of the sanctions imposed by resolutions 841 (1993), 873 (1993) and 917 (1994), a measure which his Government supported. However, such measures should take effect after the return of President Aristide to Haiti. He noted that, despite the presence of the multinational force, acts of violence directed against the population continued. That demonstrated the need for the multinational force to speed up disarmament in order to create a stable and secure environment, which would make possible Haiti's national reconciliation.¹³⁰

Speaking in explanation of vote, the representative of Brazil stated that his delegation strongly upheld the objective of bringing to an end the sanctions regime imposed against the de facto authorities as soon as President Aristide was reinstated. The immediate end to the suffering of the Haitian people should be a clear priority and had to remain at the core of concerns. Nevertheless, his delegation was not in a position to support the draft resolution before the Council. To do otherwise would be inconsistent with Brazil's position regarding, in particular, full respect for the principle of non-intervention. The seriousness of the crisis in Haiti required the continued attention of the international community but did not justify any recourse to force. In that sense, his delegation had reservations on certain elements of the draft resolution that went beyond the question of the termination of sanctions.¹³¹

The representative of the United States reaffirmed that sanctions would be lifted only when President Aristide returned to Haiti and resumed his duties. His Government believed that by voting on that day, the early departure of the coup leaders, the early return of President Aristide and thus the early restoration of democracy to Haiti. The draft resolution before the Council reinforced Haitian democracy by taking a crucial step towards those goals.¹³²

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that his delegation, while supporting the humanitarian direction of the draft resolution, still had doubts regarding its hasty adoption. It would not object or vote against the draft resolution, however, since it was a question of improving an acutely difficult humanitarian situation and alleviating the extreme suffering of the Haitian people. Furthermore, although the draft resolution was linked to the return of President Aristide, there was still no clear indication as to the timeframe for his return. He added that his delegation was convinced of the need to adhere to a unified, single approach, without exception, to the lifting of the sanctions regime, as regards the observance of general conditions and requirements for everyone. Such an approach would make it possible to clarify the question that naturally arose as to why some resolutions on the lifting of sanctions were discussed in a series of meetings while others were adopted in just over two days, in advance, and without confirmation that those demands had been accepted as put forward by the Council. All that stressed the need, in principle, to work within the United Nations and to develop a flexible mechanism for the gradual mitigation and then the lifting of sanctions, on the basis of political realities. His delegation intended to promote such an approach in the consideration of questions relating to the lifting of the sanctions regime, based on the conviction that double standards were inadmissible in the work of the Council.¹³³

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted by 13 votes in favour to none against, with 2 abstentions (Brazil, Russian Federation) as resolution 944 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling the provisions of its resolutions 841 (1993) of 16 June 1993, 861 (1993) of 27 August 1993, 862 (1993) of 31 August 1993, 867 (1993) of 23 September 1993, 873 (1993) of 13 October 1993, 875 (1993) of 16 October 1993, 905 (1994) of 23 March 1994, 917 (1994) of 6 May 1994, 933 (1994) of 30 June 1994 and 940 (1994) of 31 July 1994,

Reaffirming the objectives of the urgent departure of the de facto authorities, the prompt return of the legitimately elected President Jean Bertrand Aristide and the restoration of the legitimate authorities of the Government of Haiti,

Recalling the terms of the Governors Island Agreement and the related New York Pact,

Welcoming the fact that initial units of the multinational force were peacefully deployed in Haiti on 19 September 1994,

Looking forward to the completion of the mission of the multinational force and to the timely deployment of the United Nations Mission in Haiti as foreseen in resolution 940 (1994),

Noting the statement of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide dated 25 September 1994,

Having received the report of 26 September 1994 of the multinational force in Haiti,

Recalling that, in paragraph 17 of its resolution 940 (1994), the Security Council affirmed its willingness to review the measures imposed pursuant to its resolutions 841 (1993), 873 (1993) and 917 (1994) with a view to lifting them in their entirety immediately following the return to Haiti of President Jean Bertrand Aristide,

Noting that paragraph 11 of resolution 917 (1994) remains in force,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to take steps to ensure the immediate completion of the deployment of the observers and other elements of the sixty person advance team of the United Nations Mission in Haiti established under resolution 940 (1994);

2. Urges Member States to respond promptly and positively to the Secretary-General's request for contributions to the Mission;

¹³¹ Ibid., p. 4.

¹³² Ibid., pp. 4-5.

¹³³ Ibid., p. 5.

3. Encourages the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, to continue his efforts to facilitate the immediate return to Haiti of the International Civilian Mission in Haiti;

4. Decides, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, to terminate the measures regarding Haiti set out in resolutions 841 (1993), 873 (1993) and 917 (1994), at 0001 hours eastern standard time on the day after the return to Haiti of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide;

5. Also decides to dissolve the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 841 (1993) concerning Haiti, with effect from 0001 hours eastern standard time on the day after the return to Haiti of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide;

6. Requests that the Secretary-General consult with the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States regarding the consideration of appropriate measures which might be taken by that organization consistent with the present resolution and report to the Council on the results of those consultations;

7. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

After the vote, the representative of France recalled that his delegation had always held that the sanctions imposed on Haiti, which had been voted on in several stages up to the level of a general embargo, with the exception of humanitarian products, would be lifted definitively following the return of the legitimate President, as provided for in the Governors Island Agreement and in all the relevant resolutions of the Council. The time had come to signal the fact that the return of the legitimate authorities would mark the beginning of normalization with Haiti; first political normalization, then economic normalization. The lifting of the sanctions regime would make it possible to consolidate democracy by ensuring the development of the country.¹³⁴

According to the representative of China, the timely lifting of sanctions, after reaching their projected goals in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Council resolutions was in the interests of all the parties, and especially that of the Haitian people. His delegation believed that the Council should, in handling other, similar cases, adopt a practical attitude to facilitate an appropriate solution as it had done in lifting the sanctions against Haiti. He had reservations, however, on some elements in resolution 944 (1994) concerning the sending of a multinational force to Haiti, which was unacceptable to

China. China had always abided to the purposes and principles of the Charter and was opposed to interfering in the internal affairs of other countries and resorting to force or the threat of force in international relations.¹³⁵

Decision of 15 October 1994 (3437th meeting):
resolution 948 (1994)

On 28 September 1994, pursuant to resolution 917 (1994), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the question concerning Haiti.¹³⁶ The Secretary-General reported that, on 18 September 1994, the United States and the de facto authorities in Haiti had reached an agreement which provided for “close cooperation” of the Haitian military and police forces with the United States military mission. It also referred to “an early and honourable retirement” of “certain military officers of the Haitian armed forces” when a general amnesty would be voted into law by the Haitian Parliament, or on 15 October 1994, whichever was earlier. The agreement further provided for the immediate lifting of the economic embargo and the economic sanctions. The Secretary-General further reported that the Multinational Force had continued its deployment and was estimated to have reached 15,697 troops. On 23 September 1994, an advance team of 12 United Nations military observers had been deployed in Port-au-Prince and that their operations were proceeding without incident. The rest of the advance team authorized by resolution 940 (1994) would be deployed shortly. Regarding MICIVIH, the Secretary-General intended, in coordination with the Secretary-General of OAS to redeploy the core group of observers in Santo Domingo as soon as their security was ensured. On 22 September 1994, the Permanent Council of OAS had requested the Secretary-General of OAS to take, in coordination with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the necessary measures for the return of MICIVIH, and to present recommendations for the enhancement and, if applicable, modification of the mission’s mandate during the reconstruction period, in keeping with the resolutions of the Ad Hoc Meeting of Foreign Ministers of OAS on Haiti.

At its 3437th meeting, on 15 October 1994, the Council resumed its consideration of the item.

¹³⁶ S/1994/1143.

¹³⁴ Ibid., pp. 5-6.

Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Canada and Haiti, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (United Kingdom) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a letter dated 15 October 1994 addressed to the President of the Council from the Secretary-General,¹³⁷ transmitting a letter of the same date addressed to the Secretary-General by the representative of the United States, in which she confirmed that President Aristide had returned to Haiti on that date. He also drew their attention to the report of the Secretary-General dated 28 September 1994,¹³⁸ to a letter dated 10 October 1994 addressed to the President of the Council from the representative of the United States,¹³⁹ transmitting the second report of the multinational force in Haiti, and to a draft resolution submitted by Argentina, Canada, Djibouti, France, Pakistan, Spain, the United States and Venezuela.¹⁴⁰

The representative of Canada noted that the peaceful deployment of the multinational coalition under the authority of the United Nations had played a decisive role in establishing conditions which had allowed the return of President Aristide. Canada supported a rapid transition from the multinational operation to UNMIH when a secure and stable climate had been established in Haiti. It also welcomed the return of the joint United Nations/OAS civilian mission.¹⁴¹

The representative of Haiti stated that the return of President Aristide to his country had once again demonstrated that when consensus was reached, the international community had the means to have its decisions implemented. Stating that peace and development were related, he stressed that there could be no true peace if the living conditions of the population were not improved and appealed to the international community to help rebuild Haiti.¹⁴²

Speaking in explanation of vote, the representative of Brazil recalled that, at the time of the adoption of resolution 940 (1994), his delegation had stated that the issue of using force under Chapter VII in relation to a country in the western hemisphere was a matter of the utmost seriousness. Its main reservations related to the authorization for the establishment and deployment of a multinational force with a broad and vague mandate. The speaker noted that reservations had also been expressed by Latin American countries non-members of the Council. Similarly, the draft resolution under consideration contained concepts that his delegation could not support. His delegation was not prepared to give retroactive endorsement to provisions of a draft resolution about which it had expressed reservations.¹⁴³

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted by 14 votes in favour to none against, with 1 abstention (Brazil), as resolution 948 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling the provisions of its resolutions 841 (1993) of 16 June 1993, 861 (1993) of 27 August 1993, 862 (1993) of 31 August 1993, 867 (1993) of 23 September 1993, 873 (1993) of 13 October 1993, 875 (1993) of 16 October 1993, 905 (1994) of 23 March 1994, 917 (1994) of 6 May 1994, 933 (1994) of 30 June 1994, 940 (1994) of 31 July 1994 and 944 (1994) of 29 September 1994,

Recalling the terms of the Governors Island Agreement and the related New York Pact,

Recalling also the different positions taken by its members when resolution 940 (1994) was adopted,

Looking forward to the completion of the mission of the multinational force in Haiti and to the deployment of the United Nations Mission in Haiti as soon as a secure and stable environment is established, as foreseen in resolution 940 (1994),

Having received the reports of the multinational force of 26 September and 10 October 1994,

Having also received the report of the Secretary-General of 28 September 1994, submitted pursuant to paragraph 16 of resolution 917 (1994),

Welcoming the letter from the Secretary-General dated 15 October 1994, confirming that President Jean-Bertrand Aristide has returned to Haiti,

1. Welcomes with great satisfaction the return to Haiti of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide on 15 October 1994, and expresses its confidence that the people of Haiti can now begin to rebuild their country with dignity and consolidate democracy in a spirit of national reconciliation;

2. Welcomes in particular the fact that, with the convening of the Haitian Parliament and the departure of the military leadership, the process of implementing the Governors Island Agreement, the New York Pact and the objectives of the United Nations as expressed in the resolutions of the Council is well under way;

3. Expresses its full support for efforts by President Aristide, democratic leaders in Haiti and the legitimate organs of the restored Government to bring Haiti out of crisis and return it to the democratic community of nations;

4. Commends the efforts of all States, organizations and individuals who have contributed to this outcome;

5. Recognizes in particular the efforts of the multinational force in Haiti, authorized under resolution 940 (1994) and those of the Member States participating in the multinational force on behalf of the international community, in creating the conditions necessary for the return of democracy to the people of Haiti;

6. Expresses its support for the deployment of the advance team of the United Nations Mission in Haiti and the continued efforts of the Secretary-General to complete the composition of the Mission;

7. Notes that under the terms of resolution 940 (1994), the Mission will replace the multinational force in Haiti when the Security Council determines that a secure and stable environment has been established;

8. Welcomes the appointment of the new Special Representative of the Secretary-General, and thanks the former Special Envoy of the Secretaries-General of the United Nations and the Organization of American States for his efforts;

9. Urges that cooperation continue between the Secretaries-General of the United Nations and the Organization of American States, especially regarding the rapid return to Haiti of the members of the International Civilian Mission in Haiti;

10. Welcomes the fact that, now that President Aristide has returned to Haiti, sanctions will be lifted in accordance with resolution 944 (1994);

11. Reaffirms the willingness of the international community to provide assistance to the people of Haiti, with the expectation that they will do their utmost to rebuild their country;

12. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

The representative of France expressed regret at the fact that the Council had not been able to hail with unanimity the clear success of the international community in Haiti. Whatever reservations were expressed when resolution 940 (1994) was adopted, no one could refuse to acknowledge that without the deployment of the multinational force in Haiti President Aristide would not have returned to his country and the Haitian people would have continued to suffer military dictatorship and to live in poverty.¹⁴⁴

The representative of the Russian Federation expressed the hope that the multinational force in Haiti would carry out its mandate in accordance with resolution 940 (1994). His delegation proceeded on the basis that, in due course, the Council would have to analyse the situation in connection with the requirements of paragraph 8 of that resolution, a necessary condition for a decision by the Council to proceed to the second stage of the United Nations operation in Haiti. In that regard, his delegation intended to give special attention to the criteria for conducting peacekeeping operations, criteria which were becoming a regular feature of the Council's consideration of such problems.¹⁴⁵

Other speakers also emphasized the need for the international community to assist Haiti in its efforts for reconstruction.¹⁴⁶

Decision of 29 November 1994
(3470th meeting): resolution 964 (1994)

On 18 October 1994, pursuant to resolution 940 (1994), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the question concerning Haiti,¹⁴⁷ in which he reported on the activities of the advance team of UNMIH since the deployment of the multinational force in Haiti. He noted that the deployment of the advance team, whose tasks included coordination with the multinational force in preparation for full deployment of UNMIH, monitoring the operations of the force, and making its good offices available, as required, had been successfully implemented with the full support of the Dominican Republic and the multinational force. The civilian police component of the advance team was coordinating its activities with the Commander of the international police monitors, which formed part of the multinational force, in order to work out criteria for the transition from the force to UNMIH. As part of the planning process for that transition, the military component of the advance team had established a joint working group with the force. Under the terms of resolution 940 (1994), it was clear that the transition from the multinational force to UNMIH could take place only when a secure and stable environment had been established and UNMIH had adequate force capability and structure to assume the full range of functions envisaged for it. The Secretary-General concluded by noting that the advance team of UNMIH was fully operational. Its tasks would expire when the mission of the multinational force ended and when UNMIH assumed "the full range of its functions".

On 21 November 1994, pursuant to resolution 940 (1994), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the implementation of that resolution since the deployment of the multinational force in Haiti.¹⁴⁸ The Secretary-General reported that, following the deployment of the multinational force, President Aristide had returned to Haiti on 15 October 1994. The new Government had taken office on 8 November. During his visit to Haiti on 15 November, the Secretary-General had assured the President of Haiti that the United Nations, in collaboration with OAS, would continue to assist the country in national reconstruction, political stability and reconstruction. The Secretary-General also reported that the multinational force continued to operate smoothly towards achieving its objectives under resolution 940 (1994). The military and police personnel of the advance team had also been engaged in on-site planning for the transition from the multinational force to UNMIH. He had instructed that a technical team be dispatched to Haiti to work with the advance team in establishing the operational and logistical plans for the deployment of the Mission. The Secretary-General further noted that the salient issues that would need to be addressed in order to assure a smooth transition from the multinational force to UNMIH, such as training the Haitian police, a timetable of forthcoming legislative elections and the establishment of a secure and stable environment, continued to be the subject of discussions between the United Nations, Haiti, the United States and other interested parties. Of particular concern was the creation of the new Haitian police. While training of the interim Haitian police had commenced, time would be required for it to reach the strength necessary to enforce law and order effectively so that UNMIH could assist the Government of Haiti in fulfilling its responsibilities. In accordance with resolution 940 (1994) a United Nations electoral team had been dispatched to Haiti on 26 October to evaluate possibilities for UNMIH assistance as it had been requested to do by resolution 940 (1994) in establishing an environment conducive to the organization of free and fair elections. Regarding the expulsion by the Haitian de facto regime of members of MICIVIH which had occurred on 12 July 1994, the Secretary-General had decided, in coordination with the Secretary-General of OAS, to redeploy the core group of MICIVIH. Finally, in accordance with resolution 940 (1994) a team from the Department of Humanitarian Affairs had visited Haiti from 25 September in order to establish a comprehensive list of critical emergency needs. Additionally, a survey team had travelled to Haiti on 4 November with a view to updating the Emergency Economic Recovery Programme to that country. The Secretary-General concluded by stating that the head of the UNMIH advance team had recommended that the strength of the team, including United Nations military and police observers and military planners, should be increased in order to further facilitate planning of UNMIH, identification of conditions required for the transition and, most important, preparation for the actual transition. To accomplish those tasks, a substantial expansion of the advance team was required. He recommended that the Council authorize expansion of the advance team up to 500 members to allow it to be progressively strengthened so that it was fully prepared to enter the transition period when UNMIH took over responsibilities from the multinational force.

At its 3470th meeting, on 29 November 1994, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Canada, Haiti and Venezuela, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (United States) drew the attention of the members of the Council to the above-mentioned reports of the Secretary-General, as well as to letters dated 27 September, 10 and 24 October and 7 and 21 November 1994, addressed to the President of the Council by the representative of the United States,¹⁴⁹ transmitting further reports of the multinational force in Haiti. She also drew their attention to a draft resolution submitted by Argentina, Canada, France, the United States and Venezuela,¹⁵⁰ and read out a revision that had been made to the draft in its provisional form.

Speaking in explanation of vote, the representative of Brazil recalled that his country had always advocated that, in all cases, diplomatic and other political resources should be exhausted before coercive measures were adopted. In particular, his delegation had more than once expressed its reservations on actions not undertaken under the direct control of the United Nations. Since the Council had considered the options available to establish an expanded force of UNMIH, Brazil had upheld the view that a United Nations presence in Haiti would warrant a strengthening of UNMIH in order to fully implement the mandate emanating from resolution 867 (1993), in accordance with established principles and practices of United Nations operations. As a result, the objective of expanding the advance team of UNMIH would seem a justifiable development in the light of the situation in Haiti. While concurring with the objective of advancing the process of future deployment of UNMIH as soon as the security situation in Haiti permitted, his delegation expressed concern at the terms under which that measure was being taken by the Council. While it could have supported an objective, procedural resolution expanding the advance team of UNMIH, without entering into considerations of a political nature, the draft resolution before the Council still contained elements over which his delegation had expressed reservations on all prior occasions. Since it could not allow for a retroactive endorsement of provisions authorizing recourse to all necessary means in its region, its concerns remained unchanged. Brazil would therefore abstain in the vote.¹⁵¹

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that his delegation had serious doubts as to the advisability and timeliness of the adoption of the draft resolution before the Council authorizing a significant increase in the numbers of the advance team of UNMIH. The adoption of the draft resolution could mean that there was a kind of creeping, de facto transition from the multinational force in Haiti towards a United Nations stage of the operation when the requirements laid down in resolution 940 (1994) had basically not been met or implemented and when the Council had not yet taken the appropriate decision. His delegation saw a direct contradiction in that regard with the assurances given by the sponsors of resolution 940 (1994), upon its adoption, that there would be no automatic shift from a multinational force operation to a United Nations operation. The draft resolution, as originally submitted, gave a very vague idea of the mandate of the advance team, and his delegation was unable to glean any clear notion of the composition of the additional contingent that was to be sent to beef up the advance team. In addition, the speaker observed that there was a clear disproportion in the amount of attention given and reaction evidenced by the Council to one specific situation, even under conditions when the requirements set by the Council had certainly not been implemented and met, while at the same time, in other circumstances, the adoption of decisions relating to very acute situations that actually posed a threat to international peace and security was dragged out. That was a demonstration of double standards, which was simply intolerable in the activities of the Council. The Russian delegation would therefore abstain in the vote. Such a position was dictated exclusively by its desire to ensure respect for what had been established by way of standards and procedures in the Council.¹⁵²

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted by 13 votes in favour to none against, with 2 abstentions (Brazil, Russian Federation), as resolution 964 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling the provisions of its resolutions 841 (1993) of 16 June 1993, 861 (1993) of 27 August 1993, 862 (1993) of 31 August 1993, 867 (1993) of 23 September 1993, 873 (1993) of 13 October 1993, 875 (1993) of 16 October 1993, 905 (1994) of 23 March 1994, 917 (1994) of 6 May 1994, 933 (1994) of 30 June 1994, 940 (1994) of 31 July 1994, 944 (1994) of 29 September 1994 and 948 (1994) of 15 October 1994,

Recalling also the terms of the Governors Island Agreement and the related New York Pact,

8. Encourages continuous close coordination between the multinational force and the advance team of the Mission;

After the vote, the representative of France expressed his delegation's belief that thought should be given to the transition period and to the replacement of the multinational force by UNMIH. Because of its concern that they should be prepared in the best possible conditions, his delegation voted in favour of resolution 964 (1994), by which it had been decided to strengthen the advance team of UNMIH. Special emphasis should be placed on the training of the police and on the preparation for free and regular legislative elections. His delegation recalled the importance that it attached to that crucial moment in the political life of Haiti and in the restoration of democracy. The United Nations should step up its preparations for the holding of that poll, and the Government of Haiti should take without delay the measures which were within its competence.¹⁵³

¹⁵³ Ibid., p. 4.

The representative of China stated that his delegation wished to put on record its reservations with regard to elements of resolution 964 (1994) concerning the multinational force. While that force might have contributed to the establishment of a secure environment in Haiti, his delegation's reservations were based on China's principled position concerning the peaceful settlement of disputes. China had consistently complied with the purposes and principles of the Charter and opposed interference in the internal affairs of other countries and the use or threat of the use of force in international relations. It expounded that position when the Council adopted resolution 940 (1994), which authorized military action in Haiti. Resolution 964 (1994) should, therefore, be understood even less as an affirmation of that so-called formula.¹⁵⁴

The President, speaking in her capacity as representative of the United States, took note of the Secretary-General's observation that no acts of intimidation or violence against the United Nations or any other international presence had been reported. She stated that the operation in Haiti was poised to become a model for peacekeeping and international cooperation. As noted in the report of the Secretary-General, the advance team was working closely with the multinational force to prepare for the transition to UNMIH under the provisions of resolution 940 (1994). Expanding the size of the advance team would provide the planning flexibility necessary for that transition. In asking that the Secretary-General inform the Council of increases, and that those increases be coordinated with the commander of the multinational force, resolution 964 (1994) underscored the good planning and coordination that, already, characterized the operation. Increasing the size of the UNMIH advance team in the careful fashion called for in resolution 964 (1994) made a key contribution to the transition. She added that it was the task of the multinational force to establish a secure and stable environment so that the phase of political, economic and social rebuilding under the eye of UNMIH could occur.¹⁵⁵

resolution 975 (1995)

On 17 January 1995, pursuant to resolution 940 (1994), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council

¹⁵⁴ Ibid., pp. 4-5.

¹⁵⁵ Ibid., pp. 5-6.

a report on the question concerning Haiti, which assessed the security situation in the country, the threats that might be confronted in the future and the means needed for the international community to assist the Government of Haiti to counter them.¹⁵⁶ It also contained recommendations on the future of UNMIH. The Secretary-General observed that the security situation had improved considerably since the peaceful deployment of the multinational force, the end of the de facto regime and the return of President Aristide. No serious danger to the existence of the Government could be identified. The Armed Forces of Haiti no more existed as an organized force. He noted, however, that there was no room for complacency. Although not politically motivated, too many crimes were still taking place. The Secretary-General further observed that, notwithstanding the actions by the multinational force and interested governments, an effective Haitian police force would not yet exist by the time UNMIH took over. In those circumstances, the task of the civilian police of UNMIH would be quantitatively greater and qualitatively more demanding than had been the case in previous peacekeeping operations in which United Nations civilian police had been deployed. In the early stages, therefore, UNMIH, like the existing multinational force, might itself have to take coercive action from time to time, in the closest consultation with the Government of Haiti and in accordance with UNMIH's rules of engagement. The Secretary-General was confident that UNMIH could accomplish its mission if it was given the resources it needed. In that connection, he recommended that the police component of UNMIH be increased to 900 civilian police officers¹⁵⁷ and that the Council authorize the extension of UNMIH's mandate for a period of six months to 31 July 1995. He expected that UNMIH would be able to take over on or around 31 March 1995. That meant that part of the forthcoming election campaign would take place during the multinational force phase, while the rest of the campaign and the actual election would take place after the handover to UNMIH. The Secretary-General was also confident that UNMIH would be able to fulfil its mandate satisfactorily and give all necessary assistance to the Government of Haiti to sustain a secure and stable environment. To do so, however, it would need both the continued commitment of all those who provided its human and material resources and the continued cooperation of the people of Haiti. He concluded by stating that the goodwill of the international community was no substitute for the Haitian people's own efforts to build their future.¹⁵⁸

At its 3496th meeting, on 30 January 1995, the Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Belize, Canada, Haiti and Venezuela, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Argentina) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by Argentina, Canada, France, Germany, Honduras, Italy, Rwanda, the United Kingdom, the United States and Venezuela.¹⁵⁹ He further drew their attention to the following documents: letters dated 5 and 19 December 1994 and 9 and 23 January 1995 addressed to the President of the Council by the representative of the United States,¹⁶⁰ transmitting further reports of the multinational force in Haiti; a letter dated 18 January 1995 addressed to the President of the Council by the representatives of Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, the Bahamas, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bolivia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Dominica, Grenada, Guatemala, Guyana, Israel, Jamaica, Jordan, the Netherlands, the Philippines, Poland, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Trinidad and Tobago, the United Kingdom and the United States,¹⁶¹ conveying, in accordance with paragraph 8 of resolution 940 (1994), the recommendation of the Member States participating in the multinational force in Haiti and the assessment of the Commander of the force that a secure and stable environment had been established in Haiti; and a letter dated 27 January 1995 addressed to the President of the Council by the representative of Haiti.¹⁶²

The representative of Haiti expressed his Government's support for the draft resolution before the Council, as well as for the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General of 17 January 1995. Recalling that the mandate of the multinational force was to create conditions for the implementation of the Governors Island Agreement, in particular the creation of an environment conducive to the deployment of UNMIH, he stated that such an environment existed in Haiti. He also noted that, since the deployment of the multinational force on 19 September 1994, the Governors Island Agreement had been progressively implemented. Those who had usurped political power had withdrawn; the legitimate authorities had resumed their functions; constitutional order had been re-established; and President Jean-Bertrand Aristide had resumed his position as Head of State. An electoral commission was preparing for the forthcoming legislative and municipal elections. Furthermore, the human rights situation had improved considerably, as noted by the joint United Nations/OAS International Civilian Mission in Haiti. At the same time, the confidence of the Haitian people in a better future was tempered by what they saw as the possible survival of the coup d'état regime, the activities of a network of their former oppressors, the widespread availability of weapons and the inability of the Haitian judicial system to satisfy the demands of the victims of the coup d'état. The Haitian Government was aware that urgent measures needed to be taken to address that problem. It was only waiting for UNMIH to be deployed in order to assist it in such tasks, as promised under the Governors Island Agreement and resolution 861 (1993). His delegation therefore hoped that the Council would unanimously adopt the draft resolution before it, as a sign of the continued support of the international community for the democratization of Haitian society.¹⁶³

The representative of Canada stated that the time had come to begin the transition from the multinational coalition to UNMIH, as envisaged in resolution 940 (1994). The draft resolution before the Council affirmed the existence of the secure and stable environment required for the deployment of UNMIH and envisaged that the transfer from the multinational force in Haiti to UNMIH would be completed by 31 March 1995. That transition underlined the continuity of the international community's commitment to Haiti. While his delegation supported the increase in UNMIH's civilian police component for the purpose of providing additional training and monitoring the interim public security force, it stressed that UNMIH's responsibility remained to assist, not to replace, Haitian efforts in sustaining a secure and stable environment. Stating that continued assistance from the international community aimed at helping rebuild the economy remained key in consolidating stability, he contended that the link between economic and social development, on the one hand, and peace and security, on the other, was nowhere more evident than in Haiti.¹⁶⁴

Speaking on behalf of the Caribbean Community (CARICOM) and Suriname, the representative of Belize expressed support for the draft resolution before the Council. Referring to the Secretary-General's observation that the relative security being enjoyed by the Haitians people remained fragile, and that the political and social environment contained many factors that could lead to future instability, he stated that it was vital that the security situation should be sustainable after the departure of the multinational force and the full deployment of UNMIH. For that reason, CARICOM Governments and Suriname stressed the need for effective deterrence to continue after the handover to UNMIH and to respond to any residual threat to the Government of Haiti. A capability for swift, coordinated and overwhelming action anywhere in the country was therefore a necessity. In that regard, he noted the indications in the Secretary-General's report that the military component of UNMIH would include a quick-reaction force. He trusted that it would be of a strength and capacity adequate to satisfy that vital security need.¹⁶⁵

Speaking in explanation of vote, the representative of Nigeria said that the draft resolution before the Council was timely, balanced and constructive. His delegation would support it for the following reasons. First, the draft resolution, in authorizing the phase of United Nations operations in Haiti, had secured the consent of the Government of Haiti, which was a vital prerequisite for all Chapter VI United Nations peacekeeping operations. His delegation's understanding was that the troops to be deployed in Haiti would use force only in exercise of the right of self-defence and in fulfilment of other objectives defined in the mandate. Secondly, his delegation agreed with the six-month mandate period provided for the United Nations operation in the first instance. However, it was important that the force level of UNMIH be kept under constant review, as provided for in the preambular part of the draft resolution. In that respect, his delegation was in favour of establishing a uniform standard for all peacekeeping operations authorized by the Council and, hence, would support the insertion of the substance of the language of the draft resolution in all future resolutions which dealt with mandate extensions and reviews of force levels of United Nations peacekeeping operations. Lastly, his delegation welcomed the import of operative paragraph 10 of the draft resolution concerning assistance and support for the economic, social and constitutional development of Haiti. That provision accorded with what should be the international community's commitment to assisting all States in post-conflict peacebuilding situations.¹⁶⁶

¹⁶⁴ Ibid., pp. 3-4.

¹⁶⁵ Ibid., pp. 4-5.

According to the representative of Honduras, the case of Haiti had proved to be an exception in all its forms. In his view, while the crisis in that country was of an internal nature and did not constitute a threat to international peace and security, at the same time it had serious political and legal implications for democracy. Serious violations of human rights and the mass exodus of a considerable portion of the Haitian population for political and economic reasons called for prompt and resolute action on the part of the international community, the United Nations and OAS. His Government was of the view that force should be used as a last resort in maintaining international peace and security and believed that that type of decision should be adopted by the Council in any event with the support of all its members, that was to say, in a collegial manner. The concept of a multinational force under the leadership and control of one country should not be regarded as an alternative to the mechanisms that were established in the Charter for the maintenance of international peace and security, especially at a time when very developed concepts and instruments, such as preventive diplomacy, peacebuilding and peacekeeping, were available. His Government also recognized the importance of joint activities undertaken by the United Nations, OAS and the multinational force deployed in Haiti, in particular the commitment of the Secretariat to work together with OAS in assisting Haiti in the fields of national reconciliation, political stability and social and economic reconstruction. With regard to the organization of free and fair elections in Haiti, he hoped that the Secretariat had begun the relevant consultations with OAS to work on those tasks in a coordinated way. He concluded by stating that Haiti could soon provide the third example — after Central America and Mozambique — of the Organization's intervening through a peacekeeping operation under Council resolutions to make progress from conflict to peace and from peace to a stable and lasting democracy.¹⁶⁷

The representative of China recalled that his delegation had consistently stood for the peaceful settlement of disputes and opposed the use or threat of use of force in international relations. Considering the possible changes in Haiti's situation, and particularly, the security situation following the completion of the deployment of UNMIH by the end of March, his delegation deemed it necessary that the Council should at that time reconsider such questions as the mandate and size of UNMIH, just as it reconsidered those questions for the peacekeeping operations in Georgia and Tajikistan and for some of the operations in Africa. He regretted that amendments proposed by his delegation in that regard were not accepted; therefore it would abstain on the draft resolution.¹⁶⁸

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that the situation in Haiti no longer posed a threat to peace and security. While his delegation continued to have certain concerns, it considered that it was possible to allow the transition to the United Nations phase of the operation. Both in respect to Haiti and in a broader context, his delegation's approach to the matter of United Nations peacekeeping operations was set out during the Council's discussion of the Secretary-General's Supplement to the Agenda for Peace. Specifically, it considered that there had to be a substantive discussion of what the real requirements for United Nations peacekeeping activities were and what resources were needed to meet those requirements. Every peacekeeping operation was unique and the questions involved had to be addressed in the light of each specific situation. But a single, clear-cut set of criteria should be fashioned for launching and conducting such operations. That would avoid double standards in the approach of the United Nations and the division of conflicts into "priority" and "secondary" conflicts.¹⁶⁹

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted by 14 votes in favour to none against, with 1 abstention (China), as resolution 975 (1995), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling the provisions of its resolutions 841 (1993) of 16 June 1993, 861 (1993) of 27 August 1993, 862 (1993) of 31 August 1993, 867 (1993) of 23 September 1993, 873 (1993) of 13 October 1993, 875 (1993) of 16 October 1993, 905 (1994) of 23 March 1994, 917 (1994) of 6 May 1994, 940 (1994) of 31 July 1994, 944 (1994) of 29 September 1994, 948 (1994) of 15 October 1994 and 964 (1994) of 29 November 1994,

5. Determines, as required by resolution 940 (1994) and based on the recommendations of the Member States participating in the multinational and in concurrence with paragraph 91 of the report of the Secretary-General of 17 January 1995, that a secure and stable environment, appropriate to the deployment of the United Nations Mission in Haiti as foreseen in resolution 940 (1994), now exists in Haiti;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to establish a fund, in addition to that authorized in paragraph 10 of resolution 867 (1993), through which voluntary contributions from Member States can be made available to support the international police monitoring programme and assist with the creation of an adequate police force in Haiti;

13. Also requests that the Secretary-General apprise the Council at an early date of the modalities of the transition from the multinational force to the United Nations Mission in Haiti, and also submit to the Council no later than 15 April 1995 a progress report on the deployment of the Mission;

14. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

After the vote, the representative of the United States stated that the multinational force, authorized by the Council in July, had fulfilled its mission. Planning for the transfer of responsibility to UNMIH was well under way. The Council's vote verified that the transition would occur by the end of March. Her Government had worked with the multinational force and the Secretariat to ensure a seamless transfer of responsibility, a transition without marked change. More than half of the military personnel and about one third of the civilians in UNMIH would be veterans of the multinational force. Overall, there would be no dramatic alteration in mission size, troop capabilities or quality of command. The United Nations troops would have the right to use force to defend themselves, including the right to oppose forcible attempts to impede the discharge of their functions. She warned that if that United Nations force was pushed, it had the leadership, the mandate, the fire-power and the will to push back. She also noted that, although economic reconstruction was not part of the United Nations peacekeeping mission, efforts to that end were complimentary. She joined the Secretary-General in calling upon the international community to work together with the Haitian Government to implement the emergency economic recovery programme. She concluded by stating that the future of Haiti rested, as it must, in Haitian hands. Democratic institutions could not be imposed upon a society; they had to be nurtured from within.¹⁷⁰

The representative of France recalled that when the Council adopted resolution 940 (1994), it decided that the objective was to hand over to the United Nations as soon as a secure and stable environment had been established and the United Nations was in a position to take over it. The conditions had been met to allow the second phase of the operation on 31 March 1995. That attested to the progress that had been made since the deployment of the multinational force. He added that the holding of legislative elections was a decisive element in the return of democracy and should take place as soon as possible. The United Nations and the Haitians had to make all arrangements necessary for the elections to be held in complete security and impartiality. Lastly, he emphasized the importance of economic development and the rebuilding of institutions, particularly the judiciary.¹⁷¹

The representative of the United Kingdom agreed that the conditions in Haiti permitted a smooth and early transition to UNMIH. As resolution 975 (1995) made clear, it would be important for the Secretary-General to keep UNMIH force levels under constant review and to recommend to the Council adjustments as and when the situation in Haiti permitted. The resolution further acknowledged that the threat formerly posed to peace and security in the region had been removed. He added that ultimately it was the Haitians themselves who had responsibility for the reconstruction of their country.¹⁷²

The President, speaking in his capacity as representative of Argentina, stated that his country had attached primary importance to trying to solve the Haitian crisis within the framework of OAS and in the United Nations. It agreed with the transfer of functions from the multinational force to UNMIH as well as with the level of military and civilian personnel recommended by the Secretary-General. He noted also that the multinational force had carried out the mandate of the international community, pursuant to resolution 940 (1994), within the framework of the Charter, in a responsible manner and in keeping with the circumstances it had to confront. He was convinced that, in the context of post-conflict peacebuilding, the political efforts made by the Council should be accompanied by economic and social measures.¹⁷³

Other speakers further supported the deployment of UNMIH in accordance with the Secretary-General's proposals, stressing, inter alia, the importance of the upcoming legislative elections and the establishment of effective law-and-order forces, as well as the need to assist and support Haiti's institutional, social and economic development.¹⁷⁴

Decision of 24 April 1995 (3523rd meeting):
statement by the President

On 13 April 1995, pursuant to resolution 975 (1995), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on UNMIH, in which he apprised it of the modalities of the transition from the multinational force to UNMIH.¹⁷⁵ The Secretary-General reported that the transfer of responsibilities, from the multinational force to UNMIH, had taken place on 31 March 1995. His visit to Haiti on that occasion had provided him with the opportunity to exchange views with the President of Haiti on the political situation of the country, security-related matters, efforts to rehabilitate the economy and on the process of national reconciliation. The Secretary-General noted that the existing political situation was characterized by wide popular support for President Aristide and few human rights violations. At the same time, there were major institutional weaknesses and growing frustrations over the slow pace of economic recovery. The extreme poverty and high unemployment prevailing in much of the country required sustained international attention. He stated that the issue of security was central to the entire United Nations operations in Haiti. While very few human rights violations had been reported over the last two months, crime remained at a high level by Haitian standards and a sense of insecurity prevailed. The violence, together with the shortcomings of the Interim Public Security Force, had led to concern that UNMIH, operating without enforcement authority, would not prove as effective as the multinational force, whose mandate included enforcement powers under Chapter VII of the Charter. The existence of a secure environment remained a major precondition for a free and fair electoral campaign and a reasonable turnout of voters on election day. The Secretary-General reported in that regard that President Aristide had informed him that he planned to continue his meetings with the leaders of political parties and members of the Provisional Electoral Council. At the last such meeting, on 6 April 1995, it had been announced that the elections would be postponed until the 25 June. Stating that that was not a major setback, the Secretary-General stressed that dialogue should continue with a view to achieving the political consensus needed to enhance the benefits and the credibility of the electoral process. Further to a request by the Government of Haiti, the United Nations was providing technical assistance on electoral matters. MICIVIH, UNMIH and other United Nations agencies would also be asked to support the observation efforts of OAS.

The Secretary-General further stated that the transfer of responsibilities from the multinational force to UNMIH on 31 March 1995 was a milestone in the overall efforts of the international community to bring peace and stability to Haiti. The success achieved by the multinational force in the restoration of the legitimate Government of Haiti and the careful, detailed planning for the assumption of responsibilities by UNMIH gave reason to hope that that United Nations operation, notwithstanding the broader scope of its mandate, would be successful. The state of the Haitian economy would be a critical test of the success — or otherwise — of the whole process which was unfolding. Although economic development was not part of the mandate of UNMIH, the Mission would, where possible, assist in the implementation of development activities. In that context, he had appointed a Deputy Special Representative who would also hold the position of Resident Representative for the United Nations Development Programme. It was the first time that the United Nations had linked a peacekeeping mission to development activities in that manner. It would promote closer cooperation among all concerned and facilitate the transition from UNMIH to continuing peacebuilding activities by the United Nations in accordance with established procedures for the coordination of operational activities for development. The Secretary-General further observed that, in accordance with the mandate established in resolution 940 (1994), a fully deployed UNMIH would be able to provide the assistance the Haitian authorities required to carry out their tasks, particularly during the election campaign. In that regard, the establishment of the new Haitian police and the rehabilitation of the judicial system remained crucial both for the maintenance of a secure environment and for the consolidation of democracy, respect for human rights and an end to impunity. He stressed that UNMIH would react swiftly and firmly to any attempt to foment instability.

At its 3523rd meeting, on 24 April 1995, the Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Czech Republic) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a letter dated 7 April 1995 addressed to the President of the Council by the representatives of Argentina, Canada, France, the United States and Venezuela,¹⁷⁶ transmitting a statement of the Friends of the Secretary-General on the question of Haiti. The President then stated that, following consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹⁷⁷

The Security Council welcomes the transfer of responsibilities from the multinational force in Haiti to the United Nations Mission in Haiti that took place on 31 March 1995 and shares the Secretary-General's view, as stated in his report of 13 April 1995, that this transfer was a milestone in the overall efforts of the international community to bring peace and stability to Haiti. The Council commends the Secretary-General, his Special Representative, the Commander of the multinational force and the other dedicated personnel of the United Nations and the force who made the transition possible.

The Council notes, however, that much remains to be done to institutionalize democracy in Haiti and reiterates the Secretary-General's call for the people of Haiti and their leaders to help the Mission to help them. While the Mission's presence will assist the Haitian Government to sustain a secure and stable environment, the existence of a functioning and fair justice system and the early deployment of a permanent and effective police force by the Haitian authorities are central to Haiti's long term stability. The Council joins the Secretary-General and the Friends of the Secretary-General on the question of Haiti in inviting Member States to make voluntary contributions to support the international police monitoring programme and assist with the creation of an adequate police force.

The Government and people of Haiti bear the primary responsibility for Haiti's political, economic and social reconstruction. However, the Security Council notes that the sustained commitment of the international community is indispensable for long term peace and stability in Haiti.

The Council shares the opinion of the Secretary-General that the issue of security is central to the entire United Nations operation in Haiti.

The Council underlines the crucial importance of free, fair and secure elections for the democratic future of Haiti. The Council stresses the necessity of a secure environment in Haiti, including during the June and July legislative and local election period, and underlines the importance of a functioning police force and an established judicial system. The Council urges the Government of Haiti to take all necessary steps to ensure the success of the elections, and in particular, to register as many voters as possible prior to the elections and to assure, in cooperation with the international community, that political campaigning occurs in an environment free from partisan intimidation.

The Council welcomes President Aristide's meetings with leaders of political parties and members of the Provisional Electoral Council and stresses the importance of dialogue with a view to achieving the political consensus needed to enhance the benefits and credibility of the electoral process. The Council also calls upon the Government of Haiti to cooperate fully with the United Nations and the Organization of American States to ensure that the preparations for elections and the elections themselves can take place in a secure and stable environment. Consistent with the objectives of Council resolution 940 (1994), the Council emphasizes the importance for the presidential elections to take place on schedule before the scheduled withdrawal of the Mission in February 1996.

Finally, the Council welcomes the Secretary-General's decision to coordinate the Mission's peacekeeping mission with development activities carried out by others, in a manner consistent with the Mission's mandate, to help the Government of Haiti to strengthen its institutions, particularly the judicial system. The Council hopes this coordination will promote closer cooperation of all concerned in Haiti, as well as improve the effectiveness of international support for rebuilding Haiti's economy.

Decision of 31 July 1995 (3559th meeting):

On 24 July 1995, pursuant to resolution 975 (1995), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on UNMIH.¹⁷⁸ The Secretary-General stated that four months after the Mission had taken over from the multinational force, it could be said that UNMIH had made significant progress towards achieving the goals of the mandate with which it was entrusted pursuant to resolution 940 (1994). It was expected that it would be able to maintain a secure and stable environment throughout the election period and the forthcoming presidential elections. It was also reasonable to hope that, by February 1996, Haiti would have duly elected institutions and that a functioning security system would be in place. The Secretary-General recalled that the international community had recognized that sustaining a secure and stable environment was essential to promote the economic, social and institutional development necessary for a lasting restoration of democracy in Haiti. Effective policing capabilities and related institution-building efforts continued to be urgently required as the Haitians themselves gradually assumed full responsibility for the maintenance of law and order. In that connection, he appealed to Member States to give immediate and serious consideration to contributing to the voluntary fund established pursuant to resolution 975 (1995) to support the international police monitoring programme and assist with the creation of an adequate police force in Haiti. The Secretary-General noted that the UNMIH civilian police had achieved commendable results with the interim public security force and had likewise assisted the Haitian National Police. Reporting on the legislative and local elections held on 25 June, he noted that on the whole, election day had been peaceful and the level of violence did not materialize. Allegations of fraud and some intimidation had been, however, levelled and there had been numerous complaints of irregularities. While the full results of the elections were still to be announced, he was confident that the parties to the electoral process would draw on that experience and take steps to correct the organizational mistakes and shortcomings that had hampered the process. It was imperative that the electoral process led to a stable transition to a newly elected Government for the people of Haiti who, in spite of the flaws in the elections, had been able to vote free of fear and intimidation. The Secretary-General concluded by recommending that the Council authorize the extension of UNMIH's mandate until the end of February 1996, as envisaged in resolution 940 (1994), which established the objective of completing UNMIH's mission by that time.

At its 3559th meeting, on 31 July 1995, the Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Canada, Haiti and Venezuela, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Honduras) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by Argentina, Canada, France, Honduras, the United States and Venezuela.¹⁷⁹

Noting that the draft resolution provided for the extension of UNMIH's mandate until February 1996, the representative of Canada stated that it would be important to consider, well in advance of the expiration of that mandate, ways to ensure that the help to Haiti would continue. It would be unfortunate if the democratic foundations for Haiti's future were to crumble in the absence of sustained engagement by the international community. To that end, his delegation looked forward to discussing options for a continued international presence in Haiti.¹⁸⁰

Addressing the issue of elections, the representative of Haiti stated that partial elections would take place in those areas where it had been impossible to hold them. Moreover, the Provisional Electoral Council had been reorganized. It was to be hoped that the organization of the complementary elections and the second round would take into account the shortcomings of the first round. His delegation further fully concurred with the views of the Secretary-General to the effect that UNMIH personnel performed their tasks in an exemplary manner. It anticipated with satisfaction the Council's decision to authorize the extension of UNMIH's mandate. The Government of President Aristide would continue to work closely with UNMIH during its time in office so that the successes of the Mission could be made permanent.¹⁸¹

Speaking in explanation of vote, the representative of Indonesia stated that his delegation would support the draft resolution extending the mandate of UNMIH for a period of seven months, by which time Haiti would have a Government, chosen by the people of Haiti through free and fair elections. He also noted that the settlement in Haiti had proved to the world that constructive cooperation and consultation between the Secretaries-General of the United Nations and OAS was critical to the success of international assistance for political progress and stability. The transformation of Haiti had proved that joint efforts by the United Nations and a regional organization could help bring about peace and stability in that region.¹⁸²

The representative of Botswana supported the incorporation of elements of economic and social development into peacekeeping operations, but within certain limits of the mandate of the mission itself. The twin processes of peace and development should go hand in hand, as economic development was indispensable to post-conflict stability in the country when the United Nations peacekeeping mission had left. That was already paying dividends in Haiti. While he supported the extension of UNMIH's mandate until February 1996, he hoped that there would be no need for the Council to renew the mandate then.¹⁸³

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1007 (1995), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling the provisions of its resolutions 841 (1993) of 16 June 1993, 861 (1993) of 27 August 1993, 862 (1993) of 31 August 1993, 867 (1993) of 23 September 1993, 873 (1993) of 13 October 1993, 875 (1993) of 16 October 1993, 905 (1994) of 23 March 1994, 917 (1994) of 6 May 1994, 933 (1994) of 30 June 1994, 940 (1994) of 31 July 1994, 944 (1994) of 29 September 1994, 948 (1994) of 15 October 1994, 964 (1994) of 29 November 1994 and 975 (1995) of 30 January 1995,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 46/7 of 11 October 1991, 46/138 of 17 December 1991, 47/20 A and B of 24 November 1992 and 20 April 1993, respectively, 47/143 of 18 December 1992, 48/27 A and B of 6 December 1993 and 8 July 1994, respectively, 48/151 of 20 December 1993, 49/27 A and B of 5 December 1994 and 12 July 1995, respectively, and 49/201 of 23 December 1994,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 24 July 1995 on the work of the United Nations Mission in Haiti,

Supporting the continuing leadership by the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States in the efforts of the United Nations and the Organization of American States to assist with political progress and stability in Haiti,

Supporting also the role of the Mission in assisting the Government of Haiti in its efforts to maintain a secure and stable environment as called for in resolution 940 (1994),

Stressing the importance of free and fair municipal, legislative and presidential elections in Haiti as crucial steps in the complete consolidation of democracy in Haiti,

Welcoming the commitment of the international community to assist and support the economic, social and institutional development of Haiti, and recognizing the importance of such assistance in sustaining a secure and stable environment,

Commending all efforts to establish a fully functioning national police force of adequate size and structure, necessary for the consolidation of democracy and revitalization of Haiti's system of justice, and noting the key role played by the civilian police component of the Mission in creating such a police force,

Underlining the need to keep under review the progress of the Mission in the fulfilment of its mandate,

1. Commends the United Nations Mission in Haiti on its successful efforts, as authorized in resolution 940 (1994), to assist the Government of Haiti in sustaining a secure and stable environment, protecting international personnel and key installations, establishing the conditions for holding elections and professionalizing the security forces; of Haiti as they consolidate the gains made towards democracy and stability;

13. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

After the vote, the representative of the United States stated that UNMIH's mandate was an effective one which the Council had extended in the spirit of its original commitment in resolution 940 (1994). UNMIH had made significant progress and, with the extension, would be allowed to finish what it had started. Her delegation agreed with the Secretary-General's observation that effective policing capabilities and related institution-building efforts were urgently required in Haiti. The role of UNMIH's civilian police contingent in that regard had been noteworthy. The speaker echoed the Secretary-General's appeal to Members States to contribute additional funds for that end. She further stated that the task ahead was threefold: to ensure completion of free and fair elections; to complete the creation of a professional civilian police force and effective justice system; and to ensure coordination of effective technical and economic assistance to help Haiti rebuild. Those efforts in Haiti signalled the broader commitment of the international community, spearheaded by the United Nations, to build democracy.¹⁸⁴

The representative of Argentina noted that the report of the Secretary-General of 24 July 1995 placed on record the significant relevance of cooperation with OAS in relation to Haiti. His delegation was convinced of the desirability of coordinated and concerted action and of the division of labour in initiatives that lent themselves to the involvement of the United Nations with the appropriate regional organization. In the case of Haiti, the combination of peacekeeping and post-conflict peacebuilding efforts, as reflected in a range of specific projects, showed that combining the two was not merely possible but desirable.¹⁸⁵

The representative of Italy stressed that progress on the political and institutional fronts in Haiti would be largely determined by the success of efforts for economic recovery. In that regard, the Secretary-General's initiative of coordinating UNMIH's peacekeeping mission with development activities, in a manner consistent with its mandate, to strengthen Haiti's institutions would have particular importance. Once again, the unbreakable bond between political stability and economic development was highlighted.¹⁸⁶

The representative of the United Kingdom noted that while the extension of UNMIH's mandate should enable the Mission to complete its tasks, the final responsibility for restoring security and democracy to Haiti rested with the Haitian people itself. His delegation was encouraged by the confidence of the Secretary-General that the monthly cost of UNMIH would be contained within the amount already authorized by the General Assembly. That welcome evidence of effective management should not, however, divert Council members from the need to find an equitable long-term solution to the problem of financing peacekeeping operations. His delegation would not wish to confront a situation in which the sponsors of a resolution and the direct beneficiaries of enhanced regional stability were unable to assure the United Nations of their ability to pay their contributions to the Organization in full while others were doing so.¹⁸⁷

The representative of France, while supporting resolution 1007 (1995) which extended UNMIH's mandate to February 1996, noted, however, that the norm entailed a renewal of at least six months when things were going well. With reference to the logistical difficulties and irregularities of the first round of elections, he commented that democracy was made up of elections lost and elections won, allowing for a real change of power based on free choice, and noted that it was precisely to enable Haiti to enjoy the rights of democratic nations that the United Nations intervened in that country. His delegation also believed that cooperation between the United Nations and OAS was a model that could be useful to other operations on other continents.¹⁸⁸

¹⁸⁶ Ibid., pp. 9-10.

¹⁸⁷ Ibid., p. 10.

According to the representative of Rwanda, it was of paramount importance for Haitians to regain their full sovereignty over all their territory as they assumed the responsibility for law and order in their country. His delegation attached great importance to the Council's decision to coordinate UNMIH's peacekeeping mission with development activities. Referring to the agreement by the Paris Club of creditors to renegotiate Haiti's bilateral debt, he further stated that such assistance should be applied to all countries in post-conflict situations, because of the specific necessity for a longer process in the reinvigoration of their economies.¹⁸⁹

Decision of 16 November 1995 (3594th meeting): statement by the President

On 6 November 1995, pursuant to resolution 1007 (1995), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on UNMIH.¹⁹⁰ The Secretary-General reported that he had visited Port-au-Prince on 14 and 15 October 1995 and had discussed with President Aristide the situation in Haiti and the needs of the country after February 1996. The President had praised the excellent cooperation between the Haitian authorities and UNMIH. The Mission had made substantial progress towards fulfilling its mandate. The legislative and local elections had been carried out in an environment free of fear, violence and intimidation. It was reasonable therefore to presume that UNMIH would be able to ensure that a similar climate would prevail during presidential elections, expected to be held in December 1995 or January 1996. The Secretary-General noted that, as the end of UNMIH's mandate approached, the establishment of a professional police force capable of maintaining law and order throughout the country assumed increased urgency. Attention should focus on the selection and training of the Haitian National Police supervisors and on providing the force with the necessary equipment. In that regard, he reiterated his appeal to Member States to give immediate and serious consideration to contributing to the voluntary fund set up to support the creation of an adequate police force in Haiti. In view of the greater emphasis placed on training activities and bearing in mind the need to streamline the operation because of the financial crisis of the Organization, he proposed to reduce the strength of UNMIH's civilian police component before the end of the year. The Secretary-General further noted that the local and legislative elections had been concluded and the new Parliament, which opened its special session on 18 October 1995, had been constituted. However, the election of its members continued to be contested by the leaders of many political parties. The dates for the presidential elections were fast approaching, and it was essential that all political forces in the country cooperate to enable the Haitian people to participate in the building of their country's new democracy.

At its 3594th meeting, on 16 November 1995, the Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. After the adoption of the agenda, the President (Oman) stated that, following consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹⁹¹

The Security Council welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 6 November 1995 on the United Nations Mission in Haiti, issued pursuant to resolution 1007 (1995).

The Council commends the Mission on the substantial progress it has made towards fulfilling its mandate, as set out in resolution 940 (1994), to assist the Government of Haiti in sustaining a secure and stable environment, protecting international personnel and key installations, establishing the conditions for holding elections and creating a new professional police force. The Council commends the Secretary-General, his Special Representative and other dedicated personnel of the United Nations who have contributed to this effort.

The Council also commends the Government of Haiti for holding local and legislative elections in a peaceful and non-violent environment and notes the recent convocation of the special session of the National Assembly and its approval of the new Cabinet and plan of government. The Council notes with satisfaction the role of the United Nations Mission in Haiti and the joint United Nations/Organization of American States International Civilian Mission in assisting the Haitian authorities with the electoral process.

The Council emphasizes that the continued engagement and commitment of all Haitian parties is necessary to the successful organization of free, fair and peaceful presidential elections. Consistent with the objectives of resolutions 940 (1994) and 1007 (1995), the Council welcomes the announcement by the Provisional Electoral Council of presidential elections scheduled for 17 December 1995 that should allow a transition of power to a duly-elected successor before the scheduled termination of the United Nations Mission in Haiti on 29 February 1996. The holding of presidential elections on schedule is a crucial step in consolidating long-lasting democracy in Haiti and ensuring a smooth transition of government. The Council calls upon all political parties in Haiti to participate in the forthcoming elections and to contribute actively to maintain the secure and stable conditions necessary for their conduct.

The Council notes with concern recent instances of violence in Haiti and calls for respect for the rule of law, national reconciliation and cooperation.

The Government and people of Haiti bear the primary responsibility for Haiti's political, economic and social reconstruction. The Council underlines its firm support for the progress Haiti has already made in this regard. The Council emphasizes that a sustained commitment by the international community is indispensable for long-term peace and stability in Haiti. In this regard the Council encourages the Haitian Government to continue its dialogue with the international financial institutions.

The Council shares the view of the Secretary-General that the establishment of a professional police force capable of maintaining law and order throughout the country is central to Haiti's long-term stability. As the end of the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Haiti approaches, attention should be focused on the selection and training of the Haitian national police supervisors and on interested Member States providing the police force with the necessary equipment.

The Council also supports the efforts of the Secretary-General to streamline the United Nations Mission in Haiti, including the civilian police component.

The Council expresses its confidence that the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, the joint United Nations Mission in Haiti and the United Nations/Organization of American States International Civilian Mission in Haiti will continue to assist the Government and people of Haiti. It notes in particular the useful role played by the Organization of American States and the valuable cooperation with Haiti of interested Member States on a bilateral basis and stresses the importance of continuing such cooperation. The Council requests that the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Friends of the Secretary-General on the question of Haiti and the Haitian authorities, report to the Council, at the appropriate time, on the next steps in the areas of security, law enforcement and humanitarian assistance, including by United Nations specialized agencies and programmes, which the international community may take to help Haiti achieve a long-term future that is secure, stable and free.

14. The situation in Cambodia

Decision of 8 March 1993 (3181st meeting): resolution 810 (1993)

On 13 February 1993, pursuant to resolution 792 (1992) of 30 November 1992, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a report on the implementation of that resolution and on measures necessary to ensure the realization of the fundamental objectives of the Paris Agreements on Cambodia.¹ The Secretary-General reported that, on 28 January 1993, the Supreme National Council had met in Beijing under the chairmanship of Prince Sihanouk and had agreed that elections for the constituent assembly would be held from 23 to 25 May 1993. In addition, the Supreme National Council had discussed the possibility of issuing a declaration denouncing all acts of violence, urging self-restraint on the Cambodian parties and calling for an end to violence directed against the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC). Despite the objection of the Party of Democratic Kampuchea (PDK) to such a declaration, Prince Sihanouk had issued a statement in his own name and on behalf of three of the four parties.² He had also announced that he would not advance his candidacy for the presidential elections until a new constitution, which would lay down the modalities for the election of the head of State and the related term of office and powers, was adopted. The Supreme National Council had met again, on 10 February 1993, and had adopted a moratorium on the export of minerals and gems from Cambodia in accordance with resolution 792 (1992). It had further decided to consider adopting limits on the export of sawn timber in order to protect Cambodia's natural resources.

The Secretary-General noted that, despite the fact that progress had been made in implementing resolution 792 (1992), the response of some Cambodian parties had not been satisfactory. The Party of the State of Cambodia had offered substantial cooperation to UNTAC but recently there had been serious difficulties relating to the maintenance of law and order in the areas under its control. The Cambodian People's Armed Forces had also launched military attacks against the National Army of Democratic Kampuchea which went beyond its right of self-defence. As for PDK, by failing to admit UNTAC to its zones and to register for the elections, it had again refused to avail itself of the many opportunities offered to it by UNTAC and the international community to rejoin the peace process. At the same time, it was important to resist any pressure to exclude PDK representatives from the Supreme National Council. The Secretary-General was convinced that the framework of the Paris Agreements still offered the best hope for a solution to the problems of Cambodia and for the promotion of national reconciliation. He also stressed that the primary responsibility for the implementation of the Paris Agreements rested with the Cambodian signatories and that the future stability and well-being of the country depended on the Cambodians themselves. Referring to the Declaration of 28 January 1993 issued by Prince Sihanouk, he suggested that the Council might issue a similar call, broadening the demand contained in paragraph 17 of its resolution 792 (1992) and further appeal to the three parties, which had aligned themselves with the Declaration, to continue their close cooperation with UNTAC and to prevent or punish acts of violence, particularly those politically motivated.

The Secretary-General concluded by saying that it was imperative for UNTAC to maintain the momentum towards the holding of the constituent assembly elections as scheduled. Meanwhile, he had instructed his Special Representative to assess post-election security requirements and would, in due course, present appropriate recommendations to the Council.

At its 3181st meeting, on 8 March 1993, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. After the adoption of the agenda, the President (New Zealand) drew the attention of the members of the Council to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.³ He also drew their attention to other documents.⁴

Speaking before the vote, the representative of France stated that the draft resolution focused primarily on the elections in Cambodia, which constituted the cornerstone of the peace process and one of the central purposes of the Paris Agreements, which created the most ambitious United Nations operation in history. It was therefore essential, at that stage of the process, for the Security Council to take a unanimous decision. In his view, the draft resolution would send a clear political signal to all the Cambodian parties that violence would not be tolerated and that they had no other choice but to respect the rules of democracy. The Security Council would endorse the outcome of the elections, provided they were certified free and fair by the United Nations. It would also continue to lend its support to the elected constituent assembly and to the process of drafting a constitution and establishing a new Government for Cambodia. Contending that the Cambodians themselves bore the responsibility to restore peace and stability in their own country, he appealed to the people and the leaders of the Cambodian parties to exercise tolerance, moderation and political maturity so that the elections could take place in a neutral political climate.⁵

The representative of China recalled that the Paris Agreements constituted the foundation for a comprehensive settlement of the Cambodian question. Difficulties and differences arising from their implementation should be resolved by the joint efforts of the parties concerned, through consultation and dialogue. It was regrettable, however, as pointed out by the Secretary-General in his report, that politically motivated violence had been occurring continuously and that a neutral political environment, a key factor in ensuring free and fair elections in the country, had yet to be established.⁶

The draft resolution was thereupon put to the vote and was adopted unanimously as resolution 810 (1993), which reads:

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United States stated that the resolution just adopted marked another milestone towards achieving the major goal of the Paris Agreements. She noted, however, that the holding of elections would be only one step towards the ultimate goal of creating a peaceful, democratic Cambodia. For elections to be successful and national reconciliation to occur, all the Cambodian parties must be prepared to respect the results. In voting for the resolution, the United States was committing itself to support the elected Government as the sole legitimate authority for Cambodia.⁷

Decision of 5 April 1993 (3193rd meeting):
statement by the President

At the Council's 3193rd meeting, on 5 April 1993, the President (Pakistan) said that, after consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁸

The Security Council strongly condemns all attacks on the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC), particularly the recent attacks which have resulted in the death of two Bangladeshi members of UNTAC and the cowardly assassination of three members of the Bulgarian contingent of UNTAC on 2 April 1993.

The Council expresses its strong support for UNTAC in carrying out its mandate within the framework of the Paris agreements. It demands that all hostile acts against UNTAC cease immediately and that all parties take measures to safeguard the lives and the security of UNTAC personnel.

It expresses its condolences to the Governments of Bangladesh and Bulgaria and to the families of the victims; it pays tribute to the latter for their courage and dedication. It requests the Secretary-General to report urgently to the Council on the circumstances of these murderous acts and the responsibility for them.

The Council also expresses its determination that the election for the constituent assembly should be held on the dates decided by the Supreme National Council and endorsed by the Security Council in its resolution 810 (1993) of 8 March 1993. In this respect, the Council stresses the importance of ensuring a neutral political environment in Cambodia, as well as the cessation of acts of violence and of all threats and intimidation committed on political or ethnic grounds.

Decision of 20 May 1993 (3213th meeting):
resolution 826 (1993)

On 3 May 1993, pursuant to resolution 745 (1992), the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a fourth progress report on UNTAC.⁹ He reported that it had not proven possible to implement fully all aspects of the Paris Agreements in accordance with the implementation plan he had submitted to the Council in February 1992.¹⁰ The non-cooperation of PDK had persisted and all efforts by the Security Council, by UNTAC and by others, to persuade PDK to assume its responsibilities under the Agreements, had been to no avail. In addition, PDK's refusal to open its zones to UNTAC and to canton and disarm its troops had led to the suspension of the demobilization of the armed forces of the other three factions. The Party of the State of Cambodia and the Cambodian People's Armed Forces had also taken part in politically motivated attacks against opposition parties in order to intimidate them. Moreover, the massacres of Vietnamese-speaking persons and deliberate attacks on UNTAC members reflected the growing hostility of PDK to the peace process and to the elections. Although ceasefire violations were generally on a small scale and UNTAC had achieved some successes in reducing political violence, it appeared that the elections would not be taking place in an environment as disarmed and politically neutral as had been envisaged in the Paris Agreements and in the implementation plan. At the same time, however, Cambodians were strongly committed to the electoral process. About 96 per cent of the eligible population had registered to vote and 20 political parties had completed the formalities for registration to compete in the elections. The three Cambodian parties cooperating with UNTAC had also pledged to accept the election results and preparations for the conduct of the elections were well under way. Despite imperfect conditions and taking into account all circumstances, the Secretary-General saw no reason to hold back an election which was not the end, but rather the beginning of the process of Cambodia's renewal.

⁷ Ibid., pp. 11-12.

On 15 May 1993, pursuant to resolution 810 (1993), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report in which he described the conditions and the preparations for the holding of elections in Cambodia.¹¹ The Secretary-General informed the Council that technical preparations had been virtually completed. At the meeting of the Supreme National Council held on 21 April 1993, his Special Representative had expressed the view that the freeness and fairness of the elections would be judged in accordance with three main criteria: the extent to which the campaign and voting were marred by violence; intimidation and harassment; the extent to which the Party of the State of Cambodia, which controlled the largest zones and had the most extensive administrative structure, enjoyed unfair advantages; and the technical conduct of the poll. The Secretary-General also reported on the security plans which UNTAC had further refined and elaborated in the light of PDK's repeatedly expressed intention to oppose the elections, including by violent means. Under those plans, no polling would be conducted in PDK-controlled areas or areas to which UNTAC had been denied access. Other parts of the country had been designated as high, medium, and low-risk zones, with different levels of security measures. In high-risk zones, armed UNTAC military personnel would be stationed at and around polling stations. Quick reaction forces and medical support units had also been identified for those areas. He was also giving "urgent and close consideration" to a request by the three Cambodian factions supporting the elections for the return of weapons they had placed under UNTAC control, based on the fact that they held primary responsibility for the maintenance of security in the zones under their control.

The Secretary-General noted that, despite the meticulous preparations by UNTAC, the conditions for the elections had fallen short of those envisioned by the Paris Agreements, owing to PDK's progressive withdrawal from the peace process, starting with not complying with the military provisions of the Agreements and moving to boycotting the elections and then disrupting them through violence. Regrettably, the Party of the State of Cambodia had also contributed, although to a lesser extent, towards the climate of violence by resorting to intimidation of other political parties. Moreover, it had not responded satisfactorily to UNTAC's efforts to prevent the use of its administrative structure for political purposes. Nevertheless, the Secretary-General had directed that the elections be held as scheduled, according to the will and intent of the Security Council and of the vast majority of the Cambodian people.

At its 3213th meeting, on 20 May 1993, the Security Council included the two reports of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Russian Federation) drew the attention of the members of the Council to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations, and read out a revision made to the draft resolution in its provisional form.¹² He also drew their attention to several other documents.¹³

The draft resolution, as orally revised, was thereupon put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 826 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 668 (1990) of 20 September 1990, 745 (1992) of 28 February 1992, 810 (1993) of 8 March 1993 and other relevant resolutions,

8. Expresses its appreciation for the positive efforts and the achievements of the Authority in preparation for the elections, in respect both of the registration of candidates and parties and of the holding of the electoral campaign, albeit under difficult conditions;

9. Fully supports the decision of the Secretary-General that the election be held as scheduled in accordance with the decision of the Supreme National Council endorsed by the Security Council in its resolution 810 (1993);

10. Calls on the Authority to continue to work in accordance with resolution 810 (1993) to ensure a neutral political environment conducive to the holding of free and fair elections;

11. Reaffirms its determination to endorse the results of the election for the constituent assembly provided that the United Nations certifies it free and fair;

12. Reminds all the Cambodian parties of their obligation under the Paris agreements fully to comply with the results of the election;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to report promptly to the Council on the holding and results of the election, including on the conduct of the parties as regards their obligations under the Paris agreements and, if necessary, to recommend any initiative and/or measures conducive to ensuring their full respect by all parties;

17. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representatives of the United States, France, the United Kingdom and the Russian Federation stated that it was important for the Council to reaffirm its commitment to bring peace and democracy to Cambodia by endorsing the results of the elections, provided that they were certified free and fair by the United Nations. They also warned that, should any party try to interfere or overturn the outcome of the elections in Cambodia, the Security Council stood ready to take appropriate measures against those who endeavoured to do so.¹⁴

The representative of China noted that the entire international community was concerned with the issue of how to maintain peace in Cambodia after its constituent assembly elections. His country neither wished to see the flames of war rekindled in Cambodia nor supported any party in resorting to force. It stood for the realization of genuine reconciliation, embodying all the Cambodian parties, so that Cambodia would embark on the road of building up an independent, sovereign, unified, peaceful and neutral State.¹⁵

Decision of 22 May 1993 (3214th meeting):
statement by the President

At the Council's 3214th meeting, on 22 May 1993, the President (Russian Federation) said that, after consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹⁶

The Security Council strongly condemns the shelling on 21 May 1993 of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC), during which the Chinese engineering detachment suffered two deaths and seven wounded. It expresses its condolences to the Chinese Government and to the families of the victims; it pays tribute to the latter for their courage and dedication.

The Council takes note of the preliminary report by the Secretariat indicating that the shelling was carried out by the National Army of Democratic Kampuchea. It requests the Secretary-General to investigate further and to report urgently to the Council.

The Council expresses its strong support for UNTAC in carrying out its mandate within the framework of the Paris agreements. It strongly condemns all attacks against UNTAC and demands that those responsible cease forthwith all hostile acts against UNTAC and take immediate measures to safeguard the lives and the security of UNTAC personnel.

The Council recalls the warning contained in its resolution 826 (1993) of 20 May 1993 that it would respond appropriately should any of the parties fail to honour its obligations. It further warns that it will not countenance the use of violence to interfere with or overturn the democratic process in Cambodia and will take further appropriate measures against any of the parties failing to honour its obligations.

The Council also expresses its determination that the election for the constituent assembly should be held on the dates decided by the Supreme National Council and endorsed by the Security Council in its resolution 810 (1993) of 8 March 1993 and reaffirms its commitment to resolution 826 (1993). The Council calls upon the Cambodian people fully to exercise their right to vote in the forthcoming elections. In this respect, the Council stresses the importance of ensuring the cessation of acts of violence and of all threats and intimidation, as well as of ensuring a neutral political environment in Cambodia.

Decision of 2 June 1993 (3227th meeting):
resolution 835 (1993)

At its 3227th meeting, on 2 June 1993, the Security Council resumed consideration of the item entitled "The situation in Cambodia". After the adoption of the agenda, the President (Spain) drew the attention of the members of the Council to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of prior consultations.¹⁷ He also drew their attention to a letter dated 2 June 1993 from the Secretary-General, addressed to the President of the Security Council, transmitting the text of a statement made by his Special Representative for Cambodia, at a meeting of the Supreme National Council, on 29 May 1993, after the conclusion of the elections.¹⁸ In that statement, the Special Representative had declared that the conduct of the elections had been free and fair.

The draft resolution was thereupon put to the vote and was adopted unanimously as resolution 835 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 668 (1990) of 20 September 1990, 745 (1992) of 28 February 1992, 810 (1993) of 8 March 1993, 826 (1993) of 20 May 1993 and other relevant resolutions,

Expressing its appreciation to the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia and especially to the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, Yasushi Akashi, for their courage, dedication and perseverance in providing the necessary support for the electoral process despite hardships and difficulties,

Paying tribute to the leadership and continuing role of His Royal Highness Prince Norodom Sihanouk, Chairman of the Supreme National Council,

Noting with satisfaction the overwhelming number of Cambodians who demonstrated their patriotism and sense of responsibility in exercising their right to vote,

Endorsing the declaration of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Cambodia to the Supreme National Council of 29 May 1993 that the conduct of the election had been free and fair,

2. Invites the Secretary-General to make his report on the election available as soon as possible;

3. Expresses its intention, following certification of the election, to support fully the duly-elected constituent assembly in its work of drawing up a constitution, according to the principles laid down in annex 5 to the Agreement on a Comprehensive Political Settlement of the Cambodia Conflict signed in Paris on 23 October 1991, and establishing a new government for all Cambodia;

4. Calls upon all parties to stand by their obligation to respect fully the results of the elections and urges them to do all in their power to bring about the peaceful establishment of a democratic government in accordance with the terms of the new constitution;

5. Urges the international community to contribute actively to the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Cambodia;

6. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, most speakers called the elections a great victory for the Cambodian people and for democracy, and an astonishing achievement for the United Nations. They urged all Cambodian parties to respect the outcome of the elections.¹⁹

Decision of 8 June 1993 (3230th meeting):
statement by the President

At the Council's 3230th meeting, on 8 June 1993, the President (Spain) said that, after consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:²⁰

The Security Council strongly condemns the armed attack against a Pakistani platoon and another against a Malaysian platoon of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC), both on 7 June 1993. In the first incident, two Pakistani personnel were injured, one of them seriously; in the second, three Malaysian personnel were injured, one of them seriously.

The Council takes note of the Secretariat's preliminary report that the first attack was launched against the Pakistani compound by the National Army of Democratic Kampuchea; the identity of the attackers in the second incident has not yet been determined. It requests the Secretary-General to investigate further and to report urgently to the Council.

The Council demands that those responsible for the attacks cease immediately all attacks against UNTAC and reiterates its warning that it will take appropriate measures against those who are threatening the safety and security of UNTAC personnel and are trying to overturn the democratic process in Cambodia through violence.

Decision of 15 June 1993 (3237th meeting):
resolution 840 (1993)

On 10 June 1993, pursuant to resolutions 826 (1993) and 835 (1993), the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a report on the conduct and results of the elections in Cambodia.²¹ The Secretary-General reported that they had been held as scheduled, from 23 to 28 May 1993, in all 21 provinces in Cambodia, and that the polling had been generally peaceful, despite a few scattered incidents of violence. Voter turnout had been impressive with 89.56 per cent of registered voters taking part. At a meeting of the Supreme National Council, convened on 29 May 1993 to review the polling process, his Special Representative had declared that, in view of the very high turnout throughout the country, the absence of violence during the polling, the success of the technical conduct of the poll and the calm and peaceful atmosphere throughout the polling period, the conduct of the poll had been free and fair. The counting of the ballots, which had begun on 29 May 1993 had been completed.²² Accordingly, the Secretary-General had authorized his Special Representative to issue a statement declaring that the elections as a whole had been free and fair.²³ Urging all parties to respect and accept the results and to resolve any disputes they might have through the agreed channels, the Secretary-General stated that UNTAC would give the constituent assembly full support in the process of drawing up a constitution and establishing a new Government for all Cambodia. He was also confident that the international community would continue to support efforts to promote national reconciliation and peacebuilding.

At its 3237th meeting, on 15 June 1993, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. After the adoption of the agenda, the President (Spain) drew the attention of the members of the Council to the text of a draft resolution submitted by China, France, Japan, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States.²⁴ He then read out some revisions made to the draft in its provisional form. The President also drew their attention to a letter dated 11 June 1993 from the representative of Denmark, addressed to the Secretary-General, transmitting the text of a statement issued by the European Community and its Member States on the Cambodian elections.²⁵

The draft resolution, as orally revised, was thereupon put to the vote and was adopted unanimously as resolution 840 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 668 (1990) of 20 September 1990, 745 (1992) of 28 February 1992, 810 (1993) of 8 March 1993, 826 (1993) of 20 May 1993, 835 (1993) of 2 June 1993 and other relevant resolutions,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 10 June 1993, and in particular the statement contained therein concerning the election that took place in Cambodia from 23 to 28 May 1993,

Paying tribute to the leadership and continuing role of His Royal Highness Prince Norodom Sihanouk, Chairman of the Supreme National Council, in bringing about national reconciliation and restoring peace in Cambodia,

Expressing its appreciation to the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia and especially to the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the smoothness of the electoral process,

Reaffirming the national unity, territorial integrity and inviolability and independence of Cambodia,

Welcoming the fact that on 14 June 1993 the newly elected constituent assembly held its first meeting,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Endorses the results of the election, which has been certified free and fair by the United Nations;

3. Calls upon all parties to stand by their obligation to respect fully the results of the election and to cooperate in securing a peaceful transition and welcomes, in this context, the efforts of His Royal Highness Prince Norodom Sihanouk to achieve national reconciliation and his leadership and continuing role in maintaining stability and in promoting cooperation among Cambodians by appropriate means;

4. Fully supports the newly elected constituent assembly which has begun its work of drawing up and approving a constitution according to the principles laid down in annex 5 to the Agreement on a Comprehensive Political Settlement of the Cambodia Conflict contained in the agreements signed in Paris on 23 October 1991, and will subsequently transform itself into a legislative assembly, which will establish a new government for all Cambodia;

5. Emphasizes the necessity to complete this work and to establish a new government for all Cambodia as soon as possible and within the time allotted by the Paris agreements;

6. Requests the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia to continue to play its role in conjunction with the Supreme National Council during the transitional period in accordance with the Paris agreements;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council by the middle of July, including his recommendations on the possible role the United Nations and its agencies might play after the end of the mandate of the Authority according to the Paris agreements;

8. Urges all States and relevant international organizations to contribute actively to the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Cambodia;

9. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of France said that, in voting for the resolution, his country had intended to emphasize its support for the statement of the Special Representative for Cambodia as to the free and fair nature of the elections. The last stage of the peace process remained to be carried out with the leading role of the United Nations. He stressed the need for a coalition plan to expedite pending matters while the Constituent Assembly drafted the constitution.²⁶

²⁶ S/PV.3237, pp. 4-5.

The representative of the Russian Federation saw the elections in Cambodia as an important factor for peace and stability not only in that country, but in the whole South-East Asia. He contended that the necessary concrete preconditions for achieving the main goal of the Paris Agreements were in place: the restoration of peace on the basis of national reconciliation and the formation of a new Cambodia — a sovereign, independent, neutral and territorial integral State that respected human rights and maintained good-neighbourly relations with all countries of the world.²⁷

Decision of 16 July 1993: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

By a letter dated 14 July 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the Secretary-General stated that the success of the elections in Cambodia marked the beginning of a particularly delicate phase in the country's transition from conflict to peace and democracy.²⁸ After careful consideration, he had concluded, on the recommendation of his Special Representative for Cambodia and in consultation with a number of concerned Governments, that urgent measures must be taken to enable UNTAC to provide, for the remainder of the transitional period, and in consultation with the Cambodian authorities, emergency financial assistance for the restructuring and adjustment of the administrative, police and military structures of the Interim Joint Administration. His Special Representative had advised that the amount of funding required to achieve the objectives for the remainder of the transitional period would be $20 million. It was the Secretary-General's view that such a step was fully consistent with the uniquely broad mandate which UNTAC had been given by the Council to help implement the Paris Agreements.

By a letter dated 16 July 1993,²⁹ the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General that the members of the Council had considered his letter of 14 July concerning Cambodia and they agreed with the views contained therein.

Decision of 26 July 1993: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

On 16 July 1993, pursuant to resolution 840 (1993), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report in which he outlined the plan for the withdrawal of UNTAC, to be completed by 15 November 1993, and described the possible role of the United Nations after the end of the UNTAC mandate.³⁰

The Secretary-General noted that Cambodia still faced enormous problems of security, stability, mine clearance, infrastructure improvement and general economic and social development. Moreover, despite the positive developments of the last few weeks, the political-military situation remained fragile and the task before the new Government could be expected to be difficult and challenging. Clearly, Cambodia would require continued international assistance and support. He indicated, in that regard, that various programmes and agencies of the United Nations system, as well as international financial institutions, would be prepared, in consultation with the Government of Cambodia, to continue to play their traditional role in rehabilitation, reconstruction, development and humanitarian assistance. In addition, a continued human rights presence had been mandated both under the Paris Agreements and by a decision of the Commission on Human Rights. The United Nations could also undertake mine clearance, which would continue to be a major need for years to come.

The Secretary-General also addressed the question of maintaining a United Nations military presence. He said that should the Government of Cambodia request the stationing of a small number of United Nations military observers in the country for a limited period as a confidence-building measure and to monitor and report on the security of its borders, the Council would without any doubt consider such a request at the appropriate time.

By a letter dated 26 July 1993,³¹ the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General that the members of the Council had considered his report and they endorsed the overall concept and arrangements contained in paragraphs 9 to 33 of the report concerning the withdrawal of UNTAC. They would continue their consideration of the remainder of the report.

Decision of 27 August 1993 (3270th meeting):
resolution 860 (1993)

On 26 August 1993, pursuant to resolution 840 (1993), the Secretary-General submitted a further report to the Council in which he described new developments in Cambodia as well as UNTAC's withdrawal and preparations for the post-UNTAC period.³²

The Secretary-General noted that post-election developments had been encouraging. The Constituent Assembly was about to adopt the new Constitution and establish the new Government. In view of the need to allow sufficient time for the approval of the Constitution and the emergence of the new Government, he recommended that the mandate of UNTAC be extended until 15 September 1993. Concerning the suggestion that the United Nations should maintain a small military presence in Cambodia following the withdrawal of UNTAC, he had decided not to recommend, at that stage, the retention of United Nations military personnel in Cambodia after the departure of UNTAC, but to concentrate the resources available on civilian activities in support of peacebuilding. Should the new Government request a post-UNTAC military presence, with a clear indication of its mandate, he would, however, be ready to submit a report to the Security Council on the feasibility of the tasks proposed and the resources that would be required to carry them out.

The Secretary-General reiterated his intention to establish an integrated office in Phnom Penh to be headed by a United Nations representative who would coordinate, in close consultation with the Government of Cambodia, the full range of civilian activities to be undertaken by various agencies of the United Nations system. In addition, the Office would deal with a number of residual issues arising from the Paris Agreements and UNTAC's presence in the country.

At its 3270th meeting, on 27 August 1993, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. After the adoption of the agenda, the President (United States) drew the attention of the members of the Council to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of prior consultations.³³

The draft resolution was thereupon put to vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 860 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 668 (1990) of 20 September 1990, 745 (1992) of 28 February 1992, 840 (1993) of 15 June 1993 and other relevant resolutions,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 16 July 1993 and 26 August 1993,

Paying tribute to the continuing role of His Royal Highness Prince Norodom Sihanouk in achieving peace, stability and genuine national reconciliation for all Cambodia,

Recalling that, according to the agreements on a comprehensive political settlement to the Cambodian conflict signed in Paris on 23 October 1991, the transitional period shall terminate when the Constituent Assembly elected through free and fair elections, organized and certified by the United Nations, has approved the constitution and transformed itself into legislative assembly, and thereafter a new government has been created,

Noting the expressed wish of the Cambodian interim joint administration to maintain the mandate of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia until the establishment of a new government in Cambodia as conveyed by the Secretariat,

1. Welcomes the reports of the Secretary-General of 16 July 1993 and 26 August 1993 and approves the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia withdrawal plan contained in the former;

2. Fully supports the Constituent Assembly in its work of drawing up and approving a constitution, and stresses the importance of completing this work in accordance with the agreements on a comprehensive political settlement to the Cambodian conflict signed in Paris on 23 October 1991;

3. Confirms that the functions of the Authority under the Paris agreements shall end upon the creation in September of a new government of Cambodia consistent with those agreements;

4. Decides that, in order to ensure a safe and an orderly withdrawal of the military component of the Authority, the period of such withdrawal shall end on 15 November 1993;

5. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of China said that, as a signatory to the Paris Agreements, his country had devoted its efforts to the comprehensive settlement of the issue before the

Council. The ultimate solution, however, rested with the Cambodian people themselves. No outside forces should interfere in the internal affairs of Cambodia. As for the post-UNTAC United Nations activities in that country, that decision should be based on the provisions of the Agreements and the requests of the new national Government.³⁴

The representative of France said that the resolution just adopted, while purely technical in nature, clarified the conditions for completing the political role of the United Nations and of the maintenance, for practical reasons, of a residual military presence in Cambodia until 15 November 1993. Clearly, that country needed assistance. That would be the objective of the first meeting of the International Committee on the Reconstruction of Cambodia. The United Nations would also have a role to play, however that could only happen at the request of the new national Government. That would be the thrust of a future resolution, which at the same time would take stock of the United Nations accomplishments in Cambodia over the past 18 months.³⁵

The representative of the United Kingdom said that the withdrawal of UNTAC did not mean that the United Nations and the international community could afford to turn its back on Cambodia, but the relationship would, in future, be of a different kind. First, it had to depend on the wishes of the new Government, and only thereafter on the Organization's decisions.³⁶

The representative of New Zealand stated that, although a new Cambodian government was almost at hand, many aspects of the country's legacy of fighting and repression remained. Moreover, as noted by the Secretary-General in his last report, "massive reconstruction" was still required throughout the country. While the future of Cambodia lay in the hands of its people, the end of UNTAC did not mean the end of Cambodia's problems or of the United Nations involvement in that country. That issue must soon be addressed by the Council, in consultation with countries of the region. In that regard, New Zealand welcomed the initiative to convene a working group, which would include those countries, to begin work on a more comprehensive statement on the post-UNTAC United Nations presence.³⁷

The President, speaking in her capacity as representative of the United States, said that although UNTAC was on the verge of completing its mission, the international community's responsibility to assist Cambodia was far from over, and the Council still had an important role to play. Concerned countries would also have the opportunity to address Cambodia's many urgent needs for rehabilitation and reconstruction at the upcoming Paris meeting of the International Committee on Reconstruction of Cambodia.³⁸

Decision of 5 October 1993 (3287th meeting):
statement by the President

On 5 October 1993, pursuant to resolution 745 (1992), the Secretary-General submitted a further report to the Security Council in which he reported the formation, on 24 September, of the new Government of Cambodia, based on the will of the people expressed through free and fair elections organized and conducted by the United Nations.³⁹ On the same date, Prince Sihanouk had promulgated the Constitution according to which Cambodia had become a constitutional monarchy, with the official name "The Kingdom of Cambodia", and an independent, sovereign, peaceful, neutral and non-aligned State. The Constitution also stipulated that the Kingdom of Cambodia should recognize and respect human rights, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and all relevant international instruments. Accordingly, Prince Sihanouk was elected King. Subsequently, he appointed Prince Ranariddh as First Prime Minister and Hun Sen, as Second Prime Minister. The Secretary-General noted that the UNTAC mandate had been successfully concluded on 24 September 1993. Meanwhile, action was taken to establish a United Nations presence in the post-UNTAC period to carry out a variety of functions, including demining, economic rehabilitation and human rights, with a view to consolidating peace and stability in the country.

At its 3287th meeting, on 5 October 1993, the Security Council included the further report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. After the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Australia, Cambodia and Thailand, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Brazil) then drew the attention of the members of the Council to a letter dated 30 September 1993 from the representatives of China, France, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States, addressed to the Secretary-General.⁴⁰

The representative of Cambodia stated that, in his opinion, three essential elements had contributed to the success of the United Nations operation: the commitment of the international community, the will of the Cambodians to work together with the United Nations and the will of the Cambodian parties to seek reconciliation. He pointed out that his country would have to face two issues. First, the internal security issue resulting from the presence of armed bands, and the Khmer Rouge, the latter needing to dismantle its army and administration in order to form a single national royal army and administration. Secondly, the national rehabilitation and reconstruction issue. Recalling that, under the Paris Agreements, the international community had an obligation to assist Cambodia on those two issues, he called for a United Nations presence in Cambodia to reinforce the confidence of its people. Demining operations must continue and the presence of 20 or more military observers for a period of six months would be required. He also called for a permanent centre to deal with human rights. Furthermore, his Government would prefer to maintain the International Committee on the Reconstruction of Cambodia, rather than to establish another coordinating body.⁴¹

The representative of France said that the United Nations had the duty to live up to the expectations of the Cambodian people and to continue to play a role in the area of reconstruction and development, as well as the enhancement and protection of human rights. France supported the Government's request for the maintenance of a team of military observers, and welcomed the Secretary-General's intention to open an integrated United Nations office in Cambodia. The situation of the Khmer Rouge group remained however a problem. They must recognize Cambodia's legitimate authorities, accept the rules of democracy and renounce violence. The speaker recalled, in that regard, the third instrument in the Paris Agreements which concerned the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and inviolability, neutrality and national unity for Cambodia.⁴²

The representative of the United States said that the future of Cambodia's freedom and democracy was first and foremost the responsibility of its people. It was, however, also a matter of great importance to the United Nations and the international community, which had invested so much to help the Cambodian people. The challenge ahead was to assist the Government of Cambodia as appropriate to ensure the continuation of the great progress that had been achieved so as to allow Cambodia to enjoy the peace it so richly deserved.⁴³

The representative of Thailand, speaking on behalf of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN), expressed full support for the requests put forward by the Cambodian Government, which called for the establishment of a United Nations Integrated Office in Phnom Penh, the maintenance of representative offices of United Nations programmes and specialized agencies, the maintenance of the human rights component of UNTAC and its expansion into a permanent human rights centre, the continuation of the demining operations and lastly, the presence of a small number of military observers in Phnom Penh. ASEAN also looked forward to the appointment by the Secretary-General of a Special Representative to Cambodia. In conclusion, ASEAN shared the hope of the Government and people of Cambodia that the United Nations and the international community would continue to assist their country in its reconstruction and rehabilitation process. ASEAN stood ready to contribute in such efforts.⁴⁴

A number of other speakers endorsed the United Nations continuing close involvement in Cambodia.⁴⁵ Some supported more specifically the requests of the Government of Cambodia.⁴⁶ Others were in favour of the adoption of a resolution which would address all aspects of the post-UNTAC presence, including the dispatch of military observers.⁴⁷

At the same meeting, the President made the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁴⁸

On behalf of the members of the Security Council, I wish to thank Prince Norodom Ranariddh, First Prime Minister, and Mr. Hun Sen, Second Prime Minister, of the Royal Government of Cambodia for their presence here and to express the satisfaction of the Security Council at the auspicious developments that have taken place in Cambodia since the holding of the elections of 23 to 28 May 1993, in particular the proclamation of the Cambodian Constitution on 24 September 1993 and the creation of the new government of Cambodia.

I also take this opportunity to congratulate His Majesty King Norodom Sihanouk, Head of State of Cambodia, on his accession to the throne and to pay tribute to the continuing role played by His Majesty in the quest for national reconciliation and a better future for all Cambodia.

In the light of the successful completion of the mandate of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia, the Council reiterates its recognition at the remarkable work carried out by the Authority, under the leadership of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative, Mr. Yasushi Akashi.

The Security Council stresses the importance of the continued support of the international community to the consolidation of peace and democracy and the promotion of development in Cambodia.

Taking into account the letter dated 26 September 1993 addressed to the Secretary-General by Prince Norodom Ranariddh, First Prime Minister, and Mr. Hun Sen, Second Prime Minister, and the further report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of Security Council resolution 745 (1992) of 28 February 1992 which members of the Council have just received, the Council will continue to study the situation in Cambodia and will consider what action it should take.

Decision of 12 October 1993: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

On 7 October 1993, pursuant to resolution 840 (1993), the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a further report⁴⁹ in which he reported having received a letter dated 26 September 1993 from the Government of Cambodia, requesting the dispatch of some 20 to 30 unarmed United Nations military observers to Cambodia for a period of six months following the end of the UNTAC mandate.⁵⁰ That request was made in the context of the tensions that would still remain in Cambodia, after the withdrawal of UNTAC and the need to strengthen confidence among the people. The request was reiterated on 4 October.

The Secretary-General restated his belief that United Nations efforts and resources in Cambodia should henceforth be concentrated on civilian activities in the fields of reconstruction and development, as well as human rights and mine clearance. He was not fully convinced, however, that a small group of military officers based in Phnom Penh would in practice be able to play an effective part in controlling or resolving the remaining security problems in Cambodia. He also voiced doubt about deploying a merely symbolic military presence at a time of acute financial crisis. Should the Security Council decide, however, to respond positively to the request, he would recommend that a team of 20 military liaison officers contributed by Governments, be established for a single period of six months. Those liaison officers would be separate from the proposed integrated office and their mandate would be limited to maintaining liaison with the Government of Cambodia and reporting to the Secretary-General on matters affecting security in Cambodia.

By a letter dated 12 October 1993,⁵¹ the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General that the members of the Council had considered his report concerning the request from the Government of Cambodia. They had agreed in principle with his recommendation and invited him to submit as soon as possible a further report setting out in greater detail the proposed objectives, and terms of reference of such a team, together with detailed plans for its dispatch and an estimate of the resources required. The members of the Council also invited the Secretary-General to consider, and address the implications of, the possibility of incorporating the officers in the United Nations office to be established in Cambodia, as had been suggested in the letter from the Government of Cambodia.

Decision of 4 November 1993 (3303rd meeting):

On 27 October 1993, pursuant to resolution 840 (1993), the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a further report setting out the proposed objectives and terms of reference of a military liaison team.⁵² The report also addressed the issue of incorporating the team in the proposed United Nations office in Cambodia. In that regard, the Secretary-General reiterated his recommendation that the military liaison team should be separate from the proposed integrated office on the basis that it would seem better to keep the short-term military activity separate from the long-term civilian activities which would be coordinated through the integrated office.

By a letter dated 28 October 1993, addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁵³ the Secretary-General informed the Council of a request made by the officer-in-charge of the UNTAC withdrawal to extend the deployment of UNTAC military police and medical unit beyond 15 November, owing to deteriorating security conditions in the country. The Secretary-General believed that these limited extensions were necessary in order to ensure the safety and security of UNTAC personnel and its equipment as they completed the withdrawal. He also proposed to extend the deployment of 17 existing members of the Mine Clearance and Training Unit of UNTAC until 30 November 1993.

The Secretary-General also stated that mine clearance would continue to be a major need in the post-conflict peacebuilding in Cambodia. He indicated that the United Nations Trust Fund for Demining in Cambodia would be maintained and that continued technical support and capacity-building would also be required to enable the Cambodian Mine Action Centre to become self-sufficient. The Secretary-General had therefore asked the United Nations Development Programme to enter into consultations with the new Government of Cambodia with a view to providing technical support and capacity-building as required for a limited duration. Pending such arrangements, and in order to avert a damaging break in that important activity, he proposed to extend the deployment of 17 existing members of the Mine Clearance and Training Unit of UNTAC until 30 November 1993.

At its 3303rd meeting, on 4 November 1993, the Security Council included the reports of the Secretary-General of 5, 7 and 27 October, as well as the above-mentioned letter, in its agenda.⁵⁴ After the adoption of the agenda, the Council, in accordance with the decisions taken at its 3287th meeting, invited the representatives of Australia, Cambodia and Thailand to participate, in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Cape Verde) then drew the attention of the members of the Council to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations, and read out a revision to be made to the draft in its provisional form.⁵⁵

The draft resolution, as orally revised, was thereupon put to the vote and was adopted unanimously as resolution 880 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 745 (1992) of 28 February 1992 concerning the implementation plan of the agreements on a comprehensive political settlement to the Cambodian conflict signed in Paris on 23 October 1991, and subsequent relevant resolutions,

Taking note of the further reports of the Secretary-General of 5 October 1993, 7 October 1993 and 27 October and 3 November 1993, and of his letter dated 28 October 1993 to the President of the Security Council,

15. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to report on the lessons learned during the course of the Authority in the context of the Agenda for Peace.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United States, referring to the dispatch of a team of military liaison officers to Cambodia, said that the length of time of the deployment would depend on how long they were wanted and needed by the Cambodians. The Council must be prepared to re-examine and, if necessary and so requested by the Government of Cambodia, to renew the mission after six months. That would also apply to the United Nations representative in Cambodia whose tenure should correspond to the needs on the ground rather than to any arbitrary time limit.⁵⁶

Other representatives also welcomed the establishment of a team of military liaison officers to report on matters affecting security in Cambodia and to deal with residual military matters relating to the peace agreements, as well as the Secretary-General's intention to appoint, in consultation with the Government of Cambodia, a representative to coordinate the United Nations presence in the country.⁵⁷ They further endorsed the Council's call, urging Member States to continue to assist the Government in achieving its objectives of national reconciliation and rehabilitation.

Decision of 8 April 1993: statement by the President

Following consultations held on 8 April 1993, the President made the following statement to the media on behalf of the members of the Council:¹

The members of the Council take note of the oral statement made on 6 April 1993 and the written report of International Atomic Energy Agency Director General Dr. Hans Blix. They also take note of the letter dated 12 March 1993 of the Permanent Representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to the President of the Security Council, enclosing one from his Foreign Minister with reference to Article X of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons.

¹ S/25562, recorded as a Security Council decision in Resolutions and Decisions of the Security Council, 1993, p. 116.

The members of the Council are concerned at the situation which has arisen. In this connection they reaffirm the importance of the Treaty and of the parties to it adhering to it.

The members of the Council also express their support for the Joint Declaration on the Denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula made by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea.

The members of the Council welcome all efforts aimed at resolving this situation and in particular encourage the Agency to continue its consultations with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and its constructive endeavours for a proper settlement of the nuclear verification issue in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

The members of the Council will continue to follow the situation.

Decision of 11 May 1993 (3212th meeting): resolution 825 (1993)

By a letter dated 12 March 1993 addressed to the President of the Council,² the representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea transmitted a letter of the same date from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. In his letter, the Minister for Foreign Affairs informed the Council that the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea had decided, on 12 March 1993, to withdraw from the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, in accordance with paragraph 1 of article X of the Treaty, in connection with the extraordinary situation prevailing in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, which jeopardized its supreme interests. He stated that the United States, together with the Republic of Korea, had resumed the "Team Spirit" joint military exercises, a nuclear war rehearsal, threatening the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. Furthermore, they had instigated some officials of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) secretariat and certain Member States to adopt an unjust resolution, at the meeting of the IAEA Board of Governors on 25 February 1993. That resolution, he noted, demanded that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea open those military sites having no relevance at all to its nuclear activities, in violation of the IAEA statute, the Safeguards Agreement and the agreement the IAEA had reached with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. He affirmed that to tolerate such an act would only set a precedent for helping to legitimize both the nuclear threats against the non-nuclear-weapon State parties, and interference in their internal affairs. The Minister hoped that the Council would take note of the decision of the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to withdraw from the Treaty until the United States nuclear threats and the unjust conduct of IAEA against the Democratic People's Republic of Korea would be recognized to have been removed.

By a letter dated 19 March 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,³ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Council a communication conveyed to him by the Director General of IAEA concerning the implementation of the Safeguards Agreement between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Agency. The communication included a resolution adopted by the IAEA Board on 18 March 1993 and a report by the Director General of IAEA submitted pursuant to a resolution adopted by the Board on 25 February 1993 which, inter alia, called upon the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to extend full cooperation to IAEA to enable it to fully discharge its responsibilities under the Safeguards Agreement and to respond positively without delay to the Director General's request of 9 February 1993 for access to additional information and two additional sites.

The Director General of IAEA reported that, on 26 February 1993, he had forwarded the text of the resolution to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and requested that an inspection team be received. On 10 March, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea informed the Director General that it reserved its consideration of the receipt of the inspection team, referring to the resumption of the joint military exercise "Team Spirit" by the United States and the Republic of Korea and the "state of semi-war" ordered by the Supreme Commander of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea from 9 March. The Director General had replied on the same day, advising that the "state of semi-war" could not impede the implementation of the Safeguards Agreement.

The Director General further reported that he had received a copy of a 12 March statement by the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea declaring its decision to withdraw from the Non-Proliferation Treaty and indicating that that stand would remain unchanged until the United States stopped its nuclear threats against the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the IAEA secretariat returned to the principle of independence and impartiality. He had written subsequently to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea informing it that the Treaty and the Safeguards Agreement remained duly in force until any withdrawal took effect, that is, after three months' advance notice to all other parties and to the United Nations Security Council. It followed that a declaration of intention to withdraw from the Treaty should not impede the implementation of the Safeguards Agreement. In its reply on 16 March, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea stated that because some officials of the IAEA secretariat had departed from the objectivity and impartiality and joined in a plot by a party in hostilities towards the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, it could not receive the Agency inspection team. The resolution adopted by the Board on 18 March 1993, requested the Director General, inter alia, to continue his efforts and dialogue and to report further on the response of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to the resolution of 25 February, on 31 March 1993.

By a note dated 12 April 1993,⁴ the Secretary-General transmitted to the members of the Security Council a letter dated 6 April 1993 from the Director General of IAEA transmitting his report on behalf of the Board of Governors to the Security Council and the General Assembly concerning non-compliance of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea with the Safeguards Agreement and on the Agency's inability to verify the non-diversion of material required to be safeguarded, pursuant to a resolution adopted by the Board of Governors of IAEA on 1 April 1993. In that resolution, the Board found, based on the report of the Director General, that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea was in non-compliance with its obligations under its Safeguards Agreement with the Agency, and that the Agency was not able to verify that there had been no diversion of nuclear material required to be safeguarded under the terms of the Safeguards Agreement, to nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices and decided, as required by article XII.C of the statute and in accordance with article 19 of the Safeguards Agreement, to report the findings to the Security Council and the General Assembly of the United Nations.

At its 3212th meeting, on 11 May 1993, the Council included in its agenda the letter dated 12 March 1993 from the representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea addressed to the President of the Council, the letter dated 19 March 1993 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Council, and the note by the Secretary-General.

The Council invited the representatives of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Russian Federation) then drew the attention of the members of the Council to the text of a draft resolution submitted by France, Hungary, Japan, New Zealand, the Russian Federation, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States.⁵ He also drew their attention to several other documents.⁶

⁶ Letter dated 9 April 1993 from the representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/25576); letter dated 12 April 1993 from the representative of Bulgaria addressed to the Secretary-General (S/25581); letter dated 13 April 1993 from representative of Turkey addressed to the Secretary-General (S/25593); letter dated 15 April 1993 from the representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/25595); letter dated 4 May 1993 from the representative of Paraguay

The representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, referring to his letter of 10 May 1993,⁷ in which he had officially requested the Security Council to consider at this meeting issues related to the abuse by IAEA of the Safeguards Agreement between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and IAEA, expressed the hope that his request would be considered a formal agenda item, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter and the provisional rules of procedure of the Council. Recalling the statement of his Government issued on 12 March 1993,⁸ he pointed out that the major reason which had forced his country to withdraw from the Non-Proliferation Treaty was the fact that the United States kept increasing nuclear threats against it and manipulated some officials at the IAEA secretariat to open its military bases and disarm it. Firstly, the United States had escalated its nuclear threat against the Democratic People's Republic of Korea while maintaining its nuclear weapons deployed in the Republic of Korea, contrary to the fact that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea joined the Treaty and since then had fulfilled its obligations under the Treaty in good faith. Such threat constituted a flagrant violation of the Treaty as well as of Security Council resolution 255 (1968) of 19 June 1968.⁹ Secondly, the United States and its followers fabricated the "inconsistencies in principle" between the declarations of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the findings of the IAEA. Thirdly, some officials of the IAEA secretariat deviated from the function of officials of the international organization and became servants of the United States by turning over to them the information on the inspection results, in contravention of the IAEA statute. Fourthly, the refusal of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to allow the Agency's unlawful inspection of the "suspicious locations" was nothing but a sovereign State's full exercise of a fair right, which could never be considered non-compliance with the Safeguards Agreement. Fifthly, since there was no legal or technical ground to discuss the "non-compliance" of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea with the Safeguards Agreement or its withdrawal from the Treaty, the Security Council should instead discuss without fail the acts of the United States and of some officials of IAEA.

The representative also stated that the withdrawal of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea from the Treaty and the problems in implementing the Safeguards Agreement could not be construed as harming world peace, nor threatening the security of other countries. No legal or technical grounds could be found to discuss the so-called "nuclear problem" at the Security Council. Signing, accession to, termination of and withdrawal from the treaty were legal actions within the sovereign rights of an independent State and no one was entitled to interfere in these. Moreover, the withdrawal of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea from the Treaty was a self-defence measure based on a State's right to withdraw from the Treaty in the exercise of its national sovereignty, in case a State party to the Treaty decides that its supreme interests are threatened.

Turning to the draft resolution, he stated that it was aimed at infringing upon the sovereignty of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, ignoring the requirements of Article 33 of Chapter VI of the Charter of the United Nations, the statute of IAEA and the norms of international law that disputes should be resolved through dialogue and negotiations. The draft resolution should be rejected, since it was unreasonable and in contravention of Article 2(4) of the Charter and article 3(d) of the IAEA statute, which called for respect of the sovereignty of the Member States. Its adoption would compel the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to take corresponding measures in self-defence. Concluding that the issue could not be solved without comprehensively resolving the nuclear problem of the Korean peninsula, he called upon the United States to withdraw the resolution.¹⁰

The representative of the Republic of Korea stated that IAEA had referred the matter to the Security Council after having exhausted all means available to it under its statute to resolve the issue. He stated that the characterization of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea of the two sites as military sites did not make them immune from inspection. It was the right of IAEA under the Agreement with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to inspect locations which it had bona fide reason to believe were nuclear-related, regardless of whether they were military or not. With regard to the claim made by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea that the "Team Spirit" exercise was a nuclear rehearsal, the speaker reiterated that the exercise was purely defensive in nature and involved conventional weapons only. Finally, the allegation by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea that some officials of the IAEA secretariat were partial and were influenced by an unfriendly party was completely unfounded. He pointed out in that regard that the IAEA Board of Governors had reaffirmed its full confidence in the secretariat in its resolution of 18 March 1993.

The speaker further stated that by refusing IAEA inspections of suspected nuclear sites and deciding to pull out of the Treaty, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea posed a serious threat to international peace and security, in particular the security and stability of north-east Asia and was a blow to past achievements in easing tension on the Korean peninsula, such as the Joint Declaration on the Denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula. It also constituted a threat to the Treaty regime and the IAEA safeguards system. Although it was true that every party had the right to withdraw from the Treaty, it was stipulated that this right could be exercised only when extraordinary events jeopardized supreme national interest.

Recalling the presidential statement adopted at the Security Council summit meeting of 31 January 1992 which provided,¹¹ inter alia, that the members of the Council would take appropriate measures in the case of any violations notified to them by IAEA, the speaker believed that the primary obligation to stop nuclear weapons development by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea rested with the international community as a whole and particularly on the Security Council, which was entrusted with the maintenance of international peace and security under the Charter.¹²

The representative of the United States stated that the issue under discussion by the Council was the failure of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to adhere to its obligations under a Safeguards Agreement with IAEA and its subsequent announcement that it intended to withdraw from the Treaty. She emphasized that these disputes concerned international agencies and the international community, not just a single country. Addressing the charges made against the United States by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, she stated that the United States, like other nations, provided information and technical support to IAEA at the Agency's request to support the implementation of safeguards on nuclear materials and facilities. IAEA had come to its own conclusions about whether countries were complying with safeguards requirements, drawing primarily from information obtained by its own inspectors but taking into account information provided by member Governments. She denied that the United States posed a nuclear threat to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, indicating that the "Team Spirit" joint military manoeuvres were a purely defensive conventional exercise.¹³

The representative of China, speaking in explanation of vote, expressed the view that the issue concerning the Democratic People's Republic of Korea was mainly a matter between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and IAEA, between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the United States, and between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea. It should therefore be settled properly through direct dialogue and consultation between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the three other parties concerned, respectively. China was not in favour of having this issue handled by the Security Council, let alone having a resolution adopted on this issue by the Council. This would only complicate the situation rather than contribute to its appropriate settlement. China would therefore abstain on the draft resolution.¹⁴

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted by 13 votes to none, with 2 abstentions,¹⁵ as resolution 825 (1993) which reads:

The Security Council,

Having considered with concern the letter dated 12 March 1993 from the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea dated 12 March 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council concerning the intention of the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to withdraw from the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and the report of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency,

Recalling the statement made by the President of the Council on 8 April 1993 in which the members of the Council welcome all efforts aimed at resolving this situation and, in particular, encourage the Agency to continue its consultations with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea for proper settlement of the nuclear verification issue in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea,

Noting in that context the critical importance of the Treaty, and emphasizing the integral role of Agency safeguards in the implementation of the Treaty and in ensuring the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, and reaffirming the crucial contribution which progress in non-proliferation can make to the maintenance of international peace and security,

Recalling the Joint Declaration on the Denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea, which includes establishment of a credible and effective bilateral inspection regime and a pledge not to possess nuclear reprocessing and uranium enrichment facilities,

Noting that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea is party to the Treaty and has concluded a full-scope safeguards agreement as required by that Treaty,

Having also considered with regret the Agency's Board of Governors' findings contained in its resolution GOV/2645 of 1 April 1993 that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea is in non-compliance with its obligations under the safeguards agreement that it concluded with the Agency, and that the Agency is not able to verify that there has been no diversion of nuclear materials required to be safeguarded under the terms of the safeguards agreement on nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea,

Taking note of the statement made on 1 April 1993 by the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America, the depositaries of the Treaty, which questions whether the Democratic People's Republic of Korea's stated reasons for withdrawing from the Treaty constitute extraordinary events relating to the subject-matter of the Treaty,

Taking note also of the letter of reply to the Director General of the Agency from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea dated 22 April 1993 which, inter alia, encourages and urges the Director General to hold consultations with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on the implementation of the safeguards agreement, and noting also that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea has expressed its willingness to seek a negotiated solution to this issue,

Welcoming recent signs of improved cooperation between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Agency and the prospect of contacts between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and other Member States, ¹⁴ Ibid., pp. 42-43.

¹⁵ For the vote, see S/PV.3212, p. 44; see also chapter IV.

1. Calls upon the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to reconsider the announcement contained in the letter dated 12 March 1993 and thus to reaffirm its commitment to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

2. Also calls upon the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to honour its non-proliferation obligations under the Treaty and comply with its safeguards agreement with the Agency as specified by the Agency's Board of Governors' resolution GOV/2636 of 25 February 1993;

3. Requests the Director General of the Agency to continue to consult with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea with a view to resolving the issues which are the subject of the Board of Governors' findings and to report to the Security Council on his efforts in due time;

4. Urges all Member States to encourage the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to respond positively to the present resolution, and encourages them to facilitate a solution;

5. Decides to remain seized of the matter and to consider further action if necessary.

After the vote, the representative of France said that the current situation made it necessary for the Council to manifest, clearly and unambiguously, its determination to see the emergence of an early settlement. The resolution attested to its resolve to settle a disturbing situation which represented an important disagreement between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the whole of the international community and was not a simple bilateral crisis. The text of the resolution was, however, not intended to be threatening and also took into account the prospects for opening up bilateral dialogue in parallel to the multilateral framework. The speaker concluded by saying that the passing of the 12 June deadline, when the withdrawal of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea from the Treaty would become effective, would not exonerate the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and would prompt the Council, as provided in the resolution, to draw all the appropriate conclusions.¹⁶

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that his delegation did not question the right of States to withdraw from treaties if such withdrawal was in accordance with the provisions of the treaty concerned. Article 10, paragraph 1, of the Non-Proliferation Treaty required that in exercising its national sovereignty a party withdrawing from the Treaty shall give notice of such withdrawal to all other parties to the Treaty and to the Security Council three months in advance, and that such notice shall include a statement of the extraordinary events, related to the subject matter of the Treaty, which it regarded as having jeopardized its supreme interests. In this connection, he recalled the joint statement issued on 1 April 1993 by the three co-depositaries of the Treaty — the Russian Federation, the United States and the United Kingdom — in which they questioned whether the stated reasons of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea for withdrawal in fact constituted extraordinary events related to the subject matter of the Treaty.¹⁷ He also noted that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea remained bound by its obligation under its safeguards agreement. In his Government's view, it was absolutely essential that this issue be treated multilaterally as well as bilaterally. While accepting that there was an important role for bilateral contacts, he maintained that the issue under consideration was about multilateral disciplines maintained by multilateral organizations such as IAEA. It was therefore absolutely right and proper that the Security Council should play its role in handling that aspect and remain seized of the matter since further action could be considered.¹⁸

The representative of Pakistan expressed the view that the problem between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and IAEA had been referred to the Security Council in a rather precipitate manner. His delegation had therefore abstained in the vote on the IAEA Board of Governors' resolution of 1 April 1993, but had endorsed the Council's statement of 8 April 1993 which encouraged a resumption of consultations between the two parties. His delegation had also abstained in the vote on the resolution before the Council, having difficulties with the seventh preambular paragraph and operative paragraph 1. In his delegation's view, the seventh preambular paragraph was inconsistent with the letter and spirit of article X of the Treaty, particularly when read in conjunction with operative paragraph 1 of the resolution. Article X of the Treaty recognized the right of a State Party to withdraw from the Treaty if it decided that extraordinary events related to the subject matter had jeopardized its supreme interests. That decision had been left entirely to the State party concerned.¹⁹

B. Note by the Secretary-General (S/1994/254)

Note by the Secretary-General (S/1994/322)

Decision of 31 March 1994 (3357th meeting): statement by the President

By a note dated 4 March 1994,²⁰ the Secretary-General transmitted to the members of the Security Council a letter dated 1 March 1994 from the Director General of IAEA transmitting an addendum to the report of 3 December 1993 of the Director General to the Security Council on the implementation of the Agreement between the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and IAEA for the application of safeguards in connection with the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons. The Director General reported that, following discussions between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the United States in December 1993, the authorities of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea indicated to the Agency at the beginning of January that they were ready to accept IAEA inspection of declared nuclear material and installations in the country required to provide "the continuity of safeguards". Since then, several detailed rounds of working-level discussions had taken place between IAEA and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea about activities to be performed during the next inspection of declared nuclear material and installations in that country. During the discussions, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea had referred to what it termed its "unique situation" under the Treaty, a situation in which it had itself defined what inspection activities were necessary to ensure "continuity of safeguards". In the Agency's view, however, it was only for its secretariat to determine which inspection activities were required to meet its technical requirements. The Agency had indicated that the aim of the next inspection would be the acquisition of sufficient data to enable the Agency to verify that there had been no diversion of nuclear material at the seven declared facilities since the last inspections and to take measures as were needed to allow future verification of non-diversion. While the discussions had not brought about agreement regarding the formal basis of the inspection, a detailed list of inspection activities was established and accepted. The Director General noted, however, that the inspection activities which the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea agreed on related to the seven nuclear facilities declared by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and did not address the need for access to additional information and locations, nor did they address other activities required to verify the completeness of the country's initial inventory of nuclear material and facilities. The inspection team departed on 26 February with a schedule to arrive on 1 March in Pyongyang.

By a note dated 22 March 1994,²¹ the Secretary-General transmitted to the members of the Security Council a further report of the Director General of IAEA, dated 21 March 1994, on the implementation of the Agreement between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea for the application of Safeguards in connection with the Non-Proliferation Treaty and the text of a resolution on that issue adopted on the same day by the IAEA Board of Governors. The Director General reported that the inspection activities, in keeping with the agreement reached during consultations on 15 February, had proceeded without difficulty at all facilities except the radiochemical laboratory. Difficulties at the radiochemical laboratory had centred on inspection activities agreed upon and designed to restore continuity of knowledge through taking samples and smears. The Director General noted in that regard that during the inspection, Agency inspectors had asked to carry out only those activities to which the Democratic People's Republic of Korea had agreed. Moreover, with regard to the radiochemical laboratory, the inspection team had agreed to replace some liquid which presented technical problems for the Democratic People's Republic of Korea with smear-sampling; provided that it fulfilled the agreed purpose of the inspection. In discussion and in correspondence with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the Agency had made it clear that, if the objectives of the inspection were to be achieved, it was indispensable that the Agency perform all the activities which the Democratic People's Republic of Korea had accepted. It could only be concluded, therefore, that on some points central to the Agency's ability to detect any diversion of nuclear material, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea had disregarded its own commitments. Owing to the restrictions imposed on inspection activities, the Agency inspection team was unable to implement the agreement of 15 February between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and IAEA with respect to the radiochemical laboratory. The Agency could not, in the absence of the required activities, obtain continuity of knowledge of the operational status of the facility since the last inspection in February 1993. The Director General concluded that the Agency was unable to draw conclusions as to whether there had been either diversion of nuclear material or reprocessing or other operations at the radiochemical laboratory since then.

In the resolution adopted on 21 March, the Board found, inter alia, that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea was in further non-compliance with its Safeguards Agreement, had aggravated that situation by not allowing the IAEA inspectors to conduct indispensable inspection activities and that the Agency consequently remained unable to verify that there had been no diversion of nuclear material required to be safeguarded under the terms of the Safeguards Agreement to nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices.

At its 3357th meeting, on 31 March 1994, the Security Council included in its agenda the two notes by the Secretary-General of 4 and 22 March 1994. The Council invited the representatives of Japan and the Republic of Korea, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (France) then drew the attention of the members of the Council to several documents.²² By a letter dated 21 March 1994 addressed to the President of the Council,²³ the representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea transmitted a statement by the spokesman for the General Department of Atomic Energy of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea dated 18 March 1994. According to that statement, the inspection was aimed exclusively at maintaining the continuity of safeguards, as appropriate, given the unique status of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea characterized by the temporary suspension of its declared withdrawal from the Non-Proliferation Treaty. During the bilateral consultations on 15 February 1994, the IAEA secretariat had accepted that the agreed inspection would be an inspection needed for maintaining the continuity of safeguards and the parties reached agreement on the scope of such an inspection. While the inspection was proceeding, the secretariat and the inspection team unilaterally claimed that the inspection was not an inspection necessary for providing the continuity of safeguards but a Safeguards Agreement-bound inspection. They pressed inordinate demands that had no relevance to the aim and character of an inspection designed to verify the absence of nuclear activities and constituted a violation of the agreement reached during consultations. Still, the activities performed by the IAEA inspection team were sufficient to enable the Agency to both fully verify the non-diversion of nuclear material at nuclear facilities in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and definitely ensure the continuity of the safeguards. By a letter dated 25 March 1994 addressed to the President of the Council,²⁴ the representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea transmitted a further statement by the spokesman for the General Department of Atomic Energy dated 24 March 1994. The statement rejected the findings of the Board of Governors, as expressed in its resolution of 21 March, and declared that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea was under no obligation to accept routine and ad hoc inspections under the Safeguards Agreement, due to the temporary suspension of the effectuation of its withdrawal from the Treaty.

The President then stated that, following consultations among Council members, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:²⁵

The Security Council recalls the statement made by its President on 8 April 1993 and its relevant resolution.

The Council reaffirms the critical importance of International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards in the implementation of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and the contribution which progress in non-proliferation makes to the maintenance of international peace and security.

The Council notes with deep appreciation the efforts of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency and of the Agency to implement the safeguards agreement between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

The Council reaffirms the importance of the Joint Declaration on the Denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea, and of the parties to the declaration addressing the nuclear issue in their continuing dialogue.

The Council welcomes the joint statement of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the United States of America of 11 June 1993, which included the decision of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to suspend the effectuation of its withdrawal from the Treaty, and the understanding reached between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the United States at Geneva in July 1993, and the progress achieved on that basis.

The Council welcomes also the agreements reached in February 1994 between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, and between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the United States.

The Council takes note that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea has accepted in principle Agency inspections at its seven declared sites, following its decision to suspend its withdrawal from the Treaty on 11 June 1993 and the statement by the General Department of Atomic Energy of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

The Council takes note also of the findings of the Board of Governors of the Agency concerning the matter of compliance and the report of the Director General to the Security Council of 21 March 1994, and expresses its concern that the Agency is, therefore, unable to draw conclusions as to whether there has been either diversion of nuclear material or reprocessing or other operations.

The Council calls upon the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to allow the Agency's inspectors to complete the inspection activities agreed between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on 15 February 1994, as a step in fulfilling its obligations under the safeguards agreement between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and in honouring non-proliferation obligations of the Treaty.

The Council invites the Director General to report further to it on the question of completion of the inspection activities agreed between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on 15 February 1994 when the Director General is scheduled to report on the follow on inspections required to maintain continuity of safeguards and to verify that there has been no diversion of nuclear material required to be safeguarded, as noted in the report of the Director General to the Council.

The Council requests the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea to renew discussions whose purpose is implementation of the Joint Declaration on the Denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula.

The Council appeals to those Member States engaged in dialogue with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to continue that dialogue in accordance with the agreement reached on 25 February 1994.

The Council decides to remain actively seized of the matter and that further Council consideration will take place if necessary in order to achieve full implementation of the safeguards agreement between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

C. Note by the Secretary-General transmitting a letter dated 27 May 1994 from the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency addressed to the Secretary-General

Decision of 30 May 1994 (3383rd meeting): statement by the President

By a note dated 27 May 1994,²⁶ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Council a letter of the same date from the Director General of IAEA, following his communication of 19 May in which he had reported, inter alia, that despite Agency requests to the contrary, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea had started operations relating to the refuelling of its 5-megawatt nuclear power reactor without allowing safeguards activities required at the time of the refuelling. The Director General stated that despite extensive discussions held with officials of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, from 25 to 27 May, in Pyongyang, no agreement had been reached about how to proceed with the implementation of the required safeguards measures. The Democratic People's Republic of Korea had reiterated that it had a unique status and was not duty-bound at all to fully implement the obligations of the Safeguards Agreement. At the same time, the Agency team had noted that the fuel discharge operation at the reactor had been proceeding at a very fast pace. The Director General pointed out, in that regard, that if the discharge operation continued at the same rate, the Agency's opportunity to select, segregate and secure fuel rods for later measurement in accordance with Agency standards would be lost within days. In such a case, the Agency would not be in a position to verify that all nuclear material in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea that was subject to safeguards was in fact under safeguards.

At its 3383rd meeting, on 30 May 1994, the Security Council included in its agenda the note by the Secretary-General of 27 May 1994. The Council invited the representatives of Japan and the Republic of Korea, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Nigeria) drew the attention of the members of the Council to several documents.²⁷ By a letter dated 5 May 1994,²⁸ the representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea transmitted answers by a spokesman for the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to questions put forward by the Korean central News Agency. The spokesman stated that the IAEA secretariat was raising an unreasonable demand for selecting, preserving and measuring some fuel at the time of the fuel-rod replacement. The selective measurement of the fuel rod could never be permitted because it meant routine and ad hoc inspections that ignored the unique status of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea following the temporary suspension of the effectuation of its declared withdrawal from the Non-Proliferation Treaty. He further stated that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea would place all the replaced fuel under the control of IAEA and allow its measurement when the nuclear issue was resolved in a package deal at the future talks between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the United States.

The President then made the following statement on behalf of the Council:²⁹

The Security Council recalls the statements made by its President on 8 April 1993 and 31 March 1994 and its relevant resolution.

²⁷ Note by the Secretary-General, transmitting a letter dated 19 May 1994 from the Director General of IAEA to the Secretary-General (S/1994/601); letters dated 28 April and 5 May 1994 from the representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to the President of the Security Council (S/1994/513 and S/1994/540); and letter dated 30 May 1994 from the representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to the President of the Security Council (S/1994/634).

The Council has noted the fact that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea has allowed the inspectors of the International Atomic Energy Agency to complete the inspection activities agreed between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on 15 February 1994, thus taking one step in fulfilling its obligations under the safeguards agreement between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and in honouring its non-proliferation obligations under the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons.

The Council reaffirms the critical importance of the Agency's safeguards in the implementation of the Treaty and the contribution which progress in non-proliferation makes to the maintenance of international peace and security.

The Council has considered the letter dated 27 May 1994 from the Director General of the Agency to the Secretary-General, and is gravely concerned by the Agency's assessment that, if the discharge operation at the five-megawatt reactor continues at the same rate, the opportunity of the Agency to select, segregate and secure fuel rods for later measurements in accordance with the Agency's standards will be lost within days.

The Council strongly urges the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to proceed with the discharge operations at the five-megawatt reactor only in a manner which preserves the technical possibility of fuel measurements, in accordance with the Agency's requirements in this regard.

The Council calls for immediate consultations between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on the necessary technical measures.

The Council requests the Director General to maintain the Agency's inspectors in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to monitor activities at the five-megawatt reactor.

The Council decides to remain actively seized of the matter and that further Council consideration will take place if necessary in order to achieve full implementation of the safeguards agreement between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

D. Agreed Framework of 21 October 1994 between the United States of America and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea

Decision of 4 November 1994 (3451st meeting): statement by the President

At its 3451st meeting, on 4 November 1994, the Security Council included the item in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Japan and the Republic of Korea, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The President (United States) then made the following statement on behalf of the Council:³⁰

The Security Council recalls the statements made by its President on 8 April 1993, 31 March 1994 and 30 May 1994 and its relevant resolution.

The Council reaffirms the critical importance of International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards in the implementation of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and the contribution which progress in non-proliferation makes to the maintenance of international peace and security.

The Council notes with satisfaction the agreed framework of 21 October 1994 between the United States of America and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea as a positive step in the direction of denuclearizing the Korean Peninsula and maintaining peace and security in the region.

The Council notes that the parties to the agreed framework decided: (a) to cooperate in replacing the graphite-moderated reactors and related facilities of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea with light-water reactor power plants; (b) to move towards full normalization of political and economic relations; (c) to work together for peace and security on a nuclear-free Korean Peninsula; and (d) to work together to strengthen the international nuclear non-proliferation regime.

The Council takes note of the decision of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea in the agreed framework to remain a party to the Treaty. It notes also the decision of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to come into full compliance with the safeguards agreement between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea under the Treaty.

The Council underlines that the safeguards agreement remains binding and in force and looks to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to act thereon. The Council requests the Agency to take all steps it may deem necessary, following consultations between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea with regard to verifying the accuracy and completeness of the initial report of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on all nuclear material in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, to verify full compliance by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea with the safeguards agreement.

The Council notes with approval the decision of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea in the agreed framework to freeze its graphite-moderated reactors and related facilities, which is a voluntary measure beyond what is required by the Treaty and the safeguards agreement.

The Council, having received an oral report from the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency, notes further that the Agency's monitoring activities with respect to such a voluntary measure are within the scope of verification activities under the safeguards agreement.

The Council requests the Agency to take all steps it may deem necessary as a consequence of the agreed framework to monitor the freeze.

The Council also requests the Agency to continue to report to it on implementation of the safeguards agreement until the Democratic People's Republic of Korea has come into full compliance with the agreement and to report to the Council on its activities related to monitoring the freeze of the specified facilities.

The Council reaffirms the importance of the Joint Declaration on the Denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea, and welcomes the decision of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to take steps consistently to implement that Declaration and to engage in dialogue with the Republic of Korea, as the agreed framework will help create an atmosphere that promotes such dialogue.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

16. Items relating to the situation in Tajikistan

A. The situation in Tajikistan

Decision of 29 April 1993: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

By a letter dated 26 April 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹ the Secretary-General referred to his letter dated 21 December 1992, in which he had informed the Council of his intention to send to Tajikistan a small integrated United Nations team of political, military and humanitarian officers who would monitor the situation on the ground. That team, referred to as the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan (UNMOT), had become operational on 21 January 1993 and had provided valuable up-to-date information on the conflict situation in Tajikistan. Recent reports from UNMOT had led the Secretary-General to conclude that there could be an escalation of the confrontation, especially in the border areas between Tajikistan and Afghanistan, unless urgent action was taken to establish a ceasefire and start a political dialogue among all concerned. Accordingly, the Secretary-General had decided, after consulting with the Government of Tajikistan and others concerned, to appoint a Special Envoy for Tajikistan, who would report to the Secretary-General on the results achieved after approximately three months.² In those circumstances the Secretary-General believed it was necessary to extend the mandate of UNMOT for an additional three months so that it could continue its monitoring and humanitarian efforts as well as provide support to the Special Envoy.

By a letter dated 29 April 1993,³ the President of the Council (Pakistan) informed the Secretary-General as follows:

² The mandate of the Special Envoy, as laid out in document S/25697, was (a) to obtain agreement on a ceasefire and make recommendations on such international monitoring mechanisms as may be appropriate; (b) to ascertain the positions of all the concerned parties and make good offices available to assist the establishment of a process of negotiations for a political solution; (c) to enlist the help of neighbouring countries and others concerned in achieving the above objectives.

I have the honour to inform you that your letter dated 26 April 1993 concerning Tajikistan has been brought to the attention of the members of the Council. After having held consultations, the members of the Council have asked me to express their appreciation for the work of the small integrated United Nations team sent to Tajikistan. They are concerned at the situation in Tajikistan as reported in your letter and accordingly welcome your decision to appoint Mr. Ismat Kittani as your Special Envoy for Tajikistan. They also welcome your proposal that the small team of United Nations officials currently in Tajikistan should remain there for a further three months.

The members of the Council look forward to further reports on developments in Tajikistan, on Mr. Kittani's mission as it develops, and on any future recommendations you wish to make in the context of that mission.

B. The situation in Tajikistan and along the Tajik-Afghan border

Initial proceedings

Decision of 23 August 1993 (3266th meeting): statement by the President

On 16 August 1993, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Tajikistan,⁴ in which he described the latest developments in the country as well as the efforts of his Special Envoy. The Secretary-General reported that there had been a large-scale attack on 13 July 1993 by fighters who had crossed in from Afghanistan and had occupied a Russian military border post along the Tajik-Afghan border. That incident, which had resulted in 27 deaths and many more injuries, had transformed the situation into an international crisis of multiple dimensions. He also reported that on 6 and 7 July 1993, at the initiative of the President of Afghanistan, an agreement had been reached at a summit meeting of the Economic Cooperation Organization in Istanbul to establish a commission composed of representatives of Afghanistan, Tajikistan, Uzbekistan and the Russian Federation to find a peaceful solution to the problem on the border between Tajikistan and Afghanistan. The Secretary-General also referred to a summit meeting on the situation in Tajikistan which had taken place in Moscow on 7 August 1993 at the initiative of the Russian Federation at which the heads of State and Government from Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan had emphasized that a political settlement remained the main priority and had called on the international community to support efforts to reach a political settlement. At the same meeting, the Government of Tajikistan had expressed its intention to develop a dialogue with opposition forces. The Secretary-General observed that a solution to the conflict could only come through peaceful reconciliation with the widest possible participation of all political groups and all the regions of the country. Given the escalating crisis on the Tajik-Afghan border, he had dispatched his Special Envoy to Afghanistan and other countries in the region for further discussions. Expressing his deep concern at the situation in Tajikistan, which contained the seeds of a major threat to peace and security for central Asia and beyond, he stressed the need for a concerted effort in order to persuade the Government of Tajikistan and all major groups in the opposition to accept a political solution and to participate in a negotiating process. The Secretary-General stood ready to recommend to the Security Council a positive reaction to any reasonable request by the parties for United Nations assistance in their efforts to implement the various initiatives under consideration. In those circumstances, he proposed to extend the mandate of his Special Envoy until 31 October 1993. Sharing the views of his Special Envoy that Tajikistan needed advice and assistance in developing various parts of its economic and social infrastructure, as well as humanitarian assistance, and noting that the Government had also sought United Nations advisory services in the field of human rights, he said that a multifaceted United Nations presence would be required in Dushanbe. In the interim, he proposed to extend, for a period of three months, the small team of United Nations officials already in Tajikistan.

At its 3266th meeting, on 23 August 1993, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Tajikistan, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (United States) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a letter dated 4 August 1993 addressed to the Secretary-General from the representative of Tajikistan,⁵ in which he stated that, given the ongoing build-up of Tajik armed opposition forces and Afghan mujahidin in Afghanistan along the frontier with Tajikistan, his Government considered that the only alternative was decisive action to put an end to the armed aggression in that area, in full conformity with the right of individual and collective self-defence provided for under Article 51 of the Charter. The President also drew attention to a letter dated 10 August 1993 from the representatives of Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation and Tajikistan,⁶ transmitting several documents adopted at the meeting of the heads of State of Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan at Moscow on 7 August 1993. In one of those documents,⁷ the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the five participating countries informed the Secretary-General that, in accordance with the Treaty on Collective Security which they had signed within the framework of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) and in implementation of the right of individual and collective self-defence under Article 51 of the Charter, they had decided to provide Tajikistan with emergency supplementary assistance, including military assistance. Taking into account the threat to peace and security in the region, they requested the Security Council to consider immediately the critical situation that had arisen on the Tajik-Afghan frontier and to take measures to ensure its inviolability, including the possible sending of United Nations observers.

The President then stated that, following consultations among Council members, she had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁸

The Council expresses its deep concern at the continuing violence and armed conflict in Tajikistan, at the escalating crisis along the Tajik-Afghan border, and at the risk of the conflict threatening the peace and stability of Central Asia and beyond.

The Council stresses the urgent need for the cessation of all hostile actions on the Tajik-Afghan border. It urges the Government of Tajikistan and all opposition groups to accept as soon as possible the need for an overall political solution and to participate in a negotiating process for the early establishment of a ceasefire and eventual national reconciliation with the widest possible participation of all political groups and all the regions of the country. The Council looks to the Government of Tajikistan and all opposition groups to observe basic political rights of all groups in Tajikistan, in order to promote a lasting reconciliation and to achieve full compliance with the principles to which Tajikistan is committed as a participating State in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

The Council reaffirms the necessity to respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Tajikistan and all other countries of the region and the inviolability of their borders.

The Council welcomes efforts by regional parties aimed at stabilizing the situation. In particular, the Council welcomes the Moscow summit of heads of State and Government from the Republic of Kazakhstan, the Republic of Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation, the Republic of Tajikistan and the Republic of Uzbekistan, held on 7 August 1993 at the initiative of the Russian Federation, and the Istanbul summit of the Economic Cooperation Organization, held on 6 and 7 July 1993, and their decisions aimed at peaceful solutions to the problems on the border between Tajikistan and Afghanistan. Furthermore, it welcomes the efforts of the Conference on Cooperation and Security in Europe. The Council recognizes the actions of the Governments of Afghanistan and Tajikistan which created new negotiating bodies aimed at reducing tension along their common border.

The Council draws attention to the critical humanitarian situation in Tajikistan and the Tajik refugee camps in northern Afghanistan and the need for additional humanitarian assistance. Stabilizing the situation along the Tajik-Afghan border should assist the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in performing its mission. The Council calls upon the Government of Tajikistan to continue to assist in the return and reintegration of all Tajiks who fled this civil war and who wish to return to their homes.

The Council expresses appreciation for the report of the Secretary-General of 16 August 1993 and welcomes his proposals to extend the mandate of his Special Envoy until 31 October 1993 and to extend the tenure of United Nations officials currently in Tajikistan for a period of three months. In the light of the unstable situation on the Tajik-Afghan border, the Council welcomes the Secretary-General's decision to dispatch his Special Envoy to Afghanistan and other countries in the region. The Council also welcomes the receptivity of the Secretary-General to possible requests from the parties for United Nations assistance in their efforts already under way and requests that he and his Special Envoy maintain close contact with the parties.

The Council looks forward to receiving periodic reports from the Secretary-General on his Special Envoy's mission and the Secretary-General's recommendations for ways the United Nations may assist in resolving the situation and for defining more clearly the possible ambit of United Nations involvement.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Decision of 23 November 1993: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

On 14 November 1993, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Tajikistan.⁹ The Secretary-General stated that the situation in Tajikistan, especially on the Tajik-Afghan border, gave grounds for serious concern. Cross-border infiltration by armed opposition groups from the territory of Afghanistan and fighting between them and government and CIS forces occurred on a daily basis. In addition, the armed confrontation was intensifying inside the country. There remained a danger that that instability could spill into neighbouring countries. The humanitarian situation continued to be a matter of deep concern. There were also alarming reports of violations of human rights in Tajikistan.

The Secretary-General reported that the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan had informed him of the decision of their Governments to establish CIS coalition peacekeeping forces on the territory of Tajikistan, with the purpose of stabilizing the situation in that country.¹⁰ There had also been encouraging developments on the bilateral front with the three-day visit to Kabul by the Tajik President, which concluded on 30 August 1993.

The Secretary-General observed that the current developments in Tajikistan and the neighbouring region gave grounds both for hope for a political solution of the conflict and for serious concern at the risk of further deterioration of the situation. Concerted efforts were needed to overcome the remaining difficulties and to persuade the Government of Tajikistan and all major opposition groups to start a serious process of negotiation without further delay. He would be ready to respond positively to any reasonable request by the parties and to recommend to the Council an appropriate international monitoring mechanism to help to implement possible future agreements concluded by them. In those circumstances, he had decided to extend the mandate of his Special Envoy until 31 March 1994. The Government of Tajikistan had requested him to establish a United Nations integrated office in Dushanbe. Pending a decision by the General Assembly on that matter, he proposed that the small team of United Nations officials already in

Tajikistan should continue to perform their functions until such an office was established.¹¹

By a letter dated 23 November 1993,¹² the President of the Council (Cape Verde) informed the Secretary-General as follows:

The members of the Council have requested me to thank you for your report of 14 November 1993 on Tajikistan. They are concerned at the situation in Tajikistan as reported therein and accordingly welcome your decision to extend the mandate of your Special Envoy until 31 March 1994. They agree with your proposal contained in paragraph 16 of your report that the small team of United Nations officials currently in Tajikistan continue to perform their functions until a decision is taken on the proposal to establish an integrated office.

The members of the Council welcome the continuing efforts of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe in Tajikistan and look forward to the close coordination you will deem appropriate to maintain and develop between the United Nations and the Conference.

The members of the Council look forward to further reports on developments in Tajikistan and on any future recommendations you might wish to make.

Decision of 22 April 1994: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

On 4 April 1994, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Tajikistan in which he informed it about the outcome of the discussions held by his Special Envoy with the Government of Tajikistan and other parties, including representatives of neighbouring and other countries in January and February 1994.¹³ During the talks, the Tajik parties had agreed to start negotiations as soon as possible. There were, however, differences between them on the issues of venue and the presence of observers at the talks. In order to facilitate the resolution of those differences, the Government of the Russian Federation had, at the request of the Tajik opposition, held consultations with them. Subsequently, in letters dated 23 and 26 March 1994, the President of Tajikistan and the head of the delegation of the Tajik opposition respectively, had informed the Secretary-General of their readiness to start the talks. In view of those developments, the Secretary-General had instructed his Special Envoy to invite the Tajik parties to a first round of talks in

¹³ S/1994/379.

Moscow, in which the Governments of Afghanistan, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Pakistan, the Russian Federation and Uzbekistan would also participate as observers. He had also decided to extend the mandate of his Special Envoy for another three months until the end of June 1994 and to enlarge his mandate to provide good offices, at the request of the parties concerned, during the political negotiations on national reconciliation. He further believed it necessary to extend for the same period the mandate of the small group of United Nations officials present in Tajikistan. He would also be ready to recommend to the Council a positive response to any reasonable request the parties might make for international monitoring mechanisms as may be appropriate.

By a letter dated 22 April 1994,¹⁴ the President of the Council (New Zealand) informed the Secretary-General as follows:

I have the honour to inform you that the members of the Security Council have considered your report of 4 April 1994 on the outcome of the discussions held in January and February by your Special Envoy for Tajikistan, Mr. Ramiro Píriz-Ballón, with the Government of Tajikistan and other parties, including representatives of neighbouring and other countries.

The members of the Council have asked me to express their appreciation for the work of your Special Envoy. They particularly welcome his efforts, and those of the Russian Federation and of neighbouring States, in securing the agreement of the parties to begin a political dialogue on national reconciliation.

The members of the Council welcome your decision to enlarge the mandate of your Special Envoy and to extend it by a further period of three months to the end of June 1994, as well as your intention to continue the presence of the small group of United Nations officials currently in Tajikistan for a similar period.

The members of the Council look forward to further reports on developments in Tajikistan, and briefings on the mission of Mr. Píriz-Ballón, in particular on the progress of the political talks, and any future recommendations you might wish to make.

Decision of 19 May 1994: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

On 5 May 1994, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Tajikistan,¹⁵ in which he informed the Council about the first round of the inter-Tajik talks on national reconciliation, held under United Nations auspices in Moscow from 5 to 19 April 1994. During those talks both parties had been able to work out a comprehensive agenda for the duration of inter-Tajik negotiations, including three clusters of issues related to the achievement of national reconciliation: (a) measures aimed at a political settlement in Tajikistan; (b) a solution of the problem of refugees and internally displaced persons; and (c) fundamental institutional issues and consolidation of the statehood of Tajikistan. The Secretary-General noted that the widest gap between the two sides had emerged during the debate on the third cluster. The delegations had accordingly agreed that they would, in the future, consider all three clusters as a single package and would negotiate compromise solutions based on that approach. Both Tajik parties had also reaffirmed their commitment to political dialogue as the only means of achieving national reconciliation and included this principle in their joint communiqué.¹⁶ At the same time, the situation in Tajikistan and on its borders with Afghanistan remained unstable and the deep economic crisis had a negative impact on the Government's attempt to achieve political stability. The above factors, together with instability and fighting in neighbouring Afghanistan prevented effective and speedy repatriation of the Tajik refugees. The Secretary-General observed that the first round of talks had been encouraging and had met his expectations. The agreement reached on the comprehensive agenda and the signing of a number of outcome documents had constituted the first step towards building confidence between the Tajik parties. He noted that the regional countries as well as other countries attending the talks as observers had provided valuable help in organizing and holding that first round. It would be important to capitalize on the momentum achieved in Moscow and to make political dialogue irreversible. His Special Envoy was involved in the preparatory work for the second round of talks. In that connection, he appealed to the Tajik parties to demonstrate restraint and to refrain from any action that could obstruct the process of negotiations and national reconciliation.

By a letter dated 19 May 1994,¹⁷ the President of the Council (Nigeria) informed the Secretary-General as follows:

¹⁶ Ibid., annex III.

¹⁷ S/1994/597.

The members of the Security Council have considered your report of 5 May 1994 on the situation in Tajikistan and the efforts that you and your Special Envoy, Mr. Ramiro Píriz-Ballón, have been undertaking to promote political dialogue between the Tajik parties, aimed at achieving national reconciliation.

The members of the Council have asked me to convey to you their full support for your efforts and those of your Special Envoy in addressing the three clusters of issues identified by the Tajik parties, which are related to the achievement of national reconciliation: those of a political settlement, the solution of the problem of refugees and internally displaced persons, and fundamental institutional issues. They are encouraged, as you are, by the outcome of the first inter-Tajik talks in Moscow, in which both parties reaffirmed their commitment to political dialogue as the only means of achieving national reconciliation. The members of the Council concur with your observation that it is important to capitalize on the momentum achieved in Moscow in order to make the political dialogue irreversible.

The members of the Council commend the role of the Russian Federation in organizing and holding the first round of negotiations in Moscow. They also note with appreciation the valuable help provided to this end by regional and other countries attending the talks as observers. They are hopeful that the second round of talks that your Special Envoy is preparing to undertake would consolidate the gains made in the first round of talks. In this connection, they appeal to the Tajik parties to cooperate fully with you, your Special Envoy and the mission in Tajikistan of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe to advance the process of negotiations and the reconciliation of the Tajik nation and to refrain from any action that could obstruct this process.

The members of the Council look forward to receiving your next report on the situation in Tajikistan.

Decision of 22 September 1994 (3427th
meeting): statement by the President

At its 3427th meeting, on 22 September 1994, the Security Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Spain) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a letter dated 21 September 1994 addressed to the Secretary-General from the representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran,¹⁸ transmitting the text of the Agreement on a Temporary Ceasefire and the Cessation of Other Hostile Acts on the Tajik-Afghan Border and Within the Country for the Duration of the Talks, signed between the Tajik Government and the Tajik opposition, in Tehran, on 17 September 1994. Under the Agreement, the parties agreed, inter alia, to a provisional ceasefire and the cessation of other hostilities on the Tajik-Afghan border and within the country. They also agreed to establish a Joint Commission consisting of representatives of the Government of Tajikistan and of the Tajik opposition to ensure the effective implementation of the Agreement and requested that the Security Council assist the work of the Commission by providing political mediation services and dispatching United Nations military observers to the areas of conflict.

The President then stated that, following consultations among Council members, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹⁹

The Security Council welcomes the agreement on a temporary ceasefire signed by the representatives of the Government of Tajikistan and the Tajik opposition on 17 September 1994 in Tehran, through the good offices of the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General and with the assistance of the representatives of the Islamic Republic of Iran, the Russian Federation and other countries acting as observers at the inter-Tajik talks. The parties agreed to the temporary cessation of all hostile actions on the Tajik Afghan border and inside Tajikistan with the assistance of United Nations military observers. The Council expresses the hope that the third round of the inter-Tajik talks in Islamabad will further consolidate the progress towards the political settlement.

The Council reaffirms its full support for the efforts of the Secretary-General and of his Special Envoy to promote political dialogue between the Government of Tajikistan and the Tajik opposition aimed at achieving national reconciliation.

The Council notes the request of the parties to the Council for United Nations support for the agreement. It invites the Secretary-General to present urgently his views and recommendations regarding this request and other aspects of the implementation of the agreement.

The Council emphasizes the importance of implementation by the parties of the obligations to which they have committed themselves and in this connection stresses the need for strict observance of the ceasefire and cessation of other hostile actions.

Decision of 29 September 1994: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

On 27 September 1994, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Tajikistan.²⁰ The Secretary-General recalled that, in his report to the Security Council dated 28 July 1994,²¹ he had informed the members of the Council of his decision to suspend preparations for the third round of inter-Tajik talks in Islamabad due to the lack of progress in the implementation of the necessary confidence-building measures by the Government of Tajikistan. In the following weeks the Government had adopted a number of important measures which he had interpreted to be a demonstration of its commitment to resolve the conflict through political dialogue. Accordingly, he had instructed his Special Envoy to undertake consultations with the Tajik parties with a view to arranging the next round of inter-Tajik talks. As a result, the two sides had agreed to hold high-level consultations in Tehran with a view to discussing the prospects for a third round of inter-Tajik talks in Islamabad. The consultations, held from 12 to 17 September 1994, enabled the parties to sign an Agreement on a Temporary Ceasefire and the Cessation of Other Hostile Acts on the Tajik-Afghan Border and within the Country for the Duration of the Talks. The parties had also agreed to hold the next round of inter-Tajik talks in Islamabad in the middle of October 1994.

The Secretary-General believed that the signing of the Tehran Agreement was an important step towards national reconciliation and the restoration of peace in Tajikistan. In those circumstances, he intended to extend the mandate of his Special Envoy for another four months until the end of January 1995. He further recommended that the mandate of the small group of United Nations officials present in Tajikistan should be extended for a further period of four months and that, as a provisional measure, it be strengthened with up to 15 military observers drawn from existing peacekeeping operations, pending a decision from the Security Council to establish a new United Nations observer mission in Tajikistan. He had decided meanwhile to send a technical mission immediately to Tajikistan to assess the modalities for establishing such an observer mission. At the same time, however, he noted that while positive changes were reported in the atmosphere in Tajikistan following the signing of the Tehran Agreement, there were alarming reports of attempts by each side to bring as much territory as possible under its control before the Agreement came into force. The Secretary-General appealed to the parties to exercise maximum mutual restraint during the short period before the Tehran Agreement entered into force with the arrival of the United Nations observers.

In a letter dated 29 September 1994,²² the President of the Council (Spain) informed the Secretary-General as follows:

The members of the Security Council wish to express their appreciation for your report on the situation in Tajikistan, following the Agreement on a Temporary Ceasefire and the Cessation of Other Hostile Acts on the Tajik-Afghan Border and within the Country for the Duration of the Talks. They considered your report at the informal consultations held on 28 September 1994 and heard a briefing by your Special Envoy for Tajikistan, Mr. Ramiro Píriz-Ballón.

The members of the Council took note of the observations and recommendations contained in your report, including the four-month extension of the presence of the small group of United Nations officials currently in Tajikistan. The members paid particular attention to your decision to send up to fifteen observers to strengthen this group, in continuation of the functions set out in your report of 16 June 1994. They understand this arrangement to be a temporary measure pending a decision by the Council on the possible establishment of a United Nations observer mission in Tajikistan on the basis of your further recommendations.

The members of the Council strongly support your call to the parties to exercise maximum restraint in the period before the Agreement enters into force. They also reaffirm the importance of implementation by the parties of the obligations to which they have committed themselves.

The members of the Council wish to take this opportunity to thank you and your Special Envoy for the continuous efforts to contribute to the political settlement in Tajikistan.

Decision of 8 November 1994 (3452nd meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3452nd meeting, on 8 November 1994, the Security Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Tajikistan, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (United States) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a letter dated 31 October 1994 addressed to the Secretary-General from the representative of the Russian Federation,²³ transmitting a number of documents adopted at a meeting of the Council of CIS Heads of State on 21 October 1994, including a decision to extend the tour of duty of the CIS collective peacekeeping forces in Tajikistan until 30 June 1995. She also drew their attention to a letter dated 3 November 1994 addressed to the President of the Council from the representative of Pakistan,²⁴ transmitting the texts of the Protocol on the Joint Commission for the implementation of the Tehran Agreement and of a joint communiqué on the results of the third round of inter-Tajik talks on national reconciliation, held in Islamabad from 20 October to 1 November 1994. By their joint communiqué, the parties confirmed their commitment to the spirit of the Tehran Agreement, which they agreed to extend until 6 February 1995. They reaffirmed their commitment to release equal numbers of detainees, prisoners and prisoners of war before midnight on 5 November 1994 and declared that the Agreement would become null and void if either party failed to fulfil those obligations by then. The parties further reaffirmed their commitment to the settlement of the conflict through political means and agreed to hold the next round of talks early in December 1994 in Moscow.

The President then made the following statement on behalf of the Council:²⁵

The Security Council welcomes the agreement by the parties in the course of the third round of inter-Tajik talks held in Islamabad from 20 October to 1 November 1994, on the extension until 6 February 1995 of the Agreement on a Temporary Ceasefire and the Cessation of Other Hostile Acts on the Tajik Afghan Border and within the Country for the Duration of the Talks, of 17 September 1994, as well as the signing of the Protocol on the Joint Commission for the implementation of the Agreement. These agreements were arrived at through the good offices of the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General and with the assistance of the representatives of the Islamic Republic of Iran, the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, the Russian Federation and other countries and of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and the Organization of the Islamic Conference, acting as observers at the inter-Tajik talks.

The Council further welcomes the reaffirmed commitment by the parties to resolve the conflict only through political means and their agreement to hold the next round of talks in early December 1994 in Moscow.

The Council emphasizes the importance of full and timely implementation by the parties of the obligations to which they have committed themselves, including those relating to the exchange of prisoners. It especially stresses the need for strict observance of the ceasefire and cessation of all hostile acts.

The Council invites the parties to make all the efforts necessary to achieve further substantial progress during the next round of inter-Tajik talks. It calls upon them to continue to cooperate with the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for this purpose.

The Council reaffirms its support for the efforts by the Secretary-General and his Special Envoy to facilitate the political dialogue between the Government of Tajikistan and the Tajik opposition aimed at achieving national reconciliation. It welcomes the establishment by the parties of a Joint Commission to monitor the implementation of the Agreement, and requests the Secretary-General to present expeditiously his views and recommendations regarding the role that the United Nations could play in assisting the practical implementation of the agreements achieved, including any implications for the current United Nations mission to Tajikistan.

The Council calls upon the international community and, in particular, the States of the region to render utmost support to the consolidation of the progress towards national reconciliation achieved in the course of the inter-Tajik talks and to abstain from any actions that could complicate the peace process.

Decision of 16 December 1994 (3482nd meeting): resolution 968 (1994)

On 30 November 1994, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Tajikistan,²⁶ in which he reported on the third round of inter-Tajik talks and outlined a plan for a possible United Nations peacekeeping operation in the country. The third round of inter-Tajik talks took place at Islamabad from 20 October to 1 November 1994 with the participation of observers from Afghanistan, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Kazakhstan, Pakistan, the Russian Federation, Uzbekistan, the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE) and the Organization of the Islamic Conference. At the request of the parties concerned, his Special Envoy had chaired the talks and had made his good offices available during the negotiations. Although fundamental institutional issues and consolidation of the statehood of Tajikistan had previously been identified as the main items on the agenda, the extension of the Tehran Agreement became the main issue negotiated. The two parties overcame serious difficulties and reached agreement on an extension of the ceasefire and the cessation of other hostile acts for another three months until 6 February 1995.²⁷ The exchange of detainees and prisoners of war took place on 12 November in Khorog, through the International Committee of the Red Cross. The Joint Commission, established by the Tehran Agreement, held its first meeting on

²⁷ See S/1994/1253, annex.

14 November 1994. The Secretary-General also informed the Council that a Secretariat team had visited Tajikistan from 4 to 12 October 1994 to assess the modalities for establishing a future observer mission. The mission, which would consist of 40 military officers, would act at the request of the Joint Commission or on its own initiative. It would investigate cases of complaints about cease-fire violations and report its findings to the Joint Commission and to United Nations Headquarters. It would also provide its good offices and maintain close liaison with the CIS forces and the border forces.

The Secretary-General observed that no time should be lost in advancing further the process of national reconciliation in Tajikistan. He had therefore instructed his Special Envoy to explore ways of achieving further substantial progress during the fourth round of the inter-Tajik talks scheduled to take place in Moscow early in January. Meanwhile, the situation in the country remained tense and was aggravated by the deepening economic crisis, which had adversely affected attempts to achieve political stability. In these circumstances, he believed that the United Nations should respond positively to the request of the Tajik parties to assist them in the implementation of the ceasefire. He accordingly recommended that the Security Council establish a small observer mission of the kind outlined above to perform that task. The Secretary-General did not believe, however, that international assistance to Tajikistan should be in the form of United Nations military observers stationed in the country for an indefinite period. The problems of Tajikistan must be solved through a political process, supported by interested governments and, through the United Nations, by the international community. But the primary responsibility for composing their differences rested with the Tajik parties themselves. The international community should provide the assistance requested of it only if the Tajik parties acknowledged that responsibility and took effective steps to discharge it.

At its 3482nd meeting, on 16 December 1994, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Tajikistan, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Rwanda) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.²⁸

The representative of Tajikistan stated that the leadership of Tajikistan was carrying out a consistent policy aimed at achieving national reconciliation. That could be only be achieved, however, with the parties' unswerving compliance with the Tehran Agreement. His delegation was very concerned by the continuing and increased attempts by recalcitrant factions of the opposition to inflame the atmosphere by acts of sabotage, the seizure of hostages and acts of terror, and attached importance to the Council's appeal to parties to comply with the Agreement and to refrain from any steps that could aggravate the existing situation. His delegation attached also importance to the Council's appeal to all States and others concerned to refrain from any actions that could hinder the peace process and hoped that this appeal would also be heeded by those who were sending foreign mercenaries to Afghanistan. The establishment of the CIS collective peacekeeping forces was an organic element of the implementation of the principle of preventive diplomacy contained in the Secretary-General's report entitled "An agenda for peace". His delegation considered such a force to be a regional arrangement concluded in conformity with Chapter VIII of the Charter and with the purposes and principles of the Organization. The neutrality and impartiality of these forces were clearly reflected in their mandate, as reported by the Secretary-General. The speaker hoped that the Council would officially support the activities of the CIS collective peacekeeping forces. He further expressed his Government's support for the establishment a United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan and hoped that its size would be increased. His Government was taking the necessary measures to ensure the security of the Mission's personnel and to protect its property.²⁹

Speaking in explanation of vote, before the vote, the representative of Oman stated that, in view of the political support of the United Nations and the neighbouring countries and given the fact that a resolution of the conflict was the full responsibility of the Tajik parties themselves, there was no need for the United Nations to establish a peacekeeping operation in Tajikistan that would put an additional financial burden on the Organization. His delegation would, however, vote in favour of the draft resolution on the understanding that the Council, through the next report of the Secretary-General, was in a position to monitor the performance, mandate and very existence of the operation.³⁰

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that his delegation viewed the creation of UNMOT as a definite shift in the position of the Security Council in terms of paying greater attention to the settlement of conflicts in the States members of CIS and hoped that that trend would be reinforced and developed further. His delegation was also convinced that UNMOT would act as a stabilizing factor in Tajikistan and would promote the successful implementation of the Agreement reached at the third round of inter-Tajik talks in Islamabad. At the same time, it believed that at a later stage in the settlement, the Council would have to return to the question of the size of the Mission. He further took note that the draft resolution emphasized the important significance of close ties between UNMOT and the CIS collective peacekeeping forces in Tajikistan, support for which was included in the Mission's mandate. He reaffirmed, in that regard, his country's readiness for and interest in a close cooperation between the two entities which had separate mandates but a single goal, namely to promote the stabilization of the situation and the process of national reconciliation in Tajikistan, a process which required interaction.³¹

According to the representative of the Czech Republic, the draft resolution adequately addressed the following elements regarding UNMOT: a realistic and practical mandate; a clarified time framework with a clear link between international assistance and the political process of national reconciliation in Tajikistan; primary responsibility for adhering to the ceasefire with the Tajik parties themselves; regular reviews by the Council of the overall political and military situation in Tajikistan and of the performance of UNMOT; and a call to parties to ensure the safety and freedom of movement of United Nations personnel. The draft resolution also provided a clear framework for the activities of other forces in Tajikistan and for their close liaison with UNMOT. That framework reflected the principle of neutrality and impartiality, which was vital for the performance of these other forces that were in the country at the invitation of only one of the parties and which was embodied in their mandate. The speaker expressed the hope that more information on the relationship of the United Nations Mission with these other forces would be available periodically. There was a clear need for transparency in the activities of the CIS collective peacekeeping forces as well as of the non-Tajik border forces in Tajikistan. His Government believed that monitoring their neutrality and impartiality should be a part of UNMOT's job.³²

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 968 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling the statements of its President of 30 October 1992, 23 August 1993, 22 September 1994 and 8 November 1994,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General of 27 September and 30 November 1994,

Welcoming the reaffirmed commitment by the parties to resolve the conflict only through political means,

Stressing the importance of achieving further substantial progress during the fourth round of inter-Tajik talks in Moscow,

Underlining the importance of close liaison between the United Nations mission of observers on the one hand and the collective peacekeeping forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States in Tajikistan and the border forces on the other hand,

10. Welcomes the release of detainees and prisoners of war which took place on 12 November 1994 at Khorog, and calls for further such confidence-building measures by the parties and for unhindered access to the International Committee of the Red Cross to all persons detained by all parties in relation to the armed conflict;

11. Urges all States and others concerned to facilitate the process of national reconciliation and to refrain from any actions that could complicate the peace process;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to establish a voluntary fund for contributions in support of the implementation of the Agreement, in particular in support of the activities of the Joint Commission, and encourages Member States to contribute thereto;

14. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

After the vote, the representatives of France, the United Kingdom and the United States stressed that primary responsibility for the political settlement of the conflict rested with the Tajik parties themselves and that the future of the Mission was linked to the process of national reconciliation. They attached particular importance to the holding of free and fair elections and the promotion of democracy in Tajikistan. The representative of the United States stated specifically that the decision taken by the Council represented a major step that should not be judged by the size of the Mission which it had just established. He added that the ceasefire must be extended well beyond 6 February 1995 if the Mission was to remain after that date.³³

Other speakers welcomed the establishment of UNMOT and underlined the need for the parties to adhere to their commitments and achieve further progress towards national reconciliation. Some emphasized the need for close cooperation in the field between UNMOT and the other forces operating in Tajikistan. Some also believed that it would be necessary for UNMOT and the CSCE mission in Dushanbe to work together, from their different standpoints and in terms of their different mandates.³⁴

On 4 February 1995, pursuant to resolution 968 (1994), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Tajikistan,³⁵ in which he provided an account of the activities of UNMOT and the efforts he had undertaken to make progress towards national reconciliation. The Secretary-General reported that from 12 to 21 December 1994, his Special Envoy had visited Dushanbe, Moscow and Tashkent for consultations. During those consultations, the President of Tajikistan had supported an early fourth round of inter-Tajik negotiations in Moscow. He had also, at the request of the Special Envoy, agreed to postpone the parliamentary elections scheduled for 26 February 1995, provided the opposition would state its readiness to participate in such elections. The Tajik opposition, however, had shown no interest in participating at that stage in the elections and had rejected Moscow as the venue for the talks. By letters dated 25 and 27 January,³⁶ the President of Tajikistan and the leader of the opposition, respectively, had agreed to extend the Tehran Agreement, although the opposition's agreement was only to an extension of one month.

³³ Ibid., pp. 8-9 (France); p. 9 (United Kingdom); and pp. 9-10 (United States).

³⁴ Ibid., pp. 5-6 (Pakistan); p. 10 (Spain); and pp. 10-11 (Argentina).

³⁶ Ibid., annexes I and II.

The Secretary-General noted that the parties had made it possible for him to comply only partly with the requirements stated in paragraph 3 of resolution 968 (1994). Both had agreed to an extension of the ceasefire beyond 6 February 1995 and had stated their commitment to a continuing political process. The opposition's unwillingness to accept Moscow as a venue for the next round of inter-Tajik talks, however, made it impossible, for him to report to the Council that negotiations were being actively pursued. Meanwhile, the situation in Tajikistan remained tense, particularly on the border with Afghanistan, and the economic crisis had adversely affected efforts to reach political stabilization in the country and to complete the repatriation of refugees. He concluded by stating that the activities of UNMOT connected to the implementation of the Tehran Agreement, imperfect as the latter might be, were an important stabilizing factor in the country, as recognized by both Tajik parties. Although the fourth round of talks remained blocked, both sides maintained that they were determined to continue the political process under the auspices of the United Nations. He accordingly recommended that the presence of UNMOT in Tajikistan be continued for another month, until 6 March 1995, on the understanding that every effort would be made during that period to obtain agreement on the holding of the next round of talks as soon as possible.³⁷

By a letter dated 6 February 1995,³⁸ the President of the Council (Botswana) informed the Secretary-General as follows:

The members of the Security Council have noted your report of 4 February 1995 in response to paragraph 3 of Council resolution 968 (1994) of 16 December 1994.

The members of the Council endorse the recommendation contained in paragraph 32 of the report concerning the continuation of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan for another month, until 6 March 1995. Continuation and effective observance of the ceasefire agreement of 17 September 1994 is vital. Reaffirming Council resolution 968 (1994), the members of the Council urge the parties in the interim to reconfirm through concrete steps their commitment to resolve the conflict only through political means, and their commitment to national reconciliation and to the promotion of democracy.

Decision of 6 March 1995: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

By a letter dated 3 March 1995,³⁹ the Secretary-General informed the President of the Council that in order to keep the peace process on track, he had asked Under-Secretary-General Aldo Ajello to undertake consultations with the Russian Federation, the Government of Tajikistan and the Tajik opposition with a view to resolving the issues of the venue, date and agenda for the fourth round of inter-Tajik talks and to obtaining agreement to the extension of the ceasefire agreement. During those consultations, Mr. Ajello was able to achieve agreement on the extension of the ceasefire agreement until 26 April 1995. The Secretary-General recommended, therefore, that UNMOT's presence in Tajikistan be continued until 26 April 1995, on the basis of the mandate contained in resolution 968 (1994). He would also revert to the Council at the conclusion of Mr. Ajello's mission.

By a letter dated 6 March 1995,⁴⁰ the President of the Council (China) informed the Secretary-General as follows:

I have the honour to inform you that your letter dated 3 March 1995 concerning the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan has been brought to the attention of the members of the Council.

The members of the Council endorse your recommendation, in view of the agreement of the parties to continue the ceasefire, that the presence of the Mission in Tajikistan be continued until 26 April 1995. Reaffirming Council resolution 968 (1994), the members of the Council urge the parties in the interim to resolve the remaining difficulties in arranging the fourth round of inter-Tajik talks aimed at reaching a political settlement to the conflict.

The members of the Council welcome your intention to revert to the Council at the conclusion of the mission of the Under-Secretary-General Aldo Ajello and will be looking forward to a report at that time.

Decision of 12 April 1995 (3515th meeting): statement by the President

At its 3515th meeting, on 12 April 1995, the Security Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Tajikistan, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Czech Republic) drew the attention of the members of the Council to two letters dated 27 March and 10 April 1995 addressed to the Secretary-General,⁴¹ respectively from the representative of Tajikistan and from the representative of Kazakhstan. In the letter dated 10 April 1995, the representative of Kazakhstan transmitted the text of a statement issued by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Kazakhstan in which it lodged a protest with the authorities of Afghanistan in connection with an attack launched by detachments of the Tajik opposition from Afghan territory against Kazakh, Russian and Tajik border troops, which resulted in fatalities and injuries.

The President then made the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁴²

The Security Council expresses its deep concern at the escalation of military activities on the Tajik-Afghan border, which resulted in grave loss of life. In this context, the Council reminds the parties of their obligations to ensure the safety of the Secretary-General's Special Envoy and all other United Nations personnel.

The Council strongly believes that armed activities by the Tajik opposition in violation of the ceasefire agreement of 17 September 1994 jeopardize the inter-Tajik dialogue and the process of national reconciliation as a whole. Noting also recent violations of the agreement of 17 September 1994 by government forces, the Council calls upon the Tajik opposition and the Government of Tajikistan to comply strictly with the obligations they have assumed under that agreement and calls upon the Tajik opposition in particular to extend it for a substantial period beyond 26 April 1995.

The Council fully supports the appeal of the Secretary-General to the Tajik parties and other countries concerned to exercise restraint, to do their utmost to continue the political dialogue and to hold the next round of talks as soon as possible. It welcomes the agreement by the Government of Tajikistan and the Tajik opposition to the proposal of the Secretary-General's Special Envoy to hold an urgent high-level meeting of their representatives in Moscow. It calls upon the countries of the region to discourage any activities that could complicate or hinder the peace process in Tajikistan.

Reaffirming its resolution 968 (1994) of 16 December 1994, the Council once again urges the parties to reconfirm through concrete steps their commitment to resolve the conflict only through political means. The Council reiterates its call upon the parties to hold the fourth round of the inter-Tajik talks without delay on the basis agreed upon during the previous rounds of consultations.

Decision of 26 April 1995: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

By a letter dated 26 April 1995,⁴³ the Secretary-General informed the President of the Security Council that his Special Envoy was continuing high-level inter-Tajik negotiations on the extension of the ceasefire and the agenda, time and venue of a fourth round of inter-Tajik talks, which had begun in Moscow on 19 April 1995. The outcome of those negotiations remained, however, uncertain at that stage. Meanwhile, he recommended that UNMOT continue to function, in accordance with its mandate, until the Council had had an opportunity to review his report on the situation in Tajikistan, pursuant to resolution 968 (1994), which would be submitted shortly, after the return of his Special Envoy.

By a letter dated 26 April 1995,⁴⁴ the President of the Council informed the Secretary-General as follows:

I have the honour to inform you that your letter dated 26 April 1995 has been brought to the attention of the members of the Security Council.

The members of the Council are deeply concerned about the insufficient progress at the Moscow talks held under the auspices of your Special Envoy and the continuing military activities on the Tajik-Afghan border. The members of the Council call upon the parties and others concerned to resolve urgently the outstanding questions with regard to extending the ceasefire and arranging a fourth round of talks. They stress once again that the primary responsibility for resolving their differences rests with the Tajik parties themselves. They urge the parties to comply strictly with the obligations they have assumed under the ceasefire agreement of 17 September 1994.

In keeping with the provisions of resolution 968 (1994), the members of the Council note that an effective ceasefire was, and continues to be, a necessary condition for the deployment of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan.

The members of the Council agree that, pending a further decision of the Council based on consideration of your forthcoming report, the Mission shall continue its presence in Tajikistan.

Decision of 19 May 1995 (3539th meeting): statement by the President

On 12 May 1995, pursuant to resolution 968 (1994), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Tajikistan,⁴⁵ in which he described the efforts of his Special Envoy to clear the way for the fourth round of inter-Tajik talks. High-level consultations had been held in Moscow under United Nations auspices from 19 to 26 April 1995. The consultations had ended with a joint statement under which both parties,⁴⁶ inter alia, reconfirmed their commitment to settling the conflict and achieving national reconciliation through exclusively peaceful political means on the basis of mutual concessions and compromise; extended the validity of the Tehran Agreement by one month until 26 May 1995; agreed on measures to strengthen the role of the Joint Commission and appealed to States Members of the United Nations to provide financial support to the Commission through the trust fund established by the United Nations and consent to hold the fourth round of inter-Tajik talks in Almaty beginning 22 May 1995 and to include on their agenda the fundamental institutional issues and consolidation of the statehood of Tajikistan, as set forth during the first round of inter-Tajik talks held in Moscow in April 1994.

The Secretary-General observed that during the past three months, a number of factors combined to create serious difficulties for the political process that the United Nations was trying to promote in Tajikistan. The result of the consultations provided ground, however, for continuing United Nations efforts and maintaining UNMOT. At the same time, progress had yet to be achieved on the substantive issues that divided the parties. In Moscow, his Special Envoy had clearly conveyed the view of the United Nations that the primary responsibility for resolving their differences rested with the Tajik parties themselves and that the continued involvement and presence of the United Nations in Tajikistan depended on the manner in which the parties discharged that responsibility. Expectations in that regard focused on the forthcoming fourth round of talks and the planned meeting between the President of Tajikistan and the leader of the Islamic Revival Movement of Tajikistan. In the meantime, the situation in Tajikistan remained tense, particularly on the border with Afghanistan. The Secretary-General appealed to the Tajik parties to comply strictly with the obligations they had assumed to implement fully the Tehran Agreement and to refrain from any steps that could aggravate the existing situation or complicate the peace process at that critical juncture. In that connection, he underlined the need to strengthen the Joint Commission, which had been inactive since April 1995, and to enable it to assume the central role envisaged for it in the Tehran Agreement. He called on the authorities and forces operating in the region to cooperate fully with the Joint Commission and UNMOT in the discharge of their responsibilities.

At its 3539th meeting, on 19 May 1995, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Tajikistan, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The President (France) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a letter dated 27 April 1995 addressed to the Secretary-General from the representative of the Russian Federation,⁴⁷ transmitting the text of the joint statement of 26 April 1995 by the Government of Tajikistan and the Tajik opposition. He then stated that, following consultations among Council members, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁴⁸

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 12 May 1995 on the situation in Tajikistan.

The Council welcomes the joint statement by the delegation of the Government of Tajikistan and the delegation of the Tajik opposition, signed in Moscow on 26 April 1995 as a result of the high-level consultations through the good offices of the Secretary-General's Special Envoy, with the assistance of the representatives of all countries acting as observers at the inter-Tajik talks. The Council expects the full implementation of the agreements reached in Moscow and, in particular, supports the convening of the fourth round of inter-Tajik talks on 22 May 1995 in Almaty and looks to the parties to cooperate fully in those talks.

The Council commends the efforts of the Secretary-General Special Envoy, the Russian Federation as host country and all observer countries, which significantly contributed to the positive outcome of the high-level inter-Tajik consultations held in Moscow from 19 to 26 April 1995.

The Council is concerned over the actions of both sides in the past three months, which posed obstacles to the peace process, as noted in the report of the Secretary-General. The Council stresses the urgent need for the Tajik parties to resolve the conflict and to confirm, by taking concrete steps, their commitment to achieve national reconciliation in the country exclusively through peaceful political means on the basis of mutual concessions and compromises. In this context, it welcomes the agreement by the President of the Republic of

Tajikistan and the leader of the Islamic Revival Movement of Tajikistan to hold a meeting, which took place at Kabul from 17 to 19 May 1995.

The Council notes with concern the recent inactivity of the Joint Commission and is therefore encouraged by the decision of the parties to strengthen the Commission and its mechanism for monitoring the ceasefire agreement of 17 September 1994. It welcomes the commitments by some Member States to the voluntary fund for contributions established by the Secretary-General in accordance with its resolution 968 (1994), and reiterates its encouragement to other Member States to contribute.

The Council calls upon the parties to agree on a substantial extension of the ceasefire agreement of 17 September 1994 and to achieve substantive progress during the fourth round of inter-Tajik talks, in particular on fundamental institutional issues and consolidation of the statehood of Tajikistan, as defined in the agenda agreed upon during the Moscow round in April 1994. It stresses that strict compliance by the parties with all the obligations they have assumed is a necessary condition for successful political dialogue.

The Council notes the observation of the Secretary-General in his report that grounds exist for continuing United Nations efforts and maintaining the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan and recalls its view that extension of the ceasefire is necessary for this.

Decision of 16 June 1995 (3544th meeting):

On 10 June 1995, pursuant to resolution 968 (1994), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Tajikistan,⁴⁹ in which he provided an account of the meeting between the President of Tajikistan and the leader of the Islamic Revival Movement of Tajikistan held at Kabul from 17 to 19 May 1995, and of the fourth round of inter-Tajik talks held at Almaty from 22 May to 1 June 1995. Reporting on the fourth round, he noted that, for the first time, the parties had held an in-depth discussion of fundamental institutional issues and the consolidation of the statehood of Tajikistan, as set forth during the first round of talks in Moscow in April 1994. Although the parties had not been able to reach mutually acceptable decisions on these complex issues, they confirmed their commitment to look for practical solutions in the future. The talks ended with the adoption of a joint statement under which the parties, inter alia, welcomed the decision at the Kabul summit to extend the Tehran Agreement until 26 August 1995; agreed to exchange an equal number of detainees and prisoners of war by July 1995 and to ensure the voluntary, safe and dignified return of all refugees and internally displaced persons to their homes; and requested the Secretary-General's Special Envoy to continue his good offices in the search for a peaceful solution to the conflict.

The Secretary-General observed that the results of the meeting between the President of Tajikistan and the leader of the Islamic Revival Movement of Tajikistan in Kabul and the fourth round of inter-Tajik talks were a small but positive step towards national reconciliation and the restoration of peace in the country. Nevertheless, little progress had been made in addressing the fundamental political results during the 14 months since the first round of talks in April 1994. The situation in Tajikistan and on its border with Afghanistan remained tense and the deepening economic crisis continued to have a negative impact on the attempts to achieve political stability in the country. Warning that no time should be lost, he appealed to the President of Tajikistan and to the leader of the Islamic Revival Movement of Tajikistan to continue their direct dialogue, which would be an essential means of building mutual confidence and advancing a comprehensive political solution. The Secretary-General also noted that UNMOT had been recognized by the Tajik parties as playing an instrumental role in containing the conflict. He believed that the United Nations should respond positively to their request for assistance in the implementation of the ceasefire and recommended that the mandate of UNMOT be extended for another six months until 16 December 1995. He further considered the stationing of an UNMOT team in northern Afghanistan to be important, subject to the agreement of Afghan authorities, and recommended that the Council approve that proposal in principle.

At its 3544th meeting, on 16 June 1995, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Tajikistan, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The President (Germany) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution

prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.⁵⁰

Speaking in explanation of vote, before the vote, the representative of the Russian Federation stated that UNMOT activities were an important factor in stabilizing the situation in Tajikistan and on the Tajik-Afghan border, and were facilitating the implementation of the inter-Tajik agreements. There was a need to further reinforce the Mission's capabilities, in particular in terms of the number of UNMOT personnel. The Russian Federation actively supported the Secretary-General's proposal to deploy, with the agreement of the Afghan authorities, a special UNMOT unit in northern Afghanistan. The speaker drew attention to the repeated appeals by the leadership of Tajikistan as well as by the States contributing to the CIS peacekeeping force, for a full-fledged United Nations operation to be deployed in Tajikistan. He noted also that the close cooperation between UNMOT and the CIS peacekeeping force was an important factor for stabilizing the situation in the country. It was clear, however, that only the unswerving and full implementation by the parties of all their obligations could create a climate conducive to dialogue on the fundamental constitutional and political issues.⁵¹

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 999 (1995), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 968 (1994) of 16 December 1994 and the statements by its President of 30 October 1992, 23 August 1993, 22 September and 8 November 1994, and 12 April and 19 May 1995,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 10 June 1995,

Reaffirming its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Tajikistan and to the inviolability of its borders,

Welcoming the positive outcome of the meeting between the President of the Republic of Tajikistan and of the leader of the Islamic Revival Movement of Tajikistan held at Kabul from 17 to 19 May 1995 and of the fourth round of the inter-Tajik talks held at Almaty from 22 May to 1 June 1995,

Welcoming also, in particular, the extension for a period of three months, until 26 August 1995, of the Agreement on a Temporary Ceasefire and the Cessation of Other Hostile Acts on the Tajik-Afghan Border and within the Country for the Duration of the Talks, signed at Tehran on 17 September 1994, as well as the agreements on further confidence-building measures,

Noting with appreciation that the parties started in depth discussions on fundamental institutional issues and consolidation of the statehood of Tajikistan and confirmed their readiness to search for practical solutions to the above mentioned problems,

Commending the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Envoy as well as of the countries and regional organizations acting as observers at the inter-Tajik talks which contributed to the conclusion of these agreements,

Emphasizing that the primary responsibility for resolving their differences rests with the Tajik parties themselves and that the international assistance provided pursuant to the present resolution must be linked to the process of national reconciliation and the promotion of democracy,

Recalling that the Tajik parties have reaffirmed their commitment to resolving the conflict and to achieving national reconciliation in the country exclusively through peaceful, political means on the basis of mutual concessions and compromises, and urging them to take concrete steps to this end,

Stressing the urgent for the cessation of all hostile acts on the Tajik-Afghan border,

Noting the decision of the Council of the Heads of State of the Commonwealth of Independent States of 26 May 1995 to extend the mandate of the collective peacekeeping forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States in Tajikistan until 31 December 1995,

Recalling the joint appeal by the Presidents of the Republic of Kazakhstan, the Kyrgyz Republic, the Russian Federation, the Republic of Tajikistan and the Republic of Uzbekistan of 10 February 1995 addressed to the President of the Security Council and the statements of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of these countries of 24 August and 30 September 1993, 13 October 1994, and 26 January and 20 April 1995 addressed to the Secretary-General,

Taking note with appreciation of the statement of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Russian Federation of 26 April 1995 that the Russian border forces and the Russian military personnel of the collective peacekeeping forces, respecting and recognizing the agreements between the Tajik parties, do not violate them in the performance of their duties,

Expressing its satisfaction at the close contacts of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan with the parties to the conflict, as well as at its close liaison with the collective peacekeeping forces, the border forces and the mission in Tajikistan of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 10 June 1995;

2. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in Tajikistan until 15 December 1995, subject to the proviso that the Agreement on a Temporary Ceasefire and the Cessation of Other Hostile Acts on the Tajik-Afghan Border and within the Country for the Duration of the Talks, remains in force and the parties continue to be committed to an effective ceasefire, to national reconciliation and to the promotion of democracy and also decides that the mandate will remain in effect unless the Secretary-General reports that these conditions have not been met;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to pursue, through the good offices of his Special Envoy and with the assistance of the countries and regional organizations acting as observers at the inter-Tajik talks, efforts to speed up the progress towards national reconciliation;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council every three months on the progress towards national reconciliation and on the operations of the Mission;

5. Reiterates its call upon the parties to cooperate fully with the Mission and to ensure safety and freedom of movement of United Nations personnel;

6. Stresses the urgent need for the parties to achieve a comprehensive political settlement of the conflict through the inter-Tajik dialogue and to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General's Special Envoy in this regard;

7. Calls upon the parties, in particular, to achieve as soon as possible substantive progress on fundamental institutional and political issues;

8. Also calls upon the parties to agree to the early convening of a further round of inter-Tajik talks and to implement without delay all confidence-building measures agreed at the fourth round of these talks, inter alia, on the exchange of detainees and prisoners of war and on intensification of the efforts by the parties to ensure the voluntary return, in dignity and safety, of all refugees and displaced persons to their homes;

9. Encourages the continuation of direct political dialogue between the President of the Republic of Tajikistan and the leader of the Islamic Revival Movement of Tajikistan;

10. Emphasizes the absolute necessity for the parties to comply fully with all the obligations they have assumed and urges them in particular to observe strictly the agreement of 17 September 1994 and to agree to its substantial extension;

11. Stresses the urgent need for the cessation of all hostile acts on the Tajik-Afghan border, and calls upon all States and others concerned to discourage any activities that could complicate or hinder the peace process in Tajikistan;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council on his discussions with relevant Afghan authorities regarding a possible deployment of a small number of United Nations personnel in northern Afghanistan, and expresses its willingness to consider a relevant recommendation of the Secretary-General in the context of the implementation of the present resolution;

13. Underlines the need to pursue the close cooperation already existing between the United Nations Observer Mission in Tajikistan and the parties to the conflict, as well as its close liaison with the collective peacekeeping forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States, the Russian border forces and the mission in Tajikistan of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe;

14. Welcomes the obligation assumed by the Government of the Republic of Tajikistan to assist the return and the reintegration of refugees, as well as the obligations by the parties to cooperate in ensuring the voluntary return, in dignity and safety, of all refugees and displaced persons to their homes, inter alia, by stepping up the activities of the Joint Commission on problems relating to refugees and displaced persons from Tajikistan formed by the parties in accordance with the Protocol signed on 19 April 1994, and, in this context, notes the request by the parties addressed to international organizations and States to provide additional substantial financial and material support to the refugees and internally displaced persons and to the Joint Commission;

15. Welcomes also the commitment of some Member States to the voluntary fund for contributions established by the Secretary-General in accordance with its resolution 968 (1994), and reiterates its encouragement to other States to contribute thereto;

16. Welcomes further the humanitarian assistance already provided, and calls for greater contributions from States for humanitarian relief efforts of the United Nations and other international organizations;

17. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

After the vote, the representative of the United States said that UNMOT demonstrated the flexibility of United Nations peacekeeping and its continued usefulness in conflicts around the world. She noted that resolution 999 (1995) firmly and unambiguously linked the UNMOT mandate to the existence of an effective ceasefire and other conditions. UNMOT could not function without a ceasefire. She warned that the Council might be forced to withdraw the Mission if the parties did not lay down their arms. The ceasefire was, however, just a beginning; the parties must move towards national reconciliation based on democratic principles.⁵²

Other speakers stressed that responsibility for a peaceful settlement and national reconciliation lay primarily with the Tajik parties themselves. Some called on the Tajik parties to cooperate fully with ⁵² Ibid., pp. 7-8.

UNMOT and stressed the importance of the role of regional organizations in the peace process. Some also supported the Secretary-General's proposal to deploy a United Nations presence in northern Afghanistan.⁵³

Decision of 25 August 1995 (3570th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3570th meeting, on 25 August 1995, the Security Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Tajikistan, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Indonesia) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a letter dated 21 August 1995 addressed to the Secretary-General from the representative of Tajikistan,⁵⁴ transmitting the text of the protocol on the fundamental principles for establishing peace and national accord in Tajikistan, signed on 17 August 1995 by the President of Tajikistan and the leader of the Tajik opposition, by which they agreed to conduct, beginning on 18 September 1995, a continual round of negotiations on a general agreement on the establishment of peace and national accord in Tajikistan and to extend the Tehran Agreement until 26 February 1996.

The President then stated that, following consultations among Council members, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁵⁵

The Security Council welcomes the protocol on the fundamental principles for establishing peace and national accord in Tajikistan signed by the President of the Republic of Tajikistan and the leader of the Tajik opposition on 17 August 1995. It commends the efforts of the Secretary-General's Special Envoy and all countries acting as observers at the inter-Tajik talks, which have significantly contributed to the conclusion of the above-mentioned agreement between the Tajik parties.

The Council calls upon the parties to implement fully the commitments contained in the protocol. It supports the agreement of the parties to conduct the continual round of talks due to begin on 18 September 1995, with the aim of concluding a general agreement on the establishment of peace and national accord in Tajikistan and urges the parties to agree as soon as possible on the venue of the negotiations. It reiterates that the primary responsibility rests with the Tajik parties themselves in resolving their differences.

The Council welcomes the agreement reached by the parties to extend the Agreement on a Temporary Ceasefire and the Cessation of Other Hostile Acts on the Tajik-Afghan Border and within the Country for the Duration of the Talks, signed at Tehran on 17 September 1994 for a period of six months until 26 February 1996, and calls upon the parties to comply strictly with the obligations assumed under the Agreement, including cessation of all hostile acts on the Tajik Afghan border and within Tajikistan. The Council calls upon all States and others concerned to discourage any activities that could complicate or hinder the peace process, respecting fully the sovereignty and the territorial integrity of Tajikistan and the inviolability of the Tajik-Afghan border.

The Council urges the parties to implement as quickly as possible the confidence-building measures agreed upon during the fourth round of inter-Tajik talks held at Almaty.

The Council stresses the need to continue the existing close contacts of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan with the parties to the conflict, as well as its close liaison with the collective peacekeeping forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States in Tajikistan, the Russian border forces and the mission in Tajikistan of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe.

The Council welcomes the contributions by some Member States to the voluntary fund for contributions established by the Secretary-General in accordance with its resolution 968 (1994), and reiterates its encouragement to other Member States to contribute thereto.

The Council expresses its readiness to consider in due course the recommendations of the Secretary-General regarding the possible role of the United Nations in the context of the present and future agreements between the Tajik parties.

Decision of 6 November 1995 (3589th meeting):
statement by the President

On 16 September 1995, pursuant to resolution 999 (1995), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Tajikistan in which he reported on the outcome of indirect talks between the President of Tajikistan and the leader of the Tajik opposition from 2 to 17 August 1995.⁵⁶ The talks concluded with the signing of a protocol on the fundamental principles for establishing peace and national accord in Tajikistan.⁵⁷ The Tajik parties had also agreed to modify the format of inter-Tajik negotiations and to hold them in a continuous round, beginning on 18 September 1995. The issue of the venue for the negotiations remained, however, undetermined and it was agreed that this should be resolved by both sides through the good offices of his Special Envoy. The Government insisted that the talks be held at Ashgabat, while the opposition wanted Tehran, Vienna or Almaty but not Ashgabat. The Secretary-General also informed the Council that the Afghan authorities had agreed that the UNMOT could open a small liaison post in northern Afghanistan with the exclusive task of dealing with the Tajik problem and proposed that the Council authorize the establishment of the liaison post, once the modalities were agreed upon with the Afghan authorities.⁵⁸ Consequently, he expressed his intention to seek the necessary budgetary authority for a small increase in UNMOT staff.⁵⁹

The Secretary-General observed that the signing of the Protocol on the fundamental principles for establishing peace and national accord in Tajikistan and the extension of the ceasefire agreement for another six months were clear proof that the Tajik sides wanted to resolve their problems peacefully. In view of the continued breaches in the implementation of the Tehran Agreement, he called on the parties to comply strictly with their obligations. It was of paramount importance not to lose momentum in the negotiating process and to resume the inter-Tajik talks in the new format as soon as possible. In view of the continued differences between the two sides on the issue of venue, he suggested holding them at United Nations premises at Vienna. The Secretary-General noted with concern the delays in the implementation of the confidence-building measures agreed upon during the fourth round of inter-Tajik talks at Almaty and appealed to the parties to undertake the necessary steps for the early implementation of the confidence-building measures, warning that further inaction could undermine the credibility of the whole negotiating process.

At its 3589th meeting, on 6 November 1995, the Security Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Tajikistan, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

⁵⁹ Ibid., para. 21.

The President (Oman) then made the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁶⁰

The Security Council welcomes the planned convening of the continual round of Inter-Tajik talks at Ashgabat. It commends the efforts of the President of Turkmenistan in this regard.

The Council calls upon the Tajik parties to begin as a matter of urgency the continual round of talks with the aim of concluding a general agreement in accordance with the provisions of the protocol on the fundamental principles for establishing peace and national accord in Tajikistan, signed by the President of the Republic of Tajikistan and the leader of the Tajik opposition on 17 August 1995.

The Council expresses the hope that the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General will be able to resume promptly his efforts with regard to the preparation of the forthcoming round of talks. The Council reaffirms its full support for the activities of the Special Envoy.

The Council urges the Tajik parties to comply strictly with the obligations assumed under the Agreement on a Temporary Ceasefire and the Cessation of Other Hostile Acts on the Tajik-Afghan Border and within the Country for the Duration of the Talks, signed at Teheran on 17 September 1994. The Council expresses the hope that the convening of the talks will contribute to a lessening of tensions along the Tajik-Afghan border and inside Tajikistan.

The Council notes that the relevant Afghan authorities have given their agreement to the establishment of a liaison post of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan in Taloqan (northern Afghanistan). The Council welcomes this development and agrees with the proposal to establish such a post as put forward in paragraph 20 of the report of the Secretary-General of 16 September 1995, with the privileges and immunities necessary for the security of the United Nations personnel concerned and for their ability to carry out the mandate.

The Council also notes the Secretary-General's observations regarding the strengthening of the Mission in paragraph 21 of his report. The Council supports a corresponding increase in the Mission's strength.

Decision of 14 December 1995 (3606th meeting):
resolution 1030 (1995)

On 8 December 1995, pursuant to resolution 999 (1995), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Tajikistan.⁶¹ The Secretary-General reported that, while there continued to be uncertainty about the venue of the talks following their opening at Ashgabat, the parties had nevertheless agreed to begin talks on 30 November. At the first working plenary session on 7 December, both parties had confirmed their commitment to the ceasefire and their determination to work to find viable solutions to the problems listed in the Protocol on the fundamental principles for establishing peace and national accord in Tajikistan. The Secretary-General noted with concern the slow pace of progress towards a resolution of the conflict and the deteriorating situation on the ground. He was nevertheless encouraged that the parties had resumed negotiations on the basis of the Protocol. He therefore proposed that the Council extend the mandate of UNMOT for another six months. While he noted with satisfaction that the vast majority of internally displaced persons and refugees had been successfully resettled, he regretted that delays continued to occur in the implementation of other important confidence-building measures agreed upon during the fourth round of inter-Tajik talks at Almaty. He also called upon all concerned to cooperate more closely to stem a recent increase in military activities and incidents and a general rise of tension on the ground. In that respect, he welcomed the support of the members of the Security Council for his proposal to strengthen UNMOT and called upon Afghan authorities and the United Tajik Opposition to facilitate the establishment of an additional liaison post in northern Afghanistan. Finally, he called upon the Tajik parties to seize the opportunity of the newly convened talks in Ashgabat as a means of restoring peace and national accord in their country.

At its 3606th meeting, on 14 December 1995, the Security Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 8 December 1995.

Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Russian Federation) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.⁶²

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1030 (1995), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions and the statements by its President, in particular, the statement by its President of 6 November 1995, ⁶² S/1995/1032.

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 8 December 1995,

Reaffirming its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Tajikistan and to the inviolability of its borders,

Welcoming the beginning of the continual round of talks between the Government of Tajikistan and the Tajik opposition in Ashgabat,

Commending the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Envoy as well as of the countries and regional organizations acting as observers at the inter-Tajik talks,

Emphasizing that the primary responsibility for resolving their differences rests with the Tajik parties themselves and that the international assistance provided pursuant to the present resolution must be linked to the process of national reconciliation and the promotion of democracy,

Recalling the commitments made by the Tajik parties to resolve the conflict and to achieve national reconciliation in the country exclusively through peaceful political means on the basis of mutual concessions and compromises, and stressing the inadmissibility of any hostile acts on the Tajik-Afghan border,

Recalling the joint appeal by the Presidents of the Republic of Kazakhstan, the Kyrgyz Republic, the Russian Federation, the Republic of Tajikistan and the Republic of Uzbekistan of 10 February 1995 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the statements of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of these countries of 24 August and 30 September 1993, 13 October 1994, and 26 January and 20 April 1995 addressed to the Secretary-General,

Taking note with appreciation of the statement of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Russian Federation of 26 April 1995 that the Russian border forces and the Russian military personnel of the collective peacekeeping forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States in Tajikistan, respecting and recognizing the agreements between the Tajik parties, do not violate them in the performance of their duties,

Expressing its satisfaction at the close contacts of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan with the parties to the conflict, as well as at its liaison with the collective peacekeeping forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States, the border forces and the mission in Tajikistan of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 8 December 1995;

2. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan until 15 June 1996, subject to the proviso that the Agreement on a Temporary Ceasefire and the Cessation of Other Hostile Acts on the Tajik-Afghan Border and within the Country for the Duration of the Talks signed at Tehran on 17 September 1994 remains in force and the parties continue to be committed to an effective ceasefire, to national reconciliation and to the promotion of democracy, and further decides that the mandate will remain in effect unless the Secretary-General reports that these conditions have not been met;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to pursue, through the good offices of his Special Envoy and with the assistance of the countries and regional organizations acting as observers at the inter-Tajik talks, efforts to speed up the progress towards the establishment of a durable peace and national accord in Tajikistan;

17. The situation in Afghanistan

Decision of 24 January 1994 (3330th meeting): statement by the President

At its 3330th meeting, on 24 January 1994, the Security Council included the item entitled “The situation in Afghanistan” in its agenda. After the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Afghanistan, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

At the same meeting, the President (Czech Republic) stated that, following consultations among members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹

The Security Council deplores the continuing large scale fighting in Afghanistan, which is creating mass suffering among the civilian population and is jeopardizing efforts to provide humanitarian assistance to those in need.

The Council notes with concern that the ongoing conflict in Afghanistan disrupts efforts to establish a political process that would lead to a broad based government, is producing another wave of refugees and displaced persons and detracts from efforts to foster regional stability.

The Council notes General Assembly resolution 48/208 of 21 December 1993, in which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to dispatch as soon as possible a United Nations special mission to Afghanistan to canvass a broad spectrum of Afghanistan's leaders to solicit their views on how the United Nations can best assist Afghanistan in facilitating national rapprochement and reconstruction. The Council welcomes the reaffirmation of support for such a mission issued on 12 January 1994 by the Secretary-General and his intention to dispatch this mission.

The Council calls for an immediate cessation of hostilities in Afghanistan and the beginning of a process to create a broad based government acceptable to the Afghan people.

The Council appreciates the humanitarian assistance that the international community and the countries neighbouring Afghanistan have been providing to the most recent wave of refugees as well as to displaced persons within Afghanistan and encourages them to increase their assistance even further.

The Council commends the efforts of the Secretary-General, his Personal Representative and the United Nations agencies active in Afghanistan to alleviate the suffering caused by the conflict in that country. The Council attaches great importance to the continuation of their work.

The Council also commends the efforts of the General Assembly, the Organization of the Islamic Conference and a number of concerned States to promote peace in Afghanistan through a political dialogue among the Afghan parties.

Decision of 23 March 1994 (3353rd meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3353rd meeting, on 23 March 1994, the Security Council resumed consideration of the item. After the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Afghanistan, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

At the same meeting, the President (France) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a letter dated 7 February 1994 from the representative of Greece addressed to the Secretary-General,² transmitting the text of a communiqué of the Presidency on behalf of the European Union on the situation in Afghanistan issued on the same date; a letter dated 9 February 1994 from the representatives of the Russian Federation and Uzbekistan addressed to the Secretary-General,³ transmitting the text of a joint Russian-Uzbek statement of 8 February 1994 on Afghanistan; and a letter dated 14 March 1994 from the representative of Pakistan addressed to the Secretary-General,⁴ transmitting the text of a statement adopted by the Organization of the Islamic Conference Group in New York, on 16 February 1994, concerning the situation in Afghanistan.

At the same meeting, the President stated that, following consultations among members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁵

The Security Council deeply regrets that the food blockade imposed on Kabul continues. This situation is increasing the hardships of the population in all sectors of the capital, since the humanitarian aid that has so far been provided has not alleviated substantially the plight of hundreds of thousands of the city's starving inhabitants.

The Council continues to believe that the seriousness of the humanitarian situation is entirely due to the ongoing fighting in Afghanistan, and calls for its immediate cessation. This fighting has been the cause of the suffering of the Afghan population and of repeated interruptions in the delivery of humanitarian aid in that country.

The Council therefore calls for an immediate end to the obstacles to the passage of humanitarian aid in order to ensure that future supplies are distributed without hindrance to the whole of the population. In this regard, the Council expresses its appreciation to the countries in the region for facilitating efforts to provide humanitarian assistance to Kabul and other provinces of the country. Furthermore, the Council calls upon the international community to extend urgent humanitarian assistance to Afghanistan in order to alleviate the suffering of the Afghan people.

The Council stresses the importance that it attaches to full compliance with international humanitarian law in all its aspects and recalls that those who violate international humanitarian law bear individual responsibility.

The Council welcomes the Secretary-General's appointment of a special mission to Afghanistan, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 48/208 of 21 December 1993. This mission will canvass a broad spectrum of Afghanistan's leaders to solicit their views on how the United Nations can best assist Afghanistan in facilitating national rapprochement and reconstruction.

The Council supports this mission, which is due to leave Geneva soon, and urges all Afghans to assist it in carrying out its mandate and thus promote a cessation of hostilities, the resumption of humanitarian aid and the restoration of peace in Afghanistan.

Decision of 11 August 1994 (3415th meeting):
statement by the President

In a note dated 1 July 1994,⁶ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council a progress report of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan (UNSMA), pursuant to paragraph 4 (a) of General Assembly resolution 48/208 of 21 December 1993. UNSMA reported that it had begun its work in Afghanistan on 27 March 1994, travelling in Afghanistan and Pakistan from 27 March to 29 April 1994, and subsequently visiting a number of other countries. While travelling in Afghanistan, the mission had found that, although most of the country was at peace, the effect of the war could be felt throughout the country, spreading instability to various regions. The fighting had displaced hundreds of thousands of people, killed and wounded thousands more and obstructed United Nations reconstruction and humanitarian efforts. The economic infrastructure had been almost completely destroyed. Moreover, the fighting had undermined the very national institutions necessary to bring peace and to rebuild the country. The mission felt that it was time for the United Nations and the international community to assist the Afghans more actively in bringing peace to their country. That was also the wish of the Afghans who saw the United Nations as the last and only way out. A successful, comprehensive effort would have to link international reconstruction assistance to a national political dialogue on acceptable transitional arrangements. It would also have to pursue concerted and coordinated efforts to encourage regional disengagement. In that regard, the mission recommended the following in the first stage of its renewed engagement: the United Nations should re-establish its physical political presence in Kabul or Jalalabad and other specialized agencies and programmes as well as Governments should be encouraged to do the same; a working group of countries interested in peace and reconstruction in Afghanistan should be established to assist United Nations efforts and prepare for an international conference on Afghanistan; and the Organization should begin in-depth consultations with the various Afghan leaders on the establishment of a viable transitional authority and a country-wide ceasefire, which were essential preconditions for free and fair elections. Indigenous decision-making structures, such as a grand assembly or council, might be explored to facilitate such elections which would be the best way to ensure that all segments of Afghan society would participate in determining the future of the country.

At its 3415th meeting, on 11 August 1994, the Security Council included the note by the Secretary-General in its agenda and resumed consideration of the item.

At the same meeting, the President (Russian Federation) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a letter dated 8 August 1994 from the representative of Afghanistan,⁷ addressed to the Secretary-General, transmitting the text of a resolution adopted at an extraordinary meeting of a Supreme Islamic Council convened at Herat, Afghanistan, on 25 July 1994. The resolution provided, inter alia, for the convening of a Grand National Assembly (Loya Jirga) on 23 October 1994 to ratify a constitution and to elect the political leadership of the country, as well as to resolve the country's destiny-making matters. It also urged the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference to act diligently towards putting an end to foreign interferences in the internal affairs of Afghanistan and contributing with all friendly countries to its reconstruction without imposing any condition.

The President then stated that, following consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁸

The Security Council notes with appreciation the efforts of the United Nations special mission to Afghanistan in accordance with General Assembly resolution 48/208 of 21 December 1993, headed by Ambassador Mahmoud Mestiri, and welcomes its progress report of 1 July 1994, in particular the recommendations contained in paragraph 40 thereof.

The Council expresses its appreciation for the cooperation the Afghan people and leaders provided to the special mission. It calls upon all Afghans to continue to work with the special mission as it seeks to help Afghans begin a peaceful political process to end their differences.

The Council deplors the continuing civil war in Afghanistan, which has brought death and destruction to the people of Afghanistan and has created a threat to the stability and security of other countries in the region. The Council calls upon all parties to end hostilities and embark upon the process of political reconciliation, reconstruction and development.

The Council calls upon all States to take the necessary steps to promote peace in Afghanistan, to stop the flow of weapons to the parties and to put an end to this destructive conflict. It also urges the international community to assist Afghans in rebuilding their shattered country as conditions permit.

The Council commends the efforts of the United Nations humanitarian agencies in Afghanistan, and stresses the need for all States to continue contributing to those efforts.

The Council reaffirms its readiness to assist the Afghan people in their efforts to return peace and normalcy to their country, and encourages the countries neighbouring Afghanistan to continue their efforts to the same end.

The Council reaffirms its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Afghanistan.

Decision of 30 November 1994 (3474th meeting): statement by the President

At its 3474th meeting, on 30 November 1994, the Security Council resumed consideration of the item. After the adoption of the agenda, the President (United States) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a letter dated 9 November 1994 from the representative of Afghanistan addressed to the President of the Security Council.⁹ The letter contained, in its annex, Afghanistan's views with regard to the peace process in the country, in particular the composition, duties and competence of the Convening Commission of the Supreme Islamic Assembly (Loya Jirga) and the qualifications of its members.

At the same meeting, the President stated that, following consultations among members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹⁰

The Security Council notes with appreciation the progress made by the United Nations special mission to Afghanistan, led by Ambassador Mahmoud Mestiri, and the report of the Secretary-General of 22 November 1994 to the General Assembly.

The Council fully supports the special mission's broad-based consultations with Afghan representatives and its proposals to bring about an end to the factional fighting, institute a process of political reconciliation and begin the tasks of rehabilitation and reconstruction of Afghanistan.

The Council welcomes the acceptance by the warring parties and other Afghan representatives of a step-by-step process of national reconciliation through the establishment of a fully representative and broad-based authoritative council, which would (a) negotiate and oversee a ceasefire, (b) establish a national security force to collect and safeguard heavy weapons and provide for security throughout the country, and (c) form a transitional government to lay the groundwork for a democratically chosen government, possibly utilizing traditional decision-making structures such as a "Grand Assembly".

The Council notes with grave concern, however, the continuation of hostilities among the warring parties in Afghanistan, involving the continued suffering, death and destitution of innocent citizens of the country, and calls for an immediate halt to these pointless and destructive attacks.

The Council calls upon all States to take the necessary steps to promote peace in Afghanistan, to prevent the continued flow of weapons, ammunition and military supplies to the warring parties in Afghanistan, and to put an end to this destructive conflict.

Recognizing that the rehabilitation, reconstruction and development of war-torn Afghanistan will be dependent in large part upon the progress made towards the establishment of a reliable ceasefire and the development of a viable political process, the Council urges all States to support the peacemaking proposals of the special mission and to recognize its primary role in the peacemaking process.

The Council calls upon all States to respect Afghanistan's sovereignty and territorial integrity, strictly refrain from interfering in the internal affairs of Afghanistan and respect the right of the Afghan people to determine their own destiny and reaffirms its readiness to assist the Afghan people in their desire to achieve peace and tranquillity in their country.

18. The situation in Georgia

Decision of 29 January 1993 (3169th meeting): statement by the President

By a note verbale dated 25 December 1992 addressed to the Secretary-General,¹ the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Georgia transmitted a letter of the same date in which the Chairman of the Parliament and Head of State of Georgia expressed his deep concern that an escalation of the conflict in Abkhazia could destabilize the entire Caucasus region.² In that letter, he stated, inter alia, that the illegal penetration of the Georgian territory by foreign nationals and military supplies from the Russian Federation in support of the Abkhaz forces was continuing. He requested that the issue be placed again on the agenda of the Security Council and that it be discussed in a formal meeting of the Council. He added that the Council may wish to adopt a resolution, which, inter alia, could provide for the sending of a United Nations peacekeeping force to Abkhazia. He further deemed it advisable that the Council appeal to all Member States not to allow any encroachment on the territorial integrity of Georgia. He pointed out that coordination efforts among the Council and various regional and subregional organizations could be highly effective.

On 28 January 1993, pursuant to the presidential statement of 10 September 1992 regarding the situation in Georgia,³ the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Council on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia.⁴ The Secretary-General reported that the situation in Abkhazia had deteriorated since he last reported to the Council in November 1992. The continued fighting posed a serious threat to the maintenance of international peace and security in the entire Caucasus region and beyond. The outbreak of inter-ethnic fighting at the beginning of November 1992 between North Ossetian and Ingush forces in the North Caucasus region of the Russian Federation, prompting the establishment of a temporary state of emergency by the Russian President, was an additional indication of the potentially explosive situation in the Caucasus. In his view, the Agreement of 3 September 1992 still offered the best basis for the resumption of the peace process in Abkhazia. However, the restoration of a viable peace process might require a more active support of the international community to assist the parties to agree to a ceasefire and to work out a political settlement. He was considering the possibility of dispatching a new mission to Georgia to review the situation in Abkhazia in order to assess the overall political situation and to discuss and provide advice on practical matters such as the establishment and monitoring of an immediate ceasefire, with particular emphasis on the border in Abkhazia between Georgia and the Russian Federation, and the protection of the railway and communication links in Abkhazia. He was also considering the dispatch of a human rights fact-finding mission to Abkhazia to look into allegations of human rights violations by both sides.

At its 3169th meeting, on 29 January 1993, in response to the request contained in the note verbale by Georgia, the Council included the note verbale and the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Georgia, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The representative of Georgia warned that the conflict in Abkhazia might grow into an ethnic and intranational conflict and spread throughout the Caucasus and beyond if real preventive measures were not taken. Georgia believed that the Russian Federation could make a substantial contribution to the settlement of the conflict. For its part, Georgia was ready to proceed with the implementation of the 3 September Agreement, on the condition that refugees be returned to their permanent residences and that the parties revert to the positions held on 1 September 1992. Georgia sought wish the deployment of United Nations observers and troops to monitor the border between Georgia and the Russian Federation, to protect the railway and communication links, and to ensure compliance with the ceasefire. While representatives of the republics of the former Soviet Union might be part of such a United Nations force, it was very important that part of the high command of the force be made up of officers from other Member States. In addition, a group of military observers should be sent to the areas of conflict, endowed with negotiating powers and with a monitoring function to enable them to conduct a comprehensive study of the situation in Abkhazia and to make proposals for a settlement of the conflict. The approach of the Georgian authorities to ending the armed confrontation was based on the principles of respect for the inviolability of the territorial integrity and State sovereignty of Georgia and protection of human rights.⁵

The President (Japan) then stated that, following consultations among Council members, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁶

The Security Council takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General of 28 January 1993 on the situation in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia.

The Council expresses its grave preoccupation regarding the further deterioration of the situation in Abkhazia and calls on all the parties immediately to cease the fighting and to observe and implement faithfully the terms of the agreement of 3 September 1992, which affirms that the territorial integrity of Georgia shall be ensured, provides for a ceasefire and the commitment by the parties not to resort to the use of force, and constitutes the basis for an overall political solution.

The Council shares the observation of the Secretary-General that the restoration of a viable peace process in Abkhazia, based on the agreement of 3 September 1992, may require more active support by the international community to assist the parties to agree to a ceasefire and to the return of refugees and to work out a political settlement. In that context the Council reiterates its support for the current efforts undertaken by the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE).

The Council endorses, to this end, the proposal of the Secretary-General to send a new mission to Georgia to review the situation in Abkhazia and stresses the need to ensure effective coordination between the activities of the United Nations and those of the CSCE aiming at restoring peace. The Council believes that it is necessary to assess the overall political situation and to discuss and provide advice on practical matters such as the establishment and monitoring of an immediate ceasefire, the monitoring of the border in Abkhazia between Georgia and the Russian Federation, and the protection of the railway and communication links in Abkhazia.

The Council also endorses the proposal of the Secretary-General to send a fact-finding mission to Abkhazia to look into the allegations of violations of international humanitarian law by both sides.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to report on the outcome of the mission and to propose measures to consolidate the ceasefire and for an overall political settlement.

Decision of 11 May 1993: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

By a letter dated 5 May 1993 addressed to the President of the Council,⁷ the Secretary-General stated that, in view of the situation in Abkhazia, which had further deteriorated since the adoption of the presidential statement of 29 January 1993, he had concluded that the dispatch of another visiting mission, as he had originally envisaged, would not be an adequate approach in attempting to revive the peace process. He believed that a more concentrated effort was needed for the establishment of a lasting ceasefire and for the resumption of a process of political negotiation. He had decided, therefore, after the necessary consultations, to appoint a Special Envoy for Georgia for an initial period of three months to obtain agreement on a ceasefire; assist the parties in reviving the process of negotiations to find a political solution to the conflict; and enlist the support of neighbouring countries and others concerned in achieving those objectives, in close cooperation with the Chairman-in-Office of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE).⁸

By a letter dated 11 May 1993,⁹ the President of the Council informed the Secretary-General that the members of the Council were concerned at the situation in Georgia and accordingly welcomed his decision to appoint a Special Envoy for Georgia. They looked forward to further reports on developments in Georgia, on the Special Envoy's mission and on any future recommendations the Secretary-General might wish to make in the context of that mission.

Decision of 2 July 1993 (3249th meeting): statement by the President

By a letter dated 2 July 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹⁰ the Head of State of Georgia requested an emergency meeting of the Council, citing intense artillery bombardment of Sukhumi, causing civilian casualties at a “catastrophic” rate. Abkhazian separatists had commenced a wide-scale offensive along the entire front and in the coastal area controlled by Russian frontier troops, assault forces, consisting primarily of Russians, were landing.

At its 3249th meeting, on 2 July 1993, the Security Council included the letter in its agenda. The President (United Kingdom) then stated that, following consultations among members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹¹

The Security Council has considered the letter dated 2 July 1993 from the head of State of the Republic of Georgia to the President of the Security Council concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia. The Council expresses its deep concern at the reports of increased fighting around Sukhumi. It calls on all the parties to cease military action immediately and to respect the ceasefire agreement of 14 May 1993. The Council will consider without delay the report of the Secretary-General of 1 July 1993, and the recommendations therein.

Decision of 9 July 1993 (3252nd meeting):

On 1 July 1993, pursuant to the presidential statement of 10 September 1992,¹² the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Abkhazia,¹³ in which he described intensified efforts by the United Nations to seek a settlement to the conflict. The Secretary-General reported that his Special Envoy had undertaken his first mission to Georgia from 20 to 25 May 1993 and had met the Georgian and Abkhaz authorities. Subsequently, he had travelled to Sweden and Moscow to meet the CSCE Chairman-in-Office and the Russian authorities. On 22 June 1993, his Special Envoy had a meeting with the Georgian Head of State in Brussels during which the latter had again stressed the need for urgent action by the United Nations and had strongly appealed for the immediate dispatch of United Nations military observers to be deployed in the Government-controlled area of Abkhazia. The Secretary-General further noted that the situation in Georgia was deteriorating and that continuing hostilities in Abkhazia were having a devastating effect on the country’s economy. He believed that a solution along three tracks was needed: consolidation (and, if necessary, international monitoring) of the ceasefire; the launching of a political negotiating process, preferably under United Nations auspices; and support for those two processes by the neighbouring countries, among which the Russian Federation was of pre-eminent importance. His consultations and those of his Special Envoy had revealed that the Government of Georgia fully supported his approach, that the Abkhaz side favoured a peace conference under United Nations auspices but not, at the present time, the deployment of military observers, and that the Russian side favoured the deployment of United Nations military observers but had reservations about the conference at that time. The Secretary-General shared the view that the United Nations should think carefully before undertaking a peacekeeping operation that was not linked to a political process with a reasonable prospect of success. Unless that rule was observed, there was a danger of open-ended peacekeeping commitments from which it could be difficult to withdraw without causing new hostilities. He had therefore been reluctant to recommend the deployment of military observers before he was in a position to inform the Council that all concerned had agreed to engage in negotiations under United Nations auspices. However, the maintenance of that position could lead to a further intensification of the conflict, with potentially severe consequences for the whole Caucasus region. In view of the urgent need to get the conflict in Abkhazia under control, he recommended that a group of 50 United Nations military observers be deployed to Georgia, initially in the Sukhumi and Ochamchira districts of Abkhazia, with a mandate to (a) discourage further escalation of the conflict; (b) use its good offices to reinstate the ceasefire agreement; (c) report and investigate ceasefire violations and endeavour to restore the status quo; and (d) attempt to establish communications between the two sides to forestall violations of the ceasefire. The deployment of the military observer group would be without prejudice to his continuing efforts to launch a peace process involving the Government of Georgia, the two parties in Abkhazia and the Russian Federation. It would be his intention to invite the Chairman-in-Office of CSCE to be represented as an observer at an eventual peace conference.

In an addendum to his report submitted on 7 July,¹⁴ the Secretary-General noted however a serious deterioration in the military situation in and around Sukhumi and cautioned against deploying military observers until the ceasefire was re-established and was being respected. He added that the Security Council might wish to authorize him to take all necessary steps to ensure that deployment could be done rapidly as soon as that condition was fulfilled.

At its 3252nd meeting, on 9 July 1993, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Georgia, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President then drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations and read out a revision to be made to the draft resolution in its provisional form.¹⁵

The draft resolution, as orally revised in its provisional form, was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 849 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 1 and 7 July 1993,

Recalling the statements made by the President of the Security Council on 10 September and 8 October 1992 and 29 January 1993 concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia,

Recalling the Moscow Agreement of 3 September 1992,

Endorsing the approach set out in the letter dated 5 May 1993 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council,

Noting with concern the recent intensification of fighting around Sukhumi,

Reaffirming the statement made by the President of the Security Council on 2 July 1993, in which the Council called in particular on all parties to respect the ceasefire agreement of 14 May 1993,

Stressing the importance it attaches, in the context of the deployment of military observers, to the existence and implementation of a ceasefire and a peace process with the effective involvement of the United Nations,

1. Notes with appreciation the observations contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to send his Special Envoy to the region to assist in reaching agreement on the implementation of the ceasefire and to begin immediately the necessary preparations, including contacting Member States which may be able to make observers available and sending a planning team to the area, for the dispatch of fifty military observers to Georgia once the ceasefire is implemented;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to notify the Council, for its decision, when the ceasefire has been implemented and in his view conditions permit the deployment of the observers, and to make recommendations at that stage for their mandate, and declares its readiness to act expeditiously upon such notification;

4. Welcomes in this context the Secretary-General's continuing efforts to launch a peace process involving the parties to the conflict and with the participation of the Government of the Russian Federation as a facilitator;

5. Supports the Secretary-General's continuing cooperation with the Chairman-in-Office of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe in their efforts to bring peace to the region;

6. Calls on the Government of the Republic of Georgia to enter expeditiously into discussion with the United Nations on a status-of-forces agreement to facilitate early deployment of observers when the Council so decides;

7. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Decision of 6 August 1993 (3261st meeting):

By a letter dated 4 August 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹⁶ the Secretary-General informed the Council that, pursuant to resolution 849 (1993), he had dispatched a planning team to Abkhazia on 19 July 1993. In the meantime, the parties to the conflict, together with the Russian Federation as facilitator, had signed an agreement on 27 July 1993, under which a ceasefire had taken effect on 28 July 1993. The Secretary-General believed that current conditions permitted the immediate deployment of observers. He proposed that an advance team of 5 to 10 observers be dispatched to the conflict area as soon as possible.

At its 3261st meeting, on 6 August 1993, the Security Council included the letter in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Georgia, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (United States) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations and read out revisions to be made to the draft resolution in its provisional form.¹⁷ She also drew their attention to a letter dated 2 August 1993 addressed to the President of the Council from the representative of Georgia.¹⁸ She further stated that the nature of the situation in Georgia and the actions required by the United Nations as a result of the signing of the ceasefire agreement required an urgent response from the Council. Failure to take action would unduly delay the mission to Georgia. Moreover, the Secretary-General would soon submit to the Council his detailed proposals and recommendations on fully deploying such a mission. Therefore, as an exceptional matter, she asked the members of the Council to act on the draft resolution without the usual notice and discussion.

The draft resolution, as orally revised in its provisional form, was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 854 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 849 (1993) of 9 July 1993, which reserved to the Council a decision on the deployment of military observers, following implementation of a ceasefire,

Welcoming the signing on 27 July 1993 of the agreement establishing the ceasefire in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia,

1. Approves the Secretary-General's proposal as contained in his letter dated 4 August 1993 to the President of the Security Council that an advance team of up to ten United Nations military observers be deployed to the region as soon as possible to begin to help to verify compliance with the ceasefire as envisaged in the ceasefire agreement, the mandate of the team to expire within three months, and contemplates that this advance team will be incorporated into a United Nations observer mission if such a mission is formally established by the Council;

2. Looks forward to the report of the Secretary-General on the proposed establishment of a United Nations observer mission, including in particular a detailed estimate of the cost and the scope of this operation, a time-frame for its implementation and the projected conclusion of this operation;

3. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Decision of 24 August 1993 (3268th meeting):
resolution 858 (1993)

On 6 August 1993, pursuant to resolution 849 (1993), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia,¹⁹ in which he described, inter alia, his concept of operation for a military observer mission to be known as the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG). Its tasks would be to (a) verify respect for the ceasefire agreement; (b) assist in avoiding any escalation of hostilities; (c) maintain a channel of communication with the military commanders of the parties to forestall violations of ceasefire; (d) investigate ceasefire violations; and (e) report to Headquarters. After considering the findings of the planning team, he had reached the conclusion that the dispatch of 50 military observers, as authorized by resolution 849 (1993), would not cope with the situation, which had developed since. He therefore recommended that the Council expand the mandate of the mission to include the deployment of 88 military observers without delay. He further recommended that the Council authorize the establishment of UNOMIG with such an expanded mandate. The Secretary-General also drew the Council's attention to novel features in the ceasefire agreement that could impinge upon the functioning of UNOMIG, including provisions for some sort of co-deployment with other contingents and groups that were also assigned responsibilities for maintaining the ceasefire and public order. He proposed that an advance team of the mission be dispatched to the area in order, inter alia, to clarify with the parties the relationship of UNOMIG with those entities and the extent of their respective responsibilities and authority, before the full deployment of the mission.

At its 3268th meeting, on 24 August 1993, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President drew the attention of the members of the Council to two letters dated 4 and 6 August 1993 from the Secretary-General, addressed to the President of the Council.²⁰ The President also drew the attention of Council members to a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.²¹

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 858 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 849 (1993) of 9 July 1993, in which it reserved to itself a decision on the deployment of observers, following implementation of a ceasefire,

Welcoming the signing of the ceasefire agreement of 27 July 1993 between the Republic of Georgia and forces in Abkhazia,

Recalling its resolution 854 (1993) of 6 August 1993, in which it approved the deployment of an advance team of observers for a period of three months,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 6 and 7 August 1993,

Reaffirming previous statements which underscored the vital importance of the maintenance of ceasefire agreements, in particular the statement of the President of the Security Council on 2 July 1993,

Determining that continuation of the conflict in Georgia threatens peace and stability in the region,

Noting that the parties to the conflict have committed themselves to withdrawal of forces from Abkhazia and that this withdrawal is at present under way,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 6 and 7 August 1993;

2. Decides to establish a United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia in accordance with the above-mentioned report comprising up to eighty-eight military observers, plus minimal staff necessary to support the Mission, with the following mandate:

(a) To verify compliance with the ceasefire agreement of 27 July 1993 with special attention to the situation in the city of Sukhumi;

(b) To investigate reports of ceasefire violations and to attempt to resolve such incidents with the parties involved;

(c) To report to the Secretary-General on the implementation of its mandate including, in particular, violations of the ceasefire agreement;

3. Decides that the Mission is established for a period of six months subject to the proviso that it will be extended beyond the initial ninety days only upon a review by the Council based on a report from the Secretary-General on whether or not substantive progress had been made towards implementing measures aimed at establishing a lasting peace;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report as appropriate, but in any event within three months, on the activities of the Mission;

5. Decides to keep under constant review the operational arrangements to implement the mandate contained in the present resolution, in the light of any further recommendations that the Secretary-General may make in this regard;

6. Welcomes the proposed deployment of mixed interim monitoring groups of Georgian/Abkhaz/Russian units designed to consolidate the ceasefire, and requests the Secretary-General to facilitate cooperation between the United Nations observers and these units within their respective mandates;

7. Calls on all parties to respect and implement the ceasefire agreement of 27 July 1993 and to cooperate fully with the Mission and ensure the safety of all United Nations personnel and all other peacekeeping and humanitarian personnel within Georgia;

8. Calls on the Government of the Republic of Georgia to conclude expeditiously with the United Nations a status-of-forces agreement to facilitate deployment of the Mission;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to pursue energetically, through his Special Envoy, efforts to facilitate the peace process and negotiations, starting as soon as possible, towards the achievement of a comprehensive political settlement;

10. Expresses its continuing support for the Secretary-General's ongoing cooperation with the Chairman-in-Office of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe in efforts to bring peace to Georgia and elsewhere in the region;

11. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of France said the United Nations was again faced with a situation that was new to it in that it was intervening on the ground alongside regional players. Such action posed a number of problems, in particular delimiting precisely each one's respective responsibilities. His delegation welcomed the fact that the adopted resolution provided for a regular review of the operational provisions for implementing UNOMIG's mandate in the light of the progress made towards establishing a lasting peace. Another essential element was the start to a process of negotiating a political settlement. His delegation regretted the lack of precise provisions for convening an international conference under United Nations auspices and expected the parties to make formal commitments to that end.²²

Similarly, the representative of the United Kingdom noted that the relationship between UNOMIG and the bodies provided for in the ceasefire agreement was not entirely clear, but would become so in the light of experience. He added that a comprehensive political settlement had yet to be worked out and encouraged the parties to meet as soon as possible. The Council should be aiming to encourage the rapid conclusion of such a settlement, without which a cease-fire agreement may not work over time.²³

The representative of the Russian Federation stressed the significance of the ceasefire agreement of 27 July 1993, which established a real basis for ensuring a stable ceasefire and for working out a comprehensive political settlement to the conflict in Abkhazia. He noted that the agreement provided for active assistance from the international community in normalizing the situation in Abkhazia. In that respect, the presence of United Nations observers was of extreme political and practical importance to ensure the stability of the ceasefire regime and strict compliance with the other provisions of the agreement. His Government agreed with the concept, approved in the resolution, of UNOMIG to monitor the ceasefire in Abkhazia, and with the size of the mission. He stressed that the resolution had to be implemented in the next few days and requested the Secretariat to conclude its work in preparing the Mission, and in detailed planning of its activities, in particular those related to the interaction of the international observers with the other monitoring groups, and to send the first group of observers within the next few days.²⁴

The President, speaking in her capacity as representative of the United States, noted that, while UNOMIG could play a vital role in helping to create the conditions necessary for genuine and substantive peace negotiations to proceed, it could not guarantee the success of such peace negotiations. The Mission could operate effectively only if the parties had the political will to resolve their differences by negotiation. Should that will be absent, her delegation would see no justification for prolonging the mission.²⁵

By a letter dated 17 September 1993 addressed to the President of the Council,²⁶ the representative of Georgia transmitted a note verbale dated 16 September requesting an urgent Council meeting to discuss a full-scale offensive by the Abkhaz side against the cities of Sukhumi, Okhumi and Ochamchira and to dispatch the Secretary-General's Special Envoy to the region.

At its 3279th meeting, on 17 September 1993, the Security Council included the letter in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Georgia, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Venezuela) then stated that, following consultations among members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:²⁷

The Security Council expresses its extreme concern at the outbreak of fighting in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia, arising from the attacks by the Abkhaz forces on the towns of Sukhumi and Ochamchira.

The Council strongly condemns this grave violation by the Abkhaz side of the Sochi ceasefire agreement of 27 July 1993, which was mediated by the Russian Federation and welcomed by the Council in resolutions 854 (1993) of 6 August 1993 and 858 (1993) of 24 August 1993.

The Council strongly demands that the Abkhaz leadership end immediately the hostilities and promptly withdraw all its forces to the ceasefire lines agreed upon in Sochi on 27 July 1993. Failure to take such action can entail the risk of serious consequences.

The Council urges all countries to encourage the re-establishment of the ceasefire and the resumption of the peace process.

The Council expresses its strong desire to see the Abkhaz side enter fully into the peace process without further delay.

The Council notes the oral report of the Secretary-General on 17 September 1993 regarding the situation in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia, and welcomes his intention to send his Special Envoy for Georgia to Moscow and to the area to assess the situation and to establish a way forward to a peaceful settlement to the dispute.

The Council looks forward to receiving the Secretary-General's report at an early date.

Decision of 19 October 1993 (3295th meeting):
resolution 876 (1993)

On 7 October 1993, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a report on the situation in Abkhazia,²⁸ in which he gave an account of the initial efforts to implement the mandate of UNOMIG and outlined the efforts to start a political process in view of the collapse of the ceasefire and the military advances by the Abkhaz party. UNOMIG had been in the early stages of its deployment when the ceasefire broke down on 16 September and Abkhaz forces launched attacks on Sukhumi and Ochamchira. Further deployment of UNOMIG was suspended, with the strength of the mission standing at 12 military observers. It was evident that the UNOMIG mandate had been invalidated as a result of the general breakdown of the ceasefire and the collapse of the tripartite machinery responsible for its implementation. The Secretary-General proposed to maintain the present strength of UNOMIG in Sukhumi. On the political front, his Special Envoy had made further efforts to call the participants together, proposing to hold a first round of talks at Geneva on 30 September and 1 October. The Secretary-General also expressed his concern at reports of atrocities and allegations of ethnic cleansing being committed as well as at the large numbers of displaced civilians and called on the Abkhaz leadership to exercise maximum restraint regarding the civilian population. His Special Envoy had issued an urgent appeal to Governments for humanitarian assistance. In conclusion, he hoped to present recommendations in a very near future relating to the future of UNOMIG and to the political aspects of the United Nations role in trying to end the conflict in Abkhazia.

By a letter dated 13 October 1993 addressed to the President of the Council,²⁹ the representative of Georgia transmitted a letter dated 12 October 1993 addressed to the Secretary-General from the Head of State of Georgia requesting a meeting of the Security Council in connection with the events that had taken place in Abkhazia on 16 September 1993.

At its 3295th meeting, on 19 October 1993, the Security Council included that letter in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Georgia, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Brazil) then drew the attention of the members of the Council to the report of the Secretary-General dated 7 October 1993 as well as to a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.³⁰ He also drew their attention to other documents.³¹

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and was adopted unanimously as resolution 876 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 849 (1993) of 9 July 1993, 854 (1993) of 6 August 1993 and 858 (1993) of 24 August 1993,

Recalling the statement made by the President of the Council on 17 September 1993, in which the Council expressed its extreme concern for the situation in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia, and urged all countries to encourage the resumption of the peace process,

Having considered the letter dated 12 October 1993 from the Chairman of the Parliament, head of State of the Republic of Georgia, to the Secretary-General,

Having also considered the report of the Secretary-General of 7 October 1993,

Deeply concerned at the human suffering caused by conflict in the region, and at reports of "ethnic cleansing" and other serious violations of international humanitarian law,

Determining that continuation of the conflict in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia, threatens peace and stability in the region,

1. Affirms the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Georgia;
2. Reaffirms its strong condemnation of the grave violation by the Abkhaz side of the ceasefire agreement of 27 July 1993 between the Republic of Georgia and forces in Abkhazia, and subsequent actions in violation of international humanitarian law;
3. Condemns also the killing of the Chairman of the Defence Council and Council of Ministers of the Autonomous Republic of Abkhazia;
4. Demands that all parties refrain from the use of force and from any violations of international humanitarian law, and welcomes the decision of the Secretary-General to send a fact-finding mission to the Republic of Georgia in this regard, in particular to investigate reports of "ethnic cleansing";

²⁹ S/26576.

5. Affirms the right of refugees and displaced persons to return to their homes, and calls on the parties to facilitate this;

6. Welcomes the humanitarian assistance already provided, including by international aid agencies, and urges Member States to contribute towards the relief efforts;

7. Calls for unimpeded access for international humanitarian relief assistance in the region;

8. Calls on all States to prevent the provision from their territories or by persons under their jurisdiction of all assistance, other than humanitarian assistance, to the Abkhaz side and in particular to prevent the supply of any weapons and munitions;

9. Reiterates its support for the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Envoy, in cooperation with the Chairman-in-Office of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and with the assistance of the Government of the Russian Federation as a facilitator, to carry forward the peace process with the aim of achieving an overall political settlement;

10. Notes the provisional steps the Secretary-General has taken with regard to the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia, and welcomes his intention to provide a further report both on the future of the Mission and on the political aspects of the United Nations role in trying to end the conflict in Abkhazia;

11. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United States said his country supported the adopted resolution because it underlined once again what had to be done to bring peace to Georgia. He stated that international condemnation of the Abkhaz side was a consequence of its unjustified use of force. The way to rectify the situation was to engage in good faith in a political process, which the Secretary-General and his Special Envoy were attempting to set in motion, in keeping with the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia. His country would study carefully the report of the Secretary-General's fact-finding mission, in particular its findings on the subject of alleged acts of "ethnic cleansing".³²

The representative of France supported the Secretary-General's decision's to send a fact-finding mission to look into violations of human rights. He drew the attention of Council members to the provisions in the resolution dealing with the facilitation of the return of refugees and in particular, to the provision calling on all States to prevent the provision of any assistance other than humanitarian to the Abkhaz side. His Government paid particular attention to every effort that could lead to a comprehensive political settlement. His delegation welcomed the continuation of the efforts of the Secretary-General's Special Envoy in cooperation with the Chairman-in-Office of CSCE and hoped that the conditions would soon be spelled out for the holding of a conference under the auspices of the United Nations or according to any other formula which would win the consent of both parties.³³

The representative of the Russian Federation expressed his Government's readiness to cooperate with the United Nations in helping to launch forthwith effective machinery for international monitoring of the ceasefire. It also attached tremendous importance to the beginning of a political dialogue, under the auspices of the United Nations, and with Russia acting as a facilitator, aimed at reaching a comprehensive settlement of the conflict. Furthermore, in view of the complexity of the situation, only a "smooth pooling" and the close interaction of the efforts of the United Nations, CSCE and other parties involved would make it possible to ensure that the peace process was not reversed.³⁴

According to the representative of Hungary, the unanimous adoption of resolution 876 (1993) confirmed once again that the international community rejected the use of violence, including the acquisition of territory by force and "ethnic cleansing", to settle problems that could be resolved by political means. He attached great importance to cooperation between the United Nations and CSCE. He stated that, in the future, the activities of the two organizations should be better coordinated and complement each other. Furthermore, the exchange of information between UNOMIG and the Chairman-in-Office of CSCE should henceforth be an integral part of international efforts in Georgia.³⁵

Decision of 4 November 1993 (3304th meeting):

On 27 October 1993, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report concerning the situation in Abkhazia,³⁶ in which he provided an update on his political efforts and those of his Special Envoy, as well as on the status of UNOMIG. The Secretary-General reported that his Special Envoy had held bilateral discussions in October at Geneva with both parties. The Georgian side had agreed to a meeting, providing that such talks would be conducted on the basis of the inviolability of the territorial integrity of Georgia and that they would take place after the issuing of the report of the human rights mission. Thus, in view of the expressed willingness of both sides to meet, he planned for the Special Envoy to hold a first round of discussions with both parties in late November, under United Nations auspices and with the Russian Federation as facilitator and CSCE as a participant. Restating that the mandate of UNOMIG had been invalidated by the military developments of 16 to 27 September,³⁷ he recommended that the Mission be continued at its current military strength of five military observers for a further three months with the following interim mandate: (a) to maintain contacts with both sides to the conflict and military contingents of the Russian Federation; and (b) to monitor the situation and report to Headquarters, with particular reference to any developments relevant to the efforts of the United Nations to promote a comprehensive political settlement.

At its 3304th meeting, on 4 November 1993, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Georgia, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Cape Verde) then drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.³⁸

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 881 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 849 (1993) of 9 July 1993, 854 (1993) of 6 August 1993, 858 (1993) of 24 August 1993 and 876 (1993) of 19 October 1993,

Recalling in particular resolution 858 (1993) in which the Council decided to establish the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 27 October 1993 concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia,

Noting with concern that the original mandate of the Mission has been overtaken by the military developments of 16 to 27 September 1993,

Expressing its serious concern that continuation of the conflict in Abkhazia, Georgia, threatens peace and stability in the region,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 27 October 1993;

2. Welcomes also the continued efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Envoy, in cooperation with the Chairman-in-Office of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and with the assistance of the Government of the Russian Federation as facilitator, to carry forward the peace process with the aim of achieving an overall political settlement, and in particular to bring both parties together in late November 1993 in Geneva;

3. Reiterates the demand in its resolution 876 (1993) that all the parties to the conflict in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia, refrain from the use of force and from any violation of international humanitarian law, and looks forward to the report of the fact-finding mission sent by the Secretary-General to Georgia in this regard;

4. Approves the continued presence of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia until 31 January 1994 comprising up to five military observers plus minimal support staff, with the following interim mandate:

(a) to maintain contacts with both sides to the conflict and military contingents of the Russian Federation;

(b) to monitor the situation and report to Headquarters, with particular reference to any developments relevant to the efforts of the United Nations to promote a comprehensive political settlement;

5. Decides that the Mission will not be extended beyond 31 January 1994 unless the Secretary-General reports to the Council that substantive progress has been made towards implementing measures aimed at establishing a lasting peace or that the peace process will be served by the prolongation of its mandate, and requests the Secretary-General to report as appropriate, but in any event by late January 1994, on the activities of the Mission;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take planning steps which would enable, upon a further decision by the Council, prompt deployment of additional personnel within the originally authorized strength of the Mission if the Secretary-General reports that the situation on the ground and in the peace process warrants it;

7. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United Kingdom deemed it right that the action taken by the United Nations should take the form not just of resolutions and discussions but also of practical action in the form of the continued limited deployment of UNOMIG with a revised mandate. He added that paragraph 3 of resolution 881 (1993) made very clear the importance the international community attached to the need for respect for human rights in Georgia. The international community also expected the parties to make progress towards a peace settlement, and none of the parties should interpret paragraph 5 of the resolution as implying that UNOMIG would in practice remain deployed whatever happened at the negotiating table.³⁹

³⁷ See the report of 7 October (S/26551), para. 11.

The representative of France expressed his Government's support for the efforts made by the Secretary-General and his Special Envoy to achieve a negotiated solution between the parties. The role of UNOMIG in support of that process was of particular importance. Maintaining UNOMIG in Georgia until 31 January 1994 would allow it to maintain contact with the parties and to provide the Secretary-General and the Security Council with independent information on events that might influence the process of a political solution. He noted that the resolution just adopted made the possible extension of the UNOMIG mandate beyond 31 January 1994 conditional on progress in the negotiation process. It was clear that the justification for UNOMIG lay in its potential usefulness for the peace process.⁴⁰

According to the representative of the United States, resolution 881 (1993) reflected the United Nations continuing commitment to resolution of the conflict in keeping with the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia. UNOMIG, with a new mandate and reduced in size, could still play a constructive role in monitoring the situation on the ground and helping create an atmosphere conducive to a negotiated settlement.⁴¹

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that his country attached great importance to the continued presence of UNOMIG as well as to the Council's decision to request the Secretary-General quickly to take steps that would permit, upon a further decision by the Council, the prompt deployment of additional personnel within the originally authorized strength of the Mission. He further stressed the need for close cooperation and interaction between the United Nations, CSCE and other interested parties, including his country, in order to ensure the irreversibility of the peace process.⁴²

Decision of 8 November 1993 (3307th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3307th meeting, on 8 November 1993, the Security Council resumed its consideration of the item. After the adoption of the agenda, the President stated that, following consultations among Council members, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁴³

The Security Council is following with deep concern developments in the Republic of Georgia, where the continuing disorder has led to mass suffering of the civilian population and threatens to worsen seriously the humanitarian situation in neighbouring Azerbaijan and Armenia.

In this connection, the Council notes the appeal by the Government of the Republic of Georgia to the Russian Federation, the Azerbaijani Republic and the Republic of Armenia for assistance to protect and ensure the uninterrupted operation of railroads in Georgia. These are crucial communication links for the three Transcaucasian countries. The Council welcomes the improvement in security for the lines of communication that has followed the Russian Federation's response, which was made in accordance with the wishes of the Government of Georgia.

The Council appeals to the international community to continue its efforts to provide emergency humanitarian assistance to the population of the Republic of Georgia.

The Council will remain seized of the matter, and asks to be kept informed of developments by the parties concerned on a regular basis.

Decision of 22 December 1993 (3325th meeting):
resolution 892 (1993)

By a letter dated 16 December 1993 addressed to the President of the Council,⁴⁴ the Secretary-General stated that the Memorandum of Understanding, signed by the parties to the conflict on 1 December 1993 at Geneva, manifested encouraging progress towards lasting peace in the area. Therefore, he sought from the Council contingent authority to deploy up to 50 additional military observers, together with a minimal number of civilian support staff. He indicated that UNOMIG, thus reinforced, would be better placed to ascertain the actual conditions on the ground and to plan and prepare for a further expansion, should the next round of negotiations, scheduled to begin on 11 January 1994, warrant it.

At its 3325th meeting, on 22 December 1993, the Security Council included the letter in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Georgia, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (China) then drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.⁴⁵ He also drew their attention to several other documents.⁴⁶

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 892 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 849 (1993) of 9 July 1993, 854 (1993) of 6 August 1993, 858 (1993) of 24 August 1993, 876 (1993) of 19 October 1993 and 881 (1993) of 4 November 1993,

Also reaffirming its resolution 868 (1993) of 29 September 1993 concerning the security of United Nations operations,

Having considered the letter dated 16 December 1993 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia,

Taking note of the letter dated 9 December 1993 from the Permanent Representative of Georgia to the United Nations to the Secretary-General, transmitting the Memorandum of Understanding between the Georgian and Abkhaz sides signed in Geneva on 1 December 1993,

⁴⁵ S/26909.

⁴⁶ Letter dated 3 December 1993 from the representative of Italy addressed to the Secretary-General, transmitting the final documents issued by the CSCE Council at its fourth meeting, held in Rome on 30 November and 1 December 1993 (S/26843); letter dated 3 December 1993 from the representative of Belgium addressed to the President of the Security Council, transmitting a statement on Georgia issued by the European Union on 30 November 1993 (S/26856); and letter dated 9 December 1993 from the representative of Georgia addressed to the Secretary-General, transmitting a letter dated 8 December 1993 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Georgia addressed to the Secretary-General together with the text of the Memorandum of Understanding dated 1 December 1993 (S/26875).

Welcoming the signature of the Memorandum of Understanding,

Noting that the parties to the Memorandum of Understanding consider that the maintenance of peace would be promoted by an increased international presence in the zone of conflict,

Noting also the first expert-level talks held between the parties in Moscow on 15 and 16 December 1993 and the intention to convene a new round of negotiations in Geneva on 11 January 1994 with a view to achieving a comprehensive political settlement of the conflict,

Noting further that encouraging progress has been achieved in the negotiations between the parties, which justifies the deployment of additional United Nations military observers,

Taking note of the decisions of the ministerial meeting of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe held in Rome on 30 November and 1 December 1993, and welcoming the continuing cooperation between the United Nations and the Conference in this matter,

Deeply concerned at the humanitarian situation in Georgia, in particular at the number of displaced persons and refugees,

1. Welcomes the letter dated 16 December 1993 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council;

2. Authorizes the phased deployment of up to fifty additional United Nations military observers to the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia, as recommended by the Secretary-General in his letter, to perform the functions described in paragraph 4 of resolution 881 (1993) and in this manner to contribute to the implementation by the parties of the provisions of the Memorandum of Understanding of 1 December 1993, and requests the Secretary-General to inform the Council of the duties of new observers as additional deployments beyond the initial ten referred to in his letter are undertaken;

3. Notes the intention of the Secretary-General to plan and prepare for a possible further expansion of the Mission to ensure prompt deployment should the situation on the ground and the course of negotiations warrant it;

4. Expresses its willingness to review the existing mandate of the Mission taking into account any progress achieved towards the promotion of a comprehensive political settlement and in the light of the report of the Secretary-General due late January 1994, which report should cover, inter alia, the specific activities the Mission will undertake, prospects for the Mission and anticipated costs, in light of the situation on the ground and in the negotiations;

5. Urges the parties to comply fully with all the commitments they have undertaken in the Memorandum of Understanding, and in particular with the commitments undertaken in accordance with the main provisions of the cease-fire agreement of 27 July 1993, set out in paragraph 1 of the Memorandum of Understanding;

6. Urges the parties to take all steps necessary to ensure the security of Mission personnel, and welcomes the readiness of the Government of the Russian Federation to assist the Secretary-General in this regard;

7. Also urges the parties fully to comply with their undertakings in the Memorandum of Understanding to create conditions for the voluntary, safe and speedy return of refugees to the places of their permanent residence and to facilitate the provision of humanitarian assistance to all victims of the conflict;

8. Further urges the parties not to take any political or any other steps that could aggravate the existing situation or hinder the process towards a comprehensive political settlement;

9. Encourages donor States to make contributions in response to the United Nations humanitarian appeal;

10. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of France observed that, just as the Council had reduced the strength of UNOMIG following the violation of the ceasefire agreement, it was, in the light of the encouraging results of the Geneva negotiations, confirming the readiness of the United Nations to make its contribution, as soon as the parties proved their willingness to advance towards a political settlement of the conflict. If further progress were to be achieved in the coming weeks, France, together with a number of delegations directly concerned, would propose new forms of action to the Security Council.⁴⁷

The representative of the Russian Federation said his delegation had supported the adopted resolution, authorizing an increase in the strength of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia up to 50 additional military observers, in the belief that that was the first step in United Nations assistance. His delegation also believed that progress towards a political settlement should be accompanied by the deployment of a full-fledged United Nations operation, which would cover the entire territory of Abkhazia. At that point, questions of highest priority were the respect for human rights, the return of refugees, the restoration of law and order, and the cessation of violence. In that respect, the speaker hoped that the upcoming review of the mandate of UNOMIG would take into account the recommendation of the Secretary-General's fact-finding mission,⁴⁸ according to which human rights monitors placed in Abkhazia could make an important contribution to the restoration of guarantees for the protection of civilians. It was obvious that international support commensurate with the intensity and scale of the conflict required a significant strengthening not only of the military but also of political, humanitarian and other types of United Nations presence in Abkhazia.⁴⁹

Similarly, the representative of the United Kingdom said United Nations assistance to Georgia was not and should not be confined to the provision of military observers. He agreed with the Secretary-General's view that a further deployment of UNOMIG, beyond that authorized in resolution 892 (1993) and up to the strength originally envisaged for the Mission, had to depend on progress at the political level.⁵⁰

The representative of the United States noted that the expansion of UNOMIG was in keeping with the intention of resolution 881 (1993), which took as its guidelines for further development an evaluation of the situation on the ground and in the negotiating process. He hoped that the parties would build upon their agreement to work out a framework for a formal ceasefire with which UNOMIG could interact, as was its original function. He also hoped that the Secretary-General in his next report would evaluate whether and to what degree UNOMIG might resume more traditional observer functions.⁵¹

Decision of 31 January 1994 (3332nd meeting):

On 25 January 1994, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Abkhazia.⁵² The Secretary-General reported that, following the signature of the Memorandum of Understanding of 1 December 1993, his Special Envoy had chaired a second round of negotiations at Geneva in January. On 13 January, both sides signed a communiqué by which they noted the implementation of the Memorandum of Understanding of December 1993, including an exchange of prisoners, a preparatory visit of representatives of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and an expert group meeting, held in Moscow on 15 and 16 December 1993, to prepare recommendations on the political status of Abkhazia.⁵³ The two sides reaffirmed their commitment not to use force or the threat of force against each other, recognized that their primary objective was a comprehensive political settlement and agreed that the deployment of a full-scale peacekeeping operation in Abkhazia would promote the establishment of favourable conditions for such a settlement. They also agreed to establish a special commission on refugees to begin work on 25 January; to start implementing a phased process of the return of refugees to Abkhazia on 10 February; and to hold a third round of negotiations on 22 February in Moscow or Geneva. The communiqué also contained a call from the United Nations, CSCE and the Russian Federation for the parties to proceed from the need to observe the territorial integrity of Georgia and to ensure fully the interests of the entire multinational population of Abkhazia.

On 21 January, the Head of State of Georgia had met the Secretary-General and had strongly urged him to recommend an increase in the United Nations military presence, as soon as possible. Noting that negotiations for an acceptable political status for Abkhazia would take time and that the present ceasefire remained fragile, and taking into account the fact that tensions and conflict situations, which existed in the newly independent States of the former Soviet Union, carried much significance for regional stability and international peace and security, the Secretary-General believed that the United Nations presence in the area should be prolonged. In that regard, following consultations with his Special Envoy and with the group of Member States constituting the “Friends of Georgia”,⁵⁴ he suggested as possible options either the establishment of a traditional United Nations peacekeeping force or the authorization of a multinational military force not under United Nations command to carry out an effective separation of forces, monitor the disarmament and withdrawal of armed units and create conditions conducive to the return of refugees and displaced persons. However, bearing in mind the Security Council’s clear indication that its attitude towards United Nations peacekeeping efforts in Abkhazia would depend on there being substantive progress towards a political settlement, which had so far been limited, he recommended that UNOMIG be maintained with its present mandate and strength of up to 55 observers for a limited period to 15 March 1994.

At its 3332nd meeting, on 31 January 1994, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Georgia, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Czech Republic) then drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council’s prior consultations.⁵⁵ He also drew their attention to two letters from the representative of Georgia, including a letter dated 13 January 1994 addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁵⁶ by which he transmitted the text of the communiqué and requested a meeting of the Council to discuss the question of dispatching United Nations peacekeeping forces to the region.

The representative of Georgia stated that the issue of refugees and displaced persons was of utmost importance for his country and urged that greater attention be paid to the peacekeeping operation in Abkhazia. He contended that the repopulation of the places where the refugees had resided, by non-indigenous elements, including foreign combatants, was a concealed form of ethnic cleansing, which challenged the efforts of the United Nations and previous agreements for a peaceful settlement. While the determination of the political status of Abkhazia, respecting the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia was the key to an overall political settlement, an urgent resolution of the refugee problem was the key to the determination of the political status of Abkhazia itself. He stressed that the return of the refugees had to be carried out without any preconditions.⁵⁷

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 896 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 849 (1993) of 9 July 1993, 854 (1993) of 6 August 1993, 858 (1993) of 24 August 1993, 876 (1993) of 19 October 1993, 881 (1993) of 4 November 1993 and 892 (1993) of 22 December 1993,

Reaffirming also its resolution 868 (1993) of 29 September 1993 concerning the security of United Nations operations,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 25 January 1994 concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia,

Welcoming the communiqué on the second round of negotiations between the Georgian and Abkhaz sides signed at Geneva on 13 January 1994, recalling the Memorandum of Understanding signed at Geneva on 1 December 1993, and emphasizing the importance of implementation by the parties of the obligations to which they have committed themselves,

Taking note of the fact that the parties, in the communiqué, state that they continue to favour the deployment in the zone of conflict of United Nations peacekeeping forces or other forces, subject to authorization by the United Nations,

Taking note also of the next expert-level talks to be held between the parties in Moscow on 8 February 1994 and of the intention of the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General to convene a new round of negotiations at Geneva on 22 February 1994,

Recognizing the grave situation in the Republic of Georgia created by the presence of almost 300,000 persons displaced from Abkhazia,

Noting again the conclusions of the ministerial meeting of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe held at Rome on 30 November and 1 December 1993, and welcoming the continuing cooperation between the United Nations and the Conference in this matter,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General of 25 January 1994;

2. Welcomes the continued efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Envoy, in cooperation with the Chairman-in-Office of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and with the assistance of the Government of the Russian Federation as facilitator, to carry forward the peace process with the aim of achieving an overall political settlement, and welcomes in particular the progress achieved so far;

3. Urges the parties to resume the negotiations as soon as possible and to demonstrate stronger willingness to achieve progress towards a comprehensive political settlement;

4. Calls upon all concerned to respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Georgia, and stresses the importance it attaches to such respect;

5. Stresses that substantive progress must be made immediately on the political status of Abkhazia, respecting fully the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Georgia, if the negotiations are to succeed and further conflict is to be avoided;

8. Takes note of the options described by the Secretary-General in his report for the possible establishment of a peacekeeping operation in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council immediately following the third round of negotiations between the parties on progress, if any, made in the negotiations and on the situation on the ground, with special attention to circumstances which might warrant a peacekeeping force and on the modalities for such a force;

10. Underlines the importance of substantive progress towards a political settlement at the next round of negotiations for further consideration by the Council of possible establishment of a peacekeeping force in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia;

11. Recognizes the right of all refugees and displaced persons affected by the conflict to return, without preconditions, to their homes in secure conditions, calls upon the parties to honour the commitments they have already made in this regard, and urges the parties to come to an expeditious agreement, including a binding timetable, that would assure the rapid return of these refugees and displaced persons in secure conditions;

12. Condemns any attempts to change the demographic composition of Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia, including by repopulating it with persons not previously resident there;

13. Calls upon the parties to comply fully with the ceasefire to which they have committed themselves;

15. Encourages donor States to assist the Republic of Georgia to enable it to overcome the consequences of the conflict and to make contributions in response to the United Nations humanitarian appeal;

16. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the Russian Federation expressed his delegation's support for the request by the parties, as contained in their communiqué, with respect to the deployment in the zone of conflict of United Nations peacekeeping forces or other forces approved by the United Nations, and with respect to the extension of the mandate of UNOMIG. His delegation considered the resolution just adopted to be an interim decision dictated by the need to extend the Mission's mandate, on the basis of which the Council could adopt a fundamental decision on deploying a full-scale United Nations peacekeeping operation. He stressed that the deployment of peacekeeping forces throughout the territory of Abkhazia would create the most favourable conditions for hastened progress towards a comprehensive political settlement as well as for ensuring the unconditional return of refugees, without which there could be no question of a final resolution of the political status of Abkhazia.⁵⁸

The representative of France stated that his delegation agreed with the Secretary-General that it was the duty of the United Nations, as soon as the political will of the parties to reach a negotiated settlement was confirmed, to become further involved and respond to the appeal to establish a peacekeeping operation in Abkhazia. The parties had to understand, therefore, that it was urgent that they made progress in that regard, particularly with respect to the refugee issue. The return of refugees and displaced persons was critical to the quest for a political settlement acceptable to all the parties.⁵⁹

Similarly, the representative of the United Kingdom said that a key factor in future decisions on the subject of the establishment of a peacekeeping force would be the extent of progress towards a political settlement in the negotiations between the parties. However, the Council would not wish that formula to be used by one of the parties to gain time in order to consolidate its position. Any solution to the problem had to respect the territorial integrity of Georgia and ensure the interests of the entire multinational population of Abkhazia.⁶⁰

According to the representative of the United States, the Council could not get ahead of the parties themselves in efforts towards a political solution to the conflict. The resolution rightly reminded the parties of the need to demonstrate willingness to work towards a comprehensive political settlement and stressed that substantive progress had to be made immediately on the political status of Abkhazia. The resolution was also specific on the question of refugees and displaced persons. Although the Council had taken no position on exactly how the process of return should begin, it had made clear in the resolution that the process was to take place within an agreed framework, including a binding timetable.⁶¹

The representative of New Zealand stated that the Secretary-General rightly had recommended against the United Nations taking a decision at that time to establish a more elaborate peacekeeping operation in Georgia. The current de facto ceasefire was not a sure foundation for a peacekeeping operation of the kind requested by the parties or for decisions on the nature and duration of a such an operation. He stressed that, while the members of the Council would examine the Secretary-General's next report on the basis of the outcome of the upcoming negotiations between the parties, any new United Nations peacekeeping operation in Georgia would have to be structured along traditional lines. Recognizing the implications of the situation for regional security, he welcomed the willingness of regional countries — in particular the Russian Federation as facilitator — to play a constructive role in seeking a solution in that area.⁶²

The President, speaking in his capacity as representative of the Czech Republic, expressed support for Georgia's territorial integrity and stated that, while anything that both parties could agree to would probably be internationally acceptable, an autonomous status for Abkhazia within the Republic of Georgia would be preferable. While it would be very challenging to interpose a sizeable international contingent of peacekeepers in the conflict, his delegation could not support sending peacekeepers into a situation where a political settlement had not been achieved. Expressing satisfaction at the United Nations cooperation with CSCE in Georgia, he suggested that such cooperation be reinforced by considering the appointment of a "super-envoy", representing both the United Nations and CSCE. Such an appointment would send a signal about both organizations' willingness to pool resources with respect, perhaps, to all of Georgia's problems.⁶³

Decision of 4 March 1994 (3345th meeting):
resolution 901 (1994)

On 3 March 1994, pursuant to resolution 896 (1994), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Abkhazia,⁶⁴ in which he reported on progress made in the negotiations, and on the situation on the ground. The Secretary-General informed the Council that a second meeting of the group of experts to address the issue of the political status of Abkhazia had been held in Moscow in February. The group had discussed the division of competences between the Georgian and the Abkhaz authorities as well as the national and international guarantees, the rights to be recognized as those of Abkhazia and possible mechanisms for implementing the competences decided on. As a result of the meeting, the viewpoints of the two sides had seemed to have come closer although a number of difficulties remained unresolved. The meeting was followed by a third round of negotiations at Geneva in February. Despite every effort by his Special Envoy and the Russian facilitator to devise a compromise, it had proved impossible to obtain a document signed by both parties recognizing the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia by all concerned. It had been agreed to resume the session in New York on 7 March.

The Secretary-General noted that the situation on the ground had worsened with renewed fighting in the Gali region, leading to more deaths, destruction of homes and refugee flows. In his view, the deployment of an international military presence could contribute much needed stability. However, the conditions set out by the Council for such a deployment had yet to be met. By not acceding to the Security Council's demand that all parties recognize the territorial integrity of Georgia, the Abkhaz side was preventing the United Nations from responding to a call for assistance from a Member State and blocking the orderly return of refugees. He therefore urged both parties to make the necessary compromises. In the meantime, he recommended a short extension of UNOMIG under its existing mandate.

At its 3345th meeting, on 4 March 1994, the Security Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (France) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.⁶⁵ He also drew their attention to several other documents,⁶⁶ including a letter dated 9 February 1994 from the representative of Georgia transmitting a letter dated 8 February 1994, in which the Head of State of Georgia informed the Secretary-General of the exacerbation of the tense situation in Abkhazia and reiterated his call for a prompt deployment of a peacekeeping force in Abkhazia, and a letter dated 28 February 1994 from the representative of Georgia addressed to the President, transmitting the text of a statement by the Head of State of Georgia issued on 26 February 1994, in which he agreed to the immediate continuation of the negotiations and expressed his readiness to visit the Security Council and meet the Secretary-General or his Special Envoy, the leadership of the Russian Federation and representatives of friendly States.

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 901 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 849 (1993) of 9 July 1993, 854 (1993) of 6 August 1993, 858 (1993) of 24 August 1993, 876 (1993) of 19 October 1993, 881 (1993) of 4 November 1993, 892 (1993) of 22 December 1993 and 896 (1994) of 31 January 1994, ⁶⁵ S/1994/251.

Noting the letter dated 28 February 1994 from the Permanent Representative of Georgia to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council transmitting the statement of the Chairman of the Parliament, Head of State of the Republic of Georgia,

Noting also the resumption in New York on 7 March 1994 of the negotiations held at Geneva from 22 to 25 February 1994 between the Georgian and Abkhaz sides,

Urging the parties to achieve as soon as possible substantive progress towards a political settlement based on the principles set out in its previous resolutions so that the Security Council may adequately consider the possible establishment of a peacekeeping force in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia for an additional interim period terminating on 31 March 1994;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council by 21 March 1994 on whatever progress has been made in the negotiations and on the situation on the ground, with special attention to circumstances which might warrant a peacekeeping force and on the modalities for such a force;

3. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United States said that it was regrettable that the parties had not made sufficient progress towards a comprehensive political settlement. Accordingly, his Government called on the parties to demonstrate a stronger willingness to work towards such settlement. At the same time, it was committing itself to explore promising ways and means within the Council to support and guide the parties' work. In doing so, it would need to remain focused on the principles outlined in resolution 896 (1994) which had to guide the process.⁶⁷

The representative of the Russian Federation said his Government attached great importance to progress in the negotiating process, and in particular to attaining an agreement on the status of Abkhazia that fully respected the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia. At the same time, it was firmly convinced that peacemaking forces must be deployed without delay throughout Abkhazia in order to add momentum to the peace process and make it durable and, in the final analysis, irreversible.⁶⁸

The President, in his capacity as the representative of France, contended that the adopted resolution was a technical one. The negotiations between both sides were now entering a decisive phase. His Government urgently called on the parties to make the kind of progress that would allow the Council to adopt the necessary peacekeeping measures to settle the conflict.⁶⁹

Deliberations of 9 March 1994 (3346th meeting)

At its 3346th meeting, on 9 March 1994, the Security Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Georgia, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (France) then drew the attention of the members of the Council to the report of the Secretary-General of 3 March 1994.⁷⁰

At the outset, the representative of Georgia briefed the Council on the history of the conflict. First, the conflict in Abkhazia was not an inter-ethnic conflict. Secondly, neither before nor after the beginning of the conflict did Georgia ever call into question the issue of Abkhaz statehood. Thirdly, Georgia's will for peace had been reaffirmed by three ceasefire agreements and the adoption of appropriate measures required for their implementation. He then outlined Georgia's plan for a comprehensive settlement in Abkhazia. The plan provided for the holding, under international supervision, of elections leading to the establishment of new organs of power; the establishment, prior to the elections, of an international directorate with the participation of the parties, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the Russian Federation, the group of "Friends of Georgia", and other States Members of the United Nations; and the establishment of a provisional joint administration for Abkhazia. In addition, an international body would be established under United Nations auspices, with the Russian Federation as facilitator and with the participation of CSCE and would devise and implement, jointly with the international directorate and the Government, a programme for Abkhazia's economic revival. He also stressed that the only way towards a peaceful political settlement was the deployment in the conflict zone of international peacekeeping forces and that any delay in their deployment would have a detrimental effect on the lot of refugees. He asked the Council to take those views into account when reaching a decision.⁷¹

The representative of the Russian Federation said that his country attached great importance to progress in the negotiations, particularly with respect to reaching agreement on a full-scale settlement on the basis of unconditional respect for the territorial integrity of Georgia and respect for and guarantees of the statehood and multi-nationality status of the people of Abkhazia. At the same time, his country was convinced that in order to encourage a successful and ultimately irreversible peace process, prompt deployment of peacekeeping forces to the zone of conflict was essential. Only such deployment could truly and effectively ensure maintenance of the ceasefire, the safe return of refugees and displaced persons to Abkhazia, and the parties' implementation of the agreements already reached. The Russian Federation considered it extremely important for the Security Council to respond positively to the frequent requests of the leadership of both parties to that effect.⁷²

The representative of the United States reaffirmed its strong support for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia. Should the parties reach a settlement including a durable ceasefire and the return of refugees, his delegation would be inclined to support a carefully defined United Nations peacekeeping operation in Georgia, if certain conditions were met. In that connection, he noted that the Government of Georgia had indicated a willingness to negotiate far-reaching autonomy for Abkhazia. It must be prepared to define in detail how that autonomy would be exercised. But the Abkhaz forces must also recognize in word and deeds Georgia's territorial integrity.⁷³

According to the representative of the United Kingdom, it was crucial that there should be a substantive political framework in place and clear progress made towards a political settlement before the Council approved a peacekeeping operation. Also, there had to be clarity as to the mandate that might be given to the peacekeeping forces in question, which had to avoid simply consolidating the status quo. He stressed that the international community, in his view,

⁷¹ S/PV.3346, pp. 2-8.

⁷³ Ibid., pp. 9-10.

would not have much patience if a party to the negotiations placed obstacles in their path in order to gain time and consolidate its position and, furthermore, that any solution to the problem had to respect the territorial integrity of Georgia as well as ensuring the interests of all the multi-ethnic communities of Abkhazia.⁷⁴

The President, speaking in his capacity as the representative of France, said that his Government wished to send a very clear message on three matters of principle: first, it was out of the question to compromise on the principle of the territorial integrity of Georgia within the framework of the final settlement; secondly, every effort should be made to ensure that the return of displaced persons and refugees to Abkhazia took place in the best conditions; and thirdly, the establishment of a peacekeeping operation would have to be in conformity with the customary rules governing United Nations peacekeeping involvement, in particular, the definition of its mandate, the force's composition and command and its financing.⁷⁵

Other speakers emphasized that any peace process should take into account the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia.⁷⁶ Some of them considered favourably the establishment of a peacekeeping force in Georgia.⁷⁷

Decision of 25 March 1994 (3354th meeting):
resolution 906 (1994)

On 18 March 1994, pursuant to resolution 901 (1994), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Abkhazia.⁷⁸ The Secretary-General informed the Council that the third round of negotiations had been held in New York in March under the chairmanship of his Special Envoy. He also had a detailed exchange of views with the Head of State of Georgia on the state of the negotiations and the possibilities for action by the United Nations. Much of the draft political declaration and virtually the whole draft refugee agreement were acceptable to both sides. However, the parties diverged on three major issues:

recognition of the territorial integrity of Georgia; the repatriation of refugees and displaced persons; and the role and area of deployment of a peacekeeping force. Although conditions for the deployment of a peacekeeping force did not exist and negotiations were suspended, the Secretary-General did not believe that it was the time for the international community to abandon its efforts. At the same time, the parties could not expect the international community to maintain its assistance indefinitely if they did not both show a readiness to start rebuilding confidence and reconciling their differences. In that context, he informed the Council that he had received informal indications from both sides that they wished to find a negotiated settlement, and that he intended to ask his Special Envoy to resume contact with the parties and with the Russian Federation in its role as facilitator. In the meantime, he recommended an extension of the UNOMIG mandate for a further three months, until 30 June 1994.

At its 3354th meeting, on 25 March 1994, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Georgia, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President then drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.⁷⁹ He also drew their attention to two letters,⁸⁰ including a letter dated 24 March 1994 addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁸¹ in which the representative of Georgia informed the Council of his Government's readiness to continue negotiations on a comprehensive political settlement of the conflict.

Speaking before the vote, the representative of Oman noted that operative paragraph 4 of the draft resolution referred to consideration of the possible establishment of a peacekeeping force in Abkhazia. His delegation did not consider it appropriate for the Council to be considering that matter at present. On the contrary, his Government felt that the Council's involvement in such details was premature and might well set a dangerous precedent leading to complications in the situation. The Security Council should not intervene. Nevertheless, aware that the concerned parties would accept the United Nations force, his delegation would vote in favour of the resolution.⁸²

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 906 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 849 (1993) of 9 July 1993, 854 (1993) of 6 August 1993, 858 (1993) of 24 August 1993, 876 (1993) of 19 October 1993, 881 (1993) of 4 November 1993, 892 (1993) of 22 December 1993, 896 (1994) of 31 January 1994 and 901 (1994) of 4 March 1994,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General of 3 March and 18 March 1994 on the situation in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia,

Regretting that no agreement on a political settlement and on the return of refugees and displaced persons has so far been reached in the negotiations between the Georgian and Abkhaz sides,

Welcoming the letter dated 24 March 1994 from the Permanent Representative of the Republic of Georgia informing of the readiness of the Georgian Government to continue the negotiations on a comprehensive political settlement,

Stressing again the grave situation in the Republic of Georgia created by the presence of large numbers of persons displaced from Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia,

Deploring in particular the violence which occurred in early February 1994,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 3 and 18 March 1994;
2. Once again calls upon all concerned to respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Georgia;
3. Stresses the right of all refugees and displaced persons to return to their homes in secure conditions, throughout Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia, and urges the parties to come to an expeditious agreement with a view to facilitating the effective realization of this right;
4. Urges the parties to resume the negotiations as soon as possible and to achieve substantive progress towards a political settlement, including on the political status of Abkhazia, respecting fully the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Georgia, based on the principles set out in previous Security Council resolutions, so that the Council may adequately consider the possible establishment of a peacekeeping force in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia;

5. Encourages donor States to assist the Republic of Georgia to enable it to overcome the consequences of the conflict and to make contributions in response to the United Nations humanitarian appeal;

6. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia for an additional interim period terminating on 30 June 1994;

7. Urges the parties to take all necessary steps to ensure the security of Mission personnel and their freedom of movement throughout the territory of the Republic of Georgia;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council on whatever progress is made in the negotiations as soon as it is achieved, and in any case no later than 21 June 1994, and on the situation on the ground, with special attention to circumstances which might warrant a peacekeeping force and on the modalities for such a force;

9. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the Russian Federation said that his delegation attached importance to the appeal, contained in adopted resolution, for the parties to resume the negotiations as soon as possible and to achieve substantive progress towards a political settlement based on the principles set out in the Council's previous resolutions, especially that of respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia. His delegation believed that, within the existing mandate of UNOMIG, it would be possible to mobilize further the activities of the Mission and that the Secretary-General would keep in mind the possibilities available to him to expand it. Also of particular importance was the Council's confirmation of its intention duly to consider the possible establishment of a peacekeeping force in Abkhazia in the context of the efforts to achieve a political settlement. Meanwhile, the Secretariat should continue preparatory work for such a United Nations operation so that it could be deployed immediately once the Council had taken the decision to do so.⁸³

Referring to the third round of negotiations and the parties' disagreement on the role and area of deployment of peacekeepers, the representative of the Czech Republic rejected the idea supported by the Abkhaz leaders that a peacekeeping operation should petrify the line that separated the territory controlled by them from the rest of Georgia. On the other hand, the Georgian Government's wish for a peacekeeping force to oversee and safeguard the safe return of refugees, against Abkhaz opposition if need be, would probably call implicitly for an operation under Chapter VII of the Charter. He also underlined the importance of cooperation between the United Nations and CSCE, stating that the early appointment of a liaison officer between the two organizations on the spot, as recently recommended by the CSCE Committee of Senior Officials, should be the next practical manifestation of that cooperation.⁸⁴

The President, speaking in his capacity as the representative of France, stated that the resolution on which his delegation had just voted in favour was not the one that his Government would have wished to see adopted. It would have much preferred to adopt provisions that would have enabled the United Nations to make its own contribution to the implementation of a comprehensive settlement agreed to between the parties. He therefore called on the parties to resume negotiations without delay and take fully account of the proposals put forward by the Secretary-General's Special Envoy. As soon as a lasting political agreement had been concluded and the conditions for United Nations intervention in line with the Organization's principles had been guaranteed, his Government would be prepared to consider favourably the establishment of a peacekeeping operation and to take action in the Council so that a decision to that end would be taken without delay. In that connection, his authorities regarded as essential that, firstly, United Nations involvement required respect for certain rules, in particular the impartiality of the forces in the field and effective control by the Security Council over the implementation of their mandate; and, secondly, that there could be no question of setting up a new buffer force which would only result in freezing the military situation and political positions.⁸⁵

Decision of 8 April 1994 (3362nd meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3362nd meeting, on 8 April 1994, the Security Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (New Zealand) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a letter dated 5 April 1994 addressed to the President of the Council by the representative of Georgia,⁸⁶ transmitting the texts of the declaration on measures for a political settlement of the Georgian-Abkhaz conflict and of the quadripartite agreement on the voluntary return of refugees and displaced persons, signed in Moscow on 4 April. Under that declaration, the parties committed themselves to a strict ceasefire and reaffirmed their commitment to the non-use of force or threat of force, as well as their request for the early deployment of a peacekeeping operation with the participation of a Russian military contingent. They agreed to continue energetic efforts to achieve a comprehensive political settlement and to set up an appropriate standing committee for that purpose with the participation of representatives of CSCE and the Russian Federation and with the involvement of international experts. The parties also had agreed to and signed a quadripartite agreement on the repatriation of refugees and displaced persons, which provided for the return of those persons in accordance with existing international practice, including the practice of UNHCR.

The President then stated that, following consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁸⁷

The Security Council welcomes the conclusion of the third round of the negotiations between the Georgian and Abkhaz sides on a comprehensive political settlement of the conflict under the auspices of the United Nations with the assistance of the Russian Federation as facilitator, and also attended by representatives of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

The Council considers the signing in Moscow on 4 April 1994 of the Declaration on Measures for a Political Settlement of the Georgian/Abkhaz Conflict and the Quadripartite Agreement on Voluntary Return of Refugees and Displaced Persons as an encouraging event, laying the basis for further progress towards the settlement of the conflict.

The Council calls upon both parties to observe strictly the ceasefire and other commitments under the agreements and to use the atmosphere of constructive cooperation, which has emerged during the negotiations, for the solution of other key issues of the settlement.

In this context, the Council supports a further increase in the deployed strength of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia up to the limit specified in resolution 892 (1993) of 22 December 1993, if the Secretary-General considers that the conditions on the ground make that appropriate.

⁸⁷ S/PRST/1994/17.

The Council reaffirms its support for the return of all refugees and displaced persons to their homes in secure conditions, in accordance with international law and as set out in the provisions of the Quadripartite Agreement, and calls upon the parties to honour the commitments they have already made in this regard.

The Council underlines the importance of substantive progress towards a political settlement during the next rounds of negotiations so that it may adequately consider the possible establishment of a peacekeeping force in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia.

The Council expresses in this connection its hope for fruitful results of the work of the Quadripartite Commission on refugees and displaced persons, which begins its work in Sochi, Russian Federation, on 8 April 1994, and of the negotiations between the parties aimed at creating the conditions for the possible establishment of a peacekeeping force and the continuation of consultations on the political status of Abkhazia to be held on 12 and 19 April 1994, respectively.

The Council welcomes the efforts by the Secretary-General and his Special Envoy for Georgia aimed at achieving a comprehensive political settlement in Abkhazia, in accordance with the principles set out in its relevant resolutions, and looks forward to an early report by the Secretary-General as provided for in resolution 906 (1994) of 25 March 1994.

Decision of 16 June 1994: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

On 3 May 1994, pursuant to resolution 906 (1994), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia,⁸⁸ in which he reported on the negotiations that were held on the repatriation of refugees and displaced persons, the possible establishment of a peacekeeping force, and the achievement of a comprehensive political settlement, following the signing of the declaration⁸⁹ and the refugee agreement on 4 April.⁹⁰ He observed that those three areas had to be considered as a whole. Obviously, success in the political field could come only at the end of the process and was linked to the beginning of the return of the refugees as well as to the deployment of international peacekeepers. That was why the question of determining whether the “substantive progress” that was sought by the Council had been achieved was a question of interpretation. Given the intensity of the conflict and the high level of suspicion and mistrust that existed between the parties, it was the Secretary-General’s view that progress was being made as quickly as reasonably practicable. While planning for repatriation of refugees and displaced persons was proceeding, it had become clear that the large-scale return of those persons would not take place until an international military presence was deployed in those parts of Abkhazia to which the refugees and displaced persons would be returning. The Secretary-General had hoped to be in a position to recommend to the Council that it decide now to establish a United Nations peacekeeping force and to authorize its deployment with the greatest possible speed. But the reservations raised by the Abkhaz side and the absence of acceptance by both sides of the United Nations proposals for the mandate and deployment of a United Nations peacekeeping force had made it impossible for him to submit such recommendation. In that context, he recalled that the Russian Federation had indicated its readiness to deploy an advance contingent of a United Nations force, should the Council decide to establish one. In those circumstances, he proposed that the Council either decide to establish such a force but not yet deploy it; authorize deployment of a non-United Nations peacekeeping force by the Russian Federation and other members of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS); or postpone a decision until further efforts were made to persuade the parties to agree on the mandate and deployment of a United Nations force.

In an addendum to his report dated 16 June,⁹¹ the Secretary-General recalled that in a letter dated 17 May 1994⁹² the representative of Georgia had transmitted a copy of the Agreement on a Ceasefire and Separation of Forces, signed in Moscow on 14 May by the parties to the conflict. In that Agreement, the parties had agreed that a CIS peacekeeping force would be deployed to monitor compliance with the Agreement. The parties had also appealed to the United Nations Security Council to “expand the mandate of the United Nations military observers in order to provide for their participation in the operations” envisaged under the Agreement. The Secretary-General further informed the Council of a series of discussions held with the Russian Federation to clarify the role of the United Nations observers and their relationship with the CIS peacekeeping force envisaged in the Agreement. He intended to examine further, in consultation with the parties and the Russian Federation, expansion of the mandate and size of UNOMIG, with a view to its undertaking certain tasks independently but in close coordination with the CIS peacekeeping force. He proposed that the strength of UNOMIG might be of the order of 150 military observers. Its mandate would be to monitor the implementation of the Agreement and observe the operation of the CIS peacekeeping force; to investigate violations of the Agreement and to attempt to resolve such incidents with the parties involved; to maintain close contacts with both sides to the conflict, the CIS peacekeeping force and any other military contingents of the Russian Federation and, by its presence, to ensure conditions conducive to the safe and orderly return of refugees and displaced persons; and to report to the Secretary-General on the implementation of that mandate.⁹³ Subject to the Council’s views, he would, as a first step, increase the number of UNOMIG military observers to 55, as authorized by the Council in resolution 892 (1993).

In a letter dated 16 June 1994, the President of the Security Council (Oman) informed the Secretary-General as follows:⁹⁴

The members of the Security Council have considered your report on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia. They have noted that discussions were held in New York between the Secretariat and a delegation from the Russian Federation concerning the possible role of United Nations military observers and their relationship with the Commonwealth of Independent States peacekeeping force envisaged in the Agreement on a Ceasefire and Separation of Forces signed by the parties in Moscow on 14 May 1994.

The members of the Council regard these discussions as a positive step. The members of the Council also note your intention, as a first step and in consultation with the parties, to increase the number of military observers of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia up to fifty-five as authorized by the Council in its resolution 892 (1993) of 22 December 1993. The members of the Council note your ideas for a possible mandate for an expanded Mission, set out in paragraph 7 of your report, and your provisional assessment of the strength of the Mission that might be required to perform this task.

The members of the Council, noting again the conclusions of the ministerial meeting of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, held at Rome on 30 November and 1 December 1993, also welcome the continuing cooperation between the United Nations and the Conference in this matter.

The members of the Council would be grateful if the Secretariat could pursue its discussions with the parties, the Russian Federation and representatives of the Commonwealth of Independent States peacekeeping force in order to arrive at clear understandings on particular points of relevance to the Council's decision on a further increase in the strength and change in the mandate of the Mission, including the arrangements which would exist on the ground for coordination between the Mission and the Commonwealth of Independent States peacekeeping force; the period to be set for the mandate of the Commonwealth of Independent States peacekeeping force; assurances from the parties concerned of full freedom of movement for the Mission in the performance of its mandate, both within the zone of operations of the Commonwealth of Independent States peacekeeping force and in other relevant parts of the territory of Georgia; and the time-frame foreseen for the return of refugees and displaced persons.

On this basis, and following the further urgent consultations that you propose with the parties and the Russian Federation, the members of the Council stand ready to consider your detailed recommendations on the expansion of the Mission along the lines of the ideas set out in paragraph 7 of your report.

Decision of 30 June 1994 (3398th meeting):
resolution 934 (1994)

On 16 June 1994, pursuant to resolution 906 (1994), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia,⁹⁵ in which he informed the Council of continuing urgent consultations with the parties and the Russian Federation regarding the future mandate and deployment of the expanded UNOMIG, as well as the conditions and assurances of cooperation needed for an effective implementation of that mandate. He also informed the Council that a further round of negotiations convened by his Special Envoy took place in Moscow in May during which both parties to the conflict signed a Proposal for the Establishment of a Coordinating Commission to discuss practical matters of mutual interest. The Secretary-General noted that the Coordinating Commission held its first meeting at Sochi, Russian Federation, on 1 June under the chairmanship of the Russian Federation and that the next round of political negotiations was scheduled to take place in Geneva on 30 June and 1 July 1994. Under those circumstances, the Secretary-General recommended that the Council extend the existing mandate of UNOMIG at its current authorized strength until 31 July 1994.

At its 3398th meeting, on 30 June 1994, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.⁹⁶ He also drew their attention to a letter dated 21 June 1994 addressed to the Secretary-General from the representative of the Russian Federation,⁹⁷ transmitting a letter of the same date from the Minister for Foreign Affairs, informing him of the decision of CIS, acting on the basis of the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter, to introduce a collective peacekeeping force into the conflict zone for a period of six months, with an advance contingent of Russian troops present in Abkhazia being deployed immediately. The Security Council would always be kept fully informed of the size of such forces and of their activities, in accordance with Article 54 of the Charter. The letter specified that CIS was anxious not to supplant the United Nations, but to help create the most favourable conditions for the efforts of the United Nations. It was therefore essential to establish from the very outset close cooperation between the peacekeeping force and UNOMIG. In this respect, it was hoped that the Council would decide to enlarge the staff of the Mission and expand and refine its mandate.

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 934 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 849 (1993) of 9 July 1993, 854 (1993) of 6 August 1993, 858 (1993) of 24 August 1993, 876 (1993) of 19 October 1993, 881 (1993) of 4 November 1993, 892 (1993) of 22 December 1993, 896 (1994) of 31 January 1994, 901 (1994) of 4 March 1994 and 906 (1994) of 25 March 1994,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 16 June 1994,

Recalling the letter dated 16 June 1994 from the President of the Security Council to the Secretary-General,

Noting the letter dated 21 June 1994 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Russian Federation to the Secretary-General,

Noting that talks between the parties on a comprehensive political settlement will resume shortly, and urging the parties to achieve substantive progress towards a political settlement consistent with the principles set out in its previous resolutions, ⁹⁶ S/1994/781.

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 16 June 1994;

2. Notes with satisfaction the beginning of Commonwealth of Independent States assistance in the zone of conflict, in response to the request of the parties, on the basis of the 14 May 1994 Agreement on a Ceasefire and Separation of Forces, in continued coordination with the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia, and on the basis of further coordinating arrangements with the Mission to be agreed upon by the time of the Council's consideration of the Secretary-General's recommendations on the expansion of the Mission;

3. Decides to extend until 21 July 1994 the existing mandate of the Mission at its current authorized strength, within which period the further expansion of the Mission as recommended in the report of the Secretary-General of 6 June 1994 will be addressed;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in the light of the letter dated 16 June 1994 from the President of the Security Council, to report to the Council on the outcome of discussions between the Mission, the parties and the Commonwealth of Independent States peacekeeping force designed to reach an agreement on the arrangements which would exist on the ground for coordination between an expanded Mission and the Commonwealth of Independent States peacekeeping force;

5. Reaffirms its readiness to consider detailed recommendations on the expansion of the Mission along the lines of the ideas set out in paragraph 7 of the report of the Secretary-General;

6. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of France stated that it was necessary that, together with the deployment of the CIS force requested by the parties to maintain the ceasefire and to facilitate the return of refugees and displaced persons, a new mandate be rapidly entrusted to UNOMIG to verify all aspects of the implementation of the agreement of 14 May 1994. The Council, however, would not be able to adopt a resolution to that effect until the Mission and the CIS force had concluded the necessary arrangements concerning the coordination of their activities and until the parties had given the assurances that would guarantee full freedom of movement.⁹⁸

The representative of the Russian Federation attached great importance to the fact that the resolution focused on the cooperation between UNOMIG and the CIS peacemaking forces in the conflict zone. He stressed that Georgia, the Russian Federation and the other CIS States were forced into deploying a peacemaking operation in the Abkhaz conflict zone because of the dangerous way in which the situation was developing, and because of the lack of a positive response to numerous requests for the urgent dispatch to the conflict zone of a United Nations peacekeeping force. The Council must not delay adopting a "substantive" resolution on that item. Expressing dissatisfaction at the level of support and understanding from Council members for the peacemaking operation in Abkhazia, he stated that there should be no room in the Council for a double standard in approaching peacemaking operations. The Council was expected to provide no less genuine support for efforts to maintain peace in the Georgian-Abkhaz conflict zone than it did with regard to conflicts elsewhere.⁹⁹

According to the representative of the Czech Republic, resolution 934 (1994) was a purely technical one and, as such, should have contained only provisions relating to the extension of the mandate of UNOMIG and references to technical aspects of that Mission. The new element introduced in that resolution ran counter to the general understanding in the Council that it would be in a position to consider and pass judgement on the peacekeeping operation of CIS in Abkhazia only after it had received, and deliberated upon, the Secretary-General's substantive report on UNOMIG, which should address, inter alia, the vital issue of coordination and cooperation between UNOMIG and the CIS peacekeeping force. His delegation did not share the view that the Council could, without due consideration and almost automatically, endorse a peacekeeping operation without having all the facts available to it. Nor did it agree with the notion that different peacekeeping missions could be compared or that there existed an automatic linkage between them. Each peacekeeping operation or mission was unique and had its own specifics. Only after having carefully examined and considered all aspects, both technical and political, could Council members reach a definitive and responsible opinion on the form and substance of the Council's reaction. He concluded by reiterating his delegation's strong preference for a classic United Nations peacekeeping operation in Abkhazia, and its concern at the fact that many aspects of the CIS peacekeeping operation, including coordination and interaction with UNOMIG, had remained unclear and hazy.¹⁰⁰

Decision of 21 July 1994 (3407th meeting):
resolution 937 (1994)

On 12 July 1994, pursuant to the letter dated 16 June 1994 from the President of the Council and resolution 934 (1994), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia,¹⁰¹ in which he reported that the situation on the ground had improved with the arrival of the CIS peacekeeping force but remained tense in the Kodori valley. There were unconfirmed reports that both sides had completed the withdrawal of troops and heavy military equipment from their respective side of the security zone under the supervision of the CIS peacekeeping force, in accordance with the 14 May Agreement. While some spontaneous return of refugees and displaced persons reportedly continued, preparations were under way to start a programme of voluntary return under the lead of UNHCR, as agreed by the parties. With regard to political aspects, the Secretary-General indicated that he would inform in due course the Council on the outcome of a round of negotiations held at Sochi, Russian Federation, in July. Regarding the ongoing consultations with both parties, the Russian Federation and the CIS peacekeeping force, in order to reach clear understandings on specific points relevant to the Council's decision to amend the UNOMIG mandate and increase its strength, the Secretary-General stated that he was now in a position to propose to the Council the tasks which an expanded UNOMIG of 136 military personnel would undertake.¹⁰² Should the Council agree with the mandate and the concept of operations, he would recommend that UNOMIG also be authorized for a period of six months. He intended to send a letter to the President of the Council of the CIS defining the respective roles and responsibilities of UNOMIG and the CIS peacekeeping force.

At its 3407th meeting, on 21 July 1994, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Germany, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Pakistan) then drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by France, Germany, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States.¹⁰³

Speaking before the vote, the representative of the United States observed that, for the first time, the members of the Council had established a relationship between a United Nations observer mission and a peacekeeping force within a sovereign State of the former Soviet Union. She noted, inter alia, that the draft resolution provided a detailed framework for the operation of UNOMIG and set out the Council's expectations for UNOMIG's relationship to the CIS peacekeeping force. However, the draft resolution was not a blank check. UNOMIG had a six-month mandate, the renewal of which would be subject to review by the Council. She noted also that the draft resolution allowed for the possibility for more extensive United Nations involvement in the process in Georgia, should circumstances warrant.¹⁰⁴

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted by 14 votes to none¹⁰⁵ as resolution 937 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 849 (1993) of 9 July 1993, 854 (1993) of 6 August 1993, 858 (1993) of 24 August 1993, 876 (1993) of 19 October 1993, 881 (1993) of 4 November 1993, 892 (1993) of 22 December 1993, 896 (1994) of 31 January 1994, 906 (1994) of 25 March 1994 and 934 (1994) of 30 June 1994,

Recalling the letter dated 16 June 1994 from the President of the Security Council to the Secretary-General,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 12 July 1994,

Reaffirming its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Georgia and the right of all refugees and displaced persons affected by the conflict to return to their homes in secure conditions, in accordance with international law and as set out in the Quadripartite Agreement on Voluntary Return of Refugees and Displaced Persons signed in Moscow on 4 April 1994,

Recognizing the importance of consistent and full compliance with the Declaration on Measures for a Political Settlement of the Georgian/Abkhaz Conflict and the Quadripartite Agreement,

Stressing the crucial importance of progress in the negotiations under the auspices of the United Nations and with the assistance of the Russian Federation as facilitator and with the participation of representatives of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe to reach a comprehensive political settlement of the conflict, including on the political status of Abkhazia, respecting fully the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Georgia, based on the principles set out in its previous resolutions,

Stressing also that this progress would allow the Council to reconsider the possible establishment of a peacekeeping force in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia, as proposed in the letter dated 7 September 1993 from the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Georgia and the Russian Federation to the Secretary-General,

Stressing further the need to prevent any resumption of hostilities in the area,

Deeply concerned about the humanitarian situation and the dangers which could arise within the region if the large numbers of refugees and displaced persons are not able to return to their homes in secure conditions,

Taking note of the address of the Head of State of the Republic of Georgia of 16 May 1994, and that of the Chairman of the Supreme Soviet of Abkhazia of 15 May 1994, to the Council of Heads of State of the Commonwealth of Independent States, and recognizing that the deployment of a Commonwealth of Independent States peacekeeping force to the area is predicated upon the request and consent of the parties to the conflict,

Noting the statements in the letter dated 21 June 1994 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Russian Federation to the Secretary-General concerning the mandate of the Commonwealth of Independent States peacekeeping force and its duration,

Noting with satisfaction the readiness of the Russian Federation to continue to inform the members of the Security Council of the activities of the Commonwealth of Independent States peacekeeping force,

Welcoming the closer cooperation and coordination envisaged between the Secretary-General and the Chairman-in-Office of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, in particular as regards their efforts to achieve a comprehensive political settlement in the Republic of Georgia,

Underlining the importance of the relevant provisions of the documents of the Helsinki Summit of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe of 1992 and of the Conference's ministerial meeting held at Rome on 30 November and 1 December 1993, including those concerning peacekeeping activities in the area covered by the Conference,

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to report within three months of the adoption of the present resolution on the situation in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia, and on the implementation of all aspects of the above-mentioned agreements;

13. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of France stressed the importance of resolution 937 (1994), which for the first time established cooperation between the United Nations and a regional stabilization operation in CIS. His delegation welcomed the fact that the Council had taken into account the specific nature and the innovative context of the peacekeeping operations of the CIS member States and of UNOMIG in the conflict zone. The two operations, although separate, had the same goal, namely the implementation of the 14 May agreement. There was a need, therefore, to find a balance between the autonomous action of the CIS peacekeeping force and that of a United Nations mission with a mandate from the Council. In those circumstances, it was important to recall the essential nature of the relevant provisions of the Helsinki documents of CSCE,¹⁰⁶ and of its ministerial meeting in Rome,¹⁰⁷ which laid down the framework for action by the peacekeeping force. It was also important to give UNOMIG the mandate to observe the action of the CIS peacekeeping force — a requirement that became legitimate once the United Nations was requested to participate in the 14 May Agreement. His delegation further welcomed the fact that the Russian Federation had sought the support of the Council for a regional stabilization operation in

CIS and that that operation thus became a part of the political process that was under United Nations auspices. This positive development emphasized the regulatory functions that the Security Council had shouldered for peacekeeping activities carried out by Powers or by regional forums.¹⁰⁸

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that the new mandate of UNOMIG gave it broad capabilities to effectively promote the stabilization of the situation in the region of conflict. The Russian Federation attached particular significance to the provision concerning cooperation with the CIS peacekeeping forces. It believed that the closest interaction between the CIS peacekeeping force and UNOMIG was the most important condition for the successful attainment of their parallel objectives. He reaffirmed his country's readiness to use all means available to ensure the effectiveness and safety of UNOMIG activities. Finally, the Russian Federation attached great significance to the resolution's provisions reflecting the intrinsic link between peacekeeping activities in the region and efforts to achieve a comprehensive political settlement and a solution to the problem of refugees and displaced persons.¹⁰⁹

The representative of New Zealand stated that his country had supported the resolution, but not without some reservations. It had voted in favour of it because the resolution ensured an expanded United Nations presence in Georgia. However, there was more than that in the resolution. According to the speaker, the presence of two peacekeeping operations in one country made it imperative that the relationship between those two forces be clearly set out and well understood by all involved at all levels. Resolution 937 (1994) addressed a number of elements relevant to such a situation. The first element was consistency between the concepts of operation of the two forces. In that regard, both operations were in Georgia with the consent of the parties, and their mandates were complementary, so there was an acceptable level of consistency. Secondly, the question of conformity with peacekeeping principles. In that respect, the resolution welcomed the fact that the CIS force would act in accordance with the established principles and practices of the United Nations, including those relating to peacekeeping. The speaker recalled, in that regard, that the Council itself had approved a number of operational principles for peacekeeping, many of which would be applicable to non-United Nations forces which might be involved in peacekeeping. Thirdly, the need to establish satisfactory arrangements for interaction between the forces, as requested by the resolution. And fourthly, the question of communication at all levels of the chain of command, as set forth in the Secretary-General's report. Furthermore, it was important for all peacekeeping operations, given the political climate in which they necessarily operated, that the parties to a conflict were in no doubt as to what the United Nations operation was doing and what it was not doing. In that respect, the resolution set out the mandate of the expanded force with clarity and precision. At the same time, the speaker stressed a number of reservations regarding resolution 937 (1994). His delegation did not believe that it was a good precedent for a neighbouring State to play such a dominant role in such a force. Any operation which called itself a peacekeeping force should be conducted strictly in accordance with United Nations peacekeeping principles. If it did not accept in a transparent way such an operational framework, then it was appropriate for the international community to proceed with caution. For those reasons, his delegation did not agree that that operation set a good precedent. To the contrary, it was a precedent about which the international community should take care in the future.¹¹⁰

The representative of Brazil said that the members of the Council could not lose sight of the broader issue concerning the future of peacekeeping operations, in particular with regard to the question of the role played by regional arrangements and by individual countries with a direct interest in a given crisis. Resolution 937 (1994) represented an important departure from the original mandate of UNOMIG, as it envisaged a United Nations operation acting in parallel with, and observing, the operation of another entity. He noted that the deployment of the CIS peacekeeping force was predicated upon the request and consent of the parties to the conflict and that they wished the United Nations to continue to be actively involved in the pursuit of a political settlement. He further underlined the need to avoid situations which might put in jeopardy the very concept of a multilateral peacekeeping force. The particular configuration of two concomitant operations contemplated in the resolution had received Brazil's support on the understanding that the CIS peacekeeping force would operate in accordance with the relevant established principles and practices of the United Nations in the field of peacekeeping operations, in particular: respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity; impartiality; commitment of the parties to a comprehensive political settlement; and a clearly defined mandate, concept of operations and winding-up process.¹¹¹

¹¹⁰ Ibid., pp. 6-7.

The representative of the Czech Republic contended that by adopting resolution 937 (1994) the Council had entered uncharted waters. For the first time, it was faced with a situation in which a State with openly declared national interests in the region was undertaking a peacekeeping operation in a neighbouring country. In that regard, he stressed that no peacekeeping operations were identical and that each had its unique settings and features. Therefore, he did not regard the adopted resolution as one setting a precedent. Noting that the CIS peacekeeping operation was taking place on the territory of a State member of CSCE and that the operation itself was being conducted by CSCE member States, he strongly advocated that the operation should be guided by the principles reflected in the decisions of the CSCE Council meeting held in Rome on 30 November and 1 December 1993. While keeping in mind the merit of such an operation, it was important that the Council leave the door open for consideration, at an appropriate point, of the establishment of a United Nations peacekeeping operation. Also of paramount importance was the establishment of the highest possible level of cooperation, interaction and coordination between UNOMIG and the CIS peacekeeping force. Only the full implementation of the UNOMIG mandate would create favourable conditions for the effective fulfilment of peacekeeping activities in Georgia.¹¹²

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that in many ways resolution 937 (1994) and the arrangements set out in it broke new ground. That approach came against the background of increasing demands on United Nations peacekeeping capabilities, demands which threatened to outstrip supply. It represented a response to a situation which was of grave concern to all, but in which the conditions allowing for the deployment of a United Nations peacekeeping operation did not exist. It also reflected the importance which all attached to various standards on the basis of which international peacekeeping efforts should take place. In that respect, his delegation welcomed the recognition in the resolution of the relevance of the Rome 1993 CSCE ministerial decisions on such principles.¹¹³

The representative of Nigeria did not see resolution 937 (1994) as groundbreaking in terms of concept. With the demands for United Nations collective peacekeeping outstripping its ability and resources, it had already become clear and imperative that regional organizations and/or arrangements had to step in. His delegation could not but advert to the desirability of promoting cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in the maintenance of regional peace and security. He also noted also that the Council had not ruled out the option of deploying a full-fledged United Nations peacekeeping operation once a final political settlement was achieved.¹¹⁴

The President, speaking in his capacity as the representative of Pakistan, stated that his delegation would have preferred that any peacekeeping operation in Georgia be organized by the United Nations and that it be under United Nations command. Pakistan was concerned over an emerging tendency to attribute peacekeeping roles to the countries of the region, or those closest to the conflict, especially when such countries had direct political interests in the area of conflict. The States Members of the United Nations should in no way abrogate their Charter responsibilities in such a manner. Neither should the financial difficulties faced by the United Nations be allowed to impinge on the Organization's obligations to uphold international peace and security. Moreover, his delegation did not favour the practice of post-facto endorsement by the Council of a regional peacekeeping operation which was outside the purview of the United Nations.¹¹⁵

Decision of 2 December 1994 (3476th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3476th meeting, on 2 December 1994, the Security Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Rwanda) stated that, following consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹¹⁶

The Security Council has received with deep concern a report from the Secretariat concerning a statement of 26 November 1994 attributed to the Supreme Soviet of Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia. It believes that any unilateral act purporting to establish a sovereign Abkhaz entity would violate the commitments assumed by the Abkhaz side to seek a comprehensive political settlement of the Georgian-Abkz conflict. The Council reaffirms its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Georgia.

The Council calls upon all parties, in particular the Abkhaz side, to reach substantive progress in the negotiations under the auspices of the United Nations and with the assistance of the Russian Federation as facilitator and with the participation of representatives of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe aimed at achieving a comprehensive political settlement of the conflict, including on the political status of Abkhazia, respecting fully the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Georgia, based on the principles set out in all the relevant resolutions of the Council.

The Council reaffirms the right of all refugees and displaced persons affected by the conflict to return to their homes in secure conditions in accordance with international law and as set out in the Quadripartite Agreement on Voluntary Return of Refugees and Displaced Persons, signed in Moscow on 4 April 1994. In this regard it expresses great concern at the continued obstruction of the return of refugees and displaced persons and calls upon the Abkhaz party to take all necessary measures, in cooperation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to ensure a speedy and organized voluntary return of the refugees and displaced persons.

Decision of 12 January 1995 (3488th meeting):

On 6 January 1995, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Abkhazia.¹¹⁷ The Secretary-General described the political progress as being at a standstill. Moreover, there had been few substantive results since negotiations for a comprehensive settlement had begun just a year ago. The core question of the Georgian/Abkhaz conflict, namely the identification of a political status for Abkhazia acceptable to both sides, remained far from being resolved. However, the Secretary-General stated that he remained convinced that negotiations between the two sides were the only way that that complex issue could be satisfactorily resolved. The present situation prevented a successful resolution of the humanitarian problems of the refugees and displaced persons. He described the situation on the ground as “generally stable but tense” and noted that the parties continued to comply with the agreement of 14 May 1994. He recommended that the UNOMIG mandate be extended until 15 May 1995, to coincide with the mandate of the CIS peacekeeping force. In an addendum dated 10 January 1995,¹¹⁸ the Secretary-General informed the Council that he had received a letter from the Chairman of the CIS Council of Heads of State confirming his agreement with the Secretary-General’s proposals regarding the respective roles and responsibilities of UNOMIG and the CIS peacekeeping force concerning the 14 May agreement.

At its 3488th meeting, on 12 January 1995, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Georgia, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Argentina) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council’s prior consultations.¹¹⁹

The representative of Georgia contended that since the negotiations opened a year ago in Geneva, no arrangements had been made for the return of the more than 250,000 refugees and displaced persons to their homes and that the Abkhaz side was doing its utmost to prevent such a return. The current plight of refugees, who were scattered throughout Georgia, was affecting Georgia’s already devastated economy. He further recalled the statement made by the Head of State of Georgia before the forty-ninth session of the General Assembly, in which he had warned against the danger of aggressive separatism under the guise of the ideals of self-determination and urged the international community to take all necessary measures to keep at bay this new trend which ran counter to the purposes and principles of the United Nations. He had also warned that nowhere else as in Georgia was the danger so great that existing internal conflicts would merge with the ones in neighbouring States and grow into regional or even continental wars fought along national or religious lines. Under the circumstances, the Government of Georgia would welcome a decision by the Council to extend the mandate of UNOMIG.¹²⁰

Speaking before the vote, the representative of the Czech Republic stated that the humanitarian situation resulting from the conflict had always been the primary preoccupation of his country in that issue. In that context, his delegation was horrified by the complete lack of progress on the repatriation of one quarter of a million refugees and displaced persons. It was particularly chagrined that the draft resolution made no reference to a repatriation timetable, nor did it propose any other measures on the need to bring refugees and displaced persons back to their villages and fields. He also stressed the need for “richer reporting” on the operations of the CIS peacekeeping force. His delegation believed that it would be very advantageous for the content of the Russian delegation’s briefings to Council members in informal consultations to find its way into official documents of the Council, for the benefit both of greater transparency of the CIS peacekeeping operations and of fuller information for United Nations Members. He noted that no new ground would be broken in doing so since the United States delegation, for example, regularly provided comparable briefings on Haiti which were publicly available as part of the official record.¹²¹

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 971 (1995), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 849 (1993) of 9 July 1993, 854 (1993) of 6 August 1993, 858 (1993) of 24 August 1993, 876 (1993) of 19 October 1993, 881 (1993) of 4 November 1993, 892 (1993) of 22 December 1993, 896 (1994) of 31 January 1994, 906 (1994) of 25 March 1994, 934 (1994) of 30 June 1994 and 937 (1994) of 21 July 1994,

Reaffirming its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Georgia, and, in this context, recalling the statement by the President of the Security Council of 2 December 1994,

Reaffirming the right of all refugees and displaced persons affected by the conflict to return to their homes in secure conditions in accordance with international law and as set out in the Quadripartite Agreement on Voluntary Return of Refugees and Displaced Persons, signed in Moscow on 4 April 1994,

Urging the parties to refrain from any unilateral actions that could complicate or hinder the political process aimed at an early and comprehensive settlement of the conflict,

Deeply concerned about the lack of progress regarding a comprehensive political settlement as well as the slow pace of return of refugees and displaced persons,

Calling upon the parties to intensify efforts, under the auspices of the United Nations and with the assistance of the Russian Federation as facilitator and the participation of representatives of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, to achieve an early and comprehensive political settlement of the conflict, including on the political status of Abkhazia, fully respecting the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Georgia,

Expressing its satisfaction with the close cooperation and coordination between the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia and the Commonwealth of Independent States peacekeeping force in the performance of their respective mandates, Commending the contribution of the peacekeeping force and of the Mission to the maintenance of a ceasefire and to the stabilization of the situation in the zone of the Georgian-Abkhaz conflict,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 6 January 1995;

2. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia, as set out in resolution 937 (1994), for an additional period terminating on 15 May 1995;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report within two months of the adoption of the present resolution on all aspects of the situation in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia;

4. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue his efforts aimed at achieving a comprehensive political settlement of the conflict, including on the political status of Abkhazia, respecting fully the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Georgia, and calls upon the parties to reach substantive progress in the negotiations under the auspices of the United Nations and with the assistance of the Russian Federation as facilitator and the participation of representatives of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe;

5. Calls upon the parties to comply with their commitments with regard to the return of refugees and displaced persons, as undertaken in the Quadripartite Agreement on Voluntary Return of Refugees and Displaced Persons, and in particular calls upon the Abkhaz side to accelerate the process significantly;

6. Decides to undertake, on the basis of a report from the Secretary-General to be submitted by 4 May 1995 and in the light of any progress achieved towards a political settlement and the return of refugees and displaced persons, a thorough review of the situation in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to examine, within the existing mandate of the Mission, in cooperation with the relevant representatives of the Commonwealth of Independent States peacekeeping force, the possibility of additional steps to contribute to conditions conducive to the safe and orderly return of refugees and displaced persons;

8. Reiterates its encouragement to Member States to contribute to the voluntary fund in support of the implementation of the Agreement on a Ceasefire and Separation of Forces signed in Moscow on 14 May 1994 and/or for humanitarian aspects including demining, as specified by the donors;

9. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

After the vote, the representatives of France and the United Kingdom stated that the Security Council was committed to securing a political settlement to the Georgian-Abkhaz conflict while respecting the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia.¹²² The representative of the United Kingdom pointed out that it was contradictory that the Abkhaz authorities had declared Abkhazia to be a sovereign State while at the same time claiming to be ready to negotiate a political settlement in accordance with the Council's past decisions. That contradiction had to be resolved in a manner that respected Georgia's sovereignty and territorial integrity.¹²³

The representative of Germany noted that the mandate of UNOMIG was special in that it was built upon close cooperation with the CIS peacekeeping force in the area. Its presence in the area, however, was predicated upon a viable political process. His delegation believed that all possibilities under the existing mandates of UNOMIG and the CIS peacekeeping force should be examined in order to improve the situation on the ground. In that regard operative paragraph 7 of the resolution was of particular importance. He noted with satisfaction the willingness expressed by the Russian Federation to brief the Council more frequently on the operation of the CIS peacekeeping force in the area, stressing that greater transparency could only be helpful in achieving common goals.¹²⁴

The representative of the Russian Federation considered it important that the Council confirmed its commitment to upholding the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia and the right of all refugees and displaced persons to return home, and that it called upon the parties to refrain from any actions which might hinder or complicate the peace process. He noted the request made by the Council in the resolution to the Secretary-General to examine, in cooperation with the CIS peacekeeping force, the possibility of adopting additional steps to contribute to conditions conducive to the safe return of refugees. He also noted the satisfaction expressed by the Council with the close cooperation between the CIS peacekeeping force and UNOMIG and confirmed his country's readiness to continue to cooperate closely with the Mission. He expected that, in the course of the upcoming review of the situation to be undertaken by the Council and on the basis of a report by the Secretary-General, substantive consideration would be given to the gradual transformation of the current peacekeeping operation into a United Nations operation based initially on the already deployed CIS and UNOMIG forces in the area.¹²⁵

The representative of the United States stated that the message of the renewal resolution was clear: it was time for the parties to return to the table and to achieve real progress toward a political settlement and the return of refugees and displaced persons in secure and safe conditions. Referring to the upcoming review by the Council on the future of UNOMIG, the representative of the United States stated that his country would look closely and seriously at the entire situation to determine whether continuation of the Mission was justified. However, recent history did not paint an optimistic picture. The Abkhaz party bore a strong burden of responsibility for the absence of progress. By declaring themselves a foreign nation, Abkhaz leaders had violated their commitment to reaching a mutually acceptable agreement with the Government of Georgia.¹²⁶

¹²⁵ Ibid., pp. 6-7.

According to the representative of Italy, the renewal of the mandate of UNOMIG was an occasion to recognize the validity of the formula identified in resolution 937 (1994) concerning the coordination and cooperation between UNOMIG and the CIS peacekeeping force. Also, the Georgian crisis had provided proof of the cooperation that had developed between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE). Confirmed in resolution 971 (1995) was the fundamental concept of strong support for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia within its internationally recognized borders; concern about unilateral acts that undermined the efforts to promote a peaceful settlement through negotiation; as well as concern about and condemnation of “ethnic cleansing” and the massive expulsion of people from the areas in which they lived. On the basis of those shared principles, a regional organization such as OSCE could continue to make a significant contribution to the United Nations efforts towards a final settlement of the crisis, especially in identifying neo-institutional arrangements.¹²⁷

Decision of 17 March 1995 (3509th meeting):
statement by the President

On 6 March 1995, pursuant to resolution 971 (1995), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Abkhazia.¹²⁸ The Secretary-General reported that there had been some movement, albeit not extensive, on the political side. For the first time, there had been a productive dialogue between the two sides. Common language had been found on some of the many issues related to the identification of a political status for Abkhazia acceptable to both sides. They had reached an understanding on certain provisions of a future agreement concerning a State within the boundaries of the former Georgian Soviet Socialist Republic as at 21 December 1991, including the establishment of a “federal legislative organ” and a “supreme organ of executive power” acting within the bounds of agreed competences. Core areas of disagreement remained, however, including recognition of Georgia’s territorial integrity, characterization of the union State as federal in nature, the question of a joint army, and popular legitimisation of an agreement.

The Secretary-General further reported that the organized repatriation of refugees remained at a standstill. This situation was creating pressures which, if not eased, could result in explosive developments. He warned that continued lack of progress on that question was not only likely to derail the process of political negotiation but could also set in motion a chain of events that would lead to the resumption of a bitter war between the two sides. In spite of the generally unsatisfactory situation, the Secretary-General strongly believed that the presence of both UNOMIG and the CIS peacekeeping force in the region had contributed greatly to preventing a renewal of hostilities and paved the way for continued political negotiations.

At its 3509th meeting, on 17 March 1995, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (China) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a letter dated 13 March 1995 addressed to the President of the Council from the representative of Georgia.¹²⁹ The President then stated that, following consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹³⁰

The Security Council welcomes the interim report of the Secretary-General of 6 March 1995 concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia. The Council also welcomes the recent efforts of the Secretary-General’s Special Envoy, which enjoy the Council’s full support.

The Council reaffirms its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Georgia and calls upon the parties to achieve a comprehensive settlement of the conflict, including on the political status of Abkhazia.

The Council notes that there has been little overall progress in achieving a comprehensive political settlement and that a stalemate exists with respect to the return of refugees and displaced persons.

The Council notes the movement which has occurred in the political talks which resumed in Geneva from 7 to 9 February 1995 and calls upon the parties to exert determined efforts towards achieving substantive progress during the next round of talks.

The Council notes with concern that, despite the efforts of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia and the Commonwealth of Independent States peacekeeping force, the security situation, in the Gali region in particular, has deteriorated, causing great difficulty in the delivery of humanitarian supplies. The Council also notes with concern that reports of human rights abuses, largely against the Georgian population, have become more frequent. The Council calls upon the parties to provide a secure environment, inter alia, to provide security for returning refugees and displaced persons and to ensure that international relief supplies can be delivered safely.

The Council is deeply concerned about the lack of progress regarding the return of refugees and displaced persons. The Council deplores the continued obstruction on this issue displayed by the Abkhaz authorities and, in particular, the position taken by those authorities in the recent meeting of the Quadripartite Commission in Moscow. The Council expects the parties to implement fully their obligations under the Quadripartite Agreement on Voluntary Return of Refugees and Displaced Persons. The Council urges the Abkhaz authorities to agree to a timetable on the basis of that proposed by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. The Council notes that cooperation between the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees is critical to the safe and orderly return of refugees and displaced persons.

The Council, while welcoming the pledge that has been announced to the voluntary fund in support of the implementation of the Agreement on a Ceasefire and Separation of Forces, notes the lack of contributions to this fund and reiterates its encouragement to Member States to make contributions to the voluntary fund in support of the implementation of the Agreement and/or for humanitarian aspects, including demining, as specified by the donors. The Council also welcomes all other relevant humanitarian contributions of Member States.

The Council welcomes the steps taken by the Mission and the peacekeeping force aimed at improving conditions for the safe and orderly return of refugees and displaced persons. The Council notes the increased patrolling of the Mission and looks forward to further information on the intensification of its activities within its mandate. The Council also welcomes the strengthening of cooperation between the Mission and the representatives of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe in Georgia.

The Council agrees with the observation of the Secretary-General that, with patience and perseverance, solutions can be found to the situation in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia. The Council underlines the fact that without progress in this direction it will not be possible to maintain the support of the international community.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Decision of 12 May 1995 (3535th meeting):
resolution 993 (1995)

On 1 May 1995, pursuant to resolution 971 (1995), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Abkhazia.¹³¹ The Secretary-General reported that once again the constructive dialogue that seemed to be leading towards progress had encountered difficulties. The Russian Federation, as facilitator, had drafted a document providing for a solution on the basis of a federal state within the borders of Georgia as of 21 December 1991, with certain competences for Abkhazia. The document was rejected by the Abkhaz side while the Georgian side stressed that the text had gone as far as Georgia was prepared to go.

The situation on the ground was extremely unstable and the organized repatriation of refugees and displaced persons to Abkhazia remained at a standstill, as the Abkhaz side continued to object to the large-scale and speedy return of refugees and displaced.

The Secretary-General noted that UNOMIG had been able to implement the tasks assigned, but its presence had not had the intended effect of contributing substantially to the creation of conditions conducive to the safe and orderly return of refugees and internally displaced persons. Pointing out that the untimely withdrawal of the CIS peacekeeping force and UNOMIG would lead to the resumption of conflict, he recommended that the Mission's mandate be extended until 15 November 1995, subject to revision in the light of the decision on the mandate of the CIS peacekeeping force.

At its 3535th meeting, on 12 May 1995, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Georgia, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter and rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. The President (France) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations and read out a revision to be made to the draft resolution in its provisional form.¹³²

The representative of Georgia stated that his country's reliance on and confidence in the United Nations and the international community as a whole were showing signs of changing: the Security Council had already adopted 12 resolutions and 6 presidential statements on Abkhazia; while those documents gave moral support, they were less effective in terms of yielding tangible, practical results. In particular, he called on the Council to be more outspoken and clear on the issue of the return of refugees and displaced persons. His delegation would welcome the Security Council's broadening of the UNOMIG mandate, noting that in order to step up the process of repatriation, observers had to be charged with additional responsibilities, especially in monitoring and recording human rights violations. It would also welcome the establishment of an international criminal court, a permanent judicial body capable of addressing the most serious crimes posing a threat to the international community. In that regard, his delegation looked forward to concluding a convention on the establishment of such a body in the near future. He concluded by reaffirming that the United Nations presence in the region was essential to its stability and to the peace process as a whole.¹³³

Speaking before the vote, the representative of Italy noted that the conditions set out by resolution 917 (1995) for an extended presence of UNOMIG in Georgia had been only partially met. Nevertheless, his delegation believed that a strong commitment to a political settlement of the crisis should be confirmed at two different levels. First, there should be support for the negotiations under the auspices of the United Nations and with the contribution of the Russian Federation as a facilitator and of OSCE, which should participate in every stage of the negotiations. Secondly, there should be an active UNOMIG presence in the field and constructive collaboration between the Mission and the CIS peacekeeping force. Significant aspects of the process which were to lead to a political settlement were defined more clearly in the draft resolution than in previous decisions, including the mention of the new constitution on which the Government of Georgia was working; the priority given to the return of all refugees to their places of origin; the inclusion of the principles of the decision on Georgia taken at the Budapest summit of CSCE; and the emphasis on the UNOMIG operation to contribute, realistically and within the framework of its mandate, to the full respect for human rights.¹³⁴

The draft resolution, as orally revised in its provisional form, was then put to the vote and unanimously adopted as resolution 993 (1995), which reads:

13. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the Russian Federation reiterated that a comprehensive political settlement of the Georgian-Abkhaz conflict was possible only on the basis of respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia and for the rights of the multi-ethnic people of that country. The adoption of resolution 993 (1995), which contained some “weighty political provisions”, was confirmation of the international community’s commitment to ensuring such a political settlement, on the understanding that the main responsibility for finding a solution to the crisis lay with the parties themselves. The Russian Federation was seriously concerned at the minimal progress made in the negotiations, including those on the political status of Abkhazia, and found very timely the Council’s reaffirmation of its call for substantive progress in that regard. It was important that the Council had welcomed and supported the continuing consultations on the question of a new constitution for Georgia, based on federative principles, within the context of a comprehensive political settlement. The speaker noted that the resolution expressed great appreciation for the contribution of UNOMIG and the CIS peacekeeping force in stabilizing the situation in the zone of conflict and satisfaction at the close cooperation between the two entities. As representative of the country presiding over CIS, he reaffirmed its readiness to develop this cooperation further in the interests of ensuring the optimal conditions for a political settlement.¹³⁵

The representative of the United States, while noting that the extension of the UNOMIG mandate had been approached with an unusually high degree of consensus, stressed that the Mission would remain only as long as the Council was satisfied that the parties were doing their utmost to protect UNOMIG personnel. He noted with encouragement the positive role UNOMIG and the CIS peacekeeping force were playing and the effective coordination of those two separate missions. At the same time, he warned the parties that the willingness of the Council to continue its support of the existing processes through the presence of UNOMIG depended on real progress on the return of refugees and displaced persons and on negotiations towards a political settlement of the conflict. His Government's support for extending UNOMIG for a longer period than usual did not mean a greater satisfaction with the situation on the ground or with the negotiating process, nor did it predict infinite willingness to extend UNOMIG if its presence was not contributing to progress toward a settlement. Rather, the Council would be in a better position in mid-January 1996 to make a decision on the future of UNOMIG, in the light of the disposition of the CIS operation. The speaker concluded by expressing his concern that the UNOMIG operations be recognized as fully supportive of Georgia's territorial integrity, which the Council had repeatedly reaffirmed. While the Abkhaz might have de facto control over a part of the Republic of Georgia, they did not have the rights of a sovereign State. The ability of UNOMIG must be consistent with the position of the Council that it did not and would not accept Abkhaz independence.¹³⁶

The representative of the Czech Republic requested the Secretary-General to look into possibilities that might be available for improving the observance of human rights in the region in general. He further underscored that the reference in resolution 993 (1995) to the 1994 CSCE Budapest summit declaration was intended to address specifically the issue of "ethnic cleansing" in Abkhazia. He also welcomed the fact that a solution to the conflict was being sought on the basis of Georgia's territorial integrity and that consultations regarding a new constitution for the country were based on federal principles. Finally, while expressing satisfaction at the contribution of and cooperation between UNOMIG and the CIS peacekeeping force, he also called on the Russian delegation to provide information on the CIS operation more frequently and in writing.¹³⁷

Other speakers also expressed support to efforts made by the Secretary-General and his Special Representative with the assistance of the Russian Federation and the participation of OSCE in the search for a peaceful settlement of the conflict.¹³⁸ Some of them saw the combined international and regional efforts as a true reflection of the call contained in the Charter for cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations¹³⁹ and observed that such cooperation augured well for peacemaking and conflict resolution in the post-cold war era.¹⁴⁰ Others were also in favour of the consideration by the Security Council of the human rights situation on the ground, suggesting the inclusion of civilian observers in UNOMIG¹⁴¹ or supporting Georgia's proposal to establish an international tribunal to bring persons guilty of human rights violations in Abkhazia to justice.¹⁴²

Decision of 18 August 1995 (3567th meeting):
statement by the President

On 7 August 1995, pursuant to resolution 993 (1995), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Abkhazia.¹⁴³ The Secretary-General reported that his Special Envoy had visited the region from 15 to 18 July to meet with representatives of the Russian Federation and the parties to the conflict in a further effort to find an agreement on a Russian draft text. Both parties to the conflict continued to take positions that could not, as yet, be bridged. The Abkhaz side maintained that a federative arrangement had to be between two equal entities. The Georgian side, on the other hand, felt that further concessions on its part would be unacceptable. The Secretary-General observed that the pursuit of a political solution to the Georgian-Abkhaz conflict needed to be conducted with appropriate support and resources. He had therefore decided to appoint a resident deputy to his Special Envoy, who would also be the head of UNOMIG, and who would assist the Special Envoy in the efforts to find and implement a comprehensive settlement based on three essential elements: the safe and early return of the refugees and internally displaced persons, maintenance of the territorial integrity of the Republic of Georgia, and a special status for Abkhazia.

At its 3567th meeting, on 18 August 1995, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Georgia, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Indonesia) stated that, following consultations among the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹⁴⁴

The Security Council welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 9 August 1995 on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, pursuant to its resolution 993 (1995).

The Council notes there has been little overall progress in achieving a comprehensive political settlement and that a stalemate exists with respect to the return of refugees and displaced persons.

The Council expresses its full support for the efforts of the Secretary-General and those of the Russian Federation in its capacity as facilitator aimed at achieving a comprehensive political settlement of the conflict, including on the political status of Abkhazia, respecting fully the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Georgia. The Council renews its call to the parties, in particular the Abkhaz side, to reach substantive progress in the political negotiations as a matter of urgency.

The Council remains deeply concerned at the continued obstruction of the return of the refugees and displaced persons by the Abkhaz authorities, which is totally unacceptable. Reaffirming its resolution 993 (1995), the Council reiterates its call to the Abkhaz authorities to accelerate the return process significantly, to guarantee the safety of all returnees and to regularize the status of spontaneous returnees, in accordance with internationally accepted practice and in cooperation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

The Council welcomes the continuing close cooperation and coordination between the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia and the Commonwealth of Independent States peacekeeping force in the performance of their respective mandates. It reminds the parties of their obligations to cooperate fully with the Mission and the peacekeeping force and to ensure the safety and freedom of movement of all United Nations and Commonwealth of Independent States personnel.

The Council takes note with appreciation of the decision of the Secretary-General regarding the resident deputy to his Special Envoy. The Council also supports the Secretary-General's efforts with regard to the establishment of a human rights monitoring mission in the area. It encourages the Secretary-General to continue his consultations with the parties to this end.

19. Items relating to the situation between Armenia and Azerbaijan

A. Statement by the President of the Security Council (in connection with interruptions in supply of goods and materials, in particular energy supplies, to Armenia and to the Nakhichevan region of Azerbaijan)

Decision of 29 January 1993: statement by the President

On 29 January 1993, following consultations with the members of the Council, the President made the following statement to the media on behalf of the members of the Council:¹

The members of the Security Council express their deep concern at the devastating effect of interruptions in the supply of goods and materials, in particular energy supplies, to Armenia and to the Nakhichevan region of Azerbaijan. They note with serious concern that these interruptions, combined with an unusually harsh winter, have brought the economy and infrastructure of the region to near collapse and created a real threat of starvation.

The members of the Council urge all countries in a position to help to facilitate the provision of fuel and humanitarian assistance. They call on Governments in the region, with a view to preventing a further deterioration of the humanitarian situation, to allow humanitarian supplies to flow freely, in particular fuel to Armenia and to the Nakhichevan region of Azerbaijan.

The members of the Council reaffirm their full support for the efforts of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE), designed to bring the parties together and achieve peace in the region. They call upon the parties to agree to an immediate ceasefire and an early resumption of talks within the CSCE framework.

The members of the Council will keep the matter under consideration.

B. The situation relating to Nagorny Karabakh

Decision of 6 April 1993 (3194th meeting): statement by the President

By letters dated 30 and 31 March and 2 and 5 April 1993, addressed to the President of the Security Council,² and by a letter dated 31 March 1993 addressed to the Secretary-General,³ and by identical letters dated 5 April 1993, addressed to the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council,⁴ the representative of Azerbaijan referred to a number of instances of aggression that had been carried out against the territory of Azerbaijan by Armenian forces and requested, inter alia, that the issue be discussed at a meeting of the Security Council. The representative of Turkey made a similar request by a letter dated 3 April 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council.⁵

By a letter dated 29 March 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁶ the representative of Azerbaijan transmitted the text of a note of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, by which the latter registered a strong protest with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Armenia following “a violation on 23 March 1993 of the State border of Azerbaijan by Armenian armed forces”.

By a letter dated 1 April 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁷ the representative of Armenia rejected the accusations against his Government and presented his country’s view of the events, which occurred on 23 March 1993 along the Armenian-Azerbaijan border.

At its 3194th meeting, on 6 April 1993, the Security Council included the above-mentioned letters in its agenda.

Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Azerbaijan, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Pakistan) drew the attention of the members of the Council to several other documents⁸ and stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁹

The Security Council expresses its serious concern at the deterioration of relations between the Republic of Armenia and the Azerbaijani Republic, and at the escalation of hostile acts in the Nagorny Karabakh conflict, especially the invasion of the Kelbadjar district of Azerbaijan by local Armenian forces. The Council demands the immediate cessation of all such hostilities, which endanger peace and security of the region, and the withdrawal of these forces.

In this context the Council, reaffirming the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States of the region and the inviolability of their borders, expresses its support for the peace process of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE). It expresses the hope that the recent preliminary agreement reached by the Minsk Group will be expeditiously followed by agreements on a ceasefire, a timetable for the deployment of the monitors, a draft political declaration and the convening, as soon as possible, of the Minsk Conference.

The Council urges the parties involved to take all necessary steps to advance the CSCE peace process and refrain from any action that will obstruct a peaceful solution to the problem.

The Council also calls for unimpeded access to international humanitarian relief efforts in the region and in particular in all areas affected by the conflict in order to alleviate the suffering of the civilian population.

The Council requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the CSCE, to ascertain facts, as appropriate, and to submit urgently a report to the Council containing an assessment of the situation on the ground.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Decision of 30 April 1993 (3205th meeting):
resolution 822 (1993)

On 14 April 1993, pursuant to the presidential statement of 6 April 1993, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Nagorny Karabakh.¹⁰ The Secretary-General reported that, in a personal letter dated 31 March 1993, the President of Azerbaijan had drawn his attention to the outbreak of fighting in the Kelbadjar district of Azerbaijan, taking the position that the Kelbadjar district of Azerbaijan had been attacked by forces from Armenia and from the enclave of Nagorny Karabakh. The Government of Armenia, on the other hand, maintained that no military forces from the Republic of Armenia had been involved in the hostilities in the Kelbadjar district. Subsequently, the Secretary-General had instructed his representatives in Azerbaijan and Armenia to ascertain the facts on the ground.

The Secretary-General observed that the intensification of fighting in and around Nagorny Karabakh, especially the recent attacks against the Kelbadjar and Fizuli districts of Azerbaijan, posed a serious threat to the maintenance of international peace and security in the entire Transcaucasus region. Because of the hostilities, it had not been possible for United Nations personnel to visit the Kelbadjar district itself, but it was clear that there had been a major outbreak of fighting in various locations in Azerbaijan, outside the enclave of Nagorny Karabakh. Reports of the use of heavy weaponry were particularly disturbing, seeming to indicate the involvement of more than local ethnic forces. The fighting in the Kelbadjar district had led to a humanitarian emergency, with an estimated 50,000 persons displaced. The Secretary-General urged that unimpeded access to the area should be granted immediately to international relief organizations to ascertain the humanitarian situation and to provide relief to the civilian population.

The Secretary-General stated that the conflict over Nagorny Karabakh, involving both Armenia and Azerbaijan, could only be resolved by peaceful means. He urged all parties to cease fighting and return to the negotiating table, within the Minsk process of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE). The recent agreement on the terms of reference for the deployment of an Advance Monitoring Group of CSCE had been an encouraging first step towards a peaceful settlement of the conflict. Speedy progress should now be made to reach further agreements on the remaining documents, thus enabling the deployment of CSCE monitors in the region. The Secretary-General remained prepared, as he had been throughout the preceding twelve months, to give his full and active support to the effort of CSCE to convene the Minsk Conference as soon as possible and to lend technical assistance in the deployment of the CSCE monitoring mission.

At its 3205th meeting, on 30 April 1993, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Armenia and Azerbaijan, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Pakistan) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution that had been prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations¹¹ and to several other documents.¹²

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and it was adopted unanimously as resolution 822 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling the statements of the President of the Security Council of 29 January and of 6 April 1993 concerning the Nagorny Karabakh conflict,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 14 April 1993, Expressing its serious concern at the deterioration of the relations between the Republic of Armenia and the Azerbaijani Republic,

Noting with alarm the escalation in armed hostilities and, in particular, the latest invasion of the Kelbadjar district of Azerbaijan by local Armenian forces,

Concerned that this situation endangers peace and security in the region,

Expressing grave concern at the displacement of a large number of civilians and the humanitarian emergency in the region, in particular in the Kelbadjar district,

Reaffirming the respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States in the region,

Reaffirming also the inviolability of international borders and the inadmissibility of the use of force for the acquisition of territory,

Expressing its support for the peace process being pursued within the framework of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, and deeply concerned at the disruptive effect that the escalation in armed hostilities can have on that process,

1. Demands the immediate cessation of all hostilities and hostile acts with a view to establishing a durable ceasefire, as well as immediate withdrawal of all occupying forces from the Kelbadjar district and other recently occupied areas of Azerbaijan;

2. Urges the parties concerned immediately to resume negotiations for the resolution of the conflict within the framework of the peace process of the Minsk Group of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and to refrain from any action that will obstruct a peaceful solution of the problem;

3. Calls for unimpeded access for international humanitarian relief efforts in the region, in particular in all areas affected by the conflict in order to alleviate the suffering of the civilian population, and reaffirms that all parties are bound to comply with the principles and rules of international humanitarian law;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Chairman-in-Office of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe as well as the Chairman of the Minsk Group, to assess the situation in the region, in particular in the Kelbadjar district of Azerbaijan, and to submit a further report to the Council;

5. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of Djibouti stated that it was disturbing that his delegation had to accept that the conflict was local and was being perpetrated and carried out solely by local Armenian forces. The truth was that it was a conflict between Armenia and Azerbaijan. It was his delegation's view that it was impossible to be optimistic so long as the Council postponed action, such as, at a minimum, a condemnation, pending the outcome of the "protracted" negotiations within the framework of CSCE. The Council could not remain on the sidelines for too long in the face of an act of aggression of such gravity, which had created a major humanitarian crisis and threatened peace and security. His delegation demanded that Armenia and Azerbaijan accept a ceasefire and that Armenia withdraw from all territories occupied during the recent aggression.¹³

The representative of France stated that his Government was guided in respect to the conflict by three principles, which had been faithfully reflected in the adopted resolution. First, it was essential to prevent the clashes from turning into a conflict between States. In that respect, the preambular part of the resolution seemed to strike a reasonable balance between acknowledging that tensions existed between Armenia and Azerbaijan and recognizing the localized nature of the fighting. Second, everything should be done to promote a negotiated settlement. France was playing an active role in the framework of CSCE, and particularly in what had come to be known as the “Minsk Group”, to facilitate such a settlement. He noted that a committee of high-level CSCE officials had met recently in Prague. Although his delegation regretted that it had not been possible for the parties to reach a conclusion to their negotiations in Prague, it welcomed the Council’s endorsement, with respect to the central question of the withdrawal of forces, of a formula that had enjoyed nearly unanimous support within CSCE. The third principle was humanitarian assistance, and France was particularly gratified that the Security Council had strongly reaffirmed the principle of unimpeded access by civilians to aid.¹⁴

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that the recent escalation of the fighting was a very serious development, which fully justified the adopted resolution. There had been a depressing trend of military offensives, with unwillingness on the part of the side winning on the ground at a given moment to make any effort to compromise. The most recent offensive had again coincided with renewed attempts within CSCE to resume talks. The United Kingdom condemned unreservedly the offensive in Kelbadjar and Fizuli and called for an immediate withdrawal of forces. It saw no alternative to a peaceful solution, which would require “historic” compromises on the parts of both sides and modifications to their stated positions. His delegation believed that the only realistic solution was for continued Azerbaijani sovereignty over Nagorny Karabakh, with real autonomy for the local Armenian population. The speaker also stated that the resolution just adopted was valuable because it both provided firm backing for the CSCE process and included the essential elements of a draft statement upon which it had not been possible to agree in Prague, due to the opposition of one party.¹⁵

The representative of Venezuela said that, as a result of having become Members of the United Nations, Armenia and Azerbaijan had both won rights and assumed obligations. They were entitled to find within the United Nations, and in particular within the Security Council, a neutral and objective body in which to air their differences. But it was a fundamental corollary that they were also obliged to respect and to ensure that their national communities, and anyone else claiming a special relationship with them, respected all of the norms and principles of international conduct, which they had assumed when they had signed the Charter of the United Nations. In particular, they needed to show absolute respect for one another’s independence and territorial integrity and to renounce the use of force as a way of solving disputes. Two aspects of the conflict were of particular concern to his delegation: on the one hand his delegation saw alarming similarity between the situation in the former Yugoslavia; on the other hand, it saw a distorted concept of what should be the right to self-determination. Venezuela felt that regional bodies could identify solutions but the Security Council could not evade its responsibility to uphold the very principles that, in its judgment, must be abided by.¹⁶

The representative of the Russian Federation recalled that on 8 April 1993, President Yeltsin had appealed to the Presidents of Armenia and Azerbaijan for an immediate halt to hostilities and the start of serious conversations aimed at achieving a peaceful settlement of the conflict. President Yeltsin had also proposed his services as a mediator, and the parties had accepted his offer. The Russian Federation wished to see a speedy solution to the conflict and was interested in contributing actively by all existing means. The Russian Federation did not consider its endeavours to be an alternative to pan-European efforts and therefore supported energetically the Council’s appeal, contained in the resolution, that all parties negotiate their grievances within the framework of the Minsk Group of CSCE. Only a political settlement, achieved on the basis of mutual compromise and concessions, could be a durable element of stability in the region.¹⁷

The President, speaking in his capacity as the representative of Pakistan, stated that his delegation had voted in favour of the resolution just adopted in the belief that it would contribute positively to the ongoing peace efforts within the framework of CSCE to put an immediate end to all hostilities in the region and would lead to an expeditious withdrawal of all Armenian forces from the territory of Azerbaijan, including the Kelbadjar district and the Lachin area. Pakistan called upon the concerned States to respect scrupulously the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all the States of the region and called upon them to respect the inviolability of international borders of all States and to refrain from the use, or the threat of the use of force. He also noted that it was his delegation's understanding that the expression "other recently occupied areas of Azerbaijan", in paragraph 1 of the resolution, included, inter alia, the Lachin area.¹⁸

Decision of 29 July 1993 (3259th meeting):

By a letter dated 24 July 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹⁹ the representative of Azerbaijan transmitted a letter from the Acting President of the Azerbaijani Republic in which he requested that the Security Council be convened immediately to discuss ongoing Armenian aggression in the Agdam region of Azerbaijan. The representative of Turkey made a similar request by a letter dated 27 July 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council.²⁰

At its 3259th meeting, on 29 July 1993, the Security Council included those letters in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Armenia, Azerbaijan and Turkey, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (United Kingdom) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution that had been prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations²¹ and read out a revision that had been made to the draft resolution in its provisional form.²² He also drew the attention of the members of the Council to several other documents,²³ including a letter dated 28 July 1993 from the representative of Italy addressed to the President of the Security Council,²⁴ transmitting a report of the Chairman of the CSCE Conference on Nagorny Karabakh, in which he informed the President about a mission that he had undertaken to the Caucasus region and to the area of the Nagorny Karabakh conflict. The aim of the mission had been to determine whether and when the "timetable of urgent steps to implement United Nations Security Council resolution 822 (1993)", which had been worked out by the nine countries in the Minsk Group, could come into force. He indicated that the President of Armenia and the acting President of Azerbaijan had reconfirmed their full and determined support for the CSCE Minsk Group timetable. They had both insisted that it should enter into force as early as possible and without any changes. In Nagorny Karabakh, however, the attitude of the local Armenian community leaders had appeared to be completely different and governed by military, rather than diplomatic, considerations. The seizure of the city of Agdam by opposing forces had, however, caused a serious setback to the negotiating process. The Chairman was trying to assess whether the seizure signified a definitive departure by the Nagorny Karabakh Armenians from a compromise settlement. He further stated that the CSCE negotiating process would continue despite that setback, but that further political support and pressure by the international community was needed. In that respect, he suggested some areas where early action by the Security Council would contribute to the peaceful settlement of the conflict, in accordance with resolution 822 (1993).

The draft resolution, as orally revised in its provisional form, was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 853 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 822 (1993) of 30 April 1993,

Having considered the report issued on 27 July 1993 by the Chairman of the Minsk Group of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe,

Expressing its serious concern at the deterioration of relations between the Republic of Armenia and the Azerbaijani Republic and at the tensions between them,

Welcoming acceptance by the parties concerned of the timetable of urgent steps to implement its resolution 822 (1993),

Noting with alarm the escalation in armed hostilities and, in particular, the seizure of the district of Agdam in Azerbaijan,

Concerned that this situation continues to endanger peace and security in the region,

Expressing once again its grave concern at the displacement of large numbers of civilians in Azerbaijan and at the serious humanitarian emergency in the region,

Reaffirming the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Azerbaijan and of all other States in the region,

Reaffirming also the inviolability of international borders and the inadmissibility of the use of force for the acquisition of territory,

1. Condemns the seizure of the district of Agdam and of all other recently occupied areas of the Azerbaijani Republic;

2. Also condemns all hostile actions in the region, in particular attacks on civilians and bombardments of inhabited areas;

6. Endorses the continuing efforts by the Minsk Group of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe to achieve a peaceful solution to the conflict, including efforts to implement resolution 822 (1993), and expresses its grave concern at the disruptive effect that the escalation of armed hostilities has had on these efforts;

7. Welcomes the preparations for a monitor mission of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe with a timetable for its deployment, as well as consideration within the Conference of the proposal for a Conference presence in the region;

8. Urges the parties concerned to refrain from any action that will obstruct a peaceful solution to the conflict, and to pursue negotiations within the Minsk Group, as well as through direct contacts between them, towards a final settlement;

9. Urges the Government of the Republic of Armenia to continue to exert its influence to achieve compliance by the Armenians of the Nagorny Karabakh region of Azerbaijan with resolution 822 (1993) and the present resolution, and the acceptance by this party of the proposals of the Minsk Group;

10. Urges States to refrain from the supply of any weapons and munitions which might lead to an intensification of the conflict or the continued occupation of territory;

11. Calls once again for unimpeded access for international humanitarian relief efforts in the region, in particular in all areas affected by the conflict, in order to alleviate the increased suffering of the civilian population, and reaffirms that all parties are bound to comply with the principles and rules of international humanitarian law;

12. Requests the Secretary-General and relevant international agencies to provide urgent humanitarian assistance to the affected civilian population and to assist displaced persons to return to their homes;

13. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Chairman-in-Office of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe as well as the Chairman of the Minsk Group, to continue to report to the Council on the situation;

14. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of Pakistan stated that his country condemned the continuing Armenian aggression against the Azerbaijani Republic and demanded the immediate withdrawal of Armenian forces from all occupied Azerbaijani territories. Pakistan urged the Republic of Armenia to respect the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Azerbaijan, and it called for a just and peaceful settlement of the problem on the basis of respect for the principles of the territorial integrity of States and the inviolability of internationally recognized frontiers. Its position was consistent with the one that had been taken by the Organization of the Islamic Conference at a special ministerial meeting, which had been held in Islamabad on 12 and 13 July 1993. Pakistan commended the efforts of the Chairman-in-Office of the CSCE Minsk Group to find a peaceful solution to the conflict and expressed the hope that the Council's adoption of the resolution would strengthen the CSCE peace process. It appealed to all parties concerned to refrain from action that would obstruct a peaceful solution and to engage earnestly in negotiations within the Minsk Group towards the attainment of a just, equitable and lasting settlement.²⁵

The representative of France said his delegation was pleased that the Council had been able to adopt swiftly and unanimously resolution 853 (1993). Recent events, marked by attacks by local Armenian forces against Agdam, in violation of the commitments that had been made during the recent CSCE mission to the region, called for clear condemnation which was what the resolution unambiguously did. The resolution also affirmed two principles to which the speaker's Government was especially devoted: first, the Council's support for the efforts of the Minsk Group to find a peaceful settlement to the conflict; and second, free access for humanitarian aid and the restoration of economic ties in the region. France had long taken a special interest in the painful conflict affecting the region of Nagorny Karabakh and it believed that every effort should be made to bring about a negotiated settlement. France, as a member of CSCE also playing an active role in the Minsk Group, would spare no effort in working multilaterally or bilaterally to facilitate the success of the CSCE peace process. It therefore welcomed the first step that had been taken the preceding day, in the form of the conclusion of an agreement between the authorities of Azerbaijan and Nagorny Karabakh, to extend the ceasefire.²⁶

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that the Russian leadership was deeply concerned at the offensive actions that had been taken by armed units of Nagorny Karabakh Armenians, as a result of which the town of Agdam had been seized. Those actions had been taken despite assurances previously given to Russian authorities by official Armenian representatives that no ground offensive operations would be undertaken by Nagorny Karabakh Armenians and that they did not intend to attack Agdam. There had, however, been some positive developments in the situation with respect to the Nagorny Karabakh conflict. A meeting had been held on 28 July between the Azerbaijan and the Nagorny Karabakh authorities, during which they had agreed to extend the ceasefire for an additional seven days and to hold a summit meeting soon. The international community needed to welcome the positive changes in the positions of the parties concerned and to urge them speedily to attain mutually acceptable agreements. Those changes took nothing away from the importance of an immediate cessation of all hostilities and of an immediate, complete withdrawal by Armenians of Nagorny Karabakh from all occupied areas of Azerbaijan.²⁷

The representative of the United States said the seizure of Agdam could not be justified by any claim to self-defence. The capture of the city had disrupted the peace process being undertaken by the Minsk Group, which was the only existing means for all parties to resolve the conflict. The United States vigorously supported the efforts of the Minsk Group and saw in the resolution a reaffirmation of the conditions necessary to allow those efforts to proceed.²⁸

The representative of Hungary stated that his delegation reaffirmed the inadmissibility of the use of force for the acquisition of territory and the inviolability of international borders. Hungary welcomed the demand in the resolution for the cessation of all hostilities and the withdrawal of occupying forces, and that it called for unimpeded access for international humanitarian relief efforts in the region. Hungary strongly believed that cooperation and mutual support between the United Nations and CSCE had to play an essential role in the search for a just and peaceful settlement of the problem. The international community could not remain silent at the use of brute force as a means to settle problems that had been accumulating for decades and that had been ignored or suppressed by previous political régimes. The speaker reiterated that, in the absence of effective international action against arbitrary violence and genocide, some were drawing the conclusion that their goals could be achieved through aggression and that territory could be acquired through the use of force and by driving hundreds of thousands of people from their homes with complete impunity. Hungary believed that the way the Security Council reacted to such developments was critical for the maintenance of international peace and security.²⁹

Decision of 18 August 1993 (3264th meeting):
statement by the President

By a letter dated 17 August 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,³⁰ the representative of Azerbaijan transmitted a letter from the Acting President of the Azerbaijani Republic, containing a request to convene the Security Council immediately in connection with the continuing aggression by Armenia against Azerbaijan and the failure by the Armenian side to comply with Security Council resolutions 822 (1993) and 853 (1993). The representative of Turkey made a similar request in a letter dated 17 August 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,³¹ in which he also stated that his country would not accept the acquisition of territory through the use of force and that Armenia's actions constituted a serious blow to the stability of a region neighbouring Turkey as well as to international peace and security. By a letter dated 18 August 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,³² the representative of Armenia requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to address "the most recent evidence of Azerbaijani aggression against Armenia and to condemn Azerbaijan's continuing policy of expanding its war against Nagorny Karabakh to the borders of Armenia".

At its 3264th meeting, on 18 August 1993, the Security Council included the above-mentioned letters in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Azerbaijan, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (United States) drew the attention of the Council members to several other documents³³ and stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:³⁴

The Security Council expresses its serious concern at the deterioration of relations between the Republic of Armenia and the Azerbaijani Republic and at the tensions between them. The Council calls upon the Government of Armenia to use its influence to achieve compliance by the Armenians of the Nagorny Karabakh region of Azerbaijan with Council resolutions 822 (1993) and 853 (1993).

The Council also expresses its deep concern at the recent intensification of fighting in the area of Fizuli. It condemns the attack on the Fizuli region from the Nagorny Karabakh region of Azerbaijan, just as it has previously condemned the invasion and seizure of the districts of Kelbadjar and Agdam of Azerbaijan. The Council demands a stop to all attacks and an immediate cessation of the hostilities and bombardments, which endanger peace and security in the region, and an immediate, complete and unconditional withdrawal of occupying forces from the area of Fizuli and from the districts of Kelbadjar and Agdam and other recently occupied areas of Azerbaijan. The Council calls upon the Government of Armenia to use its unique influence to this end.

The Council reaffirms the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Azerbaijani Republic and of all other States in the region and the inviolability of their borders, and expresses its grave concern at the effect these hostilities have had on the efforts of the Minsk Group of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE) to achieve a peaceful solution to the conflict. The Council stresses its full support of the CSCE peace process and notes particularly the opportunity that the current round of Minsk Group talks has afforded the parties to the conflict to present their views directly. In this context, the Council calls upon all of the parties to respond positively and within the agreed time-frame to the 13 August adjusted version of the Minsk Group's "Timetable of urgent steps to implement United Nations Security Council resolutions 822 (1993) and 853 (1993)" and to refrain from any actions that would obstruct a peaceful solution. The Council welcomes the intention of the CSCE to send a mission to the region to report on all aspects of the situation.

In the light of this most recent escalation of the conflict, the Council strongly reaffirms its call in resolution 853 (1993) for States to refrain from supplying any weapons and munitions which might lead to an intensification of the conflict or the continued occupation of territory of Azerbaijan. The Council calls upon the Government of Armenia to ensure that the forces involved are not provided with the means to extend their military campaign still further.

The Council also renews its calls in resolutions 822 (1993) and 853 (1993) for unimpeded access for international humanitarian relief efforts in the region, in all areas affected by the conflict, in order to alleviate the continually increasing suffering of the civilian population. The Council reminds the parties that they are bound by and must adhere to the principles and rules of international humanitarian law.

The Council will remain actively seized of the matter and will be ready to consider appropriate steps to ensure that all parties fully respect and comply with its resolutions.

Decision of 14 October 1993 (3292nd meeting):
resolution 874 (1993)

At its 3292nd meeting, on 14 October 1993, the Security Council resumed its consideration of the situation relating to Nagorny Karabakh. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Brazil) drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution that had been prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations,³⁵ and to several other documents, including letters dated 1, 6 and 8 October 1993, respectively, from the representatives of Italy, Armenia and Azerbaijan addressed to the President of the Security Council.³⁶ By a letter dated 1 October 1993,³⁷ the representative of Italy transmitted the text of a letter of the same date from the Chairman of the CSCE Minsk Conference on Nagorny Karabakh and enclosed an adjusted timetable of urgent steps to implement Security Council resolutions 822 (1993) and 853 (1993).

Pursuant to resolution 853 (1993), in his letter, the Chairman reported on the state of the efforts of the Minsk Group to bring about a peaceful settlement of the Nagorny Karabakh conflict. As a result of consultations among the members of the Minsk Group and of direct contacts between the parties to the conflict, an adjusted timetable had been drafted, outlining urgent steps to be taken to implement Security Council resolutions 822 (1993) and 853 (1993). The timetable was being sent to the parties, with the request that they signify their acceptance of it by 7 October. In his letter, the Chairman stated that the adoption of a Security Council resolution or a presidential statement on the Nagorny Karabakh conflict would represent a source of guidance and encouragement, both for the parties to the conflict and for the Minsk Group. He suggested some points that might be included in such a decision, as follows: (a) a confirmation of the earlier United Nations resolutions on the conflict; (b) a call for a withdrawal from recently occupied territories, including the newly occupied territories; (c) a welcoming of the direct contacts aimed in particular at establishing a stable and effective ceasefire, and a call to the parties to make the ceasefire permanent; (d) an expression of support for the "Adjusted timetable" of 28 September 1993, and a call to the parties to make the ceasefire permanent; (e) an underlining of the desirability of an early convening of the CSCE Minsk Conference, with a view to arriving at an overall settlement of the conflict, in conformity with the 24 March mandate of the CSCE Council of Ministers; (f) an expression of readiness on the part of the United Nations to send its representatives to observe the Minsk Conference, if invited, and to provide all possible assistance for the substantive negotiations that would follow the opening of the Conference; (g) an expression of support for the monitoring mission developed by CSCE and of the willingness of the United Nations to be associated with it in any possible way; (i) an expression of determination by the international community to help alleviate the human suffering caused by the conflict, in particular as concerns refugees and displaced persons, and human rights violations in general.

By a letter dated 6 October 1993,³⁸ the representative of Armenia transmitted a letter from the Foreign Minister of Armenia informing the Chairman of the CSCE Minsk Conference about the acceptance by his Government of the "timetable". In a letter dated 8 October 1993,³⁹ the representative of Azerbaijan argued that the "timetable" contained provisions which were contrary to Security Council resolutions 822 (1993) and 853 (1993) and the statement by the President of the Security Council of 18 August and therefore he could not agree to it.

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 874 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 822 (1993) of 30 April 1993 and 853 (1993) of 29 July 1993, and recalling the statement read by the President of the Security Council, on behalf of the Council, on 18 August 1993,

Having considered the letter dated 1 October 1993 from the Chairman of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe Minsk Conference on Nagorny Karabakh addressed to the President of the Security Council,

Expressing its serious concern that a continuation of the conflict in and around the Nagorny Karabakh region of the Azerbaijani Republic, and of the tensions between the Republic of Armenia and the Azerbaijani Republic, would endanger peace and security in the region,

Noting the high-level meetings which took place in Moscow on 8 October 1993 and expressing the hope that they will contribute to the improvement of the situation and the peaceful settlement of the conflict,

Reaffirming the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Azerbaijan and of all other States in the region,

Reaffirming also the inviolability of international borders and the inadmissibility of the use of force for the acquisition of territory,

Expressing once again its grave concern at the human suffering the conflict has caused and at the serious humanitarian emergency in the region, and expressing in particular its grave concern at the displacement of large numbers of civilians in Azerbaijan,

1. Calls upon the parties concerned to make effective and permanent the ceasefire established as a result of the direct contacts undertaken with the assistance of the Government of the Russian Federation in support of the Minsk Group of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe;

3. Welcomes and commends to the parties the "Adjusted timetable of urgent steps to implement Security Council resolutions 822 (1993) and 853 (1993)" set out on 28 September 1993 at the meeting of the Minsk Group and submitted to the parties concerned by the Chairman of the Group with the full support of nine other members of the Group, and calls on the parties to accept it;

5. Calls for the immediate implementation of the reciprocal and urgent steps provided for in the Minsk Group's "Adjusted timetable", including the withdrawal of forces from recently occupied territories and the removal of all obstacles to communications and transportation;

6. Calls also for an early convening of the Minsk Conference for the purpose of arriving at a negotiated settlement to the conflict as provided for in the "Adjusted timetable", in conformity with the 24 March 1992 mandate of the Council of Ministers of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to respond favourably to an invitation to send a representative to attend the Minsk Conference and to provide all possible assistance for the substantive negotiations that will follow the opening of the Conference;

8. Supports the monitoring mission developed by the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe;

9. Calls on all parties to refrain from all violations of international humanitarian law, and renews its call in resolutions 822 (1993) and 853 (1993) for unimpeded access for international humanitarian relief efforts in all areas affected by the conflict;

10. Urges all States in the region to refrain from any hostile acts and from any interference or intervention which would lead to the widening of the conflict and undermine peace and security in the region;

11. Requests the Secretary-General and relevant international agencies to provide urgent humanitarian assistance to the affected civilian population and to assist refugees and displaced persons to return to their homes in security and dignity;

12. Requests the Secretary-General, the Chairman-in-Office of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and the Chairman of the Minsk Conference to continue to report to the Council on the progress of the Minsk process and on all aspects of the situation on the ground, and on present and future cooperation between the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and the United Nations in this regard;

13. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United States stated that, through the adopted resolution, the international community was expressing its strong support for the vital, continuing efforts of the Minsk Group to help resolve the conflict in the Nagorny Karabakh region. In the spirit of that resolution and the previous one, the Minsk Group had developed a plan that envisaged international monitoring of a phased ceasefire and negotiations among all the parties through the early convening of the Minsk Conference. He hoped that the parties to the conflict would seize the opportunity offered by the Minsk Group's plan. The international community and the parties to the conflict, working together through the

Minsk process, also needed to act to alleviate the human suffering and to find a peaceful solution.⁴⁰

The representative of France stated that, in his Government's view, the resolution ought to allow for progress towards the settlement of the conflict. His delegation also noted that the Council, in the resolution, had reaffirmed its support for the Minsk peace process, to which France was particularly committed. The resolution addressed a clear message to the parties by asking them to agree a timetable of urgent measures. His delegation hoped that the parties would grasp the meaning of the resolution and that they would soon inform the Chairman of the Minsk Group of their acceptance of the timetable, an essential step toward the negotiation of which was to open under the auspices of the Minsk Conference.⁴¹

The representative of the Russian Federation described his country's efforts to end the Nagorny Karabakh conflict. He noted that, despite isolated incidents, the ceasefire had been observed since the beginning of September, which was very important. Azerbaijan and Armenia had turned to the Russian Federation for assistance in formalizing the agreement achieved during the Moscow meetings, on the 24 and 25 September, on extending the ceasefire for one month. On 1 October it had been extended to 5 November. The Russian Federation attached special significance to the appeal in the adopted resolution that the existing ceasefire be made a lasting one. Once that priority had been achieved, the next step would be to take mutual, urgent measures to reach a full settlement of the conflict. The Russian Federation felt that a constructive joining of efforts by all the parties and organizations was necessary, primarily those of CSCE and its Minsk Group.⁴²

By a letter dated 26 October 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁴³ the representative of Azerbaijan transmitted a letter dated 26 October 1993 from the President of the Azerbaijani Republic, in which he referred to the ongoing aggression being conducted by the Republic of Armenia and requested: an urgent meeting of the Security Council; the condemnation by the Security Council of the aggression by the Republic of Armenia against the Azerbaijani Republic; and the imposition of military, political and economic sanctions by the Security Council on the Republic of Armenia, in conformity with Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations. The representative of Turkey made a similar request by a letter dated 27 October 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁴⁴ in which he stated that the recent Armenian attacks against Azerbaijani territory constituted a serious threat to international peace and security and brought the situation closer to regional conflict. By a letter dated 28 October 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁴⁵ the representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran made a similar request and requested the Security Council to take necessary measures, including the dispatch of peacekeeping forces to the area, to consolidate the ceasefire and allow for efforts aimed at achieving a just and honourable solution to the conflict. He contended that the national security of his country was threatened.

At its 3313th meeting, on 12 November 1993, the Security Council included the above-mentioned letters in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Armenia, Azerbaijan, Iran and Turkey, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Cape Verde) drew the attention of the Council members to the draft resolution that had been prepared during the course of the Council's prior consultations.⁴⁶ He also drew the attention of the members of the Council to several other documents,⁴⁷ including a letter dated 9 November 1993 from the representative of Italy addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁴⁸ transmitting a letter of the same date from the Chairman of the CSCE Minsk Conference on Nagorny Karabakh. The Chairman's letter enclosed a declaration that had been approved by the countries of the Minsk Group on Nagorny Karabakh, concerning the most recent developments on the ground and a package of proposals worked out by the same countries and submitted to the parties to the conflict. In its declaration, the Minsk Group vigorously condemned the behaviour of the parties to the Nagorny Karabakh conflict during the most recent ceasefire violation and the seizure of additional territory by force. Those actions constituted unacceptable violations of the CSCE principle of the non-use of force and they undercut the efforts of the international community to find a peaceful solution to the conflict. The Minsk Group parties insisted on the acceptance of their proposed timetable providing for: a full and permanent ceasefire; withdrawals from the occupied territories; and the dispatching of a monitor mission, leading to the early convening of the Minsk Conference. Acceptance of the timetable, which had been called for by Security Council resolution 874 (1993), was essential for the implementation of Security Council resolutions 822 (1993), 853 (1993) and 874 (1993).

Speaking before the vote, the representative of Pakistan stated that his delegation remained gravely concerned about the situation in the Azerbaijani Republic, resulting from the aggression against Azerbaijani territory. The Council needed to take immediate note of the most recent offensive launched by the Armenian forces and the occupation of the Azerbaijani districts of Djebrail, Fizuli, Zangelan and Kubatli. Not only did the offensive constitute a violation of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of a State Member of the United Nations but the aggression had also resulted in a colossal humanitarian tragedy forcing more than 60,000 local inhabitants to flee their homes and seek refuge in neighbouring countries. The situation constituted a threat to the peace and security of the region. Pakistan commended the efforts that had been made by the Chairman of the Minsk Group to find a peaceful solution to the conflict and it hoped the Council's adoption of the draft resolution would strengthen the CSCE process. The speaker noted that his delegation supported the draft resolution, but he said it would have preferred to see the draft include an expression of the Council's intention to take further appropriate steps if the resolutions of the Council continued to be defied.⁴⁹

⁴⁷ Letters dated 15, 18, 19, 21, 26, 27 and 28 October and 2 and 4 November 1993 from the representative of Azerbaijan addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/26589, S/26595, S/26602, S/26615, S/26637, S/26647, S/26657, S/26658, S/26682 and S/26693); letters dated 21, 26 and 27 October 1993 from the representative of Armenia addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/26612, S/26643 and S/26645); letter dated 28 October 1993 from the representative of Turkey addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/26665); letter dated 29 October 1993 from the representative of Azerbaijan addressed to the Secretary-General (S/26674); letter dated 9 November 1993 from the representative of Italy, transmitting a letter of the same date from the Chairman-in-Office of the CSCE Minsk Conference on Nagorny Karabakh addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/26718); letter dated 11 November 1993 from the representative of Belgium addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/26728); and letter dated 12 November 1993 from the representative of Italy addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/26732).

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 884 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 822 (1993) of 30 April 1993, 853 (1993) of 29 July 1993 and 874 (1993) of 14 October 1993,

Reaffirming its full support for the peace process being pursued within the framework of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, and for the tireless efforts of the Minsk Group of the Conference,

Taking note of the letter dated 9 November 1993 from the Chairman-in-Office of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe Minsk Conference on Nagorny Karabakh addressed to the President of the Security Council and its enclosures,

Expressing its serious concern that a continuation of the conflict in and around the Nagorny Karabakh region of the Azerbaijani Republic, and of the tensions between the Republic of Armenia and the Azerbaijani Republic, would endanger peace and security in the region, ⁴⁹ S/PV.3313, pp. 4-5.

Noting with alarm the escalation in armed hostilities in consequence of the violations of the ceasefire and excesses in the use of force in response to those violations, in particular the occupation of the Zangelan district and the city of Goradiz in Azerbaijan,

Reaffirming the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Azerbaijan and of all other States in the region,

Reaffirming also the inviolability of international borders and the inadmissibility of the use of force for the acquisition of territory,

Expressing grave concern at the latest displacement of a large number of civilians and the humanitarian emergency in the Zangelan district and the city of Goradiz and on Azerbaijan's southern frontier,

1. Condemns the recent violations of the ceasefire established between the parties, which resulted in a resumption of hostilities, and particularly condemns the occupation of the Zangelan district and the city of Goradiz, attacks on civilians and bombardments of the territory of the Azerbaijani Republic;

2. Calls upon the Government of Armenia to use its influence to achieve compliance by the Armenians of the Nagorny Karabakh region of Azerbaijan with resolutions 822 (1993), 853 (1993) and 874 (1993) and to ensure that the forces involved are not provided with the means to extend their military campaign further;

3. Welcomes the declaration of 4 November 1993 of the nine members of the Minsk Group of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and commends the proposals contained therein for unilateral ceasefire declarations;

4. Demands from the parties concerned the immediate cessation of armed hostilities and hostile acts, the unilateral withdrawal of occupying forces from the Zangelan district and the city of Goradiz, and the withdrawal of occupying forces from other recently occupied areas of Azerbaijan in accordance with the "Adjusted timetable of urgent steps to implement Security Council resolutions 822 (1993) and 853 (1993)" as amended by the Minsk Group meeting held at Vienna from 2 to 8 November 1993;

5. Strongly urges the parties concerned to resume promptly and to make effective and permanent the ceasefire established as a result of the direct contacts undertaken with the assistance of the Government of the Russian Federation in support of the Minsk Group, and to continue to seek a negotiated settlement of the conflict within the context of the Minsk process and the "Adjusted timetable" as amended by the Minsk Group meeting of 2 to 8 November 1993;

6. Urges again all States in the region to refrain from any hostile acts and from any interference or intervention, which would lead to the widening of the conflict and undermine peace and security in the region;

7. Requests the Secretary-General and relevant international agencies to provide urgent humanitarian assistance to the affected civilian population, including that in the Zangelan district and the city of Goradiz and on Azerbaijan's southern frontier, and to assist refugees and displaced persons to return to their homes in security and dignity;

8. Reiterates its request that the Secretary-General, the Chairman-in-Office of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and the Chairman of the Minsk Conference continue to report to the Council on the progress of the Minsk process and on all aspects of the situation on the ground, in particular on the implementation of its relevant resolutions, and on present and future cooperation between the Conference on Security and Cooperation and the United Nations in this regard;

9. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United States noted that his Government's support for the adopted resolution rested on a simple premise: where ceasefires were continually violated and the ensuing violence escalated far beyond any conceivable military necessity, innocent civilians on both sides of the conflict suffered more and more. The resolution rightly laid the blame for the appalling situation on both parties — the party that had initiated the current round of ceasefire violations and the party that had responded out of all proportion to those violations. The speaker observed that there was a way out. It was offered by the Minsk process and the tireless efforts of the Minsk Group, which had fashioned a framework by which a ceasefire could be stabilized and negotiations undertaken.⁵⁰

The representative of France stated that the acquisition of territory by force was inadmissible and that doing so for the purposes of negotiation could not be countenanced. France demanded the immediate cessation of armed hostilities, the unilateral withdrawal of occupying forces from the Zangelan district and the withdrawal from other recently occupied areas of the Azerbaijani Republic, in accordance with the adjusted timetable of the Minsk Group. In approving the Declaration of the Minsk Group, which had been adopted on 4 November 1993 in Vienna, the Council was again expressing its full support for the sustained efforts of the CSCE and was charging the parties to continue their discussions with a view to the convening of the Minsk Conference as soon as possible. The speaker stressed his Government's concern at the effects that the continuation of the conflict was having on the humanitarian situation. His delegation welcomed the appeal that the Council was making that day for increased humanitarian assistance to the civilian populations of the region and it recalled its insistence on ensuring that such assistance was guaranteed free access.⁵¹

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that his country was seriously concerned at the escalation of the Nagorny Karabakh conflict, which was the result of local violations of the ceasefire and of excessive retaliation with catastrophic consequences for tens of thousands of Azerbaijani refugees. The Russian Federation took a positive view of the decisions of the recently concluded Vienna meeting of the Minsk Group, in which it had actively participated, and it believed that the parties would heed those decisions. It also hoped that the adopted resolution would be an important signal that the international community would no longer tolerate the continuation of bloodshed, nor the ever-more-dangerous escalation of the conflict. The Russian Federation attached great importance to the demand contained in the resolution for immediately resuming, and making permanent and effective, the ceasefire.⁵²

The representative of Hungary said that the Council had every reason to take up the matter of the continuing conflict in Nagorny Karabakh and the tension between Armenia and Azerbaijan because the crisis was likely to jeopardize peace and security throughout the region. Hungary welcomed the declaration that had been made by the Minsk Group and it extended its full support to the Group's peace process. The speaker stressed the importance of the resolution's reaffirmation of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Azerbaijani Republic and of all other States in the region, as well as of the resolution's reaffirmation of the inadmissibility of the use of force for the acquisition of territory. He also highlighted the position set out in the Minsk Group's declaration of 4 November that the occupation of territory could not be used to try to obtain international recognition or to impose a change of legal status.⁵³

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that violations of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Azerbaijani Republic, and of all other States in the region, had to cease, as the adopted resolution and previous resolutions had made clear. The United Kingdom looked to all parties to adopt a positive approach to the Minsk Group's negotiations, and in particular to accept the Group's new package by the deadline of 22 November.⁵⁴

The representative of Brazil said that Brazil remained deeply concerned by the precarious humanitarian situation prevailing in the region. As with other conflicts in the world, it was imperative that full attention be paid to tackling the urgent needs of the civilian population, independently of political or military considerations. All the parties and others concerned remained bound to comply with the rules of international humanitarian law and to ensure unimpeded access for humanitarian relief efforts throughout the region. The speaker noted that the Security Council had from the outset agreed to recognize the prominent role to be played by CSCE to find a negotiated solution to the conflict concerning Nagorny Karabakh. The resolution just adopted confirmed that the efforts being undertaken at the regional level in the context of the Minsk process continued to have the support of the Council. The best chance of achieving a lasting solution to the problems that had arisen in connection with the dispute lay in that framework. The speaker echoed the wish of other speakers that the Minsk Group's timetable of urgent steps to be taken to implement the peace process would be accepted and followed by the parties. He also observed that, while the Security Council continued to lend its backing to the diplomatic efforts of CSCE, it was also important that the Council remain seized of the matter and that it monitor the situation closely.⁵⁵

The representative of Spain reaffirmed the importance that should be attached to the territorial integrity and sovereignty of the Azerbaijani Republic, without ignoring the rights of the Armenians of Nagorny Karabakh, in conformity with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and CSCE. Of special concern was the humanitarian situation, especially the increase in the number of refugees and displaced persons, which was causing the problem to spread beyond the borders of the Azerbaijani Republic. In addition to achieving an immediate ceasefire, the international community needed to give priority to the problems of securing asylum and protection for the tens of thousands of refugees fleeing the conflict areas and of ensuring the free movement and delivery of humanitarian assistance. The speaker said that the conflict threatened to spread beyond the territory of the Azerbaijani Republic, endangering peace and security in the region, which justified, indeed necessitated, redoubled efforts by the United Nations and CSCE to halt and end the conflict. In conclusion, the representative cautioned that, if the parties did not respond positively to the Minsk Group's initiatives, thus setting in motion a true peace process, the Security Council would have to re-examine the item with a view to adopting such measures as might be deemed appropriate in the light of information and recommendations received from the Secretary-General, the Chairman-in-Office of CSCE and the Chairman of the Minsk process.⁵⁶

Decision of 26 April 1995 (3525th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3525th meeting, on 26 April 1995, the Security Council resumed its consideration of the situation relating to Nagorny Karabakh. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Azerbaijan, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Czech Republic) then drew the attention of the Council members to letters dated 30 March 1995 and 20 April 1995, respectively, from the representatives of the Russian Federation and Sweden addressed to the President of the Security Council.⁵⁷

The letter of 30 March transmitted a letter dated 21 March from the Co-Chairmen of the Minsk Conference of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE). Pursuant to resolution 884 (1993), the Co-Chairmen reported, in their letter, on the efforts that had been made in the framework of the Minsk Process to bring about a peaceful settlement of the Nagorny Karabakh conflict, in particular since the decision that had been made by the CSCE Summit at Budapest on 6 December 1994 concerning the intensification of CSCE action in relation to the Nagorny Karabakh conflict. In accordance with that decision, a Co-Chairmanship for the OSCE Minsk Process had been established between Sweden and the Russian Federation. The Co-Chairmen noted that the ceasefire, which had been in effect since 12 May 1994, was still largely being respected. The parties were committed to respecting the ceasefire until a political agreement on the cessation of the armed conflict had been attained. Through the efforts of the Co-Chairmen, the parties had further committed themselves to mutual obligations to strengthen the ceasefire through direct contacts and other confidence-building measures. The Co-Chairmen foresaw the finalization, in the near future, of an agreement to establish an OSCE presence in the region, in the form of a personal representative of the Chairman-in-Office of OSCE, along with field representatives. It also remained the view of the parties that a peacekeeping operation would be necessary to guarantee the eventual political agreement on the cessation of hostilities. A High-level Planning Group had been established and it was actively working on recommendations for the OSCE Chairman-in-Office on planning and preparations for an OSCE peacekeeping force. The Co-Chairmen intended in the near future to undertake a visit to the region to consult the parties and would report to the Council on that matter.

The letter dated 20 April 1995 transmitted a letter of the same date from the Co-Chairmen of the OSCE Minsk Conference. In the letter, the Co-Chairmen provided, pursuant to resolution 884 (1993), additional information on efforts made in the framework of the OSCE Minsk process for the peaceful settlement of the Nagorny Karabakh conflict. They noted that the ceasefire was still largely being respected, although several incidents had occurred recently on the border between Armenia and Azerbaijan and along the line of contact. The continued observance of the ceasefire and the repeatedly reaffirmed intention of the parties to abide by it were encouraging. However, due to the fact that there was "neither war nor peace", there remained a risk of an unsatisfactory and even dangerous freezing of the situation. A continued lack of progress in the political process might very well endanger the existing ceasefire.

The Co-Chairmen recalled that a substantial number of OSCE States had earlier stated their readiness in principle to contribute to an OSCE multinational peacekeeping force and they warned that there was a risk that such readiness might be adversely affected by a lack of concrete progress in the negotiation process. It was of great importance that the planning and preparatory work be concluded and that the peacekeeping operation be made credible, assuring the parties and the contributing States of an effective and secure implementation of the agreement. The Co-Chairmen observed that continuing political support from the Security Council for the possible deployment of an OSCE peacekeeping force, as well as continued United Nations technical advice and expertise, would be required if such an operation were to be carried out.

⁵⁷ S/1995/249 and S/1995/321.

The President then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁵⁸

The Security Council has considered the reports of the Co Chairmen of the Minsk Conference of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe on Nagorny Karabakh submitted in accordance with paragraph 8 of its resolution 884 (1993). It expresses its satisfaction that the ceasefire in the region agreed upon on 12 May 1994 through the mediation of the Russian Federation in cooperation with the Minsk Group of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe has been holding for almost a year.

At the same time, the Council reiterates the concern it has previously expressed at the conflict in and around the Nagorny Karabakh region of the Azerbaijani Republic and at the tensions between the Republic of Armenia and the Azerbaijani Republic. In particular, it expresses its concern at recent violent incidents and emphasizes the importance of using the mechanism of direct contacts for the settlement of incidents as agreed upon on 6 February 1995. It strongly urges the parties to the conflict to take all necessary measures to prevent such incidents in future.

The Council reaffirms all its relevant resolutions, inter alia, on the principles of sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States in the region. It also reaffirms the inviolability of international borders and the inadmissibility of the use of force for the acquisition of territory.

The Council reiterates its full support for the efforts of the Co-Chairmen of the Minsk Conference to assist in conducting speedy negotiations for the conclusion of a political agreement on the cessation of the armed conflict, the implementation of which will eliminate major consequences of the conflict for all parties, inter alia, ensuring withdrawal of forces, and permit the convening of the Minsk Conference.

The Council stresses that the parties to the conflict themselves bear the main responsibility for reaching a peaceful settlement. It stresses the urgency of concluding a political agreement on the cessation of the armed conflict on the basis of the relevant principles of the Charter of the United Nations and of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe. It strongly urges those parties to conduct constructively negotiations without preconditions or procedural obstacles and to refrain from any actions that may undermine the peace process. It emphasizes that the achievement of such an agreement is a prerequisite for the deployment of a multinational peacekeeping force of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe.

The Council welcomes the decision of the Budapest summit of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe of 6 December 1994 on the intensification of action by the Conference in relation to the Nagorny Karabakh conflict. It confirms its readiness to provide continuing political support, inter alia, through an appropriate resolution regarding the possible deployment of a multinational peacekeeping force of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe following agreement among the parties for cessation of the armed conflict. The United Nations also stands ready to provide technical advice and expertise.

The Council underlines the urgency of the implementation by the parties of confidence building measures, as agreed upon within the Minsk Group on 15 April 1994, in particular in the humanitarian field, including the release of all prisoners of war and civilian detainees by the first anniversary of the ceasefire. It calls upon the parties to prevent suffering of the civilian populations affected by the armed conflict.

The Council reiterates its request that the Secretary-General, the Chairman in Office of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and the Co Chairmen of the Minsk Conference continue to report to the Council on the progress of the Minsk process and on the situation on the ground, in particular on the implementation of its relevant resolutions and on present and future cooperation between the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and the United Nations in this regard.

The Council will keep the matter under consideration.

20. The situation in Cyprus

Decision of 26 March 1993: statement by the President

On 26 March 1993, following consultations among the members of the Security Council, the President (New Zealand) made the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹

The members of the Security Council have reviewed the situation related to the Secretary-General's mission of good offices in Cyprus.

The members of the Council welcomed the acceptance by the two leaders of the invitation of the Secretary-General to attend a joint meeting on 30 March 1993 to discuss the timing, modalities and preparation for the resumption of substantive direct negotiations as mandated by the Council.

The members of the Council reaffirmed their position that the status quo is not acceptable and that a mutually acceptable overall framework agreement should be achieved without delay on the basis of the set of ideas endorsed by the Council.

The members of the Council called on the leaders of the two communities in Cyprus to manifest their goodwill by cooperating fully with the Secretary-General so that the substantive direct negotiations which are due to resume shortly will result in significant progress.

The members of the Council reaffirmed their determination to remain seized of the Cyprus question on an ongoing basis and to lend their active support to the effort of the Secretary-General.

The members of the Council requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the outcome of the meeting of 30 March.

By a letter dated 2 April 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,² the Secretary-General informed the Council that the two leaders had met him on 30 March in New York to discuss the timing, modalities and preparations for the resumption of substantive negotiations as mandated by the Council. His spokesperson had issued a statement at the conclusion of the meeting in which both leaders had agreed to resume the joint negotiations on 24 May, at United Nations Headquarters, using the set of ideas for the purpose of reaching a mutually acceptable overall framework agreement.³ Furthermore, they had agreed that the joint negotiations would be preceded by a preparatory process in which the Secretary-General's representatives would meet them in Nicosia to clarify and address the concerns of the two leaders related to the set of ideas with a view to facilitating progress at the resumed joint negotiations. They would also discuss the implementation of confidence-building measures to foster mutual confidence conducive to the success of the negotiating process.

Decision of 11 May 1993 (3211th meeting): rejection of a draft resolution

On 30 March 1993, pursuant to resolution 796 (1992) of 14 December 1992, the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Security Council on the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) and on the results of his consultations with troop-contributing Governments about restructuring the Force.⁴ The consultations had focused on two proposals. One would entrust the Force's mandate to military observers, backed up by a small infantry element. The other would restructure the Force and reduce it to the minimum number of infantry battalions required to maintain effective control on the buffer zone. While most of the troop contributors had expressed a preference for the first proposal, his representatives had supported the second proposal, contending that the current political and military situation in Cyprus and in the region did not yet justify UNFICYP being converted to an observer mission. Moreover, his military and civilian advisers unanimously had agreed that if the Force was to lose its capacity to maintain control of the buffer zone, there would be a real danger that small incidents could rapidly escalate and threaten the ceasefire on which depended not only the security of the people of Cyprus but also the maintenance of an atmosphere conducive to success in the political negotiations. In his report, the Secretary-General pointed out that the question before the Security Council was not whether the UNFICYP mandate could better be carried out by infantry or by a mixture of infantry and military observers. Neither would be practicable unless the Security Council could accept funding of the Force by assessed contributions. The question was thus whether to decide on such funding or allow UNFICYP to dissolve into a token presence of a few military observers. He strongly recommended converting the Force to assessed funding.

At its 3211th meeting, on 11 May 1993, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Russian Federation) drew the attention of the members of the Council to the text of a draft resolution submitted by the United Kingdom.⁵ He also drew their attention to a letter dated 21 April 1993 from the representative of Cyprus addressed to the Secretary-General,⁶ confirming the offer of the Government of Cyprus to contribute, on a continuing basis, one third of the annual cost of UNFICYP.

Speaking before the vote, the President, in his capacity as representative of the Russian Federation, recalled that his delegation had stated on many occasions its position on the question of the financing of UNFICYP and that it continued to have fundamental objections to the proposed changes. If contributions were made mandatory, he said, as had been the case with two recent peacekeeping operations, there would be no operations left that would be paid for on a voluntary basis. His delegation was of the view that voluntary contributions should not have a decreasing but an increasing role. It would therefore vote against the draft resolution, not for political reasons but for practical considerations.⁷

The draft resolution was thereupon put to the vote and was not adopted, owing to the negative vote of a permanent member of the Council (Russian Federation). Under the operative part of the draft resolution, the Council would have decided that, with effect from the next extension of the UNFICYP mandate on or before 15 June 1993, the costs of the Force should be treated as expenses of the Organization under Article 17 (2) of the Charter of the United Nations. It would have also decided that UNFICYP should be restructured as a first step on the basis of the proposal in paragraphs 16 to 19 of the Secretary-General's report, with the addition of a limited number of observers for reconnaissance and with a view to further restructuring. It would have further decided to conduct a comprehensive reassessment of UNFICYP, to include the implications for the Force of progress on confidence-building measures and towards a political settlement, additional to the regular six-monthly consideration of the extension of the Force's mandate provided for in its earlier resolutions, at the latest one year after the adoption of that resolution.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United Kingdom reiterated that the financing of UNFICYP should be supported by the whole membership. The Force could no longer be sustained on the basis of voluntary contributions alone. His Government found the Russian Federation's decision to vote against the draft resolution both "regrettable" and "disproportionate", given the extremely modest financial implications for that country now that, thanks to the Cypriot and Greek Governments, a substantial proportion of the Force's expenses would continue to be covered by voluntary contributions. That decision also put in jeopardy the whole operation, as well as the Secretary-General's good offices mission. His Government therefore appealed to the Russian Federation to reconsider its position and to agree to provide a sound basis for the financing of UNFICYP, along the lines proposed by the Secretary-General.⁸

The representative of the United States stated that the presence of an effective peacekeeping force in Cyprus was an important element in maintaining an atmosphere conducive to the success of United Nations-sponsored negotiations between the two Cypriot parties. Calling the Russian Federation's veto "regrettable", she stressed that discussions towards finding a way to maintain a stable force in Cyprus had to continue urgently. Her Government nevertheless understood and shared some of the concerns expressed by the Russian Federation over the broader question of peacekeeping financing. The inequalities in the existing peacekeeping assessment scale were beginning to call into question the ability to carry out the Organization's work. The time had come to consider the issue seriously and to find urgent solutions within the context of "An Agenda for Peace".⁹

The representative of France contended that the rejection of the draft resolution did not mean the end of UNFICYP. It only meant that the text required further improvement and that additional consultations were needed to reach a solution, which would be acceptable to all. He noted that the Council's task would be greatly facilitated if the parties showed their intention of "speedily tackling the political solution" and if they displayed an "indisputable will" for reconciliation. The European States members of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and the Council of Europe, he said, would then have to define, as a matter of priority, the application of the principle of the peaceful settlement of disputes. That would permit UNFICYP to become an observer force very quickly with the mandate of overseeing the implementation of confidence-building measures and the reconciliation process.¹⁰

The representative of New Zealand contended that UNFICYP troops "deserved better than today's unfortunate decision". His country believed that support for peacekeeping was the responsibility of all United Nations Members, and therefore regretted that the Russian veto had prevented the Council from taking a reasonable, logical and practical decision.¹¹

The representative of China noted that his delegation had supported the draft resolution, because it reflected the principle of diversity of the financing of United Nations peacekeeping operations. He hoped that, in the future, that principle would be respected.¹²

Decision of 27 May 1993 (3222nd meeting):
resolution 831(1993)

At its 3222nd meeting, on 27 May 1993, the Security Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General.¹³ Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Russian Federation) drew the attention of the members of the Council to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.¹⁴ He also drew their attention to a letter dated 21 April 1993 from the representative of Cyprus addressed to the Secretary-General.¹⁵

Speaking before the vote, the representative of Pakistan stated that Pakistan fully endorsed the principle that the financing of peacekeeping operations was a collective responsibility of the States Members in accordance with Article 17 (2) of the Charter, and that it should be treated as an expense of the United Nations according to the existing special scale of assessments, which particularly took into account the special responsibility of the permanent members of the Security Council. Accordingly, his delegation had voted in favour of the earlier draft resolution. The present draft however touched upon issues that went beyond technical matters. It would have been more appropriate if the text had retained its focus on the technical financing problem, particularly since negotiations between the parties were at a critical juncture. The Council should exercise great care so as not to send any signals that might be misinterpreted by the parties. His delegation would therefore abstain in the vote of the draft resolution before the Council.¹⁶

The draft resolution was thereupon put to the vote and was adopted by 14 votes in favour, to none against, with 1 abstention (Pakistan), as resolution 831 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 186 (1964) of 4 March 1964 and subsequent relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming that the extension of the mandate of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus should be considered every six months,

Noting the recent communication from the Government of Cyprus to the Secretary-General,

Noting also that both voluntary and assessed methods of contribution are acceptable for United Nations peacekeeping operations and stressing the importance of maximizing voluntary contributions,

Stressing the importance it attaches to the achievement of early progress towards a political settlement in Cyprus, and also to the implementation of confidence-building measures,

Reiterating in particular its call to both sides to cooperate with the Force in order to extend the unmanning agreement of 1989 to all areas of the United Nations-controlled buffer zone where the two sides are in close proximity to each other,

Reaffirming that the status quo is not acceptable, and concerned that the United Nations should not be entering into open-ended peacekeeping commitments,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 30 March 1993 on the United Nations operation in Cyprus;

Cyprus and for those that have recently been offered for the future, which are essential for the continuation of the Force;

3. Stresses the importance of the continuation of voluntary contributions to the Force and calls for maximum voluntary contributions in the future;

4. Decides that, with effect from the next extension of the mandate of the Force on or before 15 June 1993, those costs of the Force which are not covered by voluntary contributions should be treated as expenses of the United Nations under Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations;

5. Decides also that the Force should be restructured as a first step on the basis of the proposal in paragraphs 16 to 19 of the report of the Secretary-General, with the addition of a limited number of observers for reconnaissance and with a view to further restructuring in the light of the reassessment referred to in paragraph 7 below;

6. Underlines the responsibility of the parties for minimizing tension and facilitating the operation of the Force, including through the implementation of confidence-building measures, including that the number of foreign troops in the Republic of Cyprus undergo a significant reduction and that a reduction of defence spending be effected in the Republic of Cyprus, as envisaged in its earlier relevant resolutions;

7. Decides to conduct a comprehensive reassessment of the Force at the time of the consideration of the mandate of the Force in December 1993, including of the implications of progress on confidence-building measures and towards a political settlement for the future of the Force;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Security Council one month before that reassessment, to cover all aspects of the situation, including confidence-building measures, progress in political negotiations and possible progressive steps towards an observer force based on the proposal described in paragraph 12 of the report of the Secretary-General;

9. Invites the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to implement the present resolution.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United States welcomed the resolution and the new possibilities that it provided for ensuring that UNFICYP would continue its essential role in stabilizing the situation in Cyprus. Her delegation fully supported the Secretary-General's efforts in the ongoing meetings with the leaders of the two Cypriot communities to achieve an agreement on the package of confidence-building measures. In view of the Force's planned restructuring and imminent reductions, it would be particularly important for the two sides to take concrete steps to reduce tensions and to increase safety along the buffer zone. However, if the current round of negotiations did not bring a positive result, the Secretariat should provide the Council with an accounting of where it believed the responsibility lay, as well as information on how the negotiations would be pursued. With such information in hand, the Council would then be in a position to consider future steps, including, perhaps, a new resolution.¹⁷

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that his delegation welcomed the fact that the financing of UNFICYP had now been put on an equitable and sound basis. It was, however, concerned at the slow progress in the ongoing talks. He therefore echoed the view expressed by the representative of the United States that the Secretary-General should inform the Council if he felt one party was more responsible than the other for that lack of progress.¹⁸

The representative of France stated that his delegation attached great importance to the reaffirmation of the principle of collective responsibility. Equally important was the principle that the beneficiaries had to help finance their security, to the extent that they were able. Keeping that balance would be indispensable to maintaining UNFICYP. Noting that the Council would reassess the Force every year, he said that it would be a question of gradually converting the unit into a force of observers until, eventually, when the political situation permitted, it was disbanded. He further stressed that UNFICYP from now on had to operate in conditions of reunification and reconciliation, instead of simply being a buffer preventing violent confrontations.¹⁹

The President, speaking in his capacity as representative of the Russian Federation, said that the resolution clearly indicated a combined method for financing the Force, with the main part of the expenditures covered by voluntary contributions, first and foremost by the parties concerned, and the remainder by the Member States. He also noted that the resolution called for a comprehensive reassessment of UNFICYP, when its mandate would next be considered in December 1993. In that regard, he expressed hope that in the near future, there would no longer be a need for the Force to remain in Cyprus. It was his belief that, if the current round of talks yielded no results, the Secretary-General should present the Security Council with exhaustive information as to why the talks ended in that way. In the light of that information, the Council might need to consider further steps to settle the Cyprus problem, including the adoption of a new resolution.²⁰

Decision of 11 June 1993 (3235th meeting):
resolution 839 (1993)

On 9 June 1993, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the United Nations operation in Cyprus, covering developments from 1 December 1992 to 31 May 1993.²¹ The Secretary-General called the Council's decision of 27 May 1993 on the financing of UNFICYP a "landmark", not only because it assured the Force's financial stability but also because it acknowledged the importance of voluntary contributions for some peacekeeping operations, particularly from the beneficiaries of long-term operations. Moreover, it would put the financing of the operation on an equitable and sound basis, which should resolve the difficulties it had experienced in retaining troop contributors. The Secretary-General stated that the restructuring of the Force, as endorsed by Security Council resolution 831 (1993), following successive reductions in strength, had major implications for the two parties. Greater responsibility rested with them for ensuring that there was no increase in tension in Cyprus and that conditions could be maintained for a speedy overall agreement, as envisaged by the Security Council. He stressed that the two sides had to exercise maximum restraint and, in accordance with the proposed package of confidence-building measures, extend without delay the 1989 unmanning agreement to all parts of the buffer zone where their forces remained in close proximity. He urged them to take reciprocal measures to lower the tension, including mutual commitments, through UNFICYP, not to deploy along the ceasefire lines live ammunition or weapons other than hand-held ones, and to prohibit firing of weapons within sight or hearing of the buffer zone. He also urged them to work together so that their own agencies could assume the humanitarian functions carried out by the Force over the years.

The Secretary-General further expressed concern about the situation in the mixed village of Pyla, located in the buffer zone. It was his view that the bicomunal nature of the village demanded special cooperation and understanding by both sides, which he urged not to interfere in local activities.

²⁰ Ibid., pp. 10-12.

The Secretary-General concluded that, under the prevailing circumstances, the presence of UNFICYP on the island remained indispensable, and recommended an extension of its mandate for a further six months, until 15 December 1993.²²

At its 3235th meeting, on 11 June 1993, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Spain) said that he had received requests for participation in the meeting. However, those making the requests had responded to his appeal, made on behalf of the Council, and had agreed not to press their requests at the present time, without prejudice to their right to request participation at future meetings. The President then drew the attention of the members of the Council to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.²³ The draft resolution was thereupon put to vote and was adopted unanimously as resolution 839 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus of 9 and 10 June 1993,

Noting the recommendation by the Secretary-General that the Security Council extend the stationing of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus for a further period of six months,

Noting also that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that, in view of the prevailing conditions in the island, it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 June 1993,

Recalling its resolution 831 (1993) of 27 May 1993, in particular its paragraphs 2 to 4 on financing, as well as its paragraphs 5 and 7 on the restructuring of the Force and the comprehensive reassessment which is to be conducted in December 1993,

Reiterating in particular its call to both sides to cooperate with the Force in order to extend the unmanning agreement of

1989 to all areas of the United Nations-controlled buffer zone where the two sides are in close proximity to each other,

Reaffirming the provisions of its resolution 186 (1964) of 4 March 1964 and other relevant resolutions,

1. Extends once more the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force established under resolution 186 (1964) for a further period ending on 15 December 1993;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices, to keep the Security Council informed of the progress made and to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution by 15 November 1993 as part of the report called for in its resolution 831 (1993);

3. Supports the recommendation of the Secretary-General expressed in paragraph 48 of his report that both sides take reciprocal measures to lower the tension, including mutual commitments, through the Force, to prohibit along the ceasefire lines live ammunition or weapons other than those which are hand-held and to prohibit also firing of weapons within sight or hearing of the buffer zone, and requests the Secretary-General to negotiate the necessary agreements between the parties to implement those measures;

4. Calls upon all the parties concerned to continue to cooperate with the Force on the basis of the present mandate;

5. Calls on both parties to carry forward expeditiously and in a constructive manner the intercommunal talks under the auspices of the Secretary-General, and requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council on progress in the current round of talks.

Decision of 7 July 1993: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

On 1 July 1993, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on his mission of good offices in Cyprus.²⁴ The Secretary-General informed the Council on the extensive preparatory work undertaken by his Deputy Special Representative between mid-April and mid-May in Nicosia with the leaders of the two communities. Those discussions made it possible to develop ample material to enable the two leaders first, to reach agreement on a list of confidence-building measures, including on Varosha and Nicosia International Airport; and, second, to make progress towards reconciling differences on a number of substantive issues as part of the ongoing process to reach agreement on the draft framework contained in the Set of Ideas. Three draft papers had thus emerged from that preparatory process: a list of 14 confidence-building measures; detailed provisions concerning Varosha; and detailed provisions concerning Nicosia International Airport.²⁵ The two leaders had also agreed that the joint meetings to resume on 24 May in New York would be devoted to reaching agreement on confidence-building and that the aforementioned papers would serve as the basis for the discussion.

The Secretary-General further reported that the discussions from 24 May to 1 June in New York had revealed that the Greek Cypriot side was agreeable to the arrangements proposed for Varosha and Nicosia International Airport, provided that no provisions were added that would have the effect of recognizing the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus". The Turkish Cypriot side had stated that the placing of Varosha under United Nations administration was a major concession on its part, for which the establishment of Varosha as a special area for bicomunal contact and commerce, even when supplemented with the reopening of Nicosia International Airport, represented an inadequate recompense. It had repeated that a proportionate compensation would be the removal of the embargo against the Turkish Cypriot side through the lifting of all restrictions on airports and seaports on the Turkish Cypriot side. Serious consideration was given to the views expressed by both sides and the proposed arrangements were adjusted. The revised proposal concerning Varosha was that the fenced area would be placed under United Nations administration as from an agreed date, pending a mutually agreed overall solution to the Cyprus problem. It would be a kind of free-trade zone in which both sides could trade goods and services. The revised proposal on Nicosia International Airport would open the airport for the equal benefit of both sides. On 28 May, the Secretary-General had asked both sides to give their views on the three papers as supplemented. The Turkish Cypriot leader had indicated that he would have to consult first with his authorities as well as with the Government of Turkey. Despite his undertaking, stated on 1 June 1993, to use his visit to Cyprus and Turkey to promote acceptance of the package and to resume the joint meetings in New York on 14 June,²⁶ he had during the visit strongly criticized the package and announced that he would not return to New York.

The Secretary-General observed that the Varosha/Nicosia International Airport package would bring considerable and proportionate benefits to both communities. For the Turkish Cypriot side, it would mean the lifting for all practical purposes of the economic obstacles that had been weighing so heavily on their community. For the Greek Cypriot side, it would open the way for owners of property in the fenced area of Varosha to reclaim possession of their property. Acceptance of such a package would help to overcome the existing mistrust between the two communities and would serve as a catalyst for achieving an overall settlement on the island. He remained hopeful that once the package was fully presented, its benefits would be recognized, as its implementation would undoubtedly constitute the most important forward step in Cyprus in almost two decades. He was also encouraged that the Government of Turkey had supported the package and encouraged its acceptance. He therefore intended to persevere in his efforts to reach agreement on the package without delay, and would send his Special Representative to Cyprus, Greece and Turkey in the coming weeks.

²⁵ See S/26026, annex I.

²⁶ See S/26026, annex II.

By a letter dated 7 July 1993,²⁷ the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General as follows:

I have the honour to inform you that your report of 1 July 1993 on your mission of good offices in Cyprus has been considered by the members of the Council.

The members of the Council have asked me to convey to you their full support for your current efforts. They have noted with appreciation the work undertaken during the extensive preparatory phase in Nicosia and the joint meetings in New York on the package in Nicosia and the joint meetings in New York on the package of confidence-building measures related in particular to Varosha and Nicosia International Airport. They agree with your assessment that the implementation of this package would not only significantly benefit both communities, but would also have a dramatic impact on overcoming the existing mistrust and in facilitating an overall settlement of the Cyprus problem. They fully share your disappointment that Mr. Denktash had not yet adhered to the agreement of 1 June 1993, in which he undertook to promote the acceptance of the package on Varosha and Nicosia International Airport, and that he failed to return to New York, which prevented the resumption of the joint meetings on 14 June. The members of the Council are convinced that once the package is fully presented its significant benefits would be recognized.

The members of the Council wish to underline the obligation of both parties to cooperate with you fully and without further delay in reaching promptly an overall framework agreement on the Cyprus problem and, in the first instance, to arrive at an agreement on the proposals related to Varosha and Nicosia International Airport which will create a climate more conducive to engaging in negotiations on the basis of the set of ideas.

The members of the Council welcome your decision to send your Special Representative to Cyprus, Greece and Turkey in the next few weeks. The members of the Council would like you to submit a full report to the Council in September 1993 on the outcome of your efforts to make progress in your mission of good offices, in particular in achieving an agreement on the proposals related to Varosha and Nicosia International Airport and, if necessary, your recommendation for action by the Council.

Decision of 20 September 1993: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

On 14 September 1993, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on his mission of good offices in Cyprus.²⁸ During July 1993, his representatives had visited the region and had met the leaders of the two communities and the main political parties as well as with representatives of civil society. They had also held meetings with the Greek and Turkish authorities. The discussions with the leaders of the two communities, however, did not reveal any change in their respective positions. The Secretary-General was therefore obliged to report that the Turkish Cypriot side had not yet shown the goodwill and cooperation required to reach an agreement on the package. At the same time, he was encouraged by the widespread interest in the package shown by the Turkish Cypriot community during the discussions. He stressed that the Government of Turkey's reiteration of its full support for the package must be followed up by a concrete effort to make the Turkish Cypriot community aware of its position. He informed the Council that he intended to send two teams of experts to Cyprus in early October to address fully the questions that had been raised concerning the effects of the package, including those relating to the economic imbalance between the two communities and to assess the technical requirements for reopening Nicosia International Airport. The Secretary-General stressed that if his current efforts did not succeed, his mission of good offices would be seriously undermined. If that was the case, he would invite the members of the Council to consider alternative ways to promote the effective implementation of its many resolutions on Cyprus.

By a letter dated 20 September 1993,²⁹ the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General as follows:

I have the honour to inform you that your report of 14 September 1993 on your mission of good offices in Cyprus has been considered by the members of the Council.

The members of the Council have asked me to convey to you their continuing support for your efforts and those of your Special Representative and Deputy Special Representative. They fully endorse your report and your observations on the current situation.

The members of the Council reiterate the obligation of both parties to cooperate with you fully and without further delay in reaching promptly an overall framework agreement on the package of proposals and, in the first instance, to arrive at an agreement on the package of proposals related to Varosha and Nicosia International Airport, which will create a climate more conducive to engaging in negotiations on the basis of the set of ideas. They note with concern that the Turkish Cypriot side has not yet shown the necessary goodwill and cooperation required to achieve an agreement.

The members of the Council express their deep disappointment that an agreement on the package had not yet been reached and agree that you cannot continue your current effort indefinitely. They call on the Turkish Cypriot side to give its active support to the effort. They also recognize the important role that Turkey could play in this effort.

The members of the Council agree that it is encouraging that there is widespread interest in the package within the Turkish Cypriot community. In this context, they support your proposals to send two technical teams to Cyprus to analyse the implications of the package, in the terms suggested in paragraph 20 of your report, and to identify the requirements for making Nicosia International Airport operational.

The members of the Council look forward to receiving the report requested in resolution 831 (1993) of 27 May 1993, which will cover the outcome of your further efforts to achieve an agreement on the Varosha and Nicosia International Airport package, including the results of the two technical missions. On the basis of that report the members of the Council will undertake a thorough review of the situation and, if necessary, consider alternative ways to promote the implementation of the resolutions on Cyprus.

Decision of 15 December 1993 (3322nd meeting): resolution 889 (1993)

On 22 November 1993, pursuant to resolution 831 (1993), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report in connection with the Security

²⁹ S/26475.

Council's comprehensive reassessment of the United Nations operation in Cyprus.³⁰

In his report, the Secretary-General stated that, since December 1990, the strength of UNFICYP had fallen from 2,132 to 1,203 as the results of decisions by troop-contributing countries to withdraw or substantially reduce their contingents. The Force now covered the ceasefire lines more thinly than before and its capacity to react to incidents and to prevent their escalation had been affected. At the same time, the mandate of the Force had remained unchanged, as essentially had the functions deriving from that mandate. UNFICYP should be able to carry out its task, provided that the military on both sides maintained their present level of restraint and cooperation with the Force and that no major incidents occurred. He noted that a number of arguments continued to weigh heavily against the deployment of military observers. There was no clear agreement between the two sides on the delineation of the ceasefire lines or about what was permitted under the ceasefire. Moreover, because of intense distrust between the two communities, economic activity in the buffer zone had to be carefully controlled by UNFICYP to ensure that it did not lead to incidents. The alternative option of dividing the Force's functions between infantry and military observers was not viable, and he did not recommend it, because the unarmed military observers would not have the capacity to deploy an armed patrol as soon as they observed an incident.

The Secretary-General said that while UNFICYP had successfully kept the peace, the two sides had not used the opportunity to reach an overall agreement. It was often asked whether the Force was not part of the problem in Cyprus, rather than part of the solution. The ancillary question was how long UNFICYP would remain on the island. In weighing those questions, the Council might take into account the following considerations: (a) each side had its own perspective on the future of UNFICYP; (b) if the Force were to be withdrawn, the present buffer zone would be a vacuum that each side would want to fill; and (c) a negotiated settlement, mutually acceptable to the two communities, was needed. The Secretary-General expressed his intention to concentrate his immediate efforts on the package of confidence-building measures, with a view to facilitating the overall framework agreement. He also intended to resume intensive contacts with both sides and with Turkey, after the elections in the Turkish Cypriot community, on 12 December 1993. In the meantime, he urged once again that, as a first step towards the withdrawal of non-Cypriot troops, the Turkish forces on the island should be reduced to their level of 1982 and that the reduction be reciprocated by a suspension of weapons acquisition programmes on the Greek Cypriot side. He would report to the Council on the outcome of his efforts by the end of February 1994.

The Secretary-General further called upon the military on both sides to cooperate with UNFICYP in extending the 1989 unmanning agreement so that it would cover all areas of the buffer zone where they were in close proximity to each other. That would significantly reduce the tensions and facilitate the Force's tasks. He also urged them, and especially the Turkish forces, in line with resolution 839 (1993), to enter into mutual commitments to prohibit along the ceasefire line live ammunition or weapons other than hand-held ones, as well as the firing of weapons within sight or hearing of the buffer zone. In the prevailing circumstances, he recommended an extension of its mandate for a further six months, until 15 June 1994.³¹

At its 3322nd meeting, on 15 December 1993, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (China) drew the attention of the members of the Council to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations,³² and read out a revision to be made to the draft in its provisional form. He also drew their attention to several other documents.³³

³¹ Subsequently, the Secretary-General informed the Council that the Governments of Cyprus, Greece and the United Kingdom had indicated their concurrence with the proposed extension. The Government of Turkey continued to support the position of the Turkish Cypriot side, as expressed at previous Council meetings on the extension of the mandate (S/26777/Add.1).

The draft resolution, as orally revised, was thereupon put to the vote and was adopted unanimously as resolution 889 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 186 (1964) of 4 March 1964 and other relevant resolutions,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 22 November and 13 December 1993 submitted pursuant to resolutions 831 (1993) of 27 May 1993 and 839 (1993) of 11 June 1993 in connection with the Security Council's comprehensive reassessment of the United Nations operation in Cyprus,

Noting the recommendation by the Secretary-General that the Security Council extend the stationing of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus in its present strength and structure for a further period of six months,

Noting also that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that, in view of the prevailing conditions in the island, it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 December 1993,

1. Extends once more the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force established under resolution 186 (1964) for a further period ending on 15 June 1994;

2. Notes the conclusion of the Secretary-General that the present circumstances do not allow for any modification in the structure and strength of the force, and requests him to keep those matters under constant review with a view to the further possible restructuring of the Force;

3. Calls upon the military authorities on both sides to ensure that no incidents occur along the buffer zone and to extend their full cooperation to the Force;

4. Urges all concerned once again to commit themselves to a significant reduction in the number of foreign troops in the Republic of Cyprus and a reduction of defence spending in the Republic of Cyprus to help restore confidence between the parties and as a first step towards the withdrawal of non-Cypriot forces as set out in the set of ideas;

5. Also calls upon the military authorities on both sides, in line with paragraph 3 of resolution 839 (1993), to begin discussions with the Force without further delay with a view to entering into mutual commitments to prohibit along the ceasefire lines live ammunition or weapons other than those which are hand-held, and to prohibit also the firing of weapons within sight or hearing of the buffer zone;

6. Further calls upon the military authorities on both sides to cooperate with the Force in extending the 1989 unmanning agreement to cover all areas of the buffer zone where the two sides are in close proximity to each other;

7. Urges the leaders of both communities to promote tolerance and reconciliation between the two communities as recommended in paragraph 102 of the report of the Secretary-General of 22 November 1993;

8. Reaffirms that the status quo is unacceptable, and encourages the Secretary-General and his Special Representative to pursue the Secretary-General's mission of good offices on the basis of the set of ideas and the package of confidence-building measures relating to Varosha and Nicosia International Airport referred to in paragraph 45 of the above-mentioned report of the Secretary-General;

9. Notes with interest the confirmation by the team of international economic experts that the package of confidence-building measures holds significant and proportionate benefits for both sides, and looks forward to receiving the full reports of the economic and civil aviation experts;

10. Welcomes in this context the decision of the Secretary-General to resume intensive contacts with both sides and with others concerned and to concentrate at this stage on achieving an agreement on the package of confidence-building measures, intended to facilitate the political process towards an overall settlement;

11. Also welcomes the declared support of the Government of Turkey for the package of confidence-building measures, would also welcome a statement of support for that package by the Government of Greece, and expresses the hope that rapid progress will now be made on achieving agreement on the package;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Security Council by the end of February 1994 on the outcome of his efforts to achieve an agreement on the package of confidence-building measures;

13. Decides to undertake, on the basis of that report, a thorough review of the situation, including the future role of the United Nations, and, if necessary, to consider alternative ways to promote the implementation of its resolutions on Cyprus.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of Venezuela said his country had voted in favour of the resolution because it considered that the extension of the UNFICYP mandate was justified in the present circumstances. Nevertheless, his delegation believed that the decision was linked to the Council's appeal in paragraph 7 of the resolution to the leaders of the two communities to promote tolerance and reconciliation between the two communities. His delegation also considered that decision to be linked to paragraph 12 and 13 of the resolution. It believed that, upon receiving the Secretary-General's next report, the Council should consider the future renewal of the mandate of UNFICYP in the light of real progress achieved towards the definitive solution of the conflict and carry out a thorough evaluation of that mandate. The speaker contended that the mandate of UNFICYP had been established in vague terms and with the passage of time the Force had been assigned additional functions that in many cases were not appropriate for a United Nations peacekeeping operation.³⁴

Decision of 11 March 1994 (3347th meeting):
resolution 902 (1994)

On 4 March 1994, pursuant to resolution 889 (1993), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on his mission of good offices in Cyprus in which he reported on his efforts to achieve agreement on the package of confidence-building measures.³⁵ His Special Representative had visited Cyprus from 22 to 26 January 1994 and had held intensive discussions with the leaders of the two communities, proceeding thereafter to Greece and Turkey. Upon his return to Cyprus, both leaders had confirmed to him their acceptance in principle of the package on confidence-building measures and their readiness to work out the modalities for its implementation. Proximity talks were launched on 17 February and addressed seven key issues: (i) the United Nations administration of the fenced area of Varosha and of Nicosia International Airport; (ii) the schedule for implementing the package; (iii) arrangements for making the fenced area of Varosha a special area for bicomunal contact and commerce; (iv) traffic rights at Nicosia airport for foreign airlines and those registered in Turkey; (v) safe operation of the airport; (vi) free access to the airport for civilian passenger and cargo traffic from both sides; and (vii) consideration of the 12 additional confidence-building measures set out in the report of the Secretary-General of July 1993.³⁶ The Secretary-General noted that the proceedings to date had clarified the position of the two sides to the point where his representatives could now bring forward ideas that ought to enable the two leaders to reach common understandings on the implementation of the package. He emphasized the importance of reaching a positive

Annex I to the report contains a letter dated 17 December 1993 from the Secretary-General to the leaders of the two communities in Cyprus, to the Prime Ministers of Greece and Turkey and to the President of the Security Council, forwarding the reports of the two teams of experts sent to Cyprus. conclusion on those issues without delay. The confidence-building measures would open avenues of contact between the two communities and would lay the foundation for the kind of relationship that should exist in a federation. He suggested that the Security Council might undertake a thorough review by the end of March and therefore he would report to the Council by that time.

At its 3347th meeting, on 11 March 1994, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (France) drew the attention of the members of the Council to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.³⁷

The draft resolution was thereupon put to the vote and was adopted unanimously as resolution 902 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling its relevant resolutions on Cyprus,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 4 March 1994 on his mission of good offices in Cyprus, submitted pursuant to resolution 889 (1993) of 15 December 1993,

Recalling its support for the decision of the Secretary-General to concentrate at this stage on achieving an agreement on the confidence-building measures relating to Varosha and Nicosia International Airport, as well as the other measures outlined in annex I to his report of 1 July 1993,

Reaffirming that the confidence-building measures, while not an end in themselves, nor a substitute for the wider political process, would offer significant benefits to both communities and would facilitate the political process towards an overall settlement,

1. Reiterates that the maintenance of the status quo is unacceptable;

2. Welcomes the acceptance in principle by both parties of the confidence-building measures relating, in particular, to Varosha and Nicosia International Airport;

3. Welcomes the fact that intensive discussions have made it possible for the representatives of the Secretary-General to bring forward ideas that should facilitate the discussions aimed at reaching agreement on the key issues for implementing the confidence-building measures, and stresses the need to conclude such an agreement without delay;

³⁷ S/1994/285.

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a further report by the end of March 1994 on the outcome of his efforts to finalize that agreement;

5. Decides to review the matter further, pursuant to paragraph 13 of resolution 889 (1993), on the basis of that report.

Decision of 11 April 1994: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

On 4 April 1994, pursuant to resolution 902 (1994), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on his mission of good offices in Cyprus.³⁸ On 9 March 1994, his Deputy Special Representative had submitted to each leader a paper entitled "Draft ideas for the implementation of the package of confidence-building measures". Extensive discussions had been engaged and had led on 21 March to a revised draft which was submitted to both parties on 21 March. The Turkish Cypriot leader had voiced numerous objections, claiming that the new text contained changes from the wording of the original package of 1 July 1993 which favoured the Greek Cypriot side. The leader of the Greek Cypriot community, on the other hand, had stated that, while he did not like many of the changes that had been introduced to the 21 March text, he was prepared to accept the revised text if the Turkish Cypriot leader would do likewise. The Secretary-General further informed the Council that the discussions between his representatives and the Turkish Cypriot side had not yielded the response necessary to make an agreement possible. He continued to believe, however, that the package of confidence-building measures offered real benefits to both sides. He would therefore pursue his efforts and report to the Council by the end of April.

By a letter dated 11 April 1994,³⁹ the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General as follows:

The members of the Security Council have considered your interim report of 4 April 1994 on your efforts to finalize an agreement on the modalities for implementing the package of confidence-building measures outlined in your report of 1 July 1993. They also had the benefit of a useful and informative briefing from your Special Representative, Mr. Joe Clark, on 8 April.

The members of the Council have asked me to convey to you their full support for the intensive efforts which you, your Special Representative and his Deputy made to facilitate agreement on the key issues for implementing the confidence-building measures without delay. They regret that insufficient progress has been made to enable agreement to be reached in the time-scale envisaged in your report of 4 March 1994. This is a matter of concern. They note that the leader of the Greek Cypriot community is ready to accept the 21 March 1994 text of ideas on implementation, provided that the Turkish Cypriot leader, who has voiced numerous objections, does likewise. They believe that the next few weeks will provide an important test of the commitment of the parties to making progress towards an overall settlement.

The members of the Council take this opportunity to reiterate the terms of Council resolutions 889 (1993) of 15 December 1993 and 902 (1994) of 11 March 1994. They endorse your approach and underline the need to conclude an agreement on the implementation of the confidence-building measures on the basis suggested by you before the end of April. They look forward to receiving your full report at that time.

Decision of 15 June 1994 (3390th meeting):

On 30 May 1994, pursuant to resolutions 889 (1993) and 902 (1994), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on his mission of good offices.⁴⁰ He informed the Council that despite further contacts with the parties concerned no agreement was reached on the 21 March text. The Secretary-General observed that the Security Council was facing again a familiar scenario: the absence of agreement due essentially to a lack of political will on the Turkish Cypriot side. He put forward a range of options that the Security Council could examine in its review of the situation. One would be to conclude that the political will to resolve the conflict did not exist and that the peacekeeping and peacemaking resources should be redirected elsewhere. Alternatively, it could be concluded that the good offices mission, which depended on the consent and cooperation of the parties, was not adequate to deal with the situation, and the international community, through the Council, could look into coercive measures. Another possibility was to put aside the package currently under discussion and resume discussion of substantive questions which had been presented to the parties in July 1992.⁴¹ Yet another option would be to undertake a fundamental and far-reaching reflection on how to approach the Cyprus problem and consult the members of the Council, the Guarantor Powers,⁴² the two leaders in Cyprus and others, with a view to exploring far-reaching options. A last option would be to build on the fact that both sides had accepted in principle the package of confidence-building measures and to renew the international community's efforts to obtain agreement on their implementation. A decision by the Council on any of the options could be preceded by international consultations or deliberations, such as an international conference, a visit to the area by a commission composed of some or all Council members, or a further visit by his Special Representative. All options, except the first, would require the continued presence of UNFICYP in the island.⁴³

On 7 June 1994, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the United Nations operation in Cyprus,⁴⁴ covering developments from 23 November 1993 to 31 May 1994. The Secretary-General reported that detailed parallel discussions between UNFICYP and the respective military authorities on further unmanning of the buffer zone and on prohibition of live ammunition, weapons other than those that were hand-held and the firing of weapons within sight or hearing of the buffer zone had not taken place owing to the position taken by the Turkish Forces. For the same reasons, difficulties with regard to access to Varosha persisted. UNFICYP intended to redouble its effort to engage the Turkish Forces and others in practical discussions on those important military issues and on the reinstatement of long-standing practical arrangements with regard to access to Varosha. He would report to the Council on those matters at the next opportunity. The Secretary-General was also concerned by the lack of progress in those areas as well as in efforts to reduce the level of troops on the island, particularly when taken in the context of the lack of political will recently encountered in the efforts to reach agreement on implementation of the package of confidence-building measures. In the prevailing circumstances, the Secretary-General believed that the continued presence of the Force on the island remained indispensable, and recommended an extension of its mandate until 31 December 1994.⁴⁵

At its 3390th meeting, on 15 June 1994, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General dated 7 June 1994 in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Oman) drew the attention of the members of the Council to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.⁴⁶ The draft resolution was thereupon put to the vote and was adopted unanimously as resolution 927 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 7 June 1994 on the United Nations operation in Cyprus,

Taking note also of the recommendation by the Secretary-General that the Security Council extend the stationing of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus for a further period of six and one half months,

Noting that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 June 1994,

Expressing concern that, during the period reviewed in the report of the Secretary-General, patrols of the Force continued to encounter interference in or around the buffer zone, that ceasefire violations continued and that no progress was made on an unmanning agreement,

Concerned also that there has been no progress towards a final political solution, no significant reduction in the number of foreign troops in the Republic of Cyprus and no reduction of defence spending in the Republic of Cyprus,

Recalling its resolution 831 (1993) of 27 May 1993, and in particular its provisions on the financing of the Force,

Recalling also its resolution 889 (1993) of 15 December 1993,

Reaffirming the provisions of its resolution 186 (1964) of 4 March 1964 and other relevant resolutions,

Noting that it is continuing its consideration of the report of the Secretary-General of 30 May 1994 on his mission of good offices in Cyprus and that a further communication is awaited on the subject, ⁴⁵ Subsequently, the Secretary-General informed the Council that the Governments of Cyprus, Greece and the United Kingdom had indicated their concurrence with the proposed extension. The Government of Turkey continued to support the position of the Turkish Cypriot side, as expressed in previous Council meetings on the extension of the mandate (S/1994/680/Add.1).

⁴⁶ S/1994/706.

1. Extends the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus for a further period ending on 31 December 1994;

2. Calls upon the military authorities on both sides to ensure that no incidents occur along the buffer zone and to extend their full cooperation to the Force;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to keep under review the structure and strength of the Force with a view to the possible restructuring of it;

4. Urges all concerned to commit themselves to a significant reduction in the number of foreign troops in the Republic of Cyprus and a reduction of defence spending in the Republic of Cyprus to help restore confidence between the parties and as a first step towards the withdrawal of non-Cypriot forces as set out in the set of ideas;

5. Once again calls upon the military authorities on both sides, in line with paragraph 3 of its resolution 839 (1993) of 11 June 1993, to begin discussions with the Force without further delay with a view to entering into mutual commitments to prohibit along the ceasefire lines live ammunition or weapons other than those which are hand-held and to prohibit also the firing of weapons within sight or hearing of the buffer zone;

6. Also calls upon the military authorities on both sides to cooperate with the Force in extending the 1989 unmanning agreement to cover all areas of the buffer zone where the two sides are in close proximity to each other;

7. Also urges the leaders of both communities to promote tolerance and reconciliation between the two communities as recommended in paragraph 7 of its resolution 889 (1993);

8. Stresses the urgent need for the implementation of the confidence-building measures referred to in the report of the Secretary-General of 1 July 1993;

9. Stresses also that it will conduct a thorough and comprehensive review of the situation, including the role of the United Nations in Cyprus and the progress achieved towards a political settlement, in the context of its consideration of the report of the Secretary-General of 30 May 1994 and the further communication, and in particular a re-evaluation based upon the options proposed by the Secretary-General;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution by 15 December 1994.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of Pakistan said his delegation would have preferred a brief procedural resolution extending the Force's mandate without going into the substance of the political issues. Those would be best addressed when the Council carried out an in-depth consideration of the Secretary-General's report of 30 May 1994 and his forthcoming report. His delegation remained optimistic about the prospects for positive results on the package of confidence-building measures. He noted the recent steps taken by the Turkish Cypriot side in that regard, which demonstrated the leadership's political will to make progress on the question of confidence-building measures, as well as on an overall political settlement of the problem.⁴⁷

Decision of 29 July 1994 (3412th meeting):

By a letter dated 28 June 1994,⁴⁸ the Secretary-General brought to the Council's attention the developments that had taken place since the submission of his last report on 30 May. The Secretary-General recalled that discussion of the implementation of the package of confidence-building measures had been based on a paper dated 21 March 1994,⁴⁹ which was subsequently revised on the basis of extensive discussions with both leaders. On 6 June 1994, the Turkish Cypriot leader had provided the Secretary-General's Deputy Special Representative with further information on his side's position which clearly showed that it had evolved in a positive direction. However, in all recent discussions, the Turkish Cypriot leader had insisted that the 21 March paper should be amended to incorporate the clarifications which had emerged in Vienna in May while his Deputy Special Representative had argued that those clarifications would not require any textual amendment but would be reflected in a letter from the Secretary-General to both leaders and would also be made available to the Council. Meanwhile, the leader of the Greek Cypriot community had reiterated his acceptance of the 21 March paper but had stated that he could not accept the continuation of negotiations on the confidence-building measures. The Secretary-General observed that there was now a very substantial measure of agreement on the substance of the confidence-building measures. However, agreement was lacking on how to record the clarifications that had emerged. He therefore suggested that the Council begin considering the options presented in his report of 30 May.

At its 3412th meeting, on 29 July 1994, the Security Council included the letter from the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Pakistan) drew the attention of the members of the Council to the report of the Secretary-General of 30 May 1994,⁵⁰ as well as to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.⁵¹ The resolution was thereupon put to the vote and was adopted by 14 votes in favour⁵² as resolution 939 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling its relevant resolutions on Cyprus,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 30 May 1994 and his letter dated 28 June 1994, concerning his mission of good offices,

Reaffirming, in this context, that the confidence-building measures, while not an end in themselves, nor a substitute for the wider political process, would offer significant benefits to both communities and would facilitate the political process towards an overall settlement,

Recalling the acceptance in principle by both parties of the confidence-building measures, and welcoming the acceptance by the leader of the Greek Cypriot Community of the 21 March 1994 "Draft ideas for the implementation of the package of confidence-building measures", and welcoming also the considerable progress towards agreement made by the leader of the Turkish Cypriot community, as described in the letter from the Secretary-General dated 28 June 1994,

Noting that there is now a substantial measure of agreement on the substance of the confidence-building measures and the modalities for their implementation, but also noting with concern that neither leader is yet prepared to proceed to their implementation on the basis outlined in the letter from the Secretary-General dated 28 June 1994,

Having studied the options and ideas for future action set out in paragraphs 57 to 62 of the report of the Secretary-General of 30 May 1994,

1. Reiterates that the maintenance of the status quo is unacceptable;

2. Reaffirms its position that a Cyprus settlement must be based on a State of Cyprus with a single sovereignty and international personality and a single citizenship, with its independence and territorial integrity safeguarded, and comprising two politically equal communities as described in the relevant Security Council resolutions, in a bicomunal and bizonal federation, and that such a settlement must exclude union in whole or in part with any other country or any form of partition or secession;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to begin consultations with members of the Council, with the Guarantor Powers and with the two leaders in Cyprus with a view to undertaking a fundamental and far-reaching reflection on ways of approaching the Cyprus problem in a manner that will yield results, and reiterates its call to the parties to demonstrate their commitment by cooperating fully to this end;

4. Urges, in this context, the parties to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General and his Special Representative to achieve agreement on the modalities for implementing the confidence-building measures at the earliest possible time;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report by the end of October 1994, including a programme for achieving an overall solution to the issues involved in the Cyprus problem, following his consultations referred to in paragraph 3 above and on progress made towards the implementation of the confidence-building measures;

6. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 4 November 1994: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

On 29 October 1994, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a report on his mission of good offices in Cyprus,⁵³ informing the Council of action taken in pursuance of resolution 939 (1994). On 18 August, he had written to the Council members and the Guarantor Powers, seeking their views on matters covered by the resolution. The responses had indicated continuing support for his good offices, but had reaffirmed, for the most part, the positions taken in that resolution. In September, his Special Representative had travelled to the United Kingdom, Cyprus and Turkey for consultations with the Guarantor Powers and the parties. Upon his return, he had reported that matters were close to an impasse both on the substance of the Cyprus problem and on the confidence-building measures. The Secretary-General had thus written again to both leaders on 10 October, inviting them to join his Deputy Special Representative in informal consultations to explore further concrete ways for implementing the confidence-building measures and achieving an overall settlement of the problem. The Secretary-General informed the Council that the invitation had been accepted and that the first meetings had taken place on 18 October. He intended to submit a definitive report at a later stage.

⁵³ S/1994/1229.

By a letter dated 4 November 1994,⁵⁴ the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General as follows:

The members of the Security Council wish to express their appreciation for the report on your mission of good offices in Cyprus of 29 October 1994. The members of the Council note that your review of the situation remains in progress. They look forward to receiving your definitive report at an appropriate time.

The members of the Council wish to take this opportunity to thank you, your Special Representative and you Deputy Special Representative for the continuous efforts aimed at a peaceful settlement of the Cyprus problem in accordance with relevant Council resolutions.

Decision of 21 December 1994 (3484th meeting): resolution 969 (1994)

On 12 December 1994, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the United Nations operation in Cyprus, covering developments from 1 June to 12 December 1994.⁵⁵ Reporting on his mission of good offices, the Secretary-General said that following recent separate meetings with the leaders of both communities, he had instructed his Deputy Special Representative to continue his contacts with the two leaders and to make every effort to find a basis for a resumption of direct talks.

The Secretary-General further reported that during the last six months, UNFICYP had continued to carry out its functions in Cyprus effectively, with the cooperation of both sides, and the situation remained generally quiet. That, however, should not obscure the fact that there was only a ceasefire in Cyprus, not peace. In the absence of progress towards a settlement, the overall situation remained subject to sudden tensions, generated by events outside the island, as well as from within. In that connection, he emphasized that the relations between Greece and Turkey were particularly important.

The Secretary-General said that the excessive level of armaments and forces in Cyprus, and the rate at which they were being strengthened, gave cause for serious concern. Moreover, it was to be deplored that the Council's call to all concerned to commit themselves to a significant reduction in the number of foreign troops and defence spending in the Republic of Cyprus had not been heeded. Similarly, so far it had not been possible to make progress on the modest measures, repeatedly called for by the Council, aimed at reducing the confrontation between the two sides along the ceasefire lines. The Secretary-General concluded that the presence of UNFICYP remained indispensable and he therefore recommended an extension of its mandate for a further six months, until 30 June 1995.⁵⁶

At its 3484th meeting, on 21 December 1994, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Rwanda) drew the attention of the members of the Council to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.⁵⁷

The draft resolution was thereupon put to the vote and was adopted unanimously as resolution 969 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 12 December 1994 on the United Nations operation in Cyprus,

Taking note also of the recommendation of the Secretary-General that the Security Council extend the stationing of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus for a further period of six months,

Noting that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that, in view of the prevailing conditions in the island, it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 31 December 1994,

Expressing concern that, during the period reviewed in the report of the Secretary-General, patrols of the Force continued to encounter interference in or around the buffer zone, that ceasefire violations continued and that no progress was made on an unmanning agreement,

Expressing its concern once again that there has been no progress towards a final political solution, no significant reduction in the number of foreign troops in the Republic of Cyprus and no reduction of defence spending in the Republic of Cyprus,

Recalling its resolution 831 (1993) of 27 May 1993 and, in particular, its provisions on the financing of the Force,

Recalling also its resolution 889 (1993) of 15 December 1993,

Reaffirming the provisions of its resolution 186 (1964) of 4 March 1964 and other relevant resolutions,

Noting that a review of the situation on the Secretary-General's mission of good offices in Cyprus remains in progress, and looking forward to receiving a definitive report at an appropriate time,

1. Extends the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus for a further period ending on 30 June 1995;

2. Calls upon the military authorities on both sides to ensure that no incidents occur along the buffer zone and to extend their full cooperation to the Force;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to keep under review the structure and strength of the Force with a view to the possible restructuring of it;

5. Once again calls upon the military authorities on both sides, in line with paragraph 3 of resolution 839 (1993) of 11 June 1993, to begin discussions with the Force without further delay with a view to entering into mutual commitments to prohibit along the ceasefire lines live ammunition or weapons other than those which are hand-held and to prohibit also the firing of weapons within sight or hearing of the buffer zone;

7. Also urges the leaders of both communities to promote tolerance and reconciliation between the two communities as recommended in paragraph 7 of resolution 889 (1993);

8. Welcomes the decision of the Secretary-General to continue contacts with the two leaders, to make every effort to find common ground for the basis for a resumption of direct talks;

9. Reaffirms the importance it attaches to early progress being made on the substance of the Cyprus question and on the implementation of the confidence-building measures referred to in the report of the Secretary-General of 1 July 1993;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution by 15 June 1995.

Decision of 23 June 1995 (3547th meeting):
resolution 1000 (1995)

On 15 June 1995, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the United Nations operation in Cyprus covering developments from 13 December 1994 to 15 June 1995.⁵⁸ The Secretary-General reported that during the period under review, both sides had generally respected the ceasefire and the military status quo. However, UNFICYP had intervened in response to numerous minor incidents, to correct violations and prevent any escalation. He stated that, despite the Council's call urging a significant reduction in the number of foreign troops in Cyprus,⁵⁹ both sides had continued to improve their military capabilities through the acquisition or upgrading of armaments and equipment and the recruitment of additional personnel. Nor had progress been made so far in pursuance of the Council's call on both sides to prohibit the firing of weapons within sight or hearing of the buffer zone and to extend the unmanning agreement to cover all areas of the buffer zone.⁶⁰

The Secretary-General also reported that his representatives had continued contacts with the leaders of the two communities and with the Government of Greece and Turkey with a view to finding a basis for a resumption of direct talks.

The Secretary-General concluded that, in view of the prevailing circumstances, the presence of UNFICYP remained indispensable. He therefore recommended an extension of its mandate until 31 December 1995.⁶¹

At its 3547th meeting, on 23 June 1995, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Germany) drew the attention of the members of the Council to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's consultations.⁶²

The Security Council,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 15 June 1995 on the United Nations operation in Cyprus,

Taking note of the recommendation of the Secretary-General that the Security Council extend the mandate of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus for a further period of six months,

Noting that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it is necessary to keep the force in Cyprus beyond 30 June 1995,

Reaffirming its earlier relevant resolutions on Cyprus, and in particular resolutions 186 (1964) of 4 March 1964 and 969 (1994) of 21 December 1994,

Expressing its concern that there has been no progress towards a final political solution,

Noting that no progress has been made on extending the unmanning agreement of 1989,

Noting also that a review of the situation on the Secretary-General's mission of good offices in Cyprus remains in progress, and looking forward to receiving a definitive report at an appropriate time,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus for a further period ending on 31 December 1995;

2. Calls upon the military authorities on both sides to ensure that no incidents occur along the buffer zone and to extend their full cooperation to the Force;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to keep under review the structure and strength of the Forces with a view to its possible restructuring, bearing in mind the possible implications of an agreement on the extension of the unmanning agreement of 1989;

4. Expresses concern about the modernization and upgrading of military forces in the Republic of Cyprus and the lack of progress towards a significant reduction in the number of foreign troops in the Republic of Cyprus, urges once again all concerned to commit themselves to such a reduction and to a reduction of defence spending in the Republic of Cyprus to help to restore confidence between the parties and as a first step towards the withdrawal of non-Cypriot forces as described in the set of ideas, and calls upon the Secretary-General to promote efforts in this direction;

5. Expresses concern also about the failure by the military authorities on both sides to take reciprocal measures to prohibit along the ceasefire lines live ammunition or weapons other than those which are hand-held and to prohibit also the firing of weapons within sight or hearing of the buffer zone, and calls upon those authorities to enter into discussions with the Force on this matter in line with paragraph 3 of resolution 839 (1993) of 11 June 1993;

6. Regrets the failure to reach agreement on the extension of the unmanning agreement of 1989 to cover all areas of the buffer zone where the two sides are in close proximity to each other, and calls upon the military authorities on both sides to cooperate urgently with the Force to this end;

7. Urges the leaders of both communities to promote tolerance and reconciliation between the two communities as recommended in the relevant reports of the Secretary-General;

8. Welcomes the Secretary-General's decision to continue contacts with the two leaders to make every effort to find common ground for the basis for a resumption of direct talks;

9. Reaffirms the importance it attaches to early progress being made on the substance of the Cyprus question and on the implementation of the confidence-building measures as called for in resolution 939 (1994) of 29 July 1994;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report by 10 December 1995 on the implementation of the present resolution and on any obstacles he may have encountered;

11. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 11 July 1995: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

By a letter dated 7 July 1995,⁶³ the Secretary-General informed the Council that the Turkish Cypriot authorities had begun large-scale excavations in the old city of Nicosia, immediately behind the Turkish forces' ceasefire line in an area specifically covered by the 1989 unmanning agreement. Although the Turkish Cypriot authorities had informed UNFICYP that they intended to build a playground at the site, the extensive digging of trenches had raised doubts as to the real purpose. As provided for in the 1989 unmanning agreement, the Force had requested regular access to the excavations, as well as a detailed briefing on the construction plans. Regrettably, both requests had been denied. For its part, the Government of Cyprus had indicated that, if the existing situation was not rectified, it would consider that the unmanning agreement had been breached and would accordingly contemplate taking countermeasures. Despite United Nations representations to the Turkish Cypriot side, no progress had been made towards a resolution of the problem.

⁶³ S/1995/561.

The Secretary-General cautioned that if the situation was not resolved quickly, it would not only present an obstacle to the implementation of resolution 1000 (1995) but would also put at risk the unmanning agreement of 1989 and the benefits that had flowed from it.

By a letter dated 11 July 1995,⁶⁴ the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General as follows:

The members of the Security Council have considered your letter dated 7 July 1995 concerning the requests by the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus to the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot authorities regarding access by the Force to the excavations currently being undertaken in the old city of Nicosia, Cyprus, and the need for a full and detailed briefing on the plans which have been put into effect.

The members of the Council recall the provisions of resolution 1000 (1995) of 23 June 1995, in which the Council called upon the military authorities on both sides in Cyprus to cooperate fully with the Force. The members of the Council note that the requests by the Force regarding the excavations in question fall within the terms of the unmanning agreement of 1989, and extend their full support to the efforts being made by the United Nations to secure access without further delay by the Force to inspect the excavations. The members ask you to inform the Council of the outcome of the inspection, once it has taken place.

By a letter dated 25 July 1995,⁶⁵ the Secretary-General informed the President of the Security Council that, on 13 July, his Deputy Special Representative had received a detailed briefing by the Turkish Cypriot authorities on the excavations carried out by them and had visited the site. On 14 and 15 July, two United Nations technical teams had inspected the area. Based on their findings, UNFICYP concluded that the construction did not indicate work carried out to normal military specifications. At the same time, the construction appeared unnecessarily elaborate and costly for its stated purpose. His Deputy Special Representative had also informed him that the Turkish Cypriot authorities had agreed that UNFICYP would have unhindered regular access to the site during the work and thereafter. Those arrangements would enable UNFICYP to satisfy itself that the new construction continued to be used exclusively for civilian purposes.

Decision of 19 December 1995 (3608th meeting):

On 10 December 1995, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the United Nations operation in Cyprus, covering developments from 16 June to 10 December 1995.⁶⁶ The Secretary-General reported that his representatives had continued contacts with the leaders of the two communities in Cyprus and the parties concerned, with a view to finding a basis for a resumption of direct talks. He noted that almost all of the elements required for a just and lasting settlement were on the table. He was hoping that in the next few months it would be possible to generate the necessary political will to overcome the long-standing deadlock in the negotiating process.

The Secretary-General again expressed his concern at the excessive levels of military forces and armaments in Cyprus and at the rate at which they were being strengthened. Neither side had heeded the Council's repeated calls for a significant reduction of foreign troops and in defence spending in Cyprus. In addition, it had not been possible to make progress even on modest measures aimed at reducing confrontation between the two sides along the ceasefire lines.

The Secretary-General further noted that the large attendance at the bicomunal events organized by UNFICYP, in connection with the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations, had demonstrated that there was a strong desire on the part of both Greek and Turkish Cypriots to develop contacts and mutual understanding with their compatriots in the other community.

Referring to the humanitarian situation, he said that the review conducted by UNFICYP had shown that the Greek Cypriots and Maronites in the northern part of the island were far from leading the normal life they had been promised under the agreement reached between the two sides in 1975.⁶⁷ Although the Turkish Cypriot authorities had recently announced limited measures to improve the situation, much more needed to be done. UNFICYP would pursue the matter and would follow up with the Government of Cyprus on the measures to eliminate any discrimination against or harassment of the Turkish Cypriots living in the southern part of the island. The Secretary-General concluded that the presence of UNFICYP on the island remained indispensable and therefore recommended an extension of its mandate until 30 June 1996.⁶⁸

At its 3608th meeting, on 19 December 1995, the Security Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Russian Federation) drew the attention of the members of the Council to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.⁶⁹

The draft resolution was thereupon put to the vote and was adopted unanimously as resolution 1032 (1995), which reads:

The Security Council,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 10 December 1995 on the United Nations operation in Cyprus,

Taking note of the recommendation of the Secretary-General that the Security Council extend the mandate of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus,

Noting that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it is necessary to keep the force in Cyprus beyond 31 December 1995,

Reaffirming its earlier relevant resolutions on Cyprus, and in particular resolutions 186 (1964) of 4 March 1964 and 1000 (1995) of 23 June 1995,

Expressing its concern that there has been no progress towards a final political solution,

Noting that no progress has been made on extending the unmanning agreement of 1989,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus for a further period ending on 30 June 1996;

2. Calls upon the military authorities on both sides to ensure that no incidents occur along the buffer zone and to extend their full cooperation to the Force;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to keep under review the structure and strength of the Force with a view to its possible restructuring, and to present any new considerations he may have in this regard;

4. Welcomes the humanitarian review undertaken by the Force with regard to the living conditions of the Greek Cypriots and the Maronites living in the northern part of the island and of Turkish Cypriots living in the southern part of the island, supports the recommendations of the Force contained in the report of the Secretary-General, and decides to keep the matter under review;

5. Expresses concern about the continuing modernization and upgrading of military forces in the Republic of Cyprus and the lack of progress towards a significant reduction in the number of foreign troops in the Republic of Cyprus, urges once again all concerned to commit themselves to such a reduction and to a reduction of defence spending in the Republic of Cyprus to help restore confidence between the parties and as a first step towards the withdrawal of non-Cypriot forces as described in the set of ideas, and calls upon the Secretary-General to promote efforts in this direction;

6. Expresses concern also about the failure by the military authorities on both sides to take reciprocal measures to prohibit along the ceasefire lines live ammunition or weapons other than those which are hand-held and to prohibit also the firing of weapons within sight or hearing of the buffer zone, and calls upon those authorities to enter into discussions with the Force on this matter in line with paragraph 3 of resolution 839 (1993) of 11 June 1993;

7. Regrets the failure to reach agreement on the extension of the 1989 unarming agreement to cover all areas of the buffer zone where the two sides are in close proximity to each other, and calls upon the military authorities on both sides to cooperate urgently with the Force to this end;

8. Welcomes the initiative of the Force in organizing successful bicomunal events, urges the leaders of both communities to promote tolerance, confidence and reconciliation between the two communities as recommended in the relevant reports of the Secretary-General, and calls upon them to promote further bicomunal contacts and to remove obstacles to such contacts;

9. Welcomes the Secretary-General's decision to continue contacts with the two leaders to make every effort to find common ground for the basis for a resumption of direct talks;

10. Reaffirms the importance it attaches to early progress being made on the substance of the Cyprus question and on the implementation of the confidence-building measures as called for in resolution 939 (1994) of 29 July 1994;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report during the coming mandate period on his mission of good offices, including a full assessment of his efforts towards reaching a settlement of the situation in Cyprus;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report by 10 June 1996 on the implementation of the present resolution;

13. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

21. Items relating to the situation in the former Yugoslavia

A. The situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina

Decision of 8 January 1993 (3159th meeting): statement by the President

By a letter dated 8 January 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹ the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina informed the Council that the Deputy Prime Minister for Economic Affairs of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina had been killed by Serbian extremists, as he was returning from the airport in a convoy of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR). Bosnia and Herzegovina requested an emergency meeting of the Security Council to consider immediate and resolute action, including the use of force under Chapter VII of the Charter.

The representative of Turkey made a similar request by a letter of the same date addressed to the President of the Security Council.²

At its 3159th meeting, on 8 January 1993, the Council included the above-mentioned letters in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Turkey, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Japan) then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:³

The Security Council is profoundly shocked to learn of the killing of Mr. Hakija Turajlic, Deputy Prime Minister for Economic Affairs of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, by Bosnian Serb forces, while he was under the protection of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR).

The Council strongly condemns this outrageous act of terrorism which is a grave violation of international humanitarian law and a flagrant challenge to the authority and the inviolability of UNPROFOR, as well as to the serious efforts undertaken with the aim of achieving an overall political settlement of the crisis.

The Council urges all parties and others concerned to exercise the utmost restraint and to refrain from taking any action which might further exacerbate the situation.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to undertake a full investigation of the incident and to report to it without delay. Upon receipt of that report the Council will consider the matter forthwith.

The members of the Council extend their sincere condolences to the bereaved family of Mr. Turajlic and to the people and the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Decision of 8 January 1993 (3160th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3160th meeting, on 8 January 1993, the Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The President then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁴

The Security Council fully supports the efforts of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia aimed at achieving an overall political settlement of the crisis through a complete cessation of hostilities and the establishment of a constitutional framework for the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. In this connection, the Council reaffirms the need to respect fully the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Council fully endorses the view of the Secretary-General described in his report that it is the duty of all the parties involved in the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, despite the recent provocation, to cooperate with the Co-Chairmen in bringing this conflict to an end swiftly.

The Council appeals to all the parties involved to cooperate to the fullest with the peace efforts and warns any party which would oppose an overall political settlement against the consequences of such an attitude; lack of cooperation and non-compliance with its relevant resolutions will compel the Council to review the situation in an urgent and most serious manner and to consider further necessary measures.

Decision of 25 January 1993 (3164th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3164th meeting, on 25 January 1993, the Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The President (Japan) then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁵

The Security Council notes with appreciation the efforts of the international community to alleviate the plight of the civilian population in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, whose lives have been severely affected by the fighting there. The Council has the highest regard for the efforts of the brave people who have undertaken to deliver urgently needed humanitarian assistance under extremely trying conditions to the civilian population in Bosnia and Herzegovina, in particular, the efforts of the United Nations Protection Force and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. However, the Council deeply regrets that the situation there has imposed great limits on the international community in the fulfilment of its humanitarian mandate.

The Council reaffirms its demand that all parties and others concerned, in particular Serb paramilitary units, cease and desist forthwith from all violations of international humanitarian law being committed in the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina, including in particular the deliberate interference with humanitarian convoys. The Council warns the parties concerned of serious consequences, in accordance with relevant resolutions of the Security Council, if they continue to impede the delivery of humanitarian relief assistance.

The Council invites the Secretary-General to keep under continuous review the possibility of air dropping humanitarian assistance to areas isolated by the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

⁵ S/25162.

Decision of 17 February 1993 (3173rd meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3173rd meeting, on 17 February 1993, the Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The President (Morocco) then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁶

The Security Council recalls all relevant resolutions of the Council and its statement of 25 January concerning the provision of humanitarian relief in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. It notes with deep concern that, notwithstanding the Council's demand in that statement, relief efforts continue to be impeded. It condemns the blocking of humanitarian convoys and the impeding of relief supplies, which place at risk the civilian population of Bosnia and Herzegovina and endanger the lives of personnel delivering such supplies. It remains deeply concerned at reports of pressing humanitarian need in Bosnia and Herzegovina, particularly in the eastern part of the country.

The Council reiterates its demand that the parties and all others concerned allow immediate and unimpeded access to humanitarian relief supplies. It further demands that the parties and others concerned give the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees the guarantees she has sought that they will abide by the promises they have made to comply with the Council's decisions in this regard and thus facilitate the resumption of the full humanitarian relief programme, to which the Council attaches the greatest importance.

Decision of 24 February 1993 (3176th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3176th meeting, on 24 February 1993, the Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The President (Morocco) then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council,

he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁷

The Security Council, having heard a report from the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, is concerned that the present opportunity to reach a negotiated settlement in Bosnia and Herzegovina should not be allowed to slip by. It endorses fully the statement by the President of the United States of America and the Secretary-General of the United Nations on 23 February, calling on the leaders of the parties involved in the peace talks on Bosnia and Herzegovina to come to New York immediately to resume discussions with a view to the early conclusion of an agreement to end the conflict. The Council urges these leaders to respond quickly and positively to that call and stands ready to give its full support to the efforts of the Co-Chairmen to bring the talks to a successful conclusion.

Decision of 25 February 1993 (3177th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3177th meeting, on 25 February 1993, the Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The President (Morocco) then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁸

The Security Council, having received a report from the Secretary-General, recalls all its relevant resolutions and its statements of 25 January and 17 February 1993 concerning the provision of humanitarian relief in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. It is deeply concerned that, in spite of its repeated demands, relief efforts continue to be impeded by Serb paramilitary units, especially in the eastern part of the country, namely in the enclaves of Srebrenica, Cerska, Gorazde and Zepa.

The Council deplors the deterioration of the humanitarian situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina at a time when discussions are to resume with a view to reaching a just and durable agreement to end the conflict. It regards the blockade of relief efforts as a serious impediment to a negotiated settlement in Bosnia and Herzegovina and to the efforts of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia. It notes with concern that the measures taken by Serb paramilitary units to interdict humanitarian convoys, in flagrant violation of relevant Council resolutions, expose the personnel of the United Nations Protection Force and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees as well as other humanitarian organizations to physical harm.

The deliberate impeding of the delivery of food and humanitarian relief essential for the survival of the civilian population in Bosnia and Herzegovina constitutes a violation of the Geneva Conventions of 1949, and the Council is committed to ensuring that individuals responsible for such acts are brought to justice.

The Council strongly condemns once again the blocking of humanitarian convoys that has impeded the delivery of humanitarian supplies. It reiterates its demand that the Bosnian parties grant immediate and unimpeded access for humanitarian convoys and fully comply with the Council's decisions in this regard. The Council expresses its strong support for the use, in full coordination with the United Nations and in accordance with the relevant Security Council resolutions, of humanitarian air drops in isolated areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina that are in critical need of humanitarian supplies and cannot be reached by ground convoys. It reaffirms its firm commitment to the full implementation of the humanitarian relief programme in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Council remains actively seized of the matter and continues its consideration of further steps, in accordance with its relevant resolutions.

Decision of 3 March 1993 (3180th meeting):
statement by the President

By a letter dated 3 March 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁹ the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina informed the Council that Serbian and Montenegrin extremist forces had overrun the town of Cerska in a new round of expulsions and genocide and that they were threatening the region of Srebrenica. They had also blocked all humanitarian convoys. Bosnia and Herzegovina requested an emergency meeting of the Council.

The representative of the United States made a similar request by a letter of the same date.¹⁰

At its 3180th meeting, on 3 March 1993, the Council included those letters in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The President (New Zealand) then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹¹

The Security Council, recalling all its relevant resolutions and statements, expresses its grave concern at and condemns the continuing unacceptable military attacks in eastern Bosnia and the resulting deterioration in the humanitarian situation in that region. It is appalled that even as peace talks are continuing, attacks by Serb paramilitary units, including, reportedly, the killings of innocent civilians, continue in eastern Bosnia. In this connection, the Council is particularly concerned about the fall of the town of Cerska and the imminent fall of neighbouring villages. The Council demands that the killings and atrocities must stop and reaffirms that those guilty of crimes against international humanitarian law will be held individually responsible by the world community.

The Council demands that the leaders of all the parties to the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina remain fully engaged in New York in a sustained effort with the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia to reach quickly a fair and workable settlement. In this connection, the Council also demands that all sides immediately cease all forms of military action throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina, cease acts of violence against civilians, comply with their previous commitments including the ceasefire, and redouble their efforts to settle the conflict.

The Council further demands that the Bosnian Serb side as well as all other parties refrain from taking any action which might endanger the lives and well-being of the inhabitants of eastern Bosnia, particularly in the areas near the town of Cerska, and that all concerned allow the unimpeded access of humanitarian relief supplies throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina, especially humanitarian access to the besieged cities of eastern Bosnia, and permit the evacuation of the wounded.

Having determined in the relevant resolutions that this situation constitutes a threat to international peace and security, the Council insists that these steps must be taken immediately.

The Council also requests the Secretary-General to take immediate steps to increase the presence of the United Nations Protection Force in eastern Bosnia.

The Council remains seized of the matter and is ready to meet at any moment to consider further action.

¹¹ S/25361.

Decision of 17 March 1993 (3184th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3184th meeting, on 17 March 1993, the Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (New Zealand) stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹²

The Security Council has been informed by the Secretary-General in a letter dated 12 March 1993 of the violation on 11 March 1993 by military jets, proceeding from the airport of Banja Luka, of Council resolution 781 (1992) of 9 October 1992, relating to the prohibition of military flights in the airspace of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, notwithstanding the fact that the Bosnian Serbs at the airport had received appropriate notification by United Nations observers that such flights would constitute a violation of the said resolution.

The Council equally takes note of the report by the Secretary-General in his letter of 16 March 1993 indicating that on 13 March 1993 new violations of the no-fly zone took place by planes that proceeded to bomb the villages of Gladovici and Osatica in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina before leaving in the direction of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). The above flights are the first violations of resolution 781 (1992) observed by the United Nations Protection Force which involved combat activity.

The Council strongly condemns all violations of its relevant resolutions and underlines the fact that since the beginning of the monitoring operations in early November 1992, the United Nations has reported 465 violations of the no-fly zone over Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Council demands that these violations cease forthwith and reiterates its strong determination to ensure full respect for its resolutions. It particularly underlines its condemnation of all violations, especially those reported by the Secretary-General in his letters referred to above, at a time when the peace process has reached a critical juncture and when humanitarian relief efforts require full cooperation by all parties.

The Council demands from the Bosnian Serbs an immediate explanation of the aforementioned violations and particularly of the aerial bombardment of the villages of Gladovici and Osatica.

It requests the Secretary-General to ensure that an investigation is made of the reported possible use of the territory of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to launch air attacks against the territory of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Council has mandated its President to convey to the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and to the leader of the Bosnian Serbs its deepest concern about the above-mentioned developments and its demand that they take immediate action to prevent any repetitions of these attacks.

The Council will continue to consider what additional steps may be required to secure implementation of the provisions of relevant Security Council resolutions.

Decision of 25 March 1993 (3186th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3186th meeting, on 25 March 1993, the Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The President (New Zealand) then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹³

The Security Council warmly welcomes the signature by President Alija Izetbegovic and Mr. Mate Boban of all four documents of the peace plan for Bosnia and Herzegovina worked out by the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia.

On this important occasion the Council pays tribute to the untiring efforts of the Co-Chairmen, Secretary Vance and Lord Owen.

The Council commends the action of the two parties who have signed all the documents and calls on the remaining party to sign without delay the two documents of the peace plan that it has not already signed and to cease its violence, offensive military actions, "ethnic cleansing" and obstruction of humanitarian assistance.

The Council calls for an immediate cessation of hostilities by all parties.

The Council looks forward to receiving a report from the Secretary-General on the developments in the International Conference and stands ready to take action to follow up on the report and to take the steps required to bring about the peace settlement.

¹³ S/25471.

Decision of 31 March 1993 (3191st meeting):

By a letter dated 18 March 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹⁴ the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina informed the Council that Srebrenica and Sarajevo had been attacked by Serbian forces, and that non-Serb citizens of Bjelina were issued an ultimatum to leave immediately or face the consequences. Bosnia and Herzegovina requested an emergency meeting of the Security Council, in the light of continuing hostilities directed against its citizens, gross violations of Security Council resolution 781 (1992), grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions, and acts of foreign aggression against a Member State.

The representative of Turkey made a similar request on behalf of the Contact Group of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC) by a letter of the same date addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹⁵ urging the Council to take effective measures to deal with the continuing challenge to the United Nations including, in particular, the adoption of a resolution to enforce the “no-fly zone” established under resolution 781 (1992).

At its 3191st meeting, held on 31 March 1993 in response to the requests contained in the above-mentioned letters, the Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (New Zealand) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution submitted by France, Morocco, Pakistan, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States¹⁶ and to several other documents.¹⁷

Speaking before the vote, the representative of France stated that the Security Council was meeting to adopt a resolution of great political importance. The previous week the Council had welcomed decisive progress in the search for a peaceful solution, with the signing by two of the parties concerned of the Vance-Owen peace plan. All that was lacking was the agreement of the Bosnian Serb side. It was in that context that the Council would be adopting under Chapter VII, a resolution authorizing the use of force to ensure compliance with the ban on flights in the no-fly zone established by resolution 781 (1992). It was essential that the Serbian side understand that a new stage had been reached in the conflict and that the Security Council had decided to have recourse to force to see that its decisions were respected. The resolution that the Council was about to adopt would mark the involvement of new actors — States or regional organizations arrangements — which would intervene in new circumstances, as peacemakers and not simply as peacekeepers. The speaker also welcomed the fact that a balance had been struck between the technical necessity of setting up effective military structures and the political need to place them under the authority of the Security Council, in close coordination with the Secretary-General. Those principles should serve as a model for future peacekeeping or peacemaking operations, to be carried out with Member States acting in their national capacity or in the framework of regional organizations or arrangements.¹⁸

The representative of the United Kingdom believed that the Council should be slow to authorize the use of force. However, combat flights, that had been flown against East Bosnian villages a few days earlier, had been a step too far to tolerate under any circumstances. He noted that the enforcement of the no-fly zone, which the Council would authorize under the draft resolution before it, would not be directed against any one party. All sides had violated the no-fly zone, although the Serb parties had done so more than others. Nor did the no-fly zone require the use of force; no force would need to be used if no flights violated the no-fly zone. If the Serbs in Bosnia and the authorities in Belgrade did not heed the Council, then the prospects would be grim indeed, with increasing isolation, both economic and political. If they did heed

the Council's message, however, then all the republics of the former Yugoslavia would be able to take their places as European States, with the prospect of putting the horrors of the previous two years behind them.¹⁹

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted by 14 votes to none, with 1 abstention (China) as resolution 816 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 781 (1992) of 9 October 1992 and 786 (1992) of 10 November 1992,

Recalling also paragraph 6 of resolution 781 (1992) and paragraph 6 of resolution 786 (1992) in which the Council undertook to consider urgently, in the case of violations of the ban on military flights in the airspace of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the further measures necessary to enforce the ban,

Deploring the failure of some parties concerned to cooperate fully with airfield monitors of the United Nations Protection Force in the implementation of resolutions 781 (1992) and 786 (1992),

Deeply concerned by the various reports of the Secretary-General concerning violations of the ban on military flights in the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Deeply concerned in particular by the letters dated 12 and 16 March 1993 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council concerning new blatant violations of the ban on military flights in the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and recalling in this regard the statement by the President of the Security Council of 17 March 1993, and in particular the reference to the bombing of villages in Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Recalling the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Determining that the grave situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina continues to be a threat to international peace and security,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Decides to extend the ban established by resolution 781 (1992) to cover flights by all fixed wing and rotary wing aircraft in the airspace of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, this ban not to apply to flights authorized by the United Nations Protection Force in accordance with paragraph 2 below;

2. Requests the Force to modify the mechanism referred to in paragraph 3 of resolution 781 (1992) so as to provide for the authorization, in the airspace of Bosnia and

Herzegovina, of humanitarian flights and other flights consistent with relevant resolutions of the Council;

3. Also requests the Force to continue to monitor compliance with the ban on flights in the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and calls on all parties urgently to cooperate with the Force in making practical arrangements for the close monitoring of authorized flights and improving the notification procedures;

4. Authorizes Member States, seven days after the adoption of the present resolution, acting nationally or through regional organizations or arrangements, to take, under the authority of the Security Council and subject to close coordination with the Secretary-General and the Force, all necessary measures in the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in the event of further violations, to ensure compliance with the ban on flights referred to in paragraph 1 above, and proportionate to the specific circumstances and the nature of the flights;

5. Requests the Member States concerned, the Secretary-General and the Force to coordinate closely on the measures they are taking to implement paragraph 4 above, including the rules of engagement, and on the starting date of its implementation, which should be no later than seven days from the date when the authority conferred by paragraph 4 above takes effect, and to report the starting date to the Council through the Secretary-General;

6. Decides that, in the event of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia notifying the Council that all the Bosnian parties have accepted their proposals on a settlement before the starting date referred to in paragraph 5 above, the measures set forth in the present resolution will be subsumed into the measures for implementing that settlement;

7. Also requests the Member States concerned to inform the Secretary-General immediately of any actions they take in exercise of the authority conferred by paragraph 4 above;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report regularly to the Council on the matter and to inform it immediately of any actions taken by the Member States concerned in exercise of the authority conferred by paragraph 4 above;

9. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of Brazil stated that enforcement actions under Chapter VII should be a last resort. The resolution just adopted derived not only from non-compliance with previous relevant resolutions, but also from changes in the qualitative nature of the violations. Brazil attached particular importance to the fact that, in accordance with the resolution just adopted, the implementation of the authorization contained in operative paragraph 4 would be conducted with the Secretary-General and ¹⁹ Ibid., pp. 16-17.

UNPROFOR; the Security Council would be kept thoroughly informed of the relevant actions; the measures to be taken in the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina in the event of further violations would be proportionate to the specific circumstances and the nature of the flights; regional organizations or arrangements involved in the action would be doing so under the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter; and all care would be taken to ensure the safety on the ground of the personnel of the United Nations and of humanitarian organizations. His delegation also understood that the measures taken would be of limited duration and that, as soon as the situation were to warrant it, the Council, which would remain actively seized of the matter, would proceed to review these measures.²⁰

The representative of the United States stated that the Bosnian Serbs must understand that the resolution just adopted was evidence of the international community's growing concern with, and intolerance of, their acts of aggression. The credibility of the United Nations and its entire approach to resolving the conflict rested on its willingness to act strongly and effectively, as the Council was doing through the resolution just adopted. The resolution just adopted should send the message that, if the Bosnian Serbs wanted to rejoin the family of nations, then their behaviour must conform to international norms. The speaker also observed that, while the international community had a duty to encourage the parties to reach a settlement, it also needed to demonstrate that signing pieces of paper without intent to implement them was not enough. By showing its will to enforce agreements, the Council had demonstrated its commitment to peace and its resolve to end the conflict.²¹

The representative of China stated that, in principle, his delegation did not oppose the establishment of a no-fly zone in Bosnia and Herzegovina, with the consent of the parties concerned, with a view to easing the tension and ensuring the smooth conduct of international humanitarian relief activities. However, China's principled position on Security Council resolution 781 (1992) remained unchanged. The Chinese delegation had reservations on the invocation of Chapter VII to authorize countries to use force in implementing the no-fly zone. Moreover, it noted that the Secretary-General had sent a letter to the President of the Security Council dated 22 March 1993, stating that the Force Commander of UNPROFOR had taken the view that the enforcement action authorized by the resolution would have negative consequences for the viability of UNPROFOR within its existing mandate. In view of those considerations, the Chinese delegation had abstained in the vote on the resolution just adopted.²²

The representative of the Russian Federation observed that no one had the right to violate Security Council resolutions and yet all three Bosnian parties, notwithstanding the ban on unauthorized military flights in the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina established by the Council in resolution 781 (1992), had perpetrated acts that ran counter to the demands of the Security Council. The resolution just adopted envisaged the application of enforcement measures against those who violated the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina. That included the possibility of appropriate self-defence measures on the part of the monitoring aircraft. The speaker drew attention to the fact that the appropriate rules of conduct of the operation must, as stated in paragraph 5 of the resolution, be coordinated with the Secretary-General and with UNPROFOR. The provision of the resolution regarding the 14-day deferral of the start of the implementation of the measures envisaged in the resolution was also important. The Russian Federation hoped that the adoption of the resolution would send a serious message to all Bosnian parties regarding the resolve of the Security Council to seek a speedy end to the Bosnian conflict through implementation of the Vance-Owen peace plan. For its part, it would continue to do everything to promote the attainment of that goal.²³

Other speakers also stressed that the action taken by the Council should be supplemented by other measures and, in particular, a ban on the use of heavy weapons and effective international control of such weapons.²⁴

Decision of 3 April 1993 (3192nd meeting):
statement by the President

By a letter dated 2 April 1993,²⁵ the Secretary-General transmitted to the President of the Security Council a letter from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. The letter described the disturbing situation that had developed in Srebrenica following the decision of Bosnian Serb military authorities not to permit any further aid to be delivered to that town and proposed two options. The first option would be to turn Srebrenica into a United Nations protected area, and the second to organize a large-scale evacuation of the population. The Secretary-General noted that the Force Commander of UNPROFOR had been instructed to take the matter up immediately with the Bosnian Serb leadership and to insist that the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) be permitted to resume delivering aid to Srebrenica. In the meantime, he suggested that the members of the Security Council might wish to consider supportive action in relation to the situation.

At its 3192nd meeting, on 3 April 1993, the Council included the above-mentioned letter in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The President (Pakistan) then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:²⁶

The Security Council is shocked by and extremely alarmed at the dire and worsening humanitarian situation which has developed in Srebrenica in the eastern part of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina following the unacceptable decision of the Bosnian Serb party not to permit any further humanitarian aid to be delivered to that town and to allow only evacuation of its civilian population. The relevant facts are contained in a letter dated 2 April 1993, addressed to the Secretary-General by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

The Council recalls and reaffirms all its relevant resolutions and statements and condemns the continuing disregard and wilful flouting of them by the Bosnian Serb party, which once again, in pursuit of its unlawful, unacceptable and abhorrent policy of "ethnic cleansing" aimed at territorial aggrandizement, has blocked the United Nations humanitarian relief efforts.

Recognizing the imperative need to alleviate, with the utmost urgency, the sufferings of the population in and around Srebrenica who are in desperate need of food, medicine, clothes and shelter, the Council demands that the Bosnian Serb party cease and desist forthwith from all violations of international humanitarian law, including in particular the deliberate interference with humanitarian convoys, and allow all such convoys unhindered access to the town of Srebrenica and other parts of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Council demands that the Bosnian Serb party strictly comply with all relevant resolutions of the Council. It further demands that the Bosnian Serb party honour forthwith its most recent commitment "to guarantee the free movement of humanitarian convoys and the protection of endangered civilians". The Council also reaffirms that those guilty of crimes against international humanitarian law will be held individually responsible by the world community.

The Council commends and strongly supports the efforts of the brave people who have undertaken to deliver urgently needed humanitarian assistance, under extremely trying conditions, to the civilian population in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and in particular the efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Protection Force.

The Council recalls the request it made to the Secretary-General in its statement of 3 March 1993 to take immediate steps to increase the presence of the Force in eastern Bosnia, welcomes the action taken already in that respect, and urges the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner to use all the resources at their disposal within the scope of the relevant resolutions of the Council to reinforce the existing humanitarian operations in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 8 April 1993: statement by the President

On 8 April 1993, after consultations with the members of the Council, the President made the following statement to the media on behalf of the members of the Council:²⁷

The members of the Security Council express their concern at the report of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), according to which 17 detainees lost their lives on 26 March 1993 in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, when the vehicle transporting them from the Batkovic Camp (under the control of Serb forces) for work at the front was ambushed.

The members of the Council, recalling all the relevant resolutions and statements of the Council, remind all the parties that they are responsible at all times for the detainees' safety and that they must not compel detainees to do work of a military nature or destined to serve a military purpose. The ICRC had already repeatedly called on all parties to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina strictly to observe the provisions of international humanitarian law.

The members of the Council condemn all violations of the Third and Fourth Geneva Conventions, which the parties have undertaken to respect, and reaffirm once again that those who commit or order the commission of such acts will be held personally responsible.

The members of the Council request the Commission of Experts established pursuant to resolution 780 (1992) to carry out an investigation of these abominable practices and to make a report.

Decision of 9 April 1993: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

By a letter dated 9 April 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,²⁸ the Secretary-General, referring to resolution 816 (1993) of 31 March 1993, reported that Member States concerned, acting nationally as well as through the regional arrangement of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), had been closely coordinating with him and UNPROFOR on the measures they were taking to ensure compliance with the ban on all flights in the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina. He also reported that the NATO Secretary-General had informed him, in a letter dated 8 April 1993, that the North Atlantic Council had adopted the necessary arrangements. The Secretary-General further noted that the rules of engagement established by the Member States concerned were in conformity with the requirements set out in paragraph 4 of resolution 816 (1993), and that, as requested in paragraph 2 of that resolution, UNPROFOR had modified the mechanism referred to in paragraph 3 of Council resolution 781 (1992). The revised guidelines for the authorization of non-UNPROFOR and non-UNHCR flights in the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina were attached as an annex to the letter. The Secretary-General, lastly, reported that the NATO Secretary-General had informed him that his military authorities were prepared to begin the operation at noon GMT on Monday, 12 April 1993.

By a letter dated 10 April 1993,²⁹ the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General of the following:

²⁹ S/25568.

Your letter dated 9 April 1993 has been brought to the attention of the Security Council.

The Council takes note that the operations authorized by its resolution 816 (1993) will start on Monday, 12 April 1993 at 1200 GMT, in accordance with the modalities described in the annex to your above-mentioned letter.

Decision of 16 April 1993 (3199th meeting): resolution 819 (1993)

At its 3199th meeting, on 16 April 1993, the Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Pakistan) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations³⁰ and to several other documents.³¹

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 819 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 713 (1991) of 25 September 1991 and all its subsequent relevant resolutions,

Noting that the International Court of Justice in its Order of 8 April 1993 in the case concerning application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)) unanimously indicated as a provisional measure that the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) should immediately, in pursuance of its undertaking in the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide of 9 December 1948, take all measures within its power to prevent the commission of the crime of genocide,

Reaffirming the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Reaffirming also its call on the parties and others concerned to observe immediately the ceasefire throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina, ³⁰ S/25617.

Reaffirming further its condemnation of all violations of international humanitarian law, including, in particular, the practice of “ethnic cleansing”,

Concerned by the pattern of hostilities by Bosnian Serb paramilitary units against towns and villages in eastern Bosnia, and in this regard reaffirming that any taking or acquisition of territory by the threat or use of force, including through the practice of “ethnic cleansing”, is unlawful and unacceptable,

Deeply alarmed at the information provided by the Secretary-General to the Security Council on 16 April 1993 on the rapid deterioration of the situation in Srebrenica and its surrounding areas, as a result of the continued deliberate armed attacks and shelling of the innocent civilian population by Bosnian Serb paramilitary units,

Strongly condemning the deliberate interdiction by Bosnian Serb paramilitary units of humanitarian assistance convoys,

Also strongly condemning the actions taken by Bosnian Serb paramilitary units against the United Nations Protection Force, in particular, their refusal to guarantee the safety and freedom of movement of Force personnel,

Aware that a tragic humanitarian emergency has already developed in Srebrenica and its surrounding areas as a direct consequence of the brutal actions of Bosnian Serb paramilitary units, forcing the large scale displacement of civilians, in particular women, children and the elderly,

Recalling the provisions of resolution 815 (1993) of 30 March 1993 on the mandate of the Force, and in that context acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Demands that all parties and others concerned treat Srebrenica and its surroundings as a safe area which should be free from any armed attack or any other hostile act;

2. Demands also to that effect the immediate cessation of armed attacks by Bosnian Serb paramilitary units against Srebrenica and their immediate withdrawal from the areas surrounding Srebrenica;

3. Demands further that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) immediately cease the supply of military arms, equipment and services to the Bosnian Serb paramilitary units in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, with a view to monitoring the humanitarian situation in the safe area, to take immediate steps to increase the presence of the United Nations Protection Force in Srebrenica and its surroundings, demands that all parties and others concerned cooperate fully and promptly with the Force towards that end, and requests the Secretary-General to report urgently thereon to the Security Council;

5. Reaffirms that any taking or acquisition of territory by the threat or use of force, including through the practice of “ethnic cleansing”, is unlawful and unacceptable;

6. Condemns and rejects the deliberate actions of the Bosnian Serb party to force the evacuation of the civilian population from Srebrenica and its surrounding areas as well as from other parts of Bosnia and Herzegovina as part of its overall abhorrent campaign of “ethnic cleansing”;

7. Reaffirms its condemnation of all violations of international humanitarian law, in particular the practice of “ethnic cleansing”, and reaffirms that those who commit or order the commission of such acts shall be held individually responsible in respect of such acts;

8. Demands the unimpeded delivery of humanitarian assistance to all parts of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in particular to the civilian population of Srebrenica and its surrounding areas, and recalls that such impediments to the delivery of humanitarian assistance constitute a serious violation of international humanitarian law;

9. Urges the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to use all the resources at their disposal within the scope of the relevant resolutions of the Council to reinforce the existing humanitarian operations in Bosnia and Herzegovina, in particular Srebrenica and its surroundings;

10. Also demands that all parties guarantee the safety and full freedom of movement of the United Nations Protection Force and of all other United Nations personnel as well as members of humanitarian organizations;

11. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the High Commissioner and the Force, to arrange for the safe transfer of the wounded and ill civilians from Srebrenica and its surrounding areas and urgently to report thereon to the Council;

12. Decides to send, as soon as possible, a mission of members of the Council to Bosnia and Herzegovina to ascertain the situation and report thereon to the Council;

13. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter and to consider further steps to achieve a solution in conformity with its relevant resolutions.

Decision of 17 April 1993 (3200th meeting):
resolution 820 (1993)

By a letter dated 17 April 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,³² the representative of France requested an immediate meeting of the Council to discuss the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

³² S/25622.

In a letter of the same date addressed to the President of the Council,³³ the representatives of Cape Verde, Djibouti, Morocco, Pakistan and Venezuela also requested an urgent meeting of the Council to consider the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, particularly in Srebrenica, and to take action on a proposed draft resolution,³⁴ since the conditions justifying the adoption of resolution 819 (1993) had not been met.

At its 3200th meeting, held on 17 April 1993 in response to the requests contained in the above-mentioned letters, the Council included the letters in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also invited Ambassador Dragomir Djokic, at his request, to take a seat at the Council table, and it extended an invitation to Mr. Cyrus Vance, Co-Chairman of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia.

The President (Pakistan) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution submitted by Cape Verde, Djibouti, France, Morocco, Spain, the United Kingdom, the United States and Venezuela and read out revisions to be made to the draft.³⁵ He also drew attention to a series of reports of the Secretary-General,³⁶ including a report on the activities of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia dated 26 March 1993, and to several other documents.³⁷ In his report of 26 March,³⁸

the Secretary-General informed the Council on the latest round of peace talks held from 16 to 25 March 1993 by the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the Conference with the three sides to the conflict. The Bosnian Croats and the Bosnian Government had signed all the elements of the peace package put forward by the Co-Chairmen, namely the Constitutional Principles, the map of provincial boundaries, the military agreement and the interim arrangements whereas the Bosnian Serbs had declined to sign the provincial map and the agreement on interim arrangements. The Secretary-General urged the Council to approve the peace package proposed by the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia and to call upon the Bosnian Serbs side to sign the remaining two parts of the peace plan. He also recommended the early establishment of an International Human Rights Monitoring Mission, which all three sides had accepted.

Mr. Vance stated that the Co-Chairmen of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia hoped that the Council would adopt the draft resolution forthwith, and thus send the clear message to the Bosnian Serb side and its supporters that time was running out and the international community would wait no longer. Should the measures envisaged in it fail to achieve the desired effect, they should be followed by additional measures of sterner persuasion. The speaker added that everything possible must be done to bring humanitarian relief and assistance to the suffering communities in Bosnia and Herzegovina. There could be no excuse for obstructing humanitarian convoys.³⁹

Speaking before the vote, the representative of France noted that, by agreeing, as a last concession, to postpone the adoption of the draft resolution, his delegation had hoped that the situation on the ground would stabilize and that there would be progress in negotiating the Vance-Owen plan. On the contrary, the Serbian side had taken advantage of that postponement to take control of Srebrenica, while at the same time rejecting the peace plan. His delegation believed that the Council should vote to strengthen the sanctions. He further observed that the draft resolution, by strengthening the provisions of resolution 757 (1992), marked the total economic and financial isolation of Serbia. France was prepared to take immediate steps to make the implementation of the resolution effective and was working on setting up assistance to the countries along the Danube to suspend all river traffic destined for Serbia. Stating that the measures contained in the draft resolution were not “sanctions for sanctions’ sake”, but rather part of a global political plan, the speaker observed that the Council’s support for the Vance-Owen plan sent a clear signal to the Serbs that there was a path other than conflict. In that respect, section C of the draft resolution was something new and reflected the desire to see the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) rejoin the international community, provided that it fully respected the relevant United Nations resolutions.⁴⁰

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that the adoption, at that juncture, of a resolution strengthening the sanctions, was quite untimely. The Russian Federation supported all the provisions of section A of the draft resolution, under which the Security Council would call upon all sides to reach a rapid and peaceful solution. It was important to give the parties the possibility, through international mediation, of reaching an agreement on the Vance-Owen plan, and of completing the intensive negotiations that were proceeding at that time. It was the Russian Federation’s view, however, that the Security Council should provide one last chance — which should be used primarily by the Serbian side — for the achievement of a realistic agreement by observing a ceasefire and refraining from any actions that might be regarded as “ethnic cleansing”. The most reasonable approach would have been to delay voting on the draft resolution until 26 April. Since the majority of the Council members, however, had insisted upon an immediate vote, the Russian Federation would not hinder the adoption of that decision, particularly in view of the fact that it would enter into force only nine days after its adoption, unless an agreement were to be signed on the Vance-Owen plan. Nevertheless, it retained serious misgivings about the possible negative consequences of the Council’s haste, and it would abstain in the voting on the draft resolution.⁴¹

The representative of Brazil stated that the draft resolution presented three fundamental aspects. The first aspect was the support by the Security Council for the Vance-Owen peace plan. In that respect, his delegation believed that the Security Council should always favour the resort to and the exhaustion of the peaceful and negotiated means for the settlement of disputes. The second aspect was the strengthening of the measures imposed by earlier resolutions. As a matter of principle, Brazil had always held that action under Chapter VII of the Charter should be taken only in extreme circumstances. In the case before it, the grave deterioration of the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina justified such an exceptional course of action. Brazil was aware that the measures that the Council was about to approve would entail complex considerations of a legal, economic, financial and administrative order. While some of these measures could be readily implemented, others might require the enactment of appropriate enabling legislation. He stated that his Government would take all necessary steps to put such legislation in place as soon as possible. It was his understanding that the specific provisions of paragraph 29 of the draft resolution, as they referred to the territorial sea of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, were of an exceptional nature, related specifically to the particular situation, and that they could not be considered as a precedent that in any way altered or derogated from the regime of coastal-State rights in that territorial sea, in accordance with the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea and other relevant norms of international law. The third aspect — namely, the provisions of section C of the draft resolution, to which Brazil attached importance, made it clear that the exceptional measures contained in section B were not irreversible. He hoped that they might soon lead to the creation of conditions that would permit resort to the review mechanisms provided for in paragraph 31 of the draft resolution.⁴²

⁴¹ Ibid., pp. 11-12.

⁴⁰ Ibid., pp. 7-10.

The representative of Spain noted that the draft resolution before the Council incorporated essential elements for a package proposed by the European Community with a view to increasing the effectiveness of the sanctions imposed on the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and at the same time opened up other prospects if there was a radical change in the attitude of the Bosnian Serbs. Indeed, if the Bosnian Serbs accepted the peace plan and implemented it fully and in good faith, it would make possible a gradual easing of the pressure brought to bear on them and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia; it would pave the way for a review of the sanctions and their eventual lifting. If, on the contrary, the Bosnian Serbs did not desist from their current policy, they and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia would remain isolated from the rest of the international community and would suffer the full effects of the Council's sanctions. The speaker further noted that the time allowed by the Council, as a gesture of goodwill had in fact been used to create de facto situations in the field. These situations were contrary to the objectives sought by the international community as embodied in the Vance-Owen plan. In these circumstances, his Government had reached the conclusion that the draft resolution must be put to a vote without further delay.⁴³

The draft resolution, as orally revised in its provisional form, was then put to the vote, and was adopted by 13 votes to none, with 2 abstentions (China, Russian Federation), as resolution 820 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming all its earlier relevant resolutions,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General of 2 and 8 February and 12 and 26 March 1993 on the peace talks held by the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia,

Reaffirming the need for a lasting peace settlement to be signed by all of the Bosnian parties,

Reaffirming also the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Reaffirming once again that any taking of territory by force or any practice of "ethnic cleansing" is unlawful and totally unacceptable, and insisting that all displaced persons be enabled to return in peace to their former homes,

Reaffirming in this regard its resolution 808 (1993) of 22 February 1993 in which it decided that an international tribunal shall be established for the prosecution of persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia since 1991 and requested the Secretary-General to submit a report at the earliest possible date,

Deeply alarmed and concerned about the magnitude of the plight of innocent victims of the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Expressing its condemnation of all the activities carried out in violation of resolutions 757 (1992) of 30 May 1992 and 787 (1992) of 16 November 1992 between the territory of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and Serb-controlled areas in the Republic of Croatia and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Deeply concerned by the position of the Bosnian Serb party as reported in paragraphs 17, 18 and 19 of the report of the Secretary-General of 26 March 1993,

Recalling the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations,

A

1. Commends the peace plan for Bosnia and Herzegovina in the form agreed to by two of the Bosnian parties and set out in the report of the Secretary-General of 26 March 1993, namely the Agreement on Interim Arrangements (annex I), the nine Constitutional Principles (annex II), the provisional provincial map (annex III) and the Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina (annex IV);

2. Welcomes the fact that this plan has now been accepted in full by two of the Bosnian parties;

3. Expresses its grave concern at the refusal so far of the Bosnian Serb party to accept the Agreement on Interim Arrangements and the provisional provincial map, and calls on that party to accept the peace plan in full;

4. Demands that all parties and others concerned continue to observe the ceasefire and refrain from any further hostilities;

5. Also demands full respect for the right of the United Nations Protection Force and the international humanitarian agencies to free and unimpeded access to all areas in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and that all parties, in particular the Bosnian Serb party and others concerned, cooperate fully with them and take all necessary steps to ensure the safety of their personnel;

6. Condemns once again all violations of international humanitarian law, including in particular the practice of "ethnic cleansing" and the massive, organized and systematic detention and rape of women, and reaffirms that those who commit or have committed or order or have ordered the commission of such acts will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts;

11. Decides also that if, at any time after the submission of the above-mentioned report of the Secretary-General, the Secretary-General reports to the Council that the Bosnian Serbs have renewed their military attacks or failed to comply with the peace plan, the provisions set forth in paragraphs 12 to 30 below shall come into force immediately;

31. Expresses its readiness, after all three Bosnian parties have accepted the peace plan and on the basis of verified evidence, provided by the Secretary-General, that the Bosnian Serb party is cooperating in good faith in effective implementation of the plan, to review all the measures in the present resolution and its other relevant resolutions with a view to gradually lifting them;

32. Invites all States to consider what contribution they can make to the reconstruction of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

33. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United Kingdom said that the resolution just adopted had a triple purpose. The first purpose was to throw the weight of the Council firmly behind the peace process of the two Co-Chairmen and to get across to the Bosnian Serbs that signature of these documents represented the only way to assure their future as a distinct community within Bosnia. The second purpose was to bring home to the Bosnian Serbs and their backers in Belgrade the consequences of rejection, in the form of tightened sanctions and complete isolation. The third was to show that acceptance and implementation of the peace process and the plan, and the cessation of all military attacks, would bring real benefits to all Serbs in the form of a gradual lifting of sanctions and a reintegration into the international family.⁴⁴

The representative of Venezuela stated that only the acceptance of the proposed Peace Agreements offered the international community a chance to improve the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The resolution just adopted was still aimed at applying pressure for peace. He warned, however, that as long as the Security Council did not act to put under real and effective control the heavy arms that were solely in the hands of the Serbs, little would be achieved through economic sanctions, whose effects took time. Venezuela believed that it was essential to discourage the illusion that war and genocide, carried out with impunity, were legitimate means of manifesting the right to self-determination. It was also necessary to curtail any claim that ethnic, cultural or religious ties gave States the right to interfere in the internal crises of any other State.⁴⁵

The representative of China noted that the resolution just adopted commended the unremitting efforts of the Co-Chairmen in the peace negotiations, reiterated the necessity of achieving a lasting peace acceptable to all the parties in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and emphasized the importance of ensuring the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Those elements were in conformity with China's principled position and it therefore welcomed and supported them in the resolution. At the same time, however, China found it difficult to support such elements in the resolution as the invocation of Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, the adoption of enforcement measures and the authorization of measures to strengthen and expand the existing sanctions regime against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. History had shown that it was impossible to find lasting solutions to conflicts and disputes by exerting pressure externally and adopting such enforcement actions as sanctions. The speaker contended that the actions authorized by the resolution would not only bring suffering to the people in the country targeted by the sanctions regime, but would also be gravely detrimental to the economies of the third countries implementing such sanctions provisions. From the long-term point of view, such a practice would create adverse political and economic consequences for the regions concerned. It was China's view that the international community should continue to explore all possibilities to promote peace negotiations and that it should avoid taking action that might further complicate the issue. China had also noted that there were also some elements in the resolution just adopted that ran counter to the principle of respect for sovereignty contained in the Charter. Since the resolution contained both elements that China could support and elements that it could not support, the Chinese delegation had abstained in the vote.⁴⁶

The representative of Hungary stated that the resolution just adopted was a dilemma for his delegation. He contended that the general arms embargo as well as the economic sanctions regime were not producing the results that the international community had expected because of the specific conditions in the former Yugoslavia, the particular features resulting from the geographic situation of the country, the establishment of domestic mitigating arrangements, and the nature of any sanctions regime which was porous. The Hungarian economy had suffered important losses because of the sanctions regime and the strengthening of the sanctions was going to engender further economic difficulties. However, everything had to be done to put an end to the activity between the territory of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the zones controlled by the Serbs in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and that the military machine of the Serbs in Bosnia was immobilized. In conclusion, his delegation had voted in favour of the resolution just adopted because it was an important step toward a settlement of the crisis in the former Yugoslavia. It had also voted in favour because of the resolution's stipulations reaffirming the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the illegality and unacceptable nature of any acquisition of territory by force and of any practice of "ethnic cleansing", as well as the international community's readiness to take all necessary measures to help implement the peace plan for Bosnia and Herzegovina.⁴⁷

⁴⁶ Ibid., pp. 31-32.

The President, speaking in his capacity as the representative of Pakistan, stated that his delegation had consistently declared that the time had come for the international community to demonstrate its firm resolve in compelling the Bosnian Serb party to accept in full the Vance-Owen peace package. In that context, it believed that the Council should take immediate measures for the immobilization of heavy weapons in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and place them under effective international control; that the Council should adopt appropriate measures to ensure the interdiction of arms supplies to the Bosnian Serb party; and that further measures, including stringent financial sanctions, be imposed against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. Pakistan was also of the view that immediate measures should be taken for the partial lifting of the arms embargo in order to enable the

Deliberations of 19 and 20 April 1993 (3201st, 3202nd and 3203rd meetings)

The Council began its consideration of the item at its 3201st and continued until its 3203rd meeting. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the following, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. At the 3201st meeting, the representatives of Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Bahrain, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Canada, the Comoros, Croatia, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, Germany, Indonesia, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jordan, Lithuania, Malaysia, Malta, Qatar, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Slovenia, Sweden, Turkey, Ukraine and the United Arab Emirates; and at the 3202nd meeting, the representative of the Czech Republic. The Council also extended invitations, at its 3201st meeting, to Mr. Engin Ansay, Permanent Observer of OIC, and, at his request, to Ambassador Dragomir Djokic to address the Council in the course of the discussion of the item. At the 3202nd meeting, the President drew the attention of the Council members to a letter dated 19 April 1993 from the representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran addressed to the Secretary-General.⁴⁹

Commencing the discussion, the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina stated that the international community had an obligation to take concrete steps to halt immediately genocide and aggression in his country. Genocide and aggression were the reality of Bosnia and Herzegovina, no matter what attempts were made to exclude those words from the relevant resolutions. The International Court of Justice had defined the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina as genocide and the Security Council had failed to fulfil its responsibility to stop the aggression and genocide. Nevertheless, the efforts of the non-aligned caucus and other members of the Security Council, in promoting the swift adoption of resolutions 819 (1993) and 820 (1993), and in calling for a more legally and ethically responsible answer to genocide and aggression against Bosnia were most consistent with the principles of the United Nations and international law. Bosnia and

Herzegovina fully endorsed the draft resolution before the Council and demanded that the following measures be considered: (a) to take control of or neutralize, by all necessary means, heavy weapons; (b) to interdict supply lines from Serbia and Montenegro to Bosnia and Herzegovina; and (c) to clarify that the arms embargo did not apply to the defence forces of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Should these measures pose an unacceptable risk to UNPROFOR, the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina would request that such mission be modified and that its personnel take precautionary measures or withdraw if necessary.⁵⁰

The representative of Slovenia noted that the need for action by the international community was becoming more and more compelling. While resolution 820 (1993) represented a step in the right direction, further thought should be given to the adoption of measures to assist in the implementation of peace, particularly in the case the Vance-Owen plan was not accepted by all parties or if it was accepted in bad faith. The speaker recalled the proposal made on 8 April 1993 by the Foreign Minister of Slovenia, noting that its main thrust was the immediate deployment of the United Nations peacekeeping forces in the territories controlled by the parties which had accepted the Vance-Owen peace plan. Several reasons supported that line of action. First, the troops would be deployed in areas in which United Nations protection was accepted. Secondly, the troops would have a preventive role as a deterrent to further acts of aggression. Thirdly, such deployment would provide an opportunity to develop a more robust mandate of the peacekeeping force in Bosnia and Herzegovina and fourthly, the proposed action was compatible with the existing humanitarian missions. He stressed that further action by the Council should not be made contingent upon agreement of the Serbs to the Vance-Owen peace plan.⁵¹

The representative of Croatia, referring to the resolution of the General Assembly of 18 December 1992, in which the General Assembly had expressed determination to restore peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina as well as to preserve its unity, sovereignty, political independence and territorial integrity, pointed out that none of those goals had been achieved. Noting that in paragraph 7 of that resolution the Assembly had urged the Security Council to consider measures on an urgent basis, no later than 15 January 1993, using all necessary means to stop the Serbian aggression, including the lifting of the arms embargo, he observed that that date had passed long ago and there had only been further destruction and additional territory “ethnically cleansed” by Serbian forces. The fact that Serbian extremists were openly refusing to honour the relevant Security Council resolutions emphasizing the commitment to ensure respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina must lead to appropriate United Nations action. The UNPROFOR mandate should be strengthened and the force should be changed from a peacekeeping to a peacemaking force. The Security Council, acting under Chapter VII, should immediately take the strongest possible measures against the Serbian aggressors. The United Nations must at least lift the arms embargo against Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina and provide the Croats and Muslims the opportunity to defend their freedom and human dignity. The speaker concluded by saying that the legitimate right to self-defence inscribed in the Charter of the United Nations must not be limited for the sake of “dubious political pragmatism”.⁵²

Mr. Ansay, Permanent Observer of OIC to the United Nations, stated that the Secretary-General of OIC regarded resolutions 819 (1993) and 820 (1993) on Srebrenica and the economic sanctions adopted as inadequate and insufficient. For OIC, the fall of Srebrenica would sound the “death knell” of the ongoing peace efforts under the auspices of the United Nations and the European Community. Those tragic events constituted an “affront” to the authority of the United Nations and compelled a reassessment of the efficacy of the principle of collective security. The speaker noted that the question before the Council was no longer one of acting with a view to isolating Serbia or decreeing new economic sanctions against it. Rather, the tragic course of events called for vigorous and determined action on the part of the Security Council. OIC called for the immediate lifting of the “iniquitous” arms embargo against Bosnia and Herzegovina and the adoption of effective military measures under the aegis of the Security Council to bring the Serbian aggression to an end. Those measures included, inter alia, interdicting the supply line from Serbia and

Montenegro and placing all heavy weapons under the control of the international community.⁵³

The representative of Ukraine said that in his delegation's view, enforcement measures taken so far by the Council against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia were designed to bring about a speedy resolution to the crisis in the region. At the same time, it was incumbent upon the Security Council to adopt measures to mitigate the negative consequences of the sanctions for those States which not only complied with the sanctions, but were also entrusted with the task of ensuring the enforcement of the sanctions regime. Ukraine believed that the time had come, especially after the adoption of resolution 820 (1993), to find practical ways to implement Article 50 of the Charter. Such a decision would make sanctions an effective instrument, enjoying the support of the international community as a whole. It was necessary to remember that Security Council sanctions were directed against a specific State or States, and that other countries of the region must not be the eventual or unintentional targets of enforcement measures. Thus, there should be close cooperation between the sanctions Committees and regional arrangements, including sanctions assistance missions.⁵⁴

Mr. Djokic noted that despite the fact that his delegation had stated on numerous occasion that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia had no territorial claims on its neighbours and that, since May 1992, not a single soldier of the Yugoslav army had remained in the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the international community continued to label Yugoslavia as the aggressor and called for its punishment and isolation. Moreover, the positive role of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in the peace process had been ignored by the Security Council in all its relevant resolutions. While the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia shared the concern and impatience of the international community and understood the responsibility of the Security Council in its effort to reinstate peace and security in the region, it believed, however, that peace and security could not be achieved by isolating one side and imposing new sanctions on the people of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. The isolation of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia could not lead to peace, but could only contribute to the destabilization of the entire Balkan region. The closing of the Danube was itself a measure which posed a great danger to the region and the introduction of new punitive measures could only cause more innocent victims, suffering and instability. The speaker concluded by saying that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia remained fully committed to the policy of peace and to overcoming the crisis in Bosnia and Herzegovina by political means, on the basis of equal respect for the legitimate rights of all three constituent peoples. In that regard, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia would continue to cooperate closely with the United Nations and its representatives. It would, however, firmly defend its sovereignty and territorial integrity if forced to do so.⁵⁵

In the course of the discussions, several speakers agreed that the situation on the ground in Bosnia called for more decisive action to be taken by the Council. Proposed measures included the following: (a) placing heavy weapons under United Nations control; (b) establishing additional safe areas; (c) interdicting the supply lines of the Serbian forces in Bosnia; and (d) lifting the arms embargo in order to allow the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina to exercise its right to self-defence under Article 51 of the Charter.⁵⁶ Concerning the lifting of the arms embargo, some speakers, however, were of the view that such measure would more likely lead to further escalation of violence.⁵⁷

A number of speakers argued that if the Council did not shoulder its responsibilities and did not act, then the Members of the United Nations should consider convening a special session of the General Assembly to take action.⁵⁸

Several speakers drew attention to the effects of economic sanctions on neighbouring countries and to the need for the international community and the Security Council to address that issue.⁵⁹

Decision of 21 April 1993: note by the President

On 21 April 1993, after consultations with the members of the Council, the President issued the following note on behalf of the members of the Council:⁶⁰

The President of the Security Council wishes to refer to resolution 819 (1993) adopted by the Council at its 3199th meeting on 16 April 1993 in connection with the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

In paragraph 12 of the resolution, the Council decided to send, as soon as possible, a mission of members of the Council to Bosnia and Herzegovina to ascertain the situation and report thereon to the Council.

In accordance with that decision, the President wishes to report that he has had consultations with the members of the Council and that agreement has been reached that the mission will be composed of the following six members of the Council: France, Hungary, New Zealand, Pakistan, Russian Federation and Venezuela.

Decision of 21 April 1993: statement by the President

On 21 April 1993, after consultations with the members of the Council, the President made the following statement to the media on behalf of the members of the Council:⁶¹

The members of the Security Council are deeply concerned by the reports on the outbreak of military hostilities between Bosnian governmental forces and Bosnian Croat paramilitary units north and west of Sarajevo. They are appalled by the reports corroborated by the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) of atrocities and killings, in particular the setting on fire of Muslim houses and the shooting of entire families in two villages by Bosnian Croat paramilitary units.

The members of the Council strongly condemn this new outbreak of violence undermining the overall efforts to establish a ceasefire and achieve a political solution of the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and demand that Bosnian governmental forces and Bosnian Croat paramilitary units cease immediately those hostilities and that all parties refrain from taking any action which endangers the lives and well-being of the inhabitants of the region, strictly comply with their previous commitments including the ceasefire, and redouble their efforts to settle the conflict. They call upon all the parties to cooperate with the current efforts in this regard by UNPROFOR and Lord Owen, Co-Chairman of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia.

The members of the Council also demand that the Bosnian Serbs fully implement resolution 819 (1993) of 16 April 1993, including the immediate withdrawal from the areas surrounding Srebrenica, and allow UNPROFOR personnel unimpeded access to the town.

Decision of 6 May 1993 (3208th meeting):

By a letter dated 30 April 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁶² the Security Council mission to Bosnia and Herzegovina, pursuant to resolution 819 (1993), transmitted its report to the Council. The mission composed by France, Hungary, New Zealand, Pakistan, the Russian Federation and Venezuela reported that it had travelled to the region from 22 to 27 April 1993 and met with the leaders of all the parties to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, as well as with the President of Croatia, the Vice-President of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Force Commander of UNPROFOR. The mission found that Srebrenica was under siege and that the conditions there were inhuman. As for Gorazde, Zepa, Tuzla and Sarajevo they should be declared immediately safe areas. In its conclusions, the mission recognized that the designation of those towns as safe areas would require a larger UNPROFOR presence and a revised mandate to encompass ceasefire/safe area monitoring, and different rules of engagement. Enforcement measures could be considered at a later stage if the Serbs were to ignore the integrity of Security Council safe areas.

At its 3208th meeting, on 6 May 1993, the Council included that report in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (the Russian Federation) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations⁶³ and to several other documents.⁶⁴

Speaking before the vote, the representative of France stated that the draft resolution was intended to convey the concern of the Council in the face of a further deterioration in the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and a growing threat to the security of the civilian population in a number of communities, particularly in the eastern part of the country. The Council's concern had been heightened by the fact that UNPROFOR military observers had recently been prevented from reaching the city of Zepa, where they had intended to gain an overview of the situation. In requesting that the parties treat the cities of Zepa, Gorazde, Tuzla, Bihac and Sarajevo as safe areas, free from armed attacks and from other hostile acts likely to endanger the well-being and safety of their inhabitants, the Security Council was sending a signal to the parties: the civilian population must no longer be made to bear the consequences of the Bosnian conflict. In that regard, the example of Srebrenica had provided a valuable experience by showing both the limits and the advantages arising from the establishment of a safe area. The most important thing was to save human lives seriously threatened by the extension of the conflict.⁶⁵

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 824 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming all its earlier relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming also the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Having considered the report of the Security Council mission to the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina authorized by resolution 819 (1993) of 16 April 1993, and in particular its recommendations that the concept of safe areas be extended to other towns in need of safety,

Reaffirming again its condemnation of all violations of international humanitarian law, in particular "ethnic cleansing" and all practices conducive thereto, as well as the denial or the obstruction of access of civilians to humanitarian aid and services such as medical assistance and basic utilities,

Taking into consideration the urgent security and humanitarian needs faced by several towns in Bosnia and Herzegovina as exacerbated by the constant influx of large numbers of displaced persons including, in particular, the sick and wounded,

Taking also into consideration the formal request submitted by Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Deeply concerned at the continuing armed hostilities by Bosnian Serb paramilitary units against several towns in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and determined to ensure peace and stability throughout the country, most immediately in the towns of Sarajevo, Tuzla, Zepa, Gorazde and Bihac, as well as Srebrenica,

Convinced that the threatened towns and their surroundings should be treated as safe areas, free from armed attacks and from any other hostile acts which endanger the well-being and the safety of their inhabitants,

Aware in this context of the unique character of the city of Sarajevo, as a multicultural, multi-ethnic and plurireligious centre which exemplifies the viability of coexistence and interrelations between all the communities of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and of the need to preserve it and avoid its further destruction,

Affirming that nothing in the present resolution should be construed as contradicting or in any way departing from the spirit or the letter of the peace plan for the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Convinced that treating the towns referred to above as safe areas will contribute to the early implementation of the peace plan,

Convinced also that further steps must be taken as necessary to achieve the security of all such safe areas,

Recalling the provisions of resolution 815 (1993) of 30 March 1993 on the mandate of the United Nations Protection Force, and in that context acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Welcomes the report of the Security Council mission established pursuant to resolution 819 (1993), and in particular its recommendations concerning safe areas;

2. Demands that any taking of territory by force cease immediately;

3. Declares that the capital city of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Sarajevo, and other such threatened areas, in particular the towns of Tuzla, Zepa, Gorazde and Bihac, as well as Srebrenica, and their surroundings should be treated as safe areas by all the parties concerned and should be free from armed attacks and from any other hostile act;

4. Also declares that in these safe areas the following should be observed:

(a) The immediate cessation of armed attacks or any hostile act against these safe areas, and the withdrawal of all Bosnian Serb military or paramilitary units from these towns to a distance wherefrom they cease to constitute a menace to their security and that of their inhabitants, to be monitored by United Nations military observers;

(b) Full respect by all parties of the rights of the United Nations Protection Force and the international humanitarian agencies to free and unimpeded access to all safe areas in Bosnia and Herzegovina and full respect for the safety of the personnel engaged in these operations;

5. Demands to that end that all parties and others concerned cooperate fully with the Force and take any necessary measures to respect these safe areas;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take appropriate measures with a view to monitoring the humanitarian situation in the safe areas, authorizes to that end the strengthening of the Force by an additional fifty United Nations military observers, together with related equipment and logistical support, and in this connection also demands that all parties and all others concerned cooperate fully and promptly with the Force;

7. Declares its readiness, in the event of the failure by any party to comply with the present resolution, to consider immediately the adoption of any additional measures necessary with a view to its full implementation, including to ensure respect for the safety of United Nations personnel;

8. Declares that arrangements pursuant to the present resolution shall remain in force until the provisions for the cessation of hostilities, separation of forces and supervision of heavy weaponry as envisaged in the peace plan for the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina are implemented;

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United States reminded the Bosnian Serb leadership that her Government had made it clear that it was consulting with its allies about new, stronger and tougher measures. The implementation, or lack thereof, of the resolution just adopted and all other relevant Security Council resolutions over the following few days would determine whether the United States and the rest of the international community would have to decide that the use of force was inevitable.⁶⁶

The representative of Pakistan stated that his delegation was pleased at the unanimous adoption of resolution 824 (1993). Pakistan believed that declaring those threatened areas in Bosnia and Herzegovina to be safe areas would go a long way to ensuring the safety of civilian populations in the region. He observed that the international community was witnessing escalating defiance of its will by the Bosnian Serbs. In total disregard of the mandatory resolutions of the Security Council, the Bosnian Serbs had persisted in their “repulsive” policy of “ethnic cleansing” and genocide. The time had come for the Council to compel the Serbian side to accept the Vance-Owen peace plan. Pakistan believed that the Council should take immediate appropriate measures, including the authorization of the use of force under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, to ensure (a) that all heavy weapons in Bosnia and Herzegovina were placed under effective international physical control or neutralized; (b) the interdiction of all arms supplies to the Bosnian Serbs; (c) the institution of appropriate measures for reparations for the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina by Serbia and Montenegro; (d) that Serbia and Montenegro was liable, under international law, for any direct loss or damage, including environmental damage, or injury to foreign Governments, nationals or corporations as a result of its aggression against Bosnia and Herzegovina; and (e) the effective imposition of a comprehensive economic and financial blockade against Serbia and Montenegro. Pakistan also believed that States Members of the United Nations should extend their cooperation to Bosnia and Herzegovina in the exercise of its inherent right of individual and collective self-defence, in accordance with Article 51 of the Charter, including the supply of arms to enable them to defend themselves.⁶⁷

The representative of Hungary noted that the resolution just adopted reaffirmed the inadmissibility of any acquisition of territory by force. Hungary believed that the resolution could be seen, on the one hand, as part of the process of implementation of the Vance-Owen plan and, on the other hand, as a follow-up to the preventive diplomacy efforts. The Council must be prepared, if necessary, to consider immediately the necessary steps to ensure implementation of resolution 824 (1993).⁶⁸

The President, speaking in his capacity as representative of the Russian Federation, noted that his country's leaders had repeatedly said that there was no alternative to the Vance-Owen plan, and that they had pointed out that any party that did not adopt the plan bore a heavy responsibility. Following the talks in Athens, there should be no further obstacles to the implementation of the Vance-Owen plan. If the plan was not adopted and carried out, the Russian Federation delegation was prepared to discuss further and harsher steps, to put an end to attempts to attain further territorial gains by military force, to any actions that resulted in suffering for the Bosnian people and in violations of international humanitarian law. The Russian Federation supported the creation of additional safe areas in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and had therefore voted in favour of the resolution just adopted. It believed that the creation of safe areas, with the presence of United Nations personnel, would help to improve the humanitarian situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina and to achieve a peaceful settlement.⁶⁹

Decision of 10 May 1993 (3210th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3210th meeting, on 10 May 1993, the Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (the Russian Federation) then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council, which included a number of revisions agreed upon by Council members:⁷⁰

The Security Council, recalling its statement of 21 April 1993 concerning the atrocities and killings in areas north and west of Sarajevo, expresses its grave concern at the major new military offensive launched by Bosnian Croat paramilitary units in the areas of Mostar, Jablanica and Dreznica.

The Council strongly condemns this major military offensive launched by Bosnian Croat paramilitary units, which is totally inconsistent with the signature of the peace plan for the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina by the Bosnian Croat party. The Council demands that the attacks against the areas of Mostar, Jablanica and Dreznica cease forthwith, that Bosnian Croat paramilitary units withdraw immediately from the area and that all the parties strictly comply with their previous commitments as well as with the ceasefire agreed to today between the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Bosnian Croat party.

The Council also expresses its deep concern that the battalion of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) in the area has been forced under fire to redeploy as a result of this latest offensive and condemns the refusal of Bosnian Croat paramilitary units to allow the presence of United Nations military observers, in particular in the city of Mostar.

The Council once again reiterates its demand that UNPROFOR personnel be allowed unimpeded access throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina, and in this particular case demands that the Bosnian Croat paramilitary units ensure the safety and security of UNPROFOR as well as all United Nations personnel in the areas of Mostar, Jablanica and Dreznica. In this connection, the Council expresses its deep concern at the increasing hostile attitude of Bosnian Croat paramilitary units towards UNPROFOR personnel.

The Council calls upon the Republic of Croatia, in accordance with the commitments under the Zagreb agreement of 25 April 1993, to exert all its influence on the Bosnian Croat leadership and paramilitary units with a view to ceasing immediately their attacks particularly in the areas of Mostar, Jablanica and Dreznica. It further calls on Croatia to adhere strictly to its obligations under Council resolution 752 (1992) of 15 May 1992, including putting an end to all forms of interference and respecting the territorial integrity of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Council once again reaffirms the sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the unacceptability of the acquisition of territory by force and the practice of "ethnic cleansing".

The Council remains seized of the matter and is ready to consider further measures to ensure that all parties and others concerned abide by their commitments and fully respect relevant Council decisions.

Decision of 22 May 1993: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

By a letter dated 14 May 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁷¹ the Secretary-General referred to recent developments in Bosnia and Herzegovina and attached the text of an agreement on the cessation of hostilities, concluded between the Bosnian Croat and Bosnian Muslim sides on 12 May 1993, in Mostar. The Secretary-General noted that in terms of its mandate under resolution 776 (1992), UNPROFOR had found that the fighting in Mostar was extremely disruptive for the delivery of humanitarian relief aid. The Force therefore had no choice but to intervene if its original mandate were to be implemented. Recalling resolution 824 (1993), in which the Council had declared a number of safe areas and had referred to "other such threatened areas", the Secretary-General observed that Mostar qualified as a "threatened area." That consideration had helped to set the terms of the active involvement of UNPROFOR in witnessing the agreement concluded on 12 May 1993 and in, inter alia, deploying a company of the Spanish Battalion in an interposition role. The presence of UNPROFOR was an integral part of the ceasefire agreement and had without doubt helped to defuse the tension and stabilize the situation. Nonetheless, some concern had been expressed in the Security Council about the formal mandate of UNPROFOR in that regard. That concern also applied to the involvement of civilian police officers provided for in the agreement of 12 May 1993, for which no authorization from the Security Council existed. In order to clarify the mandate, the Secretary-General requested confirmation as to whether the above interpretation of the mandate of UNPROFOR was acceptable to the Security Council.

By a letter dated 22 May 1993,⁷² the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General of the following:

I have the honour to inform you that your letter dated 14 May 1993 concerning the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) has been brought to the attention of the members of the Council. Regarding the situation in the area of Mostar, they agree with the interpretation of the mandate of UNPROFOR contained in your letter.

Decision of 4 June 1993 (3228th meeting): resolution 836 (1993)

At its 3228th meeting, on 4 June 1993, the Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Turkey, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Spain) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution submitted by France, the Russian Federation, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States,⁷³ and to several other documents.⁷⁴

The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina stated that, although his delegation had not been consulted on the content of the draft resolution, it had nevertheless made a number of key suggestions which had been rejected. First, the safe areas concept should be applied more broadly to address the threats against other population centres in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Second, a time frame should be established in which there would be a shift from the temporary relief offered by the safe areas programme to the implementation of the Vance-Owen plan. Third, if the Bosnian Serbs were unwilling to accept the Vance-Owen plan by a stipulated date, then either all necessary measures should be employed to restore peace, or the right of Bosnia and Herzegovina to act in self-defence, consistent with Article 51, should be fully recognized. Fourth, the United Nations should develop a mandate, drawing on all the resources necessary to defend the safe areas, and produce a realistic plan for implementing and enforcing that mandate. Fifth, the period for reviewing the implementation of the resolution should have been shortened from 60 days to 30 days.⁷⁵

The representative of Turkey observed that the draft resolution fell short of his delegation's expectations. The draft resolution should have included a deadline for initiating the implementation of the Vance-Owen plan; a guarantee of effective enforcement measures to reverse the consequences of the use of force; and an acknowledgement of Bosnia and Herzegovina's inherent right to self-defence. He stressed that Bosnia and Herzegovina should be exempted without delay from the arms embargo, in accordance with its inherent right of collective self-defence under Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations.⁷⁶

Speaking before the vote, the representative of France noted that, following the adoption by France, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States of a joint programme of action on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, on 22 May 1993 in Washington, France and its partners had proposed that the Council adopt a resolution ensuring full respect for the safe areas named in resolution 824 (1993) and extending the mandate of UNPROFOR. The draft resolution addressed an "immediate, vital humanitarian objective" of ensuring the survival of civilian populations in the safe areas, as well as a "paramount political objective" of maintaining the territorial basis necessary for the development and implementation of the Peace Plan for Bosnia and Herzegovina. Stressing that the designation and protection of safe areas was a temporary measure and not an end in itself, the speaker stated that the Vance-Owen plan remained the basis for any settlement. He added that the draft resolution would strengthen UNPROFOR, enabling it to protect the safe areas by deterring attacks, monitoring the ceasefire, promoting the withdrawal of military units, and by occupying several key points on the ground. Furthermore, the draft resolution explicitly provided for the possibility of using force to respond to bombardments against the safe freedom of movement of UNPROFOR and of humanitarian convoys. It also provided for the use of air power within and around the safe areas, if necessary to support UNPROFOR in the fulfilment of its mandate.⁷⁷

The representative of Venezuela noted that the draft resolution had been put to the vote despite a request made by his delegation to wait for a report by the Secretary-General on the means he would need to implement the resolution. He contended that the draft resolution was incomplete in scope and contrary to its own objectives. Furthermore, his delegation was of the view that safe areas should be temporary, intermediate steps in the peace process. They should not be a substitute for peace. Safe areas should guarantee freedom of movement into and out of the area; international military presence, unrestricted presence of humanitarian agencies; the right to humanitarian assistance; respect for human rights; uninterrupted access to basic services; and access to economic activities. In addition to being provided security, these areas should be able to restore their civil government, local police and social services. These conditions were almost the exact opposite of those existing today in the so-called safe areas and the draft resolution before the Council did not address their main points. The speaker further noted that the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina had communicated to the Council its rejection of the particular modality of "safe areas" as contained in the draft resolution but that position had not even been considered by the Council. He also recalled that his delegation had taken an active part in working on the resolutions that provided for the creation of "safe areas" for Sarajevo and other cities and it could thus never be opposed to the concept. His delegation was opposed to the shape that humanitarian modality had taken in practice. The speaker concluded by saying that while there had been an attempt to negotiate the Peace Plan, Bosnia had lost two thirds of its territory and its people had been the victims of crimes and violations on an unprecedented scale. That was the time for the Council to really take action, not just appear to be taking action. For all these reasons,

his delegation would abstain from the vote on the draft resolution.⁷⁸

The representative of Pakistan recalled that his country, together with other non-aligned members of the Council, had been the proponent of the concept of safe areas. The experience in Srebrenica, Zepa and Gorazde, however, had revealed fundamental shortcomings in that concept in the absence of the international community's commitment to endorse the Vance-Owen peace plan. Turning to the draft resolution, he stated that in his delegation view, the draft resolution did not address certain core issues in the conflict. Unless the measures contained in the draft resolution were supplemented by enforcement actions in a given time frame and as part of an overall plan, the situation on the ground might be frozen to the advantage of the Serbs. Moreover, the modality of safe areas as contained in the draft resolution was not in full conformity with Pakistan's political and humanitarian concerns. The concept of safe area would only be acceptable to the Pakistani delegation if the international community committed itself to the full implementation of the Vance-Owen peace plan, and in particular to its provisions on territorial arrangements for Bosnian Muslim communities. All Bosnian Muslim regions, as specified in the peace plan, and Sarajevo, should be declared safe areas, and those regions already identified as safe areas should be given the maximum possible protection. For these reasons, his delegation would abstain in the vote on the draft resolution.⁷⁹

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted by 13 votes to none, with 2 abstentions (Pakistan, Venezuela) as resolution 836 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 713 (1991) of 25 September 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming in particular its resolutions 819 (1993) of 16 April 1993 and 824 (1993) of 6 May 1993, in which it demanded that certain towns and their surrounding areas in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina should be treated as safe areas,

Reaffirming the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the responsibility of the Security Council in this regard,

Condemning military attacks, and actions that do not respect the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of Bosnia and Herzegovina, which, as a State Member of the United Nations, enjoys the rights provided for in the Charter of the United Nations,

Reiterating its alarm at the grave and intolerable situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina arising from serious violations of international humanitarian law,

Reaffirming once again that any taking of territory by force or any practice of "ethnic cleansing" is unlawful and totally unacceptable,

Commending the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Bosnian Croat party for having signed the Vance-Owen plan,

Gravely concerned at the persistent refusal of the Bosnian Serb party to accept the Vance-Owen plan, and calling upon that party to accept the peace plan for the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina in full,

Deeply concerned by the continuing armed hostilities in the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina which run totally counter to the peace plan,

Alarmed by the resulting plight of the civilian population in the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in particular in Sarajevo, Bihac, Srebrenica, Gorazde, Tuzla and Zepa, Condemning the obstruction, primarily by the Bosnian Serb party, of the delivery of humanitarian assistance,

Determined to ensure the protection of the civilian population in safe areas and to promote a lasting political solution,

Confirming the ban on military flights in the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina, established by resolutions 781 (1992) of 9 October 1992, 786 (1992) of 10 November 1992 and 816 (1993) of 31 March 1993,

Affirming that the concept of safe areas in Bosnia and Herzegovina as contained in resolutions 819 (1993) and 824 (1993) was adopted to respond to an emergency situation, and noting that the concept proposed by France in document S/25800 and by others could make a valuable contribution and should not in any way be taken as an end in itself, but as a part of the Vance-Owen process and as a first step towards a just and lasting political solution,

Convinced that treating the towns and surrounding areas referred to above as safe areas will contribute to the early implementation of that objective,

Stressing that the lasting solution to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina must be based on the following principles: immediate and complete cessation of hostilities, withdrawal from territories seized by the use of force and "ethnic cleansing", reversal of the consequences of "ethnic cleansing" and recognition of the right of all refugees to return to their homes, and respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Noting the crucial work being done throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina by the United Nations Protection Force and the importance of such work continuing,

Determining that the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina continues to be a threat to international peace and security,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Calls for the full and immediate implementation of all its relevant resolutions;

2. Commends the peace plan for the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina as contained in document S/25479;

3. Reaffirms the unacceptability of the acquisition of territory by the use of force and the need to restore the full sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

4. Decides to ensure full respect for the safe areas referred to in resolution 824 (1993);

5. Also decides to extend to that end the mandate of the United Nations Protection Force in order to enable it, in the safe areas referred to in resolution 824 (1993), to deter attacks against the safe areas, to monitor the ceasefire, to promote the withdrawal of military or paramilitary units other than those of the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and to occupy some key points on the ground, in addition to participating in the delivery of humanitarian relief to the population as provided for in resolution 776 (1992) of 14 September 1992;

6. Affirms that these safe areas are a temporary measure and that the primary objective remains to reverse the consequences of the use of force and to allow all persons displaced from their homes in Bosnia and Herzegovina to return to their homes in peace, beginning, inter alia, with the prompt implementation of the provisions of the Vance-Owen plan in areas where those have been agreed by the parties directly concerned;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation, inter alia, with the Governments of the Member States contributing forces to the Force:

10. Decides that, notwithstanding paragraph 1 of resolution 816 (1993), Member States, acting nationally or through regional organizations or arrangements, may take, under the authority of the Security Council and subject to close coordination with the Secretary-General and the Force, all necessary measures, through the use of air power, in and around the safe areas in Bosnia and Herzegovina, to support the Force in the performance of its mandate set out in paragraphs 5 and 9 above;

11. Requests the Member States concerned, the Secretary-General and the Force to coordinate closely on the measures they are taking to implement paragraph 10 above and to report to the Council through the Secretary-General;

12. Invites the Secretary-General to report to the Council, for decision, if possible within seven days of the adoption of the present resolution, on the modalities of its implementation, including its financial implications;

13. Also invites the Secretary-General to submit to the Council, not later than two months after the adoption of the present resolution, a report on the implementation of and compliance with the present resolution;

14. Emphasizes that it will keep open other options for new and tougher measures, none of which is prejudged or excluded from consideration;

15. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter, and undertakes to take prompt action, as required.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of Brazil observed that the resolution just adopted was to be understood as a temporary measure, with the twofold objective of preserving the safety of the populations in the safe areas and restoring normalcy to those areas. Referring to the concern that the implementation of the safe areas concept might lead to a freezing of the existing situation, thus rewarding “military might” to the detriment of the Muslim community, the speaker noted that Brazil considered it essential that, in due course, the resolution just adopted be complemented by appropriate additional measures.

Brazil continued to believe that the ultimate solution to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina must come through negotiation and peaceful means, and that the Vance-Owen plan therefore retained its “full value”.⁸⁰

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that the tragic events that had recently taken place in safe areas made it necessary to expand the UNPROFOR mandate, in order to ensure the safe areas, deter aggression, monitor the ceasefire, and allow for the unhindered delivery of humanitarian assistance. The Russian Federation was convinced that the implementation of the resolution just adopted would help to curb the violence. Henceforth, any military attacks against, shelling of, incursions into, or hindrance of humanitarian deliveries to, the safe areas, would be responded to by United Nations forces through the use of all necessary measures, including the use of armed force. That would be an important factor in stabilizing the situation in those areas and for lessening the suffering of the civilian population. The speaker further contended that by adopting the resolution, the Council had taken a concrete step towards the implementation of the joint programme of action adopted at Washington on 22 May by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of France, the Russian Federation, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States. He noted in that regard that the Washington programme did not exclude the adoption of new, firmer measures.⁸¹

The representative of the United States observed that the resolution just adopted was an intermediate step. Both the Security Council and the Governments that had developed the Washington programme of action had agreed that they would keep open options for new and tougher measures. Her Government’s view of what these tougher measures should be had not changed. It expected full cooperation of the Bosnian Serb party in implementing the resolution. If that cooperation was not forthcoming, the United States would move to seek further action in the Council.⁸²

The representative of China stated that the continued escalation of the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina constituted a great threat to peace and security in the region. Under those circumstances, the establishment of safe areas might as well be tried as a temporary measure, even though they could not provide a fundamental solution to the conflict, and they could not supplant the Vance-Owen plan for a comprehensive political solution to the conflict. Reiterating China’s position that international disputes should be settled through dialogue and negotiation, rather than through the threat or use of force, the speaker stated that his delegation had reservations regarding the invocation of Chapter VII in the resolution just adopted, as it feared that further military action might complicate the issue and adversely affect the peace process.⁸³

The representative of the United Kingdom, acknowledging that the safe areas would not stop the war and were therefore a temporary measure, argued that they could nevertheless provide areas of stability and complement the important efforts undertaken by United Nations forces throughout Bosnia. Referring to suggestions that the policy of safe areas might be combined with a lifting of the arms embargo, the speaker noted that the two policies were “distinct and alternative” and contended that it would be hard to reconcile the supply of arms with United Nations peacekeeping on the ground. He concluded by stating that as the resolution made clear, neither the Washington Agreement, nor the view of his Government ruled out other stronger measures as the situation developed.⁸⁴

Decision of 10 June 1993 (3234th meeting):
resolution 838 (1993)

At its 3234th meeting, on 10 June 1993, the Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution submitted by France, the Russian Federation, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States,⁸⁵ and read out a revision to be made to the draft. documents.⁸⁶ The draft resolution, as orally revised in its provisional form, was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 838 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 713 (1991) of 25 September 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming also the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the responsibility of the Security Council in this regard,

Reiterating the demands in its resolution 752 (1992) of 15 May 1992 and subsequent relevant resolutions that all forms of interference from outside Bosnia and Herzegovina cease immediately and that its neighbours take swift action to end all interference and respect its territorial integrity,

Recalling the demand in its resolution 819 (1993) of 16 April 1993 that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) immediately cease the supply of military arms, equipment and services to Bosnian Serb paramilitary units,

Taking into account the report of the Secretary-General of 21 December 1992 on the possible deployment of observers on the borders of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Expressing its condemnation of all activities carried out in violation of resolutions 757 (1992) of 30 May 1992, 787 (1992) of 16 November 1992 and 820 (1993) of 17 April 1993 between the territory of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the United Nations Protected Areas in the Republic of Croatia and those areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces,

Considering that, in order to facilitate the implementation of the relevant Security Council resolutions, observers should be deployed on the borders of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, as indicated in its resolution 787 (1992),

Noting the earlier preparedness of the authorities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to stop all but humanitarian supplies to the Bosnian Serb party, and urging full implementation of that commitment,

Considering that all appropriate measures should be undertaken to achieve a peaceful settlement of the conflict in

Bosnia and Herzegovina provided for in the Vance-Owen peace plan,

Bearing in mind paragraph 4 (a) of its resolution 757 (1992) concerning the prevention by all States of imports into their territories of all commodities and products originating in or exported from the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and paragraph 12 of its resolution 820 (1993) concerning import to, export from and trans-shipment through those areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council as soon as possible a further report on options for the deployment of international observers to monitor effectively the implementation of the relevant Council resolutions, to be drawn from the United Nations and, if appropriate, from Member States acting nationally or through regional organizations and arrangements, on the borders of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, giving priority to the border between the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and taking into account developments since his report of 21 December 1992 as well as the differing circumstances affecting the various sectors of the borders and the need for appropriate coordination mechanisms;

2. Invites the Secretary-General to contact immediately Member States, nationally or through regional organizations or arrangements, to ensure the availability to him on a continuing basis of any relevant material derived from aerial surveillance and to report thereon to the Security Council;

3. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United Kingdom noted that the resolution just adopted was an important element of the immediate steps that his Government believed needed to be taken straight way. The placing of border monitors, particularly on the border between Bosnia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia was of considerable significance since it could bring home to the Bosnian Serbs the bankruptcy of their present policies and the need to reconsider their rejection of the Vance-Owen Peace Plan. The decision taken a month ago by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to limit to humanitarian supplies any traffic across the border between Bosnia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia had been welcome but it was essential to put that policy to the test by deploying monitors along that border.⁸⁷

The representative of France stated that the aim of the resolution just adopted was to show the intent of the Council to deploy the necessary observers for effective monitoring of the application of sanctions against the territories controlled by the Bosnian Serbs. By controlling the conditions for applications of the embargo against the territories controlled by the Serbs of Bosnia, Bosnian Serbs would be led to end their attacks and the practice of “ethnic cleansing”, and finally to start out along the road towards a peaceful settlement in the accordance with the provisions set out in the Vance-Owen Plan. He further stated that the reaction of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, and in particular that of Serbia, to the resolution would be significant. If the authorities of these countries were to decide to reject the deployment of observers on their side of the frontier with Bosnia, the situation would become clear and the Council would then have to draw the necessary conclusions.⁸⁸

The representative of Hungary stated that his delegation had voted in favour of the resolution just adopted, as it was convinced that all foreign interference in Bosnia and Herzegovina must cease immediately and that the neighbours of that country must respect its territorial integrity. It was clear that there could not be a settlement and lasting peace while such interference persisted. It was also clear that such a settlement would become possible only with the firm determination of the international community. Hungary attached particular importance to the fact that the resolution was in strict conformity with previous Council resolutions concerning the sanctions regime imposed on the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. The speaker further stated that his delegation considered the resolution primarily as a declaration of intent that would have to be followed up as soon as possible by a report from the Secretary-General and a resolution on the deployment. In that context there were some important questions that would have to be clarified concerning the mandate, emplacement and other aspects of the observers’ activities.⁸⁹

The representative of China reiterated China’s support for a political settlement of the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, within the framework of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia. China hoped that the measures envisaged by the resolution just adopted would help to realize that objective, and based on that consideration it had voted in favour of the resolution. At the same time, China’s affirmative vote did not represent a change in its position vis-à-vis sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.⁹⁰

Decision of 18 June 1993 (3241st meeting):
resolution 844 (1993)

On 14 June 1993, pursuant to resolution 836 (1993), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report containing an analysis of the modalities for implementation of that resolution.⁹¹ The analysis indicated that such implementation would require the deployment of additional troops on the ground as well as the provision of air support. While an additional troop requirement of approximately 34,000 would be necessary, it would be possible, however, to start implementing the resolution under a light option envisaging a troop reinforcement of around 7,600.⁹² The Secretary-General noted that while that option could not completely guarantee the defence of safe areas, it relied on the threat of air action against any belligerents. He indicated in that regard that he had invited NATO to coordinate with him the use of air power in support of UNPROFOR. It was understood that the first decision to initiate the use of air power would be taken by him in consultation with the Security Council. The Secretary-General further noted that such option represented an initial approach and had limited objectives. It assumed the consent and cooperation of the parties and provided a basic level of deterrence. In conclusion, he recommended that the Council approve the arrangements outlined in his report. At the same time, he stressed the overwhelming importance of seeking a comprehensive political solution to the conflict, noting that a negotiated and equitable settlement would enable the international community to devote its resources to reconstruction and development rather than to successive expansions of the United Nations activities in the former Yugoslavia.

At its 3241st meeting, on 18 June 1993, the Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Spain) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution submitted by France, the Russian Federation, Spain, the United Kingdom⁹³ and the United States. He also referred to several other documents.⁹⁴

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 844 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 713 (1991) of 25 September 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 14 and 17 June 1993 pursuant to paragraph 12 of resolution 836 (1993) concerning the safe areas in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Reiterating once again its alarm at the grave and intolerable situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina arising from serious violations of international humanitarian law,

Recalling the overwhelming importance of seeking a comprehensive political solution to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Determined to implement fully the provisions of resolution 836 (1993) of 4 June 1993,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Decides to authorize the reinforcement of the United Nations Protection Force to meet the additional force requirements mentioned in paragraph 6 of the report of the Secretary-General as an initial approach;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the consultations, inter alia, with the Governments of the Member States contributing forces to the Force, called for in resolution 836 (1993);

4. Reaffirms its decision in paragraph 10 of resolution 836 (1993) on the use of air power in and around the safe areas to support the Force in the performance of its mandate, and encourages Member States, acting nationally or through regional organizations or arrangements, to coordinate closely with the Secretary-General in this regard;

5. Calls upon Member States to contribute forces, including logistic support and equipment, to facilitate the implementation of the provisions regarding the safe areas;

6. Invites the Secretary-General to report to the Council on a regular basis on the implementation of resolution 836 (1993) and the present resolution;

7. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of Hungary stated that his delegation's vote in favour of the resolution just adopted, reflected its conviction that resolution 836 (1993) establishing safe areas in Bosnia and Herzegovina must be implemented as quickly as possible. For Hungary, the only remaining question related to the specific modalities to do that and the modalities outlined in the resolution just adopted were not entirely what it had hoped for. They were acceptable only to the extent that under the present circumstances, the international community was neither in a position, nor was it inclined to do more. Hungary hoped that the measures proposed in the report of the Secretary-General would be taken as soon as possible and in such a way as to make possible progress towards a fair overall settlement of the Bosnian crisis.⁹⁵

The representative of the United States stated that his delegation had voted in favour of the resolution just adopted as an intermediate step that did not foreclose options involving tougher measures. The United States continued to expect the full cooperation of the Bosnian Serb party in implementing the resolution. If that cooperation was not forthcoming, then the United States would seek further action in the Security Council to stop the violence.⁹⁶

The representative of France said that, although the deployment of reinforcements was what might be called "the light option", it was nevertheless the only realistic option at that time, given the means available to UNPROFOR in the short term. France believed that those measures, coupled with the threat of air strikes, could deter attacks against the safe areas, in conformity with resolution 836 (1993).⁹⁷

The representative of the Russian Federation noted that his delegation shared the Secretary-General's view that the implementation of the decision to set up safe areas, needed to be predicated upon the consent and cooperation of all the Bosnian parties. The Russian Federation called upon them to cooperate with UNPROFOR in implementing the Council's resolutions on the safe areas. The parties needed to realize that if they refused such cooperation, then new, tougher measures might be adopted.⁹⁸

Decision of 29 June 1993 (3247th meeting):
rejection of a draft resolution

At its 3247th meeting, on 29 June 1993, the Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Bangladesh, Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Comoros, Costa Rica, Croatia, Egypt, Estonia, Indonesia, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Jordan, Latvia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Senegal, Slovenia, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukraine and the United Arab Emirates, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also invited Ambassador Dragomir Djokic, at his request, to address the Council. The President (Spain) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution submitted by Cape Verde, Djibouti, Morocco, Pakistan and Venezuela,⁹⁹ who were joined as sponsors by Afghanistan, Algeria, the Comoros, Egypt, Estonia, Latvia, Malaysia, Senegal, the Syrian Arab Republic and Turkey.¹⁰⁰

Under the draft resolution, in its preambular part, the Council, inter alia, would have stressed that a solution to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina must be based on the following principles: (a) immediate cessation of hostilities; (b) withdrawal from the territories occupied by forces and ethnic cleansing; (c) reversal of the consequences of the reprehensible policy of ethnic cleansing and recognition of the right of all Bosnian refugees to return to their homes; and (d) restoration of the territorial integrity and unity of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. In the operative part of the draft resolution, the Council would have reaffirmed the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina; and demanded that all hostilities within the territory of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina be halted forthwith and the consequences of hostilities against the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina be reversed in accordance with the principles outlined above. It would have also decided to exempt the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina from the arms embargo imposed on former Yugoslavia by its resolution 713 (1991) with the sole purpose of enabling the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina to exercise its inherent right of self-defence.

The representative of Cape Verde contended that the failure of the Council to implement effectively the Charter collective security provisions in respect of the situation in Bosnia, would have a negative impact on the outcome of current and future conflicts. He cautioned that one of the most negative lessons that might be drawn from the Bosnian conflict was that countries might have to rely on their own capacity to defend themselves in future. For small nations, which were the majority of the Members of the Organization, and which could meet their security needs only by relying on respect for the principles and norms of international law and on the effective implementation of the decisions of the Security Council, especially its Chapter VII decisions, the Bosnian experience was very disturbing. For a long time, calls for United Nations action to defend the Bosnian civilian population had gone unheeded, whilst safe areas declared under Chapter VII continued to be jeopardized. In submitting the draft resolution, the caucus of non-aligned members of the Security Council was responding to a moral call aimed at enabling the victims of aggression and ethnic cleansing to exercise their inherent right of self-defence, as recognized in the Charter of the United Nations. If the United Nations did not have the political will to take prompt and effective action to stop the killing of Bosnian Muslim civilians, then it should at least allow them legitimately to defend themselves. Indeed, the draft resolution made it clear that the sole purpose of lifting the arms embargo against Bosnia and Herzegovina was to enable that Republic to defend itself from attacks.¹⁰¹

The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina contended that two questions were relevant in evaluating the merit of the draft resolution. First, had the Security Council compelled the necessary means to stop the aggression and genocide against Bosnia and Herzegovina? Second, if not, what were the measures that should be taken to stop the aggression and, particularly should the arms embargo against Bosnia and Herzegovina be declared invalid in accordance with the United Nations Charter's guarantee of the right of self-defence? Noting that Bosnia and Herzegovina had waited for over a year for "the most empowered members of the Council" to fulfil their commitment to confront the Serbians, the speaker pointed out that his country had sought to reassert its right to obtain the means of self-defence only after those members had failed to meet their commitment. The speaker further stated that the Bosnians must be provided with the leverage to undertake fair and promising negotiations or to confront the undiminished aggression.¹⁰²

The representative of Pakistan argued that Bosnia and Herzegovina had been at a "grave disadvantage" in responding to aggression, not only because of the large and well-equipped Serb army and paramilitary units, but also because it had been prevented by the United Nations from acquiring the means for self-defence. He also contended that it had become clear that Serbian forces would not be deterred by the exhortations of the Council so long as it was not prepared to take enforcement measures, including the use of force under Chapter VII of the Charter. The speaker further stated that his country could not accept and legitimize the consequences of blatant acts of aggression against a State Member of the United Nations, nor could it accept the "disintegration" of a sovereign State. He warned that the consequences of accepting the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina would be terrible not only for the people of Bosnia and Herzegovina but for the international community as a whole. It would encourage those who believed that force could be a viable instrument for territorial expansion and political domination, and it would erode the credibility of the Security Council as an instrument of peace and justice, not only in respect of Bosnia and Herzegovina, but also in relation to other conflicts and disputes. Furthermore, it would revive the global arms race, as all nations exposed to aggression and domination would seek to arm themselves against such threats. Referring to the draft resolution, the speaker stated that the most important provision was the one exempting Bosnia and Herzegovina from the arms embargo imposed against the former Yugoslavia by resolution 713 (1991). That measure had been proposed by a majority of the United Nations membership in General Assembly resolution 47/121 of 18 December 1992. It was also consistent with Article 51 of the Charter. The speaker concluded by stating that the options available to the Security Council were stark: either the international community, in accordance with the collective security system envisaged in the Charter, should take effective measures to defend Bosnia and Herzegovina, or it should remove the shackles preventing the victim from exercising its inherent right of self-defence.¹⁰³

The representative of Croatia said that it was unfortunate that the Security Council had not endorsed, nor been prepared to enforce, the Vance-Owen plan. Although it was necessary for the international community to stop the tragedy taking place in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia did not believe that providing more arms to Bosnian Muslims would accomplish that purpose. If the arms embargo were to be lifted, the Croatian Government could only support a general lifting for all the victims of Serbian aggression. A selective approach to the issue would only aggravate the ongoing situation.¹⁰⁴

The representative of Morocco contended that the arms embargo, which the Council had adopted with a view to reducing violence and suffering, had unfortunately not had any effect on either the Serbs or the Croats. Rather, it had increased the military superiority of the Serbs. He argued that, as long as an imbalance existed, the Serbs would continue to impose conditions and refuse to compromise, as they had done with respect to the Vance-Owen plan. The legitimate Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina had suffered the most from the arms embargo. Authorizing the Bosnian Government to acquire the means to defend its civilian population would help deter the Serbs from pursuing policies of aggression and occupation. It was therefore essential to exempt it from the provisions of resolution 713 (1991). The speaker also argued that the lifting of the arms embargo should be accompanied by strengthened monitoring of the sanctions regime, in order to prevent the Bosnian Serbs from continuing to acquire additional weapons and territory.¹⁰⁵

Mr. Djokic stated that the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia strongly opposed

exempting one side from the arms embargo imposed by resolution 713 (1991). He warned that, should the draft resolution be adopted, the Security Council would, under the pretext of protecting the inherent right to self-defence, merely be contravening its past efforts to contain the crisis and find a lasting solution. He further argued that lifting the arms embargo and supplying arms to one side would invariably lead to an arms race between the warring parties in Bosnia and Herzegovina, with unforeseeable consequences. The Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, despite the unfair and inhumane sanctions imposed against it, would spare no effort to help prevent further bloodshed between the “three constituent nations” and to find a solution based on their legitimate interests and rights. Before concluding, the speaker contended that the draft resolution was one of war rather than of peace and he urged the Security Council, not to adopt it.¹⁰⁶

The representative of Slovenia noted that although the Council had devoted much of its time to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina the previous months, the resolutions adopted so far had not yielded the expected results and had in some cases avoided the crucial issues. He also stressed the following basic principles. First, the war in Bosnia and Herzegovina was neither a civil war, nor an ethnic conflict. It was a war of aggression perpetrated from outside Bosnia and Herzegovina, and it was a war for territory. Every State had the inherent right, in accordance with Article 51 of the Charter, to legitimate self-defence and that right should not be denied to Bosnia and Herzegovina. Second, genocide must be stopped, and deeds rather than words were necessary to do so. Third, the Security Council needed to find a way to preserve the existence of a United Nations Member State, or else the whole system of collective security would be put in jeopardy. Fourth, preservation of Bosnia and Herzegovina was a vital requirement for peace and political stability in south-eastern Europe and in Europe as a whole.¹⁰⁷

The representative of Ukraine urged the Council to consider additional effective measures to protect United Nations peacekeepers in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and expressed concern at the possibility that hostilities would be intensified if the arms embargo were lifted in Bosnia and Herzegovina. It favoured strict compliance with the resolutions that had already been adopted by the Security Council. It suggested that an important step might be to put under effective United Nations control all heavy weapons at the disposal of the Bosnian Serbs. In its opinion, such a step would lower the level of military confrontation in the region and would remove from the agenda the question of lifting the arms embargo.¹⁰⁸

During the debate, other speakers also referred to the inability of the Security Council to fulfil its responsibilities under Article 24 of the Charter and to enforce its resolutions adopted under Chapter VII. They reaffirmed the right of Bosnia and Herzegovina to self-defence in accordance with Article 51 and urged the Council to lift the arms embargo against Bosnia and Herzegovina.¹⁰⁹

Speaking before the vote, the representative of the United Kingdom regretted that a political settlement had not yet been achieved. But the United Nations could not simply impose a political solution. While acknowledging that the existing situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina was “deeply worrying”, the speaker stated that his Government nevertheless did not see a reason for adopting what it regarded as a “solution of despair”, which was how it viewed the proposal to lift the arms embargo. He contended that lifting the arms embargo would clearly result in an increase in fighting and would provide an “irresistible temptation” to the Bosnian Serbs and Bosnian Croats to intensify their military efforts and to ensure that, by the time any substantial delivery of weapons was made to the Government of Bosnia, the military threat it posed to them had been neutralized. In addition to these drawbacks, the United Kingdom did not see how the United Nations current efforts in Bosnia and Herzegovina could be sustained following a decision to lift the arms embargo. The United Kingdom was of the view that the adoption of the draft resolution would be seen as a signal that the United Nations was turning its back on Bosnia and leaving its inhabitants to “fight it out, come what may”. It could not therefore support the draft. The speaker further stated that his delegation regretted that the issue of lifting the arms embargo, which was “so divisive”, was being pressed to a vote. The unity of the Council was an “absolute prerequisite” to achieving results in handling what was the “most complex and difficult” international issue in recent years. The United Kingdom believed that priority should be given to making the safe areas safer. In addition, the economic sanctions against Serbia and Montenegro should be sustained and strengthened. It was crucial that the Bosnian Serbs and the authorities in Belgrade understood that there would be no easing or lifting of the sanctions until the conditions set out in the Security Council’s resolutions, most recently in resolution 820 (1993), had been fulfilled. The United Kingdom also believed that the Council should do everything in its power to sustain and nourish the peace process.¹¹⁰

The representative of France stated that his Government did not believe that the draft resolution should be adopted for reasons of principle, timing and substance. He argued that the role of the United Nations and the Security Council was not to organize for war or to wage war. According to the Charter, its role was to contribute to the settlement of conflict by peaceful means. Deciding to lift the arms embargo selectively would mean, contrary to the principles of the Charter, setting out on the path of war rather than of peace. Moreover, lifting the arm embargo would put an end to the safe areas and could have dangerous consequences for the very existence of Bosnia and Herzegovina.¹¹¹

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that his delegation could not accept the draft resolution. The position of principle of the Russian Federation on the crisis in Bosnia was that there should be a halt in hostilities and a peaceful settlement, which would satisfy all three sides within the context of the territorial integrity of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Lifting the arms embargo would not increase the chance of achieving such a settlement; on the contrary, it would open the “floodgates” for an escalation of the war, potentially leading to results completely contradictory to the goals proclaimed in the draft. It might actually neutralize the entire United Nations operation in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Russian Federation continued to support the concept of safe areas and of building up an international presence in Bosnia and Herzegovina, as one way of making progress towards a peaceful settlement.¹¹²

The representative of Hungary stated that his delegation continued to endorse the principles set out in the draft resolution, including the cessation of hostilities, the withdrawal from territories occupied by force, reversal of the consequences of the policy of “ethnic cleansing”, and restoration of the territorial integrity of Bosnia. Furthermore, Hungary thought that it was “enormously important” to make a clear distinction between the aggressor and the victim of aggression. It was also intolerable that one of the parties to the conflict continued to be supplied with weapons from outside sources, while another party had no such ability. The point was to halt all supplies of weapons and ammunition to Bosnia and Herzegovina. To that end, international inspection facilities should be set up along all of the borders of Bosnia and Herzegovina, as had been indicated in resolution 838 (1993). The Serbs’ heavy weapons should be placed under effective control, as they were the weapons that were responsible for so much of the violence. The Security Council needed only to apply its own resolutions. The speaker further stated that the question before the Council was whether, in the existing circumstances, the actions envisaged in the draft resolution would promote a solution to the Bosnian problem. After carefully weighing the various arguments concerning the draft resolution, however, Hungary had concluded that lifting the arms embargo against Bosnia and Herzegovina would not necessarily have a positive impact on subsequent developments in that country and the vicinity. In Hungary’s opinion, lifting the arms embargo would be to admit the irreversible failure of efforts for a negotiated, political solution.¹¹³

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and received 6 votes to none, with 9 abstentions (Brazil, China, France, Hungary, Japan, New Zealand, Russian Federation, Spain and United Kingdom), and was not adopted as it had not obtained the required number of votes.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United States recalled that her Government had consistently advocated lifting the arms embargo on the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina. By voting in favour of the draft resolution, the United States reaffirmed its belief that Bosnia and Herzegovina, as a sovereign State and Member of the United Nations, had a right to defend itself. The speaker warned that, although the Council had not acted on the arms embargo, it would be a grave mistake for the Bosnian Serbs to interpret that action as an endorsement of their intransigence or of their attempts to use military force to change international boundaries and destroy a neighbour. Nor should the vote be seen as an indication that the international community was willing to turn a blind eye to the gross violations of human rights committed in Bosnia, primarily by the Bosnian Serbs. The United States would continue to insist that, if the authorities in Belgrade wanted to rejoin the family of nations, they would have to stop the violence and comply with all relevant Security Council resolutions. Until that day, the Council would have no choice but to maintain the pressure. The goal remained a negotiated settlement freely agreed to by all the parties, and the United States continued to believe that exempting Bosnia and Herzegovina from the arms embargo was a means to that end.¹¹⁴

The representative of China stated that his delegation held that the sovereignty, political independence and territorial integrity of all United Nations Member States should be fully respected by the international community. It therefore supported such elements in the draft. Based on China's principled position, the Chinese delegation had abstained on the vote on the draft resolution.¹¹⁵

The representative of Brazil stated that his delegation had supported many of the elements in the draft resolution, including that there should be an immediate cessation of hostilities, a halt to the abhorrent practice of ethnic cleansing, and that the acquisition of territories by the use of force could not be tolerated. Notwithstanding those considerations, however, the Brazilian delegation had not been in a position to vote in favour of the draft resolution. Brazil continued to believe in the overwhelming importance of seeking a comprehensive political solution to the Bosnian conflict. It maintained that the international community needed to aim its actions and decisions at restraining and putting an end to the armed conflict and should avoid the risk that, as a consequence of its actions and decisions, war might escalate or expand. Furthermore, there appeared to be grounds to fear that some of the measures envisaged in the draft resolution, if they were to be implemented, might prompt drastic actions which would affect the very populations that the Security Council would be trying to protect. The international community should not give up on the hope of reaching a peaceful solution to the conflict.¹¹⁶

The representative of New Zealand noted that his delegation shared a deep sense of frustration about the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina. It believed, however, that a durable solution to the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina should come through intensified efforts towards a political settlement. New Zealand continued to support United Nations humanitarian efforts and Security Council measures, such as sanctions, designed to persuade the parties of the need to look for a political solution, but the action proposed in the draft resolution had been of quite a different nature. Lifting the arms embargo would, in New Zealand's view, immediately intensify the military pressure on the Bosnian forces, inevitably resulting in more civilian casualties and more refugees. It would also force an end to the United Nations humanitarian operations. The speaker cautioned that the Council's decision should not be misinterpreted as meaning that the Council had turned its back on the Bosnian people. On the contrary, the Council had established safe areas under resolution 836 (1993) and had decided to respond with force if those areas were threatened. It was necessary to address urgently the practical implementation of the safe areas.¹¹⁷

The President, speaking in his capacity as the representative of Spain, stated that his delegation shared, in large measure, the motivations of the countries that had sponsored the draft resolution. It was Spain's view, however, that lifting the arms embargo would lead to an escalation of the violence and would only increase the suffering of the civilian population. Moreover, the measures proposed in the draft resolution would escalate the risk of an expansion of the conflict, with potentially serious consequences for the entire region. In addition, lifting the arms embargo would be incompatible with the maintenance of the presence of UNPROFOR and that therefore the humanitarian agencies would not be able to operate. Spain believed that the Council should not abandon its efforts to achieve the implementation of resolutions 836 (1993) and 844 (1993), on the safe areas. He noted that, if all else failed, Spain was prepared to consider recourse to more forceful measures, without prejudging or excluding consideration of any of them.¹¹⁸

On 1 July 1993, pursuant to resolution 838 (1993), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on options for the deployment of international observers on the borders of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.¹¹⁹ The Secretary-General noted that the relevant resolutions of the Security Council would require border monitors to address movements of regular and irregular military personnel, weapons and other military equipment and supplies, as well as goods subject to sanctions from neighbouring countries destined for Bosnia and Herzegovina or the United Nations Protected Areas of Croatia. Two options were proposed, the first consisting of border monitoring and the second consisting of border control. Both options were based on the following assumptions: (a) border monitoring arrangements would require the full cooperation of all parties concerned; (b) border monitoring would include all international borders of Bosnia and Herzegovina, with priority given to those with the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia; (c) given the nature of the terrain and the length of the borders, only major crossing points could be effectively monitored; and (d) where applicable, UNPROFOR would focus its monitoring activity on the work of the national border control agencies.

The Secretary-General noted that option two would be unrealistic taking into account that the worldwide resources for additional peacekeeping troops were increasingly stretched. Option one, however, would also require substantial additional resources in terms of observers and equipment. He further noted that even if the necessary personnel and financial resources were available, the effectiveness of the first option would depend entirely on the cooperation of the neighbouring countries and of the parties concerned.

By a letter dated 7 July 1993,¹²⁰ the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General of the following:

The members of the Security Council have considered your report of 1 July 1993 on options for the deployment of international observers on the borders of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Council continues to believe that, in order to facilitate the implementation of the relevant Council resolutions, international observers should be deployed on the borders of Bosnia and Herzegovina, with priority being given to the border between the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).

Bearing in mind the observations in your report, they invite you to contact Member States in order to establish whether they are ready, individually or through regional organizations or arrangements, to make qualified personnel available to act as observers along the borders of Bosnia and Herzegovina and to continue to explore all possibilities for implementation of the border monitors concept. They also invite you to pursue the question of implementation with a view to obtaining full cooperation from the authorities in the neighbouring countries.

The members of the Council look forward to receiving further information on the contacts proposed in the previous paragraph, as well as reports pursuant to paragraph 2 of resolution 838 (1993) of 10 June 1993 concerning material derived from aerial surveillance.

Decision of 22 July 1993 (3257th meeting): statement by the President

By a letter dated 19 July 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹²¹ the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina transmitted a letter of the same date from the President of Bosnia and Herzegovina in which he reported that Serbian forces had launched an offensive towards the Sarajevo safe zone, and that forces had been also directed to Mount Igman. He called upon the Council to intervene immediately to stop the aggression against Bosnia and Herzegovina.

At its 3257th meeting, on 22 July 1993, the Council included the letter from the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (United Kingdom) stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹²²

The Security Council has noted with grave concern the letter of 19 July 1993 from the President of the Presidency of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina addressed to the President of the Security Council about the Bosnian Serb military offensive in the area of Mount Igman, close to Sarajevo, a city which has stood for centuries as an outstanding example of a multicultural, multi-ethnic and plurireligious society, which needs to be protected and preserved.

The Council renews its demand that all hostilities in Bosnia and Herzegovina cease and that the parties and others concerned refrain from any hostile acts. It supports the call from the Co-Chairmen of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia in this regard, designed to facilitate the peace talks.

The Council reaffirms its resolutions 824 (1993) of 6 May 1993 and 836 (1993) of 4 June 1993, in the first of which it declared Sarajevo a safe area that should be free from armed attacks and any hostile acts, and from which Bosnian Serb military or paramilitary units should be withdrawn to a distance wherefrom they cease to constitute a menace to its security and that of its inhabitants. It condemns the offensive by the Bosnian Serbs on Mount Igman aimed at further isolating Sarajevo and escalating the recent unprecedented and unacceptable pressures on the Government and people of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina before the forthcoming talks in Geneva. It demands an immediate end to this offensive and to all attacks on Sarajevo. It also demands an immediate end to all violations of international humanitarian law. It demands an end to the disruption of public utilities (including water, electricity, fuel and communications) by the Bosnian Serb party and to the blocking of, and interference with, the delivery of humanitarian relief by both the Bosnian Serb and the Bosnian Croat parties.

The Council calls on the parties to meet in Geneva under the auspices of the Co-Chairmen of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia. It calls on the parties to negotiate in earnest with the aim of achieving a just and equitable settlement on the basis of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the principles agreed at the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia in London on 26 August 1992 and supported by the Council in its statement of 2 September 1992. In particular it reaffirms the unacceptability of ethnic cleansing, or the acquisition of territory by the use of force, or any dissolution of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Council emphasizes that it will keep open all options, none of which is prejudged or excluded from consideration.

Decision of 24 August 1993 (3269th meeting):
resolution 859 (1993)

At its 3269th meeting, on 24 August 1993, the Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (United States) then drew the attention of the Council members to letters dated 3, 6, 20 and 23 August 1993 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹²³ conveying reports dated 2, 5 and 20 August 1993 of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, as well as to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations¹²⁴ and a number of other documents.¹²⁵

The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina stated that the last time he had spoken before the Council, his country had been told that its right to obtain defensive weapons and fully exercise self-defence would pose a threat to United Nations forces and prolong the war. Now it was being suggested that the reemphasis of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, international law, Security Council resolutions, decisions of the International Court of Justice and the London Conference on the Former Yugoslavia would somehow undermine the chances for a negotiated settlement. He urged the Security Council to adhere to its resolutions and commitments, warning that failure to do so would be "catastrophic", not only for the people of Bosnia and Herzegovina, but also for the people of the world, who deserved and commanded the very ideals upon which the Council had been established. Turning to the draft resolution he stated that it was timely, in that it was being adopted prior to the resumption of the

Geneva process to find a just and durable peace. Bosnia and Herzegovina hoped that the members of the Security Council would remain committed to the application of the draft resolution's principles and that they would ensure that the Co-Chairmen of the Conference would promote those principles in Geneva.¹²⁶

Speaking before the vote, the representative of Pakistan noted that the non-aligned members of the Security Council had originally submitted the draft resolution with a view to achieving two fundamental objectives: first, to ensure a complete ceasefire and cessation of all hostilities throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina, which was an essential prerequisite for a just and equitable political solution to the conflict through peaceful negotiations; and second, to set out a framework of principles which should constitute the fundamental basis for peace and a politically negotiated settlement of the crisis. Despite the unanimous view that the tragedy in Bosnia and Herzegovina was caused by flagrant violations of international law and the principles enshrined in the Charter, the political will to end it appeared to be deficient. The draft resolution came at a crucial time, and Pakistan therefore hoped that its successful adoption would help to create the conditions necessary for transparent and free negotiations among the parties concerned.¹²⁷

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 859 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Reaffirming the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the responsibility of the Security Council in this regard,

Reaffirming also that Bosnia and Herzegovina, as a State Member of the United Nations, enjoys the rights provided for in the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting that Bosnia and Herzegovina has continued to be subject to armed hostilities in contravention of Security Council resolution 713 (1991) of 25 September 1991 and other relevant Council resolutions and that, despite all efforts by the United Nations as well as regional organizations and arrangements, there is still no compliance with all relevant Council resolutions, in particular by the Bosnian Serb party,

Condemning once again all war crimes and other violations of international humanitarian law, by whomsoever committed, Bosnian Serbs or other individuals,

Deeply concerned at the deterioration of humanitarian conditions in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including in and around Mostar, and determined to support in every possible way the efforts by the United Nations Protection Force and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to continue providing humanitarian assistance to civilian populations in need,

Concerned about the continuing siege of Sarajevo, Mostar and other threatened cities,

Strongly condemning the disruption of public utilities (including water, electricity, fuel and communications), in particular by the Bosnian Serb party, and calling upon all parties concerned to cooperate in restoring them,

Recalling the principles for a political solution adopted by the London International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia,

Reaffirming once again the unacceptability of the acquisition of territory through the use of force and the practice of "ethnic cleansing",

Stressing that an end to the hostilities in Bosnia and Herzegovina is necessary to achieve meaningful progress in the peace process,

Mindful of its primary responsibility under the Charter for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Taking into account the reports of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia contained in documents S/26233, S/26260 and S/26337,

Determining that the grave situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina continues to be a threat to international peace and security,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Notes with appreciation the report by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on the latest developments at the Geneva peace talks, and urges the parties, in cooperation with the Co-Chairmen, to conclude as soon as possible a just and comprehensive political settlement freely agreed by all of them;

2. Calls for an immediate ceasefire and cessation of hostilities throughout the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina as essential for achieving a just and equitable political solution to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina through peaceful negotiations;

3. Demands that all concerned facilitate the unhindered flow of humanitarian assistance, including the provision of food, water, electricity, fuel and communications, in particular to the safe areas in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

¹²⁶ S/PV.3269, pp. 7-15.

¹²⁷ Ibid., pp. 22-23.

4. Demands also that the safety and operational effectiveness of personnel of the United Nations Protection Force and of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Bosnia and Herzegovina be fully respected by all parties at all times;

5. Takes notes with appreciation of the letter of the Secretary-General dated 18 August 1993 stating that the United Nations has now the initial operational capability for the use of air power in support of the Force in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

6. Affirms that a solution to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina must be in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law, and also affirms the continuing relevance in this context of:

(a) The sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

(b) The fact that neither a change in the name of the State nor changes regarding the internal organization of the State such as those contained in the constitutional agreement annexed to the Co-Chairmen's report in document S/26337 would affect the continued membership of Bosnia and Herzegovina in the United Nations;

(c) The principles adopted by the London International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, including the need for a cessation of hostilities, the principle of a negotiated solution freely arrived at, the unacceptability of the acquisition of territory by force or by "ethnic cleansing" and the right of refugees and others who have suffered losses to compensation in accordance with the statement on Bosnia adopted by the London Conference;

(d) Recognition and respect for the right of all displaced persons to return to their homes in safety and honour;

(e) The maintenance of Sarajevo, capital of Bosnia and Herzegovina, as a united city and a multicultural, multi-ethnic and plurireligious centre;

7. Recalls the principle of individual responsibility for the perpetration of war crimes and other violations of international humanitarian law and its decision in resolution 827 (1993) of 25 May 1993 to establish an international tribunal;

8. Declares its readiness to consider taking the necessary measures to assist the parties in the effective implementation of a fair and equitable settlement once it has been freely agreed by the parties, which would require a decision by the Council;

9. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of France contended that the terms for a comprehensive settlement as defined after the most recent negotiations certainly did not represent an ideal solution. However, they had the merit of preserving what was essential: the continued existence of Bosnia and Herzegovina through a union of three member Republics; a territorial base for each of the three communities, but above all for the most sorely tried community, the Bosnian Muslims, economically viable areas; and finally the maintenance of Sarajevo as the united capital of that entity. Another essential element, the continued membership of Bosnia and Herzegovina in the United Nations, was presently assured by the Council. Therefore, in his Government view, such an accord, if scrupulously adhered to, would be a realistic solution, permitting the foundation of a lasting agreement. His delegation welcomed the fact that the Council had stressed its readiness to take immediately the necessary measures to implement a political solution. The speaker noted that such action clearly benefited the party who was in a situation of weakness. A massive United Nations presence in Bosnia was the best guarantee of the rights of the weakest.¹²⁸

The representative of New Zealand noted that for the past months the Council had been seriously divided on how to respond to the increasingly tragic situation in Bosnia. That division, and the consequent inaction, had put at risk not only the interests of Bosnia but also the longer-term credibility of the United Nations system and the Council's role in collective security. His delegation was pleased that the Council had finally rose to the challenge. The small and the vulnerable must be able to depend on the collective security mechanism of the United Nations, and that meant that the Council must be willing to act when it was seized of an issue. The speaker further stated that the resolution just adopted underlined the importance the Council attached to backing up UNPROFOR with force, and it emphasized the support that the Secretary-General enjoyed on that issue. The resolution also addressed three other matters that his delegation believed to be essential for any fair and freely accepted settlement: first, the continuity of the Bosnian State; secondly, the special status of Sarajevo as a unified capital; and, thirdly, the reiteration of the general principles under which the negotiations had proceeded. On the question of the implementation of the settlement, his delegation was very pleased that the resolution looked forward to the role that the Council would have to play once a settlement was concluded.¹²⁹

¹²⁹ Ibid., pp. 33-36.

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that his delegation had voted in favour of the resolution just adopted on the basis of its firm conviction that all steps taken by the Security Council on the issue of a Bosnian settlement must be aimed solely at assisting the negotiations in Geneva, which provided a “unique opportunity” to halt the bloodshed and lead to a political settlement. It was the Russian Federation’s fundamental position that the international community, through the Security Council, must give clear signals promoting peacemaking and not actions likely to impede the negotiating process. The speaker contended that there remained “unbalanced and biased elements” in the resolution concerning one of the parties to the conflict, thus incorrectly reflecting the state of affairs existing in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Moreover, in connection with paragraph 5, The Russian Federation unequivocally believed in the need for the Secretary-General to hold consultations with members of the Security Council before adopting a decision on air support for UNPROFOR. He warned that there should be no “automatic response” on that important question. The Russian Federation also emphasized that such air power could only be used in support of UNPROFOR, as provided in resolution 836 (1993). In conclusion, the speaker stated that, in the view of his delegation, the Security Council must not only promote the speedy achievement of an agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina, but it should also specify its own role as a guarantor of the agreement’s implementation. Immediately after the signing of the Geneva package, the Security Council should therefore adopt a supporting resolution, providing not only for active, positive steps to implement the agreements, but also for stricter measures concerning those who violated them.¹³⁰

The President, speaking in her capacity as representative of the United States, stated that the resolution just adopted, fairly and properly urged the parties to reach a just and comprehensive political settlement as soon as possible. The resolution did not take a stand on the points that the parties had taken to their constituencies from the Geneva negotiations. The decision had to remain with the parties. It was also necessary to keep in mind that signing a political settlement was only the first step towards a return to normalcy. The United States would continue to support efforts to reach a solution, consistent with Security ¹³⁰ Ibid., pp. 47-50.

Council resolutions, to the problem of the United Nations protected areas in Croatia. Similarly, the parties must cooperate with the international war crimes tribunal. The speaker reiterated her Government’s belief that signing a political agreement was not enough; a willingness effectively to implement what they had signed would be the real test of any of the parties’ good will.¹³¹

Decision of 14 September 1993 (3276th meeting): statement by the President

At its 3276th meeting, on 14 September 1993, the Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Venezuela) then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹³²

The Security Council expresses its profound concern over recent reports that Bosnian Croats have been holding Bosnian Muslims in detention camps under deplorable conditions. The Council recalls the international revulsion and condemnation that accompanied revelations last year of the conditions under which Bosnian Muslims and Bosnian Croats were being held in Bosnian Serb detention camps.

The Council reiterates the principle that the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) must be given access to all detainees in Bosnia wherever they may be held. It notes that the ICRC has recently been given access to some detainees, but recalls with condemnation the obstacles which the Bosnian Croats have previously placed in the way of the ICRC’s attempts to gain access to the camps in order to ascertain the conditions of the detained. It also notes the recent appeal addressed by the President of Croatia to the Bosnian Croats.

The Council emphasizes the fact that inhumane treatment and abuses in detention centres violate international humanitarian law. Moreover, as the Council has previously recalled, persons who commit or order the commission of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 are individually responsible in respect of such breaches.

The Council calls upon the Bosnian Croats to supply immediately to the ICRC complete information on all camps where Bosnian Muslim and other prisoners are being held, and to assure the ICRC and all other legitimately concerned international bodies free and unhindered access to the detained, wherever they may be held.

The Council believes that the Government of Croatia has a responsibility to use its influence with the Bosnian Croats to secure compliance with this statement and calls on the Government of Croatia to take immediate steps to that end.

The Council further reaffirms that all parties to the conflict are bound to comply with their obligations under international humanitarian law and in particular the Geneva Conventions, and reminds them of its willingness to consider appropriate actions if any of them should fail to abide scrupulously by their obligations.

The Council decides to remain seized of the matter.

Decision of 28 October 1993: statement by the President

On 28 October 1993, after consultations with the members of the Council, the President made the following statement on behalf of the members of the Council:¹³³

The members of the Security Council have heard an initial oral report by the Secretariat concerning the massacre of the civilian population in the village of Stupni Do on 23 October 1993 by troops of the Croatian Defence Council (HVO). They also heard accounts of attacks against the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) by armed persons bearing uniforms of the Bosnian Government forces, and of an attack to which an humanitarian convoy under the protection of UNPROFOR was subjected on 25 October 1993 in central Bosnia.

The members of the Council unreservedly condemn these acts of violence. They express their profound concern about the preliminary information to the effect that regular and organized armed forces were probably involved. They have requested the Secretary-General to submit as soon as possible a complete report on the responsibility for these acts. The members of the Council are prepared to draw all the relevant conclusions from this report, which will also be transmitted to the Commission of Experts established by resolution 780 (1992).

The members of the Council reiterate their demand that all the parties in the former Yugoslavia comply with their obligations under international humanitarian law, and that those responsible for such violations of international humanitarian law should be held accountable in accordance with the relevant Council resolutions. The members of the Council call upon all the parties in the former Yugoslavia to guarantee the unimpeded access of humanitarian assistance and the security of the personnel responsible for it.

Decisions of 9 November 1993 (3308th meeting):
statements by the President

At its 3308th meeting, on 9 November 1993, the Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Cape Verde) drew the attention of the members of the Council to several documents¹³⁴ and stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make two statements on behalf of the Council:

The first statement¹³⁵ reads:

The Security Council expresses its deep concern at the reports on the deterioration of the situation in central Bosnia where increased military activities are seriously threatening security of the civilian population.

The Council demands that all parties and others concerned refrain from taking any action that threatens the safety and well being of the civilian population.

The Council is equally concerned at the overall humanitarian situation prevailing in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. It reiterates its demand to all parties and others concerned to guarantee unimpeded access for humanitarian assistance.

The Council, aware of the heavy burden that these developments add to the existing precarious humanitarian situation of the refugees and displaced persons in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in the surrounding countries, calls on all parties to assist the competent United Nations agencies and other humanitarian organizations in their efforts to provide relief to the affected civilian population in those countries.

The Council urges all parties and others concerned to exert the utmost restraint and refrain from taking any action which might exacerbate the situation.

The second statement¹³⁶ reads:

The Security Council is profoundly shocked to learn of the incident which took place on 8 November 1993 in which two persons were taken hostage by the Bosnian Serb forces, while members of a delegation headed by Monsignor Vinko Puljic, the Archbishop of Sarajevo, travelling to the city of Vares on a mission of peace under the protection of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR).

The Council strongly condemns this outrageous act, which is a flagrant challenge to the authority and inviolability of UNPROFOR.

The Council notes that, despite the prompt and commendable intervention of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, neither of the hostages has been released, and it demands that the Bosnian Serb forces proceed immediately to release them. The Council reminds the perpetrators of this act that they are obligated to ensure that no harm comes to the individuals being held and that those responsible for violations of international humanitarian law will be held personally accountable for their actions.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to undertake a thorough investigation of the incident and to report to the Council without delay. It urges all parties and others concerned to refrain from taking any action which might further exacerbate the situation.

The Council condemns all attacks and hostile acts against UNPROFOR by all parties in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, as well as in the Republic of Croatia, which have become more frequent over the last weeks, and demands that they cease forthwith.

Decision of 7 January 1994 (3327th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3327th meeting, on 7 January 1994, the Council resumed its consideration of the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Czech Republic) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a letter dated 6 January 1994 from the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹³⁷ transmitting a letter of the same date from the President of the Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina addressed to the President of the Security Council. The President then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹³⁸

The Security Council expresses its deep concern at the continuing widespread hostilities in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. It deplores the failure of the parties to honour the agreements they have already signed, in the context of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, to implement a ceasefire and to permit the delivery of humanitarian assistance. It condemns the flagrant violations of international humanitarian law which have occurred, for which it holds the perpetrators personally responsible.

The Council condemns any hostilities in the United Nations-designated safe areas, especially in the Sarajevo area. In particular, it strongly condemns the continuing military pressure on and the relentless bombardment by Bosnian Serb forces of the capital city, Sarajevo. It demands the immediate end to attacks against Sarajevo, which have resulted in a high number of civilian casualties, seriously disrupted essential services and aggravated an already severe humanitarian situation. In this regard, the Council once again reaffirms its commitment to implement fully all its relevant resolutions, in particular resolution 836 (1993) of 4 June 1993.

The Council strongly deplores the abhorrent practice of deliberate obstruction of humanitarian relief convoys by any party and reiterates its demand that there be unimpeded access of humanitarian relief assistance to their intended destinations. The Council further demands that all parties fully abide by their commitments in this regard and facilitate timely delivery of humanitarian aid.

The Council also condemns recent attacks against the personnel of the United Nations Protection Force as well as of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other humanitarian organizations. It reiterates the demand that all parties ensure the safety and security of the Force, as well as all other United Nations personnel and those of non-governmental organizations, and their unimpeded access throughout the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Council calls on all the parties to cease hostilities throughout the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and to honour the commitments they have entered into. It calls upon them to negotiate in earnest in the framework of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia to achieve an early settlement.

The Council remains seized of the matter and is ready to consider further measures to ensure that all parties and others concerned abide by their commitments and fully respect relevant Council resolutions.

Decision of 3 February 1994 (3333rd meeting):
statement by the President

By a letter dated 28 January 1994 addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹³⁹ the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina transmitted a letter of the same date from the Prime Minister of Bosnia and Herzegovina addressed to the Security Council, in which he requested an emergency meeting of the Council pursuant to a military intervention of the armed forces of Croatia against Bosnia and Herzegovina. He further requested the Security Council to condemn firmly Croatia's military activities and to take all the necessary measures in accordance with Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations and all of the relevant General Assembly and Security Council resolutions.

At its 3333rd meeting, held on 3 February 1994 in response to the request contained in the above-mentioned letter, the Council included the letter of the representative of Bosnia in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Djibouti) drew the attention of the members of the Council to several documents¹⁴⁰ and stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹⁴¹

The Security Council is deeply concerned that the Republic of Croatia has deployed elements of the Croatian Army along with heavy military equipment in the central and southern parts of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, as described in the letter from the Secretary-General dated 1 February 1994.

The Council strongly condemns the Republic of Croatia for this serious hostile act against a State Member of the United Nations, which constitutes a violation of international law, the Charter of the United Nations and relevant Council resolutions, in particular resolution 752 (1992) of 15 May 1992, in which the Council demanded an immediate end to all forms of interference and full respect for the territorial integrity of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Council demands that the Republic of Croatia withdraw forthwith all elements of the Croatian Army along with military equipment and fully respect the territorial integrity of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Council once again reaffirms the sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the unacceptability of the acquisition of territory by force or ethnic cleansing, and condemns such acquisition, as well as the practice of ethnic cleansing, by whomsoever committed.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to monitor the situation closely and report to the Council within two weeks from the date of the present statement on progress towards the complete and full withdrawal of all elements of the Croatian Army, as well as military equipment, from the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Council will consider other serious measures if the Republic of Croatia fails to put an immediate end to all forms of interference in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Council reiterates its presidential statement of 7 January 1994, in which it expressed its deep concern at the continuing widespread hostilities in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Council calls once more on all the parties to cease hostilities throughout the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and to honour the commitments they have entered into and refrain from actions which escalate or widen the conflict. It calls upon them to negotiate in earnest in the framework of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia to achieve an early settlement.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Deliberations of 14 and 15 February 1994 (3336th meeting)

By a letter dated 5 February 1994 addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹⁴² the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina transmitted a letter from the Prime Minister of Bosnia and Herzegovina in which he reported that Serbian gunners had shelled a market in Sarajevo, killing 66 civilians and wounding 197 civilians. The Prime Minister requested an emergency meeting of the Security Council to determine why the existing mandate given by the Council under resolution 836 (1993) to "deter attacks against the safe area" had not been utilized to confront those who had committed these acts.

By a letter dated 8 February 1994 addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹⁴³ the representative of Pakistan requested, on behalf of the OIC Contact Group on Bosnia and Herzegovina,¹⁴⁴ that an urgent meeting of the Council be convened, to consider the extremely grave situation in Sarajevo.

By a letter dated 10 February 1994 addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹⁴⁵ the representative of the Russian Federation transmitted a statement dated 10 February 1994 by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Russian Federation containing a request for an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider practical ways to demilitarize Sarajevo and introduce a United Nations administration.

At its 3336th meeting, held on 14 and 15 February 1994 in response to the requests contained in the above-mentioned letters, the Council included the letters in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Belgium, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brunei Darussalam, Canada, Colombia, Croatia, Denmark, Egypt, Estonia, Finland, Germany, Greece, Indonesia, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Kuwait, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Morocco, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Slovenia, the Sudan, Sweden, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukraine and the United Arab Emirates, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also invited Ambassador Dragomir Djokic, at his request, to address the Council in the course of its consideration of the item. The Council further extended invitations to Mr. Mohammed Peyrovi, Deputy Permanent Observer of OIC, and Mr. Ahmet Engin Ansay, Permanent Observer of OIC to the United Nations.

The President (Djibouti) then drew the attention of the Council members to several documents.¹⁴⁶

¹⁴⁶ Letter dated 5 February 1994 from the Prime Minister of Bosnia and Herzegovina addressed to the President of the Council, transmitted by a letter of the same date from the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina addressed to the President of the Council (S/1994/124); letter dated 8 February 1994 from the representative of Pakistan addressed, on behalf of the members of the OIC Contact Group on Bosnia and Herzegovina, to the President of the Council (S/1994/135); letter dated 10 February 1994 from the representative of the Russian Federation addressed to the President of the Council (S/1994/152); letters dated 4, 8 and 9 February 1994, respectively, from the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/1994/123, S/1994/134 and S/1994/142); letter dated 7 February 1994 from the representative of Turkey addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/1994/126); letter dated 6 February 1994 from the representative of Yugoslavia addressed to the Secretary-General (S/1994/127); letter dated 7 February 1994 from the representative of Slovenia addressed to the Secretary-

The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina welcomed the NATO ultimatum to the Serbian forces besieging Sarajevo and commended the Secretary-General for initiating the use of air strikes to deter further attacks. He observed in that regard, that resolutions 824 (1993) and 836 (1993) did not require any further action or consultation by the Security Council, if the terms of those resolutions and ultimatum were not met by the Serbians. The conditions of resolutions 824 (1993) and 836 (1993) and the withdrawal of Serbian forces and their weapons should be executed fully and in a timely manner. The speaker added that the Secretary-General and NATO had been delegated that responsibility, and the international community and Member States expected that those delegated obligations and commitments would be carried out without equivocation. Noting that the plight of Sarajevo was "only the tip of the iceberg" of the suffering of the Bosnian people, the speaker stressed that, if peace were to be secured and the credibility of the negotiating process established, the international community must implement resolutions 824 (1993) and 836 (1993) in the other five safe areas and take the necessary measures to secure the safety of Bosnians throughout the country. He contended that the Council's commitment to ensure full and timely compliance with resolutions 824 (1993) and 836 (1993) around Sarajevo, and to extend that commitment to the other safe areas and the remainder of the country would be critical in determining the necessity for Bosnia and Herzegovina to exercise its full rights under Article 51. He added that although his delegation was prepared to consider United Nations demilitarization and administration of Sarajevo as part of a final and overall peace plan, such premature attempts could only delay the taking of the necessary steps and deviate from the desired conclusion. In conclusion, Bosnia and Herzegovina would support any efforts to broaden the involvement of the Security Council and Member States in the peace process, and in that context it backed the relocation of talks to New York.¹⁴⁷

The representative of France stated that the only purpose of recent decisions of States members of NATO was to make available to the United Nations the means to implement Security Council decisions, and thus to improve the chances for peace. In that perspective, the top priority was to lift the siege of Sarajevo, to begin the demilitarization of the city, by giving UNPROFOR control of heavy weapons, and to place the city under provisional United Nations administration as contemplated in the European Union plan. He contended that the NATO decisions fell "squarely" within the framework of resolutions 824 (1993) and 836 (1993). There was thus no need for the decisions of the NATO Council to be submitted to the Security Council for any further decision. Moreover, the Government of France believed that the Secretary-General had been acting within his authority and in accordance with Security Council resolutions when he had contacted NATO. The Government of France also took note of the desire of the Russian Federation that the Security Council consider steps to raise the siege of Sarajevo, and to place the city under United Nations administration. While it shared that objective, it believed that such a consideration should in no way

call into question the decisions of the NATO Council, which should be implemented fully.¹⁴⁸

The representative of the United States stated that her Government believed that the conflict should be resolved at the negotiating table, not on the battlefield. She argued, however, that diplomacy must be backed by a willingness to use force, when essential, in the cause of peace, for it was only "force plus diplomacy" that could stop the "slaughter" in Sarajevo and break the "stalemate" in Geneva. Referring to the decisions taken by the NATO Council, she stated that those steps were consistent with resolutions adopted by the Council, and did not require further Council action. She recalled in that regard that the decision to initiate air strikes lay in the hands of the Secretary-General and that it had been the Council that had placed it there. Acknowledging that neither NATO nor the Security Council should impose a settlement upon the parties, as such a settlement would not be lasting, the speaker stated that by seeking to reduce the level of violence around Sarajevo, it was hoped that the negotiating process would be reinvigorated. She also noted that, for the first time, a regional security organization, NATO, had acted to implement a decision of the Council to use force under Chapter VII of the Charter. Cooperation between NATO and the United Nations would be essential, not only for the citizens of Sarajevo and the other safe areas in Bosnia, but also for the precedent it would set for the future of collective security.¹⁴⁹

The representative of Pakistan recalled that his country had consistently urged the international community to act decisively in order to halt and reverse aggression against the Bosnian Government. Pakistan had advocated resolute action, including the use of force, and in particular air strikes, to enforce and implement the mandatory decisions of the Council. Regrettably, despite the fact that most of the Council resolutions on Bosnia and Herzegovina were adopted under Chapter VII, they remained by and large unimplemented. His delegation believed that only the decisive use of force, through the use of "surgical, punitive air strikes", would make the Serbs conform to Security Council resolutions. It further considered that the requisite legal framework for such action existed in Security Council resolutions, and in particular in resolution 836 (1993). The speaker also reiterated the view that the arms embargo against Bosnia and Herzegovina was “selective” and “contrary” to Article 51 of the Charter, arguing that it had prevented the victim of aggression from exercising its legitimate right of self-defence. He observed that the need to allow the Government of Bosnia to defend itself had become all the more urgent given recent reports of the presence of regular troops of the Serbian and Croatian armies in Bosnia and Herzegovina. His delegation was awaiting with “keen interest” a report by the Secretary-General on the full withdrawal of Croatian army troops and military equipment from Bosnia and Herzegovina. If Croatia failed to comply with the demands of the Council than stringent sanctions should be imposed against that country. In conclusion, his delegation shared the view that the peace negotiations should be moved to New York, so that they would be under the “direct supervision” of the Security Council.¹⁵⁰

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that the proposal to convene an immediate meeting of the Council to consider practical ways to demilitarize Sarajevo and introduce United Nations control had been put forward by his country, in view of the need for the international community to take the most decisive action to put an end to the escalating violence in Bosnia and Herzegovina. His delegation welcomed the agreement between the Bosnian Serbs and the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina on a ceasefire and on action towards ensuring that all sides either placed their heavy weapons in the Sarajevo area under UNPROFOR control or withdrew them from the area. Such steps would constitute major progress towards settling the conflict. The speaker noted, however, that as past ceasefires and agreements between the parties had often broken down, it was of great importance that the Security Council “back up” its demands with a strong decision supporting the Secretary-General’s request to NATO, encouraging positive progress in Sarajevo, and supporting the prompt conclusion of an agreement on an effective ceasefire in and around Sarajevo; the withdrawal or placing under United Nations control of heavy weapons; and ensuring strict compliance with the security regime in the Sarajevo area, including protection for UNPROFOR personnel, in accordance with Security Council decisions.¹⁵¹

The representative of China believed that the fundamental solution to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina would come in the form of a political settlement, which depended on the parties themselves. Recalling that China had always advocated the peaceful settlement of conflict through dialogue and negotiation, he noted that his delegation was opposed to the use or threat of force. He contended that the peace process was at a crucial juncture and further military actions would not help achieve a political settlement. Rather, such actions would entail negative consequences. His delegation’s understanding with regard to the use of air power in Bosnia and Herzegovina was that such actions should be limited to self-defence by UNPROFOR. The speaker also expressed his country anxiety at the possible serious consequences of air strikes for the safety of UNPROFOR and humanitarian personnel. It was therefore necessary to act prudently and refrain from taking hasty action.¹⁵²

The representative of Germany welcomed the decision by the NATO Council, noting that the decisions taken by the NATO Council and the Council of Europe were part of the political process towards a negotiated settlement. Only when a political solution proved impossible was the use of force permitted to achieve the aims set out in Security Council resolutions 824 (1993) and 836 (1993). The decision of the NATO Council was aimed at demilitarizing Sarajevo and placing it under United Nations administration, through negotiations and in agreement with the European Union’s Action Plan. Germany had always supported the Bosnian Muslims in the search for a solution which secured the physical and political survival of the Muslims as a nation in their home State of Bosnia and Herzegovina. That implied a satisfactory territorial solution, including access to the Sava River and to the sea. The speaker also argued that the city of Mostar should be placed under the administration of the European Union and noted that Germany had offered to provide an administrator for that city.¹⁵³ authority and commitment were necessary to make the Serbs respond positively or comply. It would appeal to the United States and other members of NATO that the recourse to credible threat of force should not apply only to Sarajevo. His Government further opposed the idea of a United Nations administration in Sarajevo, contending that Sarajevo was the political capital, symbol and heart of Bosnia and Herzegovina's resistance against genocide and aggression. It was also of the view that the efforts so far had not taken fully into account the serious implications of the provisions of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide. That raised the question again of whether the Council arms embargo on Bosnia and Herzegovina remained valid in the presence of evidence that maintaining the embargo favoured or contributed to the commission of genocide. In such circumstances, resolution 713 (1991) could not apply to Bosnia and Herzegovina, thus making the lifting of the arms embargo against Bosnia and Herzegovina the most pressing issue before the Council. The speaker also noted that his Government had always maintained that the central authority and responsibility for bringing about a comprehensive and honourable peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina lay with the Security Council and not with the efforts in Geneva, which Malaysia contended had deviated from the relevant Security Council resolutions. Malaysia therefore felt that it was time for the negotiations to be held directly under the auspices of the Council, in New York.¹⁵⁴

The representative of Croatia believed that the decision of NATO to relieve the siege of Sarajevo was mandated by the Council's existing resolutions. What was needed in Bosnia and Herzegovina was a carefully balanced policy of a credible threat of force and straight forward support for the peace plans. Croatia had always advocated a peaceful, political settlement of the conflict. It had accepted the Vance plan for Croatia and it was now advocating the European Union Action Plan for Croatia and for Bosnia. Furthermore, it was the view of the Croatian Government that the Council should also give its unequivocal support to that plan. Stressing that the recent joint statement made by the Foreign Minister of Croatia and the Prime Minister of Bosnia and Herzegovina was a further step towards peace, the speaker noted that the statement had, inter alia, requested international control of the borders of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in accordance with

Security Council resolutions 787 (1992) and 838 (1993), and that it had called for a ceasefire agreement between the Bosnian Croat army and the Bosnian Muslim army within seven days.¹⁵⁵

The representative of Egypt stated that the Council must take the following measures. First, it should implement previous resolutions such as those concerning a ceasefire and the use of international force, including air strikes. Secondly, it should exempt Bosnia and Herzegovina from the arms embargo, so that the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina could ensure its self-defence under Article 51 of the Charter. Thirdly, it was necessary to ensure that any settlement was peaceful and just. In that regard, the speaker stressed that the Council must exercise its prerogatives in order to bring about a peaceful resolution. The Council, in that regard, should examine existing settlement plans to ensure that they were in accordance with the Charter, norms of international law and Council resolutions. It must also directly oversee the negotiations, because it was the body which determined the mandate of the Secretary-General's Special Representative. He stressed that the Special Representative must in no circumstances deviate from the mandate given to him by the Council. He must also return to the Council and report to it and he must not make any amendments to the settlement plan contrary to Council's resolutions without its prior authorization. The speaker noted that it was time to change the mandate of the negotiations in Geneva, as well as the team charged with those negotiations. Neighbouring States, States which had contributed to United Nations forces in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and States members of the Islamic contact group dealing with Bosnia and Herzegovina should be included in the negotiations.¹⁵⁶

The representative of Slovenia noted that many lessons could be drawn from the efforts made so far for peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The most important lesson was that diplomacy could not produce good results without realistic and well-informed analysis. Another major lesson was that diplomacy without strength was fruitless when confronted with the forces of aggression. Noting that the efforts for peace had been evolving for two years, he stressed the need to develop an imaginative framework for these efforts. In that context, the speaker recalled that his Government had recently formulated a four-point appeal containing the core elements of a framework to resolve the situation. First, heavy weapons should be withdrawn from the vicinity of Sarajevo and other areas with a high concentration of civilians. Second, there should be unimpeded delivery of humanitarian assistance to the civilian population. Third, private property should be restored and places of worship safeguarded. Fourth, territories seized by force and “ethnic cleansing” should be returned without delay.¹⁵⁷

Mr. Djokic stated that his country strongly opposed the NATO decision to use air strikes. That decision was politically and military unwise and could have serious consequence on the ground. He further argued that it did not fall within the purview of the relevant resolutions of the Security Council authorizing air strikes and that any attempt to carry out air strikes on the basis of that decision would represent a direct involvement in the civil war, on one side. He also contended that while the Muslim side had rejected all peace projects, the Serbian Serbs had proved their readiness to accept a viable compromise by offering numerous concessions. Yugoslavia expected that, in the light of that situation, the international community would make it clear to the Muslim side that it only stood to lose if it persisted with the war option. Instead, some influential countries were ready to use force, thus jeopardizing the results of the negotiations reached so far. The speaker concluded by stating that peace could not be achieved in Bosnia and Herzegovina through “one-sided accusations” or “irrational demands” for the lifting of the arms embargo for one of the sides, nor through the escalation of military activities. The only possible solution was a political one.¹⁵⁸

While considering the NATO decision as another important element of international efforts aimed at resolving the Yugoslav crisis that under certain circumstances could bring about positive results, the representative of Ukraine warned that that decision could have negative consequences, such as bringing about new suffering, jeopardizing the delivery of international humanitarian aid, and placing UNPROFOR personnel at risk of retaliatory strikes by the Serb forces. His delegation, however, did not rule out the possibility of using all necessary means, including force, to address deliberate hostile acts against areas of deployment of United Nations contingents, where there was no other option to stop the killing of innocent people. Such a course of action should be undertaken only in the event of a clearly expressed decision by the international community, namely the Security Council, and not as a result of a decision by an individual State. The seriousness of the matter required that all relevant procedures be employed, in accordance with the Charter, in order to reaffirm previous Council resolutions regarding the complex situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Ukraine shared the view that a viable solution to the crisis might include a ceasefire, placing heavy weapons under UNPROFOR control, the withdrawal of Serb units from Sarajevo, and the takeover of their positions by UNPROFOR. The demilitarization of Sarajevo and the introduction of United Nations administrative control in the city would stop the “senseless bloodshed” and serve as a starting-point for the achievement of lasting peace. Before concluding, the speaker stated that the time had come to address the question of the effectiveness of the economic sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in the context of an overall settlement, with the aim of mitigating the adverse consequences of the sanctions regime on the economies of third countries, in accordance with Article 50 of the Charter.¹⁵⁹

¹⁵⁷ S/PV.3336 (Resumption 2), pp. 141-145.

The representative of Greece noted that his Government had expressed reservations with regard to the advisability and the repercussions of eventual air strikes, and the ensuing escalation of the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The ultimate goal was the restoration of peace in former Yugoslavia, and the consequences of such air strikes ought to be evaluated very carefully. Greece was one of the countries that were closest to the crisis area and as such, all its initiatives were geared towards the exhaustion of all possible means, rather than the resort to force. It could not become involved in military activities and no other country in the region should.¹⁶⁰

Mr. Ansay recalled that an extraordinary Ministerial Meeting of the OIC Contact Group on Bosnia and Herzegovina, held in Geneva on 17 January 1994, had stressed that, in order to have any success and legitimacy, the peace process must ensure the following: the independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty of Bosnia and Herzegovina; a geographically and economically viable and defensible territory for Bosnia and Herzegovina; the return of all lands seized by force and “ethnic cleansing”; the retention by Bosnia and Herzegovina of access to the Sava river and the Adriatic Sea; the retention of Sarajevo as the undivided capital of Bosnia and Herzegovina; the return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes; and international guarantees for the implementation of a peace agreement and guarantees for future security. The OIC Ministers had also called for the reopening of the Tuzla airport, as well as the lifting of the siege against Sarajevo. The speaker noted that OIC saw the decision of the NATO Council as “a step in the right direction”, but that it believed that the international community should also pay attention to the security of the civilian population in all “safe areas”, and that it supported the concept of declaring the city of Mostar a “safe area”. OIC also believed that the International Tribunal should start functioning without further delay. Reiterating the full support of OIC for the right of Bosnia and Herzegovina to defend itself under Article 51 of the Charter, the speaker called for the lifting of the arms embargo against Bosnia and Herzegovina. Referring to reports of the presence of regular troops of the Serbian and Croatian armies in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the speaker noted that OIC was awaiting with keen interest the report by the Secretary-General regarding the full withdrawal of Croatian army elements from Bosnia. If the Croats failed to comply with the Council’s demand on that score, then stringent economic sanctions should be imposed on Croatia immediately.¹⁶¹

Most of the speakers in the debate supported the use of air strikes by NATO to deter further attacks against Sarajevo by Bosnian Serbs, and shared the view that the decisions taken by NATO were consistent with resolutions 824 (1993) and 836 (1993) and did not require further approval by the Security Council.¹⁶² A number of them, however, stressed that the use of force should always be an instrument of last resort.¹⁶³ Others advocated the extension of use of force to the other five safe areas.¹⁶⁴

Some speakers supported the proposal to place Sarajevo under temporary United Nations administration.¹⁶⁵

Several speakers reiterated that Bosnia and Herzegovina should be allowed to exercise its right of self-defence and demanded that the Council lift the arms embargo against the Government of Bosnia.¹⁶⁶ brought before the International Tribunal on the Former Yugoslavia.¹⁶⁷

Some speakers endorsed the proposal that the peace talks be relocated to New York, in the proximity of the Security Council.¹⁶⁸

Decision of 25 February 1994: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

On 10 February 1994, pursuant to the statement by the President dated 28 October 1993,¹⁶⁹ the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the massacre of the civilian population in Stupni Do, on 23 October 1993.¹⁷⁰ The Secretary-General reported on the findings of the investigation carried out by UNPROFOR military police. Twenty-three victims so far had been clearly identified, with a further 13 villagers unaccounted for and presumed dead. The main suspects for the crimes appeared to be extremist elements of the Croatian Defence Council. Investigations were continuing in order to gather as much evidence as possible, with a view to identifying the perpetrators for eventual trial before the International Tribunal.

By a letter dated 25 February 1994,¹⁷¹ the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General of the following:

The members of the Security Council are grateful for your report of 10 February 1994 on the massacre of the civilian population in Stupni Do, Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The members of the Council are greatly disturbed by the findings of the investigation contained in your report and thus request you to transmit the report, as well as all information at the disposal of the Secretariat that may reveal serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the Former Yugoslavia, to the Prosecutor of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991.

The members of the Council welcome the fact that investigations are continuing in order to gain as much evidence as possible and would be grateful if they could be kept informed of the progress of the investigations.

Decision of 4 March 1994 (3344th meeting): resolution 900 (1994)

At its 3344th meeting, on 4 March 1994, the Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (France) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution submitted by France, the Russian Federation, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States,¹⁷² and to several other documents.¹⁷³

The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina noted that three recent developments had created a sense of optimism. First, the NATO ultimatum to the Bosnian Serbs had resulted in the cessation of the shelling of Sarajevo. Second, NATO aircraft had recently confronted Serbian aircraft violating the no-fly zone over the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Third, there had been an agreement between Croatia, Bosnia and Herzegovina and Bosnian Croat elements establishing a confederation between Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina, as well as a federation within Bosnia and Herzegovina. The speaker felt that the draft resolution before the Council should aim for the full implementation of resolutions 824 (1993) and 836 (1993) in regard to Sarajevo, thus resulting in the full withdrawal of Serb forces, the full lifting of the road blocks and the restoration of essential services to the city and its population. He stressed that unless the draft resolution was correctly implemented, Sarajevo would remain under siege. While the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina welcomed the assistance of all Governments in trying to bring peace, it would not feel bound by agreements reached between forces occupying Bosnia and Herzegovina and members of the Security Council, unless such agreements were consistent with the status of Bosnia and Herzegovina as a Member of the United Nations and with its sovereignty and territorial integrity.¹⁷⁴

Speaking before the vote, the representative of Pakistan, while welcoming the progress that had resulted from the NATO ultimatum, expressed concern over the fact that the Bosnian Serbs were persisting with the siege of Sarajevo and were refusing to remove all their heavy weaponry from certain locations around the city. He warned that the international community should not become complacent, nor relent in its resolve to secure the safety and security of the civilian population in all designated “safe areas” and other threatened towns and cities in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Turning to the draft resolution, the speaker noted that the draft resolution reflected the determination of the international community to secure the end of the siege of Sarajevo, including the restoration of essential services and a return to normal life, in accordance with the objectives set by the Council in resolution 824 (1993). It, however, could have been reinforced by a reference to the threat of air strikes, in the event that the aggressors were to resume bombardment of Sarajevo or to redeploy heavy weapons in the exclusion zone. The speaker further noted that with the adoption of the draft resolution, the Council would be setting in motion a process which could lead to the effective lifting of the siege of Sarajevo. It should also lead to a mechanism to secure the protection of other safe areas and threatened towns such as Maglaj, Mostar and Vitez.¹⁷⁵

The representative of the Czech Republic stated that the draft resolution before the Council was directed at capitalizing on the Sarajevo success. Several warning points, however, had to be made in that context. First, the Security Council had declared as safe areas not just Sarajevo, nor the three cities mentioned in the preamble of the draft resolution, but six cities, including Zepa, Gorazde and Bihac. It was necessary to pay heed to seeing that earlier commitments made by the Council were met as well. Secondly, UNPROFOR was already stretched thin and it was important that its size be commensurate to the tasks it was given by the Council. Thirdly, while the draft welcomed the significant developments that had taken place in negotiations between Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Bosnian Croats, there still remained the “vexing” question of the involvement of Croatian troops in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Those troops must leave, as the Council had demanded in its presidential statement of the previous month.¹⁷⁶

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 900 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions on the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Taking note of the positive developments in and around Sarajevo, which constitute only a first step towards the restoration of peace and security throughout the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina on the basis of a negotiated settlement between the parties, recalling the measures taken in and around Sarajevo under resolutions 824 (1993) of 6 May 1993 and 836 (1993) of 4 June 1993, and welcoming the agreement between the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Former Yugoslavia and between the Bosnian Serb party and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on the ceasefire and measures related to heavy weapons in and around Sarajevo, reached on 9 February 1994,

Emphasizing the crucial importance of achieving complete freedom of movement for the civilian population and humanitarian goods and of the restoration of normal life in Sarajevo,

Determined to restore essential public services in Sarajevo,

Welcoming, as part of the international effort to restore normal life to the city, the intention of the Governments of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America, announced on 2 March 1994, to send immediately a joint civil mission to Sarajevo to assess the requirements for the restoration of essential public services, within the United Nations framework,

Reaffirming in this context the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Reiterating the importance of maintaining Sarajevo, capital of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, as a united city and a multicultural, multi-ethnic and plurireligious centre,

Welcoming the goal of achieving the prompt rotation of United Nations Protection Force personnel in Srebrenica and the early reopening of the Tuzla airport,

Mindful of the serious discussions which have taken place on the issue of Sarajevo, as part of an overall settlement, at the negotiations in the context of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia,

Deeply concerned by the deteriorating situation in Maglaj,

Deeply concerned also by the situation of the civilian population in other parts of the territory of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, including in and around Mostar and Vitez,

Welcoming in this context the recent significant developments in peace negotiations between the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Bosnian Croat party and with the Government of the Republic of Croatia, as steps towards an overall political settlement, as well as negotiations involving the Bosnian Serb party,

Bearing in mind the importance of facilitating the return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes,

Stressing the importance it attaches to full compliance with international humanitarian law in all its aspects in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Recalling the provisions of its resolution 824 (1993) concerning safe areas, determining that the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security, and in this context acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Calls for all parties to cooperate with the United Nations Protection Force in the consolidation of the ceasefire in and around Sarajevo;

2. Calls upon all parties, with the assistance of the United Nations, to achieve complete freedom of movement for the civilian population and humanitarian goods to, from and within Sarajevo, to remove any hindrance to such freedom of movement, and to help restore normal life to the city;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to appoint, as a matter of urgency, for a limited period, a senior civilian official, who will act under the authority of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Former Yugoslavia, to draw up an overall assessment and plan of action, in conjunction with the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and also in consultation with all relevant local authorities, for the restoration of essential public services in the various opstine of Sarajevo, other than the city of Pale; this official will be empowered to assist the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and, in close coordination with all relevant local authorities and the local representatives of the United Nations, to work to implement the plan;

4. Invites the Secretary-General to establish a voluntary trust fund, to be disbursed within the framework set out in paragraph 3 above, for the restoration of essential public services in Sarajevo to promote a return to normal life in the city, and encourages States and other donors to contribute thereto;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to present within one week of the adoption of the present resolution a report on ways and means for, including the estimated cost of, the implementation of the objectives set forth above;

6. Calls upon States and other donors to assist the Secretary-General, in particular by contributing personnel and equipment, in the implementation of the relevant Security Council resolutions concerning Bosnia and Herzegovina;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General to report within ten days of the adoption of the present resolution on the feasibility and modalities for the application of the protection, defined in resolutions 824 (1993) and 836 (1993), to Maglaj, Mostar and Vitez, taking into account all developments both on the ground and in the negotiations between the parties;

8. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of China noted that the main purpose of the resolution just adopted was to improve the humanitarian situation in Sarajevo and to restore essential services. On the basis of humanitarian considerations, the Chinese delegation had voted in favour. Reiterating the Chinese position that conflicts should be settled by peaceful means, the speaker expressed his delegation's reservations on the resolution's invocation of Chapter VII of the Charter. China also maintained that the establishment of safe areas in Bosnia and Herzegovina was only a temporary measure and not a fundamental solution. When considering additional safe areas, it would be necessary to conduct a serious review of whether the expected results had been achieved in the safe areas already established and whether, in existing circumstances, UNPROFOR possessed sufficient human and financial resources to perform additional tasks.¹⁷⁷

The President, speaking in his capacity as the representative of France, noted that the Council had adopted the resolution under Chapter VII of the Charter, as the other resolutions on Bosnia had been since August 1992. In the existing context, not to have resorted to Chapter VII would have been "the worst of signals". Beyond that, the application of Chapter VII, which did not imply an automatic resort to force, would give UNPROFOR the authority necessary to surmount obstacles that might complicate the execution of its mandate.¹⁷⁸

Decision of 14 March 1994 (3349th meeting):
statement by the President

On 11 March 1994, pursuant to resolution 900 (1994), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the feasibility of extending the safe area concept to the cities of Maglaj, Mostar and Vitez.¹⁷⁹ The report also provided an outline of the major concepts and requirements of UNPROFOR. The Secretary-General noted that the utility of extending the concept of safe areas to Mostar and Vitez must be considered in the larger context of the overall situation on the ground. Had the conflict still been in progress, the prospect of deterring attacks might have warranted such a step. With the ceasefire signed on 23 February between Bosnia and Croatia, new priorities commended themselves. UNPROFOR did not believe there was, at that point, a need to apply the protection defined in resolutions 824 (1993) and 836 (1993) to Mostar and Vitez. It, however, believed that there might be merit, in extending the safe area concept to Maglaj, in view of the continuing hostilities there. At the same time, it was clear that UNPROFOR would not be able to provide the protection concerned with its present resources. The Secretary-General observed in that regard that should the Council decide to declare Maglaj a safe area, an additional 1,500 troops would be required. In addition, implementation of resolution 900 (1994) would require an increase of the authorized strength of UNPROFOR by a total of 8,250 troops. He therefore recommended that the Council authorize such an increase in order to enable UNPROFOR to demilitarize Sarajavo, restore normal life to the city and preserve peace in central Bosnia.

At its 3349th meeting, on 14 March 1994, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (France) then drew the attention of the members of the Council to the report of the Secretary-General and to a letter dated 11 March 1994 from the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina addressed to the Secretary-General.¹⁸⁰ The President then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹⁸¹

The Security Council remains gravely concerned at the continuing hostilities in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. It especially deplores the rapidly deteriorating situation in the Maglaj area and the threat it poses to the survival of the remaining civilian population. It notes that this intolerable situation has been perpetuated by the intensity of the nine-month siege of the town, for which the Bosnian Serb party is primarily responsible.

The Council strongly condemns the indiscriminate shelling by the Bosnian Serb party of the civilian population of Maglaj, which has resulted in heavy casualties, loss of life and material destruction.

The Council notes with particular concern reports of the recurrent obstruction and looting of humanitarian aid convoys destined for the civilian population of Maglaj, including the most recent incident which took place on 10 March 1994, in which six aid trucks were prevented from reaching the town. It is appalled that not one convoy has reached the town since 25 October 1993. The Council notes that the civilian population has been totally dependent on airdrops and commends those who have provided these vital missions. The Council demands that the Bosnian Serb party and the Bosnian Croat party allow forthwith and without conditions passage to all humanitarian convoys and the immediate evacuation of those in need of urgent medical attention. The Council also demands that the siege of Maglaj be ended immediately.

The Council welcomes the fact that United Nations Protection Force personnel have now obtained access to Maglaj. It demands that the Bosnian Serb party permit unimpeded and continuing access by the Force to Maglaj.

The Council also condemns recent attacks against the personnel of the Force as well as of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other humanitarian organizations. It reiterates its demands that all parties ensure the safety and security of the Force as well as all other United Nations personnel and those of non-governmental organizations and their unimpeded freedom of movement throughout the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Council affirms its determination to maintain and build upon the recent positive developments towards peace in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and in this context notes the importance of protecting Maglaj and its civilian population from further hostilities. It will consider the situation in Maglaj further in the context of its examination of the report of the Secretary-General pursuant to its resolution 900 (1994) of 4 March 1994.

Decision of 6 April 1994 (3359th meeting):
statement by the President

By a letter dated 2 April 1994 addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹⁸² the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina transmitted a letter dated 1 April 1994 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Bosnia and Herzegovina addressed to the President of the Security Council. In that letter, the Prime Minister reported that a new Serb offensive was under way against the besieged town of Gorazde, in defiance of relevant Council resolutions, and particularly resolutions 824 (1993) and 836 (1993), according to which Gorazde had been designated a "safe area". He requested that the Security Council convene an emergency session to determine why the mandate to "deter attacks against the safe area" given by resolution 836 (1993) had not been utilized to confront those who had attacked the United Nations designated "safe area" of Gorazde.

At its 3359th meeting, held on 6 April 1994 in response to the request contained in the above-mentioned letter, the Council included the letter in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (New Zealand) then drew the attention of the members of the Council to several documents¹⁸³ and stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹⁸⁴

The Security Council is deeply concerned at the continuing violence in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, particularly the attacks on the safe area of Gorazde and the recent acts of violence and terror, including reported acts of ethnic cleansing in Banja Luka and Prijedor.

The Council takes note of the letter dated 1 April 1994 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in which he reported, inter alia, on the hostilities in the eastern parts of his country. The Council, taking note also of the assessment of the situation provided by the Secretariat and in paragraphs 16 and 17 of the report of the Secretary-General of 11 March and paragraphs 29 and 30 of his report of 16 March 1994, calls for an end to any provocative actions by whomsoever committed in and around the safe areas.

The Council strongly condemns the shelling and infantry and artillery attacks by the besieging Bosnian Serb forces against the safe area of Gorazde in which many civilians have lost their lives and several hundreds have been wounded. The Council takes serious note of the continuing defiance of the relevant Council resolutions, in particular of resolutions 824 (1993) of 6 May 1993 and 836 (1993) of 4 June 1993 related to the protection of safe areas. The Council demands the immediate cessation of any further attacks against the safe area of Gorazde and its population and calls upon those concerned to take all measures to ensure full respect for the status of the safe areas in accordance with the relevant provisions of resolution 824 (1993).

The Council welcomes the measures being taken by the United Nations Protection Force to strengthen its presence in Gorazde, and the impending visit of the Force Commander for Bosnia and Herzegovina to assess the situation further. The Council calls upon the parties to ensure that troops of the Force have unimpeded access to the area in and around Gorazde and to assure the safety and security of those troops. The Council underlines the importance it attaches to ensuring the safety and security of the troops of the Force in and around Gorazde.

The Council stresses the need to achieve normal conditions of life in Gorazde, including restoration of essential public services, with the assistance of the United Nations and with the cooperation of the parties.

The Council deplores recent acts of violence and terror including ethnic cleansing, particularly in Prijedor and Banja Luka. It reaffirms that the International Tribunal was established under its resolution 827 (1993) of 25 May 1993 for the purpose of investigating crimes of this sort and trying persons accused of committing such crimes. The Council stresses the importance it attaches to full compliance with international humanitarian law in all its aspects throughout the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Council calls upon all parties to join the negotiation process aimed at the peaceful resolution of the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and further calls for an immediate ceasefire, the cessation of hostilities and an exchange of all persons imprisoned as a result of the war. The Council welcomes the planned meeting between the military commanders in Sarajevo under the auspices of the Force.

The Council affirms its determination to remain seized of the matter.

Decision of 14 April 1994 (3364th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3364th meeting, on 14 April 1994, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (New Zealand) stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:¹⁸⁵

The Security Council is deeply concerned at recent incidents in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina affecting the safety and freedom of movement of United Nations Protection Force personnel as reported by the Secretariat. These incidents constitute clear violations of the Council's resolutions, which bind the parties. The Council condemns such incidents and warns those responsible of the serious consequences of their actions.

The Council affirms its full support for the Force in its execution of the Council's relevant resolutions. It demands that all parties, in particular the Bosnian Serb party, allow the Force unimpeded freedom of movement and refrain from any further actions which could threaten the safety of Force personnel. It calls upon them to work closely with the Force, to cease all hostilities and to cooperate fully in efforts to achieve a peaceful resolution of the conflict throughout the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Decision of 22 April 1994 (3367th meeting):
resolution 913 (1994)

At its 3367th meeting, on 21 and 22 April 1994, the Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Austria, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Croatia, Egypt, Finland, Greece, Hungary, Indonesia, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Jordan, Malaysia, Morocco, Norway, Poland, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Slovenia, the Sudan, Sweden, Tunisia, Turkey and the United Arab Emirates, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also invited Ambassador Dragomir Djokic, at his request, to address the Council in the course of its consideration of the item, and extended an invitation to Mr. Engin Ahmet Ansay, Permanent Observer of OIC to the United Nations.

¹⁸⁵ S/PRST/1994/19.

The President (New Zealand) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution submitted by France, the Russian Federation, Spain and the United Kingdom,¹⁸⁶ and to several other documents.¹⁸⁷

The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina endorsed the letter dated 18 April 1994 from the Secretary-General of the United Nations to the Secretary-General of NATO, in which he requested the latter to authorize the launching of air strikes against Serbian positions in and around the five other safe areas in Bosnia and Herzegovina, as well as the draft resolution before the Council. He also welcomed President Clinton's course of action with respect to NATO. The speaker noted, however, that none of these steps addressed the following considerations. First, it was imperative that the Council act immediately to respond to the “slaughter of innocents” in Gorazde. Those who had voted for the designation of Gorazde as a safe area could not avoid the burden they bore for the lives of the city’s residents. It was that designation and the Council’s commitment to it that had been offered in lieu of Bosnia right to self-defence. Second, the Council could not continue to impede Bosnia right to self-defence unless it was prepared to accept responsibility in full for the safety of the citizens of Bosnia. Third, the precedent of Gorazde posed a danger to the peace process in Croatia as well as in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and must be addressed directly. Lastly, Bosnia and Herzegovina was fully prepared to take part in good faith negotiations. The speaker concluded by reminding Members of the United Nations that the Security Council and NATO already possessed the necessary authority to provide close air-to-ground support for humanitarian workers and did not need new debates or authority.¹⁸⁸

The representative of Croatia stated that, after two years of “unthinkable suffering”, during which 150,000 innocent lives had been lost, the time had come to impose peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina. A credible threat of resolute force combined with equally assertive diplomatic efforts should finally bring peace to the people of Bosnia and Herzegovina. That was why Croatia supported President Clinton’s call that the Sarajevo model of a clear ultimatum be extended to Gorazde and other safe areas in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Croatia would also support the use of the Sarajevo ultimatum model in the implementation of the Security Council’s resolutions and the peace agreements for the occupied territories in Croatia. It would consider the extension of the exclusion zones for certain safe areas, such as Bihac and Tuzla, into the territory of Croatia. If the international community was not able to impose peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina by the resolute use of force and assertive diplomacy, then the Security Council would have to consider other ways to achieve the desired balance of power in the region, including through allowing Bosnia and Herzegovina to exercise its right to defend itself under Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations.¹⁸⁹

¹⁸⁹ Ibid., pp. 5-7.

The representative of Turkey stated that Gorazde was a “test case” for the United Nations commitments in Bosnia and Herzegovina and for the role it would play in shaping the future of the international system. The lack of decisive action had sent the wrong signals to the aggressors. In order to be viable, the peace process must be backed by sufficient force to make the Serbs realize that more war would lead to “more pain than gain”. That would only be possible if the Government and people of Bosnia and Herzegovina were given the chance to exercise their right to self-defence. Arguing that the arms embargo adopted by the Council in resolution 713 (1991) was in clear contradiction of Article 51 of the Charter, the speaker urged the Council to clarify the legal opinion that resolution 713 (1991) should not apply to Bosnia and Herzegovina. Turning to the safe areas, the speaker recalled that the concept of safe areas had been based on the assumption that the resolutions establishing them would be implemented effectively and immediately. Regrettably, however, those areas had been almost abandoned by the United Nations. Emphasizing that resolutions 824 (1993) and 836 (1993) provided a clear legal framework for the use of all necessary means, including air strikes against the aggressors for the defence of the safe areas, the speaker welcomed the letter from the Secretary-General to NATO and President Clinton’s announcement as “steps in the right direction”. Nevertheless, Turkey wanted to see “concrete action”. It also welcomed the preambular paragraph of the draft resolution reaffirming the urgency of bringing the perpetrators of crimes against humanity before the International Tribunal established by resolution 827 (1993). He emphasized that what was needed was a quick prosecution process. Furthermore, Turkey had hoped that the draft resolution would contain a reference to the need to tighten the diplomatic isolation and economic embargo imposed on “the aggressor”.¹⁹⁰

The representative of Tunisia stated that the draft resolution should have indicated the Council’s determination to use any means to put an end to the systematic violation of its resolutions by the Serb side. He argued that Article 51 of the Charter permitted resort to Article 42 of Chapter VII as the provisions of Article 41, which had been the only provisions invoked during the two years since the Council first passed a resolution on the matter, had not achieved the desired results. If the Council was not prepared, however, to follow the sequence of the various provisions in Chapter VII, then it should redefine the applicability of resolution 713 (1991) in respect of the Bosnian side. Referring to the safe areas, the speaker welcomed the movement towards applying the “Sarajevo model” to the other safe areas. He noted, however, that the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina was not confined to a few zones defined by the Security Council, and he urged the Council to declare the whole of Bosnia and Herzegovina to be a safe area and to clarify that the acquisition of any portion of that territory was “null and void”. Before concluding, the speaker stated that Bosnia and Herzegovina was an integral part of the international community and that the States Member of the United Nations had only agreed, in the Charter, to delegate a portion of their responsibilities with respect to the maintenance of international peace and security on the understanding that the Council would be “the instrument of legality and right”.¹⁹¹

Noting that the international community, the United Nations and the Security Council had exerted great efforts over the preceding two years to resolve the crisis, Mr. Djokic contended that those efforts had not sought a comprehensive solution taking account of the vital interests of the three constituent peoples on the basis of equality. Rather, support and legitimacy had effectively been given to one side only — the Bosnian Muslims. At the same time, only the Bosnian Serbs and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia had been confronted with “harsh sanctions”. The speaker contended that there would not be and could not be peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina if the pressure was put only on one side — the Serb side — demanding that only it make concessions whereas the Muslim sides enjoyed massive political and military support to advance the military option. He stated that calls for lifting the arms embargo against the Bosnian Muslim side, and for offensive air strikes to be carried out against the Bosnian Serbs could only lead to an escalation of the conflict. The speaker warned that, if those calls were acted upon, the United Nations would become fully engaged on one side in the civil war. What was most important was that the Security Council gave full support to an urgent, unconditional cessation of hostilities and to a comprehensive ceasefire, which could be reached only through negotiations on the basis of equality, thus implying the lifting of sanctions.¹⁹²

Mr. Ansay indicated that the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the member countries of the OIC Contact Group on Bosnia and Herzegovina would hold an extraordinary ministerial meeting in New York in the following days, aiming to secure all necessary measures to be taken by the United Nations to protect the safe areas. Meanwhile, OIC urged the Council to take effective steps to enforce the observance of its resolutions relating to the protection of the safe areas, and in particular Gorazde, and to authorize strong retaliatory action, including NATO air strikes, against the Serbian aggressor, to prevent the continuation of massacres and genocide in Gorazde and the spread of conflict to other areas. The Council should also restore without delay the right of individual and collective self-defence of Bosnia and Herzegovina. OIC believed that any decision precluding Bosnia and Herzegovina from exercising that right was unconstitutional. The only entity that should be bound by the embargo was the Serbian aggressor. The European Union, NATO and the international community as a whole must take urgent steps to restore the status quo ante in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and to demonstrate that they were prepared to stand up in defence of international law and morality by all necessary means at their disposal to stop aggression and atrocities. OIC also believed that for the sake of international justice and the prevention of more acts of genocide and other crimes against humanity, the International Tribunal should start functioning without delay.¹⁹³

The representative of Slovenia said that his delegation joined those who had expressed support for the Secretary-General’s recent appeal to NATO to provide the necessary protection of the safe areas. It also supported the approach proposed by President Clinton, agreeing that it was time for vigorous action and tightened sanctions. Moreover, Slovenia felt that equal resolve should be shown in matters concerning State succession and other issues resulting from the dissolution of the former Yugoslavia. The United Nations should definitively terminate the membership of the former Yugoslavia in order to improve the conditions for a real and durable peace. Referring to the issue of the arms embargo, the speaker stated that it was important to recognize that the embargo had been extended on the former Yugoslavia and its successor States in a specific situation in 1992. It was therefore time for a decision that took into account the new realities and different situations of each of the successor States. There were reasons for keeping the arms embargo as a part of the sanctions against the main successor State of the former Yugoslavia, against which sanctions were imposed, however, there was a need to reconsider the merits of applying the embargo against those engaged in legitimate self-defence, which was an inherent right of all United Nations Members. Finally, in the case of Slovenia, there was no justification for maintaining the embargo, as Slovenia was not involved in the armed conflicts which had prompted the adoption of that measure.¹⁹⁴

¹⁹² Ibid., pp. 11-13.

¹⁹³ Ibid., pp. 25-26.

The representative of Bulgaria noted that, as his country was in close proximity to the conflict, it had always insisted on firm judgement and energetic steps on the part of the United Nations to contain and end the war in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Bulgaria had a key role to play in implementing the sanctions against Serbia and Montenegro and, being fully aware of its responsibilities, it was adhering strictly to the relevant resolutions, at great economic sacrifice. It was Bulgaria's expectation that its difficulties would be kept in mind and taken into account.¹⁹⁵

Other speakers also welcomed the request of the Secretary-General to NATO to authorize air strikes to protect Gorazde,¹⁹⁶ while some reiterated their support for the lifting of the arms embargo against Bosnia and Herzegovina.¹⁹⁷

Speaking before the vote, the representative of Pakistan stated that his delegation had expected the draft resolution to include a reference to the review of the applicability of resolution 713 (1991). Regrettably, its inclusion had not been acceptable to some members of the Council. His delegation support for the draft had therefore been diluted by that omission. Pakistan was also concerned that the draft resolution did not address the issue of an increase in troop levels. Therefore, while his delegation would reserve the right to introduce another draft resolution calling for the lifting of the arms embargo against Bosnia and Herzegovina, it would nevertheless support the draft resolution.¹⁹⁸

The representative of the United States observed that the civilians of Gorazde were being subjected to murderous attacks by the Bosnian Serbs on a daily basis. These attacks were an outrage to the conscience of the Council and an affront to international law. Noting that President Clinton had outlined the position of her Government in that regard, she indicated that her delegation was consulting with other members of the Council on measures to provide more adequate protection to the safe areas, in keeping with Council resolutions, and it had proposed the extension of the approach used around Sarajevo to other safe areas. The United States would also work with other members of the Council to tighten enforcement of the sanctions against Serbia and Montenegro and it would continue to support UNPROFOR, which genuinely needed increased manpower. It would also continue to support fully the International Tribunal. The speaker further indicated that the United States Senate had debated a resolution calling for the United States to lift the arms embargo unilaterally. So far, the United States had resisted a unilateral approach, because it believed in the sanctity of the sanctions imposed by the United Nations. Nevertheless, Council members should understand that the Government of the United States supported changing resolution 713 (1991) so that the victims of aggression might finally be permitted to defend themselves.¹⁹⁹

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 913 (1994), which reads as follows:

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions on the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and reaffirming in this context its resolution 908 (1994) of 31 March 1994,

Recalling also the statement by the President of the Security Council of 6 April 1994 relating to the situation in the safe area of Gorazde,

Speaking after the vote, the representative of France stated that firm pressure on the Bosnian Serbs was indispensable. The resolution just adopted provided an appropriate response in that respect, by calling for the immediate conclusion of a ceasefire agreement and the withdrawal of Serb forces to a distance that would guarantee the security of Gorazde. These demands would be more rapidly implemented and the protection of the safe areas ensured when there was a credible prospect for military action against those responsible for the attacks upon the safe areas. France supported the Secretary-General's request that NATO authorize air strikes, as well as the proposals by the United States Government to expand the use of air action to protect the safe areas in Bosnia and Herzegovina. In addition to these initiatives, diplomatic efforts should be resumed in order to achieve a political settlement and should revolve around a common position between the various protagonists participating in the quest for a settlement — the United States, the Russian Federation, the European Union and the United Nations. Such a common position should be based upon the major principles of the European Union plan, including, inter alia, programming the progressive suspension and lifting the sanctions at the appropriate time.²⁰⁰

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that the resolution just adopted was an important, unanimous step in response to the alarming situation around Gorazde and in Bosnia and Herzegovina as a whole. The leadership of the Bosnian Serbs should comply with its obligations, cease attacks, withdraw their forces from Gorazde and allow the entry of the United Nations into that city. At the same time, acts of provocation in and around Gorazde should be halted. That demand in the resolution was addressed to all sides. In that context, it was important that the resolution adopted shared the concern expressed by the Secretary-General in his reports of 10 and 16 March, regarding the misuse of the safe areas, and took note of his recommendations concerning the definition and implementation of the concept of safe areas. In order to steer the conflict towards peaceful settlement, resolute and determined steps were needed. At the same time, however, the Russian Federation called for restraint and caution, because the logic of increasing air strikes contained an inherent danger of escalation. It also emphasized that the idea of lifting the arms embargo in an area of conflict ran counter to the idea of the speedy attainment of peace and could only “fan the flames” of the conflict. Referring to a recent initiative by President Yeltsin to hold a high-level meeting between his country, the United States, the European Union and the United Nations, the speaker stated that the time was ripe for those parties to work together towards a political solution to the Bosnian problem, and to put it before the belligerent parties, so that they were absolutely clear that it was essential to negotiate. At the same time, the Serbian side should understand that each step towards a complete cessation of hostilities would be accompanied by a corresponding lifting of the sanctions.²⁰¹

The representative of Brazil stated that his delegation was in full agreement with the main objectives of the resolution just adopted. It had been the consistent position of the Government of Brazil that the use of force must be a last resort, to be employed only under well-defined circumstances and in strict compliance with relevant Security Council resolutions. As a corollary to that principle, the Council should direct its actions to facilitating the achievement of an overall negotiated settlement. Brazil therefore welcomed endeavours to bring together the various existing diplomatic initiatives. Referring to UNPROFOR, the speaker stated that Brazil believed that the Force must be provided with the necessary means and “humanpower” to carry out its mandate. Nevertheless, should circumstances so require, the Council must be prepared to review all aspects of the United Nations presence in Bosnia and Herzegovina.²⁰²

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that the resolution just adopted was clear-cut in its condemnation of the way in which the Bosnian Serbs had continued to shell Gorazde, while giving undertakings to the United Nations and others about ceasefires. Noting that UNPROFOR had been given a “multiplicity” of roles in Bosnia, the speaker urged that the Force must be given the troops to do its job without delay. Observing that a negotiated settlement remained the only path to a lasting peace, he stated that the latest actions of the Serbs had only served to underline the case for tightening the sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. As the Council had made clear, the road to lifting the sanctions would first require the negotiation and implementation of a just overall settlement of hostilities in the former Yugoslavia. Referring to the Secretary-General's request to NATO, the speaker noted that his Government was participating actively in NATO's consultations regarding the next step. The Serbs would be well advised to withdraw, respect the resolution just adopted and seek in good faith a peace settlement which could secure the interests of all communities in Bosnia and Herzegovina.²⁰³

²⁰² Ibid., pp. 53-54.

The representative of China stated that there were no alternatives to settling the conflict through peaceful negotiation. China supported the efforts to strengthen and coordinate the various political and diplomatic initiatives, and had therefore voted in favour of the resolution just adopted. The speaker reiterated, however, that China opposed the use or threat of force, as well as any attempt to stop war by expanding its scope. Any escalation of military conflict could only lead to further military confrontation and intensified conflict, thus making more remote any chance of political settlement. China continued to have reservations on the invocation of Chapter VII for mandatory actions and the implied possible military actions in the resolution.²⁰⁴

Deliberations of 27 April 1994 (3370th meeting)

By a letter dated 22 April 1994 addressed to the President of the Security Council,²⁰⁵ the representative of Pakistan, in his capacity as the Chairman of the Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, requested that a formal meeting of the Security Council on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina be scheduled for 27 April 1994. The request was being made to facilitate a debate on the deteriorating situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

At its 3370th meeting, held on 27 April 1994 in response to the request contained in the above-mentioned letter, the Council included the letter in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Albania, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Canada, Croatia, Egypt, Greece, India, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Malaysia, Norway, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, the Sudan, Sweden, Tunisia and Turkey, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also invited Ambassador Dragomir Djokic, at his request, to address it in the course of the subsequent discussion, and extended an invitation to Mr. Hamid Algabid, Secretary-General of the Islamic Conference.

The representative of Pakistan stated that the Council should use its authority to persuade the Bosnian Serbs to accept the agreement signed between the Government of Bosnia and the Croats on the creation of a federation. He contended that a new political process, which should secure the full participation of the Islamic countries and enjoy the support of the Council, could create a momentum towards a comprehensive peace agreement. The speaker further indicated that at a meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the OIC Contact Group on Bosnia and Herzegovina, held that same day, the Ministers had declared, inter alia, that resolution 713 (1991) did not apply to Bosnia and Herzegovina and that the arms embargo against the Government of Bosnia was "unjust, illegal and in direct contradiction of Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations". The Ministers had also demanded the withdrawal of Serbian heavy weapons from Gorazde, and had called for the strengthening of UNPROFOR. Furthermore, OIC Ambassadors in New York had been mandated to pursue the objectives of the declaration, in particular with respect to the modification of resolution 713 (1991) to enable the Government of Bosnia to exercise its right to self-defence. Pakistan would propose, on behalf of OIC, that the Council adopt a resolution declaring that the provisions of resolution 713 (1991) did not apply to Bosnia and Herzegovina. If these efforts were to fail, an urgent session of the General Assembly would be sought, in order to seek "peace with justice" in Bosnia and Herzegovina.²⁰⁶

The representative of Turkey noted that his delegation had tried several times to convince the Security Council to set a time limit for the Serbian side to comply with its resolutions. It had also underlined that the aggressors should be warned very clearly that if they failed to comply they would face the consequences. It was such convictions that had prompted Turkey to actively participate in the formulation of the NATO decisions. The speaker pointed out that the option of air strikes had been favoured by his Government since 1992. Turkey had also defended the view that it should be applicable not only to Sarajevo but to all six United Nations safe areas. The speaker argued that had that proposal been accepted on time, it would have spared many lives in Gorazde. He further contended that while the accountability of the perpetrators of war crimes constituted one of the main pillars of credible deterrence against aggression, nothing was more important for deterrence, however, than letting the Bosnians acquire the means to exercise their inherent right to defend themselves. Turkey would continue to insist that the Council clarify the legal opinion that its resolution 713 (1991) did not and should not apply to Bosnia and Herzegovina. Noting that the Council had reaffirmed in all relevant resolutions the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Bosnia and Herzegovina and rejected the acquisition of territory through the use of force and the practice of "ethnic cleansing", the speaker stated that the time had come for the Council to put these principles into practice. Furthermore, the diplomatic isolation and economic embargo imposed on the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia should be tightened. Welcoming the calls for the convening of a high-level meeting on Bosnia, Turkey expected the States members of the OIC Contact Group on Bosnia to be invited to take part to such a meeting.²⁰⁷

The representative of Egypt welcomed the decision by NATO, as a regional organization under Chapter VIII of the Charter, to carry out air strikes against Serb military positions from which attacks had been launched. His delegation was also considering with interest the idea of holding a new international conference. If such a conference were to proceed, it would need to address a number of points. First, the terms of reference must be in conformity with the Charter and international law and should include the non-acquisition of territory by force. Second, any proposed peace settlement must be in accordance with the Charter and the resolutions of the Council. Third, the conference should concentrate on settling the problem of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Fourth, the international community must ensure that the plan was put into effect through binding international measures. Finally, the International Tribunal must be provided with the necessary resources to undertake its responsibilities. The speaker further stated that the Council must take charge and decide on a set of measures, including lifting the arms embargo. Otherwise, the only alternative would be to have recourse to a special emergency session of the General Assembly to take a decision on that important issue. Quoting Article 51 of the Charter, he argued that the provision implied that no international body or authority, including the Council itself, should undermine the natural or inherent right of all States to self-defence. Furthermore, the right to self-defence applied and was applied, as provided by Article 51, "until the Council had taken measures necessary to maintain international peace and security". Obviously, all resolutions adopted by the Council in that regard over the past two years were far from adequate to preserve international security since fighting and acts of aggression had continued. Therefore, the Council could not use these resolutions as a pretext for not lifting the embargo. Lastly, by placing the aggressor and the victim on an equal footing, the Council had contravened the provisions of the Charter. Stressing that the legality of the measures taken by the Council depended on the degree to which they conformed to the provisions of the Charter and referring to Article 103 of the Charter, the speaker contended that Council's decisions did not prevail over the Charter. The speaker hoped that the Council would shoulder its responsibilities in accordance with the provisions of the Charter, adopt a resolution to support Bosnia and Herzegovina, and decide to lift the arms embargo in order to enable it to exercise its legitimate right to self-defence.²⁰⁸

The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina called for a decisive approach by the United Nations towards his country pointing out that the recent ultimatum issued by NATO and the United Nations was an example of what could be achieved when the international community showed resolve and will for action. The speaker stressed a number of points. Firstly, the Serbs should withdraw from the safe areas and their surroundings and their heavy weapons should be removed and returned to Serbia. The arms embargo should be lifted and Bosnia and Herzegovina's right to self-defence under Article 51 of the Charter restored.

Secondly, a process of neutralization of weaponry must be workable. Thirdly, the peace process must be based on respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the return of territories seized by force. Fourthly, the United Nations had an obligation to ensure that resolution 913 (1994), which called for the withdrawal of Serbian forces from the safe area of Goradze, was implemented based upon resolution 824 (1993), by which Goradze was declared a safe area. It must also ensure that the boundaries of the safe area existing prior to the Serbian offensive were restored pending the final outcome of the negotiations. Lastly, the newly formed Contact Group on Bosnia and Herzegovina should include a representative of OIC.²⁰⁹

The representative of Greece, speaking on behalf of the European Union, noted that the European Union had called for an intensified diplomatic effort by the international community, involving the United Nations, the European Union, the United States and the Russian Federation, to ensure the convergence of their initiatives. Particularly at that critical juncture, the goal was to establish conditions which would lead to a comprehensive cessation of hostilities and a peace settlement. It was now more important than ever that the parties engaged in meaningful negotiations. The speaker further stated that the European Union Action Plan provided the only appropriate basis for a negotiated settlement and a lasting peace. Referring to UNPROFOR, he urged that the Force should be provided with the necessary means to carry out its mandate without which any progress in the peace process would be meaningless. In that regard, the adoption of resolution 914 (1994) that day on the strengthening of UNPROFOR was welcomed.²¹⁰

The representative of the Russian Federation noted that the normalization of the situation around Goradze and the fulfilment by the Bosnian Serb party of its obligations were creating positive opportunities for a swift settlement in Bosnia and Herzegovina. He further noted that the initiative of his President for holding a summit meeting between the Russian Federation, the United States, the European Union and the United Nations was aimed at achieving such a settlement. The most important point was that military measures should not overshadow the political settlement. The Russian Federation expected that the Bosnian parties and the Russian Federation's partners would join in that process and concentrate their efforts on the following. First, the system of safe areas should be strengthened in accordance with Council resolutions. Second, the Serbs and the Muslims should sign an unconditional agreement as soon as possible on a halt to all hostilities. Third, there should be a comprehensive political settlement in Bosnia and Herzegovina, taking into account the legitimate interests and equal status of all inhabitants of that territory. Lastly, progress in restoring peace to Bosnia and Herzegovina should be accompanied by an appropriate easing of sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. Referring to the arms embargo, the speaker argued that the demands for the embargo to be lifted ran counter to efforts aimed at political settlement and could only lead to an escalation of the war. He further noted that his delegation had repeatedly drawn attention to the ideas expressed by the Secretary-General with respect to the need for a revision of the concept of safe areas, whose status was frequently abused. In that connection, his delegation believed that the United Nations forces, together with the parties concerned, should be entrusted with the task of defining a system and borders for each of the safe areas. It was important that United Nations forces be deployed in the safe areas. An important condition for respecting the status of the safe areas was their demilitarization. Heavy weapons must be placed under control and unimpeded humanitarian assistance to the safe areas must be guaranteed. The Russian Federation felt that it was particularly important for the Council to begin work and shoulder its responsibility for determining the system of safe areas.²¹¹

Mr. Djokic stated that in that critical phase, it was imperative that the international community and the Council did everything in their power to facilitate a negotiated settlement of peace. All efforts must be concerted to establish a comprehensive ceasefire throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina. Only the urgent and unconditional cessation of all hostilities, without prejudice to the final political solution, could pave the way for the resumption of the peace process. For its part, the leadership of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia had throughout the conflict invested efforts towards finding a peaceful solution and influencing the Bosnian Serbs to make compromises. The Federal Republic of Yugoslavia welcomed the recent renewed efforts directed towards the resumption of the peace process and the active participation of the United Nations, the European Union, the Russian Federation and the United States in that regard. The activities of the newly created Contact Group could be a step in the right direction. The Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, however, was concerned by the reservations of some countries regarding the initiatives for resolving the conflict by peaceful means and the persistence of threats and punitive measures. The speaker further argued that the complex nature of the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina made it necessary that no former occupying Power of the territories of the former Yugoslavia or any neighbouring States should be involved in peacekeeping activities. In that regard, the decision to send Turkish troops to Bosnia and Herzegovina was not only against the interest of easing the situation in the region, but could also have a direct bearing on the escalation of the conflict.²¹²

The representative of Croatia noted that the presence of so many high representatives of the Governments in the debate indicated on the one hand the urgency of the situation in the region and, on the other hand, gave hope that their commitment would bring that crisis to a fair conclusion. In that regard, Croatia emphasized the importance of the views of OIC in the peace process. That was why it had called for the inclusion of a high-ranking representative of OIC in the process of finding a political solution to the conflict. International mediation could, however, have its limits. The international community had been unable to find the appropriate balance of power to match its attempts at political mediation. As long as this imbalance continued, the Government of Croatia would support the lifting of the arms embargo. The speaker emphasized in that regard, that the arms embargo would not necessarily promote war. Rather it would create a balance that would promote non-violent options for a fair and sustainable settlement. He argued that the international community must use all necessary means to “disengage” the Serbian military capacity, or lift the arms embargo, thus enabling Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia to acquire the defence capacity to compel the Serbian side to accept and implement the results of international mediation and the relevant Security Council resolutions. Otherwise, the war in Bosnia and Herzegovina would continue, ²¹² Ibid., pp. 32-33.

and the political solution in Croatia might be jeopardized to the point of renewed fighting.²¹³

The representative of Albania reiterated his country’s position, that intensive diplomatic action combined with other measures, including the use of force, would be the most suitable means to bring peace. He welcomed the initiative to convene a high-level conference, whilst drawing attention to the serious situation in Kosovo and stating that dealing with the crisis in Kosovo should be an integral element in the peace process. The Government of Albania reiterated the view that the sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia constituted an important component of the international community’s efforts to bring peace to the region and should be maintained despite the fact that Albania was experiencing “enormous difficulties” as a result of these sanctions.²¹⁴

During the debate, a number of speakers called for the lifting of the arms embargo in order to enable Bosnia and Herzegovina to exercise its inherent right to self-defence in accordance with Article 51 of the Charter.²¹⁵ Other speakers opposed the idea, arguing that such a step would not facilitate a peaceful resolution of the conflict.²¹⁶

Decision of 29 April 1994: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

By a letter dated 29 April 1994,²¹⁷ the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General of the following:

concept of safe areas, as contained in his reports of 11 March and 16 March 1994.

The members of the Council request the Secretary-General to submit by 10 May 1994 further specific recommendations on modalities of the implementation of the concept of safe areas as defined in resolutions 824 (1993) of 6 May 1993 and 836 (1993) of 4 June 1993.

Decision of 4 May 1994 (3374th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3374th meeting, on 4 May 1994, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Nigeria) then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:²¹⁸

The Security Council calls upon the parties to the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina to agree to a complete cessation of hostilities, to comply fully therewith, and to resume immediately negotiations, without preconditions, for the conclusion of an overall settlement. It demands that the parties immediately refrain from any offensive military action and any action likely to lead to renewed fighting.

The Council is concerned at recent indications of increasing tension in a number of areas in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in particular the Posavina "corridor".

The Council welcomes the arrangements reported by the Secretariat to establish a United Nations Protection Force presence in the region of the Posavina "corridor". It encourages the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Former Yugoslavia to pursue this rapidly and also to seek enhanced aerial surveillance of this and other areas of tension. The Council calls on all the parties to cooperate fully with the Special Representative and the Force in the planned deployment. It warns the parties of the serious consequences of any offensive military action in or around the Posavina "corridor".

The Council is considering further decisions on the matter and will remain actively seized of it.

Decision of 25 May 1994 (3380th meeting):
statement by the President

On 19 May 1994, pursuant to resolution 913 (1994), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, in particular in Gorazde.²¹⁹ The Secretary-General reported that the situation in Gorazde remained one of stalemate and tensions continued to be high. He further noted that despite the limitation of its mandate and military resources, UNPROFOR had played a major stabilizing role and contributed to normalizing the situation, particularly in and around Sarajevo, along the entire confrontation line between Bosnian Croat and Bosnian government forces, in Gorazde, and in Brcko and the Posavina corridor with the deployment of military observers since 7 May 1994. UNPROFOR could not, however, be expected indefinitely to preserve such achievements unless early progress was made towards an agreement on a comprehensive cessation of hostilities and a halt to the movement of military forces, equipment and supplies. In that regard, the Secretary-General had requested his Special Representative and UNPROFOR to approach the parties immediately to bring about an early meeting and an agreement on such issue taking into account the separation of forces, the withdrawal of heavy weapons and the interposition of UNPROFOR troops. He also welcomed the call by the Troika of the European Union, France, the Russian Federation, the United States and the United Kingdom in Geneva, on 13 May 1994, for a further reinforcement of UNPROFOR and requested the Council's support for his proposals.

At its 3380th meeting, on 25 May 1994, the Council included the report in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Nigeria) then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:²²⁰

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General pursuant to its resolution 913 (1994).

The Council reiterates the urgent need to intensify efforts towards an overall political settlement of the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. It calls on the parties to resume, without preconditions, serious efforts to reach a political settlement.

The Council reaffirms the urgent need for a comprehensive cessation of hostilities throughout the territory of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. In this regard, the Council supports the decision of the Secretary-General, in accordance with paragraph 1 of resolution 913 (1994), to entrust his Special Representative and the Force Commander of the United Nations Protection Force with the task of achieving a comprehensive cessation of hostilities. In this context it welcomes the call for such a cessation of hostilities in the communiqué dated 13 May 1994 issued at the meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs at Geneva.

The Council demands immediate and full compliance with its resolution 913 (1994) and, in respect of Gorazde, calls upon the parties to cooperate fully with the Force to that end.

Decision of 1 June 1994 (3387th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3387th meeting, on 1 June 1994, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Oman) then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:²²¹

The Security Council recalls its presidential statement of 25 May 1994.

The Council reiterates the urgent need for a comprehensive cessation of hostilities throughout the territory of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and calls upon the parties to resume, without preconditions, serious efforts to reach a political settlement. In that regard, it fully supports efforts by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Former Yugoslavia and the Force Commander of the United Nations Protection Force to negotiate such a cessation of hostilities, and welcomes the decision to convene a meeting with the parties at Geneva on 2 June 1994. It also welcomes the reported decision of the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and of the Bosnian Serb party to attend that meeting. The Council strongly encourages the parties to negotiate in good faith, so that a cessation of hostilities can be agreed to as quickly as possible.

To that end, the Council strongly demands immediate, full and unconditional compliance with its resolution 913 (1994) of 22 April 1994, and in this context endorses the efforts made by the Force to ensure the implementation of that resolution. It calls upon both parties to cooperate fully with the Force in these efforts.

Decision of 30 June 1994 (3399th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3399th meeting, on 30 June 1994, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council

²²¹ S/PRST/1994/29.

invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Oman) then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:²²²

The Security Council underlines its support for the 8 June 1994 agreement of the parties to the conflict, in which they agreed to observe a ceasefire for a period of one month starting from 10 June 1994. The Council expresses its grave concern at the parties' failure to comply with the agreement to date.

The Council calls once again on the parties to stop all offensive military operations and other provocative actions, as well as all ceasefire violations and ethnic cleansing, and to cooperate with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Former Yugoslavia and the United Nations Protection Force. It also calls on the parties to resume negotiations on a comprehensive cessation of hostilities for the entire territory of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, with a view to reaching agreement before the expiration of the 8 June agreement on 10 July 1994, while continuing negotiations to achieve a just and comprehensive peace agreement.

The Council deplores all attacks on United Nations personnel and calls on those responsible to ensure that such attacks do not take place. It also condemns the restrictions imposed on the freedom of movement of the Force, and demands that these restrictions be immediately lifted, so as to enable the Force to assist in the implementation of the 8 June agreement.

Decision of 7 July 1994: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

By a letter dated 24 May 1994 addressed to the President of the Security Council,²²³ the Secretary-General transmitted the final report of the Commission of Experts established pursuant to resolution 780 (1992). The Commission had been established to examine and analyse information gathered with a view to providing the Secretary-General with its conclusions on the evidence of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia. The Commission had concluded that such breaches had been committed on a large scale. It further had noted that the practice of the so-called "ethnic cleansing" had been carried out by some of the parties so systematically that they strongly appeared to be the product of a policy. The Secretary-General indicated that he shared the conclusions of the Commission and had instructed that all relevant information gathered by the Commission be forwarded to the Office of the Prosecutor of the International Tribunal.

By a letter dated 7 July 1994,²²⁴ the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General of the following:

I have the honour to refer to your letter dated 24 May 1994 transmitting the final report of the Commission of Experts established pursuant to Security Council resolution 780 (1992) of 6 October 1992.

The members of the Council are grateful to the Commission of Experts for the work done in the discharge of its mandate. They have noted with appreciation that the database and all the other information gathered by the Commission in the course of its work have been forwarded to the office of the Prosecutor of the International Tribunal.

Decision of 2 September 1994 (3421st meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3421st meeting, on 2 September 1994, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Spain) then drew the attention of the members of the Council to a letter dated 1 September 1994 from the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina addressed to the President of the Security Council²²⁵ and stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:²²⁶

The Security Council is deeply disturbed at continuing reports of acts of ethnic cleansing by the Bosnian Serb party in the Bijeljina area. It condemns this practice wherever it occurs and by whomsoever it is committed and demands its immediate cessation. It further condemns all violations of international humanitarian law in the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, for which those who commit them are personally responsible. In this context it calls for the full implementation of the agreement on the release of detainees contained in the 8 June 1994 agreement concluded at Geneva. It calls for the early release of all detainees and, to this end, calls for the delegates of the International Committee of the Red Cross to be granted access in particular to all detainees in Lopare and other parts of the Bijeljina area.

The Council reaffirms the importance it attaches to the right of freedom of movement throughout the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina of the United Nations Protection Force. It notes with dismay that the Bosnian Serb party has not allowed the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Former Yugoslavia to visit Banja Luka, Bijeljina and other areas of concern, and strongly urges it to permit such access both to the Special Representative and to the Force. It also expresses its concern about continuing restrictions on access to Sarajevo, in particular the closure by the Bosnian Serb party of the routes across the airport opened in cooperation with the Force following the 17 March 1994 agreement.

Decisions of 23 September 1994 (3428th meeting): resolutions 941 (1994), 942 (1994)
and 943 (1994)

At its 3428th meeting, on 23 September 1994, the Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Afghanistan, Albania, Bangladesh, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Canada, Croatia, Egypt, Germany, Indonesia, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Jordan, Malaysia, Senegal, Tunisia and Turkey, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also invited Ambassador Dragomir Djokic, at his request, to address the Council in the course of its consideration of the item. The President (Spain) then drew the attention of the Council members to the texts of three draft resolutions: the first draft resolution had been prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations;²²⁷ the second draft resolution had been submitted by Argentina, the Czech Republic, Djibouti, France, Germany, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, the Russian Federation, Rwanda, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States;²²⁸ and the third draft resolution had been submitted by the Czech Republic, France, Germany, the Russian Federation, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States.²²⁹ The President also drew the attention of the Council members to several other documents.²³⁰

The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina noted that his delegation had “mixed views” on the three draft resolutions before the Council. While his delegation supported the first draft resolution addressing the crimes of ethnic cleansing being perpetrated in Serb-occupied areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina, it wondered why it had taken in excess of three months to bring that draft to a vote and why the text had been so watered down as to diminish the commitment of UNPROFOR to deploy in the places where ethnic cleansing had been executed. Concerning the second draft resolution on the tightening of sanctions against the Bosnia Serbs, his delegation supported its spirit but questioned the effectiveness of such measure in securing the desired objectives, especially the reversal of the consequences of aggression and ethnic cleansing. Regarding the third draft resolution on easing the sanctions against Serbia and Montenegro, Bosnia and Herzegovina was opposed to it for it sought to reward those who had been complicit in crimes and war-making, without assisting the victim to confront ongoing crimes and aggression, therefore lacking balance. Furthermore, the draft undermined the necessary improvements in human rights standards within Kosovo, Vojvodina and Sandzak, and did not address the ongoing occupation of Croatia. It also sought to reward Serbia and Montenegro for a set of “self-designed measures of self-policing”, and Serbia and Montenegro had not been required to endorse the Contact Group peace plan by recognizing Bosnia and Herzegovina within its own borders. The speaker also questioned the ability of the monitoring regime to monitor effectively the closure of the border between Bosnia and Herzegovina and Serbia and Montenegro. In conclusion, he urged members of the Council not to support the draft resolution.²³¹

The representative of Croatia expressed his Government’s reservations on the draft resolution easing sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. He argued that the sanctions should only be suspended after the Council had received concrete and undisputed evidence of real progress on the ground, not only in Bosnia and Herzegovina, but also in Croatia. Furthermore, his delegation could not overlook the fact that the draft resolution might not follow the spirit of resolution 871 (1993), which linked the sanction regime imposed on the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to the implementation of all relevant Council resolutions, including those relating to the United Nations peacekeeping plan for the Republic of Croatia. His Government would therefore support the suspension of the sanctions regime against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia only if there was real progress on the ground in relation to the implementation of resolution 871 (1993). An essential first step would be the recognition by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia of the new States on the territory of the former Yugoslavia, within their internationally recognized borders. Should the Council adopt the draft resolution, however, the monitoring mission of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, which was operating with meagre resources, would become very important. He warned that the mission should not be used to satisfy short-term political goals.²³²

The representative of Germany, speaking on behalf of the European Union, stated that the adoption of the three draft resolutions would constitute an important step in the international peace effort and would convey an unequivocal message to the Bosnian Serbs. Firstly, the European Union condemned “the ethnic cleansing” which the Bosnian Serbs had systematically carried out in the areas they occupied and reemphasized the importance of the work of the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia. Secondly, the Bosnian Serbs must realize that they would remain totally isolated as long as they blocked the peace process and continue the abhorrent practice of “ethnic cleansing.” The European Union therefore welcomed the tightening of sanctions as a means to increase the pressure on the Bosnian Serbs to accept the territorial proposal submitted by the Contact Group. Thirdly, concerning the suspension of certain sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, the European Union was united in the view that the decision of President Milosevic to close the border deserved a positive reaction from the international community. Thus through the adoption of the three draft resolutions, the Council would emphasize that these who choose the course of peace would receive its support and those who persisted in rejecting peace and embracing war would be isolated and prosecuted.²³³

The representative of Turkey noted that his delegation considered both the first draft resolution, on ethnic cleansing, and the second draft resolution, on strengthening sanctions against the Bosnian Serbs, to be timely steps and believed that they should both be adopted immediately and implemented effectively. Turkey had serious doubts, however, about the timing and content of the third draft resolution, relaxing sanctions against Serbia and Montenegro, as it was necessary to verify Serbia’s claim that it had closed its border with Bosnia and Herzegovina. Moreover, the conclusion of the mission of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia was in direct contradiction with independent reports suggesting that there had been continuing unauthorized helicopter flights between Serbia and Montenegro and the Serbian-held areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Turkey had appealed to the President of the Security Council to postpone consideration of the draft resolution in order to allow a comprehensive investigation into that matter. Regrettably, that request had not been considered favourably. The speaker argued that the easing of sanctions at that time would send the wrong signal to the aggressor and would undermine the peace process. Meanwhile, Bosnia and Herzegovina, which had accepted the Contact Group peace plan in good faith, was awaiting the fulfilment of the promises made by the Contact Group, including true and effective border-monitoring, measures in response to the “strangulation” of Sarajevo, the expansion of exclusion zones, and the lifting of the arms embargo on Bosnia and Herzegovina. Before concluding, the speaker urged the Serbian side to stop its genocidal campaign to consolidate its territorial gains and to accept the peace plan. If it failed to do so, then the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina should be provided with all means necessary to exercise its inherent right to self-defence.²³⁴

²³² Ibid., pp. 5-6.

²³³ Ibid., pp. 11-12.

Mr. Djokic noted that the decision to partially suspend the existing sanctions, while it represented an important shift in attitude towards Yugoslavia, did not constitute an adequate response to the constructive role played by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in the search for a solution to the crisis in Bosnia and Herzegovina. What was really needed was the complete lifting of all sanctions and it was unfortunate therefore that the conditions were set for the ultimate and absolute lifting of all sanctions exclusively in the function of maintaining political pressure. The Federal Republic of Yugoslavia expected that, with the adoption of the draft resolution relaxing the sanctions, the process of lifting all sanctions would gather momentum and the legitimate rights of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in the United Nations and other international organizations would soon be restored so that it could be fully reintegrated into the international community.²³⁵

During the debate several speakers questioned the appropriateness of a decision easing sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, raising doubts about the credibility of the claims by the Belgrade authorities regarding the closure of their borders with the territories occupied by the Bosnian Serbs, in the absence of an effective monitoring mechanism. They argued that before adopting such decision, the Council should ensure that Serbia and Montenegro take a number of steps, including its recognition of Bosnia and Herzegovina within its current borders, its cooperation with the International Tribunal, and its acceptance of the designation of 51 per cent of the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina allocated to the Muslim Croat federation as a safe area, and the lifting of the Sarajevo siege. Instead of easing the sanctions, the Security Council should enforce the implementation of its earlier resolutions, and enable the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina to exercise its right of self-defence by lifting the arms embargo imposed against it.²³⁶

²³⁴ Ibid., pp. 13-14.

²³⁵ Ibid., pp. 14-17.

Other speakers, however, supported the easing of sanctions as a way of acknowledging the positive reaction by the Belgrade authorities to the peace plan put forward by the Contact Group and their decision to close their borders, arguing that it was a measure that could be reversed if Serbia and Montenegro violated its commitments.²³⁷

Speaking before the vote, the representative of Djibouti was of the view that some crucial issues ought to have been addressed before embarking on the exercise of easing sanctions such as the military and humanitarian imbalance in the conflict, the recognition by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia of Bosnia within its current borders, the cooperation of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia with the International Tribunal, the protection of Bosnia's safe area and the end of the siege of Sarajevo. His delegation therefore found it very difficult to support any draft resolution calling for the partial lifting of sanctions at that moment.²³⁸

The representative of China stated that his delegation would vote in favour of the draft resolutions condemning violations of international humanitarian law and suspending aspects of the sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, as both draft resolutions reflected China's basic position on those questions. He reiterated, however, that his country, in principle, was not in favour of using sanctions or mandatory measures to resolve the conflict in the former Yugoslavia. All efforts should be made to resolve the conflict peacefully. The speaker argued that instead of bringing the war to an end, the use of sanctions or mandatory measures had brought enormous suffering to the countries and people of the region, and had inflicted tremendous losses on the economies of those third countries that had implemented the sanctions, in particular the States neighbouring the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. Therefore, on the basis of that principled position, China would abstain on the draft resolution tightening sanctions against the Bosnian Serbs.²³⁹

The representative of Pakistan stated that his delegation was not prepared to consider even the partial lifting of sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia unless and until the consequences of its aggression in Bosnia and Herzegovina were reversed and territories occupied by force surrendered. Easing the sanctions in the current circumstances was tantamount to appeasing and rewarding the aggressor and would undermine the peace process, sacrificing the principles of justice and equity enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations. Furthermore, his delegation considered the timing for the submission of the draft resolution to be most inopportune, inappropriate and premature. Pakistan would therefore vote against the draft relaxing the sanctions.²⁴⁰

The representative of Rwanda expressed his delegation's support for the draft resolutions on ethnic cleansing and on strengthening the sanctions against the Bosnian Serbs. While his delegation had no quarrel with the content of the draft resolution relaxing sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), it believed that its adoption would not be opportune, because developments on the ground clashed with the Rwandan Government policy with regard to the universal principles of human rights, and because previous Council resolutions had not been implemented. His delegation would therefore abstain in the voting of that draft resolution.²⁴¹

The first draft resolution²⁴² was then put to the vote and was adopted unanimously as resolution 941 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling all its earlier relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Taking note of the information provided by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Committee of the Red Cross and that contained in other relevant reports, particularly regarding grave violations of international humanitarian law affecting the non-Serb population in those areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces,

Gravely concerned at the persistent and systematic campaign of terror perpetrated by the Bosnian Serb forces in Banja Luka, Bijeljina and other areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces, as described in paragraphs 5 to 79 of the above-mentioned report,

Emphasizing that this practice of ethnic cleansing by the Bosnian Serb forces constitutes a clear violation of international humanitarian law and poses a serious threat to the peace effort,

Expressing its deep concern over the continued denial by Bosnian Serb forces of prompt and unimpeded access to the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Former Yugoslavia and the United Nations Protection Force to Banja Luka, Bijeljina and other areas under Bosnian Serb control as demanded by the Security Council in its presidential statement of 2 September 1994,

Recognizing that the International Tribunal has jurisdiction over serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the Former Yugoslavia and that the Council remains committed to its previous resolutions on the importance of cooperation with the Tribunal,

Determined to put an end to the abhorrent and systematic practice of ethnic cleansing wherever it occurs and by whomsoever it is committed,

Determining that the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security, reiterating its determination to ensure the security of the Force and its freedom of movement in all its missions and, to these ends, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Reaffirms that all parties to the conflict are bound to comply with their obligations under international humanitarian law and in particular the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949;

2. Strongly condemns all violations of international humanitarian law, including in particular the unacceptable practice of ethnic cleansing perpetrated in Banja Luka, Bijeljina and other areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces, and reaffirms that those who have committed or have ordered the commission of such acts will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts;

3. Reaffirms its support for the established principles that all declarations and actions made under duress, particularly those regarding land and ownership, are null and void, and that all displaced persons should be enabled to return in peace to their Former homes;

4. Demands that the Bosnian Serb authorities immediately cease their campaign of ethnic cleansing;

5. Demands that the Bosnian Serb party accord the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, the United Nations Protection Force, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Committee of the Red Cross immediate and unimpeded access to Banja Luka, Bijeljina and other areas of concern;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to arrange, when conditions permit, the deployment of troops of the Force and United Nations monitors to Banja Luka, Bijeljina and other areas of concern and to intensify his efforts in this regard;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report urgently to the Council on the implementation of the present resolution;

8. Determines to consider any further steps that it may deem necessary;

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

The second draft resolution²⁴³ was then put to the vote and was adopted by 14 votes to none, with 1 abstention (China) as resolution 942 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling all its earlier relevant resolutions,

Affirming its commitment to a negotiated settlement of the conflict in the Former Yugoslavia, preserving the territorial integrity of all the States there within their internationally recognized borders,

Expressing appreciation for the efforts undertaken by the representatives of the United Nations, the European Union, the United States of America and the Russian Federation to assist the parties in reaching a settlement, by them, and condemning the decision by the Bosnian Serb party to refuse to accept the proposed territorial settlement,

Viewing the measures imposed by the present resolution and by its previous relevant resolutions as a means towards the end of producing a negotiated settlement to the conflict,

Determining that the situation in the Former Yugoslavia continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security, provided that:

- (i) Any entity, including any commercial, industrial or public utility undertaking in those areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces, or
- (ii) Any entity identified in paragraph 7 (i) above or any person or entity identified in paragraph 7 (ii) above, shall require all persons and entities within their territories holding such funds or other financial assets or resources to freeze them to ensure that neither they nor any other funds or any other financial assets or resources are made available directly or indirectly to or for the benefit of any of the above-mentioned persons or entities, except:

(a) Payments made in connection with activities authorized in accordance with paragraph 7 above, or

(b) Payments made in connection with transactions authorized by the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina with regard to persons or entities within its territory, provided that States are satisfied that payments to persons outside their territories will be used for the purpose or in connection with the activities and transactions for which permission is sought, and that in the case of payments made under exception (a) above, States may authorize such payments only after they are satisfied on a case-by-case basis that the payments do not result in the transfer of funds or other financial assets or resources to any person or entity described in subparagraph (a) or (b) of paragraph 7 (i) above;

12. Decides that States shall ensure that all payments of dividends, interest or other income on shares, interest, bonds or debt obligations or amounts derived from an interest in, or the sale or other disposal of, or any other dealing with, tangible and intangible assets and property rights, accruing to:

- (i) Any entity, including any commercial, industrial or public utility undertaking in those areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces, or
- (ii) Any entity identified in paragraph 7 (i) or any person or entity identified in paragraph 7 (ii) above, are made only into frozen accounts;

13. Decides that the provision of services, both financial and non-financial, to any person or body for the purposes of any business carried on in those areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of

Bosnian Serb forces shall be prohibited, the only exceptions being (a) telecommunications, postal services and legal services consistent with the present resolution and earlier relevant resolutions, (b) services whose supply may be necessary for humanitarian or other exceptional purposes, as approved on a case-by-case basis by the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724 (1991), and (c) services authorized by the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

14. Decides that States shall prevent the entry into their territories of:

(a) The members of the authorities, including legislative authorities, in those areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces and officers of the Bosnian Serb military and paramilitary forces, and those acting on behalf of such authorities or forces;

(b) Persons found, after the adoption of the present resolution, to have provided financial, material, logistical, military or other tangible support to Bosnian Serb forces in violation of relevant resolutions of the Council;

(c) Persons in or resident in those areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces found to have violated or contributed to the violation of the measures set out in resolution 820 (1993) of 17 April 1993 and in the present resolution, and requests that the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724 (1991) establish and maintain an updated list, based on information provided by States and competent regional organizations, of the persons falling within this paragraph, provided that nothing in this paragraph shall oblige a State to refuse entry into its territory to its own nationals; and provided that the entry of a person included in the list into a particular State on a specified date may be authorized, for purposes consistent with the pursuit of the peace process and with the present resolution and earlier relevant resolutions, by the Committee or, in the event of disagreement in the Committee, by the Council;

15. Decides to prohibit all commercial riverine traffic from entering ports of those areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces except when authorized on a case-by-case basis by the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724 (1991), or by the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina for its territory, or in case of force majeure;

16. Decides that States shall require that all shipments of commodities and products destined for those areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces be properly manifested and either be physically inspected by the Sanctions Assistance Missions or the competent national authorities at loading to verify and seal their contents or be laden in a manner which permits adequate physical verification of the contents;

17. Decides that States shall, in notifying or submitting applications to the Committee established pursuant to resolution

724 (1991) in respect of supplies intended strictly for medical purposes and foodstuffs and essential humanitarian supplies in respect of those areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces, report for information purposes to the Committee on the source of funds from which payment is to be made;

18. Decides that States shall, in implementing the measures imposed by the present resolution, take steps to prevent the diversion of benefits to those areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces from other places, in particular from the United Nations Protected Areas in Croatia;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary assistance to the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724 (1991) and to make the necessary arrangements in the Secretariat for that purpose;

20. Decides that the provisions set forth in the present resolution do not apply to activities related to the United Nations Protection Force, the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia or the European Community Monitoring Missions;

21. Decides to review the measures imposed by the present resolution whenever appropriate and in any event every four months from the date of adoption of the present resolution, and expresses its readiness to reconsider those measures if the Bosnian Serb party accepts the proposed territorial settlement unconditionally and in full;

22. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter and to consider immediately, whenever necessary, further steps to achieve a peaceful solution in conformity with relevant resolutions of the Council.

The third draft resolution²⁴⁴ was then put to the vote and was adopted by 11 votes in favour to 2 against (Djibouti, Pakistan), with 2 abstentions (Nigeria, Rwanda), as resolution 943 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling all its earlier relevant resolutions,

Affirming its commitment to a negotiated settlement of the conflict in the Former Yugoslavia, preserving the territorial integrity of all the States there within their internationally recognized borders,

Expressing its appreciation for the efforts of the representatives of the United Nations, the European Union, the United States of America and the Russian Federation to assist the parties in reaching a settlement,

Welcoming the decision by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to support the proposed territorial settlement for the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina which has been put to the Bosnian parties,

Also welcoming the decision by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to close the international border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all goods except foodstuffs, medical supplies and clothing for essential humanitarian needs,

Further welcoming the decision by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to invite international assistance with regard to the passage of supplies for essential humanitarian needs through the border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Noting in this regard the letter dated 19 September 1994 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council, conveying a report from the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia on the establishment and commencement of operations of a mission of the International Conference to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro),

Calling upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to maintain the effective closure of the border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all goods except foodstuffs, medical supplies and clothing for essential humanitarian needs,

Noting that paragraph 9 of resolution 757 (1992) of 30 May 1992 remains in force,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that:

- (i) The restrictions imposed by paragraph 7 of resolution 757 (1992), paragraph 24 of resolution 820 (1993) with regard to aircraft which are not impounded at the date of adoption of the present resolution and by other relevant resolutions which relate to the provision of goods and services, with respect to all civilian passenger flights to and from the Belgrade airport carrying only passengers and personal effects and no cargo unless authorized under the procedures of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 724 (1991) concerning Yugoslavia;
- (ii) The restrictions imposed by paragraphs 24 and 28 of resolution 820 (1993) and by other relevant resolutions which relate to the provision of goods and services, with respect to the ferry service between Bar in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and Bari in Italy carrying only passengers and personal effects and no cargo unless authorized under the procedures of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724 (1991);

- (iii) The measures imposed by paragraph 8 (b) and (c) of resolution 757 (1992) concerning participation in sporting events and cultural exchanges, shall be suspended for an initial period of one hundred days from the day following the receipt by the Security Council of a report from the Secretary-General that the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia have certified that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) are effectively implementing their decision to close the border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all goods except foodstuffs, medical supplies and clothing for essential humanitarian needs, and that arrangements are in place pursuant to the decision of the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to invite international assistance with regard to the passage of supplies for essential humanitarian needs through that border;

2. Invites the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724 (1991) to adopt appropriate streamlined procedures for expediting its consideration of applications concerning legitimate humanitarian assistance, in particular applications from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Committee of the Red Cross;

3. Requests that every thirty days the Secretary-General submit to the Security Council for its review a report as to whether the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia have certified that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) are effectively implementing their decision to close the border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all goods except foodstuffs, medical supplies and clothing for essential humanitarian needs, and further requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council immediately if he has evidence, including from the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, that those authorities are not effectively implementing their decision to close the border;

4. Decides that if at any time the Secretary-General reports that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) are not effectively implementing their decision to close the border, the suspension of the measures referred to in paragraph 1 above shall terminate on the fifth working day following the report of the Secretary-General, unless the Security Council decides to the contrary;

5. Decides to keep the situation closely under review and to consider further steps with regard to measures applicable to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) in the light of further progress in the situation;

6. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the Russian Federation stressed the importance of operative paragraph 5 of resolution 943 (1994), which provided that the Council would consider further steps to ease the sanctions in the light of further progress in the situation. Concerning resolution 942 (1994), tightening sanctions against the Bosnian Serbs, the speaker stated that the purpose of that resolution was to make the Bosnian Serbs recognize that there was no alternative to a political solution. He further stated that his country deemed the policy of "ethnic cleansing" to be repugnant and demanded its immediate cessation. Accordingly, his delegation had supported the adoption of the resolution that condemned the policy conducted by the Bosnian Serbs and noted, in particular, the provision of the resolution that condemned any "ethnic cleansing" of whatever origin, and whoever might perpetrate it. The Russian Federation also deemed important the provisions contained in the resolutions adopted on the commitment to a settlement of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia through negotiation, while maintaining the territorial integrity of all States there within the confines of their internationally recognized borders.²⁴⁵

The representative of the United States noted that the resolutions just adopted aimed to pressure the Bosnian Serbs and to demonstrate the Council's determination to use "both carrots and sticks" to move the parties towards a negotiated settlement. In preparing to ease sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, the Council was acknowledging that its Government had taken an important step to persuade the Bosnian Serbs to accept the negotiated settlement. The United States continued to believe that Belgrade bore primary responsibility for events in the former Yugoslavia over the preceding three years. While it welcomed the first indications that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia might have changed course, it would insist that that country comply with its commitment to keep the border closed. The suspended sanctions would come into effect, without the need for further Council action, if at any time the international Mission was no longer able to confirm the border closure. The Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia should not doubt the will of the United States to cancel the suspension of the sanctions if it believed that the border had been reopened. The people of Serbia and Montenegro should also understand that further concrete steps towards peace would lead to additional easing of sanctions. The United States urged Belgrade to recognize Croatia and Bosnia within their internationally recognized borders, and to use its influence with the Croatian Serbs to push them towards a settlement consistent with Croatia's territorial integrity. It would also insist that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia not be allowed to rejoin the family of nations until it was in compliance with all relevant Council resolutions. Belgrade should understand that a decision to choose conflict would stop limited sanctions relief and would lead to the adoption of even tougher measures. Referring to resolution 941 (1994), the speaker noted that the condemnation of ethnic cleansing was an integral part of efforts to end the conflict.²⁴⁶

The representative of Nigeria observed that it was appropriate that resolution 941 (1994) had been adopted under Chapter VII, for the Council could not be indifferent to grave violations of international humanitarian law. Referring to resolution 942 (1994), the speaker stated that the Bosnian Serb leadership must be made to realize that the only way to join other members of the international community was to accept a negotiated settlement. Nigeria called on the members of the international community, especially neighbouring States and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, to discharge their obligations under that resolution in order to ensure a complete and total isolation of the Bosnian Serb political and military leadership. Referring to resolution 943 (1994), the speaker noted that his delegation was uneasy with the loosening of sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, primarily due to its timing. If the Council had considered the draft resolution on easing the sanctions after it had received a report from the Secretary-General that the border was being effectively closed, then some of Nigeria's concerns would have been addressed. The Council's decision to loosen sanctions when nothing had changed on the ground, however, might give the wrong impression. In addition, a fundamental condition for the easing of the sanctions should have been an immediate and explicit recognition of Bosnia and Herzegovina within its internationally recognized borders. Nigeria had

therefore abstained in the vote on resolution 943 (1994).²⁴⁷

The representative of Oman stated that, despite the positions of both OIC and the Non-Aligned Group which advocated that submitting resolution 943 (1994) at that stage was premature, his delegation had voted in favour of resolution 943 (1994) in deference to the wishes of the majority of members of the Council, and in the hope that the resolution would help to resolve the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Nevertheless, it stressed that the lifting of the sanctions must be subject to a "trial period", in order to gauge the peaceful intentions of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. Should there be no concrete progress, then the measures in the resolution would become null and void and the situation would revert to its earlier status.²⁴⁸

Decision of 30 September 1994 (3433rd meeting): statement by the President

At its 3433rd meeting, on 30 September 1994, the Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Spain) then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:²⁴⁹

The Security Council is deeply concerned at the deteriorating security situation in the safe area of Sarajevo and elsewhere in Bosnia and Herzegovina, which has included increased levels of armed violence, deliberate attacks on United Nations Protection Force troops and on humanitarian flights, severe restrictions on public utilities and continued restriction of the flow of transport and communications. It notes that normal life has not been fully restored to Sarajevo, as called for in its resolution 900 (1994) of 4 March 1994.

The Council expresses concern at the deliberate interruptions of utilities and communications to the civilian population in Sarajevo, as well as the extended period of closure of the Sarajevo airport to humanitarian flights and of the route across that airport opened in cooperation with the Force following the agreement of 17 March 1994, as a result of the actions by the Bosnian Serb party. The Council calls upon the Bosnian Serb party not to interfere with the normal functioning of the Sarajevo airport. It further calls upon the Bosnian Serb party to cooperate with efforts to restore fully the flow of gas and electricity to Sarajevo, to reopen all land routes to Sarajevo and, now and in the future, to refrain from impeding the normal operations of these and all other utilities and means of communication and transport. It calls upon all parties not to interfere with the supply of gas or electricity to the civilian population. It reiterates its call to all parties, with the assistance of the United Nations, to achieve complete freedom of movement for the civilian population and for humanitarian goods to, from and within Sarajevo, to remove any hindrance to such freedom of movement and to help restore normal life to the city.

²⁴⁹ S/PRST/1994/57.

The Council condemns in particular the deliberate attack on 22 September 1994 on troops of the Force in Sarajevo, just one of a number of attacks which clearly suggest a deliberate pattern. The Council also notes with alarm, and condemns without reservation, the reported statements of the Bosnian Serb leadership that the Bosnian Serb party would target activities of the Force in retaliation for the passage of a Council resolution tightening sanctions against the Bosnian Serbs. It warns the Bosnian Serb leadership against any retaliatory action, whether against the Force or any other party and in that context welcomes efforts to support troops of the Force.

The Council fully supports the efforts of the Force to assure compliance with measures designed by the international community to improve conditions in Sarajevo. It advises both parties, in particular the Bosnian Serbs, to comply with those measures.

The Council strongly condemns any provocative actions in Sarajevo and elsewhere in Bosnia and Herzegovina by whomsoever committed, and demands immediate cessation of such actions.

The Council encourages the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Former Yugoslavia and the Force to explore as a matter of priority proposals for the demilitarization of Sarajevo.

The Council affirms its determination to remain seized of the matter.

Deliberations of 8 and 9 November 1994 (3454th meeting)

By a letter dated 3 November 1994 addressed to the President of the Security Council,²⁵⁰ the representative of Pakistan requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina in the light of resolution 49/10, which had been adopted by the General Assembly on the same date.

²⁵⁰ S/1994/1248.

At its 3454th meeting, on 8 and 9 November 1994, the Council included that letter in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Bangladesh, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Cambodia, Canada, Croatia, Ecuador, Egypt, Germany, Guinea-Bissau, Honduras, Indonesia, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Jordan, Latvia, Malaysia, Morocco, Nicaragua, Norway, the Republic of Korea, Romania, Senegal, Slovenia, the Sudan, Thailand, Tunisia and Turkey, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also invited Ambassador Dragomir Djokic, at his request, to address the Council in the course of its consideration of the item, and extended an invitation to Mr. Engin Ahmet Ansay, Permanent Observer of OIC to the United Nations.

The representative of Pakistan, speaking also as the Chairman of the OIC Contact Group, noted that the OIC Foreign Ministers at their seventh extraordinary session, held at Islamabad from 7 to 9 September 1994, had reiterated the inapplicability of the arms embargo imposed by resolution 713 (1991) to Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, and had called upon the Security Council to confirm that position. They had further noted that should the Council not confirm that position, then the OIC membership, along with other States Members of the United Nations, would conclude that members acting individually or collectively could provide the means of self-defence to the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina. As far as Pakistan was concerned, it had consistently advocated that the inherent right of the Bosnian people to self-defence under Article 51 of the Charter should be restored without delay. In that context, Pakistan welcomed the United States recent initiative to lift the arms embargo and would extend its support to the early adoption of the draft resolution. At the same time, measures should be adopted by the Council to declare the entire 51 per cent of the territory allocated to the Muslim-Croat Federation a "safe area". The Council should also respond effectively to any further violations of its resolutions, particularly those concerning safe areas, by the use of force and air strikes.²⁵¹

The representative of France stated that the international community would now be pursuing its efforts to overcome the obstinacy of the Bosnian Serbs,

who had rejected the peace plan presented by the Contact Group, and to encourage those who had approved it to work towards an overall settlement. In that regard, Belgrade was expected to recognize Bosnia and Herzegovina, to continue its support for the plan of the Contact Group, and to have no political and economic relations with the Bosnian Serbs, and to approve the plan of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia. With respect to the Bosnian Serbs, there were two ways to bring them to accept the Contact Group's plan, through continued strict political and economic isolation or by confirming that the various communities would enjoy equal rights with regard to the constitution. Addressing the question of lifting the arms embargo against Bosnia and Herzegovina, the speaker cautioned that if the embargo were lifted, diplomatic efforts would be jeopardized. In addition, UNPROFOR would be exposed to the consequences of offensive military action and reprisals. Such a measure would lead to withdrawal, which would mean the end of assistance and protection for many peoples. Moreover, a lifting of the arms embargo would intensify tensions between the communities of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the successor countries of the former Yugoslavia.²⁵²

The representative of the Russian Federation expressed concern at reports that the present military escalation in Bosnia had resulted from continued deliveries of arms to the Bosnian Government troops, in violation of resolution 713 (1993). Particularly alarming had been the use of the safe areas by those same troops to carry out attacks. The Russian Federation called on the Government of Bosnia and all parties to reject attempts to solve the problem by military means. In addition, it was necessary to introduce certain changes into the concept and regime of the safe areas, taking into account the Secretary-General's recommendations contained in his report of 9 May 1994. Referring to the question of lifting the embargo, the speaker expressed the belief that such a step would be an extreme measure and should be considered only after all political means had been exhausted. He argued that lifting the embargo would have negative consequences for the political process, for the continued provision of humanitarian assistance, and for the activities of UNPROFOR.²⁵³

²⁵³ Ibid., pp. 6-7.

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that the continued intransigence of the Bosnian Serbs represented by far the greatest obstacle on the path to peace in Bosnia. But the new readiness of Belgrade to back the Contact's Group efforts and to isolate the Bosnian Serbs also offered an opportunity. What was asked from Belgrade was that it took significant steps and recognized Croatia and Bosnia, maintained its support for the Contact Group plan, continued its embargo against the Bosnian Serbs and threw its weight behind a peace plan for Croatia as well. The speaker further warned that the progress achieved so far in the quest for peace would be endangered if the arms embargo were to be lifted. The United Kingdom therefore could not support the draft resolution before the Council.²⁵⁴

The representative of Senegal argued that the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina had shown that sanctions, however effective, would not be sufficient to stem the hostile inclinations of the aggressor. Senegal, therefore, believed that the adoption of the proposed draft resolution, lifting the arms embargo, could make a decisive contribution to restoring the balance of power. Referring to General Assembly resolution 49/10, the speaker noted that the General Assembly had urged the Council to fulfil its responsibility under Article 24 of the Charter and to take appropriate steps to restore the sovereignty, political independence, territorial integrity and unity of Bosnia and Herzegovina. He noted that the measures proposed in the draft resolution before the Council came in response to a renewed appeal by the General Assembly, most of whose members were of the view that the non-application to the Bosnian and Croat parties of resolution 713 (1991) constituted not a potential threat of wider conflict, but an easing of a burden which had seriously hampered the ability of a Member of the United Nations to exercise its inherent right to individual and collective self-defence under Article 51 of the Charter. In conclusion, his delegation fully supported the draft resolution before the Council.²⁵⁵

The representative of Germany, speaking on behalf of the European Union, stated that Belgrade could significantly improve the prospects for a peaceful settlement by taking a number of steps, including recognizing Bosnia and Croatia within their ²⁵⁴ Ibid., pp. 7-9.

²⁵⁵ Ibid., pp. 16-17.

internationally recognized borders, continuing to endorse the Contact Group plan, endorsing the plan for Croatia of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, and continuing to implement the sanctions against the Bosnian Serbs. Referring to the question of lifting the arms embargo, the speaker stated that such a step must remain a last resort, to be used only once all avenues for a political settlement had been exhausted.²⁵⁶

The representative of Slovenia recalled that the embargo was imposed on the former Yugoslavia back in 1991, when that former State still existed and had been extended to the successor States of the former Yugoslavia in a specific situation in 1992. Since that time almost everything had changed for each of the successor States and a debate which would take into account the new realities was long overdue. The speaker noted that while there were many reasons for keeping the arms embargo as a part of sanctions imposed by the Council, until the conditions for lifting these sanctions were fulfilled, there was a need to recognize the inapplicability of an arms embargo to those engaged in legitimate self-defence. The entire concept of collective security was based upon complementarity of self-defence and international action so as to provide effective protection of States' existence and their territorial integrity and political independence. He further contended that in the case of his country, there was no justification for continuing the arms embargo. Slovenia was not, and had never been, involved in an armed conflict that prompted the imposition of that arms embargo. Therefore, it would be not only appropriate, but necessary for the Council to declare that relevant paragraphs of resolutions 713 (1991), 724 (1991), 727 (1992) and 762 (1992) no longer applied.²⁵⁷

Referring to the question of lifting the arms embargo, the representative of the Republic of Korea stated that his delegation shared the apprehensions of those States who were concerned that lifting the embargo would aggravate the situation. For that reason, the Republic of Korea had abstained in the voting the previous year on General Assembly resolution 48/88. In the most recent vote, however, on resolution 49/10, the Republic of Korea had registered an affirmative vote, with the view that as the international community had failed to secure peace in the region, it had a moral and political obligation to respond to the legitimate concern of the Bosnian people for their very existence. His delegation noted that the draft resolution provided for the deferral of such lifting for a period of six months, which it believed to be a "judicious step". It emphasized that the draft was not meant to lead to an intensified arms struggle in Bosnia, but to bring armed hostilities to an end. The international community must exert more pressure on the Bosnian Serbs, and the Republic of Korea believed that the prospect of lifting the arms embargo was the most persuasive weapon against "Serbian intransigence".²⁵⁸

The representative of Croatia noted that the balance of power which was a prerequisite for a political settlement and for a just and lasting peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina, had not been achieved through the measures thus far taken by the international community. The Council must now plan for new mechanisms that would impose peace such as the lifting of arms embargo against the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The lifting of the arms embargo would be not a step towards war but a "leap towards peace", moving the region towards a new, desirable balance. Referring to the situation in Croatia, the speaker welcomed the inclusion of a paragraph in the preamble of the draft resolution before the Council which called into question the continued application of the arms embargo against Croatia. The speaker argued that since the draft resolution deferred the lifting of the arms embargo for six months, it was only logical to make his Government, too, eligible for a lifting of the arms embargo in six months.²⁵⁹

Mr. Djokic argued that calls for lifting the arms embargo against the Bosnian Muslims and carrying out air strikes against the Bosnian Serbs could only lead to an escalation of the conflict. Noting that the effort to resolve the crisis had been ineffective so far, he contended that the urgent and unconditional lifting of all sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia would create the conditions for the establishment of an early, just and lasting peace. Yugoslavia was ready to accept any solution agreed to by the warring parties, on the basis of full equality and respect for the legitimate rights of all three Bosnian peoples and it stood ready to recognize the former Yugoslav republics once all outstanding issues had been resolved. It was convinced that the Contact Group plan was the only viable way to end the crisis and establish a just and lasting solution and it called on all sides to cease immediately and unconditionally all military activities and to abide strictly by the ceasefire agreement.²⁶⁰

²⁵⁹ Ibid., pp. 26-27.

The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina questioned what option was left to his country. If the choice were between retaining UNPROFOR and the lifting of arms embargo, then his country would choose the latter. The choice, however, might not be between one and the other. Rather, both options might be possible. His Government believed that UNPROFOR efforts could be supplemented by measures that effectively allowed the Bosnians to defend themselves by the lifting of the arms embargo or, through an overall peacemaking process. Noting that his country had made many concessions in the past, the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina believed that one more compromise had been made by asking the Council to lift the arms embargo and to defer the application of that decision for six months, to give the international community and the Contact Group a last opportunity to compel the Bosnian Serbs to accept the peace plan.²⁶¹

The President, speaking in her capacity as the representative of the United States, stated that her Government had presented a draft resolution that would lift the arms embargo after six months if the Bosnian Serbs had not yet agreed to a settlement. She argued that there were no grounds in justice or law for denying the Government of Bosnia the right to defend itself. Bosnia and Herzegovina had not attacked its neighbours, supported international terrorism or otherwise abused its responsibilities as a sovereign Power. The real question before the Council was whether it would at long last translate words into actions, for it was only bold action that could provide the pressure necessary to end the war. The speaker argued that, under the draft resolution, arms would not begin to flow into Bosnia for a period of six months. During that time, the capacity of the Bosnian Serbs to wage war could be limited through tighter sanctions. Moreover, the prospect that the embargo would be lifted if the Bosnian Serbs continued to reject the peace process should give them a “weighty” reason to accept the Contact Group’s proposed territorial arrangements. The United States was determined to proceed on a firm course. Debates in the Council and the General Assembly had indicated that a strong majority of the United Nations membership supported lifting the arms embargo against Bosnia.²⁶²

While several speakers expressed support to the United States draft resolution on the lifting of the arms embargo²⁶³ and a number of them called for the strengthening of UNPROFOR mandate,²⁶⁴ others opposed the lifting or expressed doubts about it,²⁶⁵ arguing that it would lead to the disintegration of UNPROFOR and that efforts should be focused on a political solution.

Decision of 13 November 1994 (3456th meeting): statement by the President

By a letter dated 11 November 1994 addressed to the President of the Security Council,²⁶⁶ the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina transmitted a letter of the same date from the President of Bosnia and Herzegovina. In that letter, the President reported that the situation in and around the Bihac “safe area” continued to deteriorate, and that numerous attacks had been launched by rebel Serbs from the United Nations Protected Areas, inflicting heavy casualties upon the civilian population. In view of the situation, he requested an emergency meeting of the Security Council.

By a letter dated 12 November 1994 addressed to the President of the Security Council,²⁶⁷ the representative of Croatia transmitted a letter of the same date from the Deputy Prime Minister of Croatia. In that letter, the Deputy Prime Minister reported that the situation in the United Nations Protected Areas and in Bosnia and Herzegovina had deteriorated to such an extent that it warranted decisive and immediate action by the Security Council, UNPROFOR and NATO, and requested that the Council, at an emergency meeting, review the overall situation in the area and consider the demands that had been elaborated in a letter dated 11 November 1994 from the representative of Croatia addressed to the President of the Security Council.²⁶⁸ Those demands included (a) the extension of the exclusion zone regime in the occupied parts of Croatian territory; and (b) the engagement of NATO forces in the occupied territories and the airspace of Croatia, whenever Security Council and General Assembly resolutions were being violated.

At its 3456th meeting, held on 13 November 1994 in response to the requests contained in the above-mentioned letters, the Council included the letters in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (United States) then drew the attention of the members of the Council to several documents²⁶⁹ and stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, she had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:²⁷⁰

The Security Council views with alarm the escalation in recent fighting in the Bihac area and the flow of refugees and displaced persons resulting from it. It strongly urges all parties and others concerned to refrain from all hostile actions and to exercise the utmost restraint.

The Council condemns any violation of the international border between the Republic of Croatia and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. It demands that all parties and others concerned, in particular the so called Krajina Serb forces, fully respect that border and refrain from hostile acts across it.

The Council calls upon all parties and others concerned to abstain from any action that could cause a further escalation in the fighting.

The Council demands that all parties and others concerned immediately ensure, in cooperation with the United Nations Protection Force, unimpeded access for humanitarian supplies.

The Council expresses full support for the efforts of the Force and calls on the parties to respect the safety and security of the Force, its unimpeded access to supplies and its freedom of movement.

The Council emphasizes the significance of its resolutions on safe areas and demands that all concerned facilitate implementation of these resolutions, and in this connection requests the Secretary-General to report as soon as possible on any further measures to stabilize the situation in and around the safe area of Bihac, drawing on the experience of the Force in Bihac and the other safe areas.

Decision of 18 November 1994 (3460th meeting): statement by the President

At its 3460th meeting, on 18 November 1994, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. after consultations among members of the Security Council, she had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:²⁷²

The Security Council condemns in the strongest possible terms the attack on the safe area of Bihac by aircraft belonging to the so-called Krajina Serb forces, which involved the dropping of napalm and cluster bombs in south-west Bihac, in clear violation of the status of Bihac as a safe area. This violation is all the more grave because of the threat it poses to the United Nations Protection Force troops deployed in the safe area of Bihac.

The Council also condemns the shelling by the so-called Krajina Serb forces from the United Nations Protected Areas as a flagrant violation of the territorial integrity of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and relevant Council resolutions. It demands that all parties and others concerned, in particular the so-called Krajina Serb forces, cease immediately all hostile actions across the international border between the Republic of Croatia and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Council further demands an immediate end to all military activity which endangers the lives of the Force personnel deployed in the Bihac area and demands that all parties and others concerned, in particular the so-called Krajina Serb forces, restore the freedom of movement of Force personnel in and around the Bihac area, including their unimpeded access to supplies.

The Council calls on all parties and others concerned to refrain from any hostile action that could cause further escalation in the fighting, and also calls on them to achieve urgently a ceasefire in the Bihac area.

Decision of 19 November 1994 (3462nd meeting): resolution 959 (1994)

At its 3462nd meeting, on 19 November 1994, the Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and Germany, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (United States) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution submitted by France, Germany, the Russian Federation, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States.²⁷³

The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina stated that it was his delegation's understanding that the draft resolution was designed to facilitate the efforts of UNPROFOR under its peacekeeping mandate. Bosnia and Herzegovina supported all such efforts in keeping with its territorial integrity and sovereignty and the interests of its citizens. Until the Bosnian Serbs accepted the Contact Group plan and until there was a comprehensive effort at peacemaking, the safe areas concept would only be a secondary tool to Bosnia and Herzegovina's responsibilities and efforts at defence and peacemaking. Referring to the issue of Sarajevo, the speaker noted that his delegation favoured the demilitarization of that city, consistent with the Contact Group plan. Bosnia and Herzegovina was prepared to evaluate options for other safe areas that would not undermine its territorial integrity or sovereignty.²⁷⁴

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and was adopted unanimously as resolution 959 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions on the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in particular its resolutions 824 (1993) of 6 May 1993 and 836 (1993) of 4 June 1993,

Reaffirming the need for a lasting peace settlement to be signed by all the Bosnian parties and implemented in good faith by them, and condemning the decision by the Bosnian Serb party to refuse to accept the proposed territorial settlement,

Reaffirming also the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Expressing special concern about the escalation in recent fighting in the Bihac pocket, including in, from and around the safe areas, and the flow of refugees and displaced persons resulting from it,

Bearing in mind the importance of facilitating the return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 11 March and 16 March 1994 and of his recommendations concerning the definition and implementation of the concept of safe areas in his report of 9 May 1994,

Recalling the statements by the President of the Security Council of 6 April, 30 June, 13 November and 18 November 1994,

Reaffirming its previous calls on all parties and others concerned to refrain from any hostile action that could cause further escalation in the fighting and to achieve urgently a ceasefire in the Bihac area,

Reiterating the importance of maintaining Sarajevo, the capital of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, as a united city and a multicultural, multi-ethnic and plurireligious centre, and noting in this context the positive contribution that agreement between the parties on the demilitarization of Sarajevo could make to this end, to the restoration of normal life in Sarajevo and to achieving an overall settlement, consistent with the peace plan of the Contact Group,

Taking note of the communiqué on Bosnia and Herzegovina issued on 30 July 1994 by the Troika of the European Union and the foreign ministers of the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America and, in particular, of their commitment to strengthen the regime of safe areas,

1. Expresses its grave concern over the recent hostilities in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

2. Condemns any violation of the international border between the Republic of Croatia and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and demands that all parties and others concerned, in particular the so-called Krajina Serb forces, fully respect the border and refrain from hostile acts across it;

3. Expresses its full support for the efforts by the United Nations Protection Force to ensure implementation of the Security Council resolutions on safe areas;

4. Calls upon all the Bosnian parties to respect fully the status and functions of the Force and to cooperate with it in its efforts to ensure implementation of the Security Council resolutions on safe areas, and demands that all parties and others concerned show maximum restraint and put an end to all hostile actions in and around the safe areas in order to ensure that the Force can carry out its mandate in this regard effectively and safely;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to update his recommendations on modalities of the implementation of the concept of safe areas and to encourage the Force, in cooperation with the Bosnian parties, to continue the efforts to achieve agreements on strengthening the regimes of safe areas taking into account the specific situation in each case, and recalls its request to the Secretary-General made in the statement by the President of the Security Council of 13 November 1994 to report as soon as possible on any further measures to stabilize the situation in and around the safe area of Bihac;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General and the Force to intensify efforts aimed at reaching agreement with the Bosnian parties on the modalities of demilitarization of Sarajevo, bearing in mind the need for the restoration of normal life to the city and for free access to and from the city by land and air and the free and unimpeded movement of people, goods and services in and around the city in line with its resolution 900 (1994), particularly paragraph 2 thereof;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution by 1 December 1994;

8. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of New Zealand noted that, while his delegation had voted in favour of the resolution just adopted, it nevertheless retained some reservations. Those reservations stemmed from the belief that the safe areas had been restrictively implemented on a number of occasions, contrary to the spirit and intention of resolutions 824 (1993) and 836 (1993). Moreover, his delegation had reservations about many of the conclusions of the Secretary-General's reports. New Zealand believed that any updating, as called for in operative paragraph 5 of the resolution would, require some radical new thinking rather than simple updating. It further believed that the Contact Group plan had significantly changed the underlying parameters against which the concept of safe areas should be reviewed. The Security Council had approved and endorsed the Contact Group plan, but any proposals for defining the geographical scope of future demilitarized safe areas, if they were to meet with consensus in the Council, should envisage sufficiently large areas for the population to lead a normal life. Moreover, the overall framework for such future demilitarized safe areas should reinforce, not undermine, the areas envisaged in the Contact Group plan.²⁷⁵

Decision of 26 November 1994 (3466th meeting): statement by the President

By a letter dated 25 November 1994 addressed to the President of the Security Council,²⁷⁶ the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina requested an emergency meeting of the Council, in view of the continuing attacks on, and occupation of, the Bihac safe area, by the so-called Bosnian/Croatian Serb forces.

At its 3466th meeting, held on 26 November 1994 in response to the request contained in the above-mentioned letter, the Council included that letter in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (United States) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a number of documents²⁷⁷ and stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, she had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:²⁷⁸

The Security Council reiterates its deep concern over the deteriorating situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, particularly the Bihac region and especially in the safe area of Bihac. It condemns in the strongest possible terms all the violations of the safe area of Bihac by whomsoever committed, in particular the flagrant and blatant entry into the safe area by the Bosnian Serb forces. It also notes with concern the hostilities around Velika Kladusa. It demands that all parties and others concerned agree to and implement an immediate and unconditional ceasefire in the Bihac region, in particular in and around the safe area of Bihac. It calls on all parties to intensify negotiations for a ceasefire and a cessation of hostilities throughout the territory of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina in pursuit of the territorial settlement for the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina proposed by the Contact Group as part of an overall peace settlement.

The Council expresses its full support for the continued efforts by United Nations personnel to achieve a ceasefire in the Bihac area, as well as for the efforts of the United Nations Protection Force to implement its mandate to deter attacks against the safe areas. The Council insists on the withdrawal of all Bosnian Serb military forces from the Bihac safe area and on the need to ensure full respect by all parties of the safe areas, particularly for the benefit of the civilian population. The Council calls on all parties and others concerned fully to cooperate with these efforts. The Council underlines the terms of resolution 836 (1993) of 4 June 1993, which enable the Force to carry out its mandate in relation to safe areas.

The Council commends the Force, including those of its personnel serving in the Bihac region, in particular the Bangladeshi troops, for the important contributions they are making under the most difficult conditions. It calls on the parties and all others concerned to ensure freedom of movement for personnel of the Force and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and access to necessary supplies for the Force and the civilian population throughout the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Republic of Croatia.

The Council condemns violations of the international border between the Republic of Croatia and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina by the so-called Krajina Serb forces and others concerned in the Bihac region. It demands that all hostile acts across that international border cease immediately, and also demands that all so-called Krajina Serb forces withdraw immediately from the territory of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Council reiterates its full support for the proposed territorial settlement for the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina which has been put by the Contact Group to the parties as part of an overall peace settlement. The Council reiterates its condemnation of the Bosnian Serb party's refusal to accept the proposed territorial settlement and demands that that party accept it unconditionally and in full.

The Council will monitor compliance with the terms of the present statement and react appropriately.

Decision of 29 November 1994 (3471st meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3471st meeting, on 29 November 1994, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (United States) drew the attention of the members of the Council to several documents²⁷⁹ and stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, she had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:²⁸⁰

The Security Council reiterates its concern over the continuing conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, including in the Bihac region and in particular in and around the safe area of Bihac. It remains concerned over the blatant violation of the Bihac safe area. The Council remains determined fully to support efforts to negotiate a peaceful resolution of that conflict consistent with its previous resolutions and the proposals of the Contact Group.

The Council expresses its full support for the efforts of United Nations officials to stabilize the situation in and around the safe area of Bihac. It takes note with satisfaction of the proposal put to the parties by United Nations officials for an immediate and unconditional ceasefire in the Bihac region to be followed by a ceasefire throughout the territory of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the interposition of the United Nations Protection Force in the Bihac safe area, a complete demilitarization of the safe area involving the withdrawal from it by all military forces and opening corridors for humanitarian relief. The Council welcomes the acceptance by the Bosnian Government of this proposal and calls on the Bosnian Serb party also to accept it.

The Council welcomes the impending visit of the Secretary-General to the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. It demands that all parties and others concerned cooperate fully with the Secretary-General's efforts to stabilize the situation in and around the safe area of Bihac and throughout the territory of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and ensure the security of the Force as it implements its mandate.

Decision of 2 December 1994 (3475th meeting):
rejection of a draft resolution

At its 3475th meeting, on 2 December 1994, the Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Egypt and Turkey, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Rwanda) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution submitted by Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Djibouti, Egypt, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Rwanda and Turkey,²⁸¹ and to a number of other documents.²⁸²

²⁸² Letters dated 2 November and 1 December 1994 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council, transmitting the reports of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, concerning the operations of the International Conference's mission to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) (S/1994/1246 and S/1994/1372); letter dated 2 December 1994 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council, transmitting the report of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia on the conclusion of an Economic Agreement between the Croatian Government and the Serb local authorities (S/1994/1375); letter dated 25 November 1994 from the representative of Pakistan addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/1994/1355); letter dated 28 November 1994 from the representative of Yugoslavia addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/1994/1361); and letters dated 30 November 1994 from the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina addressed to the Secretary-General (S/1994/1364) and the President of the Security Council (S/1994/1366).

Under the draft resolution, in its preambular part, the Council, inter alia, would have: expressed concern about the continuing threat to international peace and security posed by the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the situation in the United Nations Protected Areas in Croatia, and at the military activities by the local Serb paramilitary forces within the United Nations Protected Areas in Croatia against Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Bihac safe area. In the operative part of the draft resolution, the Council, inter alia, would have (i) reconfirmed that the requirements of all relevant Security Council resolutions, including in particular paragraph 12 of resolution 820 (1993) and resolution 943 (1994), should be strictly applied in respect of all goods crossing the border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Bosnia and Herzegovina, including goods destined for the United Nations Protected Areas in Croatia; and (ii) demanded that the provisions of paragraph 12 of resolution 820 (1993) be applied strictly and in full on the international border between Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, and on the international border between Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina, in regard to the import, export, and trans-shipment of all commodities with the exception of essential humanitarian supplies, including medical supplies and foodstuffs distributed by international humanitarian agencies.

The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina contended that the need for the draft resolution had been brought about not only because resolution 820 (1993), and specifically paragraph 12 of that resolution, had not been implemented, but also because the monitoring Mission of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia itself had facilitated the violation of that paragraph, as indicated in the 2 November report of the International Conference's Co-Chairmen. It was unfortunate that because of an absence of will on the part of UNPROFOR command to implement Council resolutions, the Council had, for the second time in as many weeks, to consider mandates already in existence. Nevertheless, the Bosnian delegation would welcome the draft resolution, as it sent a message that strategic resources such as fuel could not be used for the pursuit of war, violations of international law, nor for the benefit of the Bosnian Serbs. The draft resolution would also help to reinforce the importance of the delivery of humanitarian aid. Failure to adopt the draft resolution, however, would signify an evasion of responsibility.²⁸³

The representative of Croatia stated that his delegation believed that the draft resolution would send the message that the international community was willing to take steps to minimize the suffering of the civilian population in the region. Contending that the Security Council had not been addressing adequately the violation of the border between Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina, the speaker stated that the result was the promotion of a de facto unification of the local Croatian Serb and Bosnian Serb parties, into a single military and territorial entity. The draft resolution would dispel any possibility of such unification by reinforcing principles already established in resolution 820 (1993). Moreover, the draft would send a message that strategic resources, such as fuel, directed to the local Croatian Serb party, could not be used for the benefit of the Bosnian Serbs, nor by the local Croatian Serb party to violate the territorial integrity of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and that arrangements to supply the Croatian Serb party must cease unless there had been approval by the Government of Croatia. Noting that some delegations had expressed the view in prior consultations that the draft resolution would negatively affect the economic reintegration agreement between the Government of Croatia and the local Croatian Serb party, the speaker argued that, on the contrary, the draft resolution would promote the implementation of the agreement. The implementation of the agreement would only be possible when the borders were sealed and the local Croatian Serb party had decided to cooperate with the Government of Croatia to satisfy its economic and humanitarian needs. Thus, the adoption of the draft resolution would give political support to the implementation of the agreement.²⁸⁴

Speaking before the vote, the representative of Nigeria noted that the primary objective of the draft resolution was to reaffirm and clarify the provisions of previous resolutions on the movement of non-humanitarian goods across the international borders in the areas of conflict in the former Yugoslavia. The draft would not create new measures. Rather, it would strengthen the implementation of the relevant resolutions already adopted. Nigeria also believed that the draft would create neither new incentives nor disincentives. It was Nigeria's view that the draft would not negatively affect the economic agreement, but would facilitate efforts on the ground, such as the attempts of the Contact Group to gain the acceptance of the peace plan by the Bosnian Serbs.²⁸⁵

The representative of China, while noting that his delegation understood the concern of the sponsors of the draft resolution over the worsening situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, stated that it could not agree to invoking Chapter VII of the Charter for sanctions in the region of the former Yugoslavia. China believed that such a step would only further aggravate the confrontation and would not be conducive to a final, comprehensive political solution to the problems in the region of the former Yugoslavia. Based on its stated position on resolution 820 (1993), China would have difficulties with regard to the portion of the draft resolution that sought to reaffirm the relevant elements of resolution 820 (1993). The Chinese delegation would therefore abstain in the voting on the draft resolution.²⁸⁶

The representative of the Russian Federation expressed regret that the draft resolution had been brought to the vote. It was his delegation's view that tightening restrictions against the Krajina and Bosnian Serbs would in fact lead to a "tightening of screws" in the implementation of resolution 820 (1993), whose basic purpose had been to strengthen the sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. The speaker argued that there could hardly have been a more untimely moment for the submission of the draft resolution, given that the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia had begun to cooperate with international efforts, such as those of the Contact Group, had unconditionally supported the territorial settlement plan, had closed its border to all prohibited deliveries of goods to the Bosnian Serbs, and was cooperating with the mission of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia. The Russian Federation was therefore of the opinion that the positive approach of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia deserved further encouragement, inter alia by suspending the applicability of resolution 820 (1993). Accordingly, it had no choice but to vote against the draft resolution.²⁸⁷ ²⁸⁷ Ibid., pp. 10-11.

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and received 13 votes in favour to 1 against (Russian Federation), with 1 abstention (China), and was not adopted, owing to the negative vote of a permanent member of the Council.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United States stated that the draft resolution would have reaffirmed decisions already taken by the Council. It would have addressed a serious discrepancy between the requirements of resolution 943 (1994) and actual practice, and more specifically the trans-shipment of prohibited goods from the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia through Bosnia to the United Nations Protected Areas in Croatia. The draft's failure to pass was regrettable, but that did not change the fact that a strict regime of economic measures against the Bosnian Serbs was already embodied in binding Council resolutions. The United States would continue its efforts to ensure the firm application of those measures, in order to persuade the Bosnian Serbs that acceptance of the Contact Group plan was in their best interests and rejection was not.²⁸⁸

Decision of 11 December 1994 (3478th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3478th meeting, on 11 December 1994, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Rwanda) then drew the attention of the members of the Council to a letter dated 12 December 1994 from the representative of Bangladesh addressed to the President of the Security Council²⁸⁹ and stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:²⁹⁰

The Security Council strongly condemns the deliberate attack on Bangladeshi United Nations peacekeepers on 12 December 1994 in Velika Kladusa, in the region of Bihac in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The attacked personnel of the United Nations Protection Force were travelling in an armoured personnel carrier, unmistakably carrying clear United Nations markings. It was hit by a wire guided anti tank missile resulting in one death and injuries to four other Bangladeshi personnel.

The Council expresses profound regret at the casualties suffered by the United Nations peacekeepers as a result of this unprovoked and dastardly attack. It wishes to convey its deep condolences to the Government of Bangladesh as well as to the families of the affected soldiers.

The Council endorses the protest that the Force has made to the Abdic forces and to the local Serb authorities in Knin, and its warning to the authorities in Pale.

The Council is outraged at this incident of direct attack on the Force personnel and demands that such attacks do not recur. It warns the perpetrators of the attack that their heinous act of violence carries corresponding individual responsibility.

Decision of 6 January 1995 (3486th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3486th meeting, on 6 January 1995, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Argentina) drew the attention of the members of the Council to several documents²⁹¹ and stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:²⁹²

The Security Council welcomes the agreements between the Bosnian parties on a ceasefire and on a complete cessation of hostilities in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina concluded on 23 and 31 December 1994. It commends the efforts of all who worked to achieve them.

The Council stresses the importance it attaches to immediate and full compliance with the agreements. It attaches the highest priority at this juncture to the timely completion of the various steps envisaged in the agreement on a complete cessation of hostilities. It looks to the parties and others concerned to cooperate fully with the United Nations Protection Force in their implementation. The Council calls upon all forces to cease fighting around Bihac. It supports efforts in train to strengthen the Force, and encourages Member States to make available the personnel and equipment needed for the Force to supervise and monitor the agreements.

The Council will continue its consideration of all aspects of the crisis in Bosnia and Herzegovina and of the report of the Secretary-General of 1 December 1994.

The Council deems it imperative to intensify efforts under the auspices of the Contact Group to achieve an overall settlement on the basis of the acceptance of the Contact Group peace plan as a starting point. It will give its full support to such efforts.

Decision of 12 January 1995 (3487th meeting):
resolution 970 (1995)

By a letter dated 4 January 1995 addressed to the President of the Security Council,²⁹³ the Secretary-General transmitted the report of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, concerning the operations of the Conference's mission to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. The report contained the certification referred to in paragraph 3 of resolution 943 (1994).²⁹⁴

At its 3487th meeting, on 12 January 1995, the Council included that letter in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Egypt, Malaysia, Pakistan and Turkey, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also invited Ambassador Dragomir Djokic, at his request, to address the Council in the course of the subsequent discussion. The President (Argentina) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution submitted by the Czech Republic, France, Germany, Italy and the United Kingdom²⁹⁵ as well as to a letter dated 11 January 1995 from the representative of Morocco addressed to the President of the Security Council,²⁹⁶ transmitting a note by the OIC Contact Group concerning the report of the Co-Chairmen.

The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, noting that the draft resolution before the Council would extend, for a further 100 days, the suspension of certain aspects of the sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia contained in resolution 943 (1994), pointed out that none of the objectives sought by that resolution had been realized. Moreover, there had been counter-productive consequences due to the fact that mechanisms established to monitor the border and implement resolution 943 (1994) had been flawed, enabling the transport of fuel that allowed the Croatian and Bosnian Serbs to carry out aggression against the Bihac region and to pose a threat to UNPROFOR personnel. Nevertheless, Bosnia and Herzegovina welcomed the elements of the draft resolution that were designed to strengthen the effectiveness of the border monitoring mission. It also welcomed the clarification requiring that the trans-shipment of goods or personnel through or to Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia be approved by the respective Government. Bosnia and Herzegovina's endorsement of the draft was, however, tempered by the following. First, the monitoring border mission should be provided with adequate resources and a command structure that would genuinely seal and monitor the border. Second, the Council should not reward Belgrade with a further suspension of aspects of the sanctions regime unless it had recognized the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the other former Yugoslav Republics. Third, the cross-border aggression being carried out by Croatian Serbs must stop.²⁹⁷

The representative of Croatia stated that the draft resolution before the Council contained elements that would be of great benefit to the peace process in Croatia and in the region in general. He noted that paragraph 3 of the draft extended the Yugoslav-Bosnian border blockade so that it would affect Croatia, meaning that Belgrade would not be able to send non-humanitarian assistance to the occupied territories of Croatia via the Bosnia and Herzegovina border, without consequences. Furthermore, should the Belgrade authorities choose to violate paragraph 12 of resolution 820 (1993), in that way, the Council would be left with no alternative but to reinstate the sanctions suspended by resolution 943 (1994). The speaker, ²⁹³ S/1995/6.

²⁹⁴ In paragraph 3 of resolution 943 (1994), the Council requested that every 30 days the Secretary-General submit to the Council a report on whether the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee had certified that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia was effectively implementing its decision to close the border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all goods except for humanitarian needs.

however, pointed out that the extension of the border blockade was incomplete, because the border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Sector East in the United Nations Protected Areas in Croatia could still be used by Belgrade without consequences. He contended that a complete blockade of the border between Serbia and Montenegro and Croatia would further the peace process in Croatia. Noting that a political solution for Bosnia and Herzegovina did not appear likely in the near future, he argued that by addressing the situation in Croatia first, the international community could help Bosnia and Herzegovina, in the short term, by reallocating the necessary additional UNPROFOR resources into that country, and, in the long term, by creating conditions of balance favourable to continuing with the Contact Group Plan. The draft resolution was a small but important step in that direction.²⁹⁸

The representative of Turkey said that his delegation had serious reservations about the draft resolution. It believed that the monitoring mechanism established under resolution 943 (1994) was not effective. Despite the certification provided by the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia mission monitoring the border, independent international sources acknowledged that the border continued to be violated, with the transport of strategic material and personnel. It was therefore extremely important that the monitoring mechanisms be strengthened and the number of monitors increased. Noting that the mission had approved fuel shipments to the Croatian Serbs, the speaker contended that such a measure violated the territorial integrity and sovereignty of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, as well as resolution 820 (1993). He further argued that the fuel shipments had enabled the Croatian Serbs to undertake aggression against the safe area of Bihac. Turkey hoped that the adoption of the draft resolution would contribute to the termination of such shipments and it looked forward to the strengthening of mechanisms for deterring and reporting violations.²⁹⁹

The representative of Egypt was of the view that the Council should look into taking immediate, firm and effective measures to implement earlier resolutions on Bosnia and Herzegovina before adopting new ones on the subject. He recalled that for years the Council had tried different means of exerting pressure on the “aggressor responsible for the outbreak and continuation of the military confrontation in Bosnia and Herzegovina”. But the Serbian party remained intransigent. It was therefore necessary for the international community to continue to exert pressure, including through the application of sanctions, until the Bosnian Serb party engaged with the peace plan. Egypt called upon the Council to adopt a draft resolution, under which international military observer forces would be deployed along the borders between Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, in order to ensure effective monitoring and the cutting of the supply line between Serbia and Montenegro and the Bosnian Serbs.³⁰⁰

The representative of Pakistan expressed the belief that it was essential that the resolutions of the Security Council be effectively enforced, in particular those authorizing the use of force and air strikes. The lack of resolve to implement those resolutions had emboldened the Serbs in their “intransigence” and had enabled them to continue to assault the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Pakistan reiterated the decision of the Seventh Islamic Summit Conference, held in Casablanca from 11 to 15 December 1994, which had expressed opposition to the lifting or easing of sanctions against Serbia and Montenegro until it had satisfied the following conditions: first, the recognition of Bosnia and Herzegovina within its internationally recognized borders; second, the acceptance of United Nations forces on the border to undertake effective monitoring; and third, the implementation of the Contact Group peace plan, including the full withdrawal from all occupied territories of Bosnia and Herzegovina.³⁰¹

Mr. Djokic contended that his Government had fulfilled all the obligations and met all the conditions set by the relevant Security Council resolutions. Therefore the decision by the Council to extend the partial suspension of sanctions for another 100 days and to put forward new conditionalities and restrictions was very disappointing. References in the draft resolution to the export of products from the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to the Krajina Serbs had nothing to do with the primary objective of the closure of the border, which was to influence the Bosnian Serbs to accept the Contact Group's plan. Rather, it represented an attempt to impose new conditions on the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. The draft resolution was not a mere extension of the partial suspension of the sanctions but rather called for the cessation of practically all economic relations between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the Krajina Serbs. Moreover, it sought to exact an indirect recognition of Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina, which was unacceptable before a political solution had been accepted by all parties to the conflict. The speaker further argued that, during the preceding 100 days, the limited suspension of sanctions had not been entirely fulfilled. Despite a call by resolution 943 (1994) to the sanctions Committee to adopt streamlined procedures for expediting its consideration of applications for exemptions for legitimate humanitarian assistance, the Committee had in fact resorted to stricter implementation of the sanctions.³⁰²

Speaking before the vote, the representative of Germany stated that, in order to extend the provisions of resolution 943 (1994), the Council must decide whether the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia had closed the border effectively and whether it had sustained its course with regard to accepting the Contact Group plan and isolating the Bosnian Serbs. The answer to both of those questions was "a sober yes". Since the adoption of resolution 943 (1994), however, the provision of fuel originating from the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia had facilitated the military activities of the Krajina Serb forces, who continued to be active in cross-border attacks on the Bihac area. That situation was unacceptable and Germany demanded that all Krajina Serb forces withdraw from Bosnian territory. Germany had supported the inclusion in the draft of new provisions to cut off the shipment of fuel and other non-humanitarian supplies via Bosnia to the United Nations Protected Areas. It therefore welcomed the fact that the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia mission would now be reporting on the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia's compliance with that requirement. The speaker further stated that the message of the draft resolution was clear: the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia must withhold all support for the Bosnian Serb military and block all border crossings that the mission could not monitor. Germany also expected Belgrade to use its influence with the various Serb parties to bring them closer to a negotiated solution. In addition, mutual recognition between all the States of the former Yugoslavia was an urgent political necessity.³⁰³

The representative of the Czech Republic was of the view that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia was cooperating with the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia mission. His delegation had seen no evidence that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia would have condoned, let alone participated in, the violations of the border regime that the mission had detected. The situation on the border was far more favourable now than it had been when resolution 943 (1994) was adopted. That was why his delegation saw no reason to change the regime that resolution had introduced. His delegation would have agreed to an extension even longer than 100 days, but had no problem with the proposal at hand. As for the future of sanctions themselves, that was not the time even to consider their further abatement.³⁰⁴

The representative of China stated that the international community should encourage the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to make further efforts to bring peace to Bosnia and Herzegovina. He reiterated that China was not in favour of settling the dispute through sanctions or mandatory measures, for such steps would aggravate the situation, bringing suffering to the people and causing serious damage to the economy of third countries. Based on that position, China supported the extension of the provisions of resolution 943 (1994) and would vote in favour of the draft. The speaker pointed out, however, that China's position had not changed in relation to certain elements of the draft resolution that were related to resolutions 757 (1992) and 820 (1993).³⁰⁵

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that his country was convinced that there were more than adequate grounds for agreeing on new measures to encourage Belgrade and that the Council could, as a minimum, decide on the indefinite extension of the measures provided for in resolution 943 (1994) and consider a further easing of sanctions. The Council had received four reports from the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia mission corroborating the effective closure of the border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and ³⁰³ Ibid., pp. 14-15.

³⁰⁵ Ibid., pp. 19-20.

Bosnia and Herzegovina. Furthermore, Belgrade's constructive attitude was yielding practical results, including the economic agreements between the Croatian Government and the local Serbian authorities in the United Nations Protected Areas, an agreement on the complete cessation of hostilities in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and changes in the Bosnian Serb leadership. Russia, therefore, regretted that the Council had not been able to agree on a draft that would have provided for further measures of encouragement, and it felt that certain aspects of the draft before the Council were "completely unwarranted", running counter to the recommendations of the Co-Chairmen of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia. In unreservedly favouring the extension of the partial extension of sanctions, Russia could not share responsibility for the potential negative consequences of the adoption of the draft resolution, and thus could not support it. It hoped that the principle that a deserving party should be encouraged would be implemented more consistently in the future.³⁰⁶

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and was adopted by 14 votes to none, with 1 abstention (Russian Federation), as resolution 970 (1995), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling all its earlier relevant resolutions, in particular resolution 943 (1994) of 23 September 1994,

Welcoming the measures taken by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), in particular those detailed in the report transmitted by the letter dated 4 January 1995 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council, to maintain the effective closure of the international border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all goods except foodstuffs, medical supplies and clothing for essential humanitarian needs, and noting that those measures were a necessary condition for the adoption of the present resolution,

Stressing the importance of the maintenance by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) of the effective closure of that border, and of further efforts by them to enhance the effectiveness of that closure, including by the prosecution of persons suspected of violating measures to that end and by sealing border crossing points as requested by the Mission of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia,

Expressing its appreciation for the work of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia and of the Mission of the International Conference to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), and stressing the importance it attaches to the availability of all resources necessary for the work of the Mission,

Noting that paragraph 9 of resolution 757 (1992) of 30 May 1992 remains in force,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the restrictions and other measures referred to in paragraph 1 of resolution 943 (1994) shall be suspended for a further period of one hundred days from the adoption of the present resolution;

2. Calls upon all States and others concerned to respect the sovereignty, territorial integrity and international borders of all States in the region;

3. Reaffirms that the requirements in paragraph 12 of resolution 820 (1993) that import to, export from and trans-shipment through the United Nations Protected Areas in the Republic of Croatia and those areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces, with the exception of essential humanitarian supplies including medical supplies and foodstuffs distributed by international humanitarian agencies, shall be permitted only with proper authorization from the Government of the Republic of Croatia or the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina respectively, apply to all shipments across the international border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

4. Requests the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 724 (1991) urgently to expedite its elaboration of appropriate streamlined procedures as referred to in paragraph 2 of resolution 943 (1993), and to give priority to its consideration of applications concerning legitimate humanitarian assistance, in particular applications from the International Committee of the Red Cross and from the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other organizations in the United Nations system;

5. Requests that every thirty days the Secretary-General submit to the Security Council for its review a report as to whether the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia have certified that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) are effectively implementing their decision to close the international border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all goods except foodstuffs, medical supplies and clothing for essential humanitarian needs and are complying with the requirements of paragraph 3 above in respect of all shipments across the international border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and further requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council immediately if he has evidence, including from the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee, that those authorities are not effectively implementing their decision to close that border;

6. Decides that, if at any time the Secretary-General reports that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) are not effectively implementing their decision to close that border, the suspension of the measures referred to in paragraph 1 above shall terminate on the fifth working day following the report of the Secretary-General, unless the Security Council decides to the contrary;

7. Decides to keep the situation closely under review and to consider further steps with regard to measures applicable to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) in the light of further progress in the situation;

8. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United Kingdom stated that the economic sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the Bosnian Serbs had undoubtedly been a major factor in recent progress. The impact of the sanctions upon the economy of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia had been largely responsible for Belgrade's decision to cease assisting the Bosnian Serbs, and to support the Contact Group plan. The Federal Republic of Yugoslavia's cooperation with the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia mission must continue if the sanctions were to continue to be suspended. The resolution just adopted represented a balanced response to the cooperation provided by Belgrade over the preceding hundred days. The resolution allowed for the continued suspension of aspects of the sanctions for a further 100 days. It also sought to remove any ambiguity about the application of resolution 820 (1993) concerning trans-shipments across the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia-Bosnian border, and to give clear priority to applications for humanitarian assistance. The speaker further noted that sanctions were being imposed to achieve changes in policy, rather than to punish. Sanctions reinforced the Contact Group's strategy of increasing the pressure on the Bosnian Serbs to return to the negotiating table. It was essential that Belgrade continued to support the Contact Group approach, maintained the embargo on the Bosnian Serbs and kept up the pressure on the Krajina Serbs to cease violating the Croatian-Bosnian border, and to implement the economic agreement in Croatia. Further sanctions relief might be possible, but only if there was substantial progress towards the objective of achieving a lasting political settlement in the former Yugoslavia.³⁰⁷

The representative of Indonesia reiterated his country's position that the suspension of certain aspects of the sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, contained in resolution 943 (1994), had been premature. Equally important, resolutions adopted by the Council had explicitly stipulated the steps that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia should take if sanctions were to be eased. These clearly went beyond the mere promise to close the border with Bosnia and Herzegovina. Indonesia therefore had serious reservations regarding the provision for an extension of the suspension of sanctions as contained in the resolution just adopted. Despite its misgivings, however, Indonesia was cognizant of the positive elements contained in the resolution, such as the call upon all States to respect the sovereignty, territorial integrity and international borders of all States in the region and the provision reaffirming the requirement contained in paragraph 12 of resolution 820 (1993) that imports to, exports from and trans-shipment through the United Nations Protected Areas in Croatia and those areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of the Bosnian Serbs should be permitted only with the authorization of the Government of Croatia or Bosnia and Herzegovina. Against that background, Indonesia had voted in favour of the resolution just adopted. Its position was based on the understanding that Belgrade would scrupulously uphold its commitments and that, should the Secretary-General report a wilful violation, then the suspension of the sanctions would be terminated forthwith.³⁰⁸

The representative of the United States observed that the sanctions regime had been vital to the effort to persuade the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the Bosnian Serbs that a peaceful resolution of the conflict was in their best interests. The resolution just adopted was an indication that the effort to persuade Belgrade to pressure the Bosnian Serbs had begun to show results. There should be no doubt that the willingness of the United States Government to support the resolution had been a direct result of the conclusion that Belgrade had moved to implement its decision to close the border. Nevertheless, further efforts must be made to ensure that the border was effectively closed.

³⁰⁸ Ibid., pp. 23-25.

The United States was therefore gratified that the Council had reaffirmed its prohibition of trans-shipments through Bosnian territory controlled by the Bosnian Serbs. Such trans-shipments without the permission of the relevant Governments had been, and continued to be, violations of paragraph 12 of resolution 820 (1993). The speaker further stated that the effectiveness of the border closure would require continued vigilance on the part of the international community, the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia mission and Federal Republic of Yugoslavia officials. The United States expected that a number of measures would be taken to ensure effective closure.³⁰⁹

Decision of 17 February 1995 (3501st meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3501st meeting, on 17 February 1995, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Botswana) then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:³¹⁰

The Security Council is deeply concerned at the continued fighting around Bihac and deplores the serious humanitarian situation in the Bihac area. It reaffirms its support for the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the United Nations Protection Force.

The Council recalls the statement of the President of the Security Council of 6 January 1995. It reiterates the importance it attaches to full compliance with the agreements between the Bosnian parties on a ceasefire and on a complete cessation of hostilities in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina concluded on 23 and 31 December 1994. All involved must now make a concerted effort to consolidate what has been achieved so far to avoid the risk of a renewed outbreak of hostilities.

The Council demands that all forces in the Bihac area cease fighting immediately and cooperate fully with the United Nations Protection Force in achieving an effective ceasefire. The Council reiterates its condemnation of the continued violations of the international border between the Republic of Croatia and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Council condemns the recent obstruction of humanitarian convoys destined for the Bihac area by the Croatian Serb and Abdic forces. It welcomes the fact that convoys are now getting through and calls upon all parties and others concerned henceforth to facilitate the unhindered flow of humanitarian assistance and complete freedom of movement for the United Nations Protection Force.

Decision of 14 April 1995 (3520th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3520th meeting, on 14 April 1995, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Czech Republic) stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:³¹¹

The Security Council is gravely concerned at the recent attacks on the United Nations Protection Force personnel in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and, in this regard, has learnt with particular indignation that once again a soldier of the Force, this time a soldier of the French contingent, was deliberately targeted and shot to death by an unidentified sniper in Sarajevo today. The Council notes with similar concern that several other soldiers of the United Nations have been killed recently in similar circumstances.

The Council condemns in the strongest terms such acts directed at peacekeepers who are serving the cause of peace in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Deliberate targeting of the United Nations Protection Force personnel reflects the overall deterioration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Council wishes to state once again that this is totally unacceptable. It reiterates that the cooperation of all parties and others concerned is indispensable for the missions of the Force to be carried out and demands that they respect fully the status of United Nations personnel.

The Council invites the Secretary-General to investigate the circumstances of these acts and to report to the Council, taking into consideration the views of troop-contributing countries, on any measures which might be necessary to prevent further similar attacks, which should not remain unpunished.

Decision of 19 April 1995 (3521st meeting):
resolution 987 (1995)

At its 3521st meeting, on 19 April 1995, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Czech Republic) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution submitted by France.³¹²

The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina stated that the deaths of two UNPROFOR soldiers in Sarajevo testified to the continuing terrorization of that city; and to the fact that resolutions on safe areas continued to be violated. He argued that the soldiers' deaths would not be in vain if they contributed to a change in the situation. The draft resolution before the Council was a first step in that direction. His delegation supported the establishment of new measures to prevent further attacks against UNPROFOR troops and improve their security. It hoped that the Council would also review the UNPROFOR mandate.³¹³

The draft resolution was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 987 (1995), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions on the conflicts in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, and reaffirming in this context its resolution 982 (1995) of 31 March 1995, in particular paragraphs 6 and 7 thereof,

Expressing its grave concern at the continued fighting in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina despite the agreements on a ceasefire and on a complete cessation of hostilities concluded on 23 and 31 December 1994, and deploring the violations of these agreements and of the ban imposed by its resolutions 781 (1992) of 9 October 1992 and 816 (1993) of 31 March 1993 by whomsoever committed,

Stressing the unacceptability of all attempts to resolve the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina by military means,

Noting once again the need for resumed negotiations aimed at an overall peaceful settlement of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina on the basis of the acceptance of the Contact Group peace plan as a starting-point,

Gravely preoccupied at the recent attacks on the United Nations Protection Force personnel in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and at the fatalities resulting therefrom, condemning in the strongest terms such unacceptable acts directed at members of peacekeeping forces, and determined to obtain a strict respect of the status of United Nations personnel in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Reaffirming its determination to ensure the security of the United Nations Protection Force and freedom of movement for all its missions, and, to these ends, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Emphasizes once again the responsibility of the parties and others concerned in the Republic of Bosnia and

Herzegovina for the security and safety of the United Nations Protection Force, and in this context demands again that all parties and others concerned refrain from any act of intimidation or violence against the Force and its personnel;

2. Recalls its invitation to the Secretary-General, in this context, to submit proposals on any measures which could be taken to prevent attacks against the United Nations Protection Force and its personnel and allow it to perform effectively its mission, and invites him to submit such proposals on an urgent basis;

3. Calls upon the Bosnian parties to agree to an extension of the agreements on a ceasefire and on a complete cessation of hostilities concluded on 23 and 31 December 1994 beyond 30 April 1995, and looks to all parties and all others concerned to cooperate fully with the United Nations Protection Force in their implementation;

4. Urges all parties and others concerned to resume forthwith negotiations towards an overall peaceful settlement on the basis of the acceptance of the Contact Group peace plan as a starting-point;

5. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of France stated that it had been a matter of urgency for the Council to react to the murders of UNPROFOR personnel by condemning those unacceptable acts and by giving a sign of its determination that the status of United Nations personnel be respected. It had also been essential to remind the Bosnian parties of the need to extend the ceasefire and cessation-of-hostilities agreements beyond 30 April and to recommence immediately negotiations towards an overall settlement, by accepting the Contact Group peace plan as a starting point.³¹⁴

Decision of 21 April 1995 (3522nd meeting):
resolution 988 (1995)

By a letter dated 13 April 1995 addressed to the President of the Security Council,³¹⁵ the Secretary-General transmitted a report of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, concerning the operations of the Conference's mission. The report contained the certification referred to in resolution 970 (1995).

At its 3522nd meeting, on 21 April 1995, the Council resumed its consideration of the item and included the above-mentioned letter in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council

invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also invited Ambassador Dragomir Djokic, at his request, to address it in the course of the subsequent discussion. The President (Czech Republic) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution submitted by the Czech Republic, France, Germany, Italy, the United Kingdom and the United States,³¹⁶ as well as to several other documents.³¹⁷

Mr. Djokic noted with regret that, despite consistently positive reports by the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia mission that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia was adhering to its commitment to close its border with the Bosnian Serbs, and despite the fact that it had fulfilled the provisions of relevant resolutions by which the sanctions had been introduced, the Council was not able to lift the sanctions altogether. He argued that, by opting to maintain the greatest part of the most comprehensive sanctions regime adopted against any State Member of the United Nations, the Council was continuing to pursue a policy of punishing the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the Serbian and Montenegrin people for matters for which they bore no responsibility. The speaker further argued that the new conditions being set by some members of the Contact Group, including in particular the calls for the recognition by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia as a prerequisite for the further suspension of sanctions, lacked a basis in Security Council resolutions and represented a counterproductive form of pressure. Recalling that the decision by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to cut political and economic links with the Bosnian Serbs had been unilateral, the speaker noted that that step had been taken in order to pressure the Bosnian Serbs to accept the Contact Group plan. Yugoslavia had therefore accepted the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia mission in order to facilitate that unilateral decision. If further pressure were brought to bear on the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, however, then Belgrade might begin to question the activities of the mission.³¹⁸

The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina expressed appreciation for the Council's efforts to improve the effectiveness of the border-sealing regime. While he noted that the new mechanism and reporting system contained in the draft resolution before the Council should help advance towards the desired results, he also stressed that Member States must provide all the necessary resources for the new system to be effective. That included the provision of independent evidence of violations and more experts and troops deployed along the border. In that context, Bosnia and Herzegovina welcomed the provision in paragraph 16 of the draft resolution, calling upon the mission to provide the relevant Government with its observations and findings. It also took note of the expiration date of the provision easing the sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, stating that it was long enough to test the efficacy of both the border closure and monitoring mechanism and of the Belgrade regime's authority. The speaker concluded by saying that the most critical variable in the search for peace was the acceptance and implementation of the peace plan by the Bosnian Serbs. Until that occurred, the international community should maintain its commitment to the United Nations mandate in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and elsewhere. Bosnia and Herzegovina would continue to use its capacity, including the right and means to defend its population, territorial integrity and sovereignty. In that connection, it reasserted its "unabridgable right" to defend itself.³¹⁹

Speaking before the vote, the representative of Argentina noted that whilst his delegation was in favour of continuing the suspension of the sanctions, it wished to place on record its interpretation of certain provisions of the draft resolution. His delegation interpreted the date mentioned in operative paragraph 1 not as curtailing the deadline set by resolution 970 (1995), but rather as establishing a new and more clear-cut policy. The reason was that it would not be particularly meaningful to interpret it as a setting of a shorter deadline for the suspension of sanctions, when it was acknowledged that there had been no substantive changes warranting that suspension. His delegation also understood the authorization for the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to operate commercial flights in operative paragraph 2 to mean that it should be able to obtain the necessary quantities of fuel, lubricants, equipment and spare parts to ensure that the flights were safe.³²⁰

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that his delegation would not be able to support the draft resolution, because it did not consider it to be consistent with the principle of positive and negative incentives previously agreed upon in the Contact Group and the Security Council, according to which those that supported the peace plan would be encouraged while pressure would be exerted on those that rejected it. Recalling that it was the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia's own decision to close its border with Bosnia and Herzegovina, the speaker stated that the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia had stuck strictly to its decision to close its border with Bosnia and Herzegovina to all except humanitarian goods, as corroborated by numerous reports of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia. In addition, its cooperation with the Conference's mission remained very good. Under these circumstances, the Council would have been justified in adopting further positive stimuli, such as making the partial suspension of sanctions indefinite. Unfortunately, with each extension of the partial suspension, the Council had been inclined to make fresh demands on the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. An example of that approach was that the draft resolution attempted to link the voluntary decision by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to close its border with Bosnia and Herzegovina to the situation on its border with Croatia, thus constituting a serious step towards changing the mandate of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia mission without consulting Belgrade. It was beyond the understanding of the Russian Federation why it had been necessary to cut back the draft resolution's duration to 75 days when a mechanism, which was still operational, was agreed upon in September last year that provided for the immediate reimposition of full sanctions should the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia fail to implement its decision to close the border. The Russian Federation also considered a number of provisions of the draft resolution to be "puzzling". The speaker contended that the Council was engaging in ³²⁰ Ibid., pp. 7-8.

"unwarranted micromanagement" whereas in other instances it closed its eyes to flagrant violations of its own decisions, as had long happened with respect to the arms embargo on all successor States of the former Yugoslavia.³²¹

The representative of China reiterated that his delegation was against the introduction of sanctions or mandatory measures in relation to the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, contending that events had proved that sanctions or pressure would further complicate the issue. Stating that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia was an important factor for restoring peace and stability in the region, and that his Government had supported the mission in the discharge of its duties, and had taken measures to effectively close its border with Bosnia and Herzegovina, the speaker contended that the international community should continue to encourage rather than discourage the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia for fulfilling its commitment to close the border. Regrettably, although the draft resolution further extended the provisions for easing the sanctions, it had shortened the period of extension and attached more restrictive conditions to the extension, which was a step backward from resolutions 943 (1994) and 970 (1995). China would therefore abstain from the vote on the draft resolution.³²²

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted by 13 votes to none, with 2 abstentions (China, Russian Federation) as resolution 988 (1995), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling all its earlier relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 943 (1994) of 23 September 1994 and resolution 970 (1995) of 12 January 1995,

Noting the measures taken by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), as described in the reports transmitted by the letters dated 31 March 1995 and 13 April 1995 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council, to maintain the closure of the international border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all goods except foodstuffs, medical supplies and clothing for essential humanitarian needs, and noting that those measures were a necessary condition for the adoption of the present resolution,

Concerned, however, about reports suggesting that helicopter flights may have crossed the border between the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), and noting that an investigation of those reports is being undertaken by the Mission of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia,

Noting with satisfaction that the cooperation of the Mission of the International Conference with the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) continues to be good, and stressing the importance of effective closure by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) of the international border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and of further efforts by them to enhance the effectiveness of that closure, including by the prosecution of persons suspected of violating measures to that end and by sealing border crossing points as requested by the Mission,

Expressing its appreciation for the work of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia and of the Mission of the International Conference to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro),

Noting that paragraph 9 of resolution 757 (1992) of 30 May 1992 remains in force,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the restrictions and other measures referred to in paragraph 1 of resolution 943 (1994) shall be suspended until 5 July 1995;

2. Confirms that commodities and products, including fuel beyond immediate needs for a flight or ferry voyage, taking into account internationally recognized safety requirements, shall not be carried on flights and ferry services permitted in accordance with paragraph 1 above, except in accordance with the provisions of relevant resolutions and in conformity with the procedures of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 724 (1991) of 15 December 1991, and that, if a need is established for the supply of additional fuel for the operation of flights permitted in accordance with paragraph 1 above, the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724 (1991) shall consider such applications on a case-by-case basis;

3. Reminds States of the importance of strict enforcement of measures imposed under Chapter VII of the Charter, and calls upon all States which allow flights or ferry services permitted in accordance with paragraph 1 above from their territories or using their flag vessels or aircraft to report to the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724 (1991) on the controls adopted by them to implement such measures in earlier relevant resolutions;

4. Calls upon all States and others concerned to respect the sovereignty, territorial integrity and international borders of all States in the region;

5. Underlines the importance it attaches to the work of the Mission of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, expresses its concern that a shortage of resources hampers the effectiveness of that work, and requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council within thirty days of the adoption of the present resolution on measures to increase the effectiveness of the work of the Mission, including on the question of helicopter flights;

6. Requests Member States to make available the necessary resources to strengthen the capacity of the Mission of the International Conference to carry out its tasks, and encourages the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to give additional support for the operation of the Mission;

7. Calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to cooperate fully with the Mission of the International Conference, in particular in investigating alleged breaches of the closure of the border, whether by land or by air, between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and ensuring the continued closure of that border;

8. Stresses the importance it attaches to a thorough investigation of reports that helicopter flights may have crossed the border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to comply with their commitment to cooperate fully in that investigation, and requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council on the outcome of the investigation;

9. Reaffirms its decision that import to, export from and trans-shipment through the United Nations Protected Areas in the Republic of Croatia and those areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces, with the exception of essential humanitarian supplies including medical supplies and foodstuffs distributed by international humanitarian agencies, shall be permitted only with proper authorization from the Government of the Republic of Croatia or the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

10. Encourages the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to reinstate the severance of international telecommunication links between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces which they instituted in August 1994;

11. Requests the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724 (1991) to conclude urgently its elaboration of appropriate streamlined procedures, and invites the Chairman of that Committee to report to the Security Council as soon as possible on the matter;

12. Also requests the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724 (1991) to continue to give priority to its consideration of applications concerning legitimate humanitarian assistance, in particular applications from the International Committee of the Red Cross and from the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other organizations in the United Nations system;

13. Requests that, every thirty days and no fewer than ten days before the expiration of the period referred to in paragraph 1 above, the Secretary-General submit to the Security Council for its review a report as to whether the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, on the basis of information made available to them from the Mission of the International Conference and all other available sources deemed relevant by the Mission, have certified that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) are implementing their decision to close the international border, on land and in the air, between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all goods, except foodstuffs, medical supplies and clothing for essential humanitarian needs and are complying with the requirements of paragraph 3 of resolution 970 (1995) in respect of all shipments across the international border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and requests that the Secretary-General inform the Council in his report if the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee have received substantiated evidence, from sources deemed relevant by the Mission, of substantial trans-shipments of goods, except foodstuffs, medical supplies and clothing for essential humanitarian needs, from the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) through the Republic of Croatia to the areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces in violation of earlier relevant resolutions;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council immediately if he has evidence, including from the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference, that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) are not implementing their decision to close the border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

15. Decides that if at any time the Secretary-General reports that, from sources deemed relevant by the Mission of the International Conference, the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) are not implementing their decision to close the border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina or that they are permitting substantial diversion of goods, except foodstuffs, medical supplies and clothing for essential humanitarian needs, from the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) through the Republic of Croatia to the areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces in violation of earlier relevant resolutions, the suspension of the measures referred to in paragraph 1 above shall terminate on the fifth working day following the report of the Secretary-General, unless the Security Council decides to the contrary;

16. Encourages the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference to ensure that the Mission of the International Conference keeps the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Government of the Republic of Croatia and the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) fully informed about the findings of the Mission;

17. Decides to keep the situation closely under review and to consider further steps with regard to measures applicable to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) in the light of further progress in the situation;

18. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United States expressed her delegation's belief that Belgrade had not done enough to comply with its commitment to isolate the Bosnian Serbs. The United States could not, therefore, have supported a resolution that represented "business as usual". The resolution just adopted was designed to acknowledge progress, but also to close remaining loopholes. Belgrade must close the land and air border with Bosnia, and must not seek to circumvent the closure of the border by illegally shipping goods through Serb-controlled Croatia. The United States had been prepared to block the resolution just adopted if those steps to tighten the border closure had not been included. During the subsequent 75 days, the United States would be watching closely to see if Belgrade was improving its compliance with its commitment to close the border. The speaker urged the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia mission, the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee and the Secretary-General to implement fully paragraphs 13 and 15 of the resolution, stressing that it was up to them to make sure that the Council's decisions were more than words on pieces of paper. He noted that border closure was not an end in itself and that the objective remained obtaining the agreement of the Bosnian Serbs to the Contact Group plan. Thus it was necessary to maintain the pressure upon the Bosnian Serbs. The authorities in Belgrade also needed to understand that the suspension of additional sanctions would depend on their willingness to take further steps towards peace, most notably by recognizing Croatia and Bosnia and

Herzegovina within their internationally recognized borders.³²³

The representative of France noted that his country had been called upon to make a difficult choice, which it did on the basis of a number of considerations. Firstly, France was convinced that the mechanisms now in place to monitor the border closure were, overall, achieving their objectives. It reaffirmed that the best way of improving the Mission's operation was by increasing the resources allocated to it. At the same time, France recognized that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia had demonstrated that it was cooperating with the Mission. That was essentially why the French delegation wished to extend the suspension of sanctions. Secondly, a number of steps had proved useful in plugging the gaps resulting from the shortfalls, the most striking examples of which were the helicopter flights and the sidestepping of the frontier closure by passing goods for Bosnia and Herzegovina by way of Croatian territory, which was why a part of the resolution included a strengthening of the existing measures. That strengthening in France view, was not such as to cast doubt on the degree of cooperation being afforded by the Belgrade authorities, but did respond to the loopholes that had shown up by experience. The speaker further stressed that, even though the length of the extension of the suspension of sanctions had been shortened, it had only been shortened slightly. France would have agreed with the period provided in previous resolutions, but had accepted the time frame in the resolution in a spirit of compromise.³²⁴

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that the Bosnian Serb leadership must understand that there was no alternative to resuming peace negotiations, with the Contact Group plan as the starting point. In relation to the suspended sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, two important issues should be addressed without delay. The first was to ensure that the border closure was effective, and the second was to reinforce the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia mission so that it was able to carry out its tasks effectively. A limited suspension of the sanctions was the appropriate response to Belgrade's cooperation. Additional sanctions relief would only be justified, ³²³ Ibid., pp. 16-17.

³²⁴ Ibid., pp. 17-18.

however, if Belgrade were to make further commitments to advancing the peace process.³²⁵

The President, speaking in his capacity as the representative of the Czech Republic, stated that keeping up the pressure on the Bosnian Serbs and maintaining the regime of abated sanctions was the best way forward. In fact, the Czech Republic would have preferred that the suspension had been extended significantly beyond the 5 July deadline because it felt that Belgrade was substantively cooperating.³²⁶

Decisions of 3 May 1995 (3530th meeting):
statements by the President

At its 3530th meeting, on 3 May 1995, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (France) then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make two statements on behalf of the Council. The first statement³²⁷ reads:

The Security Council is deeply concerned about the failure of the Bosnian parties to agree to an extension of the agreements on a ceasefire and on a complete cessation of hostilities in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the recent deterioration of the situation there. It stresses once again the unacceptability of all attempts to resolve the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina by military means.

The Council calls upon the Bosnian parties to agree without further delay to a further ceasefire and a complete cessation of hostilities and, in this regard, fully supports the negotiating efforts of the United Nations Protection Force and other international efforts aimed at persuading the Bosnian parties to agree to such a ceasefire and complete cessation of hostilities. The Council urges the Bosnian parties to abstain from any steps which may lead to further escalation of the conflict and reaffirms the need for a political settlement on the basis of the acceptance of the Contact Group peace plan as a starting point.

The second statement³²⁸ reads:

The Security Council is deeply concerned about the obstruction of the normal operation of Sarajevo airport, including the suspension of the humanitarian relief airlift, ³²⁵ Ibid., pp. 20-21.

³²⁶ Ibid., p. 21.

³²⁷ S/PRST/1995/24.

caused by Bosnian Serb threats against United Nations aircraft and humanitarian relief flights, and by their attempts to impose restrictions on the use of Sarajevo airport by official missions as foreseen in the 5 June 1992 agreement (S/24075). Such obstruction is in breach of the agreement of 5 June 1992 and of the Council's previous resolutions, in particular resolution 761 (1992), and is unacceptable. Obstruction of the humanitarian relief also constitutes a violation of international humanitarian law.

In that context, the Council demands that all parties and others concerned comply fully with the agreement of 5 June 1992 and create immediately the necessary conditions for unimpeded delivery of humanitarian supplies to Sarajevo and other destinations in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. It calls upon the Bosnian Serb party to guarantee the safety of all flights to Sarajevo supervised by the United Nations Protection Force, including humanitarian relief flights.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to keep it informed of discussions with the Bosnian Serb party on the restoration of the normal functioning of the Sarajevo airport so that it might take further action as necessary.

Decision of 23 June 1995 (3548th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3548th meeting, on 23 June 1995, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Germany) then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:³²⁹

The Security Council reiterates its condemnation of interference with humanitarian supplies and the freedom of movement of the United Nations Protection Force by all parties within the territory of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. In this context, it is deeply concerned by the blockading by Bosnian Government forces of the United Nations Protection Force personnel in the Visoko, Gorazde, Gornj Vakuf and Kladanj areas, which included placing mines outside the United Nations Protection Force camp in Visoko on 20 June 1995. The Council is also deeply concerned at the deterioration in the situation in and around Sarajevo, the obstruction by the Bosnian Serb party of freedom of movement and utilities to the city and the continued obstruction of the normal operation of Sarajevo airport.

The Council stresses that all such actions are unacceptable and demands that all parties fully respect the safety and security of the United Nations Protection Force personnel and ensure their complete freedom of movement to enable the Force to carry out its mandate in accordance with the resolutions of the Council.

The Council calls upon the parties to enter into negotiations as provided for in its resolution 998 (1995) of 16 June 1995 and to agree without further delay to a ceasefire and a complete cessation of hostilities in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Council emphasizes that there can be no military solution to the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. It stresses the importance it attaches to the vigorous pursuit of a political settlement and reiterates its demand that the Bosnian Serb party accept the Contact Group peace plan as a starting point.

Decision of 5 July 1995 (3551st meeting):

By a letter dated 25 June 1995 addressed to the President of the Security Council,³³⁰ the Secretary-General transmitted a report of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, concerning the operations of the Conference's mission. The report contained the certification referred to in resolution 988 (1995).

At its 3551st meeting, on 5 July 1995, the Council included the above-mentioned letter in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also invited Ambassador Dragomir Djokic, at his request, to address the Council in the course of the subsequent discussion. The President (Honduras) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution submitted by the Czech Republic, France, Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States,³³¹ as well as to a letter dated 5 July 1995 from the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia addressed to the President of the Security Council.³³²

The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina said that if Belgrade wished to secure further sanctions relief or even to maintain the easing of sanctions, it must understand that the border closure should be real, that the recognition of its neighbours must be unambiguous, and that its support for the peace process needed to be sincere and not just tactical. Instead, Belgrade was continuing to provide strategic support for the so-called Krajina and Bosnian Serb armies. Bosnia and Herzegovina did not ask anything more than the legal recognition by Belgrade of its sovereignty and territorial integrity, which the United Nations had already recognized in the context of its membership in the United Nations.³³³

The representative of Croatia reiterated his Government's position that the only way out of the existing impasse was for the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to recognize Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, and for the international community to ensure the effective closure of the relevant borders between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia. He contended that the peace process had been derailed by the devaluation of the Security Council mandate for the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia mission. Clearly, the Conference had reinterpreted its mandate to mean partial closing of the border, and not effective closing, as was originally envisaged by the Council. The Government of Croatia had given ample evidence that the relevant border was not effectively closed. It therefore considered the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia certification of the border closure to be "null and void" and called on the Council to review the work of the mission, and to clarify whether its mandate was to certify a partial or an effective closure of the border. If the Council were to decide that the mandate was indeed for a partial closure, then Croatia would have to re-evaluate its position in the peace process and on the likelihood of the successful implementation of the mandate of the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia (UNCRO), calling for border control between Croatia and Serbia and Montenegro, and Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina.³³⁴

Mr. Djokic stated that his country was prepared to recognize the border of Bosnia and Herzegovina once the political problems affecting its nations were closer to being resolved. The Federal Republic of Yugoslavia also insisted that the sanctions be lifted before there was any such recognition. The speaker argued that the perpetuation of the sanctions and the setting of additional conditions for their lifting were absurd and that their maintenance was untenable now, especially as the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia was investing major efforts to contribute to the search for a just and peaceful settlement. Only negotiations could be conducive to such an outcome, not the use of force, the lifting of the arms embargo or the deployment of new troops. If the Council truly wished to open the road towards peace, it must have the courage to lift the sanctions altogether. The sanctions only fostered resistance and established limits within the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia on greater cooperation.³³⁵

Speaking before the vote, the representative of the Russian Federation said that his delegation would abstain in the vote on the draft resolution, for it believed that the draft did not encourage a constructive policy on the part of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. He argued that since the adoption of resolution 943 (1994), the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia had been playing a positive role. In the Russian Federation's view, that merited appropriate encouragement in the form of a further easing of the sanctions. At the very least, the Council should have made the partial suspension of the sanctions indefinite, as the Russian Federation itself had proposed. Instead, the draft resolution was extending the suspension of the sanctions for a reduced period of only 75 days, as was the case in the previous resolution. Moreover, a new preambular paragraph had appeared that referred to the importance of the cessation of military assistance to the Bosnian Serbs. In addition to the fact that that provision went beyond resolution 713 (1991), which established a general and complete embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment, it was also particularly untenable with respect to assertions concerning the financing and coordination of air defence, and was in no way confirmed by the reports of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia. Most important, that provision was directed at one of the parties to the conflict, while the responsibility for the recent drastic deterioration of the situation there was borne not only and not so much by the Bosnian Serbs. His delegation could not agree with operative paragraph 3 which contained a call for mutual recognition between the successor States of the former Yugoslavia. That provision did not fit within the context of a generally technical and limited extension of the suspension of a minimal set of sanctions for a short period of time.³³⁶

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted by 14 votes to none, with 1 abstention (Russian Federation) as resolution 1003 (1995), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling all its earlier relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 943 (1994) of 23 September 1994, 970 (1995) of 12 January 1995 and 988 (1995) of 21 April 1995,

Calling upon all States and others concerned to respect the sovereignty, territorial integrity and international borders of all States in the region,

Noting the measures taken by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), in particular those detailed in the report transmitted by the letter dated 25 June 1995 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council, to maintain the effective closure of the international border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all goods except foodstuffs, medical supplies and clothing for essential humanitarian needs, and noting with satisfaction that the cooperation of the Mission of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia with the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) continues to be good,

Reaffirming the importance of further efforts by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to enhance the effectiveness of the closure of the international border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all goods except foodstuffs, medical supplies and clothing for essential humanitarian needs,

Underlining the particular importance it attaches to there being no provision of military assistance, in terms of finance, equipment, coordination of air defences or recruitment of troops, to the Bosnian Serb forces,

Expressing its appreciation for the work of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia and of the Mission of the International Conference to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), and underlining the importance of the necessary resources being made available so as to strengthen the capacity of the Mission to carry out its tasks,

Noting with satisfaction that the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 724 (1991) of 15 December 1991 has adopted streamlined procedures for expediting its consideration of applications concerning legitimate humanitarian assistance, as well as a number of measures facilitating legitimate trans-shipments via the Danube river,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the restrictions and other measures referred to in paragraph 1 of resolution 943 (1994) shall be suspended until 18 September 1995;

2. Decides also that the arrangements referred to in paragraphs 13, 14 and 15 of resolution 988 (1995) shall continue to apply;

3. Renews its call for early mutual recognition between the States of the former Yugoslavia within their internationally recognized borders, recognition between the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) being an important first step, and urges the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to take that step;

4. Reaffirms its decision to keep the situation closely under review and to consider further steps with regard to measures applicable to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) in the light of further progress in the situation;

5. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United States observed that, while the Co-Chairmen of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia had reported some improvement in the effectiveness of the border closure, they had also pointed out some shortcomings in Belgrade's willingness to implement its decision to isolate the Bosnian Serbs. It was those shortcomings that made the United States Government unwilling to accept an extension of 100 days and to insist on 75 days. She recalled that the goal of extending limited sanctions relief to Belgrade was to increase the pressure on the Bosnian Serbs to accept a settlement based on the Contact Group plan. The United States continued to believe that an effectively enforced border closure would help to achieve that goal. It was therefore disturbed by indications of increasing military cooperation between Belgrade and the Bosnian Serbs, including reports that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia were providing financial assistance and equipment to the Bosnian Serb army, cooperating with Bosnian Serb air defence systems, and returning draft-age Bosnian Serb males to Bosnia. If those reports were accurate, they would weaken the case for continuing the limited suspension of sanctions. Such violations would undermine the Council's key objective of persuading the Bosnian Serbs that there was no alternative to a negotiated solution. The speaker also expressed concern over reports of increased military support by Belgrade for the Croatian Serbs, and noted that her Government would pay close attention to the manner in which Belgrade continued to implement the border closure.³³⁷

The representative of China reiterated that his delegation opposed resorting to sanctions or mandatory actions in relation to the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, as facts had proven that sanctions or pressure would only further complicate the situation. The international community should encourage the efforts made by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia by gradually removing the sanctions. China regretted that the views of all delegations had not been taken into account during the negotiating process on the draft resolution. As the main purpose of the draft, however, had been to continue the partial suspension of the sanctions, China had voted in favour of the resolution just adopted.³³⁸

Decision of 12 July 1995 (3553rd meeting):
resolution 1004 (1995)

At its 3553rd meeting, on 12 July 1995, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Honduras) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution submitted by France, Germany, Italy, the United Kingdom and the United States³³⁹ and read out a revision that had been made to the draft.

The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina stated that by attacking Srebrenica and threatening Zepa, the Bosnian Serbs continued to realize their main goal: the elimination of the Contact Group plan and the strengthening of their own position with the goal of the legalization of the fait accompli. He recalled the statement made by his President, on 12 July 1995, in which he urged the United Nations and NATO to re-establish by force the violated safe zone of Srebrenica, and that tents, food and medicine be provided to the population expelled from that safe area. The speaker further noted that his Government preferred the full rehabilitation of the mandate of UNPROFOR and its strengthening. UNPROFOR had an obligation to defend safe areas since that defence had been used as a basis for the argument in favour of the maintenance of the arms embargo against Bosnia and Herzegovina. The establishment and activation of the rapid reaction force also could make a crucial contribution to the rehabilitation of the UNPROFOR mandate and UNPROFOR capabilities in Bosnia and Herzegovina. That, combined with NATO activities, could help to reverse the situation in the country.³⁴⁰

The representative of Croatia expressed the concern of his Government at recent developments in the six safe areas in Bosnia and Herzegovina. He noted that both the decision by the Bosnian Serb leadership to renew its advances in the safe areas and the lack of an appropriate response by the international community posed serious risks to Croatia and the Bosnian Croat federation. Croatia was especially concerned about the situation in the safe area of Bihac. It would consider the displacement of the population to be a serious threat to its internal security and may be compelled to undertake measures to secure the status of Bihac as a safe area if that status ever became threatened. Croatia also would have to draw conclusions from the international community's lack of an appropriate response to the situation in Srebrenica, in respect of the mandate of the United Nations in Croatia and the ability and willingness of UNCRO to achieve its objectives and to control Croatia's relevant international borders. It took the view that developments in Bosnia and Herzegovina were a consequence of the international community having ignored a serious increase in Serbia's interference in the occupied territories of Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina.³⁴¹

Speaking before the vote, the representative of France noted that the action undertaken by the Bosnian Serbs against Srebrenica was of a different nature since it represented a deliberate intention on the part of the Bosnian Serbs to use force to occupy a safe area. He stated that the international community could not accept any questioning of the status of the safe areas. The draft resolution therefore called on the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to bring about the withdrawal of Bosnian Serb forces from Srebrenica. In supporting that request, France did not wish to impose the use of any particular means. It was simply signifying its preparedness to make troops available for any operations the civilian and military authorities and the United Nations force might consider realistic and realizable.³⁴²

The representative of the Russian Federation condemned the actions of the Bosnian Serb army in violation of Security Council decisions on the safe areas in Bosnia and Herzegovina. His delegation concurred with the view that it was necessary to restore the demilitarized status of the safe area of Srebrenica. That task was complex, but in the Russian Federation's view, the solution would not be reached through the use of air power or through the withdrawal of United Nations forces from Bosnia. Rather, the secure and effective functioning of UNPROFOR should be ensured. Noting that the draft resolution mandated the Secretary-General to use all resources available to restore the status of the safe area, the speaker expressed the view that that provision precluded the option of using force, as that would exceed the existing mandate of the peacekeeping operation. It was also extremely important that efforts to restore the safe area status did not violate the impartiality of UNPROFOR. United Nations forces could not and should not undertake actions that would convert them into a party to the conflict. The Russian Federation fully concurred with the Secretary-General's view that attacks launched from safe areas were inconsistent with the safe area concept and precipitated a disproportionate response from the Bosnian Serbs. The Russian Federation also agreed with the Secretary-General that the only way to make safe areas truly safe was to define a regime acceptable to both parties and to promote mutual respect for that regime.³⁴³

The draft resolution, as orally revised in its provisional form, was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1004 (1995), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling all its earlier relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming its commitment to the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Gravely concerned at the deterioration in the situation in and around the safe area of Srebrenica, Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and at the plight of the civilian population there,

Gravely concerned also at the very serious situation which confronts personnel of the United Nations Protection Force and a great number of displaced persons within the safe area at Potocari, especially the lack of essential food supplies and medical care,

Paying tribute to the United Nations Protection Force personnel deployed in the safe area of Srebrenica,

Condemning the offensive by the Bosnian Serb forces against the safe area of Srebrenica and, in particular, the detention by the Bosnian Serb forces of United Nations Protection Force personnel,

Condemning also all attacks on United Nations Protection Force personnel,

Recalling the agreement of 18 April 1993 by the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Bosnian Serb party for the demilitarization of Srebrenica, and regretting that it has not been implemented in full by either party,

Stressing the importance of renewed efforts to achieve an overall peaceful settlement, and the unacceptability of any attempt to resolve the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina by military means,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Demands that the Bosnian Serb forces cease their offensive and withdraw from the safe area of Srebrenica immediately;

2. Demands also that the parties respect fully the status of the safe area of Srebrenica in accordance with the agreement of 18 April 1993;

3. Demands further that the parties respect fully the safety of United Nations Protection Force personnel and ensure their complete freedom of movement, including resupply;

4. Demands that the Bosnian Serb forces immediately and unconditionally release unharmed all detained United Nations Protection Force personnel;

5. Demands also that all parties allow unimpeded access for the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other international humanitarian agencies to the safe area of Srebrenica in order to alleviate the plight of the civilian population and, in particular, that they cooperate on the restoration of utilities;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to use all resources available to him to restore the status, as defined by the agreement of 18 April 1993, of the safe area of Srebrenica in accordance with the mandate of the United Nations Protection Force, and calls upon the parties to cooperate to that end;

7. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

³⁴² Ibid., p. 5

³⁴³ Ibid., pp. 9-10.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United States stated that the resolution just adopted must be the beginning of “credible resolve”. She further stated that, peaceful means were to be preferred, but when “brutal force” was used the Secretary-General must have the right to use the resources available, in consultation with the relevant troop contributors, to meet the humanitarian needs of the civilian population and to achieve lasting peace. The United States therefore believed that UNPROFOR must remain in Bosnia, supported by the rapid reaction force. The leadership of UNPROFOR would have to make tough decisions in the days ahead. The United States further believed that the role of NATO would be vital to decisions in support of UNPROFOR. It supported the full and speedy deployment of the rapid reaction force and was prepared to provide the necessary air and logistical resources for the purpose.³⁴⁴

The representative of China stated that his delegation had voted in favour of the resolution just adopted because it was aimed at protecting the Srebrenica safe area, stopping offensives against UNPROFOR, and preventing the further deterioration of the humanitarian situation. China nevertheless had reservations about taking enforcement action by invoking Chapter VII of the Charter, as set forth in the resolution. It was also concerned at the serious political and military consequences that might result from the actions authorized by the resolution, including the possibility that the peacekeeping force could become a party to the conflict and thus lose the basis of its continued existence.³⁴⁵

Decision of 14 July 1995 (3554th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3554th meeting, on 14 July 1995, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Honduras) drew the attention of the members of the Council to several documents³⁴⁶ and stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:³⁴⁷

The Security Council recalls its resolution 1004 (1995). The Council is deeply concerned about the ongoing forced relocation of tens of thousands of civilians from the Srebrenica safe area to the Tuzla region by the Bosnian Serb party. Such forced relocation is a clear violation of the human rights of the civilian population. It is especially concerned about reports of grave mistreatment and killing of innocent civilians. It is equally concerned about reports that up to 4,000 men and boys have been forcibly removed by the Bosnian Serb party from the Srebrenica safe area. It demands that in conformity with internationally recognized standards of conduct and international law the Bosnian Serb party release them immediately, respect fully the rights of the civilian population of the Srebrenica safe area and other persons protected under international humanitarian law and permit access by the International Committee of the Red Cross.

The Council again condemns the unacceptable practice of ethnic cleansing and reaffirms that those who have committed or have ordered the commission of such acts will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts.

The Council demands that the Bosnian Serb party immediately allow unimpeded access to the civilian population of the Srebrenica safe area by international humanitarian organizations and cooperate with any procedure established by those organizations to determine which civilians wish to depart from the area of Srebrenica. It further demands that the Bosnian Serb party respect fully the rights of those civilians who wish to remain in the safe area and cooperate with efforts to ensure that civilians who wish to depart are allowed to do so with their families in an orderly, safe way in conformity with international law.

The Council demands that both sides allow the unhindered movement of humanitarian relief and cooperate with

The Council reiterates its demand that the Bosnian Serb forces immediately and unconditionally release unharmed all detained personnel of the United Nations Protection Force and that the parties respect fully the safety of all Force personnel and ensure their complete freedom of movement.

The Council pays tribute to all the personnel of the United Nations Protection Force and of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, especially those deployed in the area of Srebrenica. It notes that the presence and bravery of the troops has undoubtedly saved the lives of many civilians in the Srebrenica area.

Decision of 20 July 1995 (3556th meeting):
statement by the President

By a letter dated 17 July 1995 addressed to the President of the Security Council,³⁴⁸ the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina transmitted a letter of the same date from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Bosnia and Herzegovina addressed to the President of the Security Council. In that letter, the Foreign Minister reported that attacks against the safe area of Zepa were continuing and requested an emergency meeting of the Security Council to consider security measures and the safe evacuation of the civilian population from Zepa.

At its 3556th meeting, held on 20 July 1995 in response to the request contained in the above-mentioned letter, the Council included the letter in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Honduras) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a number of documents³⁴⁹ and stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:³⁵⁰

The Security Council, recalling its previous resolutions, is deeply concerned by the situation in and around the safe area of Zepa. It condemns in the strongest possible terms the offensive by the Bosnian Serb forces against the safe area. The Council is also concerned in particular at the plight of the civilian population there.

The Council attaches the utmost importance to the safety and well-being of the civilian population in Zepa. It demands that the Bosnian Serb forces refrain from any further action that threatens the safety of that population and that they respect fully the rights of the civilian population and other persons protected under international humanitarian law. The Council reaffirms its condemnation of all violations of international humanitarian law, and reiterates to all concerned that those who have committed or ordered the commission of such acts will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts. It reminds the military and political leaders of the Bosnian Serb party that this responsibility extends to any such acts committed by forces under their command.

The Council underlines the importance it attaches to the fullest cooperation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other international humanitarian organizations and demands that they be given unhindered freedom of movement and access to that area. It further demands that the Bosnian Serb authorities cooperate with all efforts, including those of the United Nations Protection Force, to ensure the safety of the civilian population and, in particular, its most vulnerable members, including evacuation as requested by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina in his letter of 17 July 1995.

The Council strongly condemns the recent acts of violence and intimidation which have occurred against United Nations Protection Force personnel. It demands that both parties ensure the safety and freedom of movement of Force personnel at all times.

Decision of 25 July 1995 (3557th meeting):
statement by the President

By a letter dated 24 July 1995 addressed to the President of the Security Council,³⁵¹ the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in the light of the deteriorating situation in the safe area of Zepa and the imminent threat to its civilian population, requested an emergency meeting of the Security Council, to address the immediate and urgent need for all measures to be taken to ensure a safe and UNPROFOR-escorted evacuation of the civilian population of Zepa.

At its 3557th meeting, held on 25 July 1995 in response to the request contained in the above-mentioned letter, the Council included the letter in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Honduras) drew the attention of the members of the Council to several documents³⁵² and stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:³⁵³

The Security Council is deeply concerned about the situation in and around the safe area of Zepa in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Council notes the letter of 25 July 1995 from the President of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina to the President of the Security Council.

The Council reaffirms its previous relevant resolutions and the statement by its President of 20 July 1995. It reiterates in the strongest possible terms its condemnation of the Bosnian Serb offensive against the safe area and demands that the Bosnian Serbs comply fully with the requirements set out in that statement as well as its earlier resolutions. The Council further demands that Bosnian Serb forces withdraw from the safe areas of Srebrenica and Zepa.

³⁵³ S/PRST/1995/34.

The Council remains particularly concerned at the plight of the civilian population and other persons protected under international humanitarian law in the Zepa area. It welcomes and supports the efforts being made by the United Nations Protection Force and the international humanitarian agencies, as requested by the President of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, to achieve a safe evacuation of those civilians who wish to leave and stresses the importance it attaches to the success of these efforts. It requests the Secretary-General to use all resources available to him to that end and calls upon the parties to cooperate.

The Council demands that the United Nations Protection Force and the international humanitarian agencies be provided with immediate and unhindered access to the population of the area and, in particular, that the Bosnian Serb party provide access for representatives of the International Committee of the Red Cross to all civilians who decide to remain and permit the International Committee of the Red Cross to register any persons detained against their will and visit them immediately.

Decision of 10 August 1995 (3564th meeting):
resolution 1010 (1995)

At its 3564th meeting, on 10 August 1995, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Indonesia) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations³⁵⁴ and to two other documents.³⁵⁵

The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina stated that the draft resolution was a small step forward. Nevertheless, it was a resolution that more clearly articulated care, even though it might be irreparably late for many. The draft did not mention the destiny of those refugees from Zepa who had fled to Serbia. Bosnia and Herzegovina requested international humanitarian organizations to register those refugees and to prevent their disappearance or further abuse in violation of the Geneva Conventions and humanitarian law. The Bosnian delegation also looked forward to the report by the Secretary-General on these issues, as requested by the Council in the draft resolution.³⁵⁶

Speaking before the vote, the representative of Germany stated that his country had taken the initiative which had led to the draft resolution because it was appalled and alarmed. Several weeks after the fall of Srebrenica and Zepa, the whereabouts of about 7,000 to 8,000 male Bosnians who were taken prisoners by Serbian Serbs were still unknown. According to the latest update by the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), only 164 detainees from Srebrenica and 44 from Zepa had been registered. Germany insisted that immediate access be granted to international humanitarian organizations to all detainees from Srebrenica and Zepa and that the civilian Bosnians taken prisoner be released immediately. It condemned the persistent refusal by the Bosnian Serbs to allow such access to ICRC representatives. That practice constituted a violation of international humanitarian law. The speaker also urged United Nations representatives to continue their efforts to obtain information on the missing men.³⁵⁷

The representative of the Russian Federation expressed concern at reports of flagrant violations of the norms of international humanitarian law in Srebrenica, which should be duly investigated, as well as at the unavailability of information on the whereabouts of many former inhabitants of Srebrenica. The Russian Federation supported the demand in the draft resolution that the Bosnian Serbs grant representatives of UNHCR, ICRC and other international humanitarian agencies access to those who had been displaced from Srebrenica and Zepa. It also expected all prisoners of war to be treated in accordance with international norms and noted that, if the Secretary-General were to confirm that violations of international humanitarian law had indeed taken place, then the Council would have to respond appropriately. The speaker noted that the lesson to be drawn from events in Srebrenica and Zepa was that there was a need to address the concept of safe areas and the modalities for its implementation. It was important to determine what kind of safe area was acceptable to both sides. In addition, the relevant agreements should include provision for the demilitarization of all territories. He contended that if that had been done earlier, the tragic events in and around Zepa and Srebrenica might have been avoided.³⁵⁸

The representative of the United States stated that Srebrenica and Zepa should not be forgotten because they were areas for which the Council had assumed a special responsibility. They were United Nations protected safe areas, where the Council hoped its authority and legitimacy would offer protection from violence and attack. Tragically, the authority of the Council and the good opinion of the world appeared to mean little to the Bosnian Serb leadership. The Council had a responsibility to investigate what had happened and to ensure that those responsible were brought to justice. Turning to the resolution, the speaker noted the demand that the Bosnian Serbs give immediate access to persons displaced from Srebrenica and Zepa, as well as the demand that access be granted to detained persons and that the rights of those persons be respected. He also noted the resolution's reiteration that those who had violated international humanitarian law would be held accountable as individuals for their acts. Establishing the truth about what had happened in Srebrenica was essential not only to justice, but to peace. Responsibility for the atrocities lay with the individuals who had ordered and committed the crimes and true reconciliation would not be possible until the perception of collective guilt had been expunged and personal responsibility assigned.³⁵⁹

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1010 (1995), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling all its earlier relevant resolutions, and reaffirming its resolution 1004 (1995) of 12 July 1995,

Reaffirming the statements by its President of 20 and 25 July 1995, and deeply concerned that the demands set out therein have not been fully complied with by the Bosnian Serb party,

Reiterating the unacceptability of the violation of the safe areas of Srebrenica and Zepa by Bosnian Serb forces,

Reaffirming its commitment to the sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Affirming its commitment to the search for an overall negotiated settlement of the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia ensuring the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all the States there within their internationally recognized borders, and stressing the importance it attaches to the mutual recognition thereof,

Deeply concerned at reports of grave violations of international humanitarian law in and around Srebrenica and at the fact that many of the former inhabitants of Srebrenica cannot be accounted for,

Concerned also at the plight of the civilian population and other persons protected under international humanitarian law, originating in the Zepa area,

Expressing its strong support for the efforts of the International Committee of the Red Cross in seeking access to displaced persons, and condemning the failure of the Bosnian Serb party to comply with their commitments to the International Committee of the Red Cross in respect of such access,

1. Demands that the Bosnian Serb party give representatives of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Committee of the Red Cross and other international agencies immediate access to persons displaced from Srebrenica and Zepa who are within the areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces, and that the Bosnian Serb party permit representatives of the International Committee of the Red Cross to visit and register any persons detained against their will, including any members of the forces of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

2. Also demands that the Bosnian Serb party respect fully the rights of all such persons and ensure their safety, and urges that any persons detained be released;

3. Reiterates that all those who commit violations of international humanitarian law will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council as soon as possible, and no later than 1 September 1995, with any information available to United Nations personnel regarding compliance with the present resolution and concerning violations of international humanitarian law;

5. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of France noted that the Council requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council before the end of the month on the implementation of the resolution just adopted, and on the measures taken to end violations of humanitarian law. He, however, warned that the Council might have to take action before that date arguing that it owed it to itself to remain vigilant on a question which involved the fate of thousands of civilians subjected to vile and barbaric treatment.³⁶⁰

Decision of 7 September 1995 (3572nd meeting): statement by the President

On 30 August 1995, pursuant to resolution 1010 (1995), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report concerning events in Srebrenica and Zepa.³⁶¹ The Secretary-General reported that, despite repeated requests by his Special Representative, the Bosnian Serb authorities had refused access to persons displaced from Srebrenica and Zepa, making it impossible to collect direct, first-hand evidence of the extent to which the Bosnian Serbs had respected the rights of displaced persons. There was significant prima facie evidence, however, that violations of international humanitarian law had occurred during and after the Bosnian Serb offensive on Srebrenica. The Secretary-General thus recommended that the Council reiterate its urgent call to the Bosnian Serb leadership to authorize immediate and full access to displaced persons. Such access should include the possibility for an impartial international investigation to take place and remained a crucial step in ascertaining the full extent of violations of international humanitarian law and human rights and in addressing any persisting abuses.

At its 3572nd meeting, on 7 September 1995, the Council included that report in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Italy) then stated that, after consultations among members of the Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:³⁶²

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 30 August 1995 submitted pursuant to Council resolution 1010 (1995) of 10 August 1995.

The Council strongly condemns the failure of the Bosnian Serb party to comply with the demands contained in resolution 1010 (1995). The Bosnian Serb party's refusal to cooperate with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Committee of the Red Cross cannot but reinforce the deep concern expressed in that resolution and in previous resolutions and statements.

The Council stresses its determination that the fate of persons displaced from Srebrenica and Zepa be established. It reaffirms its demands to the Bosnian Serb party to give representatives of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Committee of the Red Cross and other international agencies immediate access to such persons who are within the areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces and to permit representatives of the International Committee of the Red Cross to visit and register any persons detained against their will.

The Council also reaffirms its demands to the Bosnian Serb party to respect fully the rights of all such persons, to ensure their safety and to release them.

The Council reiterates that all those who commit violations of international humanitarian law will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts.

The Council takes note of the investigations that are being carried out by the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, established pursuant to its resolution 827 (1993). The Council reiterates in this context that all States shall cooperate fully with the Tribunal and its organs, including by providing access to sites the Tribunal deems important for its investigations.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts and to report to the Council no later than 6 October 1995 regarding compliance with resolution 1010 (1995) and any further relevant information that may become available.

The Security Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Deliberations of 8 September 1995 (3575th meeting)

At its 3575th meeting, on 8 September 1995, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Egypt, Pakistan, Turkey and Ukraine, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also invited Ambassador Dragomir Djokic, at his request, to address it in the course of the subsequent discussion. The President (Italy) then drew the attention of the Council members to several documents.³⁶³

³⁶³ Letter dated 7 September 1995 from the representative of the Russian Federation addressed to the Secretary-General (S/1995/776); letter dated 7 September 1995 from the representative of Yugoslavia addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/1995/778); and letter dated 8 September 1995 from the representatives of France, Germany, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States addressed to the Secretary-General (S/1995/780).

The representative of the Russian Federation noted that his country had requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council, to consider the situation that had arisen in Bosnia and Herzegovina as a result of the bombing of Bosnian Serb positions by NATO aircraft. The Russian Federation was convinced that the NATO air strikes and the shelling of the Bosnian Serbs by the Rapid Reaction Force were undermining, rather than strengthening, efforts to reach a political settlement. Such steps were beyond the decisions of the Security Council, changing the peacekeeping character of the United Nations operation in Bosnia and involving the international community in a conflict against one of the parties. The speaker also raised a number of objections to the manner in which the air strikes had proceeded. Firstly, the agreed procedures for the use of force in Bosnia and Herzegovina had been seriously violated. Consultations had not been held with members of the Council, despite the stipulation in resolution 844 (1993) that they should take place, and the members of the Council had not been informed in a timely fashion of the actions taken. Those oversights were particularly inadmissible because the actions represented a qualitative change in the nature of the use of force. Secondly, the bombing and shelling had been “disproportionate and excessive”. Thirdly, there had been a qualitative change in the “dual key” procedure, meaning that the United Nations had no authority to end the use of force without the agreement of NATO. Fourthly, apparently a memorandum of understanding had been drawn up between NATO and the United Nations concerning the use of air power under the new conditions, according to which force would be applied to areas outside the boundaries of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Such a use of air power would be in direct violation of the resolutions of the Council. Lastly, the active participation of the Rapid Reaction Force exceeded its mandate, as set out in resolution 988 (1995). The recent actions had not been taken to protect United Nations personnel and humanitarian convoys. Rather, they amounted to virtual participation in military action against one side. Thus, the Rapid Reaction Force no longer remained impartial, even though it remained an integral part of the United Nations peacekeeping operation in Bosnia.³⁶⁴

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that his delegation was confident that the recent United Nations/NATO action in Bosnia had been appropriate and justified. The action had had clear and specific objectives, designed to protect the safe areas in line with Security Council resolutions. If the Bosnian Serbs were to comply with the requirements explained to them by the United Nations commanders, then the action would end.³⁶⁵

The representative of France emphasized that the military action taken by the United Nations and NATO had been the outcome of decisions taken at the London Conference of July 1994, as part of a plan to protect the safe areas. Those operations had been triggered by the shelling of the Sarajevo market and had been based upon the “dual key” mechanism, whose legitimacy was beyond reproach, and on respect for the prerogatives of the Council and the responsibilities of the United Nations. He further stated that military firmness was an essential condition for the success of diplomatic action. It was essential that the siege of Sarajevo be lifted, that heavy weapons be withdrawn beyond the exclusion zone, and that all attacks against the safe areas cease.³⁶⁶

The representative of the United States stated that, in order to defend the possibility of a diplomatic solution, the international community had had no choice but to respond forcefully to the Bosnian Serb attack on the Sarajevo marketplace. The Bosnian Serbs had been warned that continued attacks on the safe areas would lead to a strong response. They had chosen to ignore that warning and must accept the consequences of their actions. The United Nations and NATO had made it clear that they were not at war with the Bosnian Serbs. The air strikes would end as soon as the Bosnian Serb leadership complied with certain conditions, which called for nothing more than the implementation of Security Council resolutions. The speaker further noted that these actions were fully authorized by Security Council resolutions. The Security Council had created the safe areas and had given UNPROFOR the mandate to deter attacks and it should support the efforts of UNPROFOR to implement that mandate.³⁶⁷

The representative of Nigeria stated that the NATO air strikes had been an appropriate and measured response to the recent attack by the Bosnian Serb forces against a civilian centre. At the same time, however, Nigeria regretted that it had become necessary to employ such force. Nigeria hoped that the air strikes had not done irreparable harm to the neutrality of the United Nations. It was not too late to make a reassessment of strategy.³⁶⁸

The representative of China welcomed the progress achieved in Geneva. He noted, however, that his country was not in favour of using air strikes to exert pressure. Taking such action would further complicate the situation and create obstacles to a political settlement. In the light of the progress achieved, it was necessary to cease the air strikes immediately, in order to create an environment conducive to a political settlement.³⁶⁹

The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina stated that her Government fully supported the United Nations and NATO action against military targets of the Bosnian Serbs and considered the legitimacy of such actions to be beyond doubt, as they were being taken in accordance with resolution 836 (1993).³⁷⁰

The representative of Croatia stated that his country supported the operation of NATO in Bosnia. Croatia believed that it was necessary to continue exerting pressure on the Bosnian Serb party, and that NATO’s course of action would decisively assist to bring about an overall lasting peaceful settlement in the region. It was assisting in that effort by allowing the use of its airspace by NATO air forces, and providing the use of its ports for the rapid reaction capacity of UNPROFOR. While supporting the newest peace initiative, the speaker emphasized the importance of mutual recognition of the countries in the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. It was essential to protect and unconditionally respect all international borders and territorial integrity of all the successor States of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. His delegation also stated that Croatia did not find encouragement in the reluctance of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to subscribe to the basic principle of the peaceful reintegration of Eastern Slavonia into the rest of Croatia.³⁷¹

Mr. Djokic demanded that the Security Council take urgent measures to end the NATO air strikes and attacks by the Rapid Reaction Force against Bosnian Serb military and civilian targets. Noting that NATO air strikes had commenced as a retaliation for the shelling of Sarajevo, the speaker contended, however, that the scale, intensity and duration of the strikes went far beyond retaliatory measures, and their clear aim was to inflict serious injury on the Bosnian Serb military capability, economic infrastructure and even civilian facilities. Moreover, the scope and intensity of the bombing had greatly exceeded the mandate given to the Secretary-General and NATO by relevant Security Council resolutions with the aim of protecting the safe areas in Bosnia and Herzegovina. By departing from the traditional principles of peacekeeping, neutrality and impartiality, the United Nations and NATO had set out on a “slippery slope”, which could lead to further involvement on the side of the Bosnian Muslims and full-scale war against the Bosnian Serbs. At a time when a just and lasting peace was at last within reach, it was essential that that opportunity should not be missed, and that NATO air strikes be stopped.³⁷²

The representative of Ukraine stated that in view of the very encouraging progress which had been achieved in the process of securing a peace settlement in the Balkans, it would be desirable to review the question of putting an end to any further bombing of military targets belonging to the Bosnian Serbs by NATO. Such a step would help create a favourable atmosphere at the talks and help to strengthen trust between the parties. A second matter, of even greater immediacy, was the question of lifting economic sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.³⁷³

During the debate, other speakers supported the air operation conducted by NATO which was consistent with Security Council resolutions, in particular resolution 836 (1993).³⁷⁴ Some were of the view that the operation should continue until its objectives were fully met.³⁷⁵

At its 3576th meeting, on 8 September 1995, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Italy) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a letter dated 8 September 1995 from the representatives of France, Germany, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States addressed to the Secretary-General,³⁷⁶ transmitting the text of the Joint Statement and Agreed Basic Principles signed on 8 September 1995, in Geneva, by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). He then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:³⁷⁷

The Security Council welcomes the meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) held under the auspices of the Contact Group at Geneva on 8 September 1995. It welcomes the joint statement issued at the conclusion of that meeting and in particular the agreement by the parties on the Agreed Basic Principles. It strongly urges the parties to negotiate in good faith and expeditiously on the basis of those Principles with the aim of achieving a lasting peace throughout the region.

Decision of 15 September 1995 (3578th meeting): resolution 1015 (1995)

By a letter dated 6 September 1995 addressed to the President of the Security Council,³⁷⁸ the Secretary-General transmitted the report of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, concerning the operations of the Conference’s mission to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. The report contained the certification referred to in resolution 1003 (1993).³⁷⁹

At its 3578th meeting, on 15 September 1995, the Council included the above-mentioned letter in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Croatia and Ukraine, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Italy) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution submitted by the Czech Republic, France, Germany, Italy, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States.³⁸⁰

The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina stated that the findings of his Government differed drastically from those of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia mission. According to the Government of Bosnia, deliveries of military assistance from the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to the Bosnian Serbs had doubled between January and July. His delegation was surprised that the draft resolution before the Council supported the suspension of sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia for 180 days. At the same time it believed that the time “when the international community was willing to be deceived by the regime in Belgrade was irretrievably gone”. Bosnia hoped that the latest peace initiative would mean that the draft resolution would be the last in a series of sanctions resolutions.³⁸¹

The representative of Ukraine considered the draft resolution to constitute a recognition by the international community of the desire of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to cooperate for a peaceful settlement. Ukraine believed, however, that the continuation of the suspension of sanctions for a further 180 days was an inadequate step. Rather, the Council should be considering lifting the sanctions altogether. A first step in that direction could be renewing transit to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia of a list of individual products, together with a lifting of the ban on trade in products not regarded as strategic. In that connection, Ukraine welcomed paragraph 3 of the draft resolution, which made it possible for the Council to consider adjustments to the sanctions regime. Before concluding, the speaker stated that the process for lifting the sanctions could take place at the same time as the process of mutual recognition of the successor States of the former Yugoslavia.³⁸²

³⁸² Ibid., pp. 3-5.

The representative of Bulgaria, referring to the continuing sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, noted that Bulgaria, as a State Member of the United Nations that was strictly observing the sanctions regardless of their devastating effect on its economy, hoped that the peace process might lead to a discussion about the suspension and gradual lifting of the sanctions. Recalling the statement of 18 May by the Foreign Ministers of Bulgaria, Greece, Moldova, Romania and Ukraine, which had expressed concern at the overall situation in the region aggravated by the sanctions, the speaker reiterated his Government’s support for the concrete proposals made by the Foreign Ministers to mitigate the impact of the sanctions. He further emphasized that one of the major challenges facing the United Nations was the extent to which it would be able to resolve the special economic problems of non-target countries affected by the implementation of sanctions.³⁸³

The representative of Croatia noted that his delegation believed that the sanctions were still one of the most effective instruments of the international community for bringing an end to the conflict. Eliminating that instrument would undermine the established balance and the international community’s leverage. His delegation also believed that the gradual lifting of the sanctions against Belgrade must be related to deeds and not promises. It also reminded the Council that resolution 871 (1993) had clearly established the linkage between ending Belgrade’s economic and political isolation, and its cooperation in ending the occupation of parts of Croatia. It warned that any exclusion of the question of the remaining occupied territories of Croatia from the comprehensive peace plan, including delinking them from the sanctions against Belgrade, would inevitably force the Government of Croatia to consider other legitimate means of restoring its sovereignty.³⁸⁴

Speaking before the vote, the representative of Indonesia took note of the certification issued by the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia mission. At the same time, Indonesia was concerned by the continued shortcomings experienced in the border closure and, in particular, by the fact that uniformed personnel were continuing to cross the border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Bosnia and ³⁸³ Ibid., pp. 5-6.

³⁸⁴ Ibid., pp. 6-7.

Herzegovina. Clearly, it was possible to improve the closure of the border. Indonesia would vote in favour of the draft resolution, however, for it believed that the closure of the border remained an instrumental pillar for the achievement of a negotiated settlement.³⁸⁵

The representative of China noted that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia had made many efforts to implement the relevant resolutions of the Council, including continuing to meet its commitment to close the border with Bosnia and Herzegovina. China was of the view that Belgrade's efforts to meet its commitments should be recognized and encouraged by the Council, through concrete action. China would vote in favour of the draft resolution extending the partial suspension of sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to 180 days. In keeping with its position on sanctions, however, China was not in favour of using pressure tactics such as mandatory sanctions in the region of the former Yugoslavia, for such steps would only complicate the issue and hurt innocent civilians. China therefore believed that the Council should lift the sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and ease the remaining economic sanctions. Such a step would alleviate the suffering of the people in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, facilitate the economic development of all the countries of the region, and contribute to restoring peace and stability.³⁸⁶

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that, in his delegation's view, the draft resolution was a significant improvement over previous resolutions on the subject, in particular because it did not contain provisions pertaining to Belgrade's decision to close the border to all but humanitarian deliveries. Another step in the right direction was the substantial increase in the timeframe for the next suspension of some sanctions. In light of those factors, the Russian Federation would support the draft. In a broader context, it believed that the constructive policy of the Yugoslav leadership should meet with an appropriate response from the international community. The sanctions should be lifted without delay, as their retention was hindering efforts to reach a political settlement. Given the Russian Federation's position in favour of an immediate lifting of the sanctions, it took note of paragraph 3, reaffirming the Council's decision to consider further steps with regard to measures applicable to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in the light of further progress. Such steps towards a further easing of sanctions might be adopted at any time, without waiting for the resolution's deadline to expire.³⁸⁷

The representative of Honduras stated that maintaining sanctions indefinitely would not help to resolve the conflict. Honduras hoped that lifting the sanctions would lighten the burden upon the economic and social development of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and neighbouring countries. It further hoped that the draft resolution would motivate the Belgrade authorities to continue cooperating with the international community, so that the Council might consider revoking the sanctions regime.³⁸⁸

The representative of Botswana stated that the proposed length of the suspension of aspects of the sanctions was a clear recognition of the positive role played by Belgrade in the peace process in recent weeks. Botswana welcomed the agreement signed the previous day for the withdrawal of the Bosnian Serb heavy weapons from Sarajevo. Turning to the question of the air strikes, the speaker cautioned against the appearance of partiality by the United Nations in the Balkan conflict. The shelling of the Sarajevo marketplace in Sarajevo had constituted a cynical provocation against the authority of the United Nations and deserved a strong response. The United Nations should, however, avoid the appearance of taking sides. It could not wage war in Bosnia and hope to make peace at the same time, without compromising the execution of one of those aims. Furthermore, it was critical that the Council guard against losing control of the transfer of authority of the United Nations to regional arrangements. In such situations, the United Nations should never assume the position of a bystander in an operation that was supposed to be under the command and control of the Council.³⁸⁹

The representative of Nigeria noted with satisfaction Belgrade's continuing political commitment to the closure of the border. Nigeria was concerned, however, at reports of continuing violations of that border. It therefore called on Belgrade to take adequate steps to put a stop to all illegal activities and border violations. It would support the draft resolution, however, because it had seen signs that the Council's "carrot-and-stick policy" was modifying the behaviour of the authorities in Belgrade.³⁹⁰

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1015 (1995), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling all its earlier relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 943 (1994) of 23 September 1994, 970 (1995) of 12 January 1995, 988 (1995) of 21 April 1995 and 1003 (1995) of 5 July 1995,

Calling upon all States and others concerned to respect the sovereignty, territorial integrity and international borders of all States in the region,

Noting the measures taken by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), in particular those detailed in the report transmitted by the letter dated 6 September 1995 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council, to maintain the effective closure of the international border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all goods except foodstuffs, medical supplies and clothing for essential humanitarian needs, and noting with satisfaction that the cooperation of the Mission of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia with the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) continues to be generally good,

Reaffirming the importance of further efforts by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to enhance the effectiveness of the closure of the international border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all goods except foodstuffs, medical supplies and clothing for essential humanitarian needs,

Expressing its appreciation for the work of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia and of the Mission of the International Conference to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), and underlining the importance of the necessary resources being made available so as to strengthen the capacity of the Mission to carry out its tasks,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the restrictions and other measures referred to in paragraph 1 of resolution 943 (1994) shall be suspended until 18 March 1996;

2. Decides also that the arrangements referred to in paragraphs 13, 14 and 15 of resolution 988 (1995) shall continue to apply;

3. Reaffirms its decision to keep the situation closely under review and to consider further steps with regard to measures applicable to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) in the light of further progress in the situation;

4. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United States underlined some fundamental points about the resolution just adopted. First, the suspended sanctions were limited strictly to cultural and sports exchanges, the restoration of passenger air transport to and from Belgrade, and ferry service to the port of Bar. There was no suspension of economic sanctions, meaning that there had been no increase of sanctions relief. Rather, the existing relief had been extended for six months. The United States continued to believe that further sanctions relief must follow real steps towards peace, such as mutual recognition among the successor States to the former Yugoslavia. Secondly, the requirements of resolution 988 (1995) remained in full force, including the requirement in paragraphs 14 and 15 that the Secretary-General report to the Council immediately if he had evidence of non-compliance by the authorities of Serbia and Montenegro with the border closure. If such a report were to be submitted, the suspension of the sanctions would terminate. In that connection, there had been indications of shortcomings in the implementation of Serbia and Montenegro's commitment to close its border. In particular, efforts by Serbia and Montenegro to assist the Bosnian Serbs in restoring their military communications and air defence networks and providing other military assistance would violate the commitment to close the border.³⁹¹

The representative of France stated that while the resolution just adopted was technical in nature, the improvement made to it — the extension of the suspension period to 180 days — reflected his delegation's conviction that a dynamic of negotiation seemed to have begun and must be encouraged. France hoped that the Council would have the opportunity to decide, on the basis of the evolving situation, on the further alleviation of sanctions.³⁹²

Decision of 18 September 1995 (3580th meeting): statement by the President

At its 3580th meeting, on 18 September 1995, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Italy) then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:³⁹³

The Security Council deploras the rapidly escalating military situation on the ground in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and expresses its deep concern about the plight of the civilian population resulting therefrom.

The Council demands that all the parties involved in offensive military activities and hostile acts in western Bosnia cease them immediately and respect fully the rights of the local population. It stresses the importance it attaches to intensified efforts to alleviate the plight of refugees and displaced persons and to the fullest cooperation in this regard by the parties with the United Nations Protection Force and the international humanitarian agencies. The Council reiterates that there can be no military solution to the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and urges all parties not to take military advantage of the present situation. It once again expresses its full support for the Agreed Basic Principles signed at Geneva on 8 September 1995, which provide a basis for negotiations with the aim of achieving a lasting peace throughout the region.

The Council furthermore deploras the death of one Danish peacekeeper and injury to nine others and expresses its condolences to the Government of Denmark and to the family of the peacekeeper who lost his life.

Decision of 21 September 1995 (3581st meeting): resolution 1016 (1995)

At its 3581st meeting, on 21 September 1995, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Italy) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations³⁹⁴ and to several other documents.³⁹⁵

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1016 (1995), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling all its earlier relevant resolutions and the statement by its President of 18 September 1995,

Deeply concerned by the military situation on the ground in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and by the plight of the civilian population there, which constitutes a humanitarian crisis of significant proportions,

Especially concerned by the humanitarian consequences, as a result of the recent fighting, including loss of life and suffering among the civilian population, and a new flow of tens of thousands of refugees and displaced persons,

Reiterating its full support for the Agreed Basic Principles signed at Geneva on 8 September 1995,

Gravely concerned about all offensives and hostile acts in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina by the parties concerned, including those most recently undertaken,

1. Notes the assurances given by the Governments of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Republic of Croatia regarding offensive actions in western Bosnia and, while taking note of the reports that the offensive actions have slowed down, affirms the need for full compliance with the demands set out in the statement by its President of 18 September 1995;

2. Deploras the casualties suffered by the Danish peacekeepers, expresses its condolences to the Government of Denmark and to the families of the peacekeepers who lost their lives, and demands that all parties fully respect the safety of United Nations personnel;

3. Calls upon all parties and others concerned to refrain from violence and hostile acts and to reach immediately a ceasefire and a cessation of hostilities throughout the territory of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

4. Calls upon Member States involved in promoting an overall peaceful settlement in the region to intensify their efforts to this end with the parties to ensure that they take no advantage from the current situation and show utmost restraint;

9. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 12 October 1995 (3587th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3587th meeting, on 12 October 1995, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Nigeria) then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:³⁹⁶

The Security Council welcomes the entry into force of the ceasefire agreement of 5 October 1995 between the Bosnian parties.

The Council takes this opportunity to express its gratitude to all those who negotiated the ceasefire agreement and to the United Nations Protection Force and others who, often at risk to their own lives, have made possible, with the cooperation of all the parties, the restoration of gas and electricity supplies to the inhabitants of Sarajevo, enabling them to live in more decent conditions.

The Council demands that all parties fully comply with the provisions of the ceasefire agreement and refrain from any military activity that could jeopardize the peace process. It expresses its deepest concern at any operation that provokes large-scale movements of population detrimental to the peace process and a final and fair settlement. The Council is particularly concerned about new reports related to the movements of the displaced population in the areas of Sanski Most and Mrkonjic Grad.

The Council reiterates its strong condemnation of all practices of ethnic cleansing wherever they occur and by whomsoever committed. It demands their immediate cessation and underlines the need to alleviate the sufferings caused by these acts. The Council urges all Bosnian parties to respect fully the rights of all communities, including their right to remain where they are or to return to their homes in safety.

The Council is, in particular, deeply concerned about new reports concerning acts of ethnic cleansing committed in the Banja Luka and Prijedor areas, especially about reports, including those by international humanitarian organizations, that non-Serb men and boys of draft age are being taken away by Bosnian Serb and other paramilitary forces. The Council demands that those persons be immediately released.

The Council demands that the Bosnian Serb party grant United Nations personnel and the representatives of the International Committee of the Red Cross immediate and unimpeded access to all the areas of concern. It also demands that representatives of the International Committee of the Red Cross be allowed to visit and register any persons detained against their will. The Council reiterates in this context the demands set out in resolution 1010 (1995) and in the statement by its President of 7 September 1995 on Srebrenica and Zepa.

The Council reaffirms that those who have committed or have ordered the commission of violations of international humanitarian law will be held individually responsible for them. The Council recalls in this context the establishment of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, pursuant to its resolution 827 (1993) and reiterates that all States shall cooperate fully with the Tribunal and its organs.

The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 30 November 1995 (3601st meeting):
resolution 1026 (1995)

On 23 November 1995, pursuant to resolutions 981 (1995), 982 (1995) and 983 (1995), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the three peacekeeping missions in the former Yugoslavia.³⁹⁷ The report was intended to assist the Council in its deliberations on the future of those missions.

In his report, the Secretary-General noted that the general framework agreement, which had been initialled by the Presidents of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and Serbia on 21 November 1995 in Dayton, provided the basis for peace to become reality. The framework agreement contained many aspects with far-reaching implications not only for the United Nations peacekeeping forces deployed in the former Yugoslavia, but also for the future role of the ³⁹⁷ S/1995/987. The report was considered by the Council also at its 3600th meeting, under the item "The situation in Croatia" (see sect. 21.K of the present chapter).

Organization in that region, which had yet to be fully assessed and analysed. In connection with UNPROFOR, the Secretary-General noted that since the agreement envisaged the implementation of the military and regional stabilization aspects to be the responsibility of a new Implementation Force (IFOR), to be authorized by the Security Council, a primary task for UNPROFOR was to arrange for the transfer of responsibility to IFOR. Pending finalization of the arrangements for the transfer of responsibility to IFOR, the Secretary-General recommended that the existing mandate of UNPROFOR be extended for two months, or until the appropriate transfer of authority had been executed between UNPROFOR and the incoming Implementation Force, subject to authorization of the Security Council.

At its 3601st meeting, on 30 November 1995, the Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and included the above-mentioned report in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Oman) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution submitted by Argentina, the Czech Republic, France, Germany, Honduras, Italy, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States,³⁹⁸ as well as to a letter dated 29 November 1995 from the representative of the United States addressed to the Secretary-General,³⁹⁹ transmitting the text of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1026 (1995), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions, in particular its resolutions 982 (1995) of 31 March 1995 and 998 (1995) of 16 June 1995,

Reaffirming its commitment to the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Welcoming again the initialling of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement") by the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the other parties thereto on 21 November 1995 at Dayton, Ohio, signifying agreement between the parties to sign formally the Peace Agreement,

Stressing the need for all parties to comply fully with all provisions of the Peace Agreement and, prior to the entry into force of that agreement, the need for all parties to cooperate fully with the United Nations Protection Force and to maintain the current ceasefire agreement,

Welcoming the positive role played by the United Nations Protection Force, and paying tribute to the personnel of the Force in the performance of their mandate,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 23 November 1995,

Decision of 7 December 1995 (3603rd meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3603rd meeting, on 7 December 1995, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Russian Federation) then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁴⁰⁰

³⁹⁹ S/1995/999.

⁴⁰⁰ S/PRST/1995/60.

The Security Council expresses deep concern over the looting and burning of houses by the forces of the Croatian Defence Council in the area of Mrkonjic Grad and Sipovo, which have continued for some time, and it also notes with concern that similar acts have been committed by Bosnian Serb forces in other areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Council is also deeply concerned by reports that the Croatian Defence Council is moving mine-laying equipment into the Mrkonjic Grad and Sipovo areas.

The Council considers that such actions are dangerous and detrimental to the spirit of confidence essential for the implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Council demands that all such actions be stopped immediately and stresses the need for all parties to exercise maximum restraint and to demonstrate the cooperation essential for the successful implementation of the Peace Agreement.

Decision of 15 December 1995 (3607th meeting):
resolution 1031 (1995)

On 13 December 1995, pursuant to resolution 1026 (1995), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on developments in the peace process in Bosnia and Herzegovina.⁴⁰¹ The report noted that the most important development since the adoption of resolution 1026 (1995) was the Peace Implementation Conference convened in London on 8 and 9 December which had resulted in the adoption of a document known as “the London conclusions”. The Conference had also approved the designation of Mr. Carl Bildt as High Representative and had invited the Security Council to agree to it. The report also addressed aspects of implementation of the peace agreement that affected the United Nations and dealt with the future of certain existing United Nations activities which would either be discontinued or transferred to other agencies. The Secretary-General observed that the Peace Agreement offered real hope of bringing an end to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina. He welcomed the fact that Member States had decided that the task of helping to implement the Peace Agreement in Bosnia and Herzegovina should not be entrusted to the United Nations alone. He noted, in that regard, that only a cooperative effort between many international organizations and Member States could generate the skills and resources, and above all, the political will required to end the fighting and start building the peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Referring to the ways in which the United Nations could make its contribution to that common effort, he stated that the most important of them were in the fields of humanitarian relief and return of refugees, and civilian police, where the parties had asked the Organization to deploy a United Nations civilian police greater than any previously seen. Other areas, where the United Nations could make a contribution, included human rights.

At its 3607th meeting, on 15 December 1995, the Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Canada, Croatia, Egypt, Japan, Malaysia, Norway, Spain, Turkey and Ukraine, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also invited Mr. Vladislav Jovanovic, at his request, to address it in the course of the subsequent discussion. The President (Russian Federation) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution submitted by Argentina, the Czech Republic, France, Germany, Italy, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States,⁴⁰² as well as to several other documents.⁴⁰³

The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina noted that the Council would be deciding upon a comprehensive resolution on the various aspects of the implementation of the Dayton Peace Agreement. As a host country to the Implementation Force, Bosnia and Herzegovina pledged partnership in the implementation of the agreement. Bosnia and Herzegovina was committed to furthering existing democratic institutions and establishing new ones to restore the rule of law and order in every part of the country, thus guaranteeing safety, justice and respect for all citizens of Bosnia and Herzegovina, regardless of ethnic or religious background. The speaker argued that restoration of mutual confidence would be possible if ⁴⁰³ Letter dated 29 November 1995 from the representative of the United States addressed to the Secretary-General (S/1995/999); letter dated 7 December 1995 from the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia addressed to the Secretary-General (S/1995/1021); letter dated 11 December 1995 from the representative of the United Kingdom addressed to the Secretary-General (S/1995/1029); and letter dated 14 December 1995 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/1995/1034).

the Bosnian Serb authorities were to do the same in the territories under their control, including by bringing to justice those who had committed war crimes and by preventing them from playing any future political role. Finally, Sarajevo should again be not only a symbol of the ethnic, religious and cultural diversity and richness of Bosnia and Herzegovina, but also the birthplace of new international hope and solidarity.⁴⁰⁴

The representative of Croatia noted that no matter how difficult and tragic the past four years had been, the peace agreement would move Bosnia and the whole region forwards and the timely deployment of IFOR, to be authorized by the draft resolution, would continue the momentum for peace. It would also be necessary, however, to implement the economic and electoral aspects of the Agreement with the same commitment and vigour. IFOR alone could not secure a lasting and just peace in Bosnia. Croatia regretted that the agreement on the normalization of relations between it and Bosnia and Herzegovina, including mutual recognition, had not been signed in Paris. Croatia's position remained that unconditional recognition was a prerequisite for the equitable resolution of all outstanding issues between two sovereign States. Turning to the draft resolution, the speaker emphasized paragraph 8, which recognized the right of all Bosnian refugees and displaced persons to return to their homes of origin in safety and called on the United Nations to play a leading role in their repatriation. Those refugees and displaced persons must be given the opportunity to return home or they must be compensated for their property fairly and in a timely manner. The speaker concluded by presenting the position of his Government on the report of 13 December of the Secretary-General⁴⁰⁵ on the implementation of the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium.⁴⁰⁶ Croatia expressed concern that that report placed emphasis on external risks and not enough emphasis on the most important element of the agreement which was demilitarization. It could not accept an attempt to build a new and improved safe area in the occupied Vukovar region. Therefore, the deployment of a large international force to Croatia was unacceptable. Rather, the military aspects of the implementation force should be reduced and the civilian aspects strengthened. The speaker further noted any delay in addressing the implementation of the Basic Agreement would minimize the possibility of its success. The momentum for peace that was evident in implementing the Peace Agreement in Bosnia should be emulated and utilized to secure peace in Croatia as well.⁴⁰⁷

Mr. Jovanovic noted that it had not been an easy task to achieve the Peace Agreement, but the essential thing was that peace had finally prevailed and that the implementation of the Agreement would strengthen stability, not only in Bosnia and Herzegovina but also in the Balkans and Europe. The basic task ahead was full implementation of the Peace Agreement. The responsibility for such implementation lay not only with the Republika of Srpska and the Muslim-Croat Federation and other interested parties, but also with international entities assigned major implementation tasks. For its part, Yugoslavia stood ready to implement fully the commitments it had undertaken under the Agreement. The speaker further stated that it was imperative that the military and civilian components of the international presence in Bosnia and Herzegovina took an impartial and objective position towards all parties. It was also imperative that the Serbs of Sarajevo receive concrete guarantees that their freedom, security, equality and human rights would be fairly and unconditionally respected. Referring to the question of sanctions, the speaker stated that his delegation expected that, in accordance with the Peace Agreement, the Council would soon lift all sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. Having been "crippled" by international sanctions and isolated from the international community, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia was eagerly seeking to restore its place in the family of nations. It believed that, by pursuing a constructive policy for peace in the former Yugoslavia, it had earned the right to normalize its status in all international organizations, and to normalize relations with the European Union. As a founding Member, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia requested that the Council allow it to resume its rightful place in the United Nations without delay, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and international law. It was particularly unacceptable that additional conditions were being set for the normalization of the status of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in the United Nations. With the signing of the Peace Agreement, it was only logical that Yugoslavia's rights be fully restored.⁴⁰⁸

Speaking before the vote, the representative of the United Kingdom stated that the conclusion of the Peace Agreement and the draft resolution before the Council sounded the call for the most comprehensive operation to reconstruct a European country since the Marshall Plan half a century earlier. Sustaining that process would be vital, if the promise of peace were to become a reality. One important task was military in nature. The role of IFOR would be even-handed and limited in scope and duration. The force would not be imposing the peace settlement, but it would take necessary action to ensure compliance. Furthermore, should it be decided that IFOR would detain and transfer to the appropriate authorities any persons indicted by the Tribunal with whom it came into contact, then the authority to do so was provided by the draft resolution, when read in conjunction with the Peace Agreement. The implementation of the Peace Agreement, however, was simply not a military task. IFOR was necessary, but not a sufficient, condition for rebuilding the civil, political and economic institutions and structures that would form the basis of a unified, prosperous and stable society. The international community faced a huge commitment in implementing the Peace Agreement. That commitment needed to be matched by a similar determination on the part of the Bosnian people, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Croatia. Before concluding, the speaker warned that failure by the Bosnian Serbs to cooperate would lead to the continuation of economic sanctions.⁴⁰⁹

The representative of Germany stated that the draft resolution conferred a challenging responsibility upon the members of the Council. By an affirmative vote, the Council would set in motion an enormous international military and civilian operation. Noting that all parties had consented to the deployment of IFOR, including the use of force if necessary, the speaker stated that it was essential that the parties comply with their commitment to refrain from the use of force, and that they cooperate fully with IFOR in the military side of the implementation of the Peace Agreement. However, while the military component of the implementation of the Dayton Agreement represented the foundation of peace, the construction of peace would be a civilian task. It was therefore necessary to strengthen the political consensus achieved so far by holding free and fair elections. It was also necessary to assist the local security forces, to monitor human and minority rights, to undertake important humanitarian tasks, and to reconstruct and develop a devastated country and its economy. In that effort, the United Nations would continue to have an important peacekeeping role, and Germany fully supported the concept of a strong International Police Task Force and of a United Nations civilian mission. Referring to the question of the admission of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to the General Assembly, the speaker noted that his delegation would welcome such a development under the conditions determined by the respective organs of the United Nations. Turning to the question of coordination of the civilian tasks to be carried out in the implementation of the Peace Agreement, the speaker stated that the many international organizations involved must work in the same direction. It was important that there be no duplication of effort. In that respect, the draft resolution spelled out clearly the responsibilities of the High Representative, as the final authority in theatre regarding civilian implementation and as coordinator of the civilian operations with the authority to give guidance as appropriate. In conclusion, the speaker stated that those responsible for war crimes and violations of international humanitarian law must be brought to justice. Without uncovering the truth and without justice, national reconciliation could not be achieved. The draft rightly stressed the importance of full cooperation with the International Tribunal and made it clear that IFOR had a role to play in that respect.⁴¹⁰

The representative of Argentina stated that, as clearly set out in one of the preambular paragraphs of the draft resolution, the conflict in the former Yugoslavia remained a threat to international peace and security. That factor explained the widespread concern that the principal role for the United Nations, through the Council, would be to keep the implementation of the Peace Agreement under permanent review. With the draft resolution, work of great importance to the United Nations would begin in such areas as the protection of human rights, humanitarian assistance, civil policing and the removal of mines. Argentina was struck, however, by the fact that the supervision of electoral ⁴⁰⁸ Ibid., pp. 6-7.

⁴⁰⁹ Ibid., pp. 8-9.

⁴¹⁰ Ibid., pp. 9-11.

processes, which was an area where the United Nations had unparalleled experience and aptitude — had been assigned to the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE). It therefore supported the Secretary-General's offer to OSCE that the invaluable experience of the United Nations might be put to use in Bosnia. Argentina also emphasized the importance of the International Tribunal. Peace would only be lasting if those responsible for atrocities were made to face the consequences of their actions.⁴¹¹

The representative of China welcomed the positive developments in relation to the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Observing that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia had made unremitting efforts in the peace process and should be acknowledged and encouraged by the international community, he stated that the Council should resolve soon the question of the status of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in the United Nations. On the basis of China's position in support of the peace process in the former Yugoslavia, and the fact that the draft resolution called for extraordinary action in extraordinary circumstances, the Chinese delegation would vote in favour of the draft resolution. That did not represent, however, a change in China's position. China had long disapproved of operations authorized by the Council when Chapter VII was invoked and mandatory measures adopted, and it could not approve the Council's authorization of the unlimited use of force. It therefore believed that IFOR must maintain neutrality and impartiality and avoid the wanton use of force, in order not to damage the image of the United Nations. IFOR should thus provide the Council with timely and full reports on the implementation of its tasks and should accept the necessary control of and guidance from the Council.⁴¹²

The representative of Nigeria noted that his delegation would have preferred a United Nations operation under the policy control of the Council and the managerial supervision of the Secretary-General, in spite of the fact that the parties to the agreement had requested a multinational force. While mindful of the Secretary-General's observations about the inability of the United Nations to undertake such an operation at that time, Nigeria believed that it was a lack of political backing and of the resource support of

Member States that was preventing the Organization from undertaking directly the enforcement operations envisaged in Chapter VII of the Charter. Nigeria also believed that the Council should not continue to contract out what would normally be a United Nations responsibility to a group of powerful States. Questions about the timeframe and concept of operations were not quite clear, nor could one say exactly whence the post of High Representative derived its legitimacy and authority. As States Members of the United Nations, the members of the Council should not support decisions that had the effect of subordinating the Organization or its Secretary-General to another organization. The United Nations was still the most universal expression of the will of the international community. However, in view of its policy of supporting all peace initiatives and of the primary objective of helping to resolve the Balkan conflict, Nigeria would support the draft resolution.⁴¹³

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1031 (1995), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions concerning the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia,

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United States stated that, while much of the Council's work had borne fruit, often its resolutions and statements had promised much but accomplished little. Often the Council's message to the people of Bosnia had been a tragic one: "We cannot defend you and we will not let you defend yourselves". Now, however, the Council's message was different. It had helped Bosnia to negotiate a peace agreement, it was authorizing a powerful military force to implement that peace, and it would enable Bosnia to ensure that peace once the international presence had left. Noting that the purpose of IFOR was to make peace work, not to fight a war or to occupy, the speaker warned nevertheless that, if anyone were foolish enough to attack or threaten IFOR, then they would regret having done so. The speaker noted that the resolution just adopted recognized that the parties must cooperate fully with the International Tribunal and that IFOR had authority to take actions, including the use of necessary force, to ensure compliance with the relevant provisions of the Peace Agreement. That was a welcome supplement to the duties and authorities stemming from resolution 827 (1993). The NATO Council could now underscore the obligation of the parties to cooperate fully with the Tribunal by explicitly authorizing IFOR to transfer indicted persons to the Tribunal and to detain such persons for that purpose. The United States also stressed the importance of every country's obligation to cooperate with the Tribunal and to comply with its orders. Unless they complied with their obligations, the parties to the conflict could not expect to reap the benefits of peace, ensure the permanent easing of economic sanctions, or hope to rejoin fully the community of civilized nations, including as a Member of the United Nations. The speaker further stated that special attention must be given to holding democratic elections, ensuring respect for human rights, planning for the safe return of refugees and displaced persons, creating a professional police force, and initiating a comprehensive programme of economic reconstruction.⁴¹⁴

The representative of France expressed his country's view that the Council must assume three tasks. First, it must finalize the necessary arrangements to implement the civilian and military aspects integral to the Peace Agreement. Second, it must maintain the United Nations presence whenever that presence was indispensable. Third, the authority of the Council must be affirmed. It was the Council, and the Council alone, that under the Charter could give legitimacy to the military means to be used. It must also ensure the overall coherence of the operation by regularly assessing both the civilian and military aspects of its implementation. The speaker noted that the resolution just adopted met those objectives.⁴¹⁵

The President, speaking in his capacity as the representative of the Russian Federation, emphasized

⁴¹⁴ Ibid., pp. 19-21.

⁴¹⁵ Ibid., pp. 21-22.

what he considered as the most important feature of the resolution that the Member States providing forces to IFOR were authorized by the resolution to do only what the Bosnian parties themselves had agreed to. Thus, should force be used against violators of the Agreement, the resolution clearly made those sides' agreement conditional on an equal, impartial approach to all sides to the Bosnian conflict. The Russian Federation would consistently defend the need to avoid unjustified use of force in the course of the operation. It was important that, under the resolution, the Security Council must take a decision a year later regarding the need to extend the military component of the operation. That provision, together with regular reporting to the Council on the conduct of the entire operation, ensured reliable political control by the Security Council and indicated that the massive military operation in no way represented a replacement of the United Nations by individual or regional organizations. The speaker further noted that the resolution defined the need to strengthen regional stability and control over armaments, which meant that all sides must ensure that the arms reserves of the Bosnian side should be reduced rather than increased. The Council had also confirmed that the achievement of a just and lasting peace was impossible without securing internationally recognized human rights, including the right of refugees and displaced persons freely to return. Another necessity was the cooperation of all parties with the International Tribunal, in accordance with Council decisions and commitments entered into by the parties themselves in Dayton. Of primary importance in creating an appropriate climate between the parties were immediate measures to strengthen and build confidence, particularly in areas where ethnic groups were living side by side. The most complex situation arose in Sarajevo, where there was an urgent need to prevent a massive exodus of the Serbian population. The Russian Federation expected the immediate implementation of tasks entrusted to the Secretary-General by the resolution for ensuring a speedy redeployment to Sarajevo of additional contingents of the United Nations civilian police. The Russian Federation was also in favour of deciding on an immediate repeal of sanctions against Belgrade and against the Serb Republic, in order to foster the successful implementation of the Agreements.⁴¹⁶

⁴¹⁶ Ibid., pp. 24-26.

The representative of Ukraine stressed that the ultimate responsibility for the implementation of the Peace Agreement lay with the conflicting parties. In that context, Ukraine fully supported paragraph 10 of the resolution just adopted, underlining the relationship between the fulfilment by the parties of their commitments in the Peace Agreement and the readiness of the international community to commit financial resources for reconstruction and development. Referring to the military aspects of the resolution just adopted, the speaker noted that his Government supported the authorization by the Council of IFOR, which would provide monthly reports to the Council on its activities, thus enabling an appropriate means of political monitoring by the Council. The establishment of IFOR was a decisive step towards a comprehensive settlement of the conflict. IFOR would be deployed as a neutral and impartial force, capable of ensuring implementation of the Peace Agreement and of protecting itself. At the same time, Ukraine hoped that IFOR commanders would take all necessary steps to ensure that the right to take all necessary measures to defend against the threat of attack was not abused. The speaker, finally, suggested that the establishment of a "special regime" of participation in the rehabilitation and development of Bosnia might be appropriate for the States that had been most affected economically by their strict observance of the sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. Such an initiative could be regarded as partial compensation for the billions of dollars in losses suffered by the States neighbouring the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.⁴¹⁷

The representative of Egypt welcomed the Peace Agreement and the resolution just adopted. Egypt hoped that a negotiated settlement would be reached by all concerned parties on outstanding issues related to the succession of States within the former Yugoslavia, so that the successor States might resume the international role that the Federated Republic of Yugoslavia had played in the past. It also hoped that the peoples of the successor States would be able to live in safety, security and dignity in the context of mutual friendly relations amongst all successor States. Egypt considered it important that there be a guarantee of the voluntary return of all refugees and displaced persons, that there be cooperation with the International Tribunal, and that IFOR would be deployed and would act in the context of a Security

Council resolution, thus meaning that the force would be acting on behalf of the international community.⁴¹⁸

Decision of 21 December 1995: letter from the President of the Secretary-General

On 13 December 1995, pursuant to resolution 1025 (1995), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report⁴¹⁹ on aspects of the establishment by the Council of an operation consisting of a transitional administration and a transitional peacekeeping force to implement the relevant provisions of the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium,⁴²⁰ which had been signed on 12 November 1995.

The Secretary-General observed that, although the conclusion of the Framework Agreement for peace in the neighbouring Bosnia and Herzegovina should contribute to a vastly improved climate in the region as a whole, the past record of the parties to the Basic Agreement in honouring their undertakings was not encouraging and the imprecise nature of the agreement made it unwise to assume that compliance would be readily forthcoming. The force deployed must therefore have a mandate under Chapter VII of the Charter, as well as the capacity to take the necessary action to maintain peace and security, deter attack from any side, and defend itself. A Chapter VII mandate would also be necessary to give the transitional administrator the power to “govern”, as stipulated in the Agreement. The Secretary-General remained of the view that the deployment and command of the force required would best be entrusted to a coalition of Member States, rather than to the United Nations. One option was therefore for the Council to authorize Member States to establish a multinational force to conduct the operation. However, in consultations with the Secretariat, some Member States had expressed a preference for the Basic Agreement to be implemented by a United Nations force. If that point of view were to be accepted by the Council, then the arguments in favour of giving the force a Chapter VII mandate would remain no less compelling. The Secretary-General further noted that, while effective demilitarization at the outset of the operation would be a major key to success, it would be important for the implementation of the civilian aspects to begin as soon as possible. He therefore recommended that the Council authorize the establishment of the transitional council and local implementation committees. He would soon nominate a suitable official to serve as the transitional administrator.

By a letter dated 21 December 1995,⁴²¹ the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General of the following:

The members of the Security Council have reviewed your report of 13 December 1995 on the implementation of the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium. The members of the Council agree with you that the agreement merits full international support for its effective and timely implementation.

In the agreement it is requested that the Council establish a transitional administration and authorize the deployment of an international force. The members of the Security Council, reaffirming resolution 1025 (1995) of 30 November 1995, stand ready to consider the option that both be components of a United Nations operation and, if the Council decides to establish such an operation, they stress the need for the necessary financial resources to be made available in a timely fashion.

The members of the Council agree that the force should operate under an appropriate mandate and be provided with the necessary protection. They encourage you to accelerate discussions with possible troop contributors so that the force can be deployed at the earliest possible date.

The members of the Council agree with your observation that implementation of the Agreement of 12 November will be complex and difficult. They recognize the danger that the two sides might have different interpretations of some of its provisions. They therefore welcome your decision to send an envoy to the region as soon as is convenient to discuss the implementation of the Agreement with the Government of Croatia and representatives of the local Serbs, and practical aspects of the establishment of a United Nations operation, including the possibilities for assistance from the host country in offsetting its cost.

Decision of 21 December 1995 (3612th meeting):
resolution 1034 (1995)

On 27 November 1995, pursuant to resolution 1019 (1995), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on violations of international humanitarian law and human rights in the areas of Srebrenica, Zepa, Banja Luka and Sanski Most.⁴²² The Secretary-General noted that United Nations personnel had had very limited access to the areas mentioned and that most of the information had been gathered from refugees and displaced persons. He reported that the last few months had seen further despicable acts of cruelty and violence. There were reports of a consistent pattern of summary executions, rape, mass expulsions, arbitrary detentions, forced labour and large-scale disappearances, which had yet to be properly investigated. Access to the areas in question was crucial and the international community should insist that the Bosnian Serb leadership provide full cooperation to all relevant international mechanisms, in order to enable events to be thoroughly investigated and the truth to be established. The Secretary-General also noted that, on 16 November 1995, the International Tribunal had issued further indictments against the Bosnian Serb leaders Radovan Karadzic and Ratko Mladic, for their direct and individual responsibilities in the atrocities committed against the Bosnian Muslim population of Srebrenica in July 1995, after the fall of the enclave to Bosnian Serb forces. They were charged with genocide, crimes against humanity and violations of the laws or customs of war. It was imperative that the Prosecutor of the International Tribunal be provided with the ability and powers to gather the necessary evidence swiftly. Moreover, States had an obligation to take the actions needed to create the conditions for the Tribunal to perform its task.

At its 3612th meeting, on 21 December 1995, the Council resumed its consideration of the item and included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Turkey, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Russian Federation) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution submitted by Argentina, France, Germany, Italy, the United Kingdom and the United States,⁴²³ and read out some changes that had been made to the draft.

Speaking before the vote, the representative of Germany noted that the report of the Secretary-General was a particularly worrying summary of the state of information on the missing persons, executions and the involvement of Bosnian Serb leaders and of Serbian paramilitary forces in those crimes. His delegation, together with the French delegation, had taken the initiative for the draft resolution, because it had felt that the Council could not shy away from a specific, clear and unequivocal reaction to the specific crimes and violations of international law described in the report. The speaker reiterated his country position with regard to two fundamental principles. First, it was of the utmost importance that the same legal standards, the same norms of law and the same critical objectivity be applied. There must be no selectivity, no attempts to “diminish” or “enlarge”, for partisan reasons, the violations of international humanitarian law committed by one side. In the same manner, Germany opposed attempts to “balance” the crimes committed by one side with human rights violations committed by another or to equate behaviours that cannot be equated. Second, it was equally important that the Council honour the general principle of the separation of powers, by seeing to it that the judicial prerogatives and competences of the International Tribunal were fully respected. In order to establish the full truth about the crimes and human rights violations in question, three aspects were of particular importance: there must be a full investigation of the violations in question; there must be access to the area; and the international community must be firm in its support of the efforts of the International Tribunal.⁴²⁴

The representative of Oman stated that substantial evidence supported the conclusion that Bosnian Serb soldiers were responsible for the crime of genocide. Justice should prevail and those who had committed crimes against humanity must be brought to justice. Oman hoped that IFOR would act according to its mandate, including by apprehending those indicted by the International Tribunal.⁴²⁵

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that the adoption of the draft resolution would be the clearest signal that the Council had not forgotten what had happened in Srebrenica, Zepa, Banja Luka and Sanski Most. The report of the Secretary-General provided irrefutable evidence of atrocities in those places and elsewhere. Given the scale of the human rights abuses, it was right that the Council should focus on those events in particular. There should be no misunderstanding, however: the Council’s commitment was to human rights, irrespective of ethnic background, nationality or religion. By focusing on crimes against non-Serbs, the Council did not in any way condone or ignore human rights violations committed against members of the Serb population. Nor did the draft seek to condemn the Bosnian Serb people. The crimes in question had been committed by individuals and those involved would be held responsible as individuals. Noting that the Peace Agreement set out a road map designed to re-establish the rule of law throughout all the communities in Bosnia, the speaker observed that implementation would be hindered if those responsible for the acts contained in the report of the Secretary-General were not brought to justice. Thus, all should support the work of the International Tribunal. It was also essential that UNHCR and ICRC be given full access to those displaced or detained or missing from Srebrenica and elsewhere. If there were to be a durable peace in Bosnia, then it must be based upon reconciliation between communities. That reconciliation would only be complete if accomplished by justice.⁴²⁶

The representative of China said that his delegation would vote in favour of the draft resolution, however it believed that, in dealing with violations of international humanitarian law, the Council should distinguish its purview from those of other bodies, and refrain from intervening in matters falling in the purview of others. China therefore expressed reservations relating to elements of the draft resolution that should have been dealt with by the International Tribunal or other related United Nations bodies.⁴²⁷

The representative of the United States stated that the responsibility for the atrocities committed in eastern Bosnia was not in doubt; it rested with the Bosnian Serbs, as it was made clear by the Secretary-General's report. The Secretary-General's report underlined the importance of support for the work of the Tribunal and the necessity for the parties to cooperate with the Tribunal in every way. The draft resolution also condemned the burning and looting of houses and territory which, under the Dayton Agreement, were to be returned to Bosnian Serb control. Although the nature and extent of those violations of human rights could not be equated to those committed by the Bosnian Serbs, the United States deplored them and joined the Council in urging an end to all such practices.⁴²⁸

The draft resolution, as orally revised in its provisional form, was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1034 (1995), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming all its earlier relevant resolutions on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including resolution 1019 (1995) of 9 November 1995, and condemning the Bosnian Serb party's failure, despite repeated calls that it should do so, to comply with the demands contained therein,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 27 November 1995 pursuant to resolution 1019 (1995) on violations of international humanitarian law in the areas of Srebrenica, Zepa, Banja Luka and Sanski Most,

Gravely concerned at the information contained in the above-mentioned report that there is overwhelming evidence of a consistent pattern of summary executions, rape, mass expulsion, arbitrary detentions, forced labour and large-scale disappearances,

Reiterating its strong support for the work of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, established pursuant to its resolution 827 (1993) of 25 May 1993,

Noting that the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement"), initialled at Dayton, Ohio, on 21 November 1995, provides that no person who is serving a sentence imposed by the International Tribunal and no person who is under indictment by the Tribunal and who has failed to comply with an order to appear before the Tribunal may stand as a candidate or hold any appointive, elective, or other public office in Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Condemning the failure of the Bosnian Serb party to comply with its commitments in respect of giving access to displaced persons and to persons detained or reported missing,

Reiterating its concern expressed in the statement by its President of 7 December 1995,

Deeply concerned by the plight of hundreds of thousands of refugees and displaced persons as a result of hostilities in the former Yugoslavia,

1. Strongly condemns all violations of international humanitarian law and of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, demands that all concerned comply fully with their obligations in this regard, and reiterates that all those who commit violations of international humanitarian law will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts;

2. Condemns in particular in the strongest possible terms the violations of international humanitarian law and of human rights by Bosnian Serb and paramilitary forces in the areas of Srebrenica, Zepa, Banja Luka and Sanski Most as described in the report of the Secretary-General of 27 November 1995 and showing a consistent pattern of summary executions, rape, mass expulsions, arbitrary detentions, forced labour and large-scale disappearances;

3. Notes with the utmost concern the substantial evidence referred to in the report of the Secretary-General that an unknown but large number of men in the area of Srebrenica, namely in Nova Kasaba-Konjevic Polje (Kaldrumica), Kravice, Rasica Gai, Zabrde and two sites in Karakaj, and possibly also in Bratunac and Potocari, have been summarily executed by Bosnian Serb and paramilitary forces, and condemns in the strongest terms the commission of such acts;

4. Reiterates its strong support for the efforts of the International Committee of the Red Cross in seeking access to displaced persons and to persons detained or reported missing, and calls upon all parties to comply with their commitments in respect of such access;

5. Reaffirms its demand that the Bosnian Serb party give representatives of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Committee of the Red Cross and other international agencies immediate and unimpeded access to persons displaced and to persons detained or reported missing from Srebrenica, Zepa and the regions of Banja Luka and Sanski Most who are within the areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces and that the Bosnian Serb party permit representatives of the International Committee of the Red Cross (a) to visit and register any persons detained against their will, whether civilians or members of the forces of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and (b) to have access to any site it may deem important;

6. Affirms that the violations of humanitarian law and human rights in the areas of Srebrenica, Zepa, Banja Luka and Sanski Most from July to October 1995 must be fully and properly investigated by the relevant United Nations and other international organizations and institutions;

7. Notes that the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, established pursuant to resolution 827 (1993), issued on 16 November 1995 indictments against the Bosnian Serb leaders Radovan Karadzic and Ratko Mladic for their direct and individual responsibilities for the atrocities committed against the Bosnian Muslim population of Srebrenica in July 1995;

8. Reaffirms its demand that the Bosnian Serb party give representatives of the relevant United Nations and other international organizations and institutions, including the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights, immediate and unrestricted access to the areas in question, including for the purpose of the investigation of the atrocities;

9. Underlines in particular the urgent necessity for all the parties to enable the Prosecutor of the International Tribunal to gather effectively and swiftly the evidence necessary for the Tribunal to perform its task;

10. Stresses the obligations of all the parties to cooperate with and provide unrestricted access to the relevant United Nations and other international organizations and institutions so as to facilitate their investigations, and notes their commitment under the Peace Agreement in this regard;

11. Reiterates its demand that all parties, and in particular the Bosnian Serb party, refrain from any action intended to destroy, alter, conceal or damage any evidence of violations of international humanitarian law and that they preserve such evidence;

12. Also reiterates its demand that all States, in particular those in the region of the former Yugoslavia, and all parties to the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, comply fully and in good faith with the obligations contained in paragraph 4 of resolution 827 (1993) to cooperate fully with the International Tribunal, and calls upon them to create the conditions essential for the Tribunal to perform the task for which it has been created, including the establishment of offices of the Tribunal when the latter deems it necessary;

13. Further reiterates its demand that all detention camps throughout the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina should be immediately closed;

14. Urges the parties to ensure full respect for the norms of international humanitarian law and of human rights of the civilian population living in the areas in Bosnia and Herzegovina now under their control which under the Peace Agreement will be transferred to another party;

15. Condemns the widespread looting and destruction of houses and other property, in particular by the Croatian Defence Council forces in the area of Mrkonjic Grad and Sipovo, and demands that all sides immediately stop such action, investigate them and make sure that those who violated the law be held individually responsible in respect of such acts;

16. Demands that all sides refrain from laying mines, in particular in those areas now under their control which under the Peace Agreement will be transferred to another party;

17. Urges Member States to continue to assist the efforts of the United Nations, humanitarian agencies and non-governmental organizations under way in the former Yugoslavia to alleviate the plight of hundreds of thousands of refugees and displaced persons;

18. Also urges all the parties to the conflicts in the territory of the former Yugoslavia to cooperate fully with these efforts with a view to creating conditions conducive to the repatriation and return of refugees and displaced persons in safety and dignity;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly informed on progress reached in the investigation of the violations of international humanitarian law referred to in the report mentioned above;

20. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

After the vote, the President, speaking in his capacity as the representative of the Russian Federation, noted that the Council had again returned to the subject of violations of the norms of international humanitarian law in the former Yugoslavia. He stated that his Government's principled position remained unchanged. The Russian Federation firmly condemned any violations of international humanitarian law and human rights on the territory of the former Yugoslavia, no matter by whom or where they were perpetrated. The Russian Federation believed that the Council's reaction to such violations could not be selective or one-sided. It was satisfied therefore that the one-sided nature of the initial draft resolution had been corrected in the final text.⁴²⁹

Decision of 21 December 1995 (3613th meeting):
resolution 1035 (1995)

At its 3613th meeting, on 21 December 1995, the Council resumed its consideration of the item and included the report of the Secretary-General of 13 December 1995 in its agenda.⁴³⁰ Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Russian Federation) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.⁴³¹

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1035 (1995), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 1031 (1995) of 15 December 1995,

Recalling also the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement"),

Having further considered the report of the Secretary-General of 13 December 1995,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General and the proposals for involvement by the United Nations in the implementation of the Peace Agreement contained therein;

2. Decides to establish, for a period of one year from the transfer of authority from the United Nations Protection Force to the multinational Implementation Force, a United Nations civilian police force to be known as the International Police Task Force, to be entrusted with the tasks set out in annex 11 of the Peace Agreement, and a United Nations civilian office with the responsibilities set out in the report of the Secretary-General, and to that end endorses the arrangements set out in the report of the Secretary-General;

3. Notes with satisfaction that the International Police Task Force and the United Nations civilian office will be under the authority of the Secretary-General and subject to coordination and guidance as appropriate by the High Representative, welcomes the Secretary-General's intention to appoint a United Nations Coordinator, and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council, at least every three months, reports about the work of the International Police Task Force and of the civilian office accordingly;

4. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Protected Areas in Croatia

Initial proceedings

Decision of 25 January 1993 (3163rd meeting):
resolution 802 (1993)

By a letter dated 25 January 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁴³² the representative of France requested the immediate convening of a Security Council meeting to consider the grave situation existing in the United Nations Protected Areas in Croatia, and especially the attacks to which the personnel of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) in those areas had been subjected.

At its 3163rd meeting, held on 25 January 1993 in response to the request contained in that letter, the Council began consideration of the item and included that letter in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Japan) drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution that had been prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations⁴³³ and to a revision that had been made to the draft. He also drew the attention of the Council members to two letters dated respectively 24 and 25 January from the representatives of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Croatia addressed to the President of the Security Council.⁴³⁴ In his letter, the representative of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia transmitted a letter of the same day from the Vice-President in which the latter denounced the Croatian "aggression" against the Republic of Serbian Krajina and requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council "to condemn that aggression and order the Croatian troops to immediately stop all military operations and withdraw to their original positions". In his letter, the representative of Croatia informed the Council that "the limited action of the Croatian Police forces and Croatian Army units on the territory of Croatia —within the so-called "pink zones" — aimed at securing the perimeter of the Maslenica-bridge rebuilding site, had been terminated upon completion of its goal". His Government deplored the loss of life of members of UNPROFOR who were caught in the cross-fire during the said conflict and reiterated its view that "the legitimate authorities of one country could not be regarded as aggressors on their own territory".

Speaking before the vote, the representative of France noted that his Government had requested that the Security Council meet immediately to consider the situation created by the attack by the Croatian Army in the region of Maslenica. He contended that the offensive, which had taken place at a particularly important point in the ongoing peace process in Geneva and had cost the lives of two French soldiers serving in UNPROFOR, could only further jeopardize the implementation of the United Nations peace plan in the region. It was very important that the Security Council reacted to these events, condemned these deliberate attacks against UNPROFOR and demanded the cessation of military activities by the Croatian Army directed against UNPROFOR in the United Nations Protected Areas. The Government of France also was pleased that the Council was demanding that the parties respect the safety of United Nations personnel and that it was inviting the Secretary-

General to take all necessary steps to ensure their safety. The fundamental obligation to ensure the safety of United Nations personnel was too often disregarded by parties involved in conflicts, but it was an obligation to which the United Nations should scrupulously attend. The speaker also noted that it was no less important that the Council was calling upon the parties to cooperate with UNPROFOR to resolve questions related to the implementation of the United Nations peace plan and to refrain from any action or threat that might undermine the efforts for peace that were being made in Geneva.⁴³⁵

The draft resolution, as orally revised in its provisional form, was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 802 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 713 (1991) of 25 September 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming in particular its commitment to the United Nations peacekeeping plan,

Deeply concerned by the information provided by the Secretary-General to the Security Council on 25 January 1993 on the rapid and violent deterioration of the situation in Croatia as a result of military attacks by Croatian armed forces on the areas under the protection of the United Nations Protection Force,

Strongly condemning those attacks which have led to casualties and loss of life in the Force, as well as among the civilian population,

Deeply concerned also by the lack of cooperation in recent months by the Serb local authorities in the areas under the protection of the Force, by the recent seizure by them of heavy weapons under control of the Force, and by threats to widen the conflict,

1. Demands the immediate cessation of hostile activities by Croatian armed forces within or adjacent to the United Nations Protected Areas and the withdrawal of the Croatian armed forces from these areas;

2. Strongly condemns the attacks by these forces against the United Nations Protection Force in the conduct of its duty of protecting civilians in the Protected Areas and demands their immediate cessation;

3. Demands also that the heavy weapons seized from the storage areas controlled by the Force be returned immediately to the Force;

4. Demands further that all parties and others concerned comply strictly with the ceasefire arrangements already agreed and cooperate fully and unconditionally in the implementation of the United Nations peacekeeping plan, including the disbanding and demobilization of the Serb territorial defence units or other units of similar functions;

5. Expresses its condolences to the families of the personnel of the Force who have lost their lives;

6. Demands that all parties and others concerned respect fully the safety of United Nations personnel;

7. Invites the Secretary-General to take all necessary steps to ensure the safety of the Force personnel concerned;

8. Calls upon all parties and others concerned to cooperate with the Force in resolving all remaining issues connected with the implementation of the peace keeping plan, including allowing civilian traffic freely to use the Maslenica crossing;

9. Calls again upon all parties and others concerned to cooperate fully with the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia and to refrain from any actions or threats which might undermine the current efforts aimed at reaching a political settlement;

10. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the Russian Federation argued that the military operations of the Croatian Army in the Serbian Krajina region represented another link in the chain of violations by Zagreb of the demands of the Security Council. He stated that the Croatian side had been ignoring for a long time the ban on flights over the air space of Bosnia and Herzegovina, that it had been shipping arms into that Republic, and that it was also conducting military operations against the Muslims in Bosnia. He contended that the attack being mounted by Croatian armed forces in areas under United Nations protection constituted a direct challenge to the peacekeeping mission of the United Nations in the former Yugoslavia. The attempt to resolve the problem of Krajina by military means was all the more regrettable because the leaders of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Croatia had seemed to be close to achieving a mutually acceptable agreement. The Russian Federation was particularly concerned that Croatia was ignoring the demands of the Security Council and that the Croatian army was continuing its offensive actions in Serb-populated areas of Croatia. He contended that Zagreb was not only refusing to restore the status quo and withdraw from the territories it had seized through invasion, but was also seeking to extend the area in which it was carrying out military action. He argued that the Croatian attack was not only a gross violation of Security Council resolutions, but was also endangering the Geneva negotiations for a peaceful settlement in the former Yugoslavia, which were at a crucial and sensitive stage. Having taken all those factors into account, the delegation of the Russian Federation had voted in favour of the resolution just adopted. He warned, however, that if the Croatian side were to fail to meet the demands of that and other relevant resolutions of the Security Council, then sanctions would have to be imposed on Croatia to the same extent as those imposed against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.⁴³⁶

Decision of 27 January 1993 (3165th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3165th meeting, on 27 January 1993, the Council included the letter dated 25 January from the representative of France addressed to the President of the Security Council in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Japan) stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁴³⁷

The Security Council is deeply concerned to learn from the Secretary-General that the offensive by the Croatian armed forces continues unabated in flagrant violation of resolution 802 (1993) of 25 January 1993, at a crucial time in the peace process.

The Council demands that military action by all parties and others concerned cease immediately. It further demands that all parties and others concerned comply fully and immediately with all the provisions of resolution 802 (1993) and with other relevant Council resolutions.

The Council once again demands that all parties and others concerned respect fully the safety of United Nations personnel and guarantee their freedom of movement. The Council reiterates that it will hold the political and military leaders involved in the conflict responsible and accountable for the safety of the United Nations peacekeeping personnel in the area.

The Council will remain actively seized of the matter, in particular with a view to considering what further steps might be necessary to ensure that resolution 802 (1993) and other relevant Council resolutions are fully implemented.

Decision of 8 June 1993 (3231st meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3231st meeting, on 8 June 1993, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Croatia, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Spain) then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁴³⁸

Having examined the situation in the United Nations Protected Areas (UNPAs) in the Republic of Croatia, the Security Council is deeply concerned by the failure of the Krajina Serbs to participate in talks on the implementation of its resolution 802 (1993) of 25 January 1993 which were to be held in Zagreb on 26 May 1993. It deplores the interruption of the dialogue between the parties, which had recently produced encouraging signs of progress.

The Council stresses its support for the peace process under the auspices of the Co-Chairmen of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia and urges the parties to solve all problems which might arise by peaceful means and resume the talks immediately with a view to the rapid implementation of resolution 802 (1993) and all other relevant resolutions. The Council expresses its willingness to help ensure the implementation of an agreement on this basis reached by the parties, including respect for the rights of the local Serb population.

The Council reminds the parties that the UNPAs are integral parts of the territory of Croatia, and that no action inconsistent with this would be acceptable.

The Council reiterates its demand that international humanitarian law be fully respected in the UNPAs.

The Council urges the Government of the Republic of Croatia, in cooperation with other interested parties, to take all necessary measures to ensure the full protection of the rights of all residents of the UNPAs when Croatia exercises fully its authority in these Areas.

Decision of 15 July 1993 (3255th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3255th meeting, on 15 July 1993, the Council included a letter dated 14 July 1993 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council in its agenda.⁴³⁹ The Secretary-General informed the Council that, in a letter dated 13 July 1993, the Croatian authorities had conveyed to UNPROFOR their intention to reopen the Maslenica bridge and the Zemunik airport on 18 July 1993. They had also requested UNPROFOR to take all necessary measures to “ensure that the event will pass without incident”. He further informed the Council that the local Serb authorities and the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia did not consider the planned event to be in conformity with Security Council resolutions 802 (1993) and 847 (1993) and that they perceived the planned events as a provocation. The Secretary-General had come to the conclusion that developments at the Maslenica bridge and the Zemunik airport in Croatia deserved the urgent attention of the Council, which might wish to consider the danger posed by that situation and decide upon appropriate action.

Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (United Kingdom) drew the attention of the members of the Council to a letter dated 12 July 1993 from the representative of Croatia addressed to the President of the Security Council in which he stated that his Government expected the Council and UNPROFOR to take the steps necessary to ensure that the reopening of the Maslenica bridge would not be interrupted.⁴⁴⁰

The President then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁴⁴¹

The Security Council is deeply concerned at the information contained in the letter of the Secretary-General dated 14 July 1993 on the situation in and around the United Nations Protected Areas (UNPAs) in the Republic of Croatia. It recalls its resolutions 802 (1993) of 25 January 1993 and 847 (1993) of 30 June 1993 and in particular the demand in the former that all parties and others concerned comply strictly with the ceasefire arrangements already agreed and the call on them in the latter to reach an agreement on confidence building measures.

The Council expresses its deep concern at the latest report on hostilities in the UNPAs, including in particular by the Krajina Serbs, and demands that these hostilities cease immediately.

The Council continues to attach the highest importance to securing the reopening of the Maslenica crossing to civilian traffic. In this context it reaffirms its support for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Croatia. It recognizes the real and legitimate concern of the Government of Croatia in such reopening, as set out in the letter dated 12 July 1993 from the Permanent Representative of Croatia. It also recalls the demand in its resolution 802 (1993) that the Croatian armed forces withdraw from the areas in question.

The Council considers that the planned unilateral reopening of the Maslenica bridge and of Zemunik airport on 18 July 1993, in the absence of agreement between the parties and others concerned in cooperation with the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR), would jeopardize the objectives of the Council's resolutions and in particular the call in its resolution 847 (1993) for agreement on confidence building measures and the efforts of the Co-Chairmen of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia and UNPROFOR to achieve a negotiated settlement to the problem. It urges the Government of Croatia to refrain from this action.

The Council expresses its support for the efforts of the Co-Chairmen and UNPROFOR and calls on the parties and others concerned to cooperate fully with them in this regard and to conclude rapidly the agreement on confidence building measures called for in its resolution 847 (1993). It joins the Secretary-General in his call to the parties and others concerned to act in a manner conducive to the maintenance of peace and to refrain from any action which would undermine these efforts, and calls upon the parties to assure UNPROFOR's freedom of access in particular to the area surrounding the Maslenica crossing.

Decision of 30 July 1993 (3260th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3260th meeting, on 30 July 1993, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (United Kingdom) stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁴⁴²

The Security Council has heard with deep concern the report from the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Former Yugoslavia on the situation in and around the United Nations Protected Areas (UNPAs) in the Republic of Croatia and in particular in respect of the Maslenica crossing.

The Council reaffirms the presidential statement of 15 July 1993. Following this statement the parties reached an agreement on 15/16 July 1993 at Erdut which requires the withdrawal of Croatian armed forces and police from the area of the Maslenica bridge by 31 July 1993 and the placing of the bridge under the exclusive control of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR).

The Council demands that the Croatian forces withdraw forthwith in conformity with the above-mentioned agreement and that they permit the immediate deployment of UNPROFOR. The Council also demands that the Krajina Serb forces refrain from entering the area. The Council calls for maximum restraint from all the parties, including the observance of a ceasefire.

The Council warns of the serious consequences of any failure to implement the above-mentioned agreement.

The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 27 August 1993: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

By a letter dated 20 August 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁴⁴³ the Secretary-General, recalling resolutions 771 (1992) of 15 August 1992 and 780 (1992) of 6 October 1992, stated that the Commission of Experts established pursuant to resolution 780 (1992) had been attempting to examine and analyse information relating to grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, and to uncover and establish evidence at mass grave sites in the United Nations Protected Areas in Croatia. The Government of the Netherlands had offered to provide free of cost an armed military engineer unit of up to 50 personnel to assist in the excavation of a mass grave site at Ovcara near Vukovar. The Secretary-General believed that this task could best be carried out by including the unit, on a temporary basis, UNPROFOR. The additional elements of the Force would be deployed in the area for a period of 10 weeks starting 1 September 1993, subject to the extension of the mandate of UNPROFOR which would expire on 30 September 1993. The Secretary-General stated that he would proceed on that basis, subject to the concurrence of the members of the Council.

By a letter dated 27 August 1993,⁴⁴⁴ the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General of the following:

The members of the Security Council have considered your letter of 20 August 1993 referring to Council resolutions 771 (1992) and 780 (1992). The members agree with your suggestion to accept the offer of the Government of the Netherlands to provide free of cost to the United Nations a 50-person engineering unit to assist in the excavation of a mass grave site at Ovcara near Vukovar, in the United Nations Protected Areas in Croatia, in the context of the work of the Commission of Experts established pursuant to resolution 780 (1992). They note the information contained in the letter, and agree with the proposal contained therein.

The members understand that the connection of the United Nations Protection Force with the engineering unit will be the provision of administrative and logistic support and protection.

Decision of 17 January 1995 (3491st meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3491st meeting, on 17 January 1995, the Council included a letter dated 12 January 1995 from the representative of Croatia addressed to the Secretary-General in its agenda.⁴⁴⁵ By that letter, the representative of Croatia transmitted a letter of the same date from the President of Croatia to the Secretary-General in which he stated that, despite its endeavours, UNPROFOR had been unable to implement the most important provisions of the Vance Plan and subsequent Security Council resolutions. Moreover, Croatia found the continued presence of UNPROFOR in the occupied territories to be largely counterproductive to the peace process. He further contented that the Serb intransigence and UNPROFOR's reserve were de facto allowing and promoting the occupation of parts of Croatia's territory. The "freezing" of a negative status quo was unacceptable. The President concluded that, although UNPROFOR had played an important role in stopping violence and major conflicts in Croatia, it was an indisputable fact that the present character of the UNPROFOR mission did not provide conditions necessary for establishing lasting peace and order in Croatia. Croatia was therefore terminating the UNPROFOR mandate, effective 31 March 1995, in accordance with Security Council resolution 947 (1994).

Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Croatia, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The President (Argentina) then stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁴⁴⁶

The Security Council, which has begun its consideration of the report of the Secretary-General of 14 January 1995 submitted pursuant to resolution 947(1994), has learned with concern of the position adopted by the Republic of Croatia on the extension of the mandate of the United Nations Protection Force in Croatia beyond 31 March 1995, as set out in the letter dated 12 January 1995 from the Permanent Representative of the Republic of Croatia to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General. It is particularly concerned about the wider implications of this development for the peace process throughout the former Yugoslavia. The Council reiterates its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Croatia within its internationally recognized borders. It understands the concerns of the Croatian Government about the lack of implementation of major provisions of the United Nations peacekeeping plan for Croatia. It will not accept the status quo becoming an indefinite situation. It believes, however, that the continued presence of the United Nations Protection Force in the Republic of Croatia is of vital importance for regional peace and security and that the United Nations, in general, and the Force, in particular, have a positive role to play in achieving the further implementation of the peacekeeping plan and bringing about a settlement which ensures full respect for the territorial integrity and sovereignty of Croatia. It recalls the important role the United Nations Protection Force plays in helping to sustain the ceasefire in Croatia, facilitating humanitarian activities and international relief work and supporting implementation of the economic agreement of 2 December 1994. It is in that perspective that the Council hopes that discussions over the weeks ahead will lead to a re-examination of the position now taken in relation to the continuing role of the United Nations Protection Force in the Republic of Croatia. Meanwhile, the Council calls upon all parties and others concerned to avoid any action or statement which might lead to an increase in tension. It welcomes the conclusion, under the auspices of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, of the economic agreement of 2 December 1994 and urges the parties to continue, and accelerate, its implementation; it notes the need for adequate international financial support and encourages the international community to respond to this need. It calls for the intensification in the coming weeks of all these efforts to consolidate this achievement and to bring about a political settlement in Croatia and it calls upon the parties to cooperate with these efforts and to negotiate in earnest to that end.

The Council affirms its commitment to the search for an overall negotiated settlement of the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia ensuring the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all the States there within their internationally recognized borders and stresses the importance it attaches to the mutual recognition thereof.

C. Navigation on the Danube river⁴⁴⁷

Initial proceedings

Decision of 28 January 1993: statement by the President

By a letter dated 27 January 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of Romania transmitted the declaration issued by his Government on 27 January 1993, concerning the situation created on the Danube river as a result of the flagrant violation of Security Council resolutions 757 (1992) and 787 (1992) by Yugoslav vessels transporting petroleum products.⁴⁴⁸ The representative of Romania underlined that cooperation between riparian States as well as international cooperation, including appropriate consideration and action by the Security Council, was necessary in order to compel the Yugoslav authorities to take immediate measures to stop the violation of the embargo by the Yugoslav vessels.

By a letter dated 28 January 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁴⁴⁹ the representative of Bulgaria transmitted the text of a press release of 27 January 1993 by his Ministry of Foreign Affairs regarding the recent incident involving the unauthorized passage of the Serbian convoy towed by the tugship Bihac through the Bulgarian-Romanian sector of the Danube. The Ministry stated that establishing close cooperation between Bulgarian and Romanian authorities was of decisive significance to prevent such incident in the future. He reiterated his appeal for the deployment of international sanctions monitoring missions at all ports along the Danube and stressed the urgent need for substantial technical support to assist his country and Romania in the implementation of the sanctions.

On 28 January 1993, after consultations with the members of the Council, the President made the following statement to the media on behalf of the members of the Council:⁴⁵⁰

In connection with letters dated 27 January from the representative of Romania and 28 January 1993 from the representative of Bulgaria to the President of the Security Council, the members of the Council heard a report from the Chairman of the Committee established by resolution 724 (1991) about Yugoslav vessels carrying oil from Ukraine to Serbia by way of the Danube, a flagrant violation of mandatory Security Council resolutions.

The members of the Council are concerned that these shipments are reported to have left Ukrainian territory after the adoption of resolution 757 (1992) of 30 May 1992 and indeed may have left after the adoption of resolution 787 (1992) of 16 November 1992. They call on the Government of Ukraine to ensure that no further such shipments are permitted.

The members of the Council are also extremely concerned that some of the vessels have already reached Serbia. In this regard, they demand that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) comply fully with the relevant resolutions. They have asked the President of the Council to convey their concern to the representatives of Romania and Bulgaria, to remind them of their clear obligations under the relevant resolutions and to seek an explanation of their failure to fulfil them. They have asked the President to draw particular attention to the relevant resolutions, which make clear the responsibility of all riparian States to take necessary measures to ensure that shipping on the Danube is in accordance with Council resolutions, including such enforcement measures commensurate with the specific circumstances as may be necessary to halt such shipping. The members of the Council reaffirm their support for vigorous enforcement of the relevant resolutions, and they are clear that the riparian States have the means to fulfil this obligation and that they must do so forthwith.

Decision of 10 February 1993: statement by the President

On 10 February 1993, after consultations with the members of the Council, the President made the following statement to the media on behalf of the members of the Council:⁴⁵¹

The members of the Security Council have heard a report from the Chairman of the Committee established by resolution 724 (1991) about the detention of Romanian vessels on the Danube by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).

They have learned that the Minister of Transport of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) has threatened to detain more Romanian vessels if Romania does not allow the passage of Yugoslav vessels on the Danube. They have also learned that that Minister has addressed a letter to the Chairman of the Committee established by resolution 724 (1991) informing him that the Romanian vessels would be released without further delay, which according to information provided by the Chargé d'affaires of the Permanent Mission of Romania to the United Nations has not yet happened.

The members of the Council recall their statement of 28 January 1993 about the responsibility of States to enforce mandatory Security Council resolutions, with particular reference to Yugoslav vessels attempting to violate those resolutions by way of the Danube. They commend the Romanian Government for the action it has since taken in this regard and reaffirm once again their full support for vigorous enforcement of the relevant resolutions.

They also recall that under Article 103 of the Charter, the obligations of the Members of the United Nations under the Charter prevail over their obligations under any other international agreement.

The members of the Council condemn any such retaliatory action and threats of such action by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). It is wholly unacceptable for those authorities to take retaliatory measures in response to action by a State in fulfilment of its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations. They demand that those authorities release forthwith the Romanian vessels they have unjustifiably detained, and that they desist from further unlawful detention.

Decision of 13 October 1993 (3290th meeting):
statement by the President

By a letter dated 11 October 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of Hungary reported that the blockade on the Danube at Belgrade, which had been initiated in mid-July by two Serbian non-governmental organizations, was continuing unabated.⁴⁵² Despite recent promises made by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to eliminate the blockade, Belgrade had taken no measures to remedy the situation. Moreover, the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia continued to impose tolls on vessels wishing to transit the Yugoslav section of the Danube, in violation of the Danube Convention and despite the call made on 3 September 1993 by the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 724 (1991) to cease their illegal action. Hungary, while firm in its commitment to the full implementation of its obligations arising in connection with the sanctions regime, was facing an increasingly complex task of stopping shipments falling under that regime and lacking proper authorization or carrying falsified documents. The letter noted that those shipments had, in many instances, crossed several international borders before reaching Hungary and it contended that Hungary's commitment to implementing the sanctions could be efficient only if it was sustained by the cooperation of all the States Members of the United Nations, in observance of the relevant Security Council resolutions.

At its 3290th meeting, on 13 October 1993, the Council included the above-mentioned letter in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Brazil) stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁴⁵³

The Security Council has learned with deep concern that the blocking of the Danube by two Serbian non-governmental organizations is still continuing and deplores the acquiescence of the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), which is reflected in the fact that they have failed to take any action to prevent these acts. It condemns these deliberate and unjustified acts of interference with the river traffic of several Member States of the United Nations. It emphasizes the importance it attaches to the free and unhindered navigation on the Danube, which is essential for legitimate trade in the region. It reminds the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) of their previous written commitment to secure free and safe navigation on this vital international waterway.

The Council is also concerned that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) continue to impose tolls on foreign vessels transiting the section of the Danube which passes through the territory of the Federal Republic. By extracting these payments, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) violates its international obligations. The Council rejects any attempt to justify, on whatever ground, the imposition of tolls on the Danube. It demands that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and any others imposing similar tolls cease such action immediately.

The Council condemns these illegal actions and reaffirms that it is wholly unacceptable for the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to take retaliatory measures in response to action by a State in fulfilment of its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations. It reminds the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) of its own international obligations and demands that its authorities ensure free movement of international traffic on the Danube.

The Council remains seized of the matter.

Decision of 14 March 1994 (3348th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 3348th meeting, on 14 March 1994, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (France) stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁴⁵⁴

The Security Council has taken note of the letters dated 10 and 14 March 1994 from the Chargé d'affaires a.i. of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). In these documents, his Government acknowledges that the Bulgarian convoy, the Han Kubrat, composed of 6 barges transporting 6,000 tons of diesel oil on the Danube, entered the territory of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) on the morning of 6 March 1994 at the port of Prahovo. The Government also recognizes that the cargo was unloaded and that the convoy returned to Bulgaria without it.

The Council most strongly condemns this flagrant violation by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) of the relevant resolutions of the Council prohibiting the shipment of commodities and products to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). It holds the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) fully accountable for the non-return of the cargo of the Han Kubrat.

The Council welcomes the cooperative attitude of the Bulgarian Government. It calls upon the authorities of Bulgaria to assess the precise circumstances of this act and to prosecute those responsible for it.

The Council reaffirms the importance it attaches to free and unimpeded navigation on the Danube, which is essential to legitimate commerce in the region. It again stresses that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) have undertaken in writing to guarantee the freedom and security of navigation on this crucial international waterway. It invites them to respect scrupulously their commitments in this regard.

The Council stands ready to address the issue again in the future.

Decision of 11 May 1995 (3533rd meeting):
resolution 992 (1995)

At its 3533rd meeting, on 11 May 1995, the Council included the item entitled "Navigation on the Danube river" in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (France) drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution that had been prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations⁴⁵⁵ and to a letter dated 8 May 1995 from the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 724 (1991) concerning Yugoslavia addressed to the President of the Security Council.⁴⁵⁶ The Chairman informed the Council that the Government of Romania, supported by other Danube riparian States, the Danube Commission and the European Union/Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe Sanctions Coordinator, had requested authorization for vessels of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to be allowed to use the Romanian locks of the Iron Gates I system, on the left bank of the Danube, while repairs were carried out to the locks on the right bank. The riparian States and international organizations concerned had asked for the Committee's assistance, stressing the importance for safe international navigation on the Danube of the Iron Gates I system being properly maintained and repaired. In considering the matter, the Committee had taken into account the need and readiness of Romania to ensure that vessels of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, if allowed to use the Romanian locks of the system, would not engage in any activities contravening the relevant Security Council resolutions. The Committee had therefore recommended, in view of the exceptional circumstances as well as the provisions contained in paragraph 16 of resolution 820 (1993), that the Security Council consider the adoption of a technical resolution on the matter.

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and was adopted unanimously as resolution 992 (1995), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions on the former Yugoslavia, in particular its resolution 820 (1993) of 17 April 1993,

Desiring to promote free and unhindered navigation on the Danube in accordance with those resolutions,

Recalling statements made by the President of the Security Council on freedom of navigation on the Danube, in particular that made on 13 October 1993 expressing concern about the imposition of illegal tolls on foreign vessels transiting the section of the Danube which passes through the territory of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), ⁴⁵⁵ S/1995/373.

⁴⁵⁶ S/1995/372.

Reminding States of their obligations under paragraph 5 of resolution 757 (1992) of 30 May 1992 not to make available to the authorities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) or to any commercial, industrial or public utility undertaking in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) any funds or any other financial or economic resources and to prevent their nationals from making available to those authorities or to any such undertaking any such funds or resources, and noting that flag States may submit claims to the authorities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) for reimbursement of tolls illegally imposed on their vessels transiting the section of the Danube which passes through the territory of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro),

Taking note of the letter dated 8 May 1995 from the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 724 (1991) regarding the use by vessels registered in, or owned or controlled by persons in, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) of the locks of the Iron Gates I system on the left bank of the Danube while repairs are carried out to the locks on the right bank,

Recognizing that the use by vessels registered in, or owned or controlled by persons in, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) of the locks will require an exemption from the provisions of paragraph 16 of resolution 820 (1993) and acting, in this respect, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the use of the locks of the Iron Gates I system on the left bank of the Danube by vessels (a) registered in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) or (b) in which a majority or controlling interest is held by a person or undertaking in or operating from the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) shall be permitted in accordance with this resolution;

2. Also decides that the present resolution shall come into force on the day following the receipt by the Council from the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 724 (1991) of a report by the Danube Commission that it is satisfied that preparations for the repairs to the locks of the Iron Gates I system on the right bank of the Danube have been completed, and that the present resolution shall remain in force, subject to paragraph 6 below, for a period of sixty days from the date on which it comes into force, and, unless the Council decides otherwise, for further periods of up to sixty days if the Council is notified by the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724 (1991) that each such further period is required for completion of the necessary repairs;

3. Requests the Government of Romania, with the assistance of the European Union/Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe Sanctions Assistance Missions, strictly to monitor this use, including, if necessary, by inspections of the vessels and their cargo, to ensure that no goods are loaded or unloaded during the passage by the vessels through the locks of the Iron Gates I system;

4. Also requests the Government of Romania to deny passage through the locks of the Iron Gates I system on the left bank of the Danube to any vessel using the locks of the Iron Gates I system under the authority of paragraph 1 above which is identified as being a party to any suspected or substantiated violation of the relevant Council resolutions;

5. Requests the Sanctions Assistance Missions Communications Centre to report to the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724 (1991) and to the Romanian authorities operating the locks of the Iron Gates I system on the left bank of the Danube any suspected violation of any of the relevant Council resolutions by vessels using the locks of the Iron Gates I system under the authority of paragraph 1 above and to transmit to the Committee and to the Romanian authorities evidence that any such violation has in fact occurred; and decides that the Chairman of the Committee shall, after consulting members of the Committee, transmit to the Council any substantiated evidence of such a violation forthwith;

6. Decides that the exemption provided for in paragraph 1 above shall terminate on the third working day after the Council receives substantiated evidence from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724 (1991) of a violation of any of the relevant resolutions of the Council by a vessel using the locks of the Iron Gates I system under the authority of paragraph 1 above, unless the Council decides to the contrary, and that the Government of Romania shall be so informed immediately;

7. Requests the Executive Director of the Danube Commission to inform the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724 (1991) of the date of completion of the repairs, or, if the repairs have not been completed within sixty days of the entry into force of the present resolution, or within the subsequent periods of up to sixty days for which the provisions of the present resolution may be extended, to provide the Chairman with a report on the state of the repairs ten days before the expiry of any such period;

8. Confirms that, in accordance with the provisions of resolution 760 (1992), the importation into the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) of supplies essential to the repair of the locks on the right bank of the Danube may be approved in accordance with the procedures of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724 (1991) at a meeting or meetings of the Committee;

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

D. United Nations Protection Force⁴⁵⁷

Decision of 19 February 1993 (3174th meeting): resolution 807 (1993)

On 10 February 1993, pursuant to resolution 743 (1992), the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a further report on the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR).⁴⁵⁸ The report was intended to provide a basis for the Security Council to take appropriate action on the future of the Force before its mandate expired on 21 February 1993. It focused primarily on the options available to the Council in relation to the UNPROFOR mandate in Croatia.

The Secretary-General observed that while the non-cooperation of the local Serb authorities had seriously retarded the implementation of the United Nations peace-keeping plan, the Croatian offensive on and after 22 January 1993 had significantly altered the realities on the ground. Following the offensive, the President of Croatia had indicated publicly that his Government was also prepared to invade the United Nations Protected Areas if UNPROFOR was unable to fulfil its mandate there. For its part, the Serb leadership in the United Nations Protected Areas had rearmed and remobilized its force in response to the Croatian offensive. In addition, the circumstances in which the peacekeeping plan had been drafted and agreed had themselves changed. The plan had been envisaged as an interim arrangement pending an overall political solution to the Yugoslav crisis. The Government of Croatia claimed there was no longer any “overall political solution” to negotiate. The only issue, in its view, was the return of the Protected Areas and the “pink zones” to Croatian control, with the Serb minority enjoying the rights granted by the Croatian Constitution and other legal instruments. The Serb leadership in the Protected Areas, however, refused to consider those territories to be part of Croatia and rejected talks on that basis. It further argued that the two parties to the original plan no longer have any locus standi in the area where UNPROFOR was deployed. The mandate and deployment of UNPROFOR must now be discussed with them as the sovereign “Republic of Serb Krajina”.

Noting that these positions appeared to be irreconcilable, the Secretary-General proposed the following options with regard to the UNPROFOR mandate: (a) to renew the mandate entrusted to UNPROFOR by resolution 743 (1992); (b) to modify that mandate; or (c) to give UNPROFOR no mandate in Croatia. Analysis of these options, however, did not indicate any clear way forward in a difficult situation not foreseen when the Security Council had decided to establish UNPROFOR. Two factors needed to be addressed before taking any decision regarding UNPROFOR. The first was the failure to implement the peacekeeping plan. The second was that it had not been possible to negotiate an agreed settlement to the conflict between Croatia and the Serbs populations living in the United Nations Protected Areas and the pink zones. He had therefore asked the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the former Yugoslavia to address those questions urgently, so that he could make a substantive recommendation for an extension of the UNPROFOR mandate. As it was unlikely that those results could be achieved by 21 February 1993, when the existing UNPROFOR mandate was due to expire, the Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend the mandate of the Force for an interim period, until 31 March 1993.

At its 3174th meeting, on 19 February 1993, the Council included the further report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Croatia, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also invited Ambassador Dragomir Djokic, at his request, to address the Council in the course of the discussion. The President (Morocco) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution that had been prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations⁴⁵⁹ and to several other documents.⁴⁶⁰

The representative of Croatia stated that his Government supported the Secretary-General's proposal for the provisional extension of the UNPROFOR mandate, as it would provide enough time for negotiations concerning all aspects of the UNPROFOR operation and for full implementation of the Vance plan. Referring to his letter dated 12 February 1993, he stressed that future United Nations operations in Croatia must be based on the following basic elements: complete demilitarization of the United Nations Protected Areas and pink zones; voluntary return of the refugees; control of Croatian international borders; confidence-building measures as a part of the process of reintegration of the Protected Areas and the pink zones into the Croatian State; and protection of national minorities and other human rights. Croatia was prepared to implement Security Council resolution 802 (1993) as a first step in the demilitarization process that would be fully established through the implementation of resolutions 762 (1992) and 769 (1992) and that would enable a comprehensive political solution under the auspices of the Conference on the Former Yugoslavia. Before concluding, the speaker expressed confidence that future decisions of the Council would give added credibility to the UNPROFOR operation, and would provide it with effective mechanisms to attain the goals foreseen in the Vance plan.⁴⁶¹

Mr. Djokic contended that the recent aggression of the Croatian Army against the United Nations

Protected Areas, UNPROFOR and the Serb civilian population, represented a flagrant violation of the Vance peace plan and of relevant Security Council resolutions, including resolutions 724 (1991) and 762 (1992). He argued that Croatia had ignored recent decisions of the Council, such as resolution 802 (1993) and the presidential statement of 27 January 1993, and that the Council had an obligation to take all appropriate measures, including those envisaged in Chapter VII, to make Croatia honour the Charter of the United Nations and all relevant Security Council resolutions. For its part, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia had fulfilled all obligations undertaken under the Vance plan and supported further engagement of UNPROFOR and full implementation of resolution 802 (1993). The speaker further argued that UNPROFOR had proved to be justified, thus creating the basic prerequisites for all open questions to be resolved. The Federal Republic of Yugoslavia had expected the UNPROFOR mandate to be extended for a year, however it supported the proposal contained in the draft resolution. It hoped that in the meantime the necessary conditions would be created so that the mandate could be further extended, as envisioned by the plan, until a comprehensive and peaceful solution was reached.⁴⁶²

Speaking before the vote, the representative of France stated that the security of UNPROFOR personnel was a priority for his Government, in considering the question of renewing the UNPROFOR mandate. Recent events in Croatia had demonstrated that there was an overriding need to endow the Force with both the legal basis and the military means to ensure its self-defence. In the circumstances, the Council's only option was to extend the mandate for an interim period of six weeks, but even for that brief period it had been "unthinkable" to extend the mandate in its current form. The French delegation had therefore proposed a draft resolution placing UNPROFOR within the framework of Chapter VII of the Charter, and it had suggested a series of concrete measures to ensure greater stability in the areas where UNPROFOR was deployed. The reference to Chapter VII was not designed to change the nature of the Force from peacekeeping to peacemaking. Rather, the sole consideration was “preventive security”, which was reflected in the text of the draft resolution.⁴⁶³

The representative of China said that the UNPROFOR mandate should be extended for an interim period. His delegation shared the concern of other delegations relating to the threat posed to the security of Force personnel and it supported the Secretary-General’s taking appropriate measures to strengthen the security of UNPROFOR personnel. In the light of that consideration, and of the fact that it had been repeatedly stated that the purpose of invoking Chapter VII of the Charter in the draft resolution was to take measures to increase appropriately the UNPROFOR self-defence capability, his delegation would vote in favour of the draft resolution. The speaker, however, pointed out that UNPROFOR was a peacekeeping operation and that Chapter VII had not been invoked either in resolution 743 (1992) or in subsequent resolutions relating to the matter, nor did the Secretary-General’s report contained such request. The question could have been settled through the expanded concept of self-defence and rules of engagement, and by taking appropriate measures without invoking Chapter VII. China wished to place on record its understanding that the practice of invoking Chapter VII was exceptional and did not constitute a precedent for future peacekeeping operations.⁴⁶⁴

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that his delegation considered the demand contained in the draft resolution for the rapid implementation of resolution 802 (1993) and other resolutions to be extremely important. It was important to exert a “balanced influence” over those involved in the Yugoslav crisis, in the interest of prompt settlement. The Russian Federation believed that, should Croatia fail to meet the demands contained in resolution 802 (1993) and other Security Council resolutions, sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter should also be applied to Croatia. The Russian Federation also supported the provisions in the draft resolution that sought to strengthen the security of UNPROFOR personnel.⁴⁶⁵

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 807 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 743 (1992) of 21 February 1992 and all subsequent resolutions relating to the United Nations Protection Force,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 10 February 1993,

Deeply concerned by the lack of cooperation of the parties and others concerned in implementing the United Nations peacekeeping plan in Croatia,

Deeply concerned also by the recent and repeated violations by the parties and others concerned of their ceasefire obligations,

Determining that the situation thus created constitutes a threat to peace and security in the region,

Noting in that context the request of the Secretary-General to the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, mentioned in his report, to establish as soon as possible, through discussions with the parties, a basis on which the mandate of the Force could be renewed,

Determined to ensure the security of the Force, and to this end acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Demands that the parties and others concerned comply fully with the United Nations peacekeeping plan in Croatia and with the other commitments they have undertaken and in particular with their ceasefire obligations;

2. Demands also that the parties and others concerned refrain from positioning their forces in the proximity of units of the United Nations Protection Force in the United Nations Protected Areas and in the pink zones;

3. Demands the full and strict observance of all relevant Security Council resolutions relating to the mandate and operations of the Force in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

4. Demands further that the parties and others concerned respect fully unimpeded freedom of movement of the Force, enabling it, inter alia, to carry out all necessary concentrations and deployments, all movements of equipment and weapons and all humanitarian and logistical activities;

5. Decides, in the context of these demands, to extend the mandate of the Force for an interim period terminating on 31 March 1993;

6. Urges the parties and others concerned fully to cooperate with the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia in the discussions under their auspices in order to ensure full implementation of the United Nations peacekeeping mandate in Croatia, including, inter alia, through the collection and supervision of heavy weapons by the Force and the appropriate withdrawal of forces;

7. Invites the Secretary-General to work to achieve the rapid implementation of the United Nations peacekeeping mandate and of relevant Security Council resolutions, including resolution 802 (1993) of 25 January 1993, thus to ensure security and stability throughout the Protected Areas and the pink zones;

8. Also invites the Secretary-General, during the interim period and in consultation with the force contributing States, to take, in accordance with paragraph 17 of his report, all appropriate measures to strengthen the security of the Force, in particular by providing it with the necessary defensive means, and to study the possibility of carrying out such local redeployment of military units as is required to ensure their protection;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the further extension of the mandate of the Force, including financial estimates for all its activities as proposed in his report of 10 February 1993;

10. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 30 March 1993 (3189th meeting):
resolution 815 (1993)

On 25 March 1993, pursuant to resolution 807 (1993), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on the further extension of the UNPROFOR mandate.⁴⁶⁶ The Secretary-General informed the Council that in accordance with resolution 807 (1993), the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia had held several rounds of talks, in New York and Geneva, with representatives of the Government of Croatia and the Serb population living in the United Nations Protected Areas and the pink zones. While some progress had been made in the talks, fundamental differences remained. It appeared, therefore, that more time would be needed to bring the negotiations to a meaningful conclusion. However, as any termination of the UNPROFOR presence in Croatia would entail the strong likelihood of an outbreak of renewed hostilities, the Secretary-General recommended that the Force's mandate be extended for a further interim period of three months. In the meantime, the Secretary-General had requested the Co-Chairmen to continue their efforts to obtain renewed commitment by the parties to the United Nations peacekeeping plan and to the implementation of resolution 802 (1993) and other relevant resolutions.

At its 3189th meeting, held on 30 March 1993, the Council continued its discussion under the item entitled "Report of the Secretary-General pursuant to Security Council resolution 807 (1993)". Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Croatia, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (New Zealand) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution that had been prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations,⁴⁶⁷ to the report of the Secretary-General and to several other documents.⁴⁶⁸

Speaking before the vote, the representative of France stated that his delegation welcomed the draft resolution, which strengthened the recourse to Chapter VII by extending it to the question of the freedom of movement of UNPROFOR. The draft resolution also extended the Force's mandate for an interim period and provided that the Council would reconsider the situation of UNPROFOR within one month and, if necessary, would draw the appropriate conclusions. He warned that, should the fighting continue, a series of firm measures would have to be considered and implemented. These measures could include: the use of all necessary measures to strengthen the monitoring of the embargo, or the adoption of new measures; the deployment or reinforcement of observers on the Bosnian-Croatian border; the broadening of the application of Chapter VII when the mandate of the Force was next renewed; or, if the situation called for it, the partial or total withdrawal of the Force. The speaker concluded by stating that the principle of respect for Croatia's territorial integrity must be solemnly established.⁴⁶⁹

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 815 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 743 (1992) of 21 February 1992 and all subsequent resolutions relating to the United Nations Protection Force,

Reaffirming in particular its commitment to ensure respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Croatia and of the other Republics where the Force is deployed,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 25 and 26 March 1993,

Deeply concerned at the continuing violations by the parties and others concerned of their ceasefire obligations,

Determining that the situation thus created continues to constitute a threat to peace and security in the region,

Determined to ensure the security of the Force and its freedom of movement for all its missions, and to these ends acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General, in particular its paragraph 5;

2. Reaffirms all the provisions of its resolutions 802 (1993) of 25 January 1993 and 807 (1993) of 19 February 1993;

3. Decides to reconsider one month after the date of the adoption of the present resolution, or at any time at the request of the Secretary-General, the mandate of the United Nations Protection Force in the light of developments of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia and the situation on the ground;

4. Decides, in this context, further to extend the mandate of the Force for an additional interim period terminating on 30 June 1993;

5. Supports the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia in their efforts to help to define the future status of those territories comprising the United Nations Protected Areas, which are integral parts of the territory of the Republic of Croatia, and demands full respect for international humanitarian law, and in particular the Geneva Conventions, in these Areas;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report urgently to the Security Council on how the United Nations peace plan for Croatia can be effectively implemented;

7. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of Hungary stated that his country had voted in favour of resolution 815 (1993), even though it could not yet indicate the tasks that the United Nations would have to bear in the future in the settlement of the crisis of the former Yugoslavia. He further noted that his delegation did not regard the resolution just adopted as merely a technical extension of the UNPROFOR mandate for another three months. The resolution again reaffirmed that any future mandate must be based on respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Croatia, and that the United Nations Protected Areas were an integral part of the territory of the Republic of Croatia. The Security Council was therefore clearly establishing the framework within which the parties in Croatia would continue political negotiations.⁴⁷⁰

The representative of the United States welcomed the resolution just adopted, which recognized that UNPROFOR was doing its best to contain the fighting and to create conditions for the peaceful resolution of the conflict. Unfortunately, United Nations efforts had not been totally successful. In Croatia, for example, the inability of UNPROFOR to implement the United Nations peacekeeping plan had been partially responsible for the renewal of fighting. That was why the Council was acting to create conditions for the complete implementation of that plan. The United States also believed it important to stress that the United Nations Protected Areas were integral parts of Croatia.⁴⁷¹

The representative of China noted that his delegation supported the principles contained in the resolution just adopted, particularly that of ensuring the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Croatia. He also reiterated his country's position that the application of Chapter VII of the Charter was due to the special and specific needs of Croatia and that it should not constitute a precedent for the peacekeeping operations of the United Nations.⁴⁷²

developments relating to the UNPROFOR mandate in Croatia.⁴⁷³

The Secretary-General noted that developments since the establishment of UNPROFOR had done little to alleviate his original apprehension that there remained a number of unanswered questions about the extent to which the Force would receive the necessary cooperation. The Serb side had taken the presence of UNPROFOR as a licence to freeze the status quo in place, under UNPROFOR “protection” while establishing a “state” of the “Republic of Serb Krajina” in the UNPROFOR area of responsibility. The Croatian side, meanwhile, had insisted that since the plan was drafted, the “overall political solution” that was sought at the time had been found with the recognition of Croatia and its admission to the United Nations; the Serbs must therefore accept the authority of Zagreb, which they had rebelled against in the first place.

The Secretary-General further noted that while UNPROFOR had succeeded in ensuring the complete withdrawal from the United Nations Protected Areas, it had not been able to fulfil other aspects of the original peacekeeping plan. The Serbs had failed to demilitarize the Protected Areas and as a result, little progress had been made towards the return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes in the Protected Areas. They had also refused to cooperate with UNPROFOR in the implementation of resolutions 762 (1992) and 769 (1992). They had imposed restrictions on the UNPROFOR monitoring function. The Croatian side, in turn, had manifested its impatience with the United Nations, launching military offensives across the line of confrontation. The view of the Government of Croatia was that UNPROFOR should be given enforcement powers to oblige the Serbs to comply with Security Council resolutions, and to do so with specific objectives against a set timetable, failing which the Government had made it clear it would not agree to further extensions of the UNPROFOR mandate. In the light of the virtually irreconcilable differences between the parties, the Secretary-General proposed the following options: (a) to declare the mandate unworkable and to withdraw the Force; (b) to accept the Croatian view and approve enforcement action to exact compliance from the Serbs; and (c) to leave UNPROFOR in place, with no change in mandate but with limited enhancements of its military capacity. In addition, he proposed certain enhancements to the strength of UNPROFOR.⁴⁷⁴

The Secretary-General, however, decided to await a report from the Co-Chairman of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia and Special Representative in the former Yugoslavia before making any recommendations to the Council. The Secretary-General also underscored the importance of pursuing, as soon as possible and parallel to the work of the peacekeeping force, a process of active negotiation under the auspices of the Conference, in order to find long-term political solutions to the question of the United Nations Protected Areas and the relationship between Croats and Serbs in Croatia.

On 24 June 1993, pursuant to resolution 815 (1993), the Secretary-General submitted a further report on UNPROFOR.⁴⁷⁵ The report focused primarily on the activities of UNPROFOR in Croatia, as developments in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and in Bosnia and Herzegovina appeared to warrant an extension of the Force’s mandate in those areas.

The Secretary-General reported that, although intensive efforts had been made by the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia and by UNPROFOR, no significant progress had occurred. At the same time, the presence of UNPROFOR was indispensable to control the conflict and to foster a climate in which negotiations between parties could be promoted. The continued presence of UNPROFOR could be justified by the fact that it was playing a role in preventing the resumption or escalation of conflict, by providing a “breathing space” for the continued efforts of the Co-Chairmen, and by supporting the provision of essential humanitarian assistance to the victims of the conflict. According to the Co-Chairmen, the termination of the mandate would risk the resumption of a major conflict in the region and cause severe adverse consequences for humanitarian relief operations. In view of those considerations, the Secretary-General recommended that UNPROFOR be maintained with its existing mandate, and its mandate be extended for a further period of three months, until 30 September 1993. He noted, however, that significant progress would be required in the “peacemaking” efforts of the Co-Chairmen if a further renewal were to be contemplated. He also warned that, should the threats to the safety of security of United Nations personnel become even more serious, he would have to inform the Council that a viable basis for the continuation of the Force no longer existed.

⁴⁷⁴ The enhancements (see S/25777, paras. 22, 24 and 25) were subsequently referred to by the Council in resolution 847 (1993), para. 1. For details relating to the enhancements, see chapter V.

At its 3248th meeting, on 30 June 1993, the Council included in its agenda the item entitled “United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR)”, as well as the above-mentioned reports. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Croatia, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Spain) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution⁴⁷⁶ that had been prepared in the course of the Council’s prior consultations and to several other documents,⁴⁷⁷ including a letter dated 25 June from the representative of Croatia to the Secretary-General. The letter transmitted a letter of the same date from the President of Croatia in which he stated that a limited extension of the UNPROFOR mandate was only partially acceptable, namely, for a period of one month. However, if progress was made during that one-month period, Croatia would be willing to accept the prolongation of the role of UNPROFOR in Croatia under a new mandate. The new mandate must give UNPROFOR the authority and instructions to enforce and implement all the relevant resolutions of the Council in accordance with a specific timetable. Moreover, any agreement on the new mandate could be concluded only between Croatia and the United Nations and be separated from the UNPROFOR mandates in Bosnia and Herzegovina and Macedonia.

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 847 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 743 (1992) of 21 February 1992 and all subsequent resolutions relating to the United Nations Protection Force,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General of 15 and 25 May 1993 and of 24 June 1993,

Having considered also the letter dated 26 June 1993 from the President of the Republic of Croatia addressed to the Secretary-General,

Recalling the overwhelming importance of seeking, on the basis of the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, comprehensive political solutions to the conflicts in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, and of sustaining confidence and stability in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia,

Strongly condemning continuing military attacks within the territory of the Republic of Croatia and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and reaffirming its commitment to ensure respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Croatia and of the other Member States where the Force is deployed,

Calling on the parties and others concerned to reach an agreement on confidence-building measures in the territory of Croatia, including the opening of the railroad between Zagreb and Split, the highway between Zagreb and Zupanja, and the Adriatic oil pipeline, securing the uninterrupted traffic across the Maslenica straits, and restoring the supply of electricity and water to all regions of Croatia, including the United Nations Protected Areas,

Determined to ensure the security of the Force and its freedom of movement for all its missions, and to these ends, as regards the Force in Croatia and in Bosnia and Herzegovina, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General of 24 June 1993 and the request for additional resources contained in paragraphs 22, 24 and 25 of his report of 15 May 1993;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report one month after the adoption of the present resolution on progress towards implementation of the United Nations peacekeeping plan for Croatia and all relevant Security Council resolutions, taking into account the position of the Government of Croatia, and decides to reconsider, in the light of that report, the mandate of the United Nations Protection Force in the territory of the Republic of Croatia;

3. Decides, in this context, to extend the mandate of the Force for an additional interim period terminating on 30 September 1993;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council regularly informed on developments in regard to the implementation of the mandate of the Force;

5. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 20 August 1993: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

By a letter dated 18 August 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁴⁷⁸ the Secretary-General reported that, following the necessary training exercises in coordination with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), the United Nations now had the initial operational capability for the use of air power in support of the United Nations Protection Force in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

By a letter dated 20 August 1993,⁴⁷⁹ the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General of the following:

I have the honour to inform you that I have shared the contents of your letter to me of 18 August 1993, in which you informed me that the United Nations now has the initial operational capability for the use of air power in support of the United Nations Protection Force in Bosnia and Herzegovina, with all members of the Security Council.

Decision of 30 September 1993 (3284th meeting): resolution 869 (1993)

On 20 September 1993, pursuant to resolution 743 (1992), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a further report on UNPROFOR⁴⁸⁰ to assist the Council in its deliberations on the renewal of the mandate of UNPROFOR.

The Secretary-General reported that the President of Croatia, in a letter to him dated 13 September 1993, had advanced a number of considerations which he wished to be taken into account. One of his suggestions was that UNPROFOR be divided into three parts — UNPROFOR (Croatia), UNPROFOR (Bosnia and Herzegovina) and UNPROFOR (the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia) — while retaining its integrated military, logistical and administrative structure under the command of one Special Representative of the Secretary-General and one theatre Force Commander. In view of the importance attached by the Croatian authorities to such a division, and taking into account the circumstances prevailing on the ground at that time, the Secretary-General had decided to grant this suggestion favourable consideration.

Turning to the question of the UNPROFOR mandate, the Secretary-General reiterated that the fundamental solution to the conflict needed to be sought through political dialogue. The parties bore the primary responsibility for achieving such a solution and they needed to take steps towards reconciliation. In that process, the principal objective of UNPROFOR could only be to keep the peace, thus permitting negotiations to take place on an overall political settlement. Despite the fact that conditions on the ground had prevented UNPROFOR from carrying out essential elements of its mandate, its presence in Croatia had nevertheless helped to contain a volatile situation. The Secretary-General therefore recommended that the Security Council renew the UNPROFOR mandate for a period of six months; demand that the parties in Croatia conclude an immediate ceasefire and cooperate with UNPROFOR, so that it might fulfil the peacekeeping aspects of its mandate; and direct the parties to cooperate with UNPROFOR in restoring water, power, communications and other economic necessities. To enhance the security force, he had requested the extension of close air support to the territory of Croatia. He would report to the Council by 30 November 1993 on the progress achieved by the Co-Chairmen and UNPROFOR and make further recommendations.⁴⁸¹

At its 3284th meeting, on 30 September 1993, the Council included the above-mentioned report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Venezuela) drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution that had been prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations,⁴⁸² and to other documents.⁴⁸³

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 869 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 743 (1992) of 21 February 1992 and all subsequent resolutions relating to the United Nations Protection Force,

Reiterating its determination to ensure the security of the Force and its freedom of movement for all its missions, and to these ends, as regards the Force in the Republic of Croatia and in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

At its 3285th meeting, on 1 October 1993, the Council continued its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Brazil) drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution that had been prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations⁴⁸⁴ and to a revision that had been made to the draft in its provisional form.

The draft resolution, as orally revised, was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 870 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 743 (1992) of 21 February 1992 and all subsequent resolutions relating to the United Nations Protection Force,

Reiterating its determination to ensure the security of the Force and its freedom of movement for all its missions, and to these ends, as regards the Force in the Republic of Croatia and in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Protection Force for an additional period terminating on 5 October 1993;

2. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 4 October 1993 (3286th meeting):
resolution 871 (1993)

At its 3286th meeting, on 4 October 1993, the Council continued its consideration of the item. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (Brazil) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution that had been prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations,⁴⁸⁵ and to several other documents,⁴⁸⁶ including a letter dated 24 September 1993 from the representative of Croatia addressed to the President of the Security Council, transmitting a letter of the same date from the Minister for Foreign Affairs addressed to the President of the Security Council. In that letter, the Minister outlined certain measures which his Government insisted should be an essential part of the future of the UNPROFOR presence on the territory of Croatia. If such measures were not incorporated in the Council's resolution concerning the extension of the UNPROFOR mandate, Croatia would consider the mandate terminated and would request the withdrawal of all UNPROFOR contingents by 30 November 1993.

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 871 (1993), which reads:

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 743 (1992) of 21 February 1992 and all subsequent resolutions relating to the United Nations Protection Force,

Reaffirming also its resolution 713 (1991) of 25 September 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 20 September 1993,

Having also considered the letter of the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Croatia dated 24 September 1993, ⁴⁸⁵ S/26518.

⁴⁸⁶ Letter dated 17 September 1993 from the representative of Yugoslavia addressed to the Secretary-General (S/26464); letter dated 19 September 1993 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/26468); letter dated 24 September 1993 from the representative of Croatia addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/26491); and letter dated 30 September 1993 from the representatives of China, France, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States addressed to the Secretary-General, transmitting the text of the statement issued on 30 September 1993 by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the five permanent members of the Security Council following a meeting with the Secretary-General (S/26517).

Deeply concerned that the United Nations peacekeeping plan for the Republic of Croatia, and all relevant Council resolutions, in particular resolution 769 (1992) of 7 August 1992, have not yet been fully implemented,

Reiterating its determination to ensure the security of the Force and its freedom of movement for all its missions, and to these ends, as regards the Force in the Republic of Croatia and in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 20 September 1993, in particular paragraph 16 thereof;

2. Notes the intention of the Secretary-General to establish, as described in his report, three subordinate commands within the United Nations Protection Force — UNPROFOR (Croatia), UNPROFOR (Bosnia and Herzegovina) and UNPROFOR (the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia) — while retaining the existing dispositions in all other respects for the direction and conduct of the United Nations operation in the territory of the former Yugoslavia;

3. Condemns once again continuing military attacks within the territory of the Republic of Croatia and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and reaffirms its commitment to ensure respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Croatia, of Bosnia and Herzegovina and of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, where the Force is deployed;

4. Reaffirms the crucial importance of the full and prompt implementation of the United Nations peacekeeping plan for the Republic of Croatia, including the provisions of the plan concerning the demilitarization of the United Nations Protected Areas, and calls upon the signatories of that plan and all others concerned, in particular the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), to cooperate in its full implementation;

5. Declares that continued non-cooperation in the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the Security Council or external interference, in respect of the full implementation of the United Nations peacekeeping plan for the Republic of Croatia, would have serious consequences, and in this connection affirms that full normalization of the international community's position towards those concerned will take into account their actions in implementing all relevant Council resolutions, including those relating to the peacekeeping plan for Croatia;

6. Calls for an immediate ceasefire agreement between the Government of Croatia and the local Serb authorities in the Protected Areas, mediated under the auspices of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, and urges them to cooperate fully and unconditionally in its implementation, as well as in the implementation of all the relevant Council resolutions;

7. Stresses the importance it attaches, as a first step towards the implementation of the United Nations peacekeeping plan for the Republic of Croatia, to the process of restoration of the authority of the Republic of Croatia in the pink zones, and in this context calls for the revival of the Joint Commission established under the chairmanship of the United Nations Protection Force;

8. Urges all the parties and others concerned to cooperate with the Force in reaching and implementing an agreement on confidence-building measures including the restoration of electricity, water and communications in all regions of Croatia, and stresses in this context the importance it attaches to the opening of the railroad between Zagreb and Split, the highway between Zagreb and Zupanja, and the Adriatic oil pipeline, securing the uninterrupted traffic across the Maslenica strait, and restoring the supply of electricity and water to all regions of Croatia including the Protected Areas;

9. Authorizes the Force, in carrying out its mandate in Croatia, acting in self-defence, to take the necessary measures, including the use of force, to ensure its security and its freedom of movement;

10. Decides to continue to review urgently the extension of close air support to the Force in the territory of Croatia as recommended by the Secretary-General in his report of 20 September 1993;

11. Decides in this context to extend the mandate of the Force for an additional period terminating on 31 March 1994;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to report two months after the adoption of the present resolution on progress towards implementation of the United Nations peacekeeping plan for the Republic of Croatia and all relevant Security Council resolutions, taking into account the position of the Croatian Government, as well as on the outcome of the negotiations within the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, and decides to reconsider the mandate of the Force in the light of that report;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly informed on developments in regard to the implementation of the Force's mandate;

14. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of France noted that it had not been easy to negotiate the resolution just adopted, for it had not been a "routine" extension of the mandate of UNPROFOR. The Council had had to take into account the concerns of the parties, as well as new operational needs. It had attempted to respond to Croatia's requests, without running the risk of promising more than it could deliver. He contended that the resolution established a balance between the legitimate concerns of the Croatian Government and the means available to the Council and UNPROFOR. His delegation understood that the Council would be able to take action the following week on the Secretary-General's proposal to extend close air support in Bosnia and Herzegovina to UNPROFOR operations in Croatia.⁴⁸⁷

The representative of the United States stated that her delegation considered the extension of the UNPROFOR mandate essential to the international community's efforts to minimize the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, prevent it from spreading, provide humanitarian relief and, most important, facilitate negotiated solutions to all aspects of the conflict. She also observed that, although much attention had been focused on the operations of UNPROFOR in Croatia, it was important to emphasize that the UNPROFOR mandate and the effects of its extension applied with equal importance to Bosnia and Herzegovina and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. What was important also was to look to the future and begin the difficult work of implementing the Vance plan in good faith. Before concluding, she observed that, while UNPROFOR (Croatia) would become one of the subordinate commands within the integrated command structure of UNPROFOR as a whole, the resolution just adopted established no precedent for the command and control arrangements for any peacekeeping force that might be led by NATO in order to implement a peace agreement in Bosnia.⁴⁸⁸

The representative of China noted that the consent of the parties was a precondition to the deployment of United Nations peacekeeping operations and the extension of their mandates. Since the Croatian Government had agreed to the extension of the mandate, the Chinese delegation had voted in favour of the resolution just adopted. The speaker further stated that China was not in favour of invoking Chapter VII of the Charter in peacekeeping operations, nor was it in favour of using sanctions as a means to resolve conflicts. His delegation therefore had reservations on certain elements in the resolution. In addition, prudence should be exercised with regard to the extension of air support to UNPROFOR in Croatia, so as to avoid further complicating the matter and adversely affecting the political settlement process.⁴⁸⁹

The representative of Hungary stated that his delegation had voted in favour of the resolution just adopted because it wished to maintain UNPROFOR operations on the territory of Croatia and to do everything possible to prevent a resurgence of armed hostilities along its southern borders. Hungary gave its full support to the resolution because it reflected the special problems facing Croatia and the region. It hoped that the resolution might help to create the necessary conditions for a peaceful settlement of all disputes on the basis of respect for the principles of territorial integrity and the rights of ethnic communities.⁴⁹⁰

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that UNPROFOR was playing a particularly important role in stabilizing the situation and creating conditions for the implementation of agreements that remained to be signed. He cautioned that withdrawing United Nations forces from Croatia, could have "catastrophic consequences", leading to an escalation of the entire conflict in the former Yugoslavia. He also noted that, pursuant to the resolution just adopted, the Council would continue to review urgently the question of extending close air support to UNPROFOR in Croatia. The Russian delegation understood that the mechanism for such an extension would be the same as that provided for in resolution 836 (1993). It was also important that an agreement be reached on confidence-building measures, which could be promoted by restoring water and electricity supplies and communications, and by satisfying other economic needs of the people.⁴⁹¹

Decision of 17 December 1993: letter from the President to the Secretary-General

On 1 December 1993, pursuant to resolution 871 (1993), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on progress towards implementation of the United Nations peacekeeping plan for Croatia and all relevant Security Council resolutions, as well as on the outcome of talks within the framework of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia.⁴⁹²

The Secretary-General reported that a series of talks, chaired by the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, had been held between the parties during November 1993. The aims of the talks had been to discuss a ceasefire, economic reconstruction and political questions. While some progress had been made towards a ceasefire and in identifying economic matters of mutual interest, both sides had requested modifications to the proposed ceasefire agreement. In the meantime, they had agreed to establish a military Joint Commission to work on outstanding areas of dispute in relation to the lines of separation that would be used once the ceasefire was implemented. The Secretary-General observed that the various initiatives that were under way could pave the way for implementation of the peacekeeping plan.⁴⁹³ Progress was slow and was quickly halted if one side attacked territory held by the other. He did not recommend reconsideration by the Council of the UNPROFOR mandate. However, it was essential that the two sides intensify their efforts for the achievement of a ceasefire agreement, for the institution of practical measures of economic cooperation and for the negotiation of a lasting political settlement.⁴⁹⁴

By a letter dated 17 December 1993,⁴⁹⁵ the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General of the following:

The members of the Security Council have taken note of your report of 1 December 1993 submitted pursuant to Security Council resolution 871 (1993), in the light of which they have completed the review provided for in paragraph 12 of that resolution.

They share the observations contained in paragraph 16 of this report regarding the mandate of the United Nations Protection Force.

Decision of 31 March 1994 (3356th meeting):
resolution 908 (1994)

On 11 March 1994, pursuant to resolution 900 (1994), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on UNPROFOR.⁴⁹⁶

The Secretary-General noted that the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina was undergoing rapid changes, which had provided a multitude of new opportunities to make significant progress towards a peaceful settlement. The significant developments that had taken place during the reporting period included the active and direct involvement of major powers in the negotiation process and the signature of a ceasefire agreement, on 23 February in Zagreb, between the Army of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Croatian Defence Council. In addition, the signing on 1 March 1994 of the Framework Agreement establishing a Federation in the Areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina with a Majority Bosniac and Croatian Population, and the Outline of a Preliminary Agreement for a Confederation between the Republic of Croatia and that Federation had opened new avenues for a political settlement.

Given that fluid situation, the Secretary-General could only provide an outline of the major concepts and requirements of UNPROFOR.⁴⁹⁷ The Secretary-General also commented on the utility of extending the concept of safe areas to Mostar, Vitez and Maglaj. While he did not believe there was a need to apply the protection defined in resolutions 824 (1993) and 836 (1993) to Mostar and Vitez where the ceasefire prevailed, he was of the opinion that, in view of the continuing hostilities in and around Maglaj, there may be a merit in extending the safe area concept to this city.

The Secretary-General further observed that the recent developments in Bosnia had created a new situation, which should provide numerous opportunities for UNPROFOR to make substantial progress in the implementation of the mandates entrusted to it. At that critical juncture, however, the ability of UNPROFOR was severely limited by the lack of military resources. He therefore recommended that the Council consider increasing the authorized strength of UNPROFOR to 8,250 additional troops. Should the Council decide to extend the safe area concept to Maglaj, an additional 1,500 troops would be required.

On 16 March 1994, pursuant to resolution 871 (1993), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report containing a comprehensive review of the role and functioning of UNPROFOR.⁴⁹⁸

⁴⁹³ The report mentioned the peace initiative of the President of Croatia, Franjo Tudjman (S/26681, appendix), which addressed the situations in the United Nations Protected Areas and in Bosnia, and future cooperation in the area of the former Yugoslavia.

⁴⁹⁴ The Secretary-General's observations (S/26828, para. 16), were referred to in the letter subsequently addressed to him by the President of the Security Council.

⁴⁹⁵ S/26890.

⁴⁹⁶ S/1994/291 and Corr.1 and Add.1.

⁴⁹⁷ For details see section II of the report of the Secretary-General. The proposals in section II were subsequently endorsed by the Council in resolution 908 (1994), para. 11.

⁴⁹⁸ S/1994/300.

The Secretary-General observed that the dilemma confronting the international community as the expiry of the Force's current mandate approached, was whether to consider that the limited successes of UNPROFOR continued to justify the United Nations enormous expenditure of resources and lives or whether the Force's ability to implement all the tasks assigned to it warrant an end to, or reduction of, its efforts. Another option would be to redefine its mandates commensurate with the resources the international community was prepared to make available to UNPROFOR. However, he did not believe that at that stage extensive redefinition was advisable. As he had previously pointed out to the Council, the choice in Croatia was between continuing a mission that was clearly unable to fulfil its original mandate in full or withdrawing and risking a renewed war that would probably result in appeals for UNPROFOR to return to restore peace. Given such a choice, soldiering on in hope seemed preferable to withdrawing in abdication. In Bosnia and Herzegovina, the continued deployment of UNPROFOR would serve a three-pronged strategy: (a) to use military means for humanitarian purposes; (b) to seek to end the conflict itself by creating conditions favourable to diplomatic negotiations on a political settlement; and (c) to provide a capacity to help the parties to implement agreements resulting from the diplomatic negotiations. Since the demilitarization of Sarajevo in February 1994, the military means of the international community were being used more directly to serve its diplomatic objectives. That offered new grounds for hope for an overall solution.

The Secretary-General therefore recommended the renewal of the UNPROFOR mandate for a further 12 months beyond 31 March 1994. That period was proposed in the interest of efficiency, although he would be prepared, should the situation on the ground improve, to recommend reducing the duration of the Force's mandate. He also recommended that authority for close air support be extended to the territory of Croatia.

On 24 March 1994, pursuant to resolutions 844 (1993), 836 (1993) and 776 (1992), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report containing his plans to direct UNPROFOR to reopen Tuzla airport for the delivery of humanitarian supplies and related purposes.⁴⁹⁹

⁴⁹⁹ S/1994/333 and Add.1.

The Secretary-General noted that the opening of Tuzla airport had been repeatedly requested by the Tuzla authorities since the spring of 1993. While the Bosnian Serb authorities on the ground had not previously raised objections to the opening of the airport under United Nations control, Mr. Karadzic, at a meeting on 18 November 1993, with the United Nations, had refused to permit its opening prior to the conclusion of an overall settlement, stating his strong fear of possible misuse of the airport for military purposes. That same position was repeated on several other occasions. Given the increasing humanitarian need, the Secretary-General had requested UNPROFOR to draw up a detailed plan for the opening of Tuzla airport. That plan described three scenarios based on varying degrees of consent of the parties. The Special Representative of the Secretary-General had been liaising with the parties to open the airport with their consent. On 6 March, Mr. Karadzic had agreed to the opening of the airport in Tuzla for humanitarian purposes under United Nations control, on certain conditions which were rejected by the other party. The Secretary-General, however, believed that the opening of Tuzla airport for UNPROFOR purposes was now feasible, and that humanitarian flights would be possible before long. His Special Representative was therefore continuing intensive negotiations with the parties in order to achieve an agreement which would govern the modalities of the full-fledged reopening of the airport. He also outlined the additional resources that would be required in order to support UNPROFOR activities at Tuzla airport.⁵⁰⁰ He further noted that, as the opening of Tuzla airport was being pursued for the purpose of improving the capability to deliver humanitarian assistance, the activity would fall within the existing mandate given by Council resolutions 836 (1993) and 844 (1993). However, in the light of the political importance of such an action and of the need for additional resources to ensure the safe operation of the airport, he believed that the explicit approval and support of the Security Council was required. He therefore recommended that the Council approve the UNPROFOR plans for the opening of Tuzla airport for ⁵⁰⁰ The Secretary-General's observations relating to the additional resource requirements (S/1994/333, para. 14) were subsequently approved by the Council in resolution 908 (1994), para. 5. An estimate of the costs for the additional requirements was submitted as an addendum to the report.

humanitarian purposes, as well as the additional resources requested for that purpose.

By a letter dated 30 March 1994 addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁵⁰¹ the Secretary-General informed the Council of the conclusion on 29 March 1994 in Zagreb of a ceasefire agreement between the Government of Croatia and the local Serb authorities in the United Nations Protected Areas, which copy of it was attached to the letter as an annex. He noted that the implementation of the ceasefire agreement would involve, inter alia, interpositioning UNPROFOR forces in a zone of separation; establishing additional control points, observation posts and patrols; and monitoring the withdrawal of heavy weapons out of range of the contact line. He suggested that the Council might wish to welcome that development and to authorize UNPROFOR to perform the functions called for in the agreement. He also noted that UNPROFOR would require additional military resources in order to undertake those tasks, and he recommended that the Council authorize the provision of those additional resources.

At its 3356th meeting, on 31 March 1994, the Council included the three above-mentioned reports and the letter in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (France) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution that had been prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations,⁵⁰² and to several other documents,⁵⁰³ including a letter dated 16 March ⁵⁰¹ S/1994/367.

⁵⁰³ Letters dated 15 and 23 March 1994, respectively, from the representative of Bulgaria addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/1994/302 and S/1994/336); letter dated 16 March 1994 from the representative of Croatia addressed to the Secretary-General (S/1994/305 and Corr.1); letter dated 22 March 1994 from the representative of Greece addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/1994/328); letter dated 22 March 1994 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/1994/330); letter dated 23 March 1994 from the President of the Security Council addressed to the Secretary-General (S/1994/331); and letter dated 25 March 1994 from the representative of Yugoslavia addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/1994/350).

addressed to the Secretary-General, transmitting a letter of the same date from the President of Croatia to the Secretary-General, in which he agreed to the extension of the UNPROFOR mandate and enclosed a series of goals and actions which he considered to be necessary for the success of the renewed mandate.

Speaking before the vote, the representative of Pakistan stated that his delegation, along with other members of the Non-Aligned Movement in the Council, had favoured the designation of Maglaj as a safe area, and regretted that it had not found the support of all members in the Council. His delegation, however, would support the draft resolution before the Council. He added that the international community must demonstrate its resolve to arrive at a just and lasting solution to the crisis in Bosnia and Herzegovina by taking all appropriate measures to reverse the consequences of aggression against that country. The lands seized by the use of force and "ethnic cleansing" must be returned. The sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of Bosnia and Herzegovina must be restored and respected.⁵⁰⁴

The representative of the Czech Republic questioned the Secretary-General's suggestion that 1,500 additional troops would be required to turn Maglaj into a safe area, when Srebrenica and Zepa had been granted the status of safe areas with far fewer troops than that. He contended that experience had shown that declaring an area safe contributed, in and of itself, to the safety of the area, whether or not it was truly safe from the military point of view. His delegation could not but regret that some of the energy the Council devoted to the almost moot issue of Maglaj had not been spent on what appeared to be an even worse situation in Banjaluka. The city had been in the hands of ethnic Serbs for some time now and "ethnic cleansing" continued unabated there.⁵⁰⁵

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 908 (1994), which reads:

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions on the conflicts in the territory of the Former Yugoslavia, and reaffirming in this context its resolution 871 (1993) of 4 October 1993 on the mandate of the United Nations Protection Force,

25. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United Kingdom stated that the implementation of confidence-building measures in the United Nations Protected Areas referred to in the resolution and the revival of the joint-commission process were steps which should be taken quickly, paving the way for a final settlement involving autonomy for the Serbs within the existing borders of Croatia. His delegation welcomed the increase in the strength of UNPROFOR provided for in the resolution just adopted, which would allow those additional personnel already available from Member States to be deployed immediately. It also welcomed the resolution's authorization of additional personnel for the reopening of Tuzla airport. The speaker cautioned, however, that further reinforcement of UNPROFOR would be needed if the ceasefires in central Bosnia and Croatia were to be implemented fully. He also argued that tasks could not be added indefinitely if the necessary resources were not available. His Government would have been prepared to join in authorizing all the additional personnel requested by the Secretary-General. In the following month the Council would need to act on the balance of those requests, for delay would put at risk the achievements of UNPROFOR.⁵⁰⁶

The representative of the United States stated that his Government had consistently supported, and continued to support, UNPROFOR which had been called on to provide vital missions in the former Yugoslavia. In recent weeks there had been many encouraging developments in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and rapidly expanding challenges that had taxed UNPROFOR resources to the limit. The United States agreed with the members of the Council that UNPROFOR must have the necessary resources to meet these challenges. In the context of the resolution just adopted, his Government's concern had been to ensure that the financial resources were available to sustain that vital operation. The resolution stated that the Council would review, within one month, the question of the requirements of UNPROFOR. During that month, the United States Government would be considering the question seriously and urgently, for peacekeeping was so important that the international community must do its best to regularize the way it provided the money to support those operations. The speaker also commended the Council's authorization of close air support for UNPROFOR troops operating in Croatia, and pointed out that NATO implementation would require the agreement of the North Atlantic

Council, which he was confident would be forthcoming.⁵⁰⁷

The representative of China noted that the Council's approval of a further enlargement of UNPROFOR and an extension of its mandate reflected the hope that the presence of UNPROFOR would create favourable conditions for an early and comprehensive political settlement. He reiterated the position of his country on questions related to UNPROFOR. First, the sovereignty of Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina, as well as other countries in the region, should be fully respected. Secondly, China was not in favour of the use or threat of force, nor the invocation of Chapter VII in the peacekeeping operations of UNPROFOR. It therefore retained reservations on the invocations of Chapter VII in the resolution just adopted. At the same time, however, it had noted that the resolution specified certain limitations concerning that issue. Thirdly, in relation to the extension of close air support to UNPROFOR operations in Croatia, such air support should only be used to ensure the safety of UNPROFOR personnel in the performance of its mandate and for self-defence, rather than for punitive purposes. Fourthly, the settlement of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia could only be achieved by the people of that region themselves. Lastly, the difficulties faced by UNPROFOR with regard to manpower and financial resources needed to be removed, although the deployment of UNPROFOR troops should be undertaken in a flexible manner, according to the degree of urgency in each specific situation.⁵⁰⁸

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that, while favouring the continuation of UNPROFOR, his delegation believed that UNPROFOR efforts should be directed towards the essential purpose for which it was established, paying particular attention to the priority tasks highlighted in paragraph 50 of the Secretary-General's report of 16 March, and taking into account the need to adopt a rational attitude towards the limited resources available to the United Nations. Noting that the United Nations had been faced with new tasks, his delegation believed that those tasks should be performed strictly in accordance with, and in the framework of, the existing mandate of UNPROFOR. If, however, it was felt necessary either ⁵⁰⁶ Ibid., pp. 8-9.

⁵⁰⁷ Ibid., p. 9.

⁵⁰⁸ Ibid., pp. 10-11.

to amend or expand the mandate, that would require an additional decision to be taken by the Security Council. The Russian Federation also supported the extension of close air support to Croatia. At the same time, it also supported the search for ways and means of achieving maximum cooperation between the United Nations and NATO, because it believed that deploying air forces in support of United Nations personnel should be carried out, as indicated in the relevant resolutions, under the authority of the Security Council and subject to close coordination with the Secretary-General and UNPROFOR.⁵⁰⁹

The President, speaking in his capacity as the representative of France, stated that his delegation was particularly pleased with those aspects of the resolution which unambiguously strengthened the Council's commitment to approve all the reinforcements requested by the Secretary-General, for both Bosnia and Croatia, by the end of April. Actions must now proceed in two directions. The international community must consolidate what had been achieved on the ground, with UNPROFOR backing the parties' will to make peace and, in that regard, UNPROFOR could never be used to protect territorial gains. On the diplomatic level, discussions on the territorial questions would soon have to resume and in that respect, the European Union's plan seemed to be the only basis for a possible agreement.⁵¹⁰

Decision of 27 April 1994 (3369th meeting):
resolution 914 (1994)

At its 3369th meeting, on 27 April 1994, the Council included in its agenda the reports of the Secretary-General of 11, 16 and 24 March, as well as the Secretary-General's letter dated 30 March 1994. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at his request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (New Zealand) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution submitted by France, the Russian Federation, Spain and the United Kingdom.⁵¹¹

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 914 (1994), which reads:

⁵⁰⁹ Ibid., pp. 11-12.

⁵¹⁰ Ibid., pp. 13-14.

⁵¹¹ S/1994/487.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 908 (1994) of 31 March 1994 and 913 (1994) of 22 April 1994,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General of 11 March, 16 March and 24 March 1994 and his letter dated 30 March 1994,

Determined to strengthen the operations of the United Nations Protection Force in fulfilment of its mandate,

Reiterating its determination to ensure the security of the Force and its freedom of movement in all its missions, and to these ends, as regards the Force in the Republic of Croatia and in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Welcomes once again the reports of the Secretary-General of 11 March, 16 March and 24 March 1994 and his letter dated 30 March 1994;

2. Decides to authorize, as recommended by the Secretary-General in the above-mentioned documents, an increase of United Nations Protection Force personnel by up to 6,550 additional troops, 150 military observers and 275 civilian police monitors, in addition to the reinforcement already approved in resolution 908 (1994);

3. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of France welcomed the fact that the Council had granted UNPROFOR the reinforcements requested by the Secretary-General while stressing that the decision should have come at the end of March when the Force's mandate had been extended. France could only regret that delay unjustifiable in view of the situation on the ground. The Council, from a political standpoint, had not reflected the clear determination which the circumstances had required nor had it shown the support which UNPROFOR had a right to expect from it at a time when, faced with a constant shortage of personnel, they were given additional missions in an increasingly dangerous environment. As the increases in personnel had been authorized, Member States now needed to respond to the earnest requests of the Secretariat.⁵¹²

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that the Council's decision reaffirmed its support for UNPROFOR and signalled its determination to bring about a cessation of hostilities and a peaceful negotiated settlement in that country. He recalled that, at its previous meeting on Bosnia, on 21 April, the Council had adopted resolution 913 (1994), condemning the attacks by Bosnian Serb forces on Gorazde, demanding their withdrawal, and calling for an end to the hostilities. In parallel, the United Nations and NATO had made it clear that force would be used if those elements were not complied with. Thanks to the determination of UNPROFOR and NATO, the immediate threat in Gorazde had ended. The United Kingdom called upon all parties to cooperate fully with UNPROFOR and other United Nations and relief personnel working in Gorazde. The speaker warned that the Bosnian Serbs should not forget that the terms of the North Atlantic Council's recent decisions remained in force, and that they applied to attacks against or threats to the other safe areas. His Government was giving its full support to efforts to bring more closely together the diplomatic activity of the United Nations, the European Union, the United States and the Russian Federation, including the action taken through the establishment of a Contact Group.⁵¹³

Decision of 11 August 1994 (3416th meeting):
statement by the President

By a letter dated 26 July 1994 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the Secretary-General reported that serious difficulties had arisen for UNPROFOR operations in Croatia, as a result of blockades being implemented by demonstrators against all UNPROFOR traffic into the United Nations Protected Areas.⁵¹⁴ The blockades had severely undermined the ability of UNPROFOR to monitor the 29 March ceasefire agreement, resulting in an increased number of violations of that Agreement and causing rising tensions within the zone of separation. The blockades were also preventing UNPROFOR from performing its other basic tasks. The Special Representative of the Secretary-General had met with officials of the Government of Croatia to impress upon them the Government's responsibility to ensure that the work of UNPROFOR was not impeded. He had informed them that the Force had clear evidence of the participation of Croatian police in several of the blockades, rendering the Government in violation of aspects of the ceasefire agreement. While the Government might not have been fully in control of the demonstrators, it was undeniably responsible for ensuring that their actions did not prevent UNPROFOR from carrying out its mandate. The Secretary-General warned that if the situation were not rectified UNPROFOR would not be able to function in pursuance of its mandates and he recommended that the Council call upon the Government of Croatia to fulfil its obligations to UNPROFOR and end the blockade.

At its 3416th meeting, on 11 August 1994, the Council included the above-mentioned letter in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the President (Russian Federation) stated that, after consultations among members of the Security Council, he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁵¹⁵

The Security Council is deeply concerned by the letter from the Secretary-General dated 26 July 1994 and by further reports from the Secretariat of continuing difficulties that have arisen for the operations of the United Nations Protection Force in Croatia owing to blockades of Force traffic into the United Nations Protected Areas by demonstrators. The Council considers that such blockades by Croatian citizens as well as related impediments imposed by the Croatian authorities on the freedom of movement of the Force are inadmissible. In that context the Council deplores the remaining blockades of access roads to the United Nations Protected Areas in the Republic of Croatia.

The Council is encouraged by the signing on 4 August 1994 of an agreement between the Government of the Republic of Croatia and the United Nations Protection Force regarding the procedures regulating Force traffic to and from the United Nations Protected Areas, and calls on the Croatian authorities to implement its provisions faithfully. The Council welcomes the progress that has been made since the signature of this agreement to open eleven of nineteen crossing points. However, the Council reminds the Government of the Republic of Croatia of its obligation to facilitate the unimpeded access of the Force to all nineteen crossing points agreed upon in the ceasefire agreement of 29 March 1994.

In this context the Council is also concerned about the continuing unacceptable practice of the Government of the Republic of Croatia of levying tolls and other taxes on the Force for the use of roads and airports in the Republic of Croatia. The Council strongly disapproves of any action that would both impede the functioning of the Force and add to the already high cost of the peacekeeping operation in Croatia. Recalling paragraph 7 of its resolution 908 (1994) of 31 March 1994, the Council again urges the Government of the Republic of Croatia to conclude without further delay a status-of-forces agreement with the United Nations Protection Force and to resolve the above and any other issues in accordance with the provisions of that agreement.

⁵¹⁵ S/PRST/1994/44.

The Council reaffirms its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Croatia and the right of all displaced persons and refugees to return to their homes. The Council expects the Government of the Republic of Croatia to cooperate fully with the efforts of the Force.

Decision of 30 September 1994 (3434th meeting): resolution 947 (1994)

On 9 May 1994, pursuant to resolutions 836 (1993) and 844 (1993), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report to inform the Council of the results achieved and lessons learned in the implementation of the safe areas concept in Bosnia and Herzegovina, as well as to propose some improvements in the short term.⁵¹⁶

The Secretary-General noted that the existing approach to safe areas required reworking. In his view, the successful implementation of the safe area concept required the acceptance of three overriding principles: (a) the intention of safe areas was primarily to protect people and not to defend territory; (b) the method of execution of the safe area task should not detract from, but rather enhance, the original mandates of UNPROFOR, namely supporting humanitarian assistance and contributing to the overall peace process through the implementation of ceasefires and local disengagements; and (c) the mandate must take into account UNPROFOR's resource limitations.

The Secretary-General did not believe that extending the safe area concept to other parts of Bosnia and Herzegovina would be advisable. While reaffirming the Council's commitments in relation to existing safe areas, he believed that sources of tension elsewhere in the Republic needed to be dealt with by other measures, including local ceasefires and modest deployments of UNPROFOR observers. In addition to the arrangements already in place for protection of safe areas it was necessary that: (a) the mission of UNPROFOR in the safe areas be clearly defined; (b) the safe areas be clearly delineated; (c) the safe areas be respected; and (d) complete freedom of movement, on a "notification basis" be ensured for the provision of humanitarian aid to safe areas. While safe areas could be made more effective and manageable, they did not in themselves represent a long-term solution to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Rather, the safe area concept should be viewed as a temporary mechanism by which some vulnerable populations could be protected pending a comprehensive negotiated political settlement. The Secretary-General therefore recommended that the Security Council approve the statement of the Force's mission in relation to the safe areas, authorize UNPROFOR to promulgate precise boundaries for those areas and approve the arrangements outlined in his report.

On 17 September 1994, pursuant to resolution 908 (1994), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report intended to assist the Council in its deliberations on the renewal of the UNPROFOR mandate.⁵¹⁷

The Secretary-General noted that the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia were closely interrelated and had a direct impact on UNPROFOR operations in Croatia, Bosnia and Herzegovina and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. In that context, the work of the Contact Group which involved five major Powers working with the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, could be of great significance for the future of UNPROFOR.

With regard to Croatia, the Secretary-General outlined four problem areas in the UNPROFOR mandate which required assessment: the demilitarization of the United Nations Protected Areas; the restoration of Croatian authority in the "pink zones"; the establishment of border controls; and assistance for the return of refugees and displaced persons. All four required either enforcement or the consent of both parties for their implementation. UNPROFOR had neither the means nor the mandate for enforcement action of that nature and the cooperation of the parties had been elusive.

The Secretary-General further noted that progress in Croatia had been slow and had proved insufficient to moderate Croatian impatience for a quick solution to the problem of reintegration of the United Nations Protected Areas into Croatia. Assistance in the creation of conditions that would permit the voluntary return of displaced persons to their homes in or near the Protected Areas continued to be of the highest priority for UNPROFOR and discussions were taking place among the Office of the United Nations High

⁵¹⁷ S/1994/1067 and Add.1.

Commissioner for Refugees, UNPROFOR and both parties on the implementation of a pilot project for voluntary return to a few selected villages in or near the zone of separation.⁵¹⁸

In considering the various options for the UNPROFOR presence in Croatia, the Secretary-General was aware that the situation on the ground could be frozen in a stalemate in which the Force's continued presence contributed only to the maintenance of an unsatisfactory status quo. In the current circumstances, however, it was very important to secure continued respect for the ceasefire agreement. At the same time, further efforts would have to be made for the reopening of negotiations. These tasks would require the continued presence of UNPROFOR in Croatia.

With regard to Bosnia and Herzegovina, experience gained over the last six months had enhanced mutual understanding, joint planning and cooperation between UNPROFOR and NATO, and the successful deployment of long-awaited additional forces had enabled UNPROFOR to improve its ability to seize opportunities for progress. Nevertheless, the possibility of a further exacerbation and intensification of the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina had highlighted the limitations of UNPROFOR, and underlined a number of areas of concern. The Secretary-General acknowledged that some Member States might believe that the international community's strategy of deploying peacekeeping operations only upon the active cooperation of the parties was no longer adequate to serve the objectives proclaimed in the Council's resolutions. He warned, however, that the use of disincentives would change the nature of the United Nations presence in the area, entailing unacceptable risks to UNPROFOR. The result would be a fundamental shift from the logic of peacekeeping to the logic of war and would require the withdrawal of UNPROFOR from Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Secretary-General had therefore directed that plans be made for a potential withdrawal at short notice. Any consideration of decisions leading to the withdrawal of UNPROFOR had, however, to be weighed against the tasks that were currently being implemented successfully by UNPROFOR and in the absence of an overall political settlement acceptable to all the parties.

⁵¹⁸ The Secretary-General's comments relating to the return of refugees and displaced persons (S/1994/1067, para. 39) were subsequently referred to by the Council in resolution 947 (1994), para. 13.

He did not, therefore, recommend the withdrawal of the Force at that time. He did recommend, however, that due to the continued harassment of minorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina, particularly by the Bosnian Serbs, the Security Council might consider providing UNPROFOR with a more comprehensive, uniform, United Nations civilian police mandate throughout the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina, similar to that already mandated for Croatia.

The Secretary-General also recommended the renewal of UNPROFOR mandate for a further period of six months. He further suggested that the Council might wish to endorse the Force's activities in relation to mine-clearing in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and support the acquisition of a small number of protected vehicles for uses in areas of mine hazard. He also recommended that the Council endorse the Force's public information policy and programmes, including the establishment of an independent radio station to provide the population within the mission area access to impartial, factual and timely information, thereby increasing public understanding and support for UNPROFOR "peacemaking" efforts in the former Yugoslavia.

At its 3434th meeting, on 30 September 1994, the Council included the report of the Secretary-General of 17 September 1994 in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also invited Mr. Vladislav Jovanovic, at his request, to address the Council in the course of its consideration of the item. The President (Spain) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of a draft resolution, submitted by France, Spain and the United Kingdom,⁵¹⁹ and read out some revisions that had been made to the draft in its provisional form. He also drew the attention of the Council members to several other documents.⁵²⁰

⁵¹⁹ S/1994/1120.

⁵²⁰ Letters dated 9 and 28 September 1994, respectively, from the representative of Yugoslavia addressed to the Secretary-General (S/1994/1045 and S/1994/1108); letters dated 15 and 26 September 1994, respectively, from the representative of Croatia addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/1994/1058 and S/1994/1095); and letter dated 16 September 1994 from the representative of Croatia addressed to the Secretary-General (S/1994/1062).

The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina outlined two reflections with respect to the renewal of the UNPROFOR mandate. First, every Security Council resolution mandating UNPROFOR had reflected the commitment of the Council to the territorial integrity and sovereignty of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Secondly, although some might wish to characterize UNPROFOR as a peacekeeping mission, its mandate was more complex. Within the mandate there was no reference to peacekeeping, while there was reference to specific assignments calling for “necessary measures” and appropriate responses to attacks on civilian safe areas and violations of humanitarian standards. The speaker contended that, in that context, any threats directed at Bosnia and Herzegovina and its defence forces exercising the responsibility of defending its civilians and its territorial integrity and sovereignty must be viewed as contrary to the word and spirit of the relevant Security Council resolutions. He argued that the mandate should not be redefined, but rather that if there was a “practical incapacity to execute the original mandate”, then additional resources should be provided or the mandate must be terminated. It was necessary to re-establish the clear objectives of the UNPROFOR mandate.⁵²¹

The representative of Croatia stated that his Government remained bound by the decision of the Croatian parliament on the UNPROFOR mandate and it welcomed the elements of that decision which had been incorporated in the draft resolution, especially in respect of the “pink zones”, the border monitors and the pilot project for the return of displaced persons to their homes in the occupied areas. His delegation believed that the draft resolution pointed the solution-seeking process in the right direction and it hoped that the Contact Group and the United Nations would immediately begin to pursue measures consistent with the letter and spirit of the draft resolution so that the relevant parties would not be compelled to consider a new UNPROFOR mandate after 100 days. It also emphasized that the decision to accept the new UNPROFOR mandate in Croatia had been made with the view that the Contact Group would immediately commence work on the comprehensive reintegration plan for Croatia, which would provide local autonomy in pre-war Serbian majority areas in Croatia, with the same acceptance/rejection measures that should be applied to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and its “proxies” in Knin. It further underlined the importance of the mutual recognition of existing borders between Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia as the next step for the Contact Group’s activities. Before concluding, the speaker expressed regret that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia had been permitted to address the Council. His Government had taken the position that the UNPROFOR mandate only applied to the territories of Croatia, Bosnia and Herzegovina and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, and that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia did not therefore possess any special status in relation to the UNPROFOR issue.⁵²²

Mr. Jovanovic stated that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia considered that the conditions for terminating the UNPROFOR peace operation had not yet been created and that its continued presence in the protected areas was necessary until an overall political solution was reached. The UNPROFOR presence in the protected areas had been of vital importance for the protection of the Serbian civilian population of Krajina. He contended that the question of extending the UNPROFOR mandate should be viewed apart from the search for a political solution to the crisis. The extension of the Force’s mandate and the protection of the Serbian population could not be used by one side as an instrument for exerting political pressure in the negotiating process. On the contrary, the presence of UNPROFOR was a precondition for facilitating a political solution. His delegation fully agreed with the Secretary-General’s assessment that resort to a military option would have incalculable consequences. It also shared the Secretary-General view that not all efforts towards the peaceful resolution of the conflict had yet been exhausted. The Federal Republic of Yugoslavia was convinced that a three-phase policy was the only way to achieve peace. Building on the results of the ceasefire, negotiations should be speedily resumed on confidence-building measures and the re-establishment of economic relations and infrastructure, which would enable the Vance plan to be realized. The speaker further stated that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia had given its full support to the Contact Group’s plan and had tried to convince the Bosnian Serb leadership to accept it. He hinted that a clear-cut, written agreement by the Contact Group that the Bosnian Serbs should have the equal right to establish confederal ties with the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia would open the door for the Bosnian Serbs to agree to the Contact Group. Turning to the draft resolution before the Council, he expressed regret that it contained certain provisions which, he contended, dealt with issues that should not have been addressed in a “technical resolution” on the extension of the UNPROFOR mandate. In that respect, he referred in particular to the third and fifth preambular paragraphs, as well as to operative paragraphs 4, 5, 6, 10, 11, 13 and 14. He further contended that the provisions of operative paragraph 14 attempted to impose political solutions which were in “flagrant contravention” of the Vance plan, as the Vance plan provided that the political status of the protected areas should be resolved only after all of the plan’s provisions had been implemented.⁵²³

⁵²² Ibid., pp. 3-4.

The draft resolution, as orally revised in its provisional form, was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 947 (1994), which reads:

Speaking after the vote, the representative of France contended that without UNPROFOR there would have been increased suffering for the civilian population, increased movements of refugees and irreversible developments on the ground that would have confronted the international community with an insoluble problem. While acknowledging that more could have been done, he pointed out that UNPROFOR had neither the mandate nor the military means to impose peace. The speaker further stated that UNPROFOR had reached a turning point in its history. Either a dynamic for peace would gain strength in the coming weeks, or, on the contrary hope of a negotiated settlement would fade, and then decisions would inevitably have to be taken involving the withdrawal of UNPROFOR. Thus that was undoubtedly the last time that the Council would be extending the UNPROFOR mandate in a routine manner. In the next stage, which would be crucial, UNPROFOR would have to strive to ensure strict implementation of the Council’s decisions, particularly those concerning safe areas. That might imply the use of force, if necessary, especially to ensure respect for the exclusion zones. The Government of France therefore hoped that explicit instructions along those lines would be issued to the leaders of the Force.⁵²⁴

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that his delegation supported the resolution just adopted because it believed that UNPROFOR was playing an extremely important role in efforts to settle the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia. He cautioned that everything needed to be done to ensure that UNPROFOR did not become a party to the conflict or a “hostage” to the forces participating in it. He emphasized that the effectiveness of UNPROFOR depended to a large extent on the good will of the parties. In Croatia, it was clear that the unimpeded fulfilment by the Force of its mandate in the United Nations Protected Areas was the most important prerequisite for the implementation of the Vance plan. The Russian Federation also attached particular importance to the continued efforts of the countries of the Contact Group to develop their cooperation with the Security Council. It was important to increase pressure on all parties to promote a comprehensive peace settlement. Such a settlement should be based on a territorial arrangement and on constitutional principles placing all parties on an equal footing.⁵²⁵

The representative of New Zealand welcomed the Council’s decision to extend the UNPROFOR mandate for a further six months. He cautioned, however, that if UNPROFOR were to continue to be supported, the status quo could not be continued. He therefore urged the parties to reinvigorate the progress towards implementation of the peace plan. Recalling that the Council had adopted the previous week a series of measures, the speaker noted that those measures needed to be followed up with further specific steps. First, there should be early recognition of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia. Secondly, there needed to be firm and united resolve on the part of UNPROFOR and NATO to use force where warranted for the protection of the safe areas and the enforcement of the exclusion zones. Thirdly, the “strangulation” of Sarajevo must cease. Fourthly, the progressive withdrawal of the Bosnian Serbs to positions consistent with the territorial settlement proposal should be pursued. The speaker also observed that the resolution just adopted was less specific than his delegation would have liked on the question of the mutual recognition of international boundaries in the region of the former Yugoslavia. He emphasized that it was the view of his delegation that mutual recognition should be the starting point for the overall settlement of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia.⁵²⁶

The representative of the United States observed that, in Bosnia, the most important development had been the Contact Group's presentation of its territorial proposal to the parties. Unfortunately, while the Bosnian Federation had accepted the proposal, the Bosnian Serbs had not. The United States would continue to demand that the Bosnian Serbs accept the proposal, which represented the best opportunity for a just and equitable settlement to the conflict. Just a week earlier, with its adoption of a resolution tightening sanctions against the Bosnian Serbs, the Council had reminded the Bosnian Serbs that their continuing "obstinacy" was incurring substantial costs. In respect of the situation in Croatia, the United States Government strongly supported the basic precept, reflected in the resolution just adopted, that a settlement of the conflict must be in conformity with Croatia's sovereignty and territorial integrity. The speaker also expressed her Government's concern at the increasing violations of the exclusion zones, as well as its commitment to their strict enforcement. She expressed confidence that, should strict enforcement continue to be necessary, UNPROFOR would work closely with NATO to ensure that the intent of the Council to protect the safe areas was carried out. Before concluding, she noted that the resolution just adopted lay upon the parties — and her Government interpreted that to refer especially to the Serb party — the responsibility to create the conditions that would allow UNPROFOR to fulfil its mandate.⁵²⁷

Decisions of 31 March 1995 (3512th meeting): resolutions 981 (1995), 982 (1995) and 983 (1995)

On 22 March 1995, pursuant to resolution 947 (1994), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on UNPROFOR.⁵²⁸ The report was intended, in conjunction with the report of the Secretary-General dated 14 January 1995, to assist the Council in its consideration of the mandate of UNPROFOR. It contained an overview of the activities of the Force, as well as the Secretary-General's proposals for its future mandate.

The Secretary-General recalled that, in his interim report of 14 January 1995, he had noted that, despite the earlier inability of UNPROFOR to fulfil important parts of its mandate under the United Nations peacekeeping plan in Croatia, the successful implementation of the ceasefire agreement of 29 March 1994 and the conclusion of the economic agreement on 2 December 1994 had been positive steps towards confidence-building and reconciliation. He had expressed disappointment that the potential for success through the three-step approach — cessation of hostilities, economic normalization and political negotiations — had not been fully explored before the decision of the Government of Croatia on 12 January 1995 to withdraw its support for the continuing role of UNPROFOR. The Secretary-General therefore welcomed the announcement on 12 March 1995 by Croatia's President that he had agreed to the retention of UNPROFOR.⁵²⁹ The maintenance of a reduced force in Croatia under a new mandate thus seemed the only way to reduce the risks of a renewed major war, while permitting continued progress in implementing the economic agreement and beginning political negotiations. He had instructed his Special Envoy to conduct negotiations with the parties on the mandate of a future United Nations peacekeeping force in Croatia. The gulf between the positions of the Government of Croatia and the Krajina Serb authorities on the role and functions of the new force remained wide. Further negotiations were necessary. The Secretary-General was, however, able to report the basis could be established for agreement that the mandate should include the following: (a) support for the implementation of the ceasefire agreement of 29 March 1994; (b) support for the implementation of the ⁵²⁹ In the announcement the President of Croatia stated that his country would seek to negotiate a new mandate for an international presence in Croatia that would (a) control the international borders between Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and between Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina; (b) control access and communications for UNPROFOR and other international humanitarian operations to Bosnia through territory not under the control of Croatia; and (c) facilitate the continued implementation of existing and future agreements and the relevant Security Council and General Assembly resolutions. In the meantime, the Government of Croatia agreed to the continuation of the current force.

economic agreement of 2 December 1994; and (c) implementation of these elements of the existing United Nations peacekeeping plan for Croatia that were accepted by both parties as having continuing relevance. In addition to that “core mandate”, the new force would continue to perform functions arising from the accord on the Prevlaka peninsula and from relevant resolutions of the Security Council, such as monitoring the “no-fly zone” and the extension of close air support in Croatia.

Concerning Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Secretary-General observed that the inability of UNPROFOR to deter attacks on Bihac had brought to the fore some of the key issues addressed in previous reports on the concept of safe areas. Until the Council was able to provide clear guidance on those matters, it was unlikely that the commitment of the parties or the Force’s performance in the safe areas would improve, and there was a danger that situations such as that in Bihac would recur. The Secretary-General further noted that the current impasse on the Contact Group’s proposal had created a vacuum in which the Force had little or no political context for the pursuit of local initiatives, and the parties had little or no incentive to cooperate. He appealed to the members of the contact Group to renew their efforts to fill the current vacuum.

Regarding the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, the Secretary-General suggested that the Council might wish to call, in the context of Article 50 of the Charter, for increased international economic support to be provided to the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.

The Secretary-General further reported that the Governments of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia had expressed the wish that the United Nations in their countries should be separate from UNPROFOR. He therefore proposed that UNPROFOR be replaced by three separate, but interlinked, peacekeeping operations: United Nations Peace Force — one in Croatia (UNPF-1), one in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNPF-2), and one in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (UNPF-3).⁵³⁰

The Secretary-General accordingly recommended that the Security Council approve the following: (a) the restructuring of UNPROFOR into three forces, each with a mandate extending to 30 November 1995; (b) the negotiation, on the basis of the elements previously identified, of a new mandate and functions for UNPF-1, which would be significantly smaller than the existing UNPROFOR strength in Croatia; (c) the conversion of UNPROFOR in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia into UNPF-2 and UNPF-3, respectively, with the same responsibilities and composition as UNPROFOR had possessed in those Republics; (d) appeals to the respective Governments to conclude status-of-forces agreements with the United Nations and to grant it suitable broadcasting facilities;⁵³¹ and (e) the transfer to the three United Nations Peace Forces of the applicability of all relevant Security Council resolutions relating to the functioning of UNPROFOR in the territories of Croatia, Bosnia and Herzegovina and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, respectively.

At its 3512th meeting, on 31 March 1995, the Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council invited the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President (China) then drew the attention of the Council members to the text of three draft resolutions submitted by Argentina, the Czech Republic, France, Germany, Italy, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States,⁵³² as well as to several other documents.⁵³³ ⁵³¹ See S/1995/222, paras. 47-51. The appeal to facilitate suitable radio and television broadcasts for the United Nations was subsequently endorsed by the Council in resolution 981 (1995), para. 12; and resolution 982 (1995), para. 10.

The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina charged that UNPROFOR had become a “substitute for real peacemaking” in his country. After three years of that imposed role, UNPROFOR must be judged a failure. Moreover, those behind the strategy of “usurping” UNPROFOR for the purpose of substituting it for peacemaking must be judged guilty also of allowing aggression and genocide to continue, of endangering international peace and security, and of betraying their responsibilities to the United Nations. He further contended that the Force’s limited success in providing humanitarian assistance was gradually eroding and that UNPROFOR’s mission was actually being brought into contradiction with efforts to bring about peace. For that reason, the delegation of Bosnia and Herzegovina had requested that the UNPROFOR mandate be comprehensively reviewed. The modalities and a time frame must be established for that review. Most important, the review should incorporate the contributions of the Security Council, of the troop contributors, of interested regional organizations and Member States. Referring to the situation in and around Sarajevo, the speaker argued that the “Blue Route” must be placed under United Nations protection, the Sarajevo airport access routes must be freed of roadblocks, and Sarajevo citizens must be liberated from snipers. Those requests were not new, nor did they require fresh Security Council action; authority already existed for such steps. All that was needed was the will to carry out that existing authority.

Referring to the report of the Secretary-General, the speaker requested that modalities be established to prevent further violations of Bosnia and Herzegovina’s territorial integrity and sovereignty by the Krajina Serbs, and he noted that Bosnia and Herzegovina supported Croatia’s efforts to have those borders sealed. He also argued that the international arms embargo restricted Bosnia and Herzegovina’s capacity for self-defence, making it even more dependent upon the international community’s responsibility for preserving international peace and security.⁵³⁴

The representative of Croatia stated that UNPROFOR had contributed positively by keeping relative peace in Croatia and had given the international community time to establish a political framework and binding legal decisions that would assist in reintegrating the occupied territories and their residents into Croatia peacefully and in a manner consistent with Croatia’s sovereignty and territorial integrity. But its mission had fallen short because of the uncompromising resistance of the local Croatian Serbs and Belgrade. His Government emphasized that it had an exclusive right of veto in the upcoming negotiations over the operational definitions for the new arrangements within its sovereign territory granted by the Charter and the relevant resolutions. Croatia disputed the Vance plan per se as a legal basis for the new arrangement but remained committed to the unfulfilled humanitarian elements of the Vance plan.
