VI.(5) Describe Present and Original Physical Construction and Appearance:

The Breese Stevens House is a massive late Victorian brick residence in the Italianate style. Brick corner pillars and molded stone lintels distinguish the two and a half central section. A back wing of two stories with plain stone lintels quietly speaks of its secondary role as a service area and probable servants' quarters. Several bays ornament the central section, including a one story angular bay on the southeast side, an angular two story bay on the northwest side, and a front one story round bay with unusual rounded windows.

A multiple gable-ended peaked roof tops the central section and a simple peaked roof tops the back wing. Under the substantial eaves are a dental corbel in brick and a dental cornice in wood. The cornices on the different parts of the building are all in proportion to the size of the section that they adorn. The several brick chimneys carry out the decorative motifs of the pillars and corbels.

Distinctive porches contribute one of the outstanding features of the Breese Stevens House. A long one story, rambling porch with classical style round pillars and urn motif panels meanders from the front to the northwest side of the house. A recessed two story porch on the back wing adds to the detachment of the back portion. Two other one-story porches jut out from the back wing.

The extant outbuildings and ample grounds lend a flavor of the Nineteenth Century to the Breese Stevens House that is unique to the mansions still existing in the area. A square, roofed and latticed well cover approximately ten feet high stands near the service wing of the house. A high door to permit an enclosed horse drawn vehicle entry leads into an ample carriage house. Of the existing carriage houses on mansion hill, the Breese Steven's one has a turntable in the floor for reversing the direction of the vehicle after it has been drawn inside.

VII.(7) Significance of Nominated Property and Conformance to Designation Criteria:

The Breese Steven's House is unique to Madison's Yankee Hill district in that the original building is not crowded by newer structures erected on the original grounds. The building's massiveness allows it to carry the weight of mixed bays and porches that nevertheless blend into a harmonious whole. Except for paint the house is in excellent condition and would require very little work to make it a showpiece.

For over eighty years the house has been home to the Stevens family. As late as 1960 Amelia F. Stevens resided there on North Carroll Street.

Breese Stevens himself was a figure important to the history of Madison. A prominent corporation lawyer he represented national railroads including the Illinois Central, and was involved in land development in the Madison area. Elected mayor of Madison in 1884 as a Democrat, Stevens was also a curator of the State Historical Society, vestryman of Grace Episcopal Church, and a member of the Reform Clubs of New York and Milwaukee.

A regent of the University of Wisconsin from 1891 to 1904, Breese Stevens helped the school through the crises of the turn of the century. He aided Richard T. Ely's defense of academic freedom and was a member of the board of regents that endorsed "that continual and fearless sifting and winnowing by which alone the truth can be found." The credit for preserving the integrity of the University Fund among the state's finances belongs to Stevens also. He was an outstanding regent who contributed to the greatness of Madison's famous institution. Madison should honor his memory.
