PREFACE

The Federal Election Commission is publishing this legislative history of the 1974 Amendments to the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide to Commissioners and Commission staff, the Congress, and to candidates and committees affected by the Federal Election Campaign Act, easy access to the Amendments, the bills from which they derive, accompanying reports, and the floor debates.

The material is presented in a chronological fashion, and is comprehensively indexed.

The legislative history was compiled, edited and indexed under the supervision of the Office of General Counsel. A companion volume containing the legislative history of the 1976 Amendments to the Federal Election Campaign Act is being issued concurrently.

The Commission hopes that this legislative history will aid all those affected by the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, as amended, in better understanding and complying with the Act.

[Report No. 93–689]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

FEBRUARY 21 (legislative day, FEBRUARY 19), 1974

Mr. CANNON, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, reported the following bill; which was read twice and placed on the calendar

A BILL

To amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974".

TITLE I—FINANCING OF FEDERAL CAMPAIGNS

TITLE III—CRIMES RELATING TO ELECTIONS AND POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

TITLE I—FINANCING OF FEDERAL CAMPAIGNS

PUBLIC FINANCING PROVISIONS

SEC. 101. The Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new title:

"TITLE V—PUBLIC FINANCING OF FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGNS

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 501. For purposes of this title, the term—

"(1) 'candidate', 'Commission', 'contribution', 'expenditure', 'political committee', 'political party', or 'State' has the meaning given it in section 301 of this Act;

"(2) 'authorized committee' means the central campaign committee of a candidate (under section 310 of this Act) or any political committee authorized in writing by that candidate to make or receive contributions or to make expenditures on his behalf;

"(3) 'Federal office' means the office of President, Senator, or Representative;

"(4) 'Representative' means a Member of the House of Representatives, the Resident Commissioner from the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the Delegates from the District of Columbia, Guam, and the Virgin Islands;

"(5) 'general election' means any regularly scheduled or special election held for the purpose of electing a candidate to Federal office or for the purpose of electing presidential and vice presidential electors;

"(6) 'primary election' means (A) an election, including a runoff election, held for the nomination by a political party of a candidate for election to Federal office, (B) a convention or caucus of a political party held for the nomination of such candidate, (C) a convention, caucus, or election held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party, and (D) an election held for the expression of a preference for the nomination by a political party of persons for election to the office of President;

"(7) 'eligible candidate' means a candidate who is eligible, under section 502, for payments under this title;

"(8) 'major party' means, with respect to an election for any Federal office—

"(A) a political party whose candidate for election to that office in the preceding general election for that office received, as the candidate of that party, 25 percent or more of the total number of votes cast in that election for all candidates for that office, or

"(B) if only one political party qualifies as a major party under the provisions of subparagraph (A), the political party whose candidate for election to that office in that election received, as the candidate of that party, the second greatest number of votes cast in that election for all candidates for that office (if such number is equal to 15 percent or more of the total number of votes cast in that election for all candidates for that office);

"(9) 'minor party' means, with respect to an election for a Federal office, a political party whose candidate for election to that office in the preceding general election for that office received, as the candidate of that party, at least 5 percent but less than 25 percent of the total number of votes cast in that election for all candidates for that office; and

"(10) 'fund' means the Federal Election Campaign Fund established under section 506(a).

"ELIGIBILITY FOR PAYMENTS

"SEC. 502. (a) To be eligible to receive payments under this title, a candidate shall agree—

"(1) to obtain and to furnish to the Commission any evidence it may request about his campaign expenditures and contributions;

"(2) to keep and to furnish to the Commission any records, books, and other information it may request;

"(3) to an audit and examination by the Commission under section 507 and to pay any amounts required under section 507; and

"(4) to furnish statements of campaign expenditures and proposed campaign expenses required under section 508.

"(b) Every such candidate shall certify to the Commission that—

"(1) the candidate and his authorized committees will not make campaign expenditures greater than the limitations in section 504; and

"(2) no contributions will be accepted by the candidate or his authorized committees in violation of section 615(b) of title 18, United States Code.

"(c) (1) To be eligible to receive any payments under section 506 for use in connection with his primary election campaign, a candidate shall certify to the Commission that—

"(A) he is seeking nomination by a political party for election as a Representative and he and his authorized committees have received contributions for that campaign of more than $10,000;

"(B) he is seeking nomination by a political party for election to the Senate and he and his authorized committees have received contributions for that campaign equal in amount to the lesser of—

"(i) 20 percent of the maximum amount he may spend in connection with his primary election campaign under section 504(a) (1); or

"(ii) $125,000; or

"(2) To be eligible to receive any payments under section 506 for use in connection with a primary runoff election campaign, a candidate shall certify to the Commission that he is seeking nomination by a political party for election as a Representative or as a Senator, and that he is a candidate for such nomination in a runoff primary election. Such a candidate is not required to receive any minimum amount of contributions before receiving payments under this title.

"(3) he is seeking nomination by a political party for election to the office of President and he and his authorized committees have received contributions for his campaign throughout the United States in a total amount of more than $250,000.

"(d) To be eligible to receive any payments under section 506 in connection with his general election campaign, a candidate must certify to the Commission that—

"(1) he is the nominee of a major or minor party for election to Federal office; or

"(2) in the case of any other candidate, he is seeking election to Federal office and he and his authorized committees have received contributions for that campaign in a total amount of not less than the campaign fund required under subsection (c) of a candidate for nomination for election to that office, determined in accordance with the provisions of subsection (e) (disregarding the words 'for nomination to' in paragraph (2) of such subsection and substituting the words 'general election' for 'primary election' in paragraphs (2) and (3) of such subsection).

"(e) In determining the amount of contributions received by a candidate and his authorized committees for purposes of subsection (c) and for purposes of subsection (d) (2)—

"(1) no contribution received by the candidate or any of his authorized committees as a subscription, loan, advance, or deposit, or as a contribution of products or services, shall be taken into account;

"(2) in the case of a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President, no contribution from any person shall be taken into account to the extent that it exceeds $250 when added to the amount of all other contributions made by that person to or for the benefit of that candidate in connection with his primary election campaign; and

"(3) in the case of any other candidate, no contribution from any person shall be taken into account to the extent that it exceeds $100 when added to the amount of all other contributions made by that person to or for the benefit of that candidate in connection with his primary election campaign.

"(f) Agreements and certifications under this section shall be filed with the Commission at the time required by the Commission.

"ENTITLEMENT TO PAYMENTS

"SEC. 503. (a) (1) Every eligible candidate is entitled to payments in connection with his primary election campaign in an amount which is equal to the amount of contributions he accepts for that campaign.

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)--

"(A) in the case of a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President, no contribution from any person shall be taken into account to the extent that it exceeds $250 when added to the amount of all other contributions made by that person to or for the benefit of that candidate for his primary election campaign; and

"(B) in the case of any other candidate for nomination for election to Federal office, no contribution from any person shall be taken into account to the extent that it exceeds $100 when added to the amount of all other contributions made by that person to or for the benefit of that candidate for his primary election campaign.

"(b) (1) Every eligible candidate who is nominated by a major party is entitled to payments for use in his general election campaign in an amount which is equal to the amount of expenditures the candidate may make in connection with that campaign under section 504.

"(2) Every eligible candidate who is nominated by a minor party is entitled to payments for use in his general election campaign in an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of payments to which a candidate of a major party for the same office is entitled under this subsection as the total number of popular votes received by the candidate of that minor party for that office in the preceding general election bears to the average number of popular votes received by the candidates of major parties for that office in the preceding general election.

"(3) (A) A candidate who is eligible under section 502 (d) (2) to receive payments under section 506 is entitled to payments for use in his general election campaign in an amount equal to the amount determined under subparagraph (B).

"(B) If a candidate whose entitlement is determined under this paragraph received, in the preceding general election held for the office to which he seeks election, 5 percent or more of the total number of votes cast for all candidates for that office, he is entitled to receive payments for use in his general election campaign in an amount (not in excess of the applicable limitation under section 504) equal to an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of the payment under section 506 to which the nominee of a major party is entitled for use in his general election campaign for that office as the number of votes received by that candidate in the preceding general election for that office bears to the average number of votes cast in the preceding general election for all major party candidates for that office. The entitlement of a candidate for election to any Federal office who, in the preceding general election held for that office, was the candidate of a major or minor party shall not be determined under this paragraph.

"(4) An eligible candidate who is the nominee of a minor party or whose entitlement is determined under section 502 (d) (2) and who receives 5 percent or more of the total number of votes cast in the current election, is entitled to payments under section 506 after the election for expenditures made or incurred in connection with his general election campaign in an amount (not in excess of the applicable limitation under section 504) equal to—

"(A) an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of the payment under section 506 to which the nominee of a major party was or would have been entitled for use in his campaign for election to that office as the number of votes received by the candidate in that election bears to the average number of votes cast for all major party candidates for that office in that election, reduced by

"(B) any amount paid to the candidate under section 506 before the election.

"(5) In applying the provisions of this section to a candidate for election to the office of President—

"(A) votes cast for electors affiliated with a political party shall be considered to be cast for the Presidential candidate of that party, and

"(B) votes cast for electors publicly pledged to cast their electoral votes for a candidate shall be considered to be cast for that candidate.

"(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsections (a) and (b), no candidate is entitled to the payment of any amount under this section which, when added to the total amount of contributions received by him and his authorized committees and any other payments made to him under this title for his primary or general election campaign, exceeds the amount of the expenditure limitation applicable to him for that campaign under section 504.

"EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS

"SEC. 504. (a) (1) Except to the extent that such amounts are changed under subsection (f) (2), no candidate (other than a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President) who receives payments under this title for use in his primary election campaign may make expenditures in connection with that campaign in excess of the greater of—

"(A) 10 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (g)) of the geographical area in which the election for such nomination is held, or

"(B) (i) $125,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Senator, or Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, or

"(ii) $90,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Representative from a State which is entitled to more than one Representative.

"(2) (A) No candidate for nomination for election to the office of President may make expenditures in any State in which he is a candidate in a primary election in excess of two times the amount which a candidate for nomination for election to the office of Senator from that State (or for nomination for election to the office of Delegate in the case of the District of Columbia, the Virgin Islands, or Guam, or to the office of Resident Commissioner in the case of Puerto Rico) may expend in that State in connection with his primary election campaign.

"(B) Notwithstanding the provisions of subparagraph (A), no such candidate may make expenditures throughout the United States in connection with his campaign for that nomination in excess of an amount equal to ten cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States. For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'United States' means the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands and any area from which a delegate to the national nominating convention of a political party is selected.

"(b) Except to the extent that such amounts are changed under subsection (f) (2), no candidate who receives payments under this title for use in his general election campaign may make expenditures in connection with that campaign in excess of the greater of—

"(1) 15 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (g)) of the geographical area in which the election is held, or

"(2) (A) $175,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Senator, or Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, or

"(B) $90,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Representative from a State which is entitled to more than one Representative.

"(c) No candidate who is unopposed in a primary or general election may make expenditures in connection with his primary or general election campaign in excess of 10 percent of the limitation in subsection (a) or (b).

"(d) The Commission shall prescribe regulations under which any expenditure by a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President for use in two or more States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

"(e) (1) Expenditures made on behalf of any candidate are, for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by such candidate.

"(2) Expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate for the office of Vice President of the United States are, for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by the candidate for the office of President of the United States with whom he is running.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a Vice Presidential candidate, if it is made by—

"(A) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for the purposes of making any expenditure, or

"(B) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, or an agent of the candidate to make the expenditure.

"(4) For purposes of this section an expenditure made by the national committee of a political party, or by the State committee of a political party, in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate affiliated with that party which is not in excess of the limitations contained in section 614(b) of title 18, United States Code, is not considered to be an expenditure made on behalf of that candidate.

"(f) (1) For purposes of paragraph (2)—

"(A) 'price index' means the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and

"(B) 'base period' means the calendar year 1973.

"(2) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1975), as necessary data become available from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register the percentage difference between the price index for the twelve months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each amount determined under subsections (a) and (b) shall be changed by such percentage difference. Each amount so changed shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

"(g) During the first week of January, 1975, and every subsequent year, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, of each State, and of each congressional district as of the first day of July next preceding the date of certification. The term 'voting age population' means resident population, eighteen years of age or older.

"(h) Upon receiving the certification of the Secretary of Commerce and of the Secretary of Labor, the Commission shall publish in the Federal Register the applicable expenditure limitations in effect for the calendar year for the United States, and for each State and congressional district under this section.

"(h) In the case of a candidate who is campaigning for election to the House of Representatives from a district which has been established, or the boundaries of which have been altered, since the preceding general election for such office, the determination of the amount and the determination of whether the candidate is a major party candidate or a minor party candidate or is otherwise entitled to payments under this title shall be made by the Commission based upon the number of votes cast in the preceding general election for such office by voters residing within the area encompassed in the new or altered district."

"CERTIFICATIONS BY COMMISSION

"SEC. 505. (a) On the basis of the evidence, books, records, and information furnished by each candidate eligible to receive payments under section 506, and prior to examination and audit under section 507, the Commission shall certify from time to time to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment to each candidate the amount to which that candidate is entitled.

"(b) Initial certifications by the Commission under subsection (a), and all determinations made by it under this title, shall be final and conclusive, except to the extent that they are subject to examination and audit by the Commission under section 507 and judicial review under section 313.

"PAYMENTS TO ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES

"SEC. 506. (a) There is established within the Treasury a fund to be known as the Federal Election Campaign Fund. There are authorized to be appropriated to the fund amounts equal to the sum of the amounts designated by taxpayers under section 6096 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 not previously taken into account for purposes of this subsection, and such additional amounts as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title without any reduction under subsection (c). The moneys in the fund shall remain available without fiscal year limitation.

"(b) Upon receipt of a certification from the Commission under section 505, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the amount certified by the Commission to the candidate to whom the certification relates.

"(c) (1) If the Secretary of the Treasury determines that the monies in the fund are not, or may not be, sufficient to pay the full amount of entitlement to all candidates eligible to receive payments, he shall reduce the amount to which each candidate is entitled under section 503 by a percentage equal to the percentage obtained by dividing (1) the amount of money remaining in the fund at the time of such determination by (2) the total amount which all candidates eligible to receive payments are entitled to receive under section 503. If additional candidates become eligible under section 502 after the Secretary determines there are insufficient monies in the fund, he shall make any further reductions in the amounts payable to all eligible candidates necessary to carryout the purposes of this subsection. The Secretary shall notify the Commission and each eligible candidate by registered mail of the reduction in the amount to which that candidate is entitled under section 503.

"(2) If, as a result of a reduction under this subsection in the amount to which an eligible candidate is entitled under section 503, payments have been made under this section in excess of the amount to which such candidate is entitled, that candidate is liable for repayment to the fund of the excess under procedures the Commission shall prescribe by regulation.

"EXAMINATION AND AUDITS; REPAYMENTS

"SEC. 507. (a) After each Federal election, the Commission shall conduct a thorough examination and audit of the campaign expenditures of all candidates for Federal office who received payments under this title for use in campaigns relating to that election.

"(b) (1) If the Commission determines that any portion of the payments made to an eligible candidate under section 506 was in excess of the aggregate amount of the payments to which the candidate was entitled, it shall so notify that candidate, and he shall pay to the Secretary of the Treasury an amount equal to the excess amount. If the Commission determines that any portion of the payments made to a candidate under section 506 for use in his primary election campaign or his general election campaign was not used to make expenditures in connection with that campaign, the Commission shall so notify the candidate and he shall pay an amount equal to the amount of the unexpended portion to the Secretary. In making its determination under the preceding sentence, the Commission shall consider all amounts received as contributions to have been expended before any amounts received under this title are expended.

"(2) If the Commission determines that any amount of any payment made to a candidate under section 506 was used for any purpose other than—

"(A) to defray campaign expenditures, or

"(B) to repay loans the proceeds of which were used, or otherwise to restore funds (other than contributions to defray campaign expenditures which were received and expended) which were used, to defray campaign expenditures, it shall notify the candidate of the amount so used, and the candidate shall pay to the Secretary of the Treasury an amount equal to such amount.

"(3) No payment shall be required from a candidate under this subsection in excess of the total amount of all payments received by the candidate under section 506 in connection with the campaign with respect to which the event occurred which caused the candidate to have to make a payment under this subsection.

"(c) No notification shall be made by the Commission under subsection (b) with respect to a campaign more than eighteen months after the day of the election to which the campaign related.

"(d) All payments received by the Secretary under subsection (b) shall be deposited by him in the fund.

"INFORMATION ON EXPENDITURES AND PROPOSED EXPENDITURES

"SEC. 508. (a) Every candidate shall, from time to time as the Commission requires, furnish to the Commission a detailed statement, in the form the Commission prescribes, of—

"(1) the campaign expenditures incurred by him and his authorized committees prior to the date of the statement (whether or not evidence of campaign expenditures has been furnished for purposes of section 505), and

"(2) the campaign expenditures which he and his authorized committees propose to incur on or after the date of the statement.

"(b) The Commission shall, as soon as possible after it receives a statement under subsection (a), prepare and make available for public inspection and copying a summary of the statement, together with any other data or information which it deems advisable.

"REPORTS TO CONGRESS

"SEC. 509. (a) The Commission shall, as soon as practicable after the close of each calendar year, submit a full report to the Senate and House of Representatives setting forth—

"(1) the expenditures incurred by each candidate, and his authorized committees, who received any payment under section 506 in connection with an election;

"(2) the amounts certified by it under section 505 for payment to that candidate; and

"(3) the amount of payments, if any, required from that candidate under section 507, and the reasons for each payment required.

Each report submitted pursuant to this section shall be printed as a Senate document.

"(b) The Commission is authorized to conduct examinations and audits (in addition to the examinations and audits under sections 505 and 507), to conduct investigations, and to require the keeping and submission of any books, records, or other information necessary to carry out the functions and duties imposed on it by this title.

"PARTICIPATION BY COMMISSION IN JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS

"SEC. 510. The Commission may initiate civil proceedings in any district court of the United States to seek recovery of any amounts determined to be payable to the Secretary of the Treasury by a candidate under this title.

"PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS

"SEC. 511. Violation of any provision of this title is punishable by a fine of not more than $50,000, or imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

"RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER FEDERAL ELECTION LAWS

"SEC. 512. The Commission shall consult from time to time with the Secretary of the Senate, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, the Federal Communications Commission, and with other Federal officers charged with the administration of laws relating to Federal elections, in order to develop as much consistency and coordination with the administration of those other laws as the provisions of this title permit. The Commission shall use the same or comparable data as that used in the administration of such other election laws whenever possible.".

TITLE II—CHANGES IN CAMPAIGN COMMUNICATIONS LAW AND IN REPORTING AND DISCLOSURE PROVISIONS OF FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

CAMPAIGN COMMUNICATIONS

SEC. 201. (a) Section 315(a) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 315(a)) is amended by inserting after "public office" in the first sentence thereof the following: ", other than Federal elective office (including the office of Vice President)".

(b) Section 315(b) of such Act (47 U.S.C. 315(b)) is amended by striking out "by any person" and inserting "by or on behalf of any person".

(c) (1) Section 315(c) of such Act (47 U.S.C. 315(c)) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) No station licensee may make any charge for the use of any such station by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal elective office unless such candidate (or a person specifically authorized by such candidate in writing to do so) certifies to such licensee in writing that the payment of such charge will not exceed the limit on expenditures applicable to that candidate under section 504 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, or under section 614 of title 18, United States Code.".

(2) Section 315(d) of such Act (47 U.S.C. 315 (d)) is amended to read as follows:

"(d) If a State by law imposes a limitation upon the amount which a legally qualified candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to public office (other than Federal elective office) within that State may spend in connection with his campaign for such nomination or his campaign for election, then no station licensee may make any charge for the use of such station by or on behalf of such candidate unless such candidate (or a person specifically authorized in writing by him to do so) certifies to such licensee in writing that the payment of such charge will not violate that limitation.".

(d) Section 317 of such Act (47 U.S.C. 317), is amended by—

(1) striking out in paragraph (1) of subsection (a) "person: Provided, That" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "person. If such matter is a political advertisement soliciting funds for a candidate or a political committee, there shall be announced at the time of such broadcast a statement that a copy of reports filed by that person with the Federal Election Commission is available from the Federal Election Commission, Washington, D.C., and the licensee shall not make any charge for any part of the costs of making the announcement. The term"; and

(2) by redesignating subsection (e) as (f), and by inserting after subsection (d) the following new subsection:

"(e) Each station licensee shall maintain a record of any political advertisement broadcast, together with the identification of the person who caused it to be broadcast, for a period of two years. The record shall be available for public inspection at reasonable hours.".

(e) The Campaign Communications Reform Act is repealed.

CHANGES IN DEFINITIONS FOR REPORTING AND DISCLOSURE

SEC. 202. (a) Section 301 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to definitions) is amended by—

(1) striking out ", and (5) the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States" in paragraph (a), and by inserting "and" before "(4)" in such paragraph;

(2) striking out paragraph (d) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(d) 'political committee' means—

"(1) any committee, club, association, or other group of persons which receives contributions or makes expenditures during a calendar year in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000;

"(2) any national committee, association, or organization of a political party, any State affiliate or subsidiary of a national political party, and any State central committee of a political party; and

"(3) any committee, association, or organization engaged in the administration of a separate segregated fund described in section 610 of title 18, United States Code;";

(3) inserting in paragraph (e) (1) after "subscription" the following: "(including any assessment, fee, or membership dues)";

(4) striking out in paragraph (e) (1) "or for the purpose of influencing the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "or for the purpose of financing any operations of a political committee

(other than a payment made or an obligation incurred by a corporation or labor organization which, under the provisions of the last paragraph of section 610 of title 18, United States Code, does not constitute a contribution by that corporation or labor organization), or for the purpose of paying, at any time, any debt or obligation incurred by a candidate or a political committee in connection with any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office";

(5) striking out subparagraph (2) of paragraph (e), and amending subparagraph (3) of such paragraph to read as follows:

"(3) funds received by a political committee which are transferred to that committee from another political committee;";

(6) redesignating subparagraphs (4) and (5) of paragraph (e) as paragraphs (3) and (4), respectively;

(7) striking out paragraph (f) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(f) 'expenditure'—

"(1) means a purchase, payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money or anything of value, made for the purpose of—

"(A) influencing the nomination for election, or the election, of any person to Federal office, or to the office of presidential and vice-presidential elector;

"(B) influencing the result of a primary election held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President;

"(C) financing any operations of a political committee; or

"(D) paying, at any time, any debt or obligation incurred by a candidate or a political committee in connection with any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office; and

"(2) means the transfer of funds by a political committee to another political committee; but

"(3) does not include—

"(A) the value of services rendered by individuals who volunteer to work without compensation on behalf of a candidate; or

"(B) any payment made or obligation incurred by a corporation or a labor organization which, under the provisions of the last paragraph of section 610 of title 18.

United States Code, would not constitute an expenditure by that corporation or labor organization;";

(7) striking "and" at the end of paragraph (h);

(8) striking the period at the end of paragraph (i) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and

(9) adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(j) 'identification' means—

"(1) in the case of an individual, his full name and the full address of his principal place of residence; and

"(2) in the case of any other person, the full name and address of that person;

"(k) 'national committee' means the organization which, by virtue of the bylaws of a political party, is responsible for the day-to-day operation of that political party at the national level, as determined by the Commission; and

"(l) 'political party' means an association, committee, or organization which nominates a candidate for election to any Federal office, whose name appears on the election ballot as the candidate of that association, committee, or organization.".

(b) (1) Section 302 (b) of such Act (relating to reports of contributions in excess of $10) is amended by striking ", the name and address (occupation and principal place of business, if any)" and inserting "of the contribution and the identification".

(2) Section 302(c) of such Act (relating to detailed accounts) is amended by striking "full name and mailing address (occupation and the principal place of business, if any)" in paragraphs (2) and (4) and inserting in each such paragraph "identification".

(3) Section 302(c) of such Act is further amended by striking the semicolon at the end of paragraph (2) and inserting "and, if a person's contributions aggregate more than $100, the account shall include occupation, and the principal place of business (if any);".

REGISTRATION OF CANDIDATES AND POLITICAL COMMITTEES

SEC. 203. (a) Section 303 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to registration of political committees; statements) is amended by redesignating subsections (a) through (d) as (b) through (e), respectively, and by inserting after "SEC. 303." the following new subsection (a):

"(a) Each candidate shall, within ten days after the date on which he has qualified under State law as a candidate, or on which he, or any person authorized by him to do so, has received a contribution or made an expenditure in connection with his campaign or for the purpose of preparing to undertake his campaign, file with the Commission a registration statement in such form as the Commission may prescribe. The statement shall include—

"(1) the identification of the candidate, and any individual, political committee, or other person he has authorized to receive contributions or make expenditures on his behalf in connection with his campaign;

"(2) the identification of his campaign depositories, together with the title and number of each account at each such depository which is to be used in connection with his campaign, any safety deposit box to be used in connection therewith, and the identification of each individual authorized by him to make any expenditure or withdrawal from such account or box; and

"(3) such additional relevant information as the Commission may require.".

(b) The first sentence of subsection (b) of such section (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) is amended to read as follows: "The treasurer of each political committee shall file with the Commission a statement of organization within ten days after the date on which the committee is organized.".

(c) The second sentence of such subsection (b) is amended by striking out "this Act" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974".

(d) Subsection (c) of such section (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) is amended by—

(1) inserting "be in such form as the Commission shall prescribe, and shall" after "The statement of organization shall";

(2) striking out paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(3) the geographic area or political jurisdiction within which the committee will operate, and a general description of the committee's authority and activities;"; and

(3) striking out paragraph (9) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(9) the name and address of the campaign depositories used by that committee, together with the title and number of each account and safety deposit box used by that committee at each depository, and the identification of each individual authorized to make withdrawals or payments out of such account or box;".

(e) The caption of such section 303 is amended by inserting "CANDIDATES AND" after "REGISTRATION OF".

CHANGES IN REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 204. (a) Section 304 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to reports by political committees and candidates) is amended by—

(1) inserting "(1)" after "(a)" in subsection (a);

(2) striking out "for election" each place it appears in the first sentence of subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof in each such place "for nomination for election, or for election,";

(3) striking out the second sentence of subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Such reports shall be filed on the tenth day of April, July, and October of each year, on the tenth day preceding an election, and on the last day of January of each year. Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, the reports required by that sentence to be filed during April, July, and October by or relating to a candidate during a year in which no Federal election is held in which he is a candidate, may be filed on the twentieth day of each month.";

(4) striking out everything after "filing" in the third sentence of subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof a period and the following: "If the person making any anonymous contribution is subsequently identified, the identification of the contributor shall be reported to the Commission within the reporting period within which he is identified."; and

(5) adding at the end of subsection (a) the following new paragraph:

"(2) Upon a request made by a Presidential candidate or a political committee which operates in more than one State, or upon its own motion, the Commission may waive the reporting dates (other than January 31) set forth in paragraph (1), and require instead that such candidates or political committees file reports not less frequently than monthly. The Commission may not require a Presidential candidate or a political committee operating in more than one State to file more than eleven reports (not counting any report to be filed on January 31) during any calendar year. If the Commission acts on its own motion under this paragraph with respect to a candidate or a political committee, that candidate or committee may obtain judicial review in accordance with the provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code.".

(b) (1) Section 304(b) of such Act (relating to reports by political committees and candidates) is amended by striking "full name and mailing address (occupation and the principal place of business, if any)" in paragraphs (9) and (10) and inserting in lieu thereof in each such paragraph "identification".

(2) Subsection (b) (5) of such section 304 is amended by striking out "lender and endorsers" and inserting in lieu thereof "lender, endorsers, and guarantors".

(c) Subsection (b) (12) of such section is amended by inserting before the semicolon the following: ", together with a statement as to the circumstances and conditions under which any such debt or obligation is extinguished and the consideration therefor".

(d) Subsection (b) of such section is amended by—

(1) striking the "and" at the end of paragraph (12); and

(2) redesignating paragraph (13) as (14), and by inserting after paragraph (12) the following new paragraph:

"(13) such information as the Commission may require for the disclosure of the nature, amount, source, and designated recipient of any earmarked, encumbered, or restricted contribution or other special fund; and".

(e) The first sentence of subsection (c) of such section is amended to read as follows: "The reports required to be filed by subsection (a) shall be cumulative during the calendar year to which they relate, and during such additional periods of time as the Commission may require.".

(f) Such section 304 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(d) This section does not require a Member of Congress to report, as contributions received or as expenditures made, the value of photographic, matting, or recording services furnished to him before the first day of January of the year preceding the year in which his term of office expires if those services were furnished to him by the Senate Recording Studio, the House Recording Studio, or by any individual whose pay is disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of Representatives and who furnishes such services as his primary duty as an employee of the Senate or House of Representatives, or if such services were paid for by the Republican or Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, the Democratic National Congressional Committee, or the National Republican Congressional Committee.

"(e) Every person (other than a political committee or candidate) who makes contributions or expenditures, other than by contribution to a political committee or candidate, in an aggregate amount in excess of $100 within a calendar year shall file with the Commission a statement containing the information required by this section. Statements required by this subsection shall be filed on the dates on which reports by political committees are filed but need not be cumulative.".

(g) The caption of such section 304 is amended to read as follows:

"REPORTS".

CAMPAIGN ADVERTISEMENTS

SEC. 205. Section 305 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to reports by others than political committees) is amended to read as follows:

"REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO CAMPAIGN ADVERTISING

"SEC. 305. (a) No person shall cause any political advertisement to be published unless he furnishes to the publisher of the advertisement his identification in writing, together with the identification of any person authorizing him to cause such publication.

"(b) Any published political advertisement shall contain a statement, in such form as the Commission may prescribe, of the identification of the person authorizing the publication of that advertisement.

"(c) Any publisher who publishes any political advertisement shall maintain such records as the Commission may prescribe for a period of two years after the date of publication setting forth such advertisement and any material relating to identification furnished to him in connection therewith, and shall permit the public to inspect and copy those records at reasonable hours.

"(d) To the extent that any person sells space in any newspaper or magazine to a candidate or his agent for Federal office, or nomination thereto, in connection with such candidate's campaign for nomination for, or election to, such office, the charges made for the use of such space in connection with his campaign shall not exceed the charges made for comparable use of such space for other purposes.

"(e) Any political committee shall include on the face or front page of all literature and advertisements soliciting contributions the following notice:

"'A copy of our report filed with the Federal Election Commission is available for purchase from the Federal Election Commission, Washington, D.C.'

"(f) As used in this section, the term—

"(1) 'political advertisement' means any matter advocating the election or defeat of any candidate but does not include any bona fide news story (including interviews, commentaries, or other works prepared for and published by any newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication the publication of which work is not paid for by any candidate, political committee, or agent thereof); and

"(2) 'published' means publication in a newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication, distribution of printed leaflets, pamphlets, or other documents, or display through the use of any outdoor advertising facility, and such other use of printed media as the Commission shall prescribe.".

WAIVER OF REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 206. Section 306(c) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to formal requirements respecting reports and statements) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) The Commission may, by published regulation of general applicability, relieve—

"(1) any category of candidates of the obligation to comply personally with the requirements of subsections (a) through (e) of section 304, if it determines that such action will not have any adverse effect on the purposes of this title, and

"(2) any category of political committees of the obligation to comply with such section if such committees—

"(A) primarily support persons seeking State or local office, and

"(B) do not operate in more than one State or do not operate on a statewide basis.".

ESTABLISHMENT OF FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION; CENTRAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEES; CAMPAIGN DEPOSITORIES

SEC. 207. (a) Title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to disclosure of Federal campaign funds) is amended by redesignating section 308 as section 312, and by inserting after section 307 the following new sections:

"FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION

"SEC. 308. (a) (1) There is established, as an independent establishment of the executive branch of the Government of the United States, a commission to be known as the Federal Election Commission.

"(2) The Commission shall be composed of the Comptroller General, who shall serve without the right to vote, and seven members who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Of the seven members—

"(A) two shall be chosen from among individuals recommended by the President pro tempore of the Senate, upon the recommendations of the majority leader of the Senate and the minority leader of the Senate; and

"(B) two shall be chosen from among individuals recommended by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, upon the recommendations of the majority leader of the House and the minority leader of the House.

The two members appointed under subparagraph (A) shall not be affiliated with the same political party; nor shall the two members appointed under subparagraph (B). Of the members not appointed under such subparagraphs, not more than two shall be affiliated with the same political party.

"(3) Members of the Commission, other than the Comptroller General, shall serve for terms of seven years, except that, of the members first appointed—

"(A) one of the members not appointed under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for a term ending on the April thirtieth first occurring more than six months after the date on which he is appointed;

"(B) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2) (A) shall be appointed for a term ending one year after the April thirtieth on which the term of the member referred to in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph ends;

"(C) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2) (B) shall be appointed for a term ending two years thereafter;

"(D) one of the members not appointed under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for a term ending three years thereafter;

"(E) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2) (A) shall be appointed for a term ending four years thereafter;

"(F) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2) (B) shall be appointed for a term ending five years thereafter; and

"(G) one of the members not appointed under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for a term ending six years thereafter.

"(4) Members shall be chosen on the basis of their maturity, experience, integrity, impartiality, and good judgment. A member may be reappointed to the Commission only once.

"(5) An individual appointed to fill a vacancy occurring other than by the expiration of a term of office shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member he succeeds. Any vacancy occurring in the office of member of the Commission shall be filled in the manner in which that office was originally filled.

"(6) The Commission shall elect a Chairman and a Vice Chairman from among its members for a term of two years. The Chairman and the Vice Chairman shall not be affiliated with the same political party. The Vice Chairman shall act as Chairman in the absence or disability of the Chairman, or in the event of a vacancy in that office.

"(b) A vacancy in the Commission shall not impair the right of the remaining members to exercise all the powers of the Commission. Four members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum.

"(c) The Commission shall have an official seal which shall be judicially noticed.

"(d) The Commission shall at the close of each fiscal year report to the Congress and to the President concerning the action it has taken; the names, salaries, and duties of all individuals in its employ and the money it has disbursed; and shall make such further reports on the matters within its jurisdiction and such recommendations for further legislation as may appear desirable.

"(e) The principal office of the Commission shall be in or near the District of Columbia, but it may meet or exercise any or all its powers in any State.

"(f) The Commission shall appoint a General Counsel and an Executive Director to serve at the pleasure of the Commission. The General Counsel shall be the chief legal officer of the Commission. The Executive Director shall be responsible for the administrative operations of the Commission and shall perform such other duties as may be delegated or assigned to him from time to time by regulations or orders of the Commission. However, the Commission shall not delegate the making of regulations regarding elections to the Executive Director.

"(g) The Chairman of the Commission shall appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel as are necessary to fulfill the duties of the Commission in accordance with the provisions of title 5, United States Code.

"(h) The Commission may obtain the services of experts and consultants in accordance with section 3109 of title 5, United States Code.

"(i) In carrying out its responsibilities under this title, the Commission shall, to the fullest extent practicable, avail itself of the assistance, including personnel and facilities, of the General Accounting Office and the Department of Justice. The Comptroller General and the Attorney General may make available to the Commission such personnel, facilities, and other assistance, with or without reimbursement, as the Commission may request.

"(j) The provisions of section 7324 of title 5, United States Code, shall apply to members of the Commission notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (d) (3) of such section.

"(k) (1) Whenever the Commission submits any budget estimate or request to the President or the Office of Management and Budget, it shall concurrently transmit a copy of that estimate or request to the Congress.

"(2) Whenever the Commission submits any legislative recommendations, or testimony, or comments on legislation requested by the Congress or by any Member of Congress to the President or the Office of Management and Budget, it shall concurrently transmit a copy thereof to the Congress or to the Member requesting the same. No officer or agency of the United States shall have any authority to require the Commission to submit its legislative recommendations, or testimony, or comments on legislation, to any office or agency of the United States for approval, comments, or review, prior to the submission of such recommendations, testimony, or comments to the Congress.

"POWERS OF COMMISSION

"SEC. 309. (a) The Commission has the power—

"(1) to require, by special or general orders, any person to submit in writing such reports and answers to questions as the Commission may prescribe; and such submission shall be made within such reasonable period and under oath or otherwise as the Commission may determine;

"(2) to administer oaths;

"(3) to require by subpena, signed by the Chairman or the Vice Chairman, the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all documentary evidence relating to the execution of its duties;

"(4) in any proceeding or investigation to order testimony to be taken by deposition before any person who is designated by the Commission and has the power to administer oaths and, in such instances, to compel testimony and the production of evidence in the same manner as authorized under paragraph (3) of this subsection;

"(5) to pay witnesses the same fees and mileage as are paid in like circumstances in the courts of the United States;

"(6) to initiate (through civil proceedings for injunctive relief and through presentations to Federal grand juries), prosecute, defend, or appeal any civil or criminal action in the name of the Commission for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this Act and of sections 602, 608, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, and 617 of title 18, United States Code, through its General Counsel;

"(7) to delegate any of its functions or powers, other than the power to issue subpenas under paragraph (3), to any officer or employee of the Commission; and

"(8) to make, amend, and repeal such rules, pursuant to the provisions of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code, as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

"(b) Any United States district court within the jurisdiction of which any inquiry is carried on, may, upon petition by the Commission, in case of refusal to obey a subpena or order of the Commission issued under subsection (a) of this section, issue an order requiring compliance therewith. Any failure to obey the order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof.

"(c) No person shall be subject to civil liability to any person (other than the Commission or the United States) for disclosing information at the request of the Commission.

"(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commission shall be the primary civil and criminal enforcement agency for violations of the provisions of this Act, and of sections 602, 608, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, and 617 of title 18, United States Code. Any violation of any such provision shall be prosecuted by the Attorney General or Department of Justice personnel only after consultation with, and with the consent of, the Commission.

"(e) (1) Any person who violates any provision of this Act or of section 602, 608, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, or 617 of title 18, United States Code, may be assessed a civil penalty by the Commission under paragraph (2) of this subsection of not more than $10,000 for each such violation. Each occurrence of a violation of this Act and each day of noncompliance with a disclosure requirement of this title or an order of the Commission issued under this section shall constitute a separate offense. In determining the amount of the penalty the Commission shall consider the person's history of previous violations, the appropriateness of such penalty to the financial resources of the person charged, the gravity of the violation, and the demonstrated good faith of the person charged in attempting to achieve rapid compliance after notification of a violation.

"(2) A civil penalty shall be assessed by the Commission by order only after the person charged with a violation has been given an opportunity for a hearing and the Commission has determined, by decision incorporating its findings of fact therein, that a violation did occur, and the amount of the penalty. Any hearing under this section shall be of record and shall be held in accordance with chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code.

"(3) If the person against whom a civil penalty is assessed fails to pay the penalty, the Commission shall file a petition for enforcement of its order assessing the penalty in any appropriate district court of the United States. The petition shall designate the person against whom the order is sought to be enforced as the respondent. A copy of the petition shall forthwith be sent by registered or certified mail to the respondent and his attorney of record, and thereupon the Commission shall certify and file in such court the record upon which such order sought to be enforced was issued. The court shall have jurisdiction to enter a judgment enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside in whole or in part the order and decision of the Commission or it may remand the proceedings to the Commission for such further action as it may direct. The court may determine de novo all issues of law but the Commission's findings of fact, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive.

"(f) Upon application made by any individual holding Federal office, any candidate, or any political committee, the Commission, through its General Counsel, shall provide within a reasonable period of time an advisory opinion, with respect to any specific transaction or activity inquired of, as to whether such transaction or activity would constitute a violation of any provision of this Act or of any provision of title 18, United States Code, over which the Commission has primary jurisdiction under subsection (d).

"CENTRAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEES

"SEC. 310. (a) Each candidate shall designate one political committee as his central campaign committee. A candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to the office of President, may also designate one political committee in each State in which he is a candidate as his State campaign committee for that State. The designation shall be made in writing, and a copy of the designation, together with such information as the Commission may require, shall be furnished to the Commission upon the designation of any such committee.

"(b) No political committee may be designated as the central campaign committee of more than one candidate. The central campaign committee, and each State campaign committee, designated by a candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of President shall be the central campaign committee and the State campaign committee of the candidate nominated by that party for election to the office of Vice President.

"(c) (1) Any political committee authorized by a candidate to accept contributions or make expenditures in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or for election, which is not a central campaign committee or a State campaign committee, shall furnish each report required of it under section 304 (other than reports required under section 311 (b)) to that candidate's central campaign committee at the time it would, but for this subsection, be required to furnish that report to the Commission. Any report properly furnished to a central campaign committee under this subsection shall be, for purposes of this title, held and considered to have been furnished to the Commission at the time at which it was furnished to such central campaign committee.

"(2) The Commission may, by regulation, require any political committee receiving contributions or making expenditures in a State on behalf of a candidate who, under subsection (a), has designated a State campaign committee for that State to furnish its reports to that State campaign committee instead of furnishing such reports to the central campaign committee of that candidate.

"(3) The Commission may require any political committee to furnish any report directly to the Commission.

"(d) Each political committee which is a central campaign committee or a State campaign committee shall receive all reports filed with or furnished to it by other political committees, and consolidate and furnish the reports to the Commission, together with its own reports and statements, in accordance with the provisions of this title and regulations prescribed by the Commission.

"CAMPAIGN DEPOSITORIES

"SEC. 311. (a) (1) Each candidate shall designate one or more National or State banks as his campaign depositories. The central campaign committee of that candidate, and any other political committee authorized by him to receive contributions or to make expenditures on his behalf, shall maintain a checking account at a depository so designated by the candidate and shall deposit any contributions received by that committee into that account. A candidate shall deposit any payment received by him under section 506 of this Act in the account maintained by his central campaign committee. No expenditure may be made by any such committee on behalf of a candidate or to influence his election except by check drawn on that account, other than petty cash expenditures as provided in subsection (b).

"(2) The treasurer of each political committee (other than a political committee authorized by a candidate to receive contributions or to make expenditures on his behalf) shall designate one or more National or State banks as campaign depositories of that committee, and shall maintain a checking account for the committee at each such depository. All contributions received by that committee shall be deposited in such an account. No expenditure may be made by that committee except by check drawn on that account, other than petty cash expenditures as provided in subsection (b).

"(b) A political committee may maintain a petty cash fund out of which it may make expenditures not in excess of $100 to any person in connection with a single purchase or transaction. A record of petty cash disbursements shall be kept in accordance with requirements established by the Commission, and such statements and reports thereof shall be furnished to the Commission as it may require.

"(c) A candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to the office of President may establish one such depository in each such State, which shall be considered by his State campaign committee for that State and any other political committee authorized by him to receive contributions or to make expenditures on his behalf in that State, under regulations prescribed by the Commission, as his single campaign depository. The campaign depository of the candidate of a political party for election to the office of Vice President shall be the campaign depository designated by the candidate of that party for election to the office of President.".

(b) (1) Section 5314 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(60) Members (other than the Comptroller General), Federal Election Commission (7)."

(2) Section 5315 of such title is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(98) General Counsel, Federal Election Commission.

"(99) Executive Director, Federal Election Commission."

(c) Until the appointment and qualification of all the members of the Federal Election Commission and its General Counsel and until the transfer provided for in this subsection, the Comptroller General, the Secretary of the Senate, and the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall continue to carry out their responsibilities under title I and title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 as such titles existed on the day before the date of enactment of this Act. Upon the appointment of all the members of the Commission and its General Counsel, the Comptroller General, the Secretary of the Senate, and the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall meet with the Commission and arrange for the transfer, within thirty days after the date on which all such members and the General Counsel are appointed, of all records, documents, memorandums, and other papers associated with carrying out their responsibilities under title I and title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

(d) Title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by—

(1) amending section 301 (g) (relating to definitions) to read as follows:

"(g) 'Commission' means the Federal Election Commission;";

(2) striking out "supervisory officer" in section 302 (d) and inserting "Commission";

(3) striking out section 302(f) (relating to organization of political committees);

(4) amending section 303 (relating to registration of political committees; statements) by—

(A) striking out "supervisory officer" each time it appears therein and inserting "Commission"; and

(B) striking out "he" in the second sentence of subsection (b) of such section (as redesignated by section 203(a) of this Act) and inserting "it";

(5) amending section 304 (relating to reports by political committees and candidates) by—

(A) striking out "appropriate supervisory officer" and "him" in the first sentence thereof and inserting "Commission" and "it", respectively; and

(B) striking out "supervisory officer" where it appears in the third sentence of subsection (a) and in paragraphs (12) and (14) (as redesignated by section 204(d)(2) of this Act) of subsection (b), and inserting "Commission";

(6) striking out "supervisory officer" each place it appears in section 306 (relating to formal requirements respecting reports and statements) and inserting "Commission";

(7) striking out "Comptroller General of the United States" and "he" in section 307 (relating to reports on convention financing) and inserting "Federal Election Commission" and "it", respectively;

(8) striking out "SUPERVISORY OFFICER" in the caption of section 312 (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) (relating to duties of the supervisory officer) and inserting "COMMISSION";

(9) striking out "supervisory officer" in section 312(a) (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) the first time it appears and inserting "Commission";

(10) amending section 312(a) (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) by—

(A) striking out "him" in paragraph (1) and inserting "it";

(B) striking out "him" in paragraph (4) and inserting "it"; and

(C) striking out "he" each place it appears in paragraphs (7) and (9) and inserting "it";

(11) striking out "supervisory officer" in section 312(b) (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this subsection) and inserting "Commission";

(12) amending subsection (c) of section 312 (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) by—

(A) striking out "Comptroller General" each place it appears therein and inserting "Commission", and striking out "his" in the second sentence of such subsection and inserting "its"; and

(B) striking out the last sentence thereof; and

(13) amending subsection (d) (1) of section 312 (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) by—

(A) striking out "supervisory officer" each place it appears therein and inserting "Commission";

(B) striking out "he" the first place it appears in the second sentence of such section and inserting "it"; and

(C) striking out "the Attorney General on behalf of the United States" and inserting "the Commission".

INDEXING AND PUBLICATION OF REPORTS

SEC. 208. Section 312 (a) (6) (as redesignated by this Act) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to duties of the supervisory officer) is amended to read as follows:

"(6) to compile and maintain a cumulative index listing all statements and reports filed with the Commission during each calendar year by political committees and candidates, which the Commission shall cause to be published in the Federal Register no less frequently than monthly during even-numbered years and quarterly in odd-numbered years and which shall be in such form and shall include such information as may be prescribed by the Commission to permit easy identification of each statement, report, candidate, and committee listed, at least as to their names, the dates of the statements and reports, and the number of pages in each, and the Commission shall make copies of statements and reports listed in the index available for sale, direct or by mail, at a price determined by the Commission to be reasonable to the purchaser;".

JUDICIAL REVIEW

SEC. 209. Title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by inserting after section 312 (as redesignated by this Act) the following new section:

"JUDICIAL REVIEW

"SEC. 313. (a) Any agency action by the Commission made under the provisions of this Act shall be subject to review by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit upon petition filed in such court by any interested person. Any petition filed pursuant to this section shall be filed within thirty days after the agency action by the Commission for which review is sought.

"(b) The Commission, the national committee of any political party, and individuals eligible to vote in an election for Federal office, are authorized to institute such actions, including actions for declaratory judgment or injunctive relief, as may be appropriate to implement any provision of this Act.

"(c) The provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, apply to judicial review of any agency action, as defined in section 551 of title 5, United States Code, by the Commission.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO STATES TO PROMOTE COMPLIANCE

SEC. 210. Section 309 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to statements filed with State officers) is redesignated as section 314 of such Act and amended by—

(1) striking out "a supervisory officer" in subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof "the Commission";

(2) striking out "in which an expenditure is made by him or on his behalf" in subsection (a) (1) and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "in which he is a candidate or in which substantial expenditures are made by him or on his behalf"; and

(3) adding the following new subsection:

"(c) There is authorized to be appropriated to the Commission in each fiscal year the sum of $500,000, to be made available in such amounts as the Commission deems appropriate to the States for the purpose of assisting them in complying with their duties as set forth in this section.".

CONTRIBUTIONS IN THE NAME OF ANOTHER PERSON

SEC. 211. Section 310 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to prohibition of contributions in name of another) is redesignated as section 315 of such Act and amended by inserting after "another person", the first time it appears, the following: "or knowingly permit his name to be used to effect such a contribution".

ROLE OF POLITICAL PARTY ORGANIZATION IN PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGNS; USE OF EXCESS CAMPAIGN FUNDS; AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS; PENALTIES

SEC. 212. Title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by striking out section 311 and by adding at the end of such title the following new sections:

"APPROVAL OF PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES BY NATIONAL COMMITTEE

"SEC. 316. (a) No expenditure in excess of $1,000 shall be made by or on behalf of any candidate who has received the nomination of his political party for President or Vice President unless such expenditure has been specifically approved by the chairman or treasurer of that political party's national committee or the designated representative of that national committee in the State where the funds are to be expended.

"(b) Each national committee approving expenditures under subsection (a) shall register under section 303 as a political committee and report each expenditure it approves as if it had made that expenditure, together with the identification of the person seeking approval and making the expenditure.

"(c) No political party shall have more than one national committee.

"USE OF CONTRIBUTED AMOUNTS FOR CERTAIN PURPOSES

"SEC. 317. Amounts received by a candidate as contributions that are in excess of any amount necessary to defray his campaign expenses (after the application of section 507(b)(1) of this Act), and any other amounts contributed to an individual for the purpose of supporting his activities as a holder of Federal office, may be used by that candidate or individual, as the case may be, to defray any ordinary and necessary expenses incurred by him in connection with his duties as a holder of Federal office, or may be contributed by him to any organization described in section 170(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. To the extent any such contribution, amount contributed, or expenditure thereof is not otherwise required to be disclosed under the provisions of this title, such contribution, amount contributed, or expenditure shall be fully disclosed in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Commission. The Commission is authorized to promulgate such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 318. There are authorized to be appropriated to the Commission, for the purpose of carrying out its functions under this title, title V, and under chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, not to exceed $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1974, and not to exceed $5,000,000 for each fiscal year thereafter.

"PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS

"SEC. 319. (a) Violation of any provision of this title is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of not more than $10,000, imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

"(b) Violation of any provision of this title with knowledge or reason to know that the action committed or omitted is a violation of this title is punishable by a fine of not more than $10,000, imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.".

APPLICABLE STATE LAWS

SEC. 213. Section 403 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended to read as follows:

"EFFECT ON STATE LAW

"SEC. 403. The provisions of this Act, and of regulations promulgated under this Act, preempt any provision of State law with respect to campaigns for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office (as such term is defined in section 301(c)).".

TITLE III—CRIMES RELATING TO ELECTIONS AND POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

CHANGES IN DEFINITIONS

SEC. 301. (a) Paragraph (a) of section 591 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) inserting "or" before "(4)"; and

(2) striking out "and (5) the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States".

(b) Such section 591 is amended by striking out paragraph (d) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(d) 'political committee' means—

"(1) any committee, club, association, or other group of persons which receives contributions or makes expenditures during a calendar year in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000;

"(2) any national committee, association, or organization of a political party, any State affiliate or subsidiary of a national political party, and any State central committee of a political party; and

"(3) any committee, association, or organization engaged in the administration of a separate segregated fund described in section 610;".

(c) Such section 591 is amended by—

(1) inserting in paragraph (e) (1) after "subscription" the following: "(including any assessment, fee, or membership dues)";

(2) striking out in such paragraph "or for the purpose of influencing the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "or for the purpose of financing any operations of a political committee, or for the purpose of paying, at any time, any debt or obligation incurred by a candidate or a political committee in connection with any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office"; and

(3) striking out subparagraph (2) of paragraph (e), and amending subparagraph (3) of such paragraph to read as follows:

"(2) funds received by a political committee which are transferred to that committee from another political committee;";

(4) redesignating subparagraphs (4) and (5) of paragraph (e) as paragraphs (3) and (4), respectively;

(d) Such section 591 is amended by striking out paragraph (f) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(f) 'expenditure' means—

"(1) a purchase, payment, distribution, loan (except a loan of money by a National or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations, and in the ordinary course of business), advance, deposit, or gift of money or anything of value, made for the purpose of—

"(A) influencing the nomination for election, or the election, of any person to Federal office, or to the office of presidential and vice-presidential elector;

"(B) influencing the result of a primary election held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President;

"(C) financing any operations of a political committee; or

"(D) paying, at any time, any debt or obligation incurred by a candidate or a political committee in connection with any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office; and

"(2) the transfer of funds by a political committee to another political committee; but

"(3) does not include the value of service rendered by individuals who volunteer to work without compensation on behalf of a candidate;".

(e) Such section 591 is amended by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (g), striking out the "States." in paragraph (h) and inserting in lieu thereof "States;", and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(i) 'political party' means any association, committee, or organization which nominates a candidate for election to any Federal office whose name appears on the election ballot as the candidate of that association, committee, or organization: and

"(j) 'national committee' means the organization which, by virtue of the bylaws of the political party, is responsible for the day-to-day operation of that political party at the national level as determined by the Federal Election Commission under section 301 (k) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.".

EXPENDITURE OF PERSONAL AND FAMILY FUNDS FOR FEDERAL CAMPAIGNS

SEC. 302. (a) (1) Subsection (a) (1) of section 608 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(a) (1) No candidate may make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with his campaigns for nomination for election, and for election, to Federal office in excess, in the aggregate during any calendar year, of—

"(A) $50,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of President or Vice President;

"(B) $35,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of Senator; or

"(C) $25,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of Representative, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to the Congress.".

(2) Subsection (a) of such section is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(3) No candidate or his immediate family may make loans or advances from their personal funds in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or election, to Federal office unless such loan or advance is evidenced by a written instrument fully disclosing the terms and conditions of such loan or advance.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection, any such loan or advance shall be included in computing the total amount of such expenditures only to the extent of the balance of such loan or advance outstanding and unpaid."

(b) Subsection (c) of such section is amended by striking out "$1,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$25,000", and by striking out "one year" and inserting in lieu thereof "five years".

(c) (1) The caption of such section 608 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "out of candidates' personal and family funds".

(2) The table of sections for chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out the item relating to section 608 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"608. Limitations on contributions and expenditures out of candidates' personal and family funds.".

(d) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 608 of title 18, United States Code, it shall not be unlawful for any individual who, as of the date of enactment of this Act, has outstanding any debt or obligation incurred on his behalf by any political committee in connection with his campaigns prior to January 1, 1973, for nomination for election, and for election, to Federal office, to satisfy or discharge any such debt or obligation out of his own personal funds or the personal funds of his immediate family (as such term is defined in such section 608).

SEPARATE SEGREGATED FUND MAINTENANCE BY GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS

SEC. 303. Section 611 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"It shall not constitute a violation of the provisions of this section for a corporation or a labor organization to establish, administer, or solicit contributions to a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes by that corporation or labor organization if the establishment and administration of, and solicitation of contributions to, such fund do not constitute a violation of section 610.".

LIMITATIONS ON POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES; EMBEZZLEMENT OR CONVERSION OF CAMPAIGN FUNDS

SEC. 304. (a) Chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"§ 614. Limitation on expenditures generally

"(a) (1) No candidate may make expenditures in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office in excess of the amount to which he would be limited under section 504 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 if he were receiving payments under title V of that Act.

"(2) Expenditures made on behalf of any candidate are, for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by such candidate.

"(3) Expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate for the office of Vice President of the United States are, for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by the candidate for the office of President of the United States with whom he is running.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection, an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a Vice Presidential candidate, if it is made by—

"(A) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for the purposes of making any expenditure, or

"(B) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, or an agent of the candidate to make the expenditure.

"(5) The Federal Election Commission shall prescribe regulations under which any expenditure by a candidate for Presidential nomination for use in two or more States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

"(b) The national committee of a political party may not make any expenditure during any calendar year in connection with the general election campaign of any candidate for Federal office who is affiliated with that party which, when added to the sum of all other expenditures made by that national committee during that year in connection with the general election campaigns of all candidates affiliated with that party, exceeds an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States. The State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committees of the State committee, may not make any expenditure during the calendar year in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate for Federal office in such State who is affiliated with that party which, when added to all other expenditures made by that State committee during that year in connection with the general eelction campaigns of candidates affiliated with that party, exceeds an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of that State. For purposes of this subsection—

"(1) the term 'voting age population' means voting age population certified for the year under section 504

(g) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971; and

"(2) the approval by the national committee of a political party of an expenditure by or on behalf of the Presidential candidate of that party as required by section 316 of that Act is not considered an expenditure by that national committee.

"(c) (1) No person may make any expenditure (other than an expenditure made on behalf of a candidate under the provisions of subsection (a) (4)) advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate during a calendar year which, when added to all other expenditures made by that person during the year advocating the election or defeat of that candidate, exceeds $1,000.

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) 'clearly identified' means—

"(i) the candidate's name appears;

"(ii) a photograph or drawing of the candidate appears; or

"(iii) the identity of the candidate is apparent by unambiguous reference;

"(B) 'person' does not include the National or State committee of a political party; and

"(C) 'expenditure' does not include any payment made or incurred by a corporation or a labor organization which, under the provisions of the last paragraph of section 610 of title 18, United States Code, would not constitute an expenditure by that corporation or labor organization.

"(d) Any person who knowingly or willfully violates the provisions of this section, other than subsection (a) (5), shall be punishable by a fine of $25,000, imprisonment for a period of not more than five years, or both. If any candidate is convicted of violating the provisions of this section because of any expenditure made on his behalf (as determined under subsection (a) (4)) by a political committee, the treasurer of that committee, or any other person authorizing such expenditure, shall be punishable by a fine of not to exceed $25,000, imprisonment for not to exceed five years, or both, if such person knew, or had reason to know, that such expenditure was in excess of the limitation applicable to such candidate under this section.

"§ 615. Limitations on contributions

"(a) No person may make a contribution to, or for the benefit of, a candidate for that candidate's campaign for nomination for election, or election, which, when added to the sum of all other contributions made by that person for that campaign, exceeds $3,000.

"(b) (1) No candidate may knowingly accept a contribution for his campaign from any person which, when added to the sum of all other contributions received from that person for that campaign, exceeds $3,000.

"(2) No officer or employee of a political committee or of a political party may knowingly accept any contribution made for the benefit or use of a candidate which that candidate could not accept under paragraph (1).

"(c) (1) For purposes of the limitations contained in this section all contributions made by any person directly or indirectly to or for the benefit of a particular candidate, including contributions which are in any way earmarked, enucumbered, or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to that candidate, shall be treated as contributions from that person to that candidate.

"(2) Contributions made to, or for the benefit of, a candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President shall be considered, for purposes of this section, to be made to, or for the benefit of, a candidate nominated by that party for election to the office of President.

"(3) The limitations imposed by subsections (a) and (b) shall apply separately to each primary, primary runoff, general, and special election in which a candidate participates.

"(d) (1) No individual may make a contribution during any calendar year which, when added to the sum of all other contributions made by that individual during that year, exceeds $25,000.

"(2) Any contribution made for a campaign in a year, other than the calendar year in which the election is held to which that campaign relates, is, for purposes of this section, considered to be made during the calendar year in which that election is held.

"(e) Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine of not to exceed $25,000, imprisonment for not to exceed five years, or both.

"§ 616. Form of contributions

"No person may make a contribution to, or for the benefit of, any candidate or political committee in excess, in the aggregate during any calendar year, of $100 unless such contribution is made by a written instrument identifying the person making the contribution. Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine of not to exceed $1,000, imprisonment for not to exceed one year, or both.

"§ 617. Embezzlement or conversion of political contributions

"(a) No candidate, officer, employee, or agent of a political committee, or person acting on behalf of any candidate or political committee, shall embezzle, knowingly convert to his own use or the use of another, or deposit in any place or in any manner except as authorized by law, any contributions or campaign funds entrusted to him or under his possession, custody, or control, or use any campaign funds to pay or defray the costs of attorney fees for the defense of any person or persons charged with the commission of a crime; or receive, conceal, or retain the same with intent to convert it to his personal use or gain, knowing it to have been embezzled or converted.

"(b) Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine of not more than $25,000, imprisonment for not more than ten years, or both; but if the value of such property does not exceed the sum of $100, the fine shall not exceed $1,000 and the imprisonment shall not exceed one year. Notwithstanding the provisions of this section, any surplus or unexpended campaign funds may be contributed to a national or State political party for political purposes, or to educational or charitable organizations, or may be preserved for use in future campaigns for elective office, or for any other lawful purpose.".

(b) Section 591 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out "and 611" and inserting in lieu thereof "611, 614, 615, 616, and 617".

(c) The table of sections for chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new items:

"614. Limitation on expenditures generally.
"615. Limitation on contributions.
"616. Form of contributions.
"617. Embezzlement or conversion of political contributions.".

TITLE IV—DISCLOSURE OF FINANCIAL INTERESTS BY CERTAIN FEDERAL OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

FEDERAL EMPLOYEE FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 401. (a) Any candidate of a political party in a general election for the office of a Member of Congress who, at the time he becomes a candidate, does not occupy any such office, shall file within one month after he becomes a candidate for such office, and each Member of Congress, each officer and employee of the United States (including any member of a uniformed service) who is compensated at a rate in excess of $25,000 per annum, any individual occupying the position of an officer or employee of the United States who performs duties of the type generally performed by an individual occupying grade GS-16 of the General Schedule or any higher grade or position (as determined by the Federal Election Commission regardless of the rate of compensation of such individual), the President, and the Vice President shall file annually, with the Commission a report containing a full and complete statement of—

(1) the amount and source of each item of income, each item of reimbursement for any expenditure, and each gift or aggregate of gifts from one source (other than gifts received from his spouse or any member of his immediate family) received by him or by him and his spouse jointly during the preceding calendar year which exceeds $100 in amount or value, including any fee or other honorarium received by him for or in connection with the preparation or delivery of any speech or address, attendance at any convention or other assembly of individuals, or the preparation of any article or other composition for publication, and the monetary value of subsistence, entertainment, travel, and other facilities received by him in kind;

(2) the identity of each asset held by him, or by him and his spouse jointly which has a value in excess of $1,000, and the amount of each liability owed by him or by him and his spouse jointly, which is in excess of $1,000 as of the close of the preceding calendar year;

(3) any transactions in securities of any business entity by him or by him and his spouse jointly, or by any person acting on his behalf or pursuant to his direction during the preceding calendar year if the aggregate amount involved in transactions in the securities of such business entity exceeds $1,000 during such year;

(4) all transactions in commodities by him, or by him and his spouse jointly, or by any person acting on his behalf or pursuant to his direction during the preceding calendar year if the aggregate amount involved in such transactions exceeds $1,000; and

(5) any purchase or sale, other than the purchase or sale of his personal residence, of real property or any interest therein by him, or by him and his spouse jointly, or by any person acting on his behalf or pursuant to his direction, during the preceding calendar year if the value of property involved in such purchase or sale exceeds $1,000.

(b) Reports required by this section (other than reports so required by candidates of political parties) shall be filed not later than May 15 of each year. In the case of any person who ceases, prior to such date in any year, to occupy the office or position the occupancy of which imposes upon him the reporting requirements contained in subsection (a) shall file such report on the last day he occupies such office or position, or on such later date, not more than three months after such last day, as the Commission may prescribe.

(c) Reports required by this section shall be in such form and detail as the Commission may prescribe. The Commission may provide for the grouping of items of income, sources of income, assets, liabilities, dealings in securities or commodities, and purchases and sales of real property, when separate itemization is not feasible or is not necessary for an accurate disclosure of the income, net worth, dealing in securities and commodities, or purchases and sales of real property of any individual.

(d) Any person who willfully fails to file a report required by this section or who knowingly and willfully files a false report under this section, shall be fined $2,000, or imprisoned for not more than five years, or both.

(e) All reports filed under this section shall be maintained by the Commission as public records, which, under such reasonable regulations as it shall prescribe, shall be available for inspection by members of the public.

(f) For the purposes of any report required by this section, an individual shall be considered to have been President, Vice President, a Member of Congress, an officer or employee of the United States, or a member of a uniformed service, during any calendar year if he served in any such position for more than six months during such calendar year.

(g) As used in this section—

(1) The term "income" means gross income as defined in section 61 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

(2) The term "security" means security as defined in section 2 of the Securities Act of 1933, as amended (15 U.S.C. 77b).

(3) The term "commodity" means commodity as defined in section 2 of the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended (7 U.S.C. 2).

(4) The term "transactions in securities or commodities" means any acquisition, holding, withholding, use, transfer, or other disposition involving any security or commodity.

(5) The term "Member of Congress" means a Senator, a Representative, a Resident Commissioner, or a Delegate.

(6) The term "officer" has the same meaning as in section 2104 of title 5, United States Code.

(7) The term "employee" has the same meaning as in section 2105 of such title.

(8) The term "uniformed service" means any of the Armed Forces, the commissioned corps of the Public Health Service, or the commissioned corps of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

(9) The term "immediate family" means the child, parent, grandparent, brother, or sister of an individual, and the spouses of such persons.

(h) Section 554 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) All written communications and memorandums stating the circumstances, source, and substance of all oral communications made to the agency, or any officer or employee thereof, with respect to any case which is subject to the provisions of this section by any person who is not an officer or employee of the agency shall be made a part of the public record of such case. This subsection shall not apply to communications to any officer, employee, or agent of the agency engaged in the performance of investigative or prosecuting functions for the agency with respect to such case."

(i) The first report required under this section shall be due on the fifteenth day of May occurring at least thirty days after the date of enactment.

TITLE V—RELATED INTERNAL REVENUE CODE AMENDMENTS

INCREASE IN POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS CREDIT AND DEDUCTION

SEC. 501. (a) Section 41 (b) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to maximum credit for contributions to candidates for public office) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) MAXIMUM CREDIT.—The credit allowed by subsection (a) for a taxable year shall not exceed $25 ($50 in the case of a joint return under section 6013)."

(b) Section 218 (b) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to amount of deduction for contributions to candidates for public office) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) AMOUNT.—The deduction under subsection (a) shall not exceed $100 ($200 in the case of a joint return under section 6013)."

(c) The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) shall apply with respect to any political contribution the payment of which is made after December 31, 1973.

DOUBLING OF DOLLAR CHECKOFF; REPEAL OF SUBTITLE H

SEC. 502. (a) Section 6096 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to designation of income tax payments to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Every individual whose income tax liability for the taxable year is $2 or more is considered to have designated that $2 shall be paid over to the Federal Election Campaign Fund established under section 506 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 unless he elects not to make that designation. In the case of a joint return of a husband and wife having an income tax liability of $4 or more, each spouse shall be considered to have designated that $2 shall be paid over to such fund unless he elects not to make such designation.".

(b) Section 6096 (c) of such Code is amended by—

(1) striking out "Designation" in the caption thereof and inserting in lieu thereof "Election";

(2) striking out "A designation" and inserting in lieu thereof "An election"; and

(3) striking out "designation" each place it appears in the text of such section and inserting in lieu thereof "election".

(c) (1) The caption of part VIII of subchapter A of chapter 61 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended to read as follows:

"PART VIII.—DESIGNATION OF INCOME TAX PAYMENTS TO FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN FUND".

(2) The table of parts for subchapter A of chapter 61 of the Code is amended by striking out the item relating to part VIII and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"PART VIII. DESIGNATION OF INCOME TAX PAYMENTS TO FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN FUND.".

(d) Subtitle H of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to financing of Presidential election campaigns) is repealed.

(e) Any amount designated by a taxpayer under section 6096 of such Code before its amendment by this section is considered to have been designated for payment into the Federal Election Campaign Fund.

(f) The amendments made by this section apply with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1973.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

FEBRUARY 21 (legislative day, FEBRUARY 19), 1974.—Ordered to be printed

Mr. CANNON, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, submitted the following REPORT

[To accompany S. 3044]

The Committee on Rules and Administration, having considered an original bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns, reports favorably thereon, and recommends that the bill do pass.

PURPOSE OF THE BILL

This recommended legislation is a comprehensive and far-reaching measure, designed to bring together various laws already enacted or passed by the Senate, for the purpose of providing complete control over and disclosure of campaign contributions and expenditures in campaigns for Federal elective office, including all public funds which any candidate may be entitled to receive prior to or after the date of any election.

During the 92nd Congress (1971–1972) a major new law was enacted to provide sweeping and thorough control over, and public disclosure of, receipts and expenditures in both Federal primary elections and general elections. The new Act, the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (P.L. 92–225), applies to all elections, all candidates seeking nomination for election or election to Federal office, and all political committees raising or spending in excess of $1,000 during a calendar year for the purpose of influencing or attempting to influence the results of those elections. Also, it requires candidates and political committees to file periodic statements and reports of receipts and expenditures with appropriate supervisory officers charged with responsibility to enforce compliance with the provisions of the Act.

The Act of 1971 was predicated upon the principle of public disclosure, that timely and complete disclosure of receipts and expenditures would result in the exercise of prudence by candidates and their committees and that excessive expenditures would incur the displeasure of the electorate who would or could demonstrate indignation at the polls. Except for the use of the media—radio, television, newspapers, magazines, outdoor advertising facilities, and banks of telephones—no limitations were imposed upon expenditures by candidates or their committees, and no limitation was set upon contributions to candidates or committees.

It was unfortunate that the new Act did not become effective until April 7, 1972, because the scramble to raise political funds prior to that date, and thus to avoid the disclosure provisions of the law, resulted in broad and grave dissatisfaction with the Act and led to a demand for new and more comprehensive controls.

At the beginning of the 93rd Congress, many bills were introduced providing strict limitations upon contributions and expenditures. S. 372, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1973, was reported to the Senate after public hearings and study, and following substantial debate in the Senate, was passed by a vote of 82 to 8, as an amendment to the Act of 1971. S. 372 was referred to the House of Representatives for further consideration, but as of the date of this report, no action has been taken by that body.

Further, with the introduction of specific limitations upon contributions and expenditures, concern developed that major political parties and well-known individuals, including incumbent officeholders, would have greater access and appeal to donors than would minor parties and unknown individuals who desired to enter the political arena. Therefore, a movement for the public financing of Federal elections evolved in the Senate.

Public hearings were held by the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, chaired by Senator Claiborne Pell, on the 18th, 19th, 20th, and 21st of September, 1973. Over 40 witnesses appeared to testify in person and to submit lengthy statements in support of public financing. A few witnesses appeared in opposition, but the greater preponderance of testimony was favorable to the concept.

Senator Cranston, from the State of California, speaking for a bipartisan group of more than a third of the Senate membership, submitted a set of principles, eight in number, which they considered to be essential tenets of any legislation to provide public financing in Federal elections. The principles were built upon the existing Presidential checkoff plan, which passed the Senate in 1971 under the leadership of Senators Russell Long, from Louisiana, and John Pastore, from Rhode Island.

Those eight principles are as follows:

> 1. Extension of the Presidential checkoff concept adopted in 1971 to provide Treasury financing of qualified candidates that will enable a candidate to mount an effective campaign without the need to seek large private contributions; the amount must be sufficient to allow nonincumbents to campaign against better-known incumbents; and there must be adequate safeguards to insure full and easy public accountability for the use of private funds.

2. Full funding for major party candidates; funding for minor party, new party, and independent candidates—up to full funding—based upon their performance in the last election or their showing in the present election.

3. Extension of public funding for qualified primary candidates once they have demonstrated broad public support through some means, which might include raising a special number of petition signatures asking that the candidate be given Federal funding for his campaign.

4. Establishing of an overall expenditure limit for both general and primary elections.

5. Permitting candidates to raise a limited amount of private funds in very small contributions.

6. Provision of a role for political parties which would allow them to serve as a legitimate pooling mechanism for private contributions to candidates in general elections.

7. Requirement of a central financial reporting and record-keeping check point in each candidate's campaign for effective monitoring.

8. Administration of campaign financial reporting and disclosure laws and regulations by an independent elections commission with enforcement powers.

On November 16, 1973, Senator Pell, Chairman of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, introduced S. 2718, the Federal Election Finance Act, which was then referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration. At that time the Senate was considering the debt ceiling bill and a public financing proposal which had been offered as an amendment to that bill by a bipartisan group of nine Senators. The amendment was adopted by a majority of the Senate. Subsequently, when the Senate was required to recede from its action to add public financing amendments to the debt ceiling bill, a commitment was made by the Committee on Rules and Administration, through its chairman, Senator Cannon, and other Members, to report to the Senate a bill providing for the public financing of Federal elections within approximately 30 days following the reconvening of the Senate on January 21, 1974.

The Pell bill provided the fundamentals, which the Committee considered during the course of its deliberations and mark-up sessions. The original bill here reported to the Senate meets the objectives of the previously mentioned eight principles, and of last year's amendment to the debt ceiling bill. Also, in order to present a comprehensive coverage of private and public financing, limitations of contributions and expenditures, and public disclosure of and supervision over the whole spectrum of Federal election campaigns, the bill incorporates the following:

Title I—Financing of Federal Campaigns;

Title II—Changes in Campaign Communications Law and in Reporting and Disclosure Provisions of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971;

Title III—Crimes Relating to Elections and Political Activities;

Title IV—Disclosure of Financial Interests by Certain Federal Officers and Employees; and Title V—Related Internal Revenue Code Amendments.

Therefore, if enacted, this Committee bill will renew and reemphasize the disclosure provisions of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, as amended in the Senate by the bill S. 372, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1973. Moreover, the limitations set by S. 372 upon contributions and expenditures and the creation in that bill of an independent Federal Election Commission with primary civil and criminal prosecutorial powers, as carried over in this bill, will help to ensure careful compliance with all provisions.

The use of a modified dollar check-off as an inducement to taxpayers to designate $2 of their tax liability for the Federal Election Campain Fund, and carry-over of the tax credit or tax deduction incentives, will serve to encourage broader citizen participation in the elective process. The doubling of tax credit/tax deduction provisions of existing law should also increase citizen support of candidates and parties of their choice.

Need For and Argument Favoring Public Financing

The bill provides an integrated comprehensive program of campaign reform, Title I dealing with public financing assistance for federal elections is the only portion of the bill which has not previously been considered and approved by the Senate.

The Committee recognizes that the issue of public financing has been a controversial one for several years, and that our colleagues may have a variety of questions regarding the impact and implications of these proposals. While the Committee has built upon the principles already adopted by Congress in the Presidential Campaign Fund of the 1971 Revenue Act, the present bill extends these principles to other parts of the electoral process for federal office.

Before proceeding with a detailed discussion of the provisions in this Title, therefore, it will be useful to indicate the Committee's thinking in regard to the major issues and contentions which were raised at the hearings.

Public financing is necessary for effective campaign reform

There is no question that the public appreciates the pervasive evils of our present system for campaign financing. The potentials for abuse are all too clear. Americans are looking to Congress for comprehensive, effective reform, not for halfway measures that only reach a small part of the problem—or which may make some present problems even worse.

The Committee is aware of the position, advanced by opponents of public financing, that reporting and disclosure rules combined with limits on contributions provide sufficient reform and make it unnecessary to extend public campaign financing beyond existing law. The Committee does not agree.

In light of the record made before this Committee during its consideration of S. 372, and the hearings on the present legislation, it is clear to us that contribution and expenditure limits which would check excessive influence of great wealth cannot be effectively and fairly implemented without a comprehensive system of public campaign financing.

Congress has already recognized the desirability of public financing for Presidential elections. This bill extends this recognition to Congressional general elections and to primary elections for both Congress and the presidency.

The only way in which Congress can eliminate reliance on large private contributions and still ensure adequate presentation to the electorate of opposing viewpoints of competing candidates is through comprehensive public financing.

Modern campaigns are increasingly expensive and the necessary fundraising is a great drain on the time and energies of the candidates. Low contribution limits alone will compound that problem. Many candidates—incumbent and challenger alike—will find it exceedingly difficult to finance an adequate campaign to carry their message to the voters. Drastically reducing the amounts which may be expended by the candidate would ease this burden, but at the cost of increasing the present disadvantage for non-incumbent challengers and endangering the whole process of political competition.

Moreover, even those candidates who could raise adequate funds under restricted contribution limits would benefit from public financing. The committee bill would enable them to rely less heavily on those relatively few individuals capable of contributing the maximum amount permitted by law.

Nor does the Committee agree with the argument that public financing would be an unwise waste of public monies at a time when control of the federal budget is essential. The Committee believes the American voter has now had ample demonstration that the modest cost per citizen of public financing for federal elections will be as wise an investment of tax dollars as a democracy can make.

The election of federal officials is not a private affair. It is the foundation of our government. As Senator Mansfield recently observed, it is now clear that "we shall not finally come to grips with the problems except as we are prepared to pay for the public business of elections with public funds. (State of the Congress Address, February 6, 1974.)

Formula grants for qualified general election candidates

The bill provides nominees of major parties with public financing equal to the full amount of expenditures permitted to be made in a campaign.

Alternative approaches to financing general election campaigns were noted by the Committee, but none provided a satisfactory substitute for the provisions of the committee bill.

Some suggestions, such as increased mail privileges for both incumbent and challenger, or free radio and television time, are complementary to this bill. These suggestions have merit and deserve careful consideration by the appropriate Congressional committees. If they are enacted, such programs would obviously reduce the remaining expenditures a candidate faces. If the cost of the campaign is cut down, then the amounts of direct public funds which the bill provides for may then be proportionately reduced. But the many complex questions raised by proposals for free services and other in-kind assistance, need not delay enactment of a comprehensive approach to campaign financing.

Other alternatives considered and rejected by the Committee for reform of general election campaign financing include a system of matching payments in response to private contributions or a minimum floor of public assistance with the bulk of campaign costs raised privately.

The Committee bill embodies the sounder principle that once someone becomes an unquestionably serious candidate, by virtue of his being a major party nominee, he should be assured of adequate financing to run a fully informative and effective campaign. The use of matching payments is appropriate in the primary phase, as noted below, when it is not yet clear who may be the serious candidates and who may be frivolous ones. But such a scheme, or partial public funding, in the general election would require candidates who have established their legitimacy to devote too much time to endless fund raising at the expense of providing competitive debate of the issues for the electorate. This would be especially true in view of the $3,000 limit which the Senate has imposed on individual contributions and which is carried forward in the bill.

Matching grants for qualified primary candidates

If public financing is made available in general elections, the question remains whether it should also be extended to primary election candidates. Devising fair criteria for eligibility is harder in primary elections since no single candidate has won his party's nomination. The difficulty lies in screening out frivolous candidates who might be encouraged to enter by the prospect of a large subsidy, while still providing some assistance to serious candidates with potential for developing significant support.

In light of this issue, some witnesses suggested that any public financing be limited to general elections. After reviewing these suggestions, your Committee concluded that meaningful reform of our campaign financing practices requires inclusion of primary elections.

Unless primary election candidates can be relieved of their excessive dependence on large amounts of private money, a system of public financing in general elections will only move the evils it seeks to remedy upstream to the primary phase of the electoral process.

It will be difficult to justify the expenditure of public money to help purify that process, if candidates must still raise the full cost of expensive campaigns from private contributors, in order to win the nomination in the first place.

If a reasonable portion of these costs are defrayed by public assistance, candidates for nomination will be able to raise the remainder on a truly "grass roots" basis without relying so heavily on those who are wealthy enough to give the maximum contributions permitted each person under this act.

The bill provides significant public financing for primary candidates, up to one-half the total expenditures they are permitted. Such assistance is limited to those who demonstrate they are serious candidates by raising a threshold eligibility fund in small amounts from many contributors. No more than $100 from the contribution of any person may be counted. The Committee believes the use of small contributions is the best practicable test for such support. This fund will establish the candidate's initial credibility and qualify him for federal assistance. But this test does not determine the total amount of federal funding he will actually receive.

The threshold fund may merely represent a small nucleus of supporters and not reflect enough widespread support to warrant sizeable federal grants. Therefore, unlike the formula grants available to party nominees in the general election, primary candidates are only entitled to federal assistance which matches, dollar for dollar, whatever private funds they are able to raise.

Moreover, as in the case of the threshold fund, only $100 of each person's contribution can be matched with federal funds. This limitation encourages a candidate to involve large numbers of voters in the fundraising process. It also ensures that larger amounts of public assistance will only go to candidates who continue to demonstrate widespread support as the campaign develops.

The Committee believes this scheme for financing primary campaigns is a sound, balanced approach which avoids constitutional difficulties. Candidates are not barred from entering any primary merely because they have not raised the threshold eligibility fund. They can still run in the primary and finance their campaign privately. But Congress is not required to fund every candidate, no matter how frivolous, who exercises his constitutional right to enter a party primary. It may set a reasonable test of minimum support before it commits public moneys to assist a campaign.

The States have a recognized "interest, if not a duty, to protect the integrity of its political processes from frivolous or fraudulent candidacies." Bullock v. Carter 405 U.S. 134, 145 (1971). Surely Congress has an equal interest, if not a duty, to ensure that large sums of public moneys are not expended on the campaigns of such frivolous candidacies.

Several other concerns have been raised in regard to the enactment of comprehensive public financing legislation for Federal elections. These are discussed briefly below.

Strengthening political parties

The Committee was cautioned by several witnesses to examine the relationship between campaign finance legislation and political parties. Your Committee agrees that a vigorous party system is vital to American politics and has given this matter careful study.

Under the Committee bill, parties will retain their essential nonfinancial responsibilities in electoral politics. More important, the bill retains the role of political parties in private financing for federal candidates.

Public grants will go directly to candidates in the manner Congress has already established for the Presidential Campaign Fund of the 1971 Tax Act. This also reflects the present pattern of private fundraising, since candidates receive the bulk of their contributions directly from the public, rather than from parties.

However, the Committee recognizes that pooling resources from many small contributors is a legitimate function and an integral part of party politics. Accordingly, the bill includes a special provision for private funding by political parties. In a general election, candidates may not accept direct contributions if they accept the full level of public assistance. But they may receive substantial private funding, in addition to the public grant, in the form of expenditures by state and national party committees.

The bill insures that such party assistance actually represents the involvement of many voters and not merely the influence of a wealthy few. It prevents evasion of the individual contribution limits by persons funneling large gifts through party committees; each person's donation to party funds used to assist federal candidates under this special provision must not exceed the maximum amount he could give directly to a candidate.

Thus, parties will play an increased role in building strong coalitions of voters and in keeping candidates responsible to the electorate through the party organization.

In addition, parties will continue to perform crucial functions in the election apart from fundraising, such as registration and voter turnout campaigns, providing speakers, organizing volunteer workers and publicizing issues. Indeed, the combination of substantial public financing with limits on private gifts to candidates will release large sums presently committed to individual campaigns and make them available for donation to the parties, themselves. As a result, our financially hard-pressed parties will have increased resources not only to conduct party-wide election efforts, but also to sustain important party operations in between elections.

Preventing proliferation of splinter parties

The bill also provides a balanced approach to the difficult issues posed by minor parties.

On the one hand, the Committee bill would not stimulate a proliferation of splinter parties or independent candidates. Such a proliferation would undermine the stability provided by a strong two-party system and could polarize voters on the basis of a single volatile issue.

All but fringe candidates would have an incentive to seek a major party nomination, rather than run as a minor party candidate, so as to be eligible for the full level of public assistance in the general election. The bill would thereby have a cohesive effect, encouraging different factions to compete and work out coalitions within the framework of a basic two-party system.

If a candidate's supporters clearly constitute a mere fringe group, with no prospect of appealing to a large mass of voters, then he may choose to run as a minor party candidate. But it is unlikely he would raise many matchable contributions, in the event his party had a primary. And in the general election, he will only be eligible for a grant based on his party's prior voting record.

Fair opportunity for minor parties

At the same time, minor parties with significant support are eligible to receive a fair share of public assistance commensurate with their proven political strength.

Under the bill the subsidy for minor parties would only be a fraction of the amount available to major party nominees, determined by the ration of the minor party's showing in the previous election to that of the major parties. This formula follows the Presidential election checkoff of the 1971 Tax Act.

This smaller subsidy would, however, be offset by two provisions, which serve as safety valves to ensure fair opportunity for minor parties without unduly promoting their proliferation or inducing entry into contests which otherwise would not have been made.

First, minor candidates may raise proportionately more private funds than may a major party nominee receiving greater federal assistance. Therefore, the total amount which each candidate would be permitted to spend would remain equal. Second, if the minor party's tally in the election is better than past performances, the candidate would receive a post-election entitlement increasing his federal grant to reflect the actual level of support indicated at the polls. This supplement could be used to pay outstanding campaign obligations or to reimburse loans and contributions.

Both of these provisions, too, follow the principles established by Congress in the 1971 Tax Act for Presidential election financing.

In short, minor parties will retain their present opportunity—one constitutionally required—to grow into a major political force if their support is widespread and not a transient phenomenon. As the United States Supreme Court has noted, the legitimate interest in preserving the benefits of two major parties does not justify laws which would choke off competition by other parties with potential appeal to the electorate.

The bill complies with this requirement. It does not prevent minor parties from placing candidates on the ballot or from organizing resources to support them. It does not freeze the political status quo. Compare Williams v. Rhodes 393 U.S. 23 (1968), with Jeness v. Fortson 403 U.S. 431 (1971).

The Supreme Court has recognized and approved reasonable differences in the treatment of major and lesser parties based on their demonstrated relative strength, observing:

"Sometimes the grossest discrimination can lie in treating things that are different as though they were exactly alike. . . ." (Jeness v. Fortson, supra 403 U.S. at 442.)

The Committee believes the reasonable difference in assistance available to major and minor parties, in conjunction with other provision to provide a fair opportunity for minor parties to demonstrate their strength and to increase it, provide a responsible scheme for public financing of all parties which is constitutional.

Preventing Federal interference with a candidate's campaign

When other arguments fail, opponents of any program to subsidize a private activity vital to the public interest have always raised the specter of "federal control." Predictably, some opponents of campaign reform have followed suit, arguing that public campaign financing will lead to bureaucrats in Washington telling candidates how to run their campaigns.

This objection is unfounded. The bill makes clear that candidates are permitted full flexibility and discretion in their election efforts, subject only to limitation on the dollar amounts of expenditures and contributions.

In the first place, candidates for the Senate or House of Representatives are free to use all or some or none of the public campaign funds to which they are entitled. If a candidate elects to accept less than the full grant to which he is entitled in the general election, he is free to raise privately the difference between the federal aid he does accept and his overall expenditure limit.

Equally important, the Committee has resisted any suggestion that those who accept federal campaign funds be obligated to conduct their campaign in particular ways, or to use the federal moneys for specific purposes that some may think are most useful to the electorate. Whether they qualify for public assistance and accept it, or not, all candidates are free to "do their own thing": to decide how they will conduct their campaign and employ their financial resources.

Since public assistance will be granted in accordance with automatic formulas—on either a matching or cent-per-voter basis—the statute requires uniform treatment and prevents discriminatory funding in favor of any candidate or party. The actual disbursement and audit of public campaign funds would be overseen by the Independent Elections Commission, which itself is subject to judicial review of alleged discrimination.

Public financing will not provide an unfair advantage to incumbent officials

Opponents of comprehensive campaign reform have even suggested that campaign finance legislation would aggravate any inherent advantages which incumbent elected officials now hold over their election opponents. While some schemes involving public financing may be envisaged for which this is true, this is clearly not such a bill.

Indeed, an incumbent concerned with preserving his obvious advantages over nonincumbent challengers might vote against the Committee bill since it will increase the chance of meaningful competition between the candidates.

As indicated above, lower limits on campaign contributions, by themselves, would serve to increase the advantages incumbents presently have in fundraising. However, the bill provides sufficient public funds for both nominees so that this problem is eliminated.

Public Financing Provisions

Primary elections

Title I of the bill affords an equal and fair opportunity to candidates of major, minor, or other parties, to obtain a certain amount of public financing from the Treasury of the United States if they can demonstrate a reasonable amount of support from the electorate in any geographic area in which an election is held and in which they intend to run for nomination for election or for election to Federal office. Any candidate who has a bona fide following who will make contributions to him or his authorized political committees sufficient to meet the base amounts set by the title, is entitled to receive matching payments from the government. Further, those contributions, under the bill, are eligible for matching payments only up to certain limits.

Any candidate who participates in, or who qualifies under State law to participate in, a Presidential Preference Primary and who desires to receive public financing from the Federal Government, must raise a threshold or "earnest money" fund before becoming eligible for the receipt of any public assistance.

The threshold amount is $250,000. While contributions may be received up to $3,000—which is the limit allowed by S. 372 on contributions by individuals or others—only the first $250 of any such contribution would be counted toward the base or threshold fund required.

The threshold fund would be required to be raised by a Presidential candidate only once—the first primary entered.

While the use of loans in the campaign process is accepted, in accordance with the provisions of existing law, including the disclosure of any loans made to or on behalf of any candidate, the Committee believes that no loan should be counted in determining whether a candidate has raised his threshold amount.

To demonstrate a genuine appeal to the electorate the candidate must raise his threshold from committed gifts, instead of mere loans which could be repaid from public funds after the threshold is raised. If the threshold could be raised from loans, in whole or in part, the spirit of the law would be violated.

Loans have their place and may be used for any other purpose during the entire period of election campaigning except for the raising of the "seed money" or threshold fund required to be raised by each candidate who desires to receive matching Federal funds in primary elections for Federal office.

Once having met the required threshold, the candidate would be eligible to receive an equal or matching amount from the Treasury. And, thereafter, each dollar contribution up to $250 would qualify the candidate to receive equal matching funds from the government until he reaches the limit set for the amount he may spend in any primary election. That limit, as provided by the bill S. 372, and incorporated in this bill, is 10 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the geographic area in which an election is to be held, except, that in the case of Presidential Primary Elections, the limit is doubled for any given State. That is, the Presidential Preference Primary candidate may spend for any primary election in a particular State twice the amount that a candidate running for nomination to the Senate in that State may spend. (See table on page 30.)

The reason for allowing Presidential Preference Primary candidates to exceed the limit set for any particular State, in contrast to the limit set for candidates for the Senate nomination or Representative at Large nomination, is to give an unknown individual the opportunity to compete with one who enjoys a national identity or who is well known in a particular area of the nation.

However, the bill S. 372 set an aggregate or overall limit on the amount which could be spent for the entire nominating process by a candidate seeking nomination to the office of President of the United States, and that overall limit is retained for that purpose in this bill, i.e. 10 cents times the voting age population of the United States for the entire nomination period.

In calculating and auditing expenditures made from contributions received from private donors, every contribution up to and including $3,000 would be counted for the purpose of determining the total spending limitation. But, for the purpose of determining eligibility to receive public financing, only those private contributions up to $250 would be counted.

Any candidate who qualifies, under the law of the State in which he seeks nomination, to seek nomination for election for the office of United States Senator, Delegate, Resident Commissioner, or Representative from a State having only one Representative must also raise a threshold or earnest-money base fund in order to be eligible to receive Federal matching funds.

Such a candidate would be required to raise an amount equal to the lesser of 20 percent of the maximum amount he may spend in his primary election, or $125,000. S. 372 set the limitation upon the amount which a candidate for nomination for election to the Senate may spend. It is the amount to be obtained by multiplying 10 cents times the voting age population for the geographic area (the State), but not less than $125,000. The $125,000 base was established as a reasonable minimum for expenditures by candidates of those States having small populations.

Therefore, the 20 percent threshold amount would begin with the $125,000 base and rise to the maximum, but for those States having very large populations, i.e., California, New York, etc., the maximum threshold figure would be $125,000. So, a candidate for nomination to the Senate would be required to raise an amount not less than 20 percent of the base ($125,000), or $25,000, but not more than the maximum for eligibility, or $125,000. (See table on page 33.)

For the Senate, as for the House of Representatives, only those individual contributions not in excess of $100 would qualify for public matching funds.

Once having met the threshold, all additional dollar contributions not in excess of $100 would qualify for matching Federal payments up to the limitation which a candidate for nomination to the Senate may spend in any State.

A candidate for nomination for election to the House of Representatives must raise a threshold amount of $10,000. The threshold is the same for all candidates seeking nomination for election to the House, except for those running in the States having only one Representative, or in the District of Columbia. The $100 limit on contributions eligible for matching payments applies as it does for the Senate.

Where separate run-off elections must be held to determine nominees for the Senate or the House of Representatives, the same provisions shall apply.

All candidates seeking nomination for election to the offices of President, Senator, or Representative, have the option of soliciting all private contributions up to the limitation on spending if they so choose, or seeking both private and public matching funds. Total public financing of primary elections is not provided.

General elections

Candidates participating in general election campaigns are treated differently depending upon whether they are the nominees of major or minor parties having previous voting records, or of minor parties having no previous voting records.

A major party is defined as one whose candidates for President and Vice President in the preceding election received at least 25 percent of the total number of popular votes cast in the United States for all candidates for such offices.

A candidate nominated by a major party would be eligible to receive full public funding in his campaign for election up to the limit set by the bill S. 372 (15 cents times the voting age population of the geographic area in which the election is to be held), as carried over into this public financing bill.

A minor party is defined to mean any political party whose candidates for President and Vice President in the preceding election received at least 5 percent but less than 25 percent of the total number of popular votes cast in the United States for all candidates for such offices.

A candidate nominated by a minor party would be eligible for public funding up to an amount which is in the same ratio as the average number of popular votes cast for all the candidates of the major party bears to the total number of popular votes cast for the candidate of the minor party.

Where only one political party qualifies as a major party, then that party whose candidate for election to a particular office at the preceding general election received the next greatest number of votes (but not less than 15 percent of the total number of votes cast) shall be treated as a major party and entitled to receive full public funding as such for the current election. There are States in which one political party or the candidate of a political party is so popular or dominant as to render, in fact, all other parties minor parties, whether Democratic or Republican. Therefore, this provision will help to ensure the equal entitlement of the Democratic and Republican parties, except in very rare instances where one of those parties would rank third.

The bill also takes into consideration the candidate who ran at the preceding election as a Democrat or Republican and received more than 25 percent of the votes cast and who then runs at the following election as an independent. When such a candidate switches from one party to another he does not carry with him the "track record", i.e. votes cast at the last general election, when he runs under another party label. He would be entitled to payments as an independent only if he receives at least 5 percent of the votes at the current election and his payments would be in reimbursements after the election, not before.

If that candidate runs again as an independent at the succeeding general election, and if he received more than 25 percent of the vote as an independent at the preceding general election, then he would be eligible for full public funding.

If a candidate of a minor party whose candidate for election to a given Federal office at the preceding general election received at least 5 percent of the votes cast for all candidates for that office, he will be entitled to receive public funds on a pro rata basis, and if at the current election that candidate receives more than 5 percent of the total votes cast, then he will be entitled to receive additional payments, as reimbursements to reflect the additional voter support.

In the general election, candidates may choose to receive all private contributions and no public funding, a blend of private and public funding within the limitations on expenditures for general elections as set forth in the bill, or, in the case of major party candidates exclusively public funding.

Post-election payments

Post-election payments are available to candidates in 2 situations.

First, if a minor party candidate or an independent candidate who is entitled to payments before the election in an amount which is less than the amount payable to the candidate of a major party before the election receives a greater percentage of the votes than the candidate of his party received in the last election (when compared to the average percentage received by a major party candidate in that election), he is entitled to receive an additional amount after the election. For example, if the average percentage of the votes received by a major party candidate in the preceding election was 30 percent and the minor party candidate received 15 percent of the votes in that election, the candidate of the minor party in the current election is entitled to a pre-election payment of half the amount to which a major party candidate is entitled. If the minor party candidate in the current election receives 40 percent of the vote and the average percentage received by the major party candidates is still 30 percent, the minor party candidate is entitled to a post-election payment equal to the amount of the pre-election payment to which the major party candidates were each entitled, reduced by the amount of any payments he received before the election and the amount of any contributions he received for use in his campaign. If his pre-election payment and his contributions, added together, equal the spending limitation for that race the amount of his post-election payment is zero. If the sum of his pre-election payment and the contributions equals 90 percent of the spending limitation, his post-election payment is 10 percent of the spending limitation.

Second, a candidate who is not the nominee of a major or minor party and who did not receive more than 5 percent of the votes in the most recent general election for the same office, is not entitled to receive any pre-election payments. If he takes the same steps before the election to become eligible for payments that other candidates must take in order to receive pre-election payments, then, if he receives 5 percent or more of the votes in the current election he is entitled to a payment after the election which bears the same ratio to the maximum payment (equal to the spending limitation) as the number of votes he receives bears to the average number of votes a major party candidate receives. The post-election payment is reduced by the amount of contributions he receives for use in his campaign.

The rules under which the post-election payment may be used are basically these:

(1) The candidate cannot incur campaign expenditures in excess of the amount of his limitation under proposed section 504. The limitation there is the same as the limitation that would apply if he were receiving pre-election public financing of his campaign.

(2) The post-election payment may be used only to pay outstanding campaign debts.

(3) The candidate is regarded as having no outstanding campaign debts until he has spent all the amounts he received as contributions.

(4) Any part of the post-election payment which is left after paying his campaign debts must be returned to the Treasury for deposit back into the fund.

Source of Public Funding

Appropriations may be made by the Congress based on the amounts taxpayers have designated for the fund under the checkoff system.

Authority is provided for the appropriation of additional amounts if necessary.

The Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended to provide for the automatic designation of $2 of income tax liability of every individual whose income tax liability is $2 or more for the taxable year to the Federal Election Campaign Fund, unless the individual elects not to make such a designation. In the case of a joint return of a husband and wife having an income tax liability of $4 or more, each spouse is considered to have designated that $2 shall be paid over to the fund unless he elects not to make such a designation.

If the taxpayer designations of $2 per individual of tax liability result in a sufficient total fund to meet the requirements of all candidates entitled to receive public financing, then the Congress may appropriate that amount for distribution by the Secretary of the Treasury. If the amounts of designated tax payments to the fund do not result in a sufficient total amount to fulfill the entitlements of all qualified candidates, then the Congress may appropriate such additional sums as may be necessary to make up any deficit.

In the event that insufficient funds are available to meet the entitlements of candidates, and the Congress had not acted to appropriate amounts necessary to meet the entitlements of candidates, then such candidates may receive private contributions.

Any private contribution received would be limited to the ceilings established by the bill upon contributions from individuals or political committees and subject further to the amount of public financing, if any, that the candidate is entitled or elects to receive.

Additional Tax Incentives

The Internal Revenue Code would be amended so as to allow an individual who has made a political contribution to a candidate or political committee or political party during a calendar year to claim in his tax return for that year a tax credit or a tax deduction.

The tax credit is limited to one half of the amount of the contribution made and to $25 per individual, or $50 on a joint return.

The tax deduction is limited to $100 per individual.

Thus these tax incentives would double the provisions set forth in the existing law as they were enacted in the Revenue Act of 1971.

Role of Political Parties

Emphasis in this bill is placed upon candidates. But, to preserve the place of political parties in the elective process the bill provides that the National Committee of a political party may spend for political purposes an amount not in excess of the amount to be obtained by multiplying 2 cents by the voting age population of the United States.

A State Committee of a political party may spend an amount to be obtained by multiplying 2 cents by the voting age population of the State in which it functions.

Campaign Reform

Title II of the bill contains in part the text of S. 372 (the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1973) which was passed by the Senate on July 30, 1973.

The Committee amendments to S. 372 do not affect any of the substantive provisions relating to limitations upon contributions or limitations upon expenditures in primary or general elections. The amendments, instead, are intended to remove from the text only those matters which were considered nonessential or which duplicated other provisions of the bill, or which were changed by subsequent action of the Congress. For example, the section prohibiting mass mailing of newsletters, etc., within 60 days prior to the date of any election, was made unnecessary by the enactment of Public Law 93–191, December 18, 1973, regulating the use of the frank.

Title II, in general contains provisions—relating to political broadcasting, and revising title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to reporting and disclosure).

Political Broadcasting

The bill includes also the provisions of S. 372 which repeal the Campaign Communications Act, imposing limitations on amounts spent by candidates for Federal office for the use of broadcast and printed media in their campaigns. It also amends the Communications Act of 1934—

(1) to remove Federal candidates from the equal time requirements of section 315 of that Act.

(2) to require broadcasters to demand a certification by any Federal candidate, before charging him for broadcast time, indicating that the payment of charges for that time will not exceed his expenditure limit under title 18, United States Code, and to apply this provision to State and local candidates wherever similar limits are imposed on them by State law; and

(3) to require broadcasters to make certain announcements and keep certain records in connection with political broadcasts.

Reporting and Disclosure

Title II of the bill is concerned with a general revision of title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to the disclosure of Federal campaign funds).

The bill establishes an independent Federal Election Commission within the executive branch to enforce the reporting and disclosure requirements of the 1971 Act and to enforce certain provisions of chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code (relating to crimes related to political activity). The Commission is given broad powers of enforcement, including the power to make presentations to Federal grand juries and to prosecute criminal cases.

In addition to a number of changes in the details of the reporting and disclosure requirements of the 1971 Act, Title II—

(1) requires a candidate for Federal office to designate a central campaign committee to serve as his central reporting and disclosure agent, and to designate campaign depositories into which all contributions and any public financing payments must be deposited and out of which all campaign expenditures (other than petty cash) must be made;

(2) increases penalties for violations of reporting and disclosure requirements to a maximum of $100,000 and five years imprisonment for a knowing violation;

(3) requires that no expenditure in excess of $1,000 can be made in connection with a Presidential campaign unless that expenditure has been approved by the Chairman of the national committee of the political party or his delegate; and

(4) provides that excess campaign contributions may be used by a person elected to Federal office to defray expenses incurred in connection with that office or as a contribution to a charity.

Criminal Code Amendments

Chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code (relating to political activities), is amended by Title II of the bill—

(1) to make certain minor changes in the definitions of "election", "political committee", "contribution", and "expenditure";

(2) to revise the provisions of section 608 (relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures by a Federal candidate from his own funds and his family's funds) by making the dollar limitations applicable to total campaign expenditures during a calendar year, requiring loans or advances by the candidate or his family to be evidenced by a written instrument, including only the outstanding balances of such loans or advances in the computation of the limitation, and increasing the penalty for violations to a maximum of $25,000 fine and five years imprisonment;

(3) to amend section 611 (relating to contributions by Government contractors) to permit Government contractors to maintain separate segregated funds for voluntary contributions in the same manner as a non-Government corporate contractor may;

(4) to limit Federal campaign expenditures to the limits established for candidates who elect to receive public financing, i.e.—

(A) in the case of primary election campaigns, the greater of—

(i) 10 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State or Congressional district, or

(ii) $125,000 (in the case of a candidate for Senator, Resident Commissioner, Delegate, or sole Representative), or $90,000 (in the case of a candidate for Representative from a State entitled to 2 or more Representatives);

(B) in the case of general election campaigns, the greater of—

(i) 15 cents multiplied by the appropriate voting age population, or

(ii) $175,000 (in the case of a candidate for Senator, Resident Commissioner, Delegate, or sole Representative), or $90,000 (in the case of a candidate for Representative from a State entitled to 2 or more Representatives); and

(C) in the case of a candidate for nomination as a Presidential candidate, or for election as President, the amount allowable in each State in which he campaigns is twice the amount which would be allowable to a candidate for nomination for election to the Senate from that State subject to an overall limitation for expenditures throughout the United States of 10 cents multiplied by the voting age;

(5) to limit political contributions by individuals to Federal candidates to a yearly maximum of—

(A) $3,000 for each primary and general election campaign of any particular candidate, and

(B) $25,000, in the aggregate, for all contributions to Federal candidates and to political committees that support them;

(6) to limit independent political expenditures by anyone (other than the national committee or State committee of a political party, or one of the Congressional campaign committees) to $1,000 per year for each candidate;

(7) to limit general election expenditures by a political party to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States, in the case of a national committee of a political party, or in the State, in the case of a State committee.

(8) to prohibit contributions in excess of $100 other than by a written instrument identifying the contributor; and

(9) to prohibit the embezzlement or conversion of political contributions.

Limits on "Independent Expenditures"

The bill retains the limits on independent expenditures already adopted by the Senate in S. 372. The Committee finds these limits are both necessary and constitutional. "Independent expenditures" refer to sums expended on behalf of a candidate without his authorization, as distinct from contributions of money, goods or services put at the disposal of his campaign organization.

For example, a person might purchase billboard advertisements endorsing a candidate. If he does so completely on his own, and not at the request or suggestion of the candidate or his agent's that would constitute an "independent expenditure on behalf of a candidate" under section 614(c) of the bill. The person making the expenditure would have to report it as such.

However, if the advertisement was placed in cooperation with the candidate's campaign organization, then the amount would constitute a gift by the supporter and an expenditure by the candidate—just as if there had been a direct contribution enabling the candidate to place the advertisement, himself. It would be so reported by both.

While independent expenditures pose a difficult question, it should be emphasized that the need to control them does not arise from public financing. Whether campaigns are funded privately or publicly such controls are imperative if Congress is to enact meaningful limits on direct contributions. Otherwise, wealthy individuals limited to a $3,000 direct contribution could also purchase one hundred thousand dollars' worth of advertisements for a favored candidate. Such a loophole would render direct contribution limits virtually meaningless.

Admittedly, expenditures made directly by an individual to urge support of a candidate pose First Amendment issues more vividly than do financial contributions to a campaign fund. Nevertheless, to prohibit a $60,000 direct contribution to be used for a TV spot commercial but then to permit the would-be contributor to purchase the time himself, and place a commercial endorsing the candidate, would exalt constitutional form over substance. Your Committee does not believe the First Amendment requires such a wooden construction.

If Congress may, consistent with the First Amendment, limit contributions to preserve the integrity of the electoral process, then it also can constitutionally limit independent expenditures in order to make the contribution limits effective.

At the same time, the bill avoids some of the constitutional issues in this area encountered by previous legislation. The 1971 Federal Election Campaign Act deals with such independent efforts by requiring candidate approval before the media may accept advertisements from any source which promote his candidacy. See ACLU v. Jennings, CA. No. 1967–72 (Three-judge court, D.C. Dist. Col.) In contrast, the Committee bill does not require this candidate "sign off." Nor does it include unauthorized expenditures in the total spending limit imposed on the candidate.

Limiting the amount of independent expenditure someone may make in support of a candidate, but not counting such amounts for purposes of the overall spending limit of the candidate, is the best compromise of competing interests in free speech and effective campaign regulation.

It controls undue influence by a group or individual. Yet it avoids the dilemma of either giving candidates a veto over such independent expression or subjecting the candidate to the independent decisions of his supporters, even if he prefers using his permitted expenditure in other ways.

Thus, the bill preserves to everyone some right of political expression, which they can undertake regardless of whether the candidate has already used up his permitted expenditures and regardless of whether the expression they wish to make on the candidate's behalf "fits in" with his campaign plan.

Finally, your Committee has been careful to preserve inviolate every citizen's ability to communicate to anyone his views on political issues. Expenditures made by a person or group to communicate such views, if the communication does not advocate specific candidates, count neither as direct contributions, nor as independent expenditures on behalf of a candidate.

Examples of the Application of the Public Financing Provisions to Federal Elections

There are elections which do not present the conventional situation of a choice between 2 major party candidates. It is also true that, from time to time, a candidate changes his political party affiliation. The following examples illustrate the application of the provisions of the bill to such elections and candidates.

Example No. 1

In a 1984 election for the Senate, Mr. Apple is the candidate of political party A, political party B, and political party C. His opponent, Mr. Orange, is the candidate of political party D. When the votes are counted, Mr. Apple has received 55 percent of the total number of votes. He received 20 percent of the vote as the candidate of party A, 20 percent of the vote as the candidate of party B, and 15 percent of the vote as the candidate of party C. Mr. Orange, as the candidate of party D, received 45 percent of the vote.

In the 1990 contest for Mr. Apple's seat, parties A, B, and D are treated as major parties. (Under section 501(8) of the proposed new title of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, a major party is a political party whose candidate received, as the candidate of that party, 25 percent or more of the votes cast in the most recent election for the same office. However, if only one party qualifies as a major party under that rule, any political party whose candidate received the second highest number of votes in that election is also treated as a major party if he received at least 15 percent of the votes.) In this example Apple received 20 percent of the vote as the candidate of party A. Since the candidate of party A did not receive 25 percent or more of the votes, party A will be treated in the 1990 election as a major party only because its candidate received the second highest number of votes in the 1984 election, and because he received more than 15 percent of the votes. Mr. Apple also received 20 percent of the votes as the candidate of party B, so that party will also be treated as a major party in the 1990 election. Party D is a major party in the 1990 election becuse its candidate in 1984, Mr. Orange, received more than 25 percent of the votes. Party C is a minor party in the 1990 election because its candidate, in 1984, Mr. Apple, neither received more than 25 percent of the vote as the candidate of that party nor the second highest number of votes as the candidates of that party.

The provisions of the bill apply to the 1990 contest for Mr. Apple's seat in the following ways:

VARIATION A

Mr. Apple is again the nominee of party A, party B, and party C. Since party A and party B are each treated as a major party, their candidates are entitled to payments equal in amount to the spending limitation (assume the applicable limitation is $200,000). The candidate of party C in 1990 is entitled to a payment which bears the same ratio to the amount a major party candidate may receive ($200,000) as the number of votes received by the candidate of that party in the preceding general election bears to the average number of votes received by a major party candidate in that election. Mr. Apple, as the candidate of party C in 1984, received 15 percent of the votes and the average number of votes received by the candidates of party A, party B, and Party D was 28.3 percent of the total. The party C candidate in 1984 is entitled to approximately fifteen twenty-eighths of $200,000, which equals about $107,175. Although Mr. Apple is the candidate of party A, party B, party C in 1990, he is not entitled to a combined payment of $507,175. The provisions of proposed section 503(c) limit the amount of the maximum payment any candidate can receive to the amount he can spend. Mr. Appple's sending limit is $200,000, so he would receive payments totaling $200,000. Whether he would receive the full amount as the candidate of party A (or of party B) and nothing as the candidate of the other 2 parties, or whether he would receive part of the amount as the candidate of each party would depend upon the circumstances under which he certified his candidacy and upon the arrangements he made with each party.

Since Mr. Orange, as the candidate of party D, received 45 percent of the votes in the 1984 contest, the candidate of party D in the 1990 contest is entitled to receive a payment of $200,000 as the candidate of a major party.

VARIATION B

Mr. Apple decides not to seek re-election. For the reasons set forth above, the candidates of parties A, B, and D would each be entitled to receive payments under the proposed new title of $200,000 each for use in the 1990 general election campaign. The candidate of party C would be entitled to receive $107,175.

VARIATION C

Mr. Apple decides to seek re-election only as the candidate of party A. Mr. Apple is entitled to a payment of $200,000, the candidates of parties B and D are each entitled to receive a payment of $200,000, and the candidate of party C is entitled to a payment of $107,175.

VARIATION D

Regardless of what Mr. Apple does, Mr. Orange decides to try again for the seat, but this time he chooses to run as an independent candidate rather than as the candidate of party D. Mr. Orange is not entitled to receive one penny in public funds until after the election is over. If he receives more than 5 percent of the votes cast, then he is entitled to receive payments in reimbursement of his campaign expenses based on the percentage of votes he receives as compared to the average number of votes received by major party candidates in that election.

Example No. 2

In a 1984 election for the House the candidate of political party A is an individual who has been elected to the House from that district for over 80 years, so party B doesn't bother to nominate a candidate. The incumbent retires before his term is up and a special election is called for 1985. In the special election, the new candidate of party A is entitled to a payment equal to his expenditure limitation. Assume that the applicable limitation is $100,000. Party B nominates a candidate, but, since the party had no candidate in the preceding general election for the office, he is not entitled to any payment before the election. In the 1985 election, the candidate of party A receives 45 percent of the votes; the candidate of party B receives 55 percent of the votes. The candidate of party B is then entitled to a payment after the election which bears the same ratio to the pre-election payment made to the candidate of party A as the number of votes received by the candidate of party B bears to the number of votes received by the candidate of party A. Since the candidate of party B received more votes than the candidate of party A, his post-election payment is equal to the pre-election payment received by the candidate of party A (it does not exceed that payment because of the application of the limitation in proposed section 503 (c)).

Example No. 3

In the 1984 election mentioned in example number 2, party B decides that the incumbent is to be their nominee as well. Sixty-five percent of the votes he receives come from the members of party A and the remaining 35 percent come from the members of party B. In the special election of 1985, both party A and party B are major parties because their candidate in 1984, the now retired incumbent, received more than 25 percent of the vote in the preceding general election as the candidate of each party. The candidate of party A and the candidate of party B in the 1985 election are each entitled to a pre-election payment of $100,000.

Presidential general elections

The Committee bill makes no basic change in existing law in the application of the dollar checkoff to the entitlement of candidates to public funds in Presidential elections.

In general, a candidate qualifies for full public funding if he is the candidate of a "major" party—a party that received 25 percent or more of the popular votes cast in the preceding election. He qualifies for partial public funding if he is the candidate of a "minor" party—a party that received 5 percent or more, but less than 25 percent, of the popular votes cast in the preceding election; the amount of public funds for a minor party candidate is based on the proportion of the popular vote he received in the preceding election.

In addition, a candidate may also qualify for public funds retroactively, on the basis of his showing in the current election. In such a case, a candidate who receives public funds after the election may use the funds to reimburse private contributors.

In the 1972 Presidential election, President Nixon received 60.2 percent of the vote as the candidate of the Republican Party. Senator McGovern received 37.2 percent of the vote as the candidate of the Democratic Party. Representative Schmitz received 1.3 percent of the vote as the candidate of the American Independent Party or under other party designations.

In 1976 the Republican Party and the Democratic Party qualify as major parties on the basis of the 1972 election, and their candidates will be entitled to full public funding. Since no other party qualifies as a major or minor party on the basis of the 1972 election, no other candidates will be entitled to public funds in advance of the 1976 election. However, if a candidate of a third party runs in 1976 and receives more than 5 percent of the vote, he will qualify retroactively for public funds, based on his showing in the 1976 election.

The application of the public financing provision to Presidential elections is also illustrated by the following section, showing its application to Senate elections.

Senate elections

Some of the following examples are adapted from actual Senate elections in recent years. Most of the examples are designed to illustrate the application of the dollar checkoff to Senate elections involving relatively unusual situations. The dollar checkoff, already applicable to Presidential general elections under existing law, was enacted in 1971 with close attention to its impact on potential third party presidential candidacies. As the examples demonstrate, the formula in existing law for Presidential elections is easily applied to Senate elections, as provided by the Committee bill.

Typically, however, minor party candidates have not been a significant factor in the vast majority of recent Senate elections.

In the past three Congressional election years, there have been a total of 103 Senate elections. In 42 of these elections—14 of the 34 races in 1972, 12 of the 35 races in 1970, and 16 of the 34 races in 1968—only two candidates were entered—Democratic and Republican. In the other 61 races, additional candidates representing some 30 other parties were also on the ballot in those years in various states. But, in those 61 races, there were only seven races in which the third candidate received more than 5 percent of the vote—Louisiana in 1972; Connecticut and New York in 1970; and Alabama, Alaska, Maryland and New York in 1968. In those seven races—seven out of 103 races in all—the third candidate would have qualified for partial public funding as a "minor" party candidate in the following election. In none of those seven races did the third candidate receive more than 25 percent of the vote; therefore, no third candidate would have qualified as a "major" party candidate entitled to full public funding in the following election.

The examples follow:

1. In the 1968 Senate election, Candidate A of the Democratic Party defeated Candidate B of the Republican Party by 50 percent to 48 percent, and Candidate C of Party X received 2 percent of the vote.

When the Senate seat is up again in 1974, the Democratic Party and the Republican Party are "major" parties. Their candidates are each entitled to public funds in the amount of 15 cents per vote, based on the voting age population of the State. Since Candidate C failed to reach the 5 percent cutoff in the 1968 election, Party X does not qualify for public funds in 1974.

2. Same as example (1) for 1968. In the 1974 election, Candidate A of the Democratic Party defeats Candidate B of the Republican Party by 46 percent to 44 percent, and Candidate D of Party X receives 10 percent of the vote.

Candidate D qualifies as a "minor" party candidate on the basis of his showing in the current election (1974), since he received more than 5 percent of the vote. He is therefore entitled to public funds on a retroactive reimubursement basis, even though he did not qualify for public funds in advance of the election because Party X failed to receive 5 percent of the vote in 1968. Candidate D would be entitled to 10/45 or 22 percent of the amount of public funds given to each major party candidate, A and B. The amount is based on Candidate D's proportional share of the average vote of the two major party candidates, and is calculated as follows: $10\% \div (46\% + 44\%)/2 = 10/45 = 22\%$. Candidate C may use these public funds to reimburse private contributors to his campaign in 1974.

3. In 1968, Candidate A of the Republican Party defeated Candidate B of the Democratic Party by 46 percent to 44 percent, and Candidate C of Party X won 10 percent of the vote.

In 1974, the candidates of the Democratic Party and the Republican Party are "major" party candidates and qualify for full public funds (15 cents per vote). The candidate of Party X is a "minor" party candidate and qualifies for partial public funds in 1974, in the amount of 22 percent of the entitlement of each major party candidate.

4. In the 1974 Senate election, Candidate A of the Democratic Party defeats Candidate B of the Republican Party by 46 percent to 44 percent. Candidate C runs as an Independent and receives 10 percent of the vote.

Candidate C qualifies retroactively for public funds on the same basis as if he were the candidate of a party. He receives 22 percent of the amount of public funds given to each major party candidate.

5. A received 4 percent of the vote as the candidate of Party X and 3 percent of the vote as the candidate of Party Y in 1968.

In 1974, A qualifies for public funds as a minor party candidate. His entitlement to public funds is based on 7 percent of the 1968 vote, since the bill permits a candidate to accumulate his votes from the preceding election, if he received 5 percent or more but less than 25 percent of the votes in that election.

6. In the 1968 election, Candidate A of the Democratic Party defeated Candidate B of the Republican Party by 54 percent to 37 percent. In the 1974 election, Senator A runs as an Independent, B runs as an Independent, C runs as the Candidate of the Republican Party, and D runs as the candidate of the Democratic Party. (Based on a recent Virginia Senate election.)

Candidate C of the Republican Party and Candidate D of the Democratic Party are each entitled to full public funding in 1974, since they are candidates of a major party on the basis of the 1968 election. Senator A is also entitled to full public funding, based on his own showing as a winning major party candidate in 1974. B does not qualify for public funds, since the Committee bill does not offer public funds to an independent candidate who was a defeated major party candidate in the preceding election.

7. Senator A ran as an Independent in 1968 and won the election with 54 percent of the vote. The candidate of the Democratic Party received 31 percent of the vote and the candidate of the Republican Party received 15 percent of the vote. (Based on a recent Virginia Senate election.)

If Senator A runs again as an Independent in 1974, he is entitled to full public funds (15 cents per vote), based on his 1968 showing as an Independent. The candidate of the Democratic Party in 1974 is also entitled to full public funds, because Party A qualifies as a "major" party on the basis of its 1968 showing. However, the candidate of the Republican Party in 1974 will qualify only for partial public funds, since it is a "minor" party based on its 1968 showing, even though it was a "major" party based on the 1962 election. In 1974, the Republican candidate is entitled to 15/(54+31)/2, or 35% of the amount given to Senator A and to the Democratic candidate.

If the Republican candidate receives more than 25 percent of the vote in 1974 he qualifies retroactively as a "major" party candidate and is entitled to full public funds.

8. In 1968, candidate A of the Republican Party defeated Independent Candidate B by 50.7 percent to 49.3 percent, and there was no candidate of the Democratic Party (adapted from the Virginia Governor's election in 1973).

If Candidate B runs again as an Independent in 1974, he is entitled to full public funds. Senator A of the Republican Party will also be entitled to full public funds. If there is a candidate of the Democratic Party, he will not qualify for public funds unless he does so retroactively on the basis of his showing in the 1974 election. If Candidate B runs as the candidate of the Democratic Party in 1974, he qualifies for full public funds—not because he is the Democratic Candidate, but because of his personal showing as an Independent in 1968.

9. In 1968, Candidate A of the Democratic Party defeated Candidate B of the Republican Party by 78 percent to 22 percent (based on a recent West Virginia Senate election).

In 1974 since the Democratic Party is the only "major" party on the basis of the 1968 results, the Republican Party will also qualify as a "major" party under the bill. It is the party with the next highest showing in the preceding election, even though its candidate in 1968 won less than 25 percent of the vote and would not ordinarily qualify as a "major" party.

10. In 1968, Candidate A defeated Candidate B by 60 percent to 40 percent. Candidate A received 45 percent of his vote as the candidate of the Democratic Party, and 15 percent of his vote as the candidate of the Liberal Party. Candidate B received 26 percent of his vote as the candidate of the Republican Party, and 14 percent of his vote as the candidate of the Conservative Party. (Adapted from recent New York Senate elections.)

In 1974, the Democratic and Republican candidates qualify as "major" party candidates. The candidates of the Liberal and Conservative Parties each qualify as "minor" party candidates. In addition, if B runs as the Conservative Party candidate, but not as the Republican Party Candidate, in 1974, he qualifies only as a "minor" party candidate, because the bill does not allow a defeated major party candidate to run as a minor party candidate in the next election and carry over his status as a major party candidate.

9. In 1968, Candidate A of the Democratic Party won the election with 55% of the vote. Candidate B of the Republican Party won 19% of the vote and Independent Candidate C won 23% of the vote. (Based on a recent Louisiana Senate election.)

In 1974, since the Democratic Party is the only "major" party on the basis of the 1968 results, the bill, as noted in example (9), operates to allow the Republican Party to qualify as a "major" party, even though it received less than 25% of the vote in 1968, and even though Independent Candidate C made a better showing in 1968. If Candidate C runs again as an Independent in 1974, he qualifies for partial public funds as a "minor" party candidate. But the bill does not benefit an Independent by allowing him to receive full public funding as if he were a major party candidate. As example (7) makes clear, if both an Independent candidate and the Democratic Party candidate qualify for full public funds on the basis of the preceding election, the bill does not operate to allow the Republican candidate to qualify for full public funds. In other words, the bill does not operate to create full public funding for a third candidate, where two candidates already qualify for full public funds on the basis of their showing in the preceding election.

Illustrative examples of public financing under Senate Rules Committee print No. 4, as revised

(Supplied by the General Accounting Office)

1. 1976 Presidential Primary Elections.—Assume four Democrats and four Republicans raise a campaign fund of at least $250,000 each from contributions of not more than $250 each. Each candidate would be entitled to matching funds of $250,000, plus one dollar for each additional dollar of qualifying contributions (under $250) raised. In each primary election or convention to select national convention delegates, each candidate could spend up to twice the amount permitted a Senate primary candidate. For example, in the 1976 Wisconsin presidential primary each candidate could spend up to 20¢ times voting age population ($606,600 based on current population) and could receive up to one-half of that amount in public funds.

2. 1976 Presidential General Election.—Both the Democratic and the Republican candidates represent a major party (over 25% of the popular vote in 1972). Both are entitled to optional full public financing up to the spending limit of 15 cents times voting age population ($21,250,000 based on current population). The spending limit applies to all candidates whether or not they choose public financing. No other candidate is qualified for public funds based on 1972 results, but if another candidate receives over 5% of the 1976 vote, he would be entitled after the election to a proportionate share to reimburse campaign expenditures.

Assume the two major party candidates receive 41 percent and 39 percent of the 1976 popular vote, respectively, and assume Candidate C of the National Party receives 10 percent. Candidate C will be entitled to a post-election payment based on the ratio of his vote to the average of the major parties' vote; i.e. 10/40 of $21,250,000. Candidate C would receive up to $5,312,500. In the 1980 general election for President, the Democrats and Republicans would be major parties and the National Party would be a minor party whose candidate is entitled to pre-election payments in the same ratio. If Candidate C runs as an independent in 1980, he would also be entitled to payments based on the votes he received in 1976.

3. Senate Primary Election.—Candidate A is opposed in the primary by Candidate B and both raise the required threshold campaign fund from contributions of $100 or less. Each candidate is entitled to matching funds on a dollar for dollar basis. If either candidate doesn't raise the minimum amount from private sources he will not receive any public funds.

4. Senate Nominating Convention.—Same result as in preceding example because the term "primary election" in the bill includes a convention or caucus of a political party held to nominate a candidate.

5. Senate General Election.—Assume Candidates A and B are nominated by the major parties and Candidate C represents a minor party; and the voting age population of the state is 4 million. Candidates A and B are each entitled to $600,000 (15¢ times voting age population) for their general election campaign. If the minor party received ⅓ of the average vote of the major parties in the preceding election, Candidate C is entitled to $200,000.

6. House Primary Election.—In a congressional district in a multi-district state, four candidates for major party nomination qualify for matching funds by raising more than $10,000 in contributions of $100 or less. Each is entitled to spend up to $90,000 and is entitled to matching funds for each dollar raised.

7. House General Election.—The nominated candidate of a major party is entitled to full public payment of $90,000 in the general election. If the State has only one district, the primary limit is increased to $125,000 and the general election limit is increased to $175,000.

Cost Estimates Pursuant to Section 252(a) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970

Section 252(a) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970 requires that any committee reporting a bill of a public character shall include in its accompanying report an estimate of the costs which would be incurred in effecting such legislation, or a statement of the reasons compliance with this requirement is impracticable.

Accordingly, the Committee on Rules and Administration estimates the annual cost to the United States Government to an average of $89,391,693. This average estimate is based upon the supposition that all seats in the House of Representatives will be contested every two years; that one third of all Senate seats will be contested every two years; and that, of course, there will be a quadrennial election for President and Vice President. The costs are predicated upon total estimated public funds paid to eligible candidates for nomination for election, or election to Federal office.

The Committee is not aware of any estimates of costs made by any Federal agency which are different from those made by the committee.

COST ESTIMATES

	4-year total
President (every 4 years):
Primary elections, not including State conventions (21 States)	$42,010,800
General	47,218,194
Total, President	89,228,994
Senate (33 campaigns every 2 years):
Primary (33 States) including conventions	10,170,900
General (33 States)	23,929,900
Total, Senate	34,100,800
Multiplied by 2	68,201,600
House (every 2 years):
Primary (435 seats) including conventions	31,245,100
General (435 seats)	69,062,888
Total, House	100,307,988
Multiplied by 2	200,615,976
Total, 4-year cost	358,046,570
Average annual cost	89,511,643

ADDITIONAL COST ESTIMATES

The Internal Revenue Service furnished the following information, based upon 1971 figures, demonstrating the cost to the government if all taxpayers were to designate one dollar of tax liability to the Presidential Campaign fund:

Total returns joint	$4[illegible], 770, 000
Total individual returns	3[illegible], 830, 000
Total returns	7[illegible], 600, 000

If all returns, individual and joint, should take full advantage of the one dollar check off the total cost would be $117,370,000.

If, all returns should take full advantage of a two dollar check off the cost would be $234,740,000.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
JOINT COMMITTEE ON INTERNAL REVENUE TAXATION
LONGWORTH HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING,
Washington, D.C., February 21, 1974.

Mr. JAMES H. DUFFY,
Chief Counsel, Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, Rules and Administration Committee, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. DUFFY: This is in reference to your telephone request of February 20 for the estimated decrease in Federal individual income tax liability which would result from doubling from $50 ($100 for joint returns) to $100 ($200 for joint returns) the maximum deduction for political contributions and doubling from $12.50 ($25 for joint returns) to $25 ($50 for joint returns) the maximum tax credit for political contributions.

Based on estimated 1972 levels of political contributions under the proposal as derived from the levels of contributions reflected in tax returns filed for 1972, we estimate that the proposed doubling of the maximum deduction and the maximum credit would decrease Federal individual income tax liability by about $26 million of which $15 million is ascribable to the doubling of the maximum deduction and $11 million is ascribable to the doubling of the maximum credit.

Sincerely yours,

LAURENCE N. WOODWORTH.

PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARY

(Based on 1972)

Assumptions:
1) Candidates qualify by raising $250,000
2) Apply 1972 qualifiers to primaries actually run

Requirements:
1) To qualify candidates must raise $250,000

Formula:
1) Match $1 for $1 raised by those qualifying up to spending limit
2) Spending limit is 2 times the Senate formula which is the greater of 10¢ x state VAP or $125,000

1) New Hampshire - 4 candidates in primary raised $250,000 spending limit: 10¢ x 531,000 = $53,100 x 2 = $106,200 or $250,000
   government cost: $125,000 x 4 candidates = $500,000

2) Florida - 8 candidates in primary raised $250,000
   spending limit: 10¢ x 5,427,000 = $542,700 x 2 = $1,085,400
   government cost: $542,700 x 8 candidates = $4,341,600

3) Illinois - 1 candidate in primary raised $250,000
   spending limit: 10¢ x 7,568,000 = $756,800 x 2 = $1,513,600
   government cost: $756,800 x 1 candidate = $756,800

4) Wisconsin - 8 candidates in primary raised $250,000
   spending limit: 10¢ x 3,033,000 = $303,300 x 2 = $606,600
   government cost: $303,300 x 8 candidates = $2,426,400

5) Massachusetts - 7 candidates in primary raised $250,000
   spending limit: 10¢ x 4,006,000 = $400,600 x 2 = $801,200
   government cost: $400,600 x 7 candidates = $2,804,200

6) Pennsylvania - 5 candidates in primary raised $250,000
   spending limit: 10¢ x 8,240,000 = $824,000 x 2 = $1,648,000
   government cost: $824,000 x 5 candidates = $4,120,000

7) District of Columbia - 1 candidate in primary raised $250,000 spending limit: 10¢ x 529,000 = $52,900 x2 = $105,800 or $250,000
   government cost: $125,000 x 1 candidate = $125,000

8) Indiana - 4 candidates in primary raised $250,000
   spending limit: 10¢ x 3,530,000 = $353,000 x 2 = $706,000
   government cost: $353,000 x 4 candidates = $1,412,000

9) Tennessee - 8 candidates in primary raised $250,000
   spending limit: 10¢ x 2,799,000 = $279,900 x 2 = $559,800
   government cost: $279,900 x 8 candidates = $2,239,200

10) Ohio - 5 candidates in primary raised $250,000
   spending limit: 10¢ x 7,175,000 = $717,500 x 2 = $1,435,000
   government cost: $717,500 x 5 candidates = $3,587,500

11) North Carolina - 5 candidates in primary raised $250,000
   spending limit: 10¢ x 3,541,000 = $354,100 x 2 = $708,200
   government cost: $354,100 x 5 candidates = $1,770,500

12) Nebraska - 8 candidates in primary raised $250,000
spending limit: 10¢ x 1,042,000 = $104,200 x 2 = $208,400
government cost: $104,200 x 8 candidates = $833,600

13) West Virginia - 2 candidates in primary raised $250,000
spending limit: 10¢ x 1,228,000 = $122,800 x 2 = $245,600
government cost: $122,800 x 2 candidates = $245,600

14) Maryland - 8 candidates in primary raised $250,000
spending limit: 10¢ x 2,720,000 = $272,000 x 2 = $544,000
government cost: $272,000 x 8 candidates = $2,176,000

15) Michigan - 5 candidates in primary raised $250,000
spending limit: 10¢ x 5,922,000 = $592,200 x 2 = $1,184,400
government cost: $592,200 x 5 candidates = $2,961,000

16) Oregon - 8 candidates in primary raised $250,000
spending limit: 10¢ x 1,532,000 = $153,200 x 2 = $306,400
government cost: $153,200 x 8 candidates = $1,225,600

17) Rhode Island - 8 candidates in primary raised $250,000 spending limit: 10¢ x 677,000 = $67,700 x 2 = $135,400 or $250,000
government cost: $125,000 x 8 candidates = $1,000,000

18) California - 6 candidates in primary raised $250,000
spending limit: 10¢ x 14,143,000 = $1,414,300 x 2 = $2,828,600
government cost: $1,414,300 x 6 candidates = $8,485,800

19) New Jersey - No candidates in primary raised $250,000

20) New Mexico - 6 candidates in primary raised $250,000 spending limit: 10¢ x 691,000 = $69,100 x 2 = $138,200 or $250,000
government cost: $125,000 x 6 candidates = $750,000

21) South Dakota - 2 candidates in primary raised $250,000 spending limit: 10¢ x 454,000 = $45,400 x 2 = $90,800 or $250,000
government cost: $125,000 x 2 candidates = $250,000

Total primary cost to government = $42,010,800

Requirements: 1) Major parties (25% or more vote) receive full Federal funding up to spending limit.
2) Minor parties (5-25% of vote) receive proportionate share.

Formula: 1) Spending limit is 15¢ x VAP ($21,248,400) Assumption: 1) Two major parties

2) One minor party gets 10% of vote

VAP = 141,656,000

spending limit:	15¢ x 141,656,000 = $21,248,400
government cost:	$21,248,400 x 2 candidates =	$42,496,800
	+ minor party=	4,721,394

U.S. SENATE

(Based on 1972)

Assumptions:
1) Primary opposed-- 2 candidates qualified and spent maximum
2) Primary unopposed-- candidates did not raise qualifying amount
3) General-- major candidates raised qualifying amounts

Formula:
1) Qualifying amount-- lesser of 20% of primary spending amount or $125,000
2) Primary spending amount-- greater of 10¢ x VAP or $125,000
3) General spending amount-- greater of 15¢ x VAP or $175,000
4) Matching in primary-- 1 for 1
5) Full amount in general

1) Alabama:
Qualify (lesser of 20% of $233,800 or $125,000) = $46,760
Primary: spending limit = 10¢ x 2,338,000 = $233,800
4 candidates qualified - matching
government cost = $233,800 ÷ 2 x 4 = $467,600
General: spending limit = 15¢ x 2,338,000 = $350,700
2 candidates qualified - full amount government cost = $350,700 x 2 = $701,400

2) Alaska:
Qualify (20% of $125,000) = $25,000
Primary: spending limit = 10¢ x 200,000 = $20,000 or $125,000 no candidates qualified government cost = 0
General: spending list = 15¢ x 200,000 = $30,000 or $175,000
2 candidates qualified - full amount
government cost = $75,000 x 2 = $350,000

3) Arkansas:
Qualifying (lesser of 20% of 137,400 or $125,000) = $27,480
Primary: spending limit = 10¢ x 1,374,000 = $137,400
2 candidates qualified - matching
government cost = $137,400 x 2 = $274,400
General: spending limit = 15¢ x 1,374,000 = $206,100
2 candidates qualified - full amount
government cost = $206,100 x 2 = $412,200

4) Colorado:
Qualifying (Lesser of 20% of $163,100 or $125,000) = $32,620
Primary: spending limit = 10¢ x $1,631,000 = $163,100
2 candidates qualified - matching
government cost = $163,100 x 2 ÷ 2 = $163,100
General: spending limit = 15¢ x 1,631,000 = $244,650
2 candidates qualified - full amount
government cost = $244,650 x 2 = $489,300

5) Delaware:
Qualifying (lesser of 20% of $38,200 or $125,000) = $25,000
Primary: spending limit = 10¢ x 382,000 = $38,200 or $125,000 no candidate qualified
government cost = 0
General: spending limit = 15¢ x 382,000 or 175,000 = $175,000
2 candidates qualified - full amount
government cost = $175,000 x 2 = $350,000

6) Georgia:
Qualifying (lesser of 20% of $314,000 or $125,000) = $62,800
Primary: spending limit = 10¢ x 3,140,000 = $314,000
4 candidates qualified - matching
government cost = $314,000 ÷ 2 x 4 = $628,000

CHANGES IN EXISTING LAW

In compliance with subsection 4 of rule XXIX of the Standing Rules of the Senate, changes in existing law made by the bill S. 3044 as reported by the Committee on Rules and Administration, are shown as follows (existing law proposed to be omitted is enclosed in black brackets, new matter is printed in italic, and existing law in which no change is proposed is shown in roman):

COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934

§ 315. Candidates for public office; facilities; rules

(a) If any licensee shall permit any person who is a legally qualified candidate for any public office, other than Federal elective office (including the office of Vice President), to use a broadcasting station, he shall afford equal opportunities to all other such candidates for that office in the use of such broadcasting station: Provided, That such licensee shall have no power of censorship over the material broadcast under the provisions of this section. No obligation is imposed upon any licensee to allow the use of its station by any such candidate. Appearance by a legally qualified candidate on any—

(1) bona fide newscast,

(2) bona fide news interview,

(3) bona fide documentary (if the appearance of the candidate is incidental to the presentation of the subject or subjects covered by the news documentary), or

(4) on-the-spot coverage of bona fide news events (including but not limited to political conventions and activities incidental thereto), shall not be deemed to be use of a broadcasting station within the meaning of this subsection. Nothing in the foregoing sentence shall be construed as relieving broadcasters, in connection with the presentation of newscasts, news interviews, news documentaries, and on-the-spot coverage of news events, from the obligation imposed upon them under this chapter to operate in the public interest and to afford reasonable opportunity for the discussion of conflicting views on issues of public importance.

(b) The charges made for the use of any broadcasting station [by any person] by or on behalf of any person who is a legally qualified candidate for any public office in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or election, to such office shall not exceed—

(1) during the forty-five days preceding the date of a primary or primary runoff election and during the sixty days preceding the date of a general or special election in which such person is a candidate, the lowest unit charge of the station for the same class and amount of time for the same period; and

(2) at any other time, the charges made for comparable use of such station by other users thereof.

[(c) No station licensee may make any charge for the use of such station by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office (or for nomination to such office) unless such candidate

(or a person specifically authorized by such candidate in writing to do so) certifies to such licensee in writing that the payment of such charge will not violate any limitation specified in paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of section 104(a) of the Campaign Communications Reform Act, whichever paragraph is applicable.]

(c) No station licensee may make any charge for the use of such station by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal elective office unless such candidate (or a person specifically authorized by such candidate in writing to do so) certifies to such licensee in writing that the payment of such charge will not exceed the limit on expenditures applicable to that candidate under section 504 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, or under section 614 of title 18, United States Code.

[(d) a State by law and expressly—

[(2) has specified a limitation upon total expenditures for the use of broadcasting stations on behalf of the candidacy of each legally qualified candidate in such election,

[(3) has provided in any such law an unequivocal expression of intent to be bound by the provisions of this subsection, and

[(4) has stipulated that the amount of such limitation shall not exceed the amount which would be determined for such election under section 104(a)(1)(B) or 104(a)(2)(B) (whichever is applicable) of the Campaign Communications Reform Act had such election been an election for a Federal elective office or nomination thereto;

[then no station licensee may make any charge for the use of such station by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate in such election unless such candidate (or a person specifically authorized by such candidate in writing to do so) certifies to such licensee in writing that the payment of such charge will not violate such State limitation.]

(d) If a State by law imposes a limitation upon the amount which a legally qualified candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to public office (other than Federal elective office) within that State may spend in connection with his campaign for such nomination or his campaign for election, then no station licensee may make any charge for the use of such station by or on behalf of such candidate unless such candidate (or a person specifically authorized in writing by him to do so) certifies to such licensee in writing that the payment of such charge will not violate that limitation.

(e) Whoever willfully and knowingly violates the provisions of subsection (c) or (d) of this section shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $5,000 or imprisonment for a period not to exceed five years, or both. The provisions of sections 501 through 503 of this Act shall not apply to violators of either such subsection.

(f) For the purposes of this section:

(A) The term "broadcasting station" includes a community antenna television system.

(B) The term "licensee" and "station licensee" when used with respect to a community antenna television system, means the operator of such system.

(C) The term "Federal elective office" means the office of President of the United States, or of Senator or Representative in, or Resident Commissioner or Delegate to, the Congress of the United States.

(2) For purposes of subsections (c) and (d), the term "legally qualified candidate" means any person who (A) meets the qualifications prescribed by the applicable laws to hold the office for which he is a candidate and (B) is eligible under applicable State law to be voted for by the electorate directly or by means of delegates or electors.

(g) The Commission shall prescribe appropriate rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this section.

§ 317. Announcement of payment for broadcast

(a)(1) All matter broadcast by any radio station for which any money, service or other valuable consideration is directly or indirectly paid, or promised to or charged or accepted by, the station so broadcasting, from any person, shall, at the time the same is so broadcast, be announced as paid for or furnished, as the case may be, by such [person: Provided, That] person. If such matter is a political advertisement soliciting funds for a candidate or a political committee, there shall be announced at the time of such broadcast a statement that a copy of reports filed by that person with the Federal Election Commission is available from the Federal Election Commission, Washington, D.C., and the licensee shall not make any charge for any part of the costs of making the announcement. The term "service or other valuable consideration" shall not include any service or property furnished without charge or at a nominal charge for use on, or in connection with, a broadcast unless it is so furnished in consideration for an identification in a broadcast of any person, product, service, trademark, or brand name beyond an identification which is reasonably related to the use of such service or property on the broadcast.

(2) Nothing in this section shall preclude the Commission from requiring that an appropriate announcement shall be made at the time of the broadcast in the case of any political program or any program involving the discussion of any controversial issue for which any films, records, transcriptions, talent, scripts, or other material or service of any kind have been furnished, without charge or at a nominal charge, directly or indirectly, as inducement to the broadcast of such program.

(b) In any case where a report has been made to a radio station, as required by section 508 of this title, of circumstances which would have required an announcement under this section had the consideration been received by such radio station, an appropriate announcement shall be made by such radio station.

(c) The licensee of each radio station shall exercise reasonable diligence to obtain from its employees, and from other persons with whom it deals directly in connection with any program or program matter for broadcast, information to enable such licensee to make the announcement required by this section.

(d) The Commission may waive the requirement of an announcement as provided in this section in any case or class of cases with respect to which it determines that the public interest, convenience, or necessity does not require the broadcasting of such announcement.

(e) Each station licensee shall maintain a record of any political advertisement broadcast, together with the identification of the person who caused it to be broadcast, for a period of two years. The record shall be available for public inspection at reasonable hours.

[e] (f) The Commission shall prescribe appropriate rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this section.

CAMPAIGN COMMUNICATIONS REFORM ACT

[TITLE I—CAMPAIGN COMMUNICATIONS

[SHORT TITLE

[SEC. 101. This title may be cited as the "Campaign Communications Reform Act".

[DEFINITIONS

[SEC. 102. For purposes of this title:

[(1) The term "communications media" means broadcasting stations, newspapers, magazines, outdoor advertising facilities, and telephones; but, with respect to telephones, spending or an expenditure shall be deemed to be spending or an expenditure for the use of communications media only if such spending or expenditure is for the costs of telephones, paid telephonists, and automatic telephone equipment, used by a candidate for Federal elective office to communicate with potential voters (excluding any costs of telephones incurred by a volunteer for use of telephones by him).

[(2) The term "broadcasting station" has the same meaning as such term has under section 315(f) of the Communications Act of 1934.

[(3) The term "Federal elective office" means the office of President of the United States, or of Senator or Representative in, or Resident Commissioner or Delegate to, the Congress of the United States (and for purposes of section 103(b) such term includes the office of Vice President).

[(4) The term "legally qualified candidate" means any person who (A) meets the qualifications prescribed by the applicable laws to hold the Federal elective office for which he is a candidate, and (B) is eligible under applicable State law to be voted for by the electorate directly or by means of delegates or electors.

[(5) The term "voting age population" means resident population, eighteen years of age and older.

[(6) The term "State" includes the District of Columbia and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

[MEDIA RATE AND RELATED REQUIREMENTS

[SEC. 103. Note: Subsection (a) amended the Communications Act of 1934, which is not affected by repeal of the Campaign Communications Reform Act.

[(b) To the extent that any person sells space in any newspaper or magazine to a legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office, or nomination thereto, in connection with such candidate's campaign for nomination for, or election to, such office, the charges made for the use of such space in connection with his campaign shall not exceed the charges made for comparable use of such space for other purposes.

[LIMITATIONS OF EXPENDITURES FOR USE OF COMMUNICATIONS MEDIA

[SEC. 104. (a)(1) Subject to paragraph (4), no legally qualified candidate in an election (other than a primary or primary runoff election) for a Federal elective office may—

[(A) spend for the use of communications media on behalf of his candidacy in such election a total amount in excess of the greater of—

[(i) 10 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under paragraph (5)) of the geographical area in which the election for such office is held, or

[(ii) $50,000 or

[(B) spend for the use of broadcast stations on behalf of his candidacy in such election a total amount in excess of 60 per centum of the account determined under subparagraph (A) with respect to such election.

[(2) No legally qualified candidate in a primary election for nomination to a Federal elective office, other than President, may spend—

[(A) for the use of communications media, or

[(B) for the use of broadcast stations,

[on behalf of his candidacy in such election a total amount in excess of the amounts determined under paragraph (1) (A) or (B), respectively, with respect to the general election for such office. For purposes of this subsection a primary runoff election shall be treated as a separate primary election.

[(3)(A) No person who is a candidate for presidential nomination may spend—

[(i) for the use in a State of communications media, or

[(ii) for the use in a State of broadcast stations,

[on behalf of his candidacy for presidential nomination a total amount in excess of the amounts which would have been determined under paragraph (1) (A) or (B), respectively, had he been a candidate for election for the office of Senator from such State (or for the office of Delegate or Resident Commissioner in the case of the District of Columbia or the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico).

[(B) For purposes of this paragraph (3), a person is a candidate for presidential nomination if he makes (or any other person makes on his behalf) an expenditure for the use of any communications medium on behalf of his candidacy for any political party's nomination for election to the office of President. He shall be considered to be such a candidate during the period—

[(ii) ending on the date on which such political party nominates a candidate for the office of President.

[For purposes of this title and of section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934, a candidate for presidential nomination shall be considered a legally qualified candidate for public office.

[(C) The Comptroller General shall prescribe regulations under which any expenditure by a candidate for presidential nomination for the use in two or more States of a communications medium shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the number of persons in such State who can reasonably be expected to be reached by such communications medium.

[(4) (A) For purposes of subparagraph (B):

[(ii) The term "base period" means the calendar year 1970.

[(B) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1972), as there becomes available necessary data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Comptroller General and publish in the Federal Register the per centum difference between the price index for the 12 months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each amount determined under paragraph (1)(A)(i) and (ii) shall be increased by such per centum difference. Each amount so increased shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

[(5) Within 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act, and during the first week of January in 1973 and every subsequent year, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Comptroller General and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of each State and congressional district for the last calendar year ending before the date of certification.

[(6) Amounts spent for the use of communications media on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office (or for nomination to such office) shall, for the purposes of this subsection, be deemed to have been spent by such candidate. Amounts spent for the use of communications media by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for the office of Vice President of the United States shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to have been spent by the candidate for the office of President of the United States with whom he is running.

[(7) For purposes of this section and section 315(c) of the Communications Act of 1934—

[(A) spending and charges for the use of communications media include not only the direct charges of the media but also agents' commissions allowed the agent by the media, and

[(B) any expenditure for the use of any communications medium by or on behalf of the candidacy of a candidate for Federal elective office (or nomination thereto) shall be charged against the expenditure limitation under this subsection applicable to the election in which such medium is used.

[(b) No person may make any charge for the use by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office (or for nomination to such office) of any newspaper, magazine, or outdoor advertising facility, unless such candidate (or a person specifically authorized by such candidate in writing to do so) certifies in writing to the person making such charge that the payment of such charge will not violate paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of subsection (a), whichever is applicable.]

NOTE: Subsection (c) amended the Communications Act of 1934, which is not affected by the repeal of this section.

[REGULATIONS

[SEC. 105. The Comptroller General shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out sections 102, 103(b), 104(a), and 104(b) of this Act.

[PENALTIES

THE FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

* * * * * * *

TITLE III—DISCLOSURE OF FEDERAL CAMPAIGN FUNDS

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 301. When used in this title—

(a) "election" means (1) a general, special, primary, or runoff election, (2) a convention or caucus of a political party held to nominate a candidate, (3) a primary election held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party, and (4) a primary election held for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President [, and (5) the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States];

(b) "candidate" means an individual who seeks nomination for election, or election, to Federal office, whether or not such individual is elected, and, for purposes of this paragraph, an individual shall be deemed to seek nomination for election, or election, if he has (1) taken the action necessary under the law of a State to qualify himself for nomination for election, or election, to Federal office, or (2) received contributions or made expenditures, or has given his consent for any other person to receive contributions or make expenditures, with a view to bringing about his nomination for election, or election, to such office;

(c) "Federal office" means the office of President or Vice President of the United States; or of Senator or Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress of the United States;

[(d) "political committee" means any committee, association, or organization which accepts contributions or makes expenditures during a calendar year in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000;]

(d) "political committee" means—

(1) any committee, club, association, or other group of persons which receives any contributions or mokes expenditures during a calendar year in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000;

(2) any national committee, association, or organization of a political party, any State affiliate or subsidiary of a national political party, and any State central committee of a political party; and

(3) any committee, association, or organization engaged in the administration of a separate segregated fund described in section 610 of title 18, United States Code;

(e) "contribution" means—

(1) a gift, subscription (including any assessment, fee, or membership dues), loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value, made for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office or as a presidential or vice-presidential elector, or for the purpose of influencing the result of a primary held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President, [or for the purpose of influencing the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States] or for the purpose of financing any operations of a political committee (other than a payment made or obligation incurred by a corporation or a labor organization which, under the provisions of the last paragraph of section 610 of title 18, United States Code, would not constitute a contribution by that corporation or labor union), or for the purpose of paying, at any time, any debt or obligation incurred by a candidate or a political committee in connection with any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office;

[(2) a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution for any such purpose;

[(3) a transfer between political committees;]

(3) funds received by a political committee which are transferred to that committee from another political committee;

[(4)] (3) the payment, by any person other than a candidate or political committee, of compensation for the personal services of another person which are rendered to such candidate or committee without charge for any such purpose; and

[(5)] (4) notwithstanding the foregoing meanings of "contribution", the word shall not be construed to include services provided without compensation by individuals volunteering a portion or all of their time on behalf of a candidate or political committee;

[(f) "expenditure" means—

result of a primary held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President, or for the purpose of influencing the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States;

[(2) a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make an expenditure, and

[(3) a transfer of funds between political committees;]

(f) "expenditure"—

(1) means a purchase, payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money or anything of value, made for the purpose of—

(A) influencing the nomination for election, or the election, of any person to Federal office, or to the office of presidential and vice-presidential elector;

(B) influencing the result of a primary election held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President;

(C) financing any operations of a political committee; or

(D) paying, at any time, any debt or obligation incurred by a candidate or a political committee in connection with any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office;

(2) means the transfer of funds by a political committee to another political committee; but

(3) does not include—

(A) the value of services rendered by individuals who volunteer to work without compensation on behalf of a candidate; or

(B) any payment made or obligation incurred by a corporation or a labor organization which, under the provisions of the last paragraph of section 610 of title 18, United States Code, would not constitute an expenditure by that corporation or labor organization;

[(g) "supervisory officer" means the Secretary of the Senate with respect to candidates for Senator; the Clerk of the House of Representatives with respect to candidates for Representatives in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress of the United States; and the Comptroller General of the United States in any other case;]

(g) "Commission" means the Federal Election Commission;

(h) "person" means an individual, partnership, committee, association, corporation, labor organization, and any other organization or group of persons; [and]

(i) "State" means each State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and any territory or possession of the United States[.];

(1) in the case of an individual, his full name and the full address of his principal place of residence; and

(2) in the case of any other person, the full name and address of that person;

(k) "national committee" means the duly constituted organization which, by virtue of the bylaws of a political party is responsibel for the day-to-day operation of that political party at the national level, as determined by the Commission; and

(l) "political party" means an association, committee, or organization which nominates a candidate for election to any Federal office whose name appears on the election ballot as the candidate of that association, committee, or organization.

ORGANIZATION OF POLITICAL COMMITTEES

SEC. 302. (a) Every political committee shall have a chairman and a treasurer. No contribution and no expenditure shall be accepted or made by or on behalf of a political committee at a time when there is a vacancy in the office of chairman or treasurer thereof. No expenditure shall be made for or on behalf of a political committee without the authorization of its chairman or treasurer, or their designated agents.

(b) Every person who receives a contribution in excess of $10 for a political committee shall, on demand of the treasurer, and in any event within five days after receipt of such contribution, render to the treasurer a detailed account thereof, including the amount [, the name and address (occupation and the principal place of business, if any)] of the contribution and the identification of the person making such contribution, and the date on which received. All funds of a political committee shall be segregated from, and may not be commingled with, any personal funds of officers, members, or associates of such committee.

(c) It shall be the duty of the treasurer of a political committee to keep a detailed and exact account of—

(1) all contributions made to or for such committee;

(2) the [full name and mailing address (occupation and the principal place of business, if any)] identification of every person making a contribution in excess of $10, and the date and amount thereof [;] and, if a person's contributions aggregate more than $100, the account shall include occupation, and the principal place of business (if any);

(3) all expenditures made by or on behalf of such committee; and

(4) the [full name and mailing address (occupation and the principal place of business, if any)] identification of every person to whom any expenditure is made, the date and amount thereof and the name and address of, and office sought by, each candidate on whose behalf such expenditure was made.

(d) It shall be the duty of the treasurer to obtain and keep a receipted bill, stating the particulars, for every expenditure made by or on behalf of a political committee in excess of $100 in amount, and for any such expenditure in a lesser amount, if the aggregate amount of such expenditures to the same person during a calendar year exceeds $100. The treasurer shall preserve all receipted bills and accounts required to be kept by this section for periods of time to be determined by the [supervisory officer.] Commission.

(e) Any political committee which solicits or receives contributions or makes expenditures on behalf of any candidate that is not authorized in writing by such candidate to do so shall include a notice on the face or front page of all literature and advertisements published in connection with such candidate's campaign by such committee or on its behalf stating that the committee is not authorized by such candidate and that such candidate is not responsible for the activities of such committee.

[(f)(1) Any political committee shall include on the face or front page of all literature and advertisements soliciting funds the following notice:

["A copy of our report filed with the appropriate supervisory officer is (or will be) available for purchase from the Superintendent of Documents, United States Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402."

[(2)(A) The supervisory officer shall compile and furnish to the Public Printer, not later than the last day of March of each year, an annual report for each political committee which has filed a report with him under this title during the period from March 10 of the preceding calendar year through January 31 of the year in which such annual report is made available to the Public Printer. Each such annual report shall contain—

[(i) a copy of the statement of organization of the political committee required under section 303, together with any amendments thereto; and

[(ii) a copy of each report filed by such committee under section 304 from March 10 of the preceding year through January 31 of the year in which the annual report is so furnished to the Public Printer.

[(B) The Public Printer shall make copies of such annual reports available for sale to the public by the Superintendent of Documents as soon as practicable after they are received from the supervisory officer.]

REGISTRATION OF CANDIDATES AND POLITICAL COMMITTEES: STATEMENTS

SEC. 303. (a) Each candidate shall, within ten days after the date on which he has qualified under State law as a candidate, or on which he, or any person authorized by him to do so, has received a contribution or made an expenditure in connection with his campaign or for the purpose of preparing to undertake his campaign, file with the Commission a registration statement in such form as the Commission may prescribe. The statement shall include—

(1) the identification of the candidate, and any individual, political committee, or other person he has authorized to receive contributions or make expenditures on his behalf in connection with his campaign;

(2) the identification of his campaign depositories, together with the title and number of each account at each such depository which is to be used in connection with his campaign, and safety deposit box to be used in connection therewith, and the identification of each individual authorized by him to make any expenditure or withdrawal from such account or box; and

(3) such additional relevant information as the Commission may require.

[(b)] (c) The statement of organization shall be in such form as the Commission shall prescribe, and shall include—

(1) the name and address of the committee;

(2) the names, addresses, and relationships of affiliated or connected organizations;

[(3) the area, scope, or jurisdiction of the committee;]

(3) the geographic area or political jurisdiction within which the committee will operate, and a general description of the committee's authority and activities;

(4) the name, address, and position of the custodian of books and accounts;

(5) the name, address, and position of other principal officers, including officers and members of the finance committee, if any;

(6) the name, address, office sought, and party affiliate of (A) each candidate whom the committee is supporting, and (B) any other individual, if any, whom the committee is supporting for nomination for election, or election, to any public office whatever; or, if the committee is supporting the entire ticket of any party, the name of the party;

(7) a statement whether the committee is a continuing one;

(8) the disposition of residual funds which will be made in the event of dissolution;

[(9) a listing of all banks, safety deposit boxes, or other repositories used;]

(9) the name and address of the campaign depositories used by that committee, together with the title and number of each account and safety deposit box used by that committee at each depository, and the identification of each individual authorized to make withdrawals or payments out of such account or box;

(10) a statement of the reports required to be filed by the committee with State or local officers, and, if so, the names, addresses, and positions of such persons; and

(11) such other information as shall be required by the [supervisory officer.] Commission.

(c) Any change in information previously submitted in a statement of organization shall be reported to the [supervisory officer] Commission within a ten-day period following the change.

(d) Any committee which, after having filed one or more statements of organization, disbands or determines it will no longer receive contributions or make expenditures during the calendar year in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000 shall so notify the [supervisory officer.] Commission.

REPORTS [BY POLITICAL COMMITTEES AND CANDIDATES]

SEC. 304. (a) (1) Each treasurer of a political committee supporting a candidate or candidates [for election] for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office, and each candidate [for election] for nomination for election, or for election, to such office, shall file with the [appropriate supervisory officer] Commission reports of receipts and expenditures on forms to be prescribed or approved by [him.] it. [Such reports shall be filed on the tenth day of March, June, and September, in each year, and on the fifteenth and fifth days next preceding the date on which an election is held, and also by the thirty-first day of January.] Such reports shall be filed on the tenth day of April, July, and October of each year, on the tenth day preceding an election, and on the last day of January of each year. Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, the reports required by that sentence to be filed during April, July, and October by or relating to a candidate during a year in which no Federal election is held in which he is a candidate, may be filed on the twentieth day of each month. Such reports shall be complete as of such date as the [supervisory officer] Commission may prescribe, which shall not be less than five days before the date of filing[, except that any contribution of $5,000 or more received after the last report is filed prior to the election shall be reported within forty-eight hours after its receipt.] If the person making any anonymous contribution is subsequently identified, the identification of the contributor shall be reported to the Commission within the reporting period within which he is identified.

(2) Upon a request made by a Presidential candidate or a political committee which operates in more than one State, or upon its own motion, the Commission may waive the reporting dates (other than January 31) set forth in paragraph (1), and require instead that such candidates or political committees file reports not less frequently than monthly. The Commission may not require a Presidential candidate or a political committee operating in more than one State to file more than eleven reports (not counting any report to be filed on January 31) during any calendar year. If the Commission acts on its own motion under this paragraph with respect to a candidate or a political committee, that candidate or committee may obtain judicial review in accordance with the provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code.

(b) Each report under this section shall disclose—

(1) the amount of cash on hand at the beginning of the reporting period;

(2) the full name and mailing address (occupation and the principal place of business, if any) of each person who has made

one or more contributions to or for such committee or candidate (including the purchase of tickets for events such as dinners, luncheons, rallies, and similar fundraising events) within the calendar year in an aggregate amount or value in excess of $100, together with the amount and date of such contributions;

(3) the total sum of individual contributions made to or for such committee or candidate during the reporting period and not reported under paragraph (2);

(4) the name and address of each political committee or candidate from which the reporting committee or the candidate received, or to which that committee or candidate made, any transfer of funds, together with the amounts and dates of all transfers;

(5) each loan to or from any person within the calendar year in an aggregate amount or value in excess of $100, together with the full names and mailing addresses (occupations and the principal place of business, if any) of the [lender and endorsers,] lender, endorsers, and guarantors, if any, and the date and amount of such loans;

(6) the total amount of proceeds from (A) the sale of tickets to each dinner, luncheon, rally, and other fundraising event; (B) mass collections made at such events; and (C) sales of items such as political campaign pins, buttons, badges, flags, emblems, hats, banners, literature, and similar materials;

(7) each contribution, rebate, refund, or other receipt in excess of $100 not otherwise listed under paragraphs (2) through (6);

(8) the total sum of all receipts by or for such committee or candidate during the reporting period;

(9) the [full name and mailing address (occupation and the principal place of business, if any)] identification of each person to whom expenditures have been made by such committee or on behalf of such committee or candidate within the calendar year in an aggregate amount or value in excess of $100, the amount, date, and purpose of each such expenditure and the name and address of, and office sought by, each candidate on whose behalf such expenditure was made;

(10) the [full name and mailing address (occupation and the principal place of business, if any)] identification of each person to whom an expenditure for personal services, salaries, and reimbursed expenses in excess of $100 has been made, and which is not otherwise reported, including the amount, date, and purpose of such expenditure;

(11) the total sum of expenditures made by such committee or candidate during the calendar year;

(12) the amount and nature of debts and obligations owed by or to the committee, in such form as the [supervisory officer] Commission may prescribe and a continuous reporting of their debts and obligations after the election at such periods as the [supervisory officer] Commission may require until such debts and obligations are extinguished, together with a statement as to the circumstances and conditions under which any such debt or obligation is extinguished and the consideration therefor; [and]

(13) such information as the Commission may require for the disclosure of the nature, amount, source, and designated recipient of any ear-marked, encumbered, or restricted contribution or other special fund; and

(c) [The reports required to be filed by subsection (a) shall be cumulative during the calendar year to which they relate, but where there has been no change in an item reported in a previous report during such year, only the amount need be carried forward.] The reports required to be filed by subsection (a) shall be cumulative during the calendar year to which they relate, and during such additional periods of time as the Commission may require. If no contributions or expenditures have been accepted or expended during a calendar year, the treasurer of the political committee or candidate shall file a statement to that effect.

(d) This section does not require a Member of Congress to report, as contributions received or as expenditures made, the value of photographic, matting, or recording services furnished to him before the first day of January of the year preceding the year in which his term of office expires if those services were furnished to him by the Senate Recording Studio, the House Recording Studio, or by any individual whose pay is disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of Representatives and who furnishes such services as his primary duty as an employee of the Senate or House of Representatives, or if such services were paid for by the Republican or Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, the Democratic National Congressional Committee, or the National Republican Congressional Committee.

(e) Every person (other than a political committee or candidate) who makes contributions or expenditures, other than by contribution to a political committee or candidate, in an aggregate amount in excess of $100 within a calendar year shall file with the Commission a statement containing the information required by this section. Statements required by this subsection shall be filed on the dates on which reports by political committees are filed, but need not be cumulative.

[REPORTS BY OTHER THAN POLITICAL COMMITTEES

[SEC. 305. Every person (other than a political committee or candidate) who makes contributions or expenditures, other than by contribution to a political committee or candidate, in an aggregate amount in excess of $100 within a calendar year shall file with the supervisory officer a statement containing the information required by section 304. Statements required by this section shall be filed on the dates on which reports by political committees are filed, but need not be cumulative.]

REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO CAMPAIGN ADVERTISING

SEC. 305. (a) No person shall cause any political advertisement to be published unless he furnishes to the publisher of the advertisement his identification in writing, together with the identification of any person authorizing him to cause such publication.

(b) Any published political advertisement shall contain a statement, in such form as the Commision may prescribe, of the identification of the person authorizing the publication of that advertisement.

(c) Any publisher who publishes any political advertisement shall maintain such records as the Commission may prescribe for a period of two years after the date of publication setting forth such advertisement and any material relating to identification furnished to him in connection therewith, and shall permit the public to inspect and copy those records at reasonable hours.

(d) To the extent that any person sells space in any newspaper or magazine to a candidate for Federal office, or nomination thereto, in connection with such candidate's campaign for nomination for, or election to, such office, the charges made for the use of such space in connection with his campaign shall not exceed the charges made for comparable use of such space for other purposes.

(e) Any political committee shall include on the face or front page of all literature and advertisements soliciting contributions the following notice:

"A copy of our report filed with the Federal Election Commission is available for purchase from the Federal Election Commission, Washington, D.C."

(f) As used in this section, the term—

(2) "published" means publication in a newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication, distribution of printed leaflets, pamphlets, or other documents, or display through the use of any outdoor advertising facility, and such other use of printed media as the Commission shall prescribe.

FORMAL REQUIREMENTS RESPECTING REPORTS AND STATEMENTS

SEC. 306. (a) A report or statement required by this title to be filed by a treasurer of a political committee, a candidate, or by any other person, shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the person filing such report or statement, taken before any officer authorized to administer oaths.

(b) A copy of a report or statement shall be preserved by the person filing it for a period of time to be designated by the [supervisory officer] Commission in a published regulation.

[(c) The supervisory officer may, by published regulation of general applicability, relieve any category of political committees of the obligation to comply with section 304 if such committee (1) primarily supports persons seeking State or local office, and does not substantially support candidates, and (2) does not operate in more than one State or on a statewide basis.]

(c) The Commission may, by published regulation of general applicability, relieve—

(1) any category of candidates of the obligation to comply personally with the requirements of section 304, if it determines that such action will not have any adverse effect on the purposes of this title, and

(2) any category of political committees of the obligation to comply with such if such committees—

(A) primarily support persons seeking State or local office, and

(B) do not operate in more than one State or do not operate on a statewide basis.

(d) The [supervisory officer] Commission shall, by published regulations of General applicability, prescribe the manner in which contributions and expenditures in the nature of debts and other contracts, agreements, and promises to make contributions or expenditures shall be reported. Such regulations shall provide that they be reported in separate schedules. In determining aggregate amounts of contributions and expenditures, amounts reported as provided in such regulations shall not be considered until actual payment is made.

REPORTS ON CONVENTION FINANCING

SEC. 307. Each committee or other organization which—

(1) represents a State, or a political subdivision thereof, or any group of persons, in dealing with officials of a national political party with respect to matters involving a convention held in such State or political subdivision to nominate a candidate for the office of President or Vice President, or shall, within sixty days following the end of the convention (but not later than twenty days prior to the date on which presidential and vice-presidential electors are chosen), file with the [Comptroller General of the United States] Federal Election Commission a full and complete financial statement, in such form and detail as [he] it may prescribe, of the sources from which it derived its funds, and the purposes for which such funds were expended.

FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION

SEC. 308. (a)(1) There is hereby established, as an independent establishment of the executive branch of the Government of the United States, a commission to be known as the Federal Election Commission.

(2) The Commission shall be composed of the Comptroller General, who shall serve without the right to vote, and seven members who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Of the seven members of the Commission—

(A) two shall be chosen from among individuals recommended by the President pro tempore of the Senate, upon the recommendations of the majority leader of the Senate and the minority leader of the Senate; and

(B) two shall be chosen from among individuals recommended by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, upon the recommendations of the majority leader of the House and the minority leader of the House.

The two members appointed under subparagraph (A) shall not be affiliated with the same political party; nor shall the two members appointed under subparagraph (B). Of the members not appointed under such subparagraphs, not more than two shall be affiliated with the same political party.

(3) Members of the Commission, other than the Comptroller General, shall serve for terms of seven years, except that, of the members first appointed—

(A) one of the members not appointed under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for a term ending on the April thirtieth first occurirng more than six months after the date on which he is appointed;

(B) one of the members appointed under paragraph (3) (A) shall be appointed for a term ending one year after the April thirtieth on which the term of the member referred to in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph ends;

(C) one of the members appointed under paragraph (3) (B) shall be appointed for a term ending two years thereafter;

(D) one of the members not appointed under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for a term ending three years thereafter;

(E) one of the members appointed under paragraph (3) (A) shall be appointed for a term ending four years thereafter;

(F) one of the members appointed under paragraph (3) (B) shall be appointed for a term ending five years thereafter; and

(G) one of the members not appointed under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for a term ending six years thereafter.

(4) Members shall be chosen on the basis of their maturity, experience, integrity, impartiality, and good judgment. A member may be reappointed to the Commission only once.

(5) An individual appointed to fill a vacanvy occurring other than by the expiration of a term of office shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member he succeeds. Any vacancy occurring in the office of member of the Commission shall be filled in the manner in which that office was originally filled.

(6) The Commission shall elect a Chairman and a Vice Chairman from among its members for a term of two years. The Chairman and the Vice Chairman shall not be affiliated with the same political party. The Vice Chairman shall act as Chairman in the absence or disability of the Chairman, or in the event of a vacancy in that office.

(b) A vacancy in the Commission shall not impair the right of the remaining members to exercise all the powers of the Commission and four members thereof shall constitute a quorum.

(c) The Commission shall have an official seal which shall be judicially noticed.

(d) The Commission shall at the close of each fiscal year report to the Congress and to the President concerning the action it has taken; the names, salaries, and duties of all individuals in its employ and the money it has disbursed; and shall make such further reports on the matters within its jurisdiction and such recommendations for further legislation as may appear desirable.

(e) The principal office of the Commission shall be in or near the District of Columbia, but it may meet or exercise any or all its powers in any State.

(f) The Commission shall appoint a General Counsel and an Executive Director to serve at the pleasure of the Commission. The General Counsel shall be the chief legal officer of the Commission. The Executive Director shall be responsible for the administrative operations of the Commission and shall perform such other duties as may be delegated or assigned to him from time to time by regulations or orders of the Commission. However, the Commission shall not delegate the making of regulations regarding elections to the Executive Director.

(g) The Chairman of the Commission shall appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel as may be necessary to fulfill the duties of the Commission in accordance with the provisions of title 5, United States Code.

(h) The Commission may obtain the services of experts and consultants in accordance with section 3109 of title 5, United States Code.

(i) In carrying out its responsibilities under this title, the Commission shall, to the fullest extent practicable, avail itself of the assistance, including personnel and facilities, of the General Accounting Office and the Department of Justice. The Comptroller General and the Attorney General are authorized to make available to the Commission such personnel, facilities, and other assistance, with or without reimbursement, as the Commission may request.

(j) The provisions of section 7324 of title 5, United States Code, shall apply to members of the Commission notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (d) (3) of such section.

(k) (1) Whenever the Commission submits any budget estimate or request to the President or the Office of Management and Budget, it shall concurrently transmit a copy of that estimate or request to the Congress.

(2) Whenever the Commission submits any legislative recommendations, or testimony, or comments on legislation requested by the Congress or by any Member of Congress to the President or the Office of Management and Budget, it shall concurrently transmit a copy thereof to the Congress or to the member requesting the same. No officer or agency of the United States shall have any authority to require the Commission to submit its legislative recommendations, or testimony, or comments on legislation, to any office or agency of the United States for approval, comments, or review, prior to the submission of such recommendations, testimony, or comments to the Congress.

POWERS OF THE COMMISSION

SEC. 309. (a) The Commission shall have the power—

(1) to require, by special or general orders, any person to submit in writing such reports and answers to questions as the Commission may prescribe; and such submissions shall be made within such reasonable period and under oath or otherwise as the Commission may determine;

(2) to administer oaths;

(3) to require by subpena, signed by the Chairman or the Vice Chairman, the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all documentary evidence relating to the execution of its duties;

(4) in any proceeding or investigation to order testimony to be taken by deposition before any person who is designated by the Commission and has the power to administer oaths and, in such instances, to compel testimony and the production of evidence in the same manner as authorized under paragraph (3) of this subsection;

(5) to pay witnesses the same fees and mileage as are paid in like circumstances in the courts of the United States;

(6) to initiate (through civil proceedings for injunctive relief and through presentations to Federal grand juries), prosecute, defend, or appeal any civil or criminal action in the name of the Commission for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this title and of sections 602, 608, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, and 617 of title 18, United States Code, through its General Counsel;

(7) to delegate any of its functions or powers, other than the power to issue subpenas under paragraph (3), to any officer or employee of the Commission; and

(8) to make, amend, and repeal such rules, pursuant to the provisions of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code, as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

(b) Any United States district court within the jurisdiction of which any inquiry is carried on, may, upon petition by the Commission, in case of refusal to obey a subpena or order of the Commission issued under section (a) of this section, issue an order requiring compliance therewith. Any failure to obey the order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof.

(c) No person shall be subject to civil liability to any person (other than the Commission or the United States) for disclosing information at the request of the Commission.

(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commission shall be the primary civil and criminal enforcement agency for violations of the provisions of this title, and of sections 602, 608, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, and 617 of title 18, United States Code. Any violation of any such provision shall be prosecuted by the Attorney General or Department of Justice personnel only after consultation with, and with the consent of, the Commission.

(e) (1) Any person who violates any provision of this Act, or of sections 602, 608, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, or 617 of title 18, United States Code, may be assessed a civil penalty by the Commission under paragraph (2) of this subsection of not more than $10,000 for each such violation. Each occurrence of a violation of this title and each day of noncompliance with a disclosure requirement of this title or an order of the Commission issued under this section shall constitute a separate offense. In determining the amount of the penalty the Commission shall consider the person's history of previous violations, the appropriateness of such penalty to the financial resources of the person charged, the gravity of the violation, and the demonstrated good faith of the person charged in attempting to achieve rapid compliance after notification of a violation.

(2) A civil penalty shall be assessed by the Commission by order only after the person charged with a violation has been given an opportunity for a hearing and the Commission has determined, by decision incorporating its findings of fact therein, that a violation did occur, and the amount of the penalty. Any hearing under this section shall be of record and shall be held in accordance with section 554 of title 5, United States Code.

(3) If the person against whom a civil penalty is assessed fails to pay the penalty, the Commission shall file a petition for enforcement of its order assessing the penalty in any appropriate district court of the United States. The petition shall designate the person against whom the order is sought to be enforced as the respondent. A copy of the petition shall forthwith be sent by registered or certified mail to the respondent and his attorney of record, and thereupon the Commission shall certify and file in such court the record upon which such order sought to be forced was issued. The court shall have jurisdiction to enter a judgment enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside in whole or in part the order and decision of the Commission or it may remand the proceedings to the Commission for such further action as it may direct. The court may determine de novo all issues of law but the Commission's findings of fact, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive.

CENTRAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEES

SEC. 310. (a) Each candidate shall designate one political committee as his central campaign committee. A candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to the office of President, may also designate one political committee in each State in which he is a candidate as his State campaign committee for that State. The designation shall be made in writing, and a copy of the designation, together with such information as the Commission may require, shall be furnished to the Commission upon the designation of any such committee.

(b) No political committee may be designated as the central campaign committee of more than one candidate. The central campaign committee, and each State campaign committee, designated by a candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of President shall be the central campaign committee and the State campaign committee of the candidate nominated by that party for election to the office of Vice President.

(c) (1) Any political committee authorized by a candidate to accept contributions or make expenditures in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or for election, which is not a central campaign committee or a State campaign committee, shall furnish each report required of it under section 304 (other than reports required under the last sentence of section 304(a) and 311(b) to that candidate's central campaign committee at the time it would, but for this subsection, be required to furnish that report to the Commission. Any report properly furnished to a central campaign committee under this subsection shall be, for purposes of this title, held and considered to have been furnished to the Commission at the time at which it was furnished to such central campaign committee.

(2) The Commission may, by regulation, require any political committee receiving contributions or making expenditures in a State on behalf of a candidate who, under subsection (a), has designated a State campaign committee for that State to furnish its reports to that State campaign committee instead of furnishing reports to the central campaign committee of that candidate.

(3) The Commission may require any political committee to furnish any report directly to the Commission.

(d) Each political committee which is a central campaign committee or a State campaign committee shall receive all reports filed with or furnished to it by other political committees, and consolidate and furnish the reports to the Commission, together with its own reports, in accordance with the provisions of this title and regulations prescribed by the Commission.

CAMPAIGN DEPOSITORIES

SEC. 311. (a) (1) Each candidate shall designate one or more National or State banks as his campaign depositories. The central campaign committee of that candidate, and any other political committee authorized by him to receive contributions or to make expenditures on his behalf, shall maintain a checking account at a depository so designated by the candidate and shall deposit any contributions received by that committee into that account. A candidate shall deposit any payment received by him under section 506 of this Act in the account maintained by his central campaign committee. No expenditure may be made by any such committee on behalf of a candidate or to influence his election except by check drawn on that account, other than petty cash expenditures as provided in subsection (b).

(b) A political committee may maintain a petty cash fund out of which it may make expenditures not in excess of $100 to any person in connection with a single purchase or transaction. A record of petty cash disbursements shall be kept in accordance with requirements established by the Commission, and such statements and reports thereof shall be furnished to the Commission as it may require.

DUTIES OF THE [SUPERVISORY OFFICER] COMMISSION

SEC. [308.] 312. (a) It shall be the duty of the [supervisory officer] Commission—

(1) to develop and furnish to the person required by the provisions of this Act prescribed forms for the making of the reports and statements required to be filed with [him] it under this title;

(2) to prepare, publish, and furnish to the person required to file such reports and statements a manual setting forth recommended uniform methods of bookkeeping and reporting;

(3) to develop a filing, coding, and cross-indexing system consonant with the purposes of this title;

(4) to make the reports and statements filed with [him] it available for public inspection and copying, commencing as soon as practicable but not later than the end of the second day following the day during which it was received, and to permit copying of any such report or statement by hand or by duplicating machine, as requested by any person, at the expense of such person: Provided, That any information copied from such reports and statements shall not be sold or utilized by any person for the purpose of soliciting contributions or for any commercial purpose;

(5) to preserve such reports and statements for a period of ten years from the date of receipt, except that reports and statements relating solely to candidates for the House of Representatives shall be preserved for only five years from the date of receipt;

[(6) to compile and maintain a current list of all statements or parts of statements pertaining to each candidate;]

(6) to compile and maintain a cumulative index listing all statements and reports filed with the Commission during each calendar year by political committees and candidates, which the Commission shall cause to be published in the Federal Register no less frequently than monthly during even-numbered years and quarterly in odd-numbered years and which shall be in such form and shall include such information as may be prescribed by the Commission to permit easy identification of each statement, report, candidate, and committee listed, at least as to their names, the dates of the statements and reports, and the number of pages in each, and the Commission shall make copies of statements and reports listed in the index available for sale, direct or by mail, at a price determined by the Commission to be reasonable to the purchaser;

(7) to prepare and publish an annual report including compilations of (A) total reported contributions and expenditures for all candidates, political committees, and other persons during the year; (B) total amounts expended according to such categories as [he] it shall determine and broken down into candidate, party, and nonparty expenditures on the national, State, and local levels; (C) total amounts expended for influencing nominations and elections stated separately; (D) total amounts contributed according to such categories of amounts as [he] it shall determine and broken down into contributions on the national, State, and local level for candidates and political committees; and (E) aggregate amounts contributed by any contributor shown to have contributed in excess of $100;

(8) to prepare and publish from time to time special reports comparing the various totals and categories of contributions and expenditures made with respect to preceding elections;

(9) to prepare and publish such other reports as [he] it may deem appropriate;

(10) to assure wide dissemination of statistics, summaries, and reports prepared under this title;

(11) to make from time to time audits and field investigations with respect to reports and statements filed under the provisions of this title, and with respect to alleged failures to file any report or statement required under the provisions of this title;

(12) to report apparent violations of law to the appropriate law enforcement authorities; and

(13) to prescribe suitable rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this title.

(b) The [supervisory officer] Commission shall encourage, and cooperate with, the election officials in the several States to develop procedures which will eliminate the necessity of multiple filings by permitting the filing of copies of Federal reports to satisfy the State requirements.

(c) It shall be the duty of the [Comptroller General] Commision to serve as a national clearinghouse for information in respect to the administration of elections. In carrying out [his] its duties under this subsection, the [Comptroller General] Commission shall enter into contracts for the purpose of conducting independent studies of the administration of elections. Such studies shall include, but shall not be limited to, studies of—

(1) the method of selection of, and the type of duties assigned to, officials and personnel working on boards of elections;

(2) practices relating to the registration of voters; and

(3) voting and counting methods.

Studies made under this subsection shall be published by the [Comptroller General] Commission and copies thereof shall be made available to the general public upon the payment of the cost thereof. [Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to authorize the Comptroller General to require inclusion of any comment or recommendation of the Comptroller General in any such study.]

(d)(1) Any person who believes a violation of this title has occurred may file a complaint with the [supervisory officer] Commission. If the [supervisory officer] Commission determines there is substantial reason to believe such a violation has occurred [he] it shall expeditiously make an investigation, which shall also include an investigation of reports and statements filed by the complainant if he is a candidate, of the matter complained of. Whenever in the judgment of the [supervisory officer] Commission, after affording due notice and an opportunity for a hearing, any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of this title or any regulation or order issued thereunder, [the Attorney General on behalf of the United States] the Commission shall institute a civil action for relief, including a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or any other appropriate order in the district court of the United States for the district in which the person is found, resides, or transacts business. Upon a proper showing that such person has engaged or is about to engage in such acts or practices, a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond by such court.

(2) In any action brought under paragraph (1) of this subsection, subpenas for witnesses who are required to attend a United States district court may run into any other district.

(3) Any party aggrieved by an order granted under paragraph (1) of this subsection may, at any time within sixty days after the date of entry thereof, file a petition with the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which such person is found, resides, or transacts business, for judicial review of such order.

(4) The judgment of the court of appeals affirming or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the district court shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

(5) Any action brought under this subsection shall be advanced on the docket of the court in which filed, and put ahead of all other actions (other than other actions brought under this subsection).

JUDICIAL REVIEW

SEC. 313. (a) Any agency action by the Commissioner made under the provisions of this Act shall be subject to review by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit upon petition filed in such court by any interested person. Any petition filed pursuant to this section shall be filed within thirty days after the agency action by the Commission for which review is sought.

(b) The Commission, the national committee of any political party, and individuals eligible to vote in an election for Federal office, are authorized to institute such actions, including actions for declaratory judgment or injunctive relief, as may be appropriate to implement any provision of this Act.

(c) The provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, apply to judicial review of any agency action, as defined in section 551 of title 5, United States Code, by the Commission.

STATEMENTS FILED WITH STATE OFFICERS

SEC. [309.] 314. (a) A copy of each statement required to be filed with [a supervisory officer] the Commission by this title shall be filed with the Secretary of State (or, if there is no office of Secretary of State, the equivalent State officer) of the appropriate State. For purposes of this subsection, the term "appropriate State" means—

(1) for reports relating to expenditures and contributions in connection with the campaign for nomination for election, or election, of a candidate to the office of President or Vice President of the United States, each State [in which an expenditure is made by him or on his behalf,] in which he is a candidate or in which substantial expenditures are made by him or on his behalf; and

(2) for reports relating to expenditures and contributions in connection with the campaign for nomination for election, or election, of a candidate to the office of Senator or Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress of the United States, the State in which he seeks election.

(b) It shall be the duty of the Secretary of State, or the equivalent State officer, under subsection (a)—

(1) to receive and maintain in an orderly manner all reports and statements required by this title to be filed with him;

(2) to preserve such reports and statements for a period of ten years from date of receipt, except that reports and statements relating solely to candidates for the House of Representatives shall be preserved for only five years from the date of receipt;

(3) to make the reports and statements filed with him available for public inspection and copying during regular office hours, commencing as soon as practicable but not later than the end of the day during which it was received, and to permit copying of any such report or statement by hand or by duplicating machine, requested by any person, at the expense of such person; and

(4) to compile and maintain a current list of all statements or parts of statements pertaining to each candidate.

(c) There is authorized to be appropriated to the Commission in each fiscal year the sum of $500,000, to be made available in such amounts as the Commission deems appropriate to the States for the purpose of assisting them in complying with their duties as set forth in this section.

PROHIBITION OF CONTRIBUTIONS IN NAME OF ANOTHER

SEC. [310.] 315. No person shall make a contribution in the name of another person or knowingly permit his name to be used to effect such a contribution, and no person shall knowingly accept a contribution made by one person in the name of another person.

[PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS

[SEC. 311. (a) Any person who violates any of the provisions of this title shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

[(b) In case of any conviction under this title, where the punishment inflicted does not include imprisonment, such conviction shall be deemed a misdemeanor conviction only.]

APPROVAL OF PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES BY NATIONAL COMMITTEE

SEC. 316. (a) No expenditure in excess of $1,000 shall be made by or on behalf of any candidate who has received the nomination of his political party for President or Vice President unless such expenditure has been specifically approved by the chairman or treasurer of that political party's national committee or the designated representative of that national committee in the State where the funds are to be expended.

(b) Each national committee approving expenditures under subsection (a) shall register under section 303 as a political committee and report each expenditure it approves as if it had made that expenditure, together with the identification of the person seeking approval and making the expenditure.

(c) No political party shall have more than one national committee

USE OF CONTRIBUTED AMOUNTS FOR CERTAIN PURPOSES

SEC. 317. Amounts received by a candidate as contributions that are in excess of any amount necessary to defray his campaign expenses (after the application of section 507(b)(1) of this Act), and any other amounts contributed to an individual for the purpose of supporting his activities as a holder of Federal office, may be used by that candidate or individual, as the case may be, to defray any ordinary and necessary expenses incurred by him in connection with his duties as a holder of Federal office, or may be contributed by him to any organization described in section 170(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. To the extent any such contribution, amount contributed, or expenditure thereof is not otherwise required to be disclosed under the provisions of this title, such contribution, amount contributed, or expenditure shall be fully disclosed in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Commission. The Commission is authorized to promulgate such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 318. There are authorized to be appropriated to the Commission, for the purpose of carrying out its functions under this title, title V, and under chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, not to exceed $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1974, and not to exceed $5,000,000 for each fiscal year thereafter.

PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS

SEC. 319. (a) Violation of any provision of this title is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of not more than $10,000, imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

(b) Violation of any provision of this title with knowledge or reason to know that the action committed or omitted is a violation of this title is punishable by a fine of not more than $100,000, imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

TITLE IV—GENERAL PROVISIONS

* * * * * * *

[EFFECT ON STATE LAW

[SEC. 403. (a) Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to invalidate or make inapplicable any provision of any State law, except where compliance with such provision of law would result in a violation of a provision of this Act.

[(b) Notwithstanding subsection (a), no provision of State law shall be construed to prohibit any person from taking any action authorized by this Act or from making any expenditure (as such term is defined in section 301(f) of this Act) which he could lawfully make under this Act.]

EFFECT ON STATE LAW

SEC. 403. The provisions of this Act, and of regulations promulgated under this Act, preempt any provision of State law with respect to campaigns for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office (as such term is defined in section 301(c)).

[(B) $35,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of Senator; or

[(C) $25,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of Representative, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to the Congress.]

(a)(1) No candidate may make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with his campaigns for nominations for election, and for election, to Federal office in excess, in the aggregate of—

(A) $50,000 in the case of a candidate for the office of President or Vice President;

(B) $35,000 in the case of a candidate for the office of Senator; or

(C) $25,000 in the case of a candidate for the office of Representative, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to the Congress.

(2) For purposes of this subsection, "immediate family" means a candidate's spouse, and any child, parent, grandparent, brother, or sister of the candidate, and the spouses of such persons.

(3) No candidate or his immediate family may make loans or advances from their personal funds in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or election, to Federal office unless such loan or advance is evidenced by a written instrument fully disclosing the terms and conditions of such loan or advance.

(4) For purposes of this subsection, any such loan or advance shall be included in computing the total amount of such expenditures only to the extent of the balance of such loan or advance outstanding and unpaid.

(b) No candidate or political committee shall knowingly accept any contribution or authorize any expenditure in violation of the provisions of this section.

(c) Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine not to exceed [$1,000] $25,000, imprisonment for not to exceed [one year] five years, or both.

§ 611. Contributions by Government contractors

Whoever—

(a) entering into any contract with the United States or any department or agency thereof either for the rendition of personal services or furnishing any material, supplies, or equipment to the United States or any department or agency thereof or for selling any land or building to the United States or any department or agency thereof, if payment for the performance of such contract or payment for such material, supplies, equipment, land, or building is to be made in whole or in part from funds appropriated by the Congress, at any time between the commencement of negotiations for and the later of (1) the completion of performance under, or (2) the termination of negotiations for, such contract or furnishing of material, supplies, equipment, land or buildings, directly or indirectly makes any contribution of money or other thing of value, or promises expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, to any political party, committee, or candidate for public office or to any person for any political purpose or use; or shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

(b) knowingly solicits any such contribution from any such person for any such purpose during any such period;

It shall not constitute a violation of the provisions of this section for a corporation or a labor organization to establish, administer, or solicit contributions to a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes by that corporation or labor organization if the establishment and administration of, and solicitation of contributions to, such fund do not constitute a violation of section 610.

* * * * * * *

§ 614. Limitation on expenditures generally

(a) (1) No candidate may make expenditures in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office in excess of the amount to which he would be limited under section 504 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 if he were receiving payments under title V of that Act.

(2) Expenditures made on behalf of any candidate are, for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by such candidate.

(3) Expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate for the office of Vice President of the United States are for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by the candidate for the office of President of the United States with whom he is running.

(4) For purposes of this subsection, an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a Vice Presidential candidate, if it is made by—

(A) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for the purposes of making any expenditure, or

(B) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, or an agent of the candidate to make the expenditure.

(5) The Federal Election Commission shall prescribe regulations under which any expenditure by a candidate for Presidential nomination for use in two or more States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

(b) The national committee of a political party may not make any expenditure during any calendar year in connection with the general election campaign of any candidate for Federal office who is affiliated with that party which, when added to the sum of all other expenditures made by that national committee during that year in connection with the general election campaigns of all candidates affiliated with that party, exceeds an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States. The State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committees of the State committee, may not make any expenditure during the calendar year in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate for Federal office in such State who is affiliated with that party which, when added to all other expenditures made by that State committee during that year in connection with the general election campaigns of candidates affiliated with that party, exceeds an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of that State. For purposes of this subsection—

(1) the term "voting age population" means voting age population certified for the year under section 504(g) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971; and

(2) the approval by the national committee of a political party of an expenditure by or on behalf of the presidential candidate of that party as required by section 316 of that Act is not considered an expenditure by that national committee.

(c)(1) No person may make any expenditure (other than an expenditure made on behalf of a candidate under the provisions of subsection (a)(4)) advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate during a calendar year which, when added to all other expenditures made by that person during the year advocating the election or defeat of that candidate, exceeds $1,000.

(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)—

(A) "clearly identified" means—

(i) the candidate's name appears;

(ii) a photograph or drawing of the candidate appears; or

(iii) the identity of the candidate is apparent by unambiguous reference;

(B) "person" does not include the National or State committee of a political party; and

(D) Any person who knowingly or willfully violates the provisions of this section, other than subsection (a)(5), shall be punishable by a fine of $25,000, imprisonment for a period of not more than five years, or both. If any candidate is convicted of violating the provisions of this section because of any expenditure made on his behalf (as determined under subsection (a)(4)) by a political committee, the treasurer of that committee, or any other person authorizing such expenditure, shall be punishable by a fine of not to exceed $25,000, imprisonment for not to exceed five years, or both, if such person knew, or had reason to know, that such expenditure was in excess of the limitation applicable to such candidate under this section.

§ 615. Limitations on contributions

(a) No person may make a contribution to, or for the benefit of, a candidate for that candidate's campaign for nomination for election, or election, which, when added to the sum of all other contributions made by that person for that campaign, exceeds $3,000.

(b)(1) No candidate may knowingly accept a contribution for his campaign from any person which, when added to the sum of all other contributions received from that person for that campaign, exceeds $3,000.

(c)(1) For purposes of the limitations contained in this section all contributions made by any person directly or indirectly to or for the benefit of a particular candidate, including contributions which are in any way earmarked, encumbered, or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to that candidate, shall be treated as contributions from that person to that candidate.

(2) Contributions made to, or for the benefit of, a candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President shall be considered, for purposes of this section, to be made to, or for the benefit of, a candidate nominated by that party for election to the office of President.

(3) The limitations imposed by subsections (a) and (b) shall apply separately to each primary, primary runoff, general, and special election in which a candidate participates.

(d)(1) No individual may make a contribution during any calendar year which, when added to the sum of all other contributions made by that individual during that year, exceeds $25,000.

(2) Any contribution made for a campaign in a year, other than the calendar year in which the election is held to which that campaign relates, is, for purposes of this section, considered to be made during that calendar year in which that election is held.

(e) Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine of not to exceed $25,000, imprisonment for not to exceed five years, or both.

§ 616. Form of contributions

"No person may make a contribution to, or for the benefit of, any candidate or political committee in excess, in the aggregate during any calendar year, of $100 unless such contributions is made by a written instrument identifying the person making the contribution. Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine of not to exceed $1,000, imprisonment for not to exceed one year, or both.

§ 617. Embezzlement or conversion of political contributions

(b) Violation of the provisions of the section is punishable by a fine of not more than $25,000, imprisonment for not more than ten years, or both; but if the value of such property does not exceed the sum of $100, the fine shall not exceed $1,000 and the imprisonment shall not exceed one year. Notwithstanding the provisions of this section, any surplus or unexpended campaign funds may be contributed to a national or State political party for political purposes, or to educational or charitable organizations, or may be preserved for use in future campaigns for elective office, or for any other lawful purpose.

* * * * * * *

[Part VIII—Designation of Income Tax Payments to Presidential Election Campaign Fund]

Sec. 6096. Designation by individuals

[(a) In General.—Every individual (other than a nonresident alien) whose income tax liability for the taxable year is $1 or more may designate that $1 shall be paid over to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund in accordance with the provisions of section 9006(a). In the case of a joint return of husband and wife having an income tax liability of $2 or more, each spouse may designate that $1 shall be paid to the fund.]

(a) IN GENERAL.—Every individual whose income tax liability for the taxable year is $2 or more is considered to have designated that $2 shall be paid over to the Federal Election Campaign Fund established under section 506 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 unless he elects not to make that designation. In the case of a joint return of a husband and wife having an income tax liability of $4 or more, each spouse shall be considered to have designated that $2 shall be paid over to such fund unless he elects not to make such designation.

(b) Income Tax Liability.—For purposes of subsection (a), the income tax liability of any individual for any taxable year is the amount of the tax imposed by chapter 1 on such individual for such taxable year (as shown on his return), reduced by the sum of the credits (as shown in his return) allowable under sections 33, 37, 38, 40, and 41.

(c) Manner and Time of [Designation.—A designation] Election.—An election under subsection (a) may be made with respect to any taxable year—

(1) at the time of filing the return of the tax imposed by chapter 1 for such taxable year, or

(2) at any other time (after the time of filing the return of the tax imposed by chapter 1 for such taxable year) specified in regulations prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate.

Such [designation] election shall be made in such manner as the Secretary or his delegate prescribes by regulations except that, if such [designation] election is made at the time of filing the return of the tax imposed by chapter 1 for such taxable year, such [designation] election shall be made either on the first page of the return or on the page bearing the taxpayer's signature.

[SUBTITLE H—FINANCING OF A PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION [CAMPAIGNS

[CHAPTER 95—PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN FUND

[Sec. 9001. Short title.

[This chapter may be cited as the "Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act".

[Sec. 9002. Definitions.

[(1) The term "authorized committee" means, with respect to the candidates of a political party for President and Vice President of the United States, any political committee which is authorized in writing by such candidates to incur expenses to further the election of such candidates. Such authorization shall be addressed to the chairman of such political committee, and a copy of such authorization shall be filed by such candidates with the Comptroller General. Any withdrawal of any authorization shall also be in writing and shall be addressed and filed in the same manner as the authorization.

[(2) The term "candidate" means, with respect to any presidential election, an individual who (A) has been nominated for election to the office of President of the United States or the office of Vice President of the United States by a major party, or (B) has qualified to have his name on the election ballot (or to have the names of electors pledged to him on the election ballot) as the candidate of a political party for election to either such office in 10 or more States. For purposes of paragraphs (6) and (7) of this section and purposes of section 9004(a)(2), the term "candidate" means, with respect to any preceding presidential election, an individual who received popular votes for the office of President in such election.

[(3) The term "Comptroller General" means the Comptroller General of the United States.

[(4) The term "eligible candidates" means the candidates of a political party for President and Vice President of the United States who have met all applicable conditions for eligibility to receive payments under this chapter set forth in section 9003.

[(5) The term "fund" means the Presidential Election Campaign Fund established by section 9006(a).

[(6) The term "major party" means, with respect to any presidential election, a polictial party whose candidate for the office of President in the preceding presidential election received, as the candidate of such party, 25 percent or more of the total number of popular votes received by all candidates for such office.

[(7) The term "minor party" means, with respect to any presidential election, a political party whose candidate for the office of President in the preceding presidential election received, as the candidate of such party, 5 percent or more but less than 25 percent of the total number of popular votes received by all candidates for such office.

[(8) The term "new party" means, with respect to any presidential election, a political party which is neither a major party nor a minor party.

[(9) The term "political committee" means any committee, association, or organization (whether or not incorporated) which accepts contributions or makes expenditures for the purpose of influencing, or attempting to influence, the nomination or election of one or more individuals to Federal, State, or local elective public office.

[(10) The term "presidential election" means the election of presidential and vice-presidential electors.

[(11) The term "qualified campaign expense" means an expense—

[(A) incurred (i) by the candidate of a political party for the office of President to further his election to such office or to further the election of the candidate of such political party for the office of Vice President, or both (ii) by the candidate of a political party for the office of Vice President to further his election to such office or to further the election of the candidate of such political party for the office of President, or both, or (iii) by an authorized committee of the candidates of a political party for the offices of President and Vice President to further the election of either or both of such candidates to such offices,

[(B) incurred within the expenditure report period (as defined in paragraph (12)), or incurred before the beginning of such period to the extent such expense is for property, services, or facilities used during such period, and [(C) neither the incurring nor payment of which constitutes a violation of any law of the United States or of the State in which such expense is incurred or paid.

[An expense shall be considered as incurred by a candidate or an authorized committee if it is incurred by a person authorized by such candidate or such committee, as the case may be, to incur such expense on behalf of such candidate or such committee. If an authorized committee of the candidates of a political party for President and Vice President of the United States also incurs expenses to further the election of one or more other individuals to Federal, State, or local elective public office, expenses incurred by such committee which are not specifically to further the election of such other individual or individuals shall be considered as incurred to further the election of such candidates for President and Vice President in such proportion as the Comptroller General prescribes by rules or regulations.

[(12) The term "expenditure report period" with respect to any presidential election means—

[(A) in the case of a major party, the period beginning with the first day of September before the election, or, if earlier, with the date on which such major party at its national convention nominated its candidate for election to the office of President of the United States, and ending 30 days after the date of the presidential election; and

[(B) in the case of a party which is not a major party, the same period as the expenditure report period of the major party which has the shortest expediture report period for such presidential election under subpargarph (A).]

[Sec. 9003. Condition for eligibility for payments.

[(a) IN GENERAL.—In order to be eligible to receive any payments under section 9006, the candidates of a political party in a presidential election shall, in writing—

[(1) agree to obtain and furnish to the Comptroller General such evidence as he may request of the qualified campaign expenses with respect to which payment is sought,

[(2) agree to keep and furnish to the Comptroller General such records, books, and other information as he may request,

[(3) agree to an audit and examination by the Comptroller General under section 9007 and to pay any amounts required to be paid under such section, and

[(4) agree to furnish statements of qualified campaign expenses and proposed qualified campaign expenses required under section 9008.

[(b) Major Parties.—In order to be eligible to receive any payments under section 9006, the candidates of a major party in a presidential election shall certify to the Comptroller General, under penalty of perjury, that—

[(1) such candidates and their authorized committees will not incur qualified campaign expenses in excess of the aggregate payments to which they will be entitled under section 9004, and

[(2) no contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses have been or will be accepted by such candidates or any of their authorized committees except to the extent necessary to make up any deficiency in payments received out of the fund on account of the application of section 9006(d), and no contributions to defray expenses which would be qualified campaign expenses out for subparagraph (C) of section 9002(11) have been or will be accepted by such candidates or any of their authorized committees.

[Such certification shall be made within such time prior to the day of the presidential election as the Comptroller General shall prescribe by rules or regulations.

[(c) Minor and New Parties.—In order to be eligible to receive any payments under section 9006, the candidates of a minor or new party in a presidential election shall certify to the Comptroller General, under penalty of perjury, that—

[(1) such candidates and their authorized committees will not incur qualified campaign expenses in excess of the aggregate payments to which the eligible candidates of a major party are entitled under section 9004, and

[(2) such candidates and their authorized committees will accept and expend or retain contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses only to the extent that the qualified campaign expenses incurred by such candidates and their authorized committees certified to under paragraph (1) exceed the aggregate payments received by such candidates out of the fund pursuant to section 9006.

[Such certification shall be made within such time prior to the day of the presidential election as the Comptroller General shall prescribe by rules or regulations.]

[Sec. 9004. Entitlement of eligible candidates to payments.

[(a) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the provisions of this chapter—

[(1) The eligible candidates of a major party in a presidential election shall be entitled to payments under section 9006 equal in the aggregate to 15 cents multiplied by the total number of residents within the United States who have attained the age of 18, as determined by the Bureau of the Census, as of the first day of June of the year preceding the year of the presidential election.

[(2)(A) The eligible candidates of a minor party in a presidential election shall be entitled to payments under section 9006 equal in the aggregate to an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount computed under paragraph (1) for a major party as the number of popular votes received by the candidate for President of the minor party, as such candidate, in the preceding presidential election bears to the average number of popular votes received by the candidates for President of the major parties in the preceding presidential election.

[(B) If the candidate of one or more political parties (not including a major party) for the office of President was a candidate for such office in the preceding presidential election and received 5 percent or more but less than 25 percent of the total number of popular votes received by all candidates for such office, such candidate and his running mate for the office of Vice President, upon compliance with the provisions of section 9003(a) and (c), shall be treated as eligible candidates entitled to payments under section 9006 in an amount computed as provided in subparagraph (A) by taking into account all the popular votes received by such candidate for the office of President in the preceding presidential election. If eligible candidates of a minor party are entitled to payments under this subparagraph, such entitlement shall be reduced by the amount of the entitlement allowed under subparagraph (A).

[(3) The eligible candidates of a minor party or a new party in a presidential election whose candidate for President in such election receives, as such candidate, 5 percent or more of the total number of popular votes cast for the office of President in such election shall be entitled to payments under section 9006 equal in the aggregate to an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount computed under paragraph (1) for a major party as the number of popular votes received by such candidate in such election bears to the average number of popular votes received in such election by the candidates for President of the major parties. In the case of eligible candidates entitled to payments under paragraph (2), the amount allowable under this paragraph shall be limited to the amount, if any, by which the entitlement under the preceding sentence exceeds the amount of the entitlement under paragraph (2).

[(b) LIMITATIONS.—The aggregate payments to which the eligible candidates of a political party shall be entitled under subsections (a) (2) and (3) with respect to a presidential election shall not exceed an amount equal to the lower of—

[(1) the amount of qualified campaign expenses incurred by such eligible candidates and their authorized committees, reduced by the amount of contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses received and expended or retained by such eligible candidates and such committees, or

[(2) the aggregate payments to which the eligible candidates of a major party are entitled under subsection (a)(1), reduced by the amount of contributions described in paragraph (1) of this subsection.

[(c) RESTRICTIONS.—The eligible candidates of a political party shall be entitled to payments under subsection (a) only—

[(1) to defray qualified campaign expenses incurred by such eligible candidates or their authorized committees, or

[(2) to repay loans the proceeds of which were used to defray such qualified campaign expenses, or otherwise to restore funds (other than contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses received and expended by such candidates or such committees) used to defray such qualified campaign expenses.]

[Sec. 9005. Certification by Comptroller General.

[(a) Initial Certification.—On the basis of the evidence, books, records, and information furnished by the eligible candidates of a political party and prior to examination and audit under section 9007, the Comptroller General shall certify from time to time to the Secretary for payment to such candidates under section 9006 the payments to which such candidates are entitled under section 9004.

[(b) Finality of Certifications and Determinations.—Initial certifications by the Comptroller General under subsection (a), and all determinations made by him under this chapter, shall be final and conclusive, except to the extent that they are subject to examination and audit by the Comptroller General under section 9007 and judicial review under section 9011.]

[Sec. 9006. Payments to eligible candidates.

[(a) Establishment of Campaign Fund.—There is hereby established on the books of the Treasury of the United States a special fund to be known as the "Presidential Election Campaign Fund". The Secretary shall, as provided by appropriation Acts, transfer to the fund an amount not in excess of the sum of the amounts designated (subsequent to the previous Presidential election) to the fund by individuals under section 6096.

[(b) Transfer to the General Fund.—If, after a Presidential election and after all eligible candidates have been paid the amount which they are entitled to receive under this chapter, there are moneys remaining in the fund, the Secretary shall transfer the moneys so remaining to the general fund of the Treasury.

[(c) Payments From the Fund.—Upon receipt of a certification from the Comptroller General under section 9005 for payment to the eligible candidates of a political party, the Secretary shall pay to such candidates out of the fund the amount certified by the Comptroller General. Amounts paid to any such candidates shall be under the control of such candidates.

[(d) Insufficient amounts in Funds.—If at the time of a certification by the Comptroller General under section 9005 for payment to the eligible candidates of a political party, the Secretary or his delegate determines that the moneys in the fund are not, or may not be, sufficient to satisfy the full entitlements of the eligible candidates of all political parties, he shall withhold from such payment such amount as he determines to be necessary to assure that the eligible candidates of each political party will receive their pro rata share of their full entitlement. Amounts withheld by reason of the preceding sentence shall be paid when the Secretary or his delegate determines that there are sufficient moneys in the fund to pay such amounts, or portions thereof, to all eligible candidates from whom amounts have been withheld, but, if there are not sufficient moneys in the fund to satisfy the full entitlement of the eligible candidates of all political parties, the amounts so withheld shall be paid in such manner that the eligible candidates of each political party receive their pro rata share of their full entitlement.]

[Sec. 9007. Examinations and audits; repayments.

[(a) Examinations and Audits.—After each presidential election the Comptroller General shall conduct a thorough examination and audit of the qualified campaign expenses of the candidates of each political party for President and Vice President.

[(b) Repayments.—

[(1) If the Comptroller General determines that any portion of the payments made to the eligible candidates of a political party under section 9006 was in excess of the aggregate payments to which candidates were entitled under section 9004, he shall so notify such candidates, and such candidates shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to such portion.

[(2) If the Comptroller General determines that the eligible candidates of a political party and their authorized committees incurred qualified campaign expenses in excess of the aggregate payments to which the eligible candidates of a major party were entitled under section 9004, he shall notify such candidates of the amount of such excess and such candidates shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to such amount.

[(3) If the Comptroller General determines that the eligible candidates of a major party or any authorized committee of such candidates accepted contributions (other than contributions to make up deficiencies in payments out of the fund on account of the application of section 9006(d)) to defray qualified campaign expenses (other than qualified campaign expenses with respect to which payment is required under paragraph (2)), he shall notify such candidates of the amount of the contributions so accepted, and such candidates shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal such amount.

[(4) If the Comptroller General determines that any amount of any payment made to the eligible candidates of a political party under section 9006 was used for any purpose other than—

[(A) to defray the qualified campaign expenses with respect to which such payment was made, or he shall notify such candidates of the amount so used, and such candidates shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to such amount.

[(5) No payment shall be required from the eligible candidates of a political party under this subsection to the extent that such payment, when added to other payments required from such candidates under this subsection, exceeds the amount of payments received by such candidates under section 9006.

[(c) Notification.—No notification shall be made by the Comptroller General under subsection (b) with respect to a presidential election more than 3 years after the day of such election.

[(d) Deposit or Repayments.—All payments received by the Secretary under subsection (b) shall be deposited by him in the general fund of the Treasury.

[(d) Deposit of Repayments.—All payments received by the Secretary under subsection (b) shall be deposited by him in the general fund of the Treasury.]

[Sec. 9008. Information on proposed expenses.

[(a) Reports by Candidates.—The candidates of a political party for President and Vice President in a presidential election shall, from time to time as the Comptroller General may require, furnish to the Comptroller General a detailed statement, in such form as the Comptroller General may prescribe, of—

[(1) the qualified campaign expenses incurred by them and their authorized committees prior to the date of such statement (whether or not evidence of such expenses has been furnished for purposes of section 9005), and

[(2) the qualified campaign expenses which they and their authorized committees propose to incur on or after the date of such statement.

[The Comptroller General shall require a statement under this subsection from such candidates of each political party at least once each week during the second, third, and fourth weeks preceding the day of the presidential election and at least twice during the week preceding such day.

[(b) PUBLICATION.—The Comptroller General shall, as soon as possible after he receives each statement under subsection (a), prepare and publish a summary of such statement, together with any other data or information which he deems advisable, in the Federal Register. Such summary shall not include any information which identifies any individual who made a designation under section 6096.]

[Sec. 9009. Reports to Congress; regulations.

[(a) REPORTS.—The Comptroller General shall, as soon as practicable after each presidential election, submit a full report to the Senate and House of Representatives setting forth—

[(1) the qualified campaign expenses (shown in such detail as the Comptroller General determines necessary) incurred by the candidates of each political party and their authorized committees;

[(2) the amounts certified by him under section 9005 for payment to the eligible candidates of each political party; and

[(3) the amount of payments, if any, required from such candidates under section 9007, and the reasons for each payment required.

[Each report submitted pursuant to this section shall be printed as a Senate document.

[(b) REGULATIONS, ETC.—The Comptroller General is authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations, to conduct such examinations and audits (in addition to the examinations and audits required by section 9007(a)), to conduct such investigations, and to require the keeping and submission of such books, records, and information, as he deems necessary to carry out the functions and duties imposed on him by this chapter.]

[Sec. 9010. Participation by Comptroller General in judicial proceedings.

[(a) APPEARANCE BY COUNSEL.—The Comptroller General is authorized to appear in and defend against any action filed under section 9011, either by attorneys employed in his office or by counsel whom he may appoint without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and whose compensation he may fix without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title.

[(b) RECOVERY OF CERTAIN PAYMENTS.—The Comptroller General is authorized through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a) to appear in the district courts of the United States to seek recovery of any amounts determined to be payable to the Secretary as a result of examination and audit made pursuant to section 9007.

[(c) DECLARATORY AND INJUNCTIVE RELIEF.—The Comptroller General is authorized through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a) to petition the courts of the United States for declaratory or injunctive relief concerning any civil matter covered by the provisions of this subtitle or section 6096. Upon application of the Comptroller General, an action brought pursuant to this subsection shall be heard and determined by a court of three judges in accordance with the provisions of section 2284 of title 28, United States Code, and any appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court. It shall be the duty of the judges designated to hear the case to assign the case for hearing at the earliest practicable date, to participate in the hearing and determination thereof, and to cause the case to be in every way expedited.

[(d) APPEAL.—The Comptroller General is authorized on behalf of the United States to appeal from, and to petition the Supreme Court for certiorari to review, judgments or decrees entered with respect to actions in which he appears pursuant to the authority provided in this section.]

[Sec. 9011. Judicial review.

[(a) REVIEW OF CERTIFICATION, DETERMINATION, OR OTHER ACTION BY THE COMPTROLLER GENERAL.—Any certification, determination, or other action by the Comptroller General made or taken pursuant to the provisions of this chapter shall be subject to review by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia upon petition filed in such Court by any interested person. Any petition filed pursuant to this section shall be filed within thirty days after the certification, determination, or other action by the Comptroller General for which review is sought.

[(b) SUITS TO IMPLEMENT CHAPTER.—

[(1) The Comptroller General, the national committee of any political party, and individuals eligible to vote for President are authorized to institute such actions, including actions for declaratory judgment or injunctive relief, as may be appropriate to implement or construe any provision of this chapter.

[(2) The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction of proceedings instituted pursuant to this subsection and shall exercise the same without regard to whether a person asserting rights under provisions of this subsection shall have exhausted any administrative or other remedies that may be provided at law. Such proceedings shall be heard and determined by a court of three judges in accordance with the provisions of section 2284 of title 28, United States Code, and any appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court. It shall be the duty of the judges designated to hear the case to assign the case for hearing at the earliest practicable date, to participate in the hearing and determination thereof, and to cause the case to be in every way expedited.]

[Sec. 9012. Criminal penalties.

[(a) EXCESS CAMPAIGN EXPENSES.—

[(1) It shall be unlawful for an eligible candidate of a political party for President and Vice President in a presidential election or any of his authorized committees knowingly and willfully to incur qualified campaign expenses in excess of the aggregate payments to which the eligible candidates of a major party are entitled under section 9004 with respect to such election.

[(2) Any person who violates paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than one year or both. In the case of a violation by an authorized committee, any officer or member of such committee who knowingly and willfully consents to such violation shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

[(1) It shall be unlawful for an eligible candidate of a major party in a presidential election or any of his authorized committees knowingly and willfully to accept any contribution to defray qualified campaign expenses, except to the extent necessary to make up any deficiency in payments received out of the fund on account of the application of section 9006(d), or to defray expenses which would be qualified campaign expenses but for subparagraph (C) of section 9002(11).

[(2) It shall be unlawful for an eligible candidate of a political party (other than a major party) in a presidential election or any of his authorized committees knowingly and willfully to accept and expend or retain contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses in an amount which exceeds the qualified campaign expenses incurred with respect to such election by such eligible candidate and his authorized committees.

[(3) Any person who violates paragraph (1) or (2) shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both. In the case of a violation by an authorized committee, any officer or member of such committee who knowingly and willfully consents to such violation shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

[(c) UNLAWFUL USE OF PAYMENTS.—

[(1) It shall be unlawful for any person who receives any payment under section 9006, or to whom any portion of any payment received under such section is transferred, knowingly and willfully to use, or authorize the use of, such payment or such portion for any purpose other than—

[(A) to defray the qualified campaign expenses with respect to which such payment was made, or

[(B) to repay loans the proceeds of which were used, or otherwise to restore funds (other than contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses which were received and expended) which were used, to defray such qualified campaign expenses.

[(d) FALSE STATEMENTS, ETC.—

[(1) It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully—

[(A) to furnish any false, fictitious, or fraudulent evidence, books, or information to the Comptroller General under this subtitle, or to include in any evidence, books, or information so furnished any misrepresentation of a material fact, or to falsify or conceal any evidence, books, or information relevant to a certification by the Comptroller General or an examination and audit by the Comptroller General under this chapter; or

[(B) to fail to furnish to the Comptroller General any records, books, or information requested by him for purposes of this chapter.

[(e) KICKBACKS AND ILLEGAL PAYMENTS.—

[(1) It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully to give or accept any kickback or any illegal payment in connection with any qualified campaign expense of eligible candidates or their authorized committees.

[(3) In addition to the penalty provided by paragraph (2), any person who accepts any kickback or illegal payment in connection with any qualified campaign expense of eligible candidates or their authorized committees shall pay to the Secretary, for deposit in the general fund of the Treasury, an amount equal to 125 percent of the kickback or payment received.

[(f) UNAUTHORIZED EXPENDITURES AND CONTRIBUTIONS.—

[(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), it shall be unlawful for any political committee which is not an authorized committee with respect to the eligible candidates of a political party for President and Vice President in a presidential election knowingly and willfully to incur expenditures to further the election of such candidates, which would constitute qualified campaign expenses if incurred by an authorized committee of such candidates, in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000.

[(2) This subsection shall not apply to (A) expenditures by a broadcaster regulated by the Federal Communications Commission, or by a periodical publication, in reporting the news or in taking editorial positions, or (B) expenditures by any organization described in section 501(c) which is exempt from tax under section 501(a) in communicating to its members the views of that organization.

[(3) Any political committee which violates paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $5,000, and any officer or member of such committee who knowingly and willfully consents to such violation and any other individual who knowingly and willfully violates paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

[(g) UNAUTHORIZED DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION.—

[(1) It shall be unlawful for any individual to disclose any information obtained under the provisions of this chapter except as may be required by law.

[(2) Any person who violates paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.]

[Sec. 9013. Effective date of chapter.

[The provisions of this chapter shall take effect on January 1, 1973.]

[CHAPTER 96. PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN FUND ADVISORY BOARD

[Sec. 9021. Establishment of Advisory Board.

[(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF BOARD.—There is hereby established an advisory board to be known as the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Advisory Board (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Board"). It shall be the duty and function of the Board to counsel and assist the Comptroller General of the United States in the performance of the duties and functions imposed on him under the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act.

[(b) COMPOSITION OF BOARD.—The Board shall be composed of the following members:

[(1) the majority leader and minority leader of the Senate and the Speaker and minority leader of the House of Representatives, who shall serve ex officio;

[(2) two members representing each political party which is a major party (as defined in section 9002(6)), which members shall be appointed by the Comptroller General from recommendations submitted by such political party; and

[(3) three members representing the general public, which members shall be selected by the members described in paragraphs (1) and (2).

[The terms of the first members of the Board described in paragraphs (2) and (3) shall expire on the sixtieth day after the date of the first presidential election following January 1, 1973, and the terms of subsequent members described in paragraphs (2) and (3) shall begin on the sixty-first day after the date of a presidential election and expire on the sixtieth day following the date of the subsequent presidential election. The Board shall elect a Chairman from its members.

[(c) COMPENSATION.—Members of the Board (other than members described in subsection (b)(1) shall receive compensation at the rate of $75 a day for each day they are engaged in performing duties and functions as such members, including traveltime, and, while away from their homes or regular places of business, shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by law for persons in the Government service employed intermittently.

[(d) STATUS.—Service by an individual as a member of the Board shall not, for purposes of any other law of the United States be considered as service as an officer or employee of the United States.]

In compliance with sections 133 (b) and (d) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended, the record of rollcall votes in the Committee on Rules and Administration during its consideration of the original bill (subsequently S. 3044) is as follows:

1. Motion by Senator Griffin to delete Title I and substitute therefor a proposal to provide candidates for Federal office in general elections with certain amounts of television time to be paid for from funds in the United States Treasury, and to prohibit such candidates from purchasing additional television time. ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF MR. PELL

It is particularly gratifying to me as Chairman of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections that the Committee is reporting legislation in which public financing of elections is such a strong component.

The public financing features of the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 stem from comprehensive hearings before the subcommittee which I conducted on September 18, 19, 20 and 21, 1973. Many constructive recommendations emerged from these hearings. They were distilled into my own bill, S. 2718, which I introduced on November 16, which was reported to the Committee for consideration, and which formed the basis for our deliberations.

I am pleased that the legislation contains principles which I had advanced. Among these are: coverage of all Federal elections, primary and general; a threshold amount to be raised in small contributions by candidates in primary elections to ensure each candidate's seriousness of intent; and the concept of matching these small contributions with federal dollars.

I am also pleased that the legislation contains provisions which I recommended in Committee. Among these are: an accelerated reporting procedure by the Federal Election Commission to permit completion of examinations and audits of campaign expenditures at the earliest practicable time; a greater limitation on the amounts which an individual candidate may contribute to his or her own campaign; and a new method of implementing the dollar check-off, whereby this check-off becomes automatic unless the taxpayer indicates an objection.

The Committee is reporting to the Senate legislation of historic significance, in accord with those Jeffersonian principles which place abiding confidence in the wisdom of the individual and in the individual's fundamental role in the development of an enlightened democracy.

We have witnessed the tragic perversion of these principles—in terms of a misuse and corruption of power and a misguided dependence on the influence of large political contributors.

This legislation is deeply concerned with the ending of such abuses. It removes the temptation of seeking or of accepting the large compromising gift. It returns to our people, to our individual voters a rightful share and a rightful responsibility in the choosing of their candidates. And it can serve to establish that climate of public trust in elected officials which this country so earnestly desires.

CLAIBORNE PELL.

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF MR. GRIFFIN

The astute political observer, David S. Broder, mixed a dash of homely wisdom with a reporter's cynicism when he wrote: "The only thing more dangerous to democracy than corrupt politicians may be politicians hell-bent on reform."

In many minds, the idea of "public financing" has somehow become synonymous with "campaign reform." I am concerned that the reality may be very different.

Even though I have serious doubts about the public financing aspects of this bill, I joined in voting to report it because I believe the Senate as a whole should have an opportunity to debate and decide the issues raised by Title I. Furthermore, except for Title I, the bill contains many campaign financing reforms which are clearly meritorious.

For example, I strongly support such provisions as those in other titles of the bill to create an independent Federal Election Commission, to place strict dollar limits on the amount an individual can contribute to a candidate or to campaigns in any year, to limit the amount a candidate can contribute to his own campaign, to restrict the size of cash contributions; to impose ceilings on overall campaign expenditures; and to require each candidate to use a central campaign committee and depository.

Such provisions truly represent campaign financing reforms, and they should be enacted on their own merit.

Unfortunately, public understanding has not fully penetrated a facade of attractive slogans that has surrounded the promise of public financing for campaigns. As more and more light is focused on the approach of Title I in this bill, the more realization there will be that it does not really represent "reform" at all. That will be particularly true as the people learn that "public financing" means "taxpayer financing;" and when they see that Title I would actually increase, not decrease, the levels of campaign spending, particularly in races for the House of Representatives.

It should be noted also that a number of needed, real reforms have not been included in this bill. For example, I believe everyone—candidates and voters alike—would welcome steps to shorten the duration of campaigns.

attract big companies with large capital and sophisticated equipment.

Like the tall timber that once covered the mountains, most of the more profitable mines here were depleted by the end of World War II, and the big corporations moved their equipment elsewhere.

Since that time, the economy of Buchanan County has depended largely on the independent truck miners—so-called because their mines were too small to rate individual railroad spurs. There is light industry in Grundy and in nearby Richlands, but most of it is devoted to mining equipment manufacture.

The waning of the independent truck mines and attacks on strip mining are such critical issues that the local newspapers print editorials almost daily criticizing the Interior Department. It is difficult to find anyone who does not agree.

The Rev. Murphy D. Miller of the First Presbyterian Church of Buchanan County, was at work last week on a Sunday sermon entitled "Coal and Christianity." He said the sermon was an attack on outside forces that seemed bent on destroying the coal industry.

"Coal is a religious issue because it is the light of life and a natural resource, just like Christianity is," said Miller. "The equipment problem is one more example of outsiders trying to muscle in our our way of life, destroying the will of men to earn their daily bread.

The small miners still are trying to appeal the March 30 deadline through their trade association, the National Independent Coal Operators Association, but MESA officials say there is little chance appeals will succeed except in cases where operators can show they already have the new equipment on order.

MESA said last week that any small mine which did not have the new equipment could apply for a Small Business Administration loan, and use the loan as the basis for an extension to remain in operation.

For the first time in the lives of many miners, the future is becoming an unavoidable topic of conversation, and when they speak of it, they speak like Eugene Hughes, 42, a youthful-looking man with a fifth-grade education, seven children, and 22 years of coal mining behind him.

"I'm gonna let the government feed me, buddy. It's the only thing I know to do, and when they get tired of feeding me and a lot of others who will be on welfare with me, maybe they'll let us go back to work," Hughes said.

Were he a younger man, Hughes might consider working in a large, union mine, for higher wages, but those jobs are scarce, and with 22 years' worth of rock dust accumulated in his lungs, Hughes could never pass the physical examination for employment in a big mine.

For the first time in his life, Hughes now thinks that he would consider some job other than coal mining if he were starting out again, but that would involve moving from here.

"In Buchanan County," he says, "coal mining's about all you have to look forward to."

SBA To Make Equipment Loans—Appalachia Mine Closure Stayed

(By Kenneth Bredemeier)

About 400 small Appalachian coal mines, which for four years have been on notice that they will be shut down at the end of this month unless they install explosion-proof machinery, have been given more time to acquire the equipment.

With a considerable assist from Sen. Marlow W. Cook (R-Ky.), a longtime friend of the small mine owners, the Small Business Administration has agreed to grant long-term, low-interest loans to the mine operators to buy equipment that would put them in compliance with the 1969 Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act.

A safety compliance panel within the Interior Department has agreed to postpone closure if a mine operator applies for and wins approval of an SBA loan. The law called for the installation of the equipment by March 30, but the small mine operators have virtually ignored the four-year-old deadline.

As a result of the recent agreement, James M. Day, administrator of the Interior's Mine Enforcement and Safety Administration, predicted that no more than 150 of the mines will be ordered shut by federal mine inspectors. Originally as many as 500 small mountainside mines faced an April 1 shutdown.

But as the deadline approached, the Federal Energy Office objected to the closures of the mines, which annually produce about 3 per cent—16 to 20 million tons—of the nation's coal supply, FEO said the coal is needed to ease the energy shortage and the mines should not be closed needlessly if there is no danger to miners working in them.

Moreover, Sen. Cook, according to an aide, worked with Interior officials to delay the deadline and with the SBA to assure the availability of the loans, which SBA said will be granted for up to 30 years at the current SBA interest of 6⅛ per cent.

The Cook aide said that in 1969 the senator unsuccessfully attempted to have the small mines located above the water table declared "non-gassy" and thus exempt from the mine safety law's provision for sparkproof equipment.

The 500 mines, scattered over a 12-state area but concentrated in the Appalachian hills of southwestern Virginia and eastern Kentucky, employ 5,500 to 6,000 workers.

The key section of the 1969 law prohibits use of "nonpermissible" electric drilling, digging and hauling equipment after March 30. This essentially is equipment that is not enclosed to prevent electrical sparks from igniting methane gas in the mine.

The small-mine owners, however, claim that cost of the spark-containing equipment is greater—some estimates range as high as $500,000 per mine—than the value of the coal in the mines.

These operators say that their mines, often with small seams of coal that bigger companies found unprofitable to dig, are usually high on mountainsides above the water table. Gaseous conditions are usually found below the water table, where most large mines are located, they claim.

Thus, the operators say there is little danger of a gas explosion in the small mines, which usually employ from 5 to 30 minutes and often are family enterprises.

"Since the law was passed there has been only one fatality from a methane explosion above the water level," said Louis Hunter, executive vice president of the National Independent Coal Operators Association. "It's all very foolish anyway. They'll let these people take a burning torch into the mines to repair equipment, but then they say all equipment has got to be sparkproof and watertight."

The number of mines that actually will be forced to close is difficult to ascertain. The mine safety act set up an independent interim compliance panel to review applications from mine owners to stay open past March 30 without the required equipment.

The panel has heard 256 cases, denying 168 bids to stay open and granting 88. The only criterion for permission to stay open, according to an Interior spokesman, has been whether the mine has proof that it has ordered the necessary equipment to comply with the new safety standards.

In lieu of buying the new equipment, the coal operators have asked that they be permitted to install methane monitors on mining equipment that would automatically shut off the equipment when there is 0.25 per cent methane in the air near the mining area. However, no decision has been made on the owners' request.

The law requires that mines be shut down when there is 2 per cent methane in the air. Explosions occur when there is 5 to 15 per cent of the odorless gas.

The United Mine Workers, which represents about 10 per cent of the affected workers, said it supports the mine closures. A union spokesman said: "The law is very clear. We're not going to tolerate endangering miners' lives."

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLEN). Time for transaction of routine morning business has now expired. Morning business is closed.

NATIONAL CANCER ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLEN). At this time, in accordance with the previous order, the Chair lays before the Senate Calendar No. 710, S. 2893, which the clerk will state.

The second assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

S. 2893, to amend the Public Health Service Act to improve the national cancer program and to authorize appropriations for such program for the next 3 fiscal years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That this Act may be cited as the "National Cancer Act Amendments of 1974".

SEC. 2. Section 301(f) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 201) is amended by striking the words "during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1966, and each of the eight succeeding fiscal years".

SEC. 3. Section 402(b) of the Public Health Service Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "in amounts not to exceed $35,000" in paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "if the direct costs of such research and training do not exceed $35,000, but only"; and

(2) by striking out "in amounts exceeding $35,000" in paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof "if the direct costs of such research and training exceed $35,000, but only".

SEC. 4. (a) Section 407(b)(7) of the Public Health Service Act is amended by striking out "where appropriate".

(b) Section 407(b)(4) of such Act is amended by inserting after the word "data" the following: "(including where appropriate nutritional programs for persons under treatment for cancer)".

(c) Section 407(b)(9)(A) of such Act is amended by inserting after the words "National Cancer Program," the words "including the number and types of personnel necessary to carry out such program,".

(d) Section 407(b)(9)(B) of such Act is amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof the following: ", and the allocation of personnel requested to carry out the National Cancer Program".

(e) Section 407(b) of such Act is amended by adding the following new paragraph:

"(10) The Director of the National Cancer Institute shall conduct or contract for programs to disseminate and interpret on a current basis for practitioners and other health professionals, scientists, and the general public, scientific and other information respecting the cause, prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of the disease or other health problem to which the activities of the Institute are directed. The Director of the National Cancer Institute shall issue such regulations as are necessary to carry out this activity.".

SEC. 5. Section 408(a) of the Public Health Service Act is amended by striking out "fifteen".

SEC. 6. Section 409(b) of the Public Health Service Act is amended by striking out "and" before "$40,000,000" and by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: "$50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, $65,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, and $85,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1977".

SEC. 7. Section 410 of the Public Health Service Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "fifty" in paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "one hundred";

(2) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (7);

(3) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (8) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(4) by adding after paragraph (8) the following new paragraph:

"(9) to award grants for new construction as well as alterations and renovations for improvement of basic research laboratory facilities, including those related to biohazard control, as deemed necessary for the National Cancer Program."

SEC. 8. Section 410A(a) of the Public Health Service Act is amended by inserting the word ", contracts," after the word "grants"

SEC. 9. Section 410C of the Public Health Service Act is amended by striking out "and" before "$600,000,000" and by inserting before the period at the end thereof a semicolon and the following: "$750,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975; $830,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976; and $985,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1977".

SEC. 10. Part A of title IV of the Public Health Service Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"AVAILABILITY OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 410D. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, unless enacted after the date of enactment of this section expressly in limitation of the provisions of this section, funds appropriated for any fiscal year to carry out any program for which appropriations are authorized by the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 201) or the Mental Retardation Facilities and Community Mental Health Centers Construction Act of 1963 (42 U.S.C. 2661) shall remain available for obligation and expenditure until the end of such fiscal year."

SEC. 11. Section 454 of the Public Health Service Act is amended to read as follows:

"DIRECTORS OF INSTITUTES

"SEC. 454. (a) The Director of the National Institutes of Health shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Appointees shall be eligible for reappointment.

"(b) The Director of the National Cancer Institute shall be appointed by the President. Except as provided in section 407(b)(9), the Director of the National Cancer Institute shall report directly to the Director of the National Institutes of Health.

TITLE II—BIOMEDICAL RESEARCH

SEC. 201. Title IV of the Public Health Service Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 455. (a) There is established the President's Biomedical Research Panel (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'Panel') which shall be composed of (1) the Chairman of the President's Cancer Panel; and (2) four members appointed by the President, who by virtue of their training, experience, and background are exceptionally qualified to appraise the biomedical research program of the National Institutes of Health (including the research program of the National Institute of Mental Health). At least three of the members of the Panel shall be distinguished scientists or physicians.

"(b)(1) Appointed members of the Panel who are appointed pursuant to clause (2) of subsection (a), shall be appointed for three-year terms, except that (i) in the case of the four members first appointed after the date on which this section becomes effective, two shall be appointed for a term of one year and two shall be appointed for a term of two years, as designated by the President at the time of appointment, and (ii) any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed only for the remainder of such term.

"(2) The President shall designate one of the appointed members to serve as Chairman of the Panel for a term of one year.

"(c) Appointed members of the Panel shall each be entitled to receive the daily equivalent of the annual rate of basic pay in effect for grade GS-18 of the General Schedule for each day (including traveltime) during which they are engaged in the actual performance of duties vested in the Panel, and shall be allowed travel expenses (including a per diem allowance) under section 5703(b) of title 5, United States Code.

"(d) The Panel shall meet at the call of the Chairman, but not less often than twelve times a year. A transcript shall be kept of the proceedings of each meeting of the Panel, and the Chairman shall make such transcript available to the public.

"(e) The Panel shall monitor the development and execution of the biomedical research programs of the National Institutes of Health (including the research program of the National Institute of Mental Health) under this section, and shall report directly to the President. Any delays or blockages in rapid execution of the biomedical research programs of the National Institutes of Health (including the research program of the National Institute of Mental Health) shall immediately be brought to the attention of the President and the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the Senate Committe on Appropriations and the House Committee on Appropriations. The Panel shall submit to the President periodic progress reports on the biomedical research programs of the National Institutes of Health (including the research program of the National Institute of Mental Health) and annually an evaluation of the efficacy of the biomedical research programs of the National Institutes of Health (including the research program of the National Institute of Mental Health) and suggestions for improvements, and shall submit such other reports as the President shall direct. At the request of the President, it shall submit for his consideration a list of names of persons for consideration for appointment as Director of the National Institutes of Health."

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. CLARK). Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR COMMITTEE TO FILE ITS REPORT

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs have until midnight of March 28 of file its report on S. 1017, the Indian Self-Determination and Educational Reform Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed at this time to the consideration of the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, as chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, I wish to emphasize the importance of S. 3044 to the future of our democracy. In particular, I wish to stress the importance of title I of this legislation, dealing with the public financing of elections.

This is historic legislation. Let me place it briefly into a framework of recent history. In mid-September last year our subcommittee conducted 4 days of public hearings on this most important subject area. Members of Congres deeply concerned with election reform were among the more than 40 witnesses who testified and presented their thoughtful views and recommendations. My bill, S.2718, resulting from these comprehensive hearings, was reported forward to the Committee on Rules and Administration, and its fundamentals formed the basis of our committee deliberations on public financing.

We have thus worked with careful and detailed consideration on the development of this legislation. We have weighed a variety of alternatives, as set forth in the very thorough and informative report our chairman has submitted.

Mr. President, it was just over 2 months ago, on December 3, 1973, that the able and distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration (Mr. CANNON) gave assurances to the Senate in this chamber that every effort would be made, so that this report could be submitted within 30 days after the beginning of the second session of the 93d Congress.

I wish to commend the chairman for the successful meeting of this target date.

In submitting this report we have taken full cognizance of historic precedents and historic forerunners to public financing concepts. Let me praise, especially in this connection, my senior colleague from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) for his pioneering work in this area.

In essence, I believe we have prepared legislation which goes to the very heart of our democratic process, and which will enable that heart to beat once again with confidence.

It can be argued that we cannot legislate morality, cannot mandate an end to dishonesty, an end to venality, cannot by public law eliminate all the shocking abuses which have so plagued us as a nation and, in particular, this administration.

But we can, through enlightened legislative action, create a climate which minimizes the cause of abuse, and we can return to our voters their rights to choose candidates who are not beholden to the large, and so often compromising, political contribution.

As the committee report points out, the amount to be contributed by each individual taxpayer in the public financing of elections is modest—$2 per year for one individual, $4 on a joint return. That is an investment which I believe will benefit each individual, in terms of more responsible government and in terms of a government responsive to human needs rather than to special interests.

There are those who will say that this bill goes too far, and others who maintain it does not go far enough. I believe it goes the right distance. It provides the advantages of public financing and yet leaves them optional. It limits the contribution any individual can make to a campaign to a meaningful yet moderate sum. It covers all Federal elections, including primaries. In those primaries, it establishes the basis for serious, not frivilous participants. It provides incentives for minor party candidates to enter the mainstream of political life. It preserves the constructive role of the political party in our Nation.

We will debate the details of this legislation, but I set them here within a framework of the goals which I believe this bill can enable us to attain.

We may not eradicate all future Watergates, but certainly we will discourage the perpetuation of a climate in which power is abused by the clever at the expense of the unwary, where power is perverted by a calculated deception which—in Richard Sheridan's words—we might call a "school for scandal."

Mr. President, I urge passage of this legislation. As I have stated in our committee report, I believe it is in accord with historic Jeffersonian principles which place abiding confidence in the wisdom of the individual and in the individual's fundamental role in the development of an enlightened democracy.

At this time, let me comment on the proposals recently offered by President Nixon under the heading of "Campaign reform." I would point out that a number of them are scarcely original. One authorized political committee per candidate, contributions openly identified as to individual donors, a limit of $3,000 for individual contributions to candidates, no loans as possible contributions, a bipartisan Federal elections commission—these are examples of provisions already in our Senate legislation today and in S. 372, passed by the Senate months ago.

The President takes strong exemption to the concept of public financing. He talks about "diverting hundreds of millions of tax dollars away from pressing national needs" in order to underwrite campaigns. I submit that the individual taxpayer's investment is very modest, that the return is to be measured in terms of honesty in government, that this is a most pressing national need, and that American taxpayers are paying far more out of their own pockets now to finance campaigns and an administration which has achieved the dubious reputation of being the most purchasable of any since Hardin's Teapot Dome one.

I would also point out that when I conducted the public hearings on this legislation last September, I expressly asked the administration well in advance to provide us with an appropriate witness who could educate us on the administration's position on election reform.

I inquired of the witness, an assistant attorney general whom the administration selected for this purpose, as to whether he spoke for the White House, for the Justice Department or for the whole administration.

His reply was:

> I am trying to speak for our best understanding of what may be the Administration's position on a matter we frankly have no final position on in detail.

This was about the extent of our Senate education in this regard.

It seems a bit surprising under these circumstances that we should now receive Presidential recommendations, this long after the hearings, this long after Senate adoption of S. 372, this long after requests for elucidation, this long after committee action and deliberations.

We may not always be noted for celerity of action in this body, but this time, compared to the White House, we have been like a veritable greyhound compared to a snail.

Perhaps we should be pleased and say, "Better late than never, Mr. President," but I for one believe that if these administration proposals were to have received serious consideration—as were the recommendations of more than 40 witnesses at those comprehensive September hearings—they should have been transmitted to us at the appropriate time, and certainly long before this.

Let us, therefore, not be diverted in our deliberations. Let us give our approval to the soundness and wisdom contained in the bill we have before us, which is truly in the best interests of all our citizens.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PELL. I am glad to yield.

Mr. ALLEN. First, I commend the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island for his dedicated and diligent efforts in the direction of campaign reform legislation.

I should like to inquire of the distinguished Senator if he feels that public financing is a necessary feature or element of campaign reform. Could it not be reformed and still leave the campaign expenditures in the private sector, rather than calling for public support?

Mr. PELL. There are two separate approaches. Two separate parts of the same cloth, like the warp and the woof. I am not sure they can be separated. If we were people of complete morality and complete conscientiousness they could be. But being, as we are, frail people, and human people, there is an intertwining here of the two, just as there is in the warp and the woof.

Mr. ALLEN. I noticed a provision in the Kennedy-Scott rider offered last year that does not seem to be carried forward in the Senate committee bill, S. 3044, the pending bill, and that was that the matchable contributions had to have been made within a certain time limit before the general election. I wonder why that provision was not carried forward in the Senate bill.

Mr. PELL. The Senator has pointed out—I will not say a flaw, but an area not covered in our legislation intentionally. We considered many problems and did not believe we should approach the question of the time limit in this legislation.

Mr. ALLEN. As far as it appears, then contributions may have been made 4, 5 6, 7, or 8 years prior to the convention and I speak now of Presidential preference primaries leading up to the convention; contributions made many years before the convention would be subject to being matched by the Federal Treasury. Is that not correct?

Mr. PELL. That is correct in the bill as presently drafted.

Mr. ALLEN. Then, as quick as the bill becomes law, the various candidates who send up trial balloons in the Presidentia race could come in and present a statement to the public treasury, assuming they reached the $250,000 threshold amount authorizing the matching o their contributions, and they could say "I have been running now for Presiden for 5 or 6 years and collected these amounts of money and I want these sum matched." Is that permissible under the Senate bill?

Mr. PELL. My understanding is that i is permissible under the Senate bill.

Mr. ALLEN. So that there would b quite a nice little payment by the Federa Treasury to catch up with the politica campaigns of various candidates fo President just to bring them up to date

Mr. PELL. In other words, a Harol Stassen could reap a windfall.

Mr. ALLEN. But anyone who collected $250,000 would be eligible, not only t have that matched, but up to the time o the convention he would have his contri butions matched dollar for dollar out o the Federal treasury provided they wer $250 or less.

Mr. PELL. He could raise the sum, a the Senator has pointed out, but it woul mean he is a serious candidate and carrying his argument to the American people. It may be from the point of view of the public interest and the national interest, a man like Harold Stassen over the years running for President served an important role and purpose.

Mr. ALLEN. I have an amendment I expect to offer later providing that no contribution could be matched unless it was made not more than 14 months prior to the general election. Would the Senator feel inclined to go along with that amendment?

Mr. PELL. Not as floor manager of the bill, but speaking for myself as an individual I think that particular amendment of the Senator from Alabama makes good sense to me and I would accept it.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the distinguished Senator.

Mr. PELL. But I hasten to add that I am speaking only for myself.

Mr. ALLEN. I understand the Senator's statement but I do know his influence would go much further than that and I feel that with his support, we will get that amendment agreed to, at least.

So under the bill there is no starting point beyond which contributions would be ruled out. Then, looking prospectively, would it be possible for a candidate for the Presidential nomination to say, "Well, I do not believe I can run in 1976, but I will be able to run by 1980 or 1984." Under this bill would it be possible for a candidate for the Presidential nomination to start collecting matching funds from the Federal Government for a nomination far on down the line in terms of years?

Mr. PELL. It would be.

Mr. ALLEN. I see. So we get a set of candidates, then, running for the Presidential nomination in 1976, and the Government footing one-half of the bill, and then another set of candidates running for President in 1980, and the Government footing one-half of those bills, and then another set of candidates running for the nomination in 1984 and the Government footing one-half of these bills. Would that be possible under this bill?

Mr. PELL. It would be possible under this bill, but it would be hard to find many people interested in contributing to the potential candidates of 1988 or 1992 at the present time. I cannot imagine many private citizens doing so.

Mr. ALLEN. But still it would be possible for a college student to say, "I always have had an ambition to be President. I want to run in 1990."

Mr. PELL. 1992.

Mr. ALLEN. 1992, then. He could say, "I have raised this $250,000 among my fellows, and now I want the Government to start matching my contributions to my campaign." That is possible under the bill, is it not?

Mr. PELL. It is, And if he is successful in raising that amount of money from his fellows, he might be President long before 1992.

Mr. ALLEN. Another thing that disturbs me is the fact that every candidate for the Presidential nomination can receive up to $7.5 million from the public Treasury to further his candidacy. And it is not required that a candidate participate in a single Presidential preference primary in order to start getting this money from the Federal Government, is it?

Mr. PELL. That would be correct, but just thinking back, we have had Presidents elected who have not competed in Presidential primaries under our present system.

Mr. ALLEN. That is the very point the Senator from Alabama is getting to. We are speaking of reform legislation. We want to reform the election process and make it less susceptible to improper influences. Yet under the bill it would be possible for a candidate for the Presidency, for one, two, three, or four, or more, for that matter, to collect $7.5 million in matchable contributions from the public and then $7.5 million each from the Federal Government, and then go to the convention, each one armed with a $15 million campaign fund, competing for the votes of the various delegates to the convention. Is that possible under the bill?

Mr. PELL. It is possible, if the candidates were serious enough and were successful in raising private money. The idea here is that if they raised private money, they would raise public money, but they would not receive public money without first receiving private money.

Mr. ALLEN. Would it not be possible to go to the convention with a campaign fund of $15 million?

Mr. PELL. It would be possible, just as it is possible now for a candidate to do the same thing, only he would have to raise it out of the private sector.

Mr. ALLEN. The candidate would have to raise $7.5 million from private money in order to get $7.5 million from the Federal Government?

Mr. PELL. Yes. Today he has to raise $15 million from the private sector.

Mr. ALLEN. Is not $7.5 million enough to run for a Presidential nomination?

Mr. PELL. According to the witnesses who came before us, it is not enough to run a serious campaign.

Mr. ALLEN. $7.5 million is not enough?

Mr. PELL. That is right.

Mr. ALLEN. So the bill, instead of cutting down campaign expenses, is going to make it possible to have more expensive campaigns in the nomination drive for the President?

Mr. PELL. It could. It could result in that. It would depend on the individual and his appeal how much he would raise in the private sector. In my own small State, in my last campaign, I regret to say I had to spend more than half a million dollars in a State that has less than 1.5 percent of the vote. In the other States—I believe the Senator from Alabama is in one of the more fortunate States—such sums go a much longer way. I would hope that would apply more generally.

Mr. ALLEN. I notice from Senate Resolution 60, setting up the Watergate Committee, this provision:

> The select committee shall have authority to recommend the enactment—> of any new congressional legislation which its investigation considers it is necessary or desirable to safeguard the electoral process by which the President of the United States is chosen.

This is on page 13, section 4—

The Watergate Committee is on the verge of winding up its affairs and making its report. Would it not be of interest to the Members of the Senate and the Members of the House and the public generally to find out what the Watergate Committee is going to recommend with regard to election reform?

Mr. PELL. But, as the Senator has suggested, the language there is permissive. It has the authority to do it; it is not mandatory that it must make a recommendation. I would think the first responsibility for such legislation should come from our own Rules and Administration Committee, which is the standing committee where this authority has been vested as a matter of course through the years.

Mr. ALLEN. Yet the Senate adopted this resolution setting up the Watergate Committee.

Mr. PELL. And giving it the permissive authority to recommend legislation. So far I see no signs of such permissive authority being exercised.

Mr. ALLEN. Would the Senator be interested in knowing that five out of the seven Watergate Committee members are opposed to public financing of elections?

Mr. PELL. What was that again, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. ALLEN. Five out of the seven members of the Watergate Committee are opposed to public financing of elections.

Mr. PELL. That could be. I simply do not know what the results of a poll in the Watergate Committee would be, but I do know that under rule XXV the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration is given jurisdiction and whatever legislation the Watergate Committee recommended would have to come before it for action. I believe I am correct in that.

Mr. ALLEN. I believe Senate bill 3044 goes one step further than did the Kennedy-Scott-Mansfield-Mondale-Pell-Cranston rider last time, in that that rider did not provide for public financing in House and Senate primary races. Did it?

Mr. PELL. It did not apply, and our attention was called to that omission, just as the Senator from Alabama called to my mind the possible omission that we did not have a cutoff date for past contributions. As we discussed it in committee, it seemed that we should include primaries for all Federal elections.

Mr. ALLEN. I believe the Washington Post is for campaign reform and even for some assistance of public financing of elections. I notice that that publication this morning, in referring to the rider which failed of adoption last year, said in its editorial:

> Today the Senate begins debate on a very ambitious bill to extend public financing to all federal primary and general-election campaigns.

If the goal of reforms is to make federal campaigns more open in every respect—above-board, broadly based and genuinely competitive—then some degree of public financing is an important complement to limitations on private funds. Outlawing large private contributions will reduce, or at least make more perilous, the domination of the political marketplace by well-heeled individuals and special interests. Public financing, direct or indirect, will broaden public participation in campaigns and enable challengers to combat the large advantages which incumbents now enjoy. That principle lies behind the existing dollar check-off and provisions for tax credits or deductions for small private contributions. It is an approach worth expanding in a sensible and incremental way.

The problem with the latest Senate bill is that it tries to do too much, too soon, and goes beyond what is either feasible or workable. For one thing, the bill provides for full public financing of congressional general-election campaigns, and that is clearly indigestible in the House this year, since the House leadership even chokes on the more moderate matching-grant approach embodied in the Anderson-Udall bill. The more serious defects in the Senate bill involve the inclusion of primaries. No aspect of the federal elections process is more motley and capricious than the present steeplechase of presidential primaries. Injecting even partial public funding into this process, without rationalizing it in any other way, makes little sense. As for congressional primaries, they are so varied in size, cost and significance among the states that no single system of public support seems justifiable without much more careful thought.

I am just wondering if there is now a wide difference of opinion among those who support public financing of elections. Apparently the Washington Post does not think too much of this bill, and certainly does not think anything of the presidential preference primary subsidy or the congressional subsidy. I am just wondering if there is now a kind of break-up in the group that has been pushing for public financing of elections. Is this editorial indicative of that?

Mr. PELL. I think there are certainly differences of view among those who believe in public financing, differences of gradation, differences of emphasis. Although I usually find myself in agreement with the Washington Post, sometimes it has an idea with which I am in disagreement. Basically, the Washington Post, or the liberal establishment, or the middle-of-the-road establishment, who I think are tired of the role that money has played in election decisions and campaign contributions for elections, inclines to some kind of public financing. What kind of public financing, is open to argument, just as we are doing now.

As far as being "indigestible" with the House, the Washington Post may be accurate. That is what the purpose of conferences is—to see how much they will accept and what is not palatable.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the distinguished Senator for the information he has given me with respect to this bill.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. PELL. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that two members of my staff, Roy Greenaway and Jan Mueller, may be accorded the privileges of the floor during consideration of this measure, including rollcalls.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK). Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL 1:15 P.M.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 1:15 this afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Thereupon, at 12:45 p.m. the Senate took a recess until 1:15 p.m., when it was called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. HATHAWAY).

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS TO 2 P.M.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, with the approval of the distinguished majority leader, I move that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 2 p.m.

The motion was agreed to; and at 1:31 p.m. the Senate took a recess until 2 p.m.; whereupon the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. DOMENICI).

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7130) to improve congressional control over budgetary outlay and receipt totals, to provide for a Legislative Budget Office, to establish a procedure providing congressional control over impoundment of funds by the executive branch, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. BOLLING, Mr. SISK, Mr. YOUNG of Texas, Mr. LONG of Louisiana, Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska, Mr. LATTA, and Mr. DEL CLAWSON were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOMENICI). The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, what is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. S. 3004.

NATIONAL CANCER ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that S. 3044, the unfinished business, be laid aside temporarily and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 710, S. 2893.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

S. 2893, to amend the Public Health Service Act to improve the national cancer program and to authorize appropriations for such program for the next 3 fiscal years.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on final passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, it is a special pleasure for me to present for action here this afternoon S. 2893, the National Cancer Act of 1974, on behalf of the Subcommittee on Health and the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. We come to the Senate this afternoon with the unanimous support of the committee. It will continue what I think has been one of the really dynamic and effective health programs that have been developed by the Senate in recent years.

To trace the legislation very briefly for the benefit of the Senate, the cancer legislation initially was developed after a special panel of consultants had been established by the chairman of the Subcommittee on Health in the Senate, former Senator Ralph Yarborough, of Texas. This cancer panel of consultants brought together some of the finest minds in the biomedical community, those who had worked in cancer research, as well as dedicated laymen. They made recommendations to the committee, and to the Senate. Their report was the basis of the 1971 cancer legislation, which we are extending and improving today.

I want to pay a special tribute to the chairman of that panel and the chairman of the President's Cancer Panel, Mr. Benno C. Schmidt. His willingness to work ceaselessly in this public interest program is an example which is unparalleled.

The legislation we are recommending today is a result of hearings we have had before the Subcommittee on Health, in which we took testimony from the administration, the President's panel, the Candle Lighters, one of the most effective consumer groups in the cancer area, the Association of American Medical Colleges, as well as the American Cancer Society.

Mr. President, today I would like to comment on the National Cancer Act of 1974, which I introduced in the Senate, January 24, 1974.

Many of you know at first hand the enormity of the cancer problem. Many of you have already experienced the fear and helplessness unleashed by this family of more than 100 clinically distinct diseases.

But for those of you who have been fortunate enough not to confront this second major killer of Americans I would like to present some facts in support of the new National Cancer Act. I hope that these facts will persuade you—as they have me—that as Members of the U.S. Senate we all have a compelling mandate to hasten the conquest of cancer, and that in S. 2893 we have the proper legislative instrument with which to help forge this humanitarian accomplishment.

Cancer is a term for more than 100 clinically distinct diseases which kill someone in this country every 1½ minutes. This year it is estimated that 655,000 Americans will become new cancer cases and 355,000 will die; that is about 975 persons a day. Two out of every three American families will be stricken with cancer over the years.

The annual cost of these diseases is more than $15 billion. The cost in human suffering of the victims, their friends and families, is incalculable.

If cancer was one disease we might expect a single cure or dramatic breakthrough. But it is not. Unfortunately cancer is far more complex than all of the infectious diseases conquered in the long march of medical progress.

Cancer is a widespread biological phenomenon with different incidences, appearances, and functioning. It is induced by widely different chemical, physical, and biological agents, most of which are unknown.

To find the causes and cures of cancer may indeed require unlocking the innermost biologic secrets of life itself.

Let me give you one example of the scope of the scientific challenge to which we must address ourselves. Scientists have long had reason to believe that many, if not the majority, of human cancers are caused by chemical or other environmental agents. About 1,000 chemicals are now known to induce cancer in animals and 22 chemical agents have been implicated as causes of human cancer.

But roughly 200,000 new chemicals are introduced into the environment each year—costly in industrial countries—and about 10,000 of these are produced in quantities capable of contaminating the environment—about one ton or more.

To counter this chemical onslaught, in the United States we are now testing about 500 compounds a year. Just to test one chemical requires roughly 2 years, 400 animals of various species, and costs about $70,000. Obviously, at this level we cannot catch up with testing the older chemicals or even make a dent in the yearly inundation of the new.

Therefore, the national cancer program is continuing a sustained effort to develop what might be called a "mini-screen" to bioassay compounds in a matter of months, at a fraction of the present cost and, hopefully, with better predictability as to whether the chemicals might cause cancer in man.

One of the most critical aspects of National Cancer Institute activities under the national cancer program is delivering research results to the people. If we are to be accountable to the mandate of our people, we must insure that the latest advances in cancer prevention, detection, treatment, and rehabilitation are made available to all of the people.

The cancer program has moved forward in this area with the establishment of nine comprehensive cancer centers and the initiation of numerous cancer control projects. These efforts must be continued.

Simply stated, we must bring the best in cancer medicine to the people wherever they are, and assure that centers of excellence are available throughout the country.

Although significant progress against cancer has been achieved under the National Cancer Act of 1971, changes have been recommended in the proposed new law to enable the Director, National Cancer Institute, to carry out his mission more effectively and to provide National Cancer Institute with the tools which we believe are necessary for successful accomplishment of the objectives of the national cancer program.

The major features are as follows:

First, need for additional cancer centers. The National Cancer Act of 1971 limits the number of new comprehensive cancer centers to 15. This limitation severely restricts the goals of the cancer program to get the latest methods of prevention, detection, treatment, and rehabilitation out to practitioners and the people. I believe the Nation requires 30 to 35 such centers to bring high-quality comprehensive cancer care within the reach of everyone. I can see no reason why any family should be denied the best possible diagnosis and treatment for some forms of cancer simply because of where they live.

Second, need to assure the continued education of biomedical researchers.

It is an obvious and absolute essential that training and fellowship programs must be provided by the national cancer program at levels adequate to insure attracting the brightest young scientists and clinicians. A continuing influx of new scientific talent is necessary to insure progress both in cancer and in medical research in general. The cost of these programs is minimal compared with the value of lives that will ultimately be saved.

Third, funding levels.

Funding for the national cancer program has more than doubled since enactment of the National Cancer Act of 1971. the authorizations in the new bill provide for further increases at levels recommended by both the President's Cancer panel and the National Cancer Advisory Board.

The committee feels these authorization levels are satisfactory to assure continued maximum progress of the national cancer program.

Fourth, cancer control program.

The cancer control program, through its efforts to insure rapid and effective dissemination of the latest research advances and knowledge of cancer, strengthens the general practice of medicine in this country. The program should develop into a major demonstration once for the rapid application of improved diagnostic, treatment and rehabilitation methods. For this reason, S. 2893 increases funding authorizations for the cancer control program for the next 3 years.

Fifth, need to submit personnel requirements with budget requests.

The National Cancer Institute has been severely limited in its efforts to secure the numbers and kinds of personnel necessary to administer expanded programs because of inadequate super grade positions, personnel ceilings and reductions imposed on the institute by the administration. Recognizing that adequate personnel are essential for an effective program, S. 2893 provides a mechanism for the national cancer program to make these personnel needs known to Congress. By requiring National Cancer Institute to submit personnel needs along with the yearly budget request, it is intended that Congress will be informed of and able to act upon these personnel needs.

AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS

The medical facilities construction and modernization amendment of 1970—the Hill-Burton amendment—contained a provision designed to assure the availability and expenditure of appropriated health funds.

This provision, unless amended, would expire on July 1, 1974. S. 2893 would permanently extend it. The committee has felt it appropriate to do this in view of the recent administration record of impoundment of funds and the administration's express desire to terminate many health programs prior to congressional review of them.

The provision which requires obligation and expenditure of the appropriated funds is section 601 of the medical facilities construction and modernization amendments of 1970 (Public Law 91-296) 42 U.S.C.A. sections 201 note and 2661 note—section 601. Section 601 reads as follows:

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, unless enacted after the enact-this area was again manifested on January 29, 1974, when he re-stated his commitment to our cancer research program at the National Cancer Institute. Certainly, Congressional interest remains high and our support steadfast. Let me therefore join with the many Senators who have worked long and hard on this vital legislation in urging immediate passage of S. 2893, to insure the continuation and intensification of our national commitment against cancer.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, unless there are other speakers on this bill, I will ask for a short quorum call, and then we can vote on the bill.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, "Shall the bill (S. 2893) pass?"

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. SYMINGTON), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON), the Senator from Michigan (Mr. HART), and the Senator from Utah (Mr. Moss) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON) and the Senator from Michigan (Mr. HART) would each vote "yea."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) is absent on official business.

I also announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN) is absent because of illness in the family.

I further announce that the Senator from Oregon (Mr. PACKWOOD) and the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. HRUSKA) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 89, nays 0, as follows:

"DIRECTORS OF INSTITUTES

"SEC. 454. (a) The Director of the National Institutes of Health shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Appointees shall be eligible for reappointment.

"(b) The Director of the National Cancer Institute shall be appointed by the President. Except as provided in section 407(b)(9), the Director of the National Cancer Institute shall report directly to the Director of the National Institutes of Health.

TITLE II—BIOMEDICAL RESEARCH

SEC. 201. Title IV of the Public Health Service Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 455. (a) There is established the President's Biomedical Research Panel (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'Panel') which shall be composed of (1) the Chairman of the President's Cancer Panel and (2) four members appointed by the President, who by virtue of their training, experience, and background are exceptionally qualified to appraise the biomedical research program of the National Institutes of Health (including the research program of the National Institute of Mental Health). At least three of the members of the Panel shall be distinguished scientists or physicians.

"(b) (1) Appointed members of the Panel who are appointed pursuant to clause (2) of subsection (a), shall be appointed for three-year terms, except that (i) in the case of the four members first appointed after the date on which this section becomes effective, two shall be appointed for a term of one year and two shall be appointed for a term of two years, as designated by the President at the time of appointment, and (ii) any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed only for the remainder of such term.

"(2) The President shall designate one of the appointed members to serve as Chairman of the Panel for a term of one year.

"(c) Appointed members of the Panel shall each be entitled to receive the daily equivalent of the annual rate of basic pay in effect for grade GS-18 of the General Schedule for each day (including traveltime) during which they are engaged in the actual performance of duties vested in the Panel, and shall be allowed travel expenses (including a per diem allowance) under section 5703(b) of title 5, United States Code.

"(d) The Panel shall meet at the call of the Chairman, but not less often than twelve times a year. A transcript shall be kept of the proceedings of each meeting of the Panel, and the Chairman shall make such transcript available to the public.

"(e) The Panel shall monitor the development and execution of the biomedical research programs of the National Institutes of Health (including the research program of the National Institute of Mental Health) under this section, and shall report directly to the President. Any delays or blockages in rapid execution of the biomedical research programs of the National Institutes of Health (including the research program of the National Institute of Mental Health) shall immediately be brought to the attention of the President and the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the Senate Committee on Appropriations and the House Committee on Appropriations. The Panel shall submit to the President periodic progress reports on the biomedical research programs of the National Institutes of Health (including the research program of the National Institute of Mental Health) and annually an evaluation of the efficacy of the biomedical research programs of the National Institutes of Health (including the research program of the National Institute of Mental Health) and suggestions for improvements, and shall submit such other reports as the President shall direct. At the request of the President, it shall submit for his consideration a list of names of persons for consideration for appointment as Director of the National Institutes of Health."

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. JAVITS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate 3044, and which the clerk will read by title.

The legislative clerk read the bill by title.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during consideration of the public financing bill, S. 3044, James H. Duffy, of the staff of the Committee on Rules and Administration, and Jeffrey Doranz, assistant to the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. WILLIAMS), be permitted the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WEICKER).

Mr. WEICKER obtained the floor.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WEICKER. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, for the information of the Senate, I wish to announce, on behalf of the joint leadership, that there will be no further votes today. We are getting started on the campaign financing bill. I anticipate that there will be a number of speeches. I am sure there will be an amendment laid before the Senate tonight by the distinguished Senator from Alabama. It is my intention at this time to see if it would not be possible to have a rollcall vote on this amendment at the hour of 3:30 tomorrow. However, I have to touch some bases, and later today will make an announcement.

I thank the Senator from Connecticut for yielding to me at this time.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, the current debate over the Government financing of Federal elections has come to resemble a replay of "Beauty and the Beast."

On the one hand we have the supporters of S. 3044 who view Government financing as a sparkling alternative which promises to clean up electoral abuses with a speed and thoroughness previously attributed only to the most expensive solutions.

On the other hand, we have the stanch opponents of Government financing, who view it as an incorrigible "beast," an intolerable raid on the Public Treasury, and a prescription for the end of the two-party system.

Both these views are simplistic, exaggerated, and unrealistic.

I do not think there is a Member in this Chamber who does not realize the necessity—indeed, the urgency—for campaign reform, not in a cosmetic sense, but reform that will get to the practical abuses within our election system. Because I disagree with advocates of public financing does not mean we are not striving for a similar goal: A political system that is clean, that can involve anybody, any man, any woman, in this country, regardless of his or her means. These are the matters of overriding importance on which we all agree.

The truth about Government financing of elections is that it would have some advantages. Nevertheless it would have many more serious and inevitable problems. Government financing is not a magical Clorox guaranteed to end forever the dirty laundry of Watergate. It does not cut the cost of campaigns; it just shifts the cost.

So the gut question about the Government financing of elections is not, "Is it plague or panacea?" For we know it is neither, but rather, "Do the advantages outweigh the disadvantages?" And more important, "Are the alternatives insufficient to do the same job?"

My answer to both questions must be "No."

Federal financing only acknowledges the size of the problem; it does not reform it. There are several ways to effectively reform campaign spending without resorting to Government financing. One is to reduce the length of campaigns. Another is to require full disclosure before the election, rather than after. Another is to limit campaign financing to one committee per candidate, to end the juggled books and "laundered" contributions. And yet another is to eliminate the use of cash in campaigns.

The substitute bill I am introducing today includes not just one or two of these ideas, but all of them. My amendment would provide for:

Election campaigns beginning no earlier than the first Tuesday in September, with no collections or expenditures before that period of time.

Let us take a closer look at that proposal. The Federal election process would commence with each of the candidates filing a statement of candidacy on the first Tuesday in September.

The next step in the campaign would be a single primary on the first Tuesday in October, and then the election itself on the first Tuesday in November. So we are talking about a period of 60 days, a period before which there can be no expenditures or collections. In other words, we are using "time" to cut down the cost of campaigns.

My own State of Connecticut is typical of what is now going on in the United States. In the last election there were about 14,000 registered Democrats, about 14,000 registered Republicans, and about 45,000 registered independents. We have seen, from the most recent Gallup polls, the decline of both parties and the growth of independents. On the one hand, we have a traditionally strong two-party system that has served us well. On the other hand, we have people who are not willing to commit themselves to one party or the other, who want to judge persons, without expressing party labels.

We should be able to reconcile those two. One way is a selection process open to all the people. In the case of the President of the United States, it means a nationwide primary on the first Tuesday on October, to let the people speak as to whom they want.

So the calendar, I repeat, sets a filing deadline, by the first Tuesday in September, in order for a candidate to be eligible for election. Then there would be a single primary the first Tuesday in October. Then the regular election on the first Tuesday in November.

It is clear that this will result in a saving of money and a reduction of costs. At the minimum, it would cut campaigning expenses in half, and perhaps there could be even greater savings.

In addition, and I emphasize this, there would be only one report, 2 weeks before the election, reporting every campaign expenditure and collection. When people went to the polls they would know what role money played for the particular candidate for whom they vote.

This proposal provides for no collections or expenditures after the report is submitted, except expenses "budgeted for" and duly reported.

Today a good portion of the campaign funds come in after the election; in other words, not as a tribute to the individual, but to the power that resides in the office. That cannot be justified. A candidate should be backed before the result is in.

Campaign deficits would be a violation of law, to be paid off only under the supervision of the Comptroller General.

That may sound harsh, but, again, it will only make campaigns more honest, both for candidates and constituents.

No cash contributions of more than $50.

No more than $10,000 of an individual candidate's personal funds.

No more than one campaign committee.

The real problem in campaign reform is not that campaigns cost money, but that campaigns cost big money. President Eisenhower's campaign cost $8 million, while President Nixon's campaign cost, as far as I know, was $82 million. No one complained when a campaign cost $8 million. That is not a difficult sum for a political party to raise over 4 years.

Last year alone, a difficult year for the Republican fundraisers by any yardstick, the Republican National Committee raised $5 million, of which 85 percent was from contributions of $100 or less. Both parties can raise that kind of money from small contributions. The real problem was the advent of long campaigns with heavy media expenditures.

Consequently, the best way to cut down on the influence of big money in a campaign is not to dump the bills in the Government's lap, but to shorten the campaign itself. And that is precisely the cornerstone of this campaign reform legislation.

My legislation could mean giving up one of our most cherished rituals, the national political conventions. These circuses have become the political dinosaurs of the modern age, and it is time we let them go the way of the big city political machine and the smoke-filled room. Instead, every candidate for Federal office will have to appeal directly to the voters in order to get their party's nomination. This is the kind of reform which will be meaningful and effective without turning to a program of Government financing.

To those who are not convinced about the dangers of a Government-run system of campaign financing, I would like to refer to a passage from S. 3044 which reads:

> If the Secretary of the Treasury determines that monies in the fund are not, or may not be, sufficient to pay the full entitlement to all candidates eligible to receive payments, he shall reduce the amount to which each candidate is entitled. . . .

Now if that does not scare other Senators, it certainly scares me. I think that one of the principal lessons of Watergate is not only that Government can commit illegal acts to suppress dissent but that Government has enormous legal powers to suppress dissent and to play politics with the system.

So it is not the fact that money is involved. It is the amount of money. All we have done is shift the cost to the Federal Government; we have dropped it into the laps of the taxpayers of the United States. I do not think I have ever seen anything involving the Federal Government that cost less and less as time passed. In addition, everybody will pay, whether they want to or not.

I believe that whether it is politics, business, or unionism in this country, we have to earn our way. We have to earn respect and support.

Everyone is complaining about how power in Government is used to perpetuate itself. Here we have a bill to give Government even more of that power.

Let us have something that will stand the test of time. I hope Senators and their staffs will take the time to read the amendment I am presenting. It will shock some. But if we looked at it with an open mind, I think it will respond to some of the criticism that has been made with respect to incumbents. Any legislation that passes will not get rid of the incumbent advantage. Maybe it should be that every incumbent automatically becomes a candidate as of the first of the year in which the election is held. That would mean cutting down his exposure, and maybe that is good. There are many steps that can be taken if we really try to balance out the advantage an incumbent has over a challenger. But we will never get rid of the problem in its entirety. We can legislate on the subject, but the real problem will still confront us.

We can drive out the bad money without resorting to tax money. We can cut down the length of the campaign. We can replace political conventions with direct primaries. We can require full disclosure before, rather than after, the election.

The result of these reforms will be responsible and reasonable elections, conducted in full view of the people.

I honestly believe that in these proposals, we have a chance to reform the system in two important ways; First, by reducing the role of money in campaigns, and second, by involving the American people in the selection process.

That is the greatest guarantee against corruption. Our system is 50 percent selection and 50 percent election. It is the selection process which is now being denied to a majority of Americans. If we resolve these two issues, we will have tuned our political machinery to the times.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 2, line 1, strike all through page 86, line 17, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

TIME PERIOD FOR FEDERAL ELECTIONS

SEC. 2. The Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new title:

"TITLE V—TIME PERIOD FOR FEDERAL ELECTIONS

"FILING DATE

"SEC. 501. (a) No later than the first Tuesday of September preceding a regularly scheduled election, or 60 days preceding a special election, each candidate must file a registration statement with the State Secretary of State or the equivalent State official, in order to be eligible to appear on the primary or election ballot in such state or states. The registration statement shall include—

"(1) the identification of the candidate, and any individual, political committee, or other person authorized to receive contributions or make expenditures on behalf of the candidate in connection with the campaign;

"(2) the identification of any campaign depositories to be used in connection with the campaign;

"(3) an affidavit stating that no collections or expenditures have or will be undertaken in connection with the campaign prior to the filing deadline;

"(4) the identification of the party whose nomination the candidate will seek, or a statement that the candidate will seek to appear on the primary and election ballot as a candidate independent of any party affiliation.

"PRIMARY ELECTION

"SEC. 502. (a) All candidates for Federal elective office shall be nominated by means of a primary election to be held on the first Tuesday of October preceding the election, or thirty days preceding a special election. There shall be only one primary ballot or list of possible nominees for each party and one primary ballot or list for all nonpartisan candidates, and no candidate may appear on more than one such ballot or list. Each voter shall be entitled to vote for candidates from only one ballot or list.

"(b) Qualification of voters, determination of eligible parties, as well as rules and procedures for conducting the primary election shall be the responsibility of the States. Presidential electors and alternates shall be nominated by State political parties.

"PRIMARY ELECTION RESULT

"SEC. 503. The person receiving the greatest number of votes at the primary as a candidate of a party for an office shall be the candidate of the party at the following election: Provided, That any candidate who is the sole candidate for that office at the primary election, or who is only opposed by a candidate or candidates running on the same ballot or list of nominees and is nominated at the primary shall be deemed and declared to be duly and legally elected to the office for which such person is a candidate. Any independent candidate receiving at least 10 per centum of the total votes cast for the office for which he is a candidate at the primary, or a vote equal to the lowest vote received by a candidate seeking a party nomination who was nominated in the primary shall also be a candidate at the following election."

LIMITATIONS ON CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

SEC. 3. Section 608 of Title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 608. Limitations on contributions and expenditures

"(a) No person who is or becomes a candidate, or political committee for such candidate, in a campaign for nomination or in a campaign for election to Federal elective office may, directly or indirectly, in any way whatsoever—

"(1) accept or arrange for any contribution, or expend or contract for any obligation, prior to the filing deadline for the election; or

"(2) accept any cash contribution in excess of $50; or

"(3) accept any contribution, contract for any obligation, or make expenditures not budgeted and reported as provided by Section 434 of Title 2, United States Code, after a date two weeks prior to the scheduled election date; or

"(4) make expenditures or contributions in excess of $10,000 from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, or from such funds being contributed or expended through the use of a third party.

"(b) Any deficit incurred in connection with a campaign for nomination or election to Federal elective office shall constitute a violation of this section, and such deficit shall be paid only by means of contributions received under the supervision of and according to a procedure which shall have the prior approval of the Comptroller General.

"(c) Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine not to exceed $1,000, imprisonment not to exceed one year, or both."

SEC. 4. Title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding the following sections:

"§ 614. Contributions by political committees

"Political committees shall not make any contribution to any candidate, political committee, or other campaign for Federal elective office: Provided, That such committees may administer or solicit contributions, so long as such contributions are given directly by the initial contributor to a candidate or political committee.

"§ 615. No more than one political committee

"A candidate may establish no more than one political committee, which shall be in such candidate's own name; Provided, That the name of the committee, as well as the name of its chairman and treasurer, shall be filed with the Comptroller General immediately upon its formation; and should such a committee be established, all contributions received or expenditures made in connection with the campaign for nomination or election to Federal elective office shall be received or made by such committee and not by the candidate."

REPORTS

SEC. 5. Section 434 of title 2, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 434. One report by political committees or candidates

"(a) Each treasurer of a political committee supporting a candidate or candidates for Federal elective office—or each candidate, should such candidate not establish a political committee—shall file a report with the Comptroller General two weeks prior to a scheduled election date for such candidate or candidates.

"Contents of Reports

"(b) The report shall be cumulative, shall report with respect to any activity in connection with the candidacy, and shall disclose—

"(1) the full name and social security number of each person who has contributed to the campaign, together with the amount of such contributions;

"(2) the full name and mailing address of each person to whom a debt or obligation is owed;

"(4) the total sum of all contributions received;

"(5) the total sum of all expenditures;

"(6) the total sum of all debts and obligations."

PENALTIES

SEC. 6. (a) Section 441 of title 2, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 441. Penalties for violations

"Any person who violates any of the provisions of this subchapter shall be fined in an amount at least equal to three times the amount of any monetary violation, or, in the case of nonmonetary violations, such amount as will satisfy the provisions of this subsection. The moneys collected from the fine shall be spent by the violator for general publication or transmission, to the widest possible extent in the geographical area in which the campaign or election was held, of at least the content of the Comptroller General's findings. The means of such transmission or publication shall be determined by the Comptroller General, and shall require the complete expenditure of the fine, unless the Comptroller General determines that a lesser amount, determined by him, will achieve complete publication and transmission of the nature of the violation. An additional fine may be levied if the Comptroller General shall determine that, due to the nature of the violation, an additional amount is needed to properly publish the violation."

(b) Title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding the following section:

"§ 616. Penalties for violations

"Any person who violates any of the provisions of this subchapter shall be fined, in an amount at least equal to three times the amount of any monetary violation, or, in the case of nonmonetary violations, such amount as will satisfy the provisions of this subsection. The moneys collected from the fine shall be spent by the violator for general publication or transmission, to the widest possible extent in the geographical area in which the campaign or election was held, of at least the content of the Comptroller General's findings. The means of such transmission or publication shall be determined by the Comptroller General, and shall require the complete expenditure of the fine, unless the Comptroller General determines that a lesser amount, determined by him, will achieve complete publication and transmission of the nature of the violation. An additional fine may be levied if the Comptroller General shall determine that, due to the nature of the violation, an additional amount is needed to properly publish the violation."

COMPTROLLER GENERAL

SEC. 7. The Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by inserting the words "Comptroller General" wherever the words "supervisory officer" appear. The Comptroller General shall make such rules or regulations as may be necessary or advisable for carrying out the provisions of this Act: Provided, That any rules or regulations so promulgated shall be published in the Federal Register not later than December 31, 1975.

EFFECT ON STATE LAW

SEC. 9. The provisions of this Act, and of rules or regulations promulgated under this Act, preempt any provision of State law with respect to campaigns for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office (as such term is defined in section 301(c)).

PARTIAL INVALIDITY

SEC. 10. If any provision of this Act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the Act and the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 11. The provisions of this Act shall become effective on December 31, 1975.

AMENDMENT NO. 1081

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WEICKER) has just spoken of the indisputable advantages of incumbency. I would like at this time to focus on just one aspect of the truly michievous campaign financing proposal now under debate. I believe that S. 3044 might well be termed the Incumbent Protection Act of 1974. While I do not believe that those who drafted the bill intended to do so, they have nevertheless come up with a scheme whose practical effect will be to help us insulate ourselves from effective challenge.

I do not make this statement lightly, but only after a serious examination of the potential impact of the provisions of S. 3044. The evidence available suggests rather strongly that the spending limits included in this bill would help incumbents who might otherwise be targets of serious challengers.

This is most readily observed in relation to House races where figures can be fairly easily quantified because of the similarity of the districts in terms of population.

In this regard I would direct your attention to a Common Cause study of the 1972 elections entitled "The 1972 Congressional Campaign Finance—A Study by Common Cause."

The authors of the study are numbered among the principal supporters of public financing and use its results to bolster their case. But I am convinced that they misread their own data; that in fact it argues against public financing generally and the provisions of S. 3044 specifically.

In 1972 more than three-quarters of all House races were decided by pluralities of 60 percent or more. In these races the average winning candidate spent $55,000 or less and the average loser spent even less.

These races all took place in what political analysts like to call "safe" districts. The districts involved were either so totally dominated by one party that a serious fight for the seat impressed almost everyone as futile, or the seat was occupied by a personally popular incumbent who just was not about to be beaten.

The authors of the study apparently believe that real races might be run in these districts if enough dollars are poured into the campaigns of those challenging now firmly entrenched incumbents. I am not persuaded that this would happen.

For reasons outlined above the incumbents holding these seats are probably impervious to real challenge. Those running against them have not failed, because they have lacked funds; they have lacked funds because their campaigns were doomed to failure. Common Cause has simply confused cause with effect in a way that has led Mr. Gardner and his friends to precisely the wrong conclusions.

Supporters of incumbents and challengers alike in these districts were apparently reluctant to give to campaigns unlikely to be affected one way or the other by their contributions. Thus, as we shall see in a moment, the spending on both sides in these districts was significantly below the spending levels that prevailed in hotly contested races.

I must conclude, therefore, that in such districts the $90,000 per candidate allowed under S. 3044 will merely increase the level of spending without having any real impact on the final outcome.

The races in which the Federal subsidy and the limits associated with it will have an impact will take place in the 60-odd districts that might be considered marginal.

According to the same Common Cause study, only 66 House races were decided by less than 55 percent of the vote in 1972. These districts could be considered marginal by most standards and the victor in each of them had to fend off an extremely tough challenger.

Winners and losers alike spent more money in these races than was spent in the districts I have described as "safe." The cost to winners and losers alike in these districts averaged somewhat more than $100,000 each. As both the winners and losers spent about the same amount in these races, it suggests that the raising of funds needed for such campaigns is not too different. I will also admit that the limits imposed by S. 3044 might not have much of an effect in the average close race.

The real impact of the limits imposed by this legislation will occur in those races in which an incumbent finds himself in trouble and stands a chance of being defeated. Only 10 House incumbents were defeated in 1972 and in all but two cases the challenger had to spend significantly more than his opponent to overcome the advantages of incumbency.

The average spent by candidates who unseated incumbents in 1972 was $125,000 as opposed to the average of $86,000 those incumbents spent. Thus, it can be argued on the basis of these figures that a challenger must be able to outspend an incumbent opponent by a significant margin if he expects to beat him and that he will have to spend in excess of $100,000 to stand a realistic chance.

But what effect will the $90,000 limit imposed by S. 3044 have in these races? It is not at all unrealistic to assume that it will prevent challengers in marginal districts from overcoming the advantages inherent in incumbency. It is not at all unreasonable, in other words, to assume that those limits, had they been in effect in 1972, might have saved most, if not all, of those 10 incumbents.

If we are to enact legislation of this kind I believe we must either eliminate unrealistically low limits such as those incorporated in S. 3044 or eliminate the advantages of incumbency.

To help eliminate or at least minimize the advantages of incumbency I have decided to cosponsor legislation being introduced by the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH) that would allow candidates to send free mailings to all voters during the course of their campaign and at the same time deny incumbents use of the franking privilege for additional mass mailings after Labor Day in an election year.

But I would go even further. At an appropriate time, I will offer an amendment to S. 3044 that will allow nonincumbents to operate under a spending limit 30 percent higher than that applicable to incumbents.

I firmly believe that such an amendment is essential if we are to avoid the charge that we are "stacking the deck" in favor of our own candidacies as incumbents, as in fact we would be if we do not seek to affect our inherent advantages.

Mr. President, I send my proposed amendment to the desk and ask unanimous consent that if be printed of this point in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and printed, and will lie on the table, and, without objection, will be printed in the RECORD in accordance with the Senator's request.

Mr. BUCKLEY's amendment (No. 1081) is as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 1081

On page 13, line 16, insert the following after "504.", and renumber the succeeding paragraphs accordingly: "(a)(1) The expenditure limitations under this section shall be applicable to incumbent candidates only (unless otherwise specified). Nonincumbent candidates shall be subject to an expenditure limitation equal to 130 per cent of the limitation applicable to an incumbent for each of the offices specified under this section.

2. For the purposes of this section, an incumbent is defined as one who

(A) is presently holding the office for which he is a candidate; or

(B) is currently holding or has within five years held an office, the voting constituency of which is the same as, or includes the voting constituency of the office for which the individual is a candidate.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, for the third time in less than 9 months, we find ourselves debating fundamental, and some say radical, reform of our electoral process. In the wake of Watergate and the events of the past year, it is not surprising that considerable support has developed within the Congress for new concepts such as public financing of campaigns for Federal office. In fact, having listened to months of testimony about abuse and circumvention of existing statutes, I can sympathize with the temptation to abandon that system altogether in favor of some other approach. Public financing is definitely new, and it appears pure and absolute; but is it right?

Just over a year ago, the Senate voted unanimously to create the Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities. That committee was charged with the responsibility of investigating any and all potential wrongdoing associated with the 1972 campaign for President of the United States. It was also mandated to report its findings and recommendations to the Senate no later than February 28, 1974. That date has passed, but the committee has yet to submit its report. The reason, as most know, is because of the possibility that our findings might prejudice the trials of individuals allegedly involved in the crimes collectively known as Watergate.

Last summer, I implored my colleagues to withhold final consideration of any significant campaign reform until the duly mandated select committee had had an opportunity to fulfill the obligations required of it in Senate Resolution 60. However, in view of the delays which may continue for several months, I no longer feel it is reasonable to expect or request this of the Senate. Instead, I am now prepared to express my personal views on what reforms of our electoral process seem necessary.

Let me begin by stating my adamant opposition to the public financing of campaigns for Federal office. I think there is something politically incestuous about the Government financing and, I believe, inevitably then regulating, the day-to-day procedures by which the Government is selected. Obviously, it is neither reasonable nor desirable to expect a laissez-faire approach to the conduct of political campaigns. The Government has been involved in one way or another in the electoral process since we undertook our present form of government; and I have no doubt that the Government will increase its involvement in the future. However, if we continue to delegate responsibility for regulating campaigns to the bureaucracy, as we would do by enacting public finance, then I fear that a situation could arise in which the executive branch had the power to manipulate political campaigns in a manner which would make Watergate pale in comparison.

I think it is extraordinarily important that the Government not control the machinery by which the public expresses the range of its desires, demands, and dissent. And finally, I genuinely believe that a statutory prohibition against political contributions, whether it applies to primaries, general election campaigns, or both, may abridge the individual's first amendment right of freedom of political expression. It is one thing to impose a limit on the total amount of an individual contribution, for it can be argued that you are, in effect, equalizing everyone's opportunity for expression. However, when that opportunity is completely eliminated, then I believe that the Congress has exceeded its responsibility to protect the integrity of the electoral process. In rural jargon, we are burning down the barn to get rid of the rats; and in so doing, we are also eliminating an important form of public participation in our political process—participation which is already at an all-time low.

I realize that a Gallup poll published last September showed that 65 percent of the people interviewed thought public financing was a "good idea." But I also realize that a recent poll showed a majority of Americans had more confidence in their trash collectors than they did in the ability of Congress to effectively deal with the problems confronting this country. So, at a time when people are becoming increasingly skeptical about the use of their tax dollars, we are considering bankrolling political candidates to the tune of several hundred million dollars each election. I admit that in a Federal budget of over $300 billion, $300 million for political candidates is not that much. However, at the first indication that an individual who is supposedly running for public office is using tax dollars for anything other than that campaign, that is, assuaging his or her ego or generating customers for their business, I submit that a great many Americans will justifiably lower their estimation of the Congress even further.

But, having expressed my views on the evils of public financing, as I see them, it is fair to ask, "What do you plan to offer as an alternative, or how do you intend to reform our ailing electoral process?" I propose that we continue a system of private financing of campaigns for Federal office, but that we amend that system so as to broaden the base of participation and prevent the abuse of earlier campaigns. We could do this, in my judgment, by adhering to the $3,000 limitation on individual contributions included in S. 372 and S. 3044 and applying it separately to each primary, runoff, special, or general election campaign as provided for in both bills. Although many will contend that this would make it virtually impossible to raise enough money to run an effective campaign, especially for the relatively unknown challenger, we should look briefly at the facts.

Let us assume hypothetically that an expenditure limitation of 15 cents times the voting-age population of the country was imposed on each nominee for President during the general election campaign. According to my calculations, that comes out to around $24,000,000 per candidate. If $3,000 was the maximum an individual could contribute to a Presidential nominee, that candidate would have to find 8,000 people to contribute $3,000 each in order to meet the expenditure ceiling. There are over 210,000,000 citizens of this country; and obviously not all of them are old enough to vote, nor can afford to contribute $3,000 to a political candidate. However, I submit that there are far more than 8,000 people out there who would be willing to contribute $3,000 to a nominee for President; and it should not be that difficult to find them. I suspect that many believe it is difficult because we have normally aimed our fund-raising efforts at the people most capable of giving large amounts—the so-called fat-cats. But is that the proper approach? I do not believe so, for I am sure we could reap far better results by developing an effective method of broad, low-level solicitation.

I referred earlier to the terribly small amount of confidence a majority of Americans seem to have in their major governmental institutions. This is a problem which, though Watergate did not cause, it certainly has exacerbated. Moreover, it is a problem which could prevent even the most involved citizen from responding to the needs of a combination of Federal, State, and local candidates for public office. Consequently, I would propose that a clear and effective incentive be provided for those who are hesitant to contribute, and those who are not. I propose that the present tax credit of 50 percent of all political contributions made during a calendar year, up to $12.50 for an individual return, or $25 for a joint return, be increased to $50 for an individual return and $100 for a joint return, and that the figure of 50 percent be increased to 100 percent. That means that an individual can credit each dollar contributed to a political campaign in a calendar year, up to $50 for an individual return and $100 for a joint return. In this way, the contributor can control who receives the money and for what campaign it is used. Moreover, the Treasury Department is removed from any direct involvement in financing campaigns, thereby reducing the potential for bureaucratic manipulation or abuse. Obviously, the key to the success of this new tax credit proposal is education. The American people must be made fully aware that such an incentive for political contributions exists, as well as how that incentive works when they file their individual or joint tax returns. And if, in the near future, it appears that a 100-percent tax credit is no longer necessary to prompt adequate private financing, then we should consider reducing that credit back to the 50-percent level. However, for now, I would only urge that this proposal be given the most serious consideration as a viable, and in my judgment preferable, alternative to public financing.

I would also propose that the present dollar checkoff system be repealed entirely. Whereas an effective tax credit system would remove the U.S. Treasury from direct involvement in financing political campaigns, and would permit individual contributors to designate the recipient of their money, the dollar checkoff system does just the opposite. In fact, in S. 3044, unless an individual taxpayer specifies otherwise, $2 is automatically paid over to the Federal election campaign fund for use in campaigns in accordance with the provisions of the bill. The American taxpayer is not even allowed to designate the party that should receive the contribution, much less the specific candidate; and it is for this reason that I shall propose that this system be abandoned altogether.

I shall also propose that only individuals be permitted to make contributions to political campaigns. Only individuals can vote, and only individuals can decide who is on the ballot in the first place; so why should not only individuals be allowed to make political contributions? I do not think a corporation or a union should be allowed to contribute, they cannot now; but they do through AMPAC, BIPAC, COPE, and a half dozen other devices. Moreover, I do not think associations, committees, caucuses, or any other organization which aggregates funds from its members and gives those funds in the name of a cause or interest should be permitted to do so. After a full year of service on the Senate Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities, I am convinced that this would do more to eliminate the distortive effects of special-interest groups than any other proposal I have seen which permits private financing. This is not meant to imply that I oppose or in any way wish to diminish the persuasive capacity of lobbyists, whether they represent corporations, unions, or public interest groups. On the contrary, I have always felt that the most convincing argument available to the lobbyist, besides the individual merits of the particular issue, was not the lure of substantial financial support for sympathetic candidates, but rather the strength of a large bloc of voters which might be influenced by a stand taken on a particular issue. It should, instead, be totally incumbent upon the candidate to solicit the support of the individual voters and not specific groups; and it is for these reasons that I believe that only individuals should be permitted to contribute to political campaigns.

Essential to the success of any system of private campaign financing is complete public disclosure. S. 3044 deals very effectively, in my opinion, with the problems of disclosure and multiple campaign committees, treasurers, and depositories, cash contributions and expenditures, and an effective enforcement mechanism for prosecuting alleged violations of campaign statutes. However, there is one additional step which I consider important to the fulfillment of the public's right to examine the source and amount of individual contributions. That step is to establish a time certain before the election, say 10 days to 2 weeks after which no further contributions can be received. And then 3 to 5 days before the election, require that each candidate report completely the sources of his or her contributions. In this way, the public is given the full benefit of examining the candidate's sources of funds and drawing their own conclusions regarding the breadth of the candidates' appeal prior to the election rather than after the election has taken place. As it is now, candidates can withhold potentially damaging information on contributions until after the election has taken place, thereby hindering the public's ability to judge support until after it is too late. However, under my amendment, contributions received after the time certain would have to be returned, and no further funds could be solicited or received until after the election had taken place, and then, only if it were necessary to defray campaign debts.

I shall also propose that the lowest unit rate provisions of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, be repealed completely. I find something inherently unfair and inequitable about requiring local radio and TV stations, and the major broadcasting networks to offer advertising time, particularly prime time or "driving time," at the same rate that it is offered to their top commercial buyers—buyers that advertise 365 days a year and legitimately earn the lower rates. I do not question the right or authority of the Congress to regulate broadcast rates, for the history and record of Federal regulation is well established. What I do question, however, is the fairness to the broadcaster and to the other advertisers. If it is absolutely necessary to attempt to offset the extraordinary cost of broadcast advertising, then I propose that we do so at the prevailing rates and not at the lowest unit costs. In this regard, I would propose that a minimum amount of broadcast time be provided each legally qualified candidate for Federal office. Any candidate who wishes to purchase beyond the guaranteed amount would do so at the prevailing rate. In this way, the challenger would be afforded an opportunity to gain a moderate amount of public exposure without having to allocate an inordinate share of what are likely to be scarce resources just to approach the recognition factor of the incumbent.

Moreover, while guaranteeing a moderate amount of TV and radio time to qualified candidates, it would discourage the purchase of additional time by requiring the respective candidates to pay the prevailing advertising rates. In order for a candidate to qualify for this "guaranteed time," I would plagiarize the formula used in S. 3044 for major and minor party candidate eligibility. That formula requires that House, Senate, and Presidential candidates reach specific thresholds before public funds are made available on a dollar-for-dollar basis. I would require that the respective threshold be met before any advertising time was made available; and even then, I might require that an additional threshold be met later in order to insure the true intentions of the particular candidate. However, the thrust of such an amendment would be to help overcome many of the obstacles, primarily that of recognition, confronting the candidate who challenges an incumbent. In general, I oppose any form of public finance; and I realize that such a proposal might create some of the problems which I alluded to earlier. But, I am also aware of the inherent disadvantages facing a challenger in relation to an incumbent; and if anything is to be done in the realm of public financing to reduce those disadvantages, then I would prefer to see it done in the manner I have just described—at the prevailing rates and not at the lowest unit costs.

I shall also propose that overall expenditure limitations be eliminated if a system of private financing is retained with individual contributions strictly limited and fully disclosed. The reason, very simply, is that as long as the size and source of contributions are adequately controlled, particularly at the $3,000 level, then overall expenditure limitations, in effect, penalize the candidate for attracting a broad base of support. I do feel that we spend too much on campaigns and that something should be done to prevent the unnecessary expenditure of funds in political races which are not even close. However, in most cases, it seems that limits favor the incumbent, are arbitrary, and do not accurately reflect the changing costs of campaigning from year to year or from State to State. Thus, if we retain significant private financing, with the aforementioned conditions, then I shall propose that we eliminate the overall expenditure limitations.

I referred earlier to my concern that public participation in our electoral process appears to be at an all-time low. I should like to elaborate on that concern. It stems from the fact that in 1972, only 55.6 percent of the eligible voters in this country actually turned out to cast their ballots for President and Vice President of the United States. Obviously, different Presidential campaigns generate varying degrees of interest and enthusiasm among the voters; and races that are not even close, seldom attract a large turnout. However, a turnout of 55.6 percent, particularly at a time when the Federal Government is increasingly involved in our daily lives, is, in my mind, tragic. It is the clearest indication of all that a substantial number of Americans have grown disenchanted with politics and the electoral process; and it is one of the primary reasons why broad reform of that process seems warranted.

Such reform, in my judgment, should include not only campaign finance and so-called dirty tricks, but also the selection process itself. I believe we should examine voter registration requirements, the present primary system, national party conventions, the official length of political campaigns, election-day procedures, and even, perhaps, the electoral college—not all necessarily in conjunction with S. 3044, but rather as part of the overall debate on campaign reform.

As part of that debate, I would urge that serious consideration be given automatic registration of voters in Federal elections at age 18. The history of the United States has been a history of the extension of the voting franchise. Yet, even today, a significant number of our citizens are effectively prevented from participating in elections by complex and often archaic registration and residency requirements. The postcard voter registration bill passed by the Senate last year was an effort to deal with this problem, but I opposed it because of my concern for the potential for mail fraud and abuse of such a system.

Several Western nations, however, have already successfully implemented a form of automatic voter registration. In the Scandinavian countries, for example, and in Switzerland, every eligible citizen is registered ex officio in a voting register. Lists of voters are published by the elections authorities in advance of the election date. Any citizen whose name has not been included in the list then has until approximately a week before the election to correct the situation.

In the United States, however, citizens still must contend with what amounts to a perpetual registration process. I fully realize that some difficulties will arise in translating automatic registration to the realities of the American experience and attempting to reconcile it with State registration procedures. Perhaps social security numbers could be utilized to standardize this procedure, since more than 95 percent of eligible voters are already registered with social security. In any event, the concept deserves consideration, in my view; and, if workable, it could provide a valuable incentive to increase citizen participation.

I would also urge major reform of our present spasmodic system of Presidential primaries. There are essentially three alternatives in this regard: a refinement of the present system requiring the 25 States who hold Presidential primaries to do so on four or five specific dates at 2- or 3-week intervals; a single national primary for each party with a subsequent runoff unless one candidate polls more than 40 percent; and a system of regional primaries also held at specific intervals, but encompassing all of the country.

Of these three proposals, I am most inclined to support the one for a system of regional primaries in which every eligible voter who desires to participate in the selection of a party nominee can do so by voting in the regional primary which includes his State. This would permit the millions of Americans who support candidates who never get the party nomination to express that support in a meaningful way. It would also give them a personal stake in the election and increase the likelihood of their participation in the subsequent general election campaign. Specifically, I would propose dividing the country into four geographic regions, largely along the lines of time zones so as to avoid holding a "Southern" or a "New England" primary with a distinct ideological slant. I would make those regions of roughly equal population and would hold the four primaries at 3-week intervals beginning in early June and ending in early August.

The respective primary candidates would compete for State delegates who would be won according to the proportion of vote received in each State, rather than on a winner-take-all basis. Although I am aware of the high cost involved in running in regional primaries, the basic idea is to vastly expand the public participation in the nominating process and to significantly reduce the official length of Presidential campaigns.

As it is now, the first Presidential primary normally takes place in early March with the general election 8 months later, in November. But as I see it, there is absolutely no reason why that process must take that long. It exhausts the candidates, costs exorbitant sums of money, and eventually bores a great many people. The British do it all in less than 6 weeks, so why cannot we do it in less than 8 months? In this regard, I plan to offer an amendment to require that all primaries for Federal office be held no earlier than the first of June and no later than the 15th of August. This would significantly shorten the official length of campaigns for Federal office and permit the Congress to work at relatively full strength for a good 4 months before most Members are forced to return to their States or districts to campaign full time for the nomination.

I recall that before Senator Margaret Chase Smith left this body, she proposed that Senators be required to maintain a voting attendance record of 65 percent or better. Her argument was that once Presidential primaries began, the Senate found it difficult to obtain a quorum. I am not necessarily proposing that. I am proposing that we shorten the official length of campaigns and enable the Congress to accomplish as much as possible in the first few months of the year while attendance is still high.

With regard to the actual election day,

I recommend that we open and close polls all across the country at a uniform time and that they be opened a full 24 hours. The arguments for this are simple and well known; but briefly stated, this is the best way I know of to prevent the harmful effects of broadcast networks projecting the outcome of elections, based on very early returns, when polls in the Western States are still open. Moreover, 24 hours would maximize the individual's opportunity to vote before, after, or during work.

I would also recommend that the debate on the electoral college, that 18th century vestigial remnant, be reopened. Although I have no strong views one way or the other, I have long felt that in a democracy such as ours, there should be no alternative to the expressed will of a majority of the people; and the electoral college, as conceived and utilized for the past 200 years, constitutes just such an alternative. How can we ask for greater confidence and participation in our political process when we are not willing to entrust the American people with the ultimate decision? It is a difficult question to answer, but one which we should consider nevertheless.

In conclusion, Mr. President, seldom, if ever, has the need for a thorough reexamination of our electoral process been as great. Seldom, if ever, has the opportunity for reform been as ripe. We should seize that opportunity to greatly expand the suffrage and to encourage unprecedented participation in our political process.

Forty years ago, Al Smith said:

All the ills of democracy can be cured by more democracy.

I share that view and hope that we will apply that principle as we consider the pending legislation.

ORDER FOR TIME TO VOTE ON AMENDMENT NO. 1064

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the distinguished Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) will call up an amendment today. With his approval and that of the manager of the bill, after consultation with the distinguished Republican leader, I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the Allen amendment (No. 1064) occur precisely at the hour of 3:30 p.m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT ON TREATY AND MINIMUM WAGE CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, some time tomorrow the Senate will take up Executive U, 93d Congress, first session, a Treaty on Extradition with Denmark, which has been favorably reported unanimously by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday at the hour of 12 o'clock, there be a vote on the extradition treaty with Denmark and that following that vote the conference report on the minimum wage bill be taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 12 O'CLOCK TOMORROW

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in adjournment until 12 o'clock tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT FROM WEDNESDAY TO 11 A.M. ON THURSDAY

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, when the Senate completes its business tomorrow, it stand in adjournment until 11 a.m. on Thursday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that two of my staff members, Andrew Loewi and Brady Williamson, be allowed to the privilege of the floor during the consideration of S. 3044.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that amendments Nos. 1013 and 1014 be considered as having met the reading requirements of rule XXII under the standing rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, the bill before us today—the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974—is without question one of the most significant pieces of legislation the Senate has considered in the last 2 years. From Theodore Roosevelt to Henry Cabot Lodge to John F. Kennedy, the effort to establish public financing of Federal elections has continued throughout much of this century. Under the leadership of Senators LONG and PASTORE, the Congress has enacted public financing for Presidential general elections beginning in 1976. But now, through the considerable efforts of Chairman HOWARD CANNON and the Rules Committee, we have the opportunity to provide public financing for congressional campaigns as well.

This legislation (S. 3044) will provide for matching payments to primary candidates, for optional full funding for candidates in the general election, for strict contribution and expenditure limitations, for fair treatment of minor party and independent candidates. The bill incorporates the many sound provisions of S. 372, the campaign reform bill passed by the Senate last summer. These include the establishment of an independent Federal Election Commission, strengthened reporting requirements, full financial disclosure for Federal officials and candidates, tough penalties for violators, and repeal of the equal time provision of the Communications Act.

This legislation is sound, the need for it is obvious, and I certainly will support it. My only concern is that it does not go far enough, and I do plan to offer amendments to the bill.

No one contends that passage of this legislation—with or without strengthening amendments—will somehow automatically bring an end to all of the abuses that have come to light in the past 2 years. But surely this bill will help change a political process that in many ways has become the private preserve of the wealthy and special interests, and it will help us return to a Government responsive to all of the people.

Mr. President, at a time when public confidence both in the Congress and the Chief Executive are below 30 percent, at a time when a substantial majority of the American people favor public financing of elections, the failure to enact this legislation would be wholly irresponsible.

In one sense, President Nixon was right when he said that "1 year of Watergate is enough." We must never again subject this country to the kind of conduct that characterized election year 1972. It is time to bring a halt to the tyranny of the private dollar in the public's business, and the passage of S. 3044 will be a very significant step in that direction.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that two members of my staff, Ms. Francie Sheehan-Brady, and Mr. Angus King, be given the privilege of the floor during debate on S. 3044.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I call up my amendment which is at the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 75, line 19, redesignate subsection "(a)" as subsection "(a)(1)".

On page 75, line 19, strike the word "person" and substitute the word "individual".

On page 75, line 22, strike the word "person" and substitute the word "individual".

On page 75, following line 23, add the following new subsection:

"(2) No person (other than an individual) may make a contribution to, or for the benefit of, a candidate for nomination for election, or election, which, when added to the sum of all other contributions made by that person for that campaign, exceeds $6,000."

On page 75, line 25, strike the word "person" and substitute the word "individual".

On page 76, line 2, strike the word "person" and substitute the word "individual".

On page 76, line 2, strike the period and add the following:

"; or from any person (other than an individual) which, when added to the sum of all other contributions received from that person for that campaign, exceeds $6,000."

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, the purpose of my amendment is to correct an inequity in S. 3044 by distinguishing between individuals and organizations with regard to contribution limitations.

As reported, the bill places a $3,000 limitation on what a person—defined as an individual or an organization—may contribute to a candidate for the House or Senate in any election. Only a candidate's own campaign organization and the national and State party committees are exempt from this provision.

Obviously, the intent of the limitation is to eliminate the specter of bought elections and to lessen the role of big money in politics.

In effect, though, the limitation equates one wealthy contributor with an organization of hundreds or thousands. Thus it discriminates against the modest contributors who choose to give through an organization that reflects his philosophy or views.

The role of broad-based citizen interest groups—whether conservative—such as the Americans for Constitutional Action or the American Conservative Union—liberal—such as the National Committee for an Effective Congress or the Council for a Liveable World—or single issue—such as the League of Conservation Voters—is to help elect persons who support the group's views or ideology. The citizens who contribute to such organizations often do not have the time or expertise themselves to find out which candidates most nearly share their views, are most qualified, have real chances of winning, and so on. By giving through such committees, they participate in the most intelligent way in the election process.

It is important to point out, too, that the limitation of the Senate bill does not greatly restrict large business interests or labor union participation. Individuals within a corporation or company may each give "voluntarily" as they do now, or they may establish committees in several cities or States, as many as they wish, and each may contribute the full amount to any single candidate. Since most labor organizations, many trade associations and business groups already have State, local, and regional affiliates, they have an existing network to support candidates, and each of these committees may contribute the maximum to each candidate.

In contrast, large citizens' groups usually raise funds by mailings to the general public. They are known by their name and their reputation, and cannot suddenly split into many different committees with different names.

A legitimate political committee should be allowed to contribute at least twice as much as an individual. Some, including the New York Times in an editorial comment, have suggested that such organizations be allowed to contribute three or four times the amount a single individual can contribute. It has been pointed out that, under the present proposal, Mr. and Mrs. Clement Stone could legally contribute twice as much to a House or Senate candidate as could the National Committee for an Effective Congress, an organization of 80,000 persons.

My amendment would partially remedy this inequity by distinguishing between an "individual" and a "person," and by allowing an organization to contribute twice as much as an individual.

In effect, my amendment would allow that an organization could contribute the same amount that a married couple can now contribute under the pending bill.

Mr. President, I urge the adoption of my amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I have gone through this amendment and I would ask the Senator from Maine, do I correctly understand that his amendment would not change in any way the limit now imposed on an individual, which says that an individual can contribute not to exceed $3,000 to a political candidate?

Mr. HATHAWAY. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CANNON. That means that a husband and wife, therefore, could contribute $6,000, because each, as an individual, could contribute $3,000?

Mr. HATHAWAY. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator's amendment, then, would simply be that an organization, being defined as a person, would be in the same contribution category as a husband and wife would be, insofar as the limits were concerned.

Mr. HATHAWAY. The Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. CANNON. So that an organization that has many members which may be contributing small amounts could, then, instead of being limited to $3,000, the proposal now in the bill, would be limited to $6,000, the same amount a husband and wife together could give to a candidate.

Mr. HATHAWAY. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CANNON. This makes no other changes in the bill, then, is that correct?

Mr. HATHAWAY. It does not make any other changes in the bill.

Mr. CANNON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield?

Mr. HATHAWAY. I yield.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Obviously, if the Senator's amendment were to be adopted, the situation would be better than what we have today where organizations such as those having milk funds can make unlimited contributions. But I suggest that even with the Senator's amendment, it is disturbing that we would be delegating to some organization the decision as to who is to be supported to the extent of $6,000,

If we really want clean elections and clean campaigns, we would strictly insist that all contributions be made by individuals to the candidate of their choice. To me, that is the way it should be.

So I am opposed to the Senator's amendment. I believe he moves in the wrong direction. I think we should be moving away completely from elections that are supported and financed by special interest groups. This amendment would allow the special interest groups to be able to pick and choose in supporting the candidates rather than individual citizens.

Am I wrong in that assessment?

Mr. HATHAWAY. The Senator is partially right, and I hope to see the day when all individuals in this country take so much interest in our political process that we can have a system in which only individuals will be allowed to make contributions.

However, in the meantime we are faced with the reality that most individuals do not have that much interest or do not take the time to find out about the qualifications of all the candidates who are running for public office. With some exceptions, the organizations to which many of these same people belong are idealistic, legitimate organizations. They are not necessarily out to get somebody or have an ax to grind. They do operate conscientiously to further the interests of their members, and they provide a good vehicle for contributions which probably would not otherwise be made to political campaigns.

Certainly, the limitation of $6,000 is not a very large one to be placed upon such organizations. I mentioned in my earlier remarks organizations such as the Committee for an Effective Congress, which has 80,000 members. A $6,000 limitation for such an organization does not seem to be out of line.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I might agree with the Senator in terms of a Presidential election or a Senate election in a big State. But when we are talking about a congressional election in which the total amount of the funds is much smaller, I would suggest that two or three of these organizations which are essentially in league with one another could have a great impact on a congressional election.

With this amendment, it seems to me that we are right back again to the special interest control of elections. I thought that is what we are trying to move away from with this legislation.

While I regret to do it, I think we should have a rollcall vote on this amendment. Since the majority leader has announced that we will not have any rollcall votes today, I suggest for the consideration of the manager of the bill and the sponsor of the amendment that perhaps we could agree to have a rollcall vote on this amendment tomorrow, either before or after the 3:30 vote that is already scheduled.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Yes; I would be happy to agree to that.

Mr. CANNON. Would the Senator desire to withhold his amendment at this time? The agreement that is in effect permits Senator ALLEN to offer an amendment, to call it up this evening, and it will be voted on at 3:30 tomorrow. Would the Senator be willing to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. HATHAWAY. I would be happy to withdraw the amendment until the amendment of the Senator from Alabama is voted on at 3:30 tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Maine is withdrawn.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATOR HUGHES TOMORROW

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the two leaders or their des-ignees have been recognized under the standing order, the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES) be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS TOMORROW

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following the recognition of Mr. HUGHES on tomorrow, there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business, of not to exceed 30 minutes, with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION TOMORROW OF FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following the transaction of routine morning business on tomorrow, the Senate resume consideration of the unfinished business, S. 3044.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRIFFIN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask that the clerk please report amendment No. 1064, and that it be made the pending business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment was read as follows:

Amend S. 3044, as follows:

Strike TITLE I—FINANCING OF FEDERAL CAMPAIGNS in its entirety.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the title which the amendment would strike is title I of S. 3044, which is the first 24 pages and the first 4 lines on page 25 of the bill.

The amendment would strike from the bill all those portions thereof having to do with public financing of Federal elections. There is much good in the bill and if we can prune this public financing provision from the bill then there would be no objection to rapid consideration of the features of the bill and an early vote on the bill.

Mr. President, S. 3044 is an original bill coming from the Committee on Rules and Administration, coming as the result of and in compliance with an agreement reached on the floor of the Senate back in December of last year when the public finance rider to the debt limit authorization bill was under discussion. The distinguished Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON) and other members of the committee agreed that if that rider were dropped or if further insistence on its acceptance not be made that the Rules Committee would report a bill in some fashion to provide a vehicle for the Senate acting on the public financing of Federal elections idea.

The bill was reported to the floor of the Senate, considered in committee, passed by a vote of some 8 to 1, although some Members who voted for the bill stated that they were doing so only because commitments had been made that a bill would proceed from the Rules Committee to the floor of the Senate.

The Senator from Alabama voted against the reporting of the bill. He made no commitment on the floor of the Senate agreeing to a bill to be reported from the Rules Committee to the Senate.

Mr. President, this bill goes one step further than does the Kennedy-Scott-Mansfield-Mondale-Cranston, and others rider. The rider did not provide for the financing in whole or in part of House and Senate primaries. The Senate bill goes one step further than does the Kennedy bill.

Mr. President, why public financing? Why should we have public financing of Federal elections? Why not leave it in the private sector? Well, they say the lessons of Watergate indicate that the only answer to the abuses pointed out by Watergate is to turn the bill for campaign expenses over to the taxpayer, pay for Federal elections out of the public Treasury, rather than through contributions from individual citizens.

Mr. President, that magic is left to the public money. Why should that be less susceptible to abuses than private contributions? I submit that stricter regulation of Federal elections has not yet been tried; it has not yet been given a fair trial. The 1971 Federal Elections Campaign Act is deficient in many regards: Not only did it have a fatal flaw in it providing that contributions made up to April 7 of 1972 did not have to be reported, but also it makes no limitation on any campaign expenditures except for media advertising. That is the only thing that the limit is placed upon; no overall limit whatsoever on other types of advertising.

Newspaper advertising, radio, television, magazines, billboards—those are limited, I believe to 10 cents per person of voting age. The sky is the limit, though, on expenditures in all other fields. I submit that the other fields of campaign expenditures would be just as large or possibly much larger than in the field of media advertising. What about travel expenses; what about cars; what about brochures; what about campaign office staff, mass mailing, stationery, and postage? All these types of advertising have no limit under the present law, under the 1971 law.

But, Mr. President, the Senate was mindful of that deficiency and on July 30 of last year passed S. 372. That bill would place an overall limitation on campaign expenditures of all types, and whereas the present law makes no effective limitation on the amount that can be contributed by one contributor, as we witnessed, contributions in the hundreds of thousands of dollars were made in the 1972 campaign; S. 372 significantly leaves the campaign expense field in the private sector, and would place a limit of $3,000 per person per election. S. 3044 carries that same $3,000 limitation.

So if S. 372 places a limit on all types of expenditures, not just the media, if it puts an effective limit on that, if it limits campaign contributions to $3,000—and it does—and if it sets up an independent election commission—and it does—and if it limits cash campaign contributions to $50—and it does—it has gone a long way toward effective campaign reform.

There are many atrocities committed in the name of campaign reform, and I submit that public financing is one such atrocity. Every change does not necessarily mean it is a reform, and paying the bill out of the public Treasury is not reform—it is just shifting the burden to the taxpayer.

Mr. President, the Senate set up the Watergate Committee somewhat over a year ago, and one of its responsibilities was to make recommendations on the conclusion of its investigation, about improving the election process in Presidential races.

Well, the Watergate Committee is just about to wind up its work. I assume its report will be forthcoming shortly.

What does the Watergate resolution provide? Section 4, page 13, reads:

> The select committee shall have authority to recommend the enactment of any new congressional legislation which its investigation considers is necessary or desirable to safeguard the electoral process by which the President of the United States is chosen.

Mr. President, based on the votes taken in November and December, and the introduction by an absent Senator of amendments to this bill, my understanding is that 5 out of the 7 members of the Watergate Committee oppose public financing. And the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, just a few minutes ago, was speaking on the subject. I am confident other members of that committee will be on the Senate floor in the coming days, if not weeks, discussing this very same issue and speaking against public financing.

What is the big hurry? We have already passed a bill, S. 372, that does not provide for any public financing—not a dime. Well, that bill passed here on July 30 by a vote of 82 to 8, Mr. President, and the Kennedy-Scott-Mansfield-Cranston-Mondale-Pell rider was defeated by a vote of about 52 to 40 when it was offered as an amendment to that bill. That bill is over in the House, and we understand Chairman HAYS has agreed to act in the matter of campaign reform in the very near future.

Before they act on the bill in the House, an effort is made to change the entire thrust of the bill, change the entire position of the Senate, with regard to that legislation. What are our brethren in the House going to think about the Senate sending a bill, providing for private financing with strict regulation, and before they even act on it, the Senate changes its mind and sends an entirely new bill with an entirely different thrust? I believe the Senate should be a little more consistent than that. If we wanted public financing, it looks like it would have been a part of that bill.

What does this bill provide? It keeps that same provision in there about candidates who seek the presidential nomination of the major parties—and there are quite a number of those. When we have a full Senate here, we have quite a number who are seeking the nomination.

I might say, Mr. President, I have an amendment I expect to call up, before the bill is acted on finally, that would forbid any Member of the 93d Congress from receiving any public funds in aid of a Presidential nomination contest for the Presidency for the term starting January 20, 1977, which would be the start of the next term. We have a number here in the Senate who seek the Presidency or would accept the nomination if it came their way. The bill still provides that a Member of the Senate or a Member of the House could seek the Presidential nomination of one of the major parties, and if he were successful in getting $250,000 in contributions of $250 or less, then the Federal Treasury would write him a check for $250,000. It would match that $250,000, and then subsequent contributions of up to $250 that he received would be matched by the Federal Treasury. He could come in every 2 or 3 days and pick up his check or his matching funds. That keeps going until he has collected from the Federal Government some $7.5 million to aid him in his election campaign.

If Governor Rockefeller had contributions of that size and that amount, he could get $7.5 million out of the taxpayer's pockets.

Governor Connally in the same way. Governor Reagan in the same way. Senator PERCY in the same way. Senator KENNEDY in the same way. Their contributions up to $250 would be matched by the Federal Government up to $7,500,000.

In a colloquy this morning or early this afternoon with the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), I asked him if there is in the bill anything that sets a time beyond which or back of which contributions would not be matchable or could not be received. I asked how far back it went. He said that there was no limitation.

I asked,

Does that mean that a man who has been running for the Presidency for some while could come in and say, "In the last five years I have collected so many thousands of dollars in my race for the Presidency, and I want the Government to match that?"

I asked if that were possible under the bill.

The Senator from Rhode Island replied,

Oh, yes; that is possible under the bill.

Then I asked,

Looking prospectively, now—looking at future races—suppose a man says, "I do not believe I am ready to run for President in 1976. I want to wait and run in 1980, or perhaps I want to run in 1984."

I asked if it were possible for a candidate to seek the nomination in 1980 and participate in the Federal subsidy?

The Senator from Rhode Island replied,

Oh, yes, that is all right.

I asked,

Is it possible, then, to have one class of candidates seeking the 1976 nomination, another class seeking the 1980 nomination, another group seeking the 1984 nomination, and then another group seeking the 1988 nomination?

The Senator from Rhode Island replied,

Oh, yes. That is permissible.

Mr. President, I do not believe that the Senate wants to approve a measure of that sort.

I have thought that the Washington Post would be in favor of almost any sort of bill that was said to provide for public financing or that was said to be for election reform. But I have found, to my surpise, that in this morning's Washington Post, the lead editorial said this about S. 3044. The editorial did not call the bill by name.

Thus the Senate last summer sent the House a very solid bill to curb private giving and spending and to strengthen the enforcement of the election laws. And today the Senate begins debate on a very ambitious bill to extend public financing to all federal primary and general-election campaigns.

I have always felt that the Post had a strong interest in public financing.

That bill was passed by the Senate and is in the House today. We do not know that it is not going to be acted on. Either that bill or a similar bill will be acted upon.

Let me read further from the Washington Post editorial:

The problem with the latest Senate bill——

That is, S. 3044, the bill before the Senate—— is that it tries to do too much, too soon, and goes beyond what is either feasible or workable.

Mr. President, this is the Washington Post making sound suggestions, such as I have just read.

For one thing, the bill provides for full public financing of congressional general-election campaigns, and that is clearly indigestible in the House this year, since the House leadership even chokes on the more moderate matching-grant approach embodied in the Anderson-Udall bill. The more serious defects in the Senate bill involve the inclusion of primaries.

That is something the Senate committee, in its wisdom, added to the Kennedy-Scott-Mansfield-Mondale-Cranston-Pell rider approach. I continue to read:

No aspect of the federal elections process is more motley and capricious than the present steeplechase of presidential primaries.

That is a field which the committee bill is seeking to clarify.

Injecting even partial public funding into this process, without rationalizing it in any other way, makes little sense.

As for Congressional primaries, they are so varied in size, cost and significance among the States that no single system of public support seems justifiable without much more careful thought.

I commend a reading of this editorial in the Washington Post to Senators, particularly Senators who advocate the public financing aspect of the bill.

What the Senate bill seeks to do is similar to a rider that failed of adoption last year. It is a worse bill in some respects, as I have pointed out, in that it seems to include the primary campaigns of Members of the House and the Senate. It goes even further than the Kennedy-Scott rider of last year. The pending amendment, the amendment on which agreement has been made to vote tomorrow afternoon, is to strike out title I, but to leave the remaining title, "Title II—Changes in Campaign Communications Law and in Reporting and Disclosure Provisions of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971," title III, crimes relating to elections and political activities—that would be preserved—title IV, disclosure of financial interests by certain Federal officers and employees, and title V, related Internal Revenue Code amendments. Those four remaining titles would still stay in the bill.

The distinguished majority leader this morning sought to obtain unanimous consent to strike title V in order that it might be considered on legislation which had originated in the House of Representatives, that it might be attached to the legislation originating in the House and referred to the Ways and Means Committee over there.

Mr. President, what title V does in the bill before us—and we do not know whether it will stay in the bill or not; I rather believe when we come to a vote on the majority leader's motion it will be stricken—is as follows: Title V is divided into two parts. One deals with the checkoff. And speaking of the checkoff, this checkoff system that we have really provides the vehicle and the method and system by which the 1976 general election Presidential campaign can be financed.

It is estimated by the fiscal authorities that by 1976 there will be over $50 million in this checkoff fund. It is provided that the candidate of each major party shall get 15 cents per person of voting age throughout the country, which will run about $21 million; so the Democrats and Republicans can be financed under the present check-off laws. We do not need this S. 3044 to provide for the public financing of national Presidential elections. We do not need that at all.

million, and that the candidates will not accept any private contributions. I rather believe we are going to see some legislation later on increasing this amount of 15 cents per person of voting age through the check-off to a larger amount, so that the parties can run more expensive campaigns than a $21 million campaign. But $21 million, Mr. President, will be available to the Democrats in 1976 and to the Republicans in 1976, so it is really not necessary to have this measure if what we are talking about is Presidential elections. If we want to finance the Presidential election of 1976, it is already provided for. It already comes under the provisions of existing law.

Now, this check-off provision provides for double that amount. They do not think it is enough, so they want to double it. That would be $2 for a single person, $4 for a couple, and there is a nice little gimmick there, Mr. President, that if they do not check it off, it is assumed they did check it off. So, if they do not say they do not want it, it is assume that they do want it.

Mr. President, I do not believe we need these changes in the check-off law, and I will be glad to see the majority leader's motion carry when it comes up for consideration.

Of course, under the present deductions of credits allowed, in addition to the check-off, there is something entirely different; on the income tax, you are allowed either credits or deductions for contributions you make to political campaigns. So under this public financing on a mixed type deal, mixing public funds and private funds, the Government would be paying, through those deduction and credit provisions of the income tax law, what the individual put in, and then the Government will match what it has already given the taxpayers to put in.

So, actually, the taxpayer would not be putting in anything on small contributions up to $50 that it provides, I believe, for a credit on the tax, and $200 for a couple on a deduction. So the Government, under this mixed plan of the bill before us, would be matching private funds with public funds when it has already given the taxpayers the money to put in on the private fund basis up to a certain amount. It would be the Government paying both ends of it.

Mr. President, I understand that one of the distinguished sponsors of this legislation would like to address the Senate, and I shall yield the floor at this time and continue with the remainder of my remarks at a later time.

I yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Carey Parker of my staff may be present on the floor during the consideration of S. 3044.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. I am pleased to give my support to S. 3044, the election reform bill now before the Senate. No bill in this Congress is more important.

In large measure, how we deal with the pending legislation will determine the long-run health of our democratic system of government in the years to come.

For that reason, I am especially pleased to commend Senator HOWARD CANNON, the chairman of the Rules Committee, and Senator CLAIBORNE PELL, the chairman of the Elections Subcommittee, for the far-reaching bill they have guided to the Senate floor, especially title I, which deals with public financing of elections. Since most of the debate on the bill is likely to concern the bill's approach to public financing, I would like to address my remarks today to that issue.

A detailed summary of the public financing provisions of S. 3044 is attached as an appendix to my remarks. In essence, these provisions do two things:

First, the bill takes Senator RUSSELL LONG's dollar checkoff, the imaginative device enacted by Congress in 1971 for public financing of Presidential general elections, and extends it to Senate and House general elections. Under the checkoff, full public funding will be available for the general election campaigns of candidates of the major political parties, and proportional public funds will be available for candidates of minor parties.

Second, in a genuine breakthrough, the Rules Committee bill does not stop with public financing of general elections. It also offers public financing for all primaries for Federal office—President, Senate and House—through a system of matching public grants for small private contributions.

Thus, S. 3044 proposes a system of comprehensive public financing for all Federal elections.

Taken together, these provisions of the bill can spark a renaissance in American political life, because public financing of elections is the answer to many of the deepest problems facing the Nation, especially the lack of responsiveness of government to the people. Only when all the people pay for elections will all the people be truly represented in their government.

At a single stroke, we can drive the money lenders out of the temple of politics. We can end the corrosive and corrupting influence of private money in public life. Once and for all, we can take elections off the auction block, and make elected officials what they ought to be—servants of all the people instead of slaves to a special few.

Amid so much that is negative today—the paralysis of our Nation's highest leadership, the increasing probability that the President will be impeached, the resignation of a Vice President, the indictments of many former highest White House aides, the sick economy soaring upward into inflation and driving downward into recession—amid all these issues, reform of campaign financing stands out like a shining beacon, as the most positive contribution Congress can make to end the crisis over Watergate, and restore the people's shattered confidence in the integrity of their Government.

Most, and probably all, of the things that are wrong with politics and public office in this country today have their roots in the way we finance the campaigns in which the Nation's highest officials are elected.

We get what we pay for. As a result, we have the best political system that money can buy, a system that has now become the worst national scandal in our history, a disgrace to every basic principle on which the Nation stands.

Who really owns America Who owns Congress? Who owns the administration? Is it the people, or is it a little group of big campaign contributors? Take seven examples that are obviously current today:

Does anyone doubt the connection between America's energy crisis and the campaign contributions of the oil industry?

Does anyone doubt the connection between America's reluctance to enforce effective price controls and the campaign contributions of the Nation's richest corporations, especially the $100,000 corporate capitation tax imposed by the managers of President Nixon's reelection campaign in 1972?

Does anyone doubt the connection between America's health crisis and the campaign contributions of the American Medical Association and the private health insurance industry?

Does anyone doubt the connection between the massive tax loopholes in the Internal Revenue Code and the campaign contributions of those who enjoy the benefits of such loopholes?

Does anyone doubt the connection between the crisis over gun control and the campaign contributions of the National Rifle Association?

Does anyone doubt the connection between the transportation crisis and the campaign contributions of the highway lobby?

Does anyone doubt the connection between the demoralization of the foreign service and the sale of ambassadorships for private campaign contributions?

These areas are only the beginning of the list. The problem is especially urgent and pervasive today, because of Watergate and the soaring cost of running for public office. But if 1972 was unique at all in campaign financing, it was unique only in the unscrupulous intensity and efficiency with which large private contributions were so successfully solicited.

Corruption or the appearance of corruption in campaign financing is not a new phenomenon. It affects both the White House and the Congress. In fact, I would venture that for at least a generation, few major pieces of legislation have moved through the House or Senate, few major administrative agency actions have been taken, that do not bear the brand of large campaign contributors with an interest in the outcome.

Watergate did not cause the problem, but it may well offer the last clear chance to solve it. Through public financing, we can guarantee that the political influence of any citizen is measured only by his voice and vote, not by the thickness of his pocketbook.

To the man in the street, as the recent polls make clear, politics in American life has now sunk to the depths of public service in the heyday of the notorious just as the spoils system finally sank of spoils system of the 19th century. And its own scandals, incompetence and corruption, and gave way to the appointed civil service based on merit we know today, so the spoils system of private campaign financing is sinking under the scandal of Watergate, giving way to a new era of elected public service, based on public financing of elections to public office.

It is clear, however, that public financing is not a panacea for America's every social ill. It is not a cure for all corruption in public life. It is not a guarantee that those who enter public service will be any wiser in solving America's current problems. What it does mean is that public decisions will be taken in the future by persons beholden only to the public as a whole, free of the abuses that have landed America in the dock in the eyes of democratic nations throughout the world, free of the appearance of special influence and corruption that have done so much in recent years to bring all government to its present low estate.

There are a number of issues which are being raised in connection with public financing, and which we will discuss in detail in the present debate.

PAST ACTION BY THE SENATE ON PUBLIC FINANCING

First, the bill is not being rushed through Congress prematurely. The principle of public financing has received extensive analysis by Congress over many years, especially by the Senate. In fact, the present debate marks the fifth year in the past decade in which the Senate is engaging in major floor debate on public financing legislation:

1966 saw the birth of the original dollar checkoff legislation, sponsored by Senator LONG and signed into law by President Lyndon Johnson.

1967 saw that law delayed, caught in the crossfire of the then emerging passions over the 1968 Presidential election.

1971 saw the act revived, and again signed into law, this time by President Richard Nixon.

And, in the wake of Watergate, 1973 saw the first attempted extension of the checkoff to other Federal elections, in a measure passed initially by the Senate, but later killed by a Senate filibuster mounted by those unwilling to let the majority work its will.

There is a Rip Van Winkle tone to arguments of those opposed to public financing. We already have public financing for Presidential elections. It is already a Federal law. It is already printed on the statute books.

Surely, Congress is not about to roll back the clock on the dollar checkoff by repealing its provisions. The issue now is whether to extend the dollar checkoff, by applying its provisions to Presidential primaries and to Senate and House elections.

I say, if public financing is the answer to the problems of private money and political corruption in Presidential elections, then it is also the answer to the problems of private money and political corruption in other Federal elections, too. If public financing is good enough for President, it is good enough for the House and Senate, too.

PUBLIC FINANCING IS NOT TAXATION WITHOUT REPRESENTATION

Second, to those who say that public financing of elections is taxation without representation, I reply that taxation without representation is what we have today, with a system of campaign financing that turns elected officials into vassals of their big contributors.

If we want a President and Congress who represent all the people, then all the people have to pay the cost of their campaigns for public office.

Similarly, to those who say that public financing is a raid on the Federal Treasury by candidates for public office, I reply that the real raid on the Treasury is the raid that is going on today, the raid that is costing taxpayers tens of billions of tax dollars a year in undeserved privileges and benefits, bought by the private campaign contributions of wealthy donors and special interest groups.

Moreover, under the dollar checkoff method of public financing now being widely used on this year's tax returns, it is clear that no one's tax dollars are being taken for public financing against his will. No tax dollars go into the election fund at all unless a taxpayer checks the box on his return.

If the dollar checkoff works, it means that every dollar in funds for public financing is coming from an individual taxpayer who has given his consent. That is a complete answer to those who say that taxpayers should not be forced to pay for political campaigns, and that public officials should not be spending public money on themselves.

True, the new Senate bill would enable any deficits in the checkoff fund to be made up by congressional appropriations. But the allocation of tax dollars for financing elections is no different in principle from the allocation of tax dollars for any other purpose.

Not every citizen approves the way every tax dollar is spent. The most obvious example is Vietnam—over a period of more than a decade, America poured more than a hundred billion tax dollars into the Vietnam war, over the continuing opposition of what began as a small segment of the population, but finally became a majority of Congress and the Nation.

To some, public financing of elections may not be the most desirable use of public dollars. But it is a vast improvement over private financing.

We do not let wealthy private citizens pay the salaries of the President and Senators and Congressmen. Why should we let wealthy private citizens pay the cost of their campaigns?

As with many other Federal spending programs, some citizens may oppose the way Congress decides that particular tax dollars shall be spent. But to call such spending "taxation without representation" is a distortion of one of democracy's greatest principles and a travesty on one of America's proudest slogans.

THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF PUBLIC FINANCING

The third important issue concerns the questions that have been raised about the constitutionality of public financing. I believe that the language of the Constitution and a long line of precedents in the Supreme Court, going back to the 19th century, establish ample authority for Congress to enact this legislation.

In each of the major areas where first amendment and other constitutional overtones are present, especially in the treatment of minor parties and the generous role carved out for independent private spending, the Senate bill proceeds with clear regard for basic legal rights.

No one—no candidate or contributor—has a constitutional right to buy an election. To suggest that Congress cannot enact this measure is to deny democracy the right of self-survival.

Surely, with 535 experts preeminent in the field, Congress has the constitutional power to correct a clear and present evil it recognizes in the arena of elections.

To paraphrase the famous words of Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, challenging Supreme Court decisions thwarting progressive social legislation at the turn of the century, the Constitution does not enact Mr. Herbert Kalmach's political ethics.

And so, I am confident the Supreme Court will uphold the pending legislation if it passes Congress and a challenge is ever brought.

THE ROLE OF POLITICAL PARTIES UNDER PUBLIC FINANCING

Fourth, contrary to the premature obituaries being offered, public financing is not a nail in the coffin of the two-party system in America. It will not diminish in any substantial way the role of political parties in the Nation.

To the extent that public funds go to candidates themselves instead of to the parties, the Senate bill simply reflects the existing reality of campaign spending, in which the role of the candidate is and must be paramount. Congress settled this issue in 1967 and ratified it again in 1971, and that is where it rests today.

In two of its provisions, moreover, the Senate bill specifically enhances the parties' role:

By conferring independent spending authority on party committees at the national and State level, over and above the candidates' own spending limits, the bill establishes a specific role for the parties in their own right, free of the candidates' control.

And, by prohibiting expenditures over $1,000 by a candidate for President unless the expenditure has the approval of the party's national committee, the bill guarantees a substantial supporting role for the parties in the national campaigns.

On balance, therefore, far from damaging the parties, the prospects are good that public financing will in fact be a useful counterbalance to the forces driving the two-party system apart and splintering modern politics.

Realistically, public financing by itself is not a lever strong enough to rejuvenate the political parties in America. But if that is the direction in which the larger political and social forces now at work are moving, then public financing will contribute significantly to the goal.

THE INADEQUACY OF FULL DISCLOSURE

Fifth, to those who say go slow, that limits on total campaign spending and limits on private contributions are enough for now, that all we need is full reporting and disclosure. I reply that sunlight is too weak a disinfectant, that we should not be satisfied with timed steps today, when Watergate and the experience of 1972 prove that bolder ones are needed.

The Nation had an ample full disclosure law on the statute books for most of the 1972 campaign. True, as we now know, there was a scramble by some of the largest donors to make their contributions before April 7, 1972, the date the disclosure law became effective.

But, as the recent report of the General Accounting Office makes clear, vast amounts of private contributions were made and duly reported after April 7 as well. Wealthy contributors with special interest money barely missed a stride under the full disclosure law.

No one is inhibited by full disclosure from making a sizable contribution, if that is the investment he thinks is needed to protect his special interest. And, as Watergate makes clear, if the pressure is great enough, the money will be found and the contribution will be made in secret, in flagrant violation not only of the disclosure law but also of other criminal provisions in the election laws, such as the prohibition on corporate contributions.

When some of the most distinguished corporations in the Nation—familiar names like American Airlines, Goodyear Tire, Gulf Oil, and Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing—confess to blatant crimes involving hundreds of thousands of dollars in illegal corporate contributions, and then compound their crimes by using foreign agents and laundered foreign bank accounts to cover up the trail, we begin to understand the irresistible financial pressures that are corrupting our national life and destroying our democracy.

The basic defeat of a full disclosure law is that disclosure, by its nature, will not work. Too often, the requirement of disclosure is easily evaded. And even where disclosure is made, it will never be full enough, because a donor will never disclose the things he wants in return for the contribution he is making.

A separate problem in relying on the disclosure-contribution-spending-limit approach, without public financing, is that Congress would be aiming in the dark. Therefore, the danger exists that the limits would be set so high that they would be meaningless as real reform, or so low that they will break the back of private financing, without leaving any realistic alternative in its place.

The pending Senate bill steers a middle course, avoiding both extremes. It sets the contribution limit at $3,000 per individual per campaign—low enough to prohibit clearly excessive private contributions, but high enough to allow a candidate to run his campaign entirely on private funds, if that is the route he chooses.

In addition, the bill offers candidates the alternative of public funds for both their primary campaigns and their general election campaigns, at realistic levels that not only are high enough to avoid any reliance at all on large private contributions, but also are high enough to enable any serious challenger to get his message to the people. No one can fairly say that in S. 3044, the Senate is writing a dream bill for incumbents.

The application of S. 3044 to primary elections illustrates the cautious approach of the bill to the issue of public financing:

Any candidate may choose to finance his campaign entirely through private contributions, at $3,000 per donor.

Or, he may obtain matching grants of public funds for each $100 contribution in congressional primaries, or each $250 contribution in Presidential primaries.

For example, for each $3,000 a Senate candidate needs to finance his campaign, he must decide whether it is easier to raise the full amount from a single donor, or to raise it from 15 donors of $100 each, whose contributions will be matched by $1,500 in public funds to reach the $3,000 level. In effect, the $3,000 contribution ceiling will function as a safety valve in the event that the novel concept of matching grants fails to work in practice.

Equally important, to qualify for any public funds at all for his primary campaign, the candidate must meet the bill's substantial test of raising a high threshold of $100 contributions—20 percent of his spending limit in the case of a Senate primary. As the threshold provisions make clear, the bill offers no easy access to the Treasury for political candidates seeking a joyride at the taxpayers' expense. No one will be entitled to public funds until he satisfies the threshold, and thereby meets the bill's stiff test of the seriousness of his candidacy.

THE ROLE OF PRIVATE FINANCING

Sixth, contrary to some reports, the public financing provisions of the bill are in no sense mandatory. The bill does not prohibit private financing, and it certainly does not prohibit small private contributions.

In fact, it provides strong incentives for small contributions in primaries, since it offers matching public funds only for the first $250 in private contributions for Presidential primaries and the first $100 in primaries for the Senate and House.

Private contributions also have a role to play in general elections, since major party candidates will have the option of relying entirely on private funds, entirely on public funds, or on any combination in between.

And in both primaries and general elections, the bill provides new incentives for small private contributions by doubling the existing tax credit and tax deduction available for such contributions.

In those respects, the bill recognizes the vigorous differences of opinion on the proper role of small private contributions. Some feel that such contributions are an essential method for bringing citizens into the system and encouraging popular participation in politics.

Others, like myself, feel that there are better ways to bring a person into the system than by reaching for his pocketbook, and that the best way to a voter's heart is through his opinions on the issues not through the dollars in his wallet.

As it should, the bill accommodates both views, letting each candidate "do his own thing," without forcing any candidate into a rigid formula for financing his campaign.

In this respect, S. 3044 is an improvement over the 1971 dollar checkoff law, which prohibits a person who accepts public funds from accepting private contributions. Under S. 3044, there is greater flexibility—a candidate can select the mix of private and public funds he wants for his campaign, such as 50–50 or 80–20, and is not obliged to accept public funds on an all-or-nothing basis.

For that reason, I am opposed to alternative proposals that would turn public financing for general elections into a compulsory mixed system of partial public funds and partial private contributions, with or without matching grants.

Last November, in the floor debate on the public financing amendment to the Debt Ceiling Act, the Senate voted 52–40 against a proposal to cut the amount of public funds in half and to require the remainder to be raised in private contributions. As Senator JOHN PASTORE succinctly put it in the floor debate, in opposing such a mandatory mixture of public and private financing:

> Either we are going to have or not going to have public financing. If we are going for public financing, let us go for public financing. If we are not going to have it, let us not have it. What we have here [in the proposal for a mixed system] is a hermaphrodite.

If participation in politics through small private contributions is the goal, then the dollar checkoff is already achieving it. More than 4 million taxpayers have used the checkoff so far in 1974. At the current rate, 12 million taxpayers will have used it by the time all returns are filed on April 15. That is a world record for public participation in campaign financing, a tribute to the workability on the "one voter-one dollar" approach to public financing enacted in 1971.

Further, it is by no means clear that it is feasible for a large number of general election campaigns across the country to be run on small private contributions.

The Goldwater campaign in 1964, the McGovern campaign in 1972, and the Democratic National Committee's telethon in 1973 are good examples of successful fundraising through small private contributions, but they prove only that such fundraising may work in the unique circumstances involved in those campaigns.

They do not prove that the method will work when every Senate, House and Presidential candidate is tapping the pool of small contributors.

The net result of such a system applied to all elections may simply be to put a premium on the best-known candidate, or the candidate who starts the earliest or who hires the best direct-mail expert as his fundraiser.

Nor would it be desirable, in my view, to adopt a program of matching grants for small private contributions as the form of public financing for general elections.

In the case of primaries, a system of matching grants is appropriate and is the method adopted by S. 3044. In fact, matching is the only realistic method of public financing in primaries, since it is the only realistic way to identify those who are serious candidates. The candidates who deserve public funds are those who have demonstrated broad appeal by raising a substantial amount of private funds from small contributions. Thus, if we are to have any public financing of primary elections, it must be accomplished through matching grants.

In the general election, however, the nomination process has already identified the major party candidates who deserve public funds. It is appropriate, therefore, as S. 3044 provides, to give them the full amount of public funds necessary to finance their campaigns, with the option for every candidate to forgo all or part of the public funds if he prefers to run on private contributions.

Thus, full public funding in the general election gives a candidate maximum discretion in running his campaign. If an extra layer of private spending is allowed, all candidates would be obliged to raise the extra amount as a guarantee that they would not be outspent by their opponents.

As a result, all candidates would be forced into the mandatory straitjacket of spending time and money to raise small private contributions, even though many candidates would prefer to spend that time and money in more productive ways in their campaigns.

A system of matching grants in general elections would be especially dangerous to the existing two-party system, since it might encourage splinter candidates—for example, a candidate narrowly defeated in a primary would be encouraged to take his case to the people in the general election as an independent candidate or as a third party candidate. Under S. 3044, by contrast, a third party candidate with no track record from a past election would still be able to obtain public funds, but only retroactively, on the basis of his showing in the current election.

Thus, in its provisions offering full public funds on an optional basis for general elections, S. 3044 avoids the waste, pitfalls, and obvious dangers to the election process of a mixed system of public-private financing or a system of matching grants, and I urge the Senate to approve it.

THE EFFECT ON BUSINESS AND LABOR

Seventh, we must lay to rest the specter that public financing will fracture some presumed election compact between business money and labor manpower in American public life.

That view contains a basic fallacy, because it paints a picture of political life that no candidate would recognize. The impact of public financing will be approximately equal on both business and labor, because both business and labor depend primarily on money and large campaign contributions to support the candidates they favor.

Under public financing, neither business, nor labor, nor any other interest group will be able to purchase influence or any other special benefit. But neither will they have a monopoly on the manpower or on the energy and ability of those who are willing and eager to participate in political campaigns.

THE COST OF PUBLIC FINANCING

Eighth, to those who say we cannot afford the $90 million annual price tag on the public financing provisions of S. 3044, I say we cannot afford not to pay the price. Dollars for public financing are a bargain at any standard, because they are dollars invested now that promise rich dividends in public service for America in the future.

Think what that price tag really means. For about the cost of a single week of the Vietnam war, for less than a tenth of a cent a gallon on the price of gasoline each year, for less than 50 cents a person each year, we can take the step best calculated to clean the stables of our Government and to bring integrity back to politics.

We trust candidates for Federal office, once elected to the White House and to Congress, to spend over $300 billion in public funds in the annual Federal budget. Why should we hesitate to trust candidates with $90 million a year in public funds for their election?

Through the democracy of the dollar checkoff, we can spread the cost of campaign financing broadly among all taxpayers. Thanks to the good faith efforts of the Internal Revenue Service to publicize the checkoff on this year's tax returns, the procedure is working reasonably well today—15 percent of the returns filed so far in 1974 are using the checkoff now, already a fivefold increase over 1973.

My hope is that the use of the checkoff will increase between now and April 15, as taxpayers become increasingly familiar with the plan. At the present rate, the checkoff will be ample to finance the 1976 Presidential election, but more is needed. To pay for public financing of other elections, the rate of use of the dollar checkoff will have to double once again, which means that one out of every three taxpayers must use the checkoff if supplemental appropriations are to be avoided.

Eighty million taxpayers are voting on their tax return this year. The votes they cast with the Internal Revenue Service between now and April 15 will be some of the most important votes they ever cast, because they are votes for honest, fair and clean elections.

A totally new experiment in American democracy is underway, an experiment as significant in its way as the school desegregation and reapportionment decisions by the Supreme Court in the 1960's, or the civil rights and 18-year-old vote legislation passed by Congress in recent years.

In sum, public financing of elections means no more Watergates. It is the wisest possible investment the American taxpayer can make in the future of his country. If it works, our elections will once again belong to all the people of the Nation. The stage is set for Congress to seize this historic opportunity to bring democracy back to health. May future generations say that we were equal to the challenge.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a table showing the current results under the dollar checkoff, and an outline of S. 3044, may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OUTLINE OF S. 3044—PUBLIC FINANCING FOR FEDERAL ELECTIONS

PURPOSE

1. S. 3044 builds on existing law, which provides public financing for Presidential general elections, by extending its provisions to include public financing for Presidential primaries and for Senate and House general elections and primaries.

EXISTING LAW

2. The existing law is Senator Russell Long's "Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act."[1] known as the dollar checkoff. The Act, as passed by Congress in 1971 and amended in 1973, established a program of public financing for Presidential general elections, to go into effect for the 1976 election. Under the Act, taxpayers are authorized to designate that $1 of their taxes ($2 on joint returns), shall be available for a "Presidential Election Campaign Fund," established on the books of the Treasury. Under the law, the designated amounts must be transferred into the Fund under a specific appropriation enacted by Congress. Once transferred to the Fund, the amounts will be apportioned among eligible major and minor party candidates in the Presidential general election. The 1973 amendments eliminated the so-called "Special Accounts" in the Fund, and left only a "General Account," to be allocated by formula among Presidential candidates. The program is administered by the Comptroller General.

GENERAL PROVISIONS ON PUBLIC FINANCING

3. S. 3044 establishes a Federal Election Campaign Fund in the Treasury as an expanded version of the existing Presidential Election Campaign Fund, to be funded through the dollar checkoff and general appropriations acts of Congress. Payments from the Fund will be made to eligible major and minor party candidates in primaries and general elections for all Federal offices—President, Senate, and House.

4. The bill increases the amount of the dollar checkoff from the existing level of $1 ($2 on a joint return) to $2 ($4 on a joint return).

5. The bill modifies the checkoff to provide an automatic designation of tax dollars into the Federal Election Campaign Fund, unless taxpayers indicate on their returns that they do not want the designation made.

6. The bill authorizes Congress to appropriate funds to make up deficits left in the fund after the operation of the dollar checkoff.

7. The program will be administered by a new Federal Election Commission. The Commission will certify a candidate's eligibility for payments, and be responsible for conducting detailed post-election audits and obtaining repayments when necessary. The Commission will also administer the reporting and disclosure provisions and the contribution and expenditure ceilings of the Federal election laws.

8. There are heavy criminal penalties for exceeding the spending limits, and for unlawful use of payments, false statements to the Commission and kickbacks and illegal payments.

9. The provisions of the bill will go into effect for the 1976 Presidential and Congressional general elections and primaries.

10. The cost of the public financing provisions of the bill is estimated at $223 million in a Presidential election year, and $134 million in the off-year Congressional elections. Thus, the total cost of the program over the four year election cycle is $358 million, or an average cost of about $90 million a year. The cost estimates for each election are as follows:

	President	Senate (33 seats)	House
Primaries	$12,000,000	$1),800,000	$31,000,000
General elections	47,000,000	21,000,000	69,000,000
Total	39,000,000	31,000,000	100,000,000

PRESIDENTIAL, SENATE AND HOUSE GENERAL ELECTIONS

11. Except as indicated, the provisions of S. 3044 applicable to general elections for Federal office are essentially identical to those now applicable to Presidential general elections under existing law. In effect, S. 3044 extends the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act of 1971 to Senate and House elections.

12. Under existing law, public financing is available as an alternative to private financing for Presidential elections. Candidates have the option of public or private financing, but candidates electing public finnacing may not also use private financing, except in cases where the available public funds are insufficient to meet the candidate's full entitlement.

Under S. 3044, an eligible candidate has the option of accepting full public financing, or full private financing, or any combination of the two. Thus, a candidate eligible for full public financing may choose to accept only half the public funds to which he is entitled, and may finance the other half of his campaign through private contributions. Such private contributions will be subject, however, to the $3,000 contribution limit and other provisions of the bill applicable to private financing.

13. The bill follows the basic formula in the existing dollar checkoff for allocating public funds among candidates of major and minor parties and independent candidates.

A "major" party is a party that received 25% or more of the total number of popular votes received by all candidates for the office in the preceding election, or the party with the next highest percentage of the votes, in an election where only one party qualifies as a major party on the basis of the preceding election.

A "minor" party is a party that received more than 5% but less than 25% of the popular vote in the preecding election.

14. In Presidential elections, a candidate of a major party is entitled to public funds in the amount of 15 cents per voter based on the current estimate of the voting age population in the United States (about $21 million at 1973 levels).

In Senate elections and Statewide Congressional elections a candidate of a major party is entitled to public funds in the amount of 15¢ per voter or $175,000, whichever is greater.

In House elections in States with more than one Representative, the entitlement of a major party candidate is $90,000.

The 15¢ a voter figure and other entitlements will be adjusted for future increases in the cost of living. The figures coincide both with the entitlment of Presidential candidates in the existing dollar checkoff law, and with the campaign spending ceilings in S. 372, which passed the Senate in July 1973.

15. A candidate of a minor party is entitled to receive public funds in proportion to his party's share of the vote in the preceding election. A candidate of a minor party may increase his entitlement on the basis of his performance in the current election, and may obtain retroactive reimbursement for the increase after the election.

16. A candidate of a party which is not a major or minor party is entitled to receive public funds in proportion to his share of the popular vote in the current election, on a retroactive reimbursement basis, if he receives more than 5% of the vote in the election.

17. An independent candidate is entitled to public funds on the same basis as if he were the candidate of a party.

PRIMARY ELECTIONS

18. To qualify for public funds, candidates must accumulate the following threshold amounts of private funds, raised by small private contributions:

President—$250,000, in contributions of $250 or less.

Senate—20% of the spending ceiling or $125,000 (whichever is less), in contributions of $100 or less.

House—$10,000, in contributions of $100 or less.

19. Once the threshold is reached, a candidate is eligible for public funds matching the threshold amount, and to additional public funds matching each additional private contribution of $250 or less in the case of Presidential candidates, and $100 or less in the case of Senate or House candidates. All matching is on a 50–50 (dollar for dollar) basis.

ROLE OF POLITICAL PARTIES

20. In order to assure the continuity of normal functions of political parties, to provide an independent role for the parties in general elections, and to offer an additional opportunity for private contributions, the national committee of a political party is entitled to spend a total of 2¢ per voter of its own funds, collected from private contributions, on behalf of candidates for Federal office in general elections; and a State committee of a political party is entitled to spend a total of 2¢ per voter of its own funds on behalf of such candidates within the State.

21. No expenditure over $1,000 may be made by the Presidential candidate of a party in a general election unless the expenditure has been approved by the Party's national committee.

RELATED PROVISIONS

22. Tax Credit and Tax Deduction.—As an incentive to small private contributions, the bill doubles the existing tax credit and tax deduction for such contributions. The tax credit is increased to one-half of any contribution up to $50 ($100 on a joint return) and the tax deduction is increased to $100 ($200 on a joint return). The cost of his provision is estimated at $26 million ($11 million from doubling the maximum credit, and $15 million from doubling the maximum deduction).

23. Spending Ceilings for General Elections:

President: 15¢ a voter ($21 million).

Senate: 15¢ a voter or $175,000, whichever is greater.

House: $90,000 ($175,000 in a single district state).

24. Spending Ceilings for Primaries:

President: 20¢ a voter per State; 10¢ a voter nationwide ($14.2 million).

Senate: 10¢ a voter or $125,000, whichever is greater.

House: $90,000 ($125,000 in a single district State).

25. Contribution Limits on Individuals:

$3,000 to any candidate or committee. The limit applies separately to each primary and general election. An individual may contribute $3,000 to a Presidential candidate in each primary he enters, and $3,000 in the general election.

Limit on use of personal funds by a candidate: President, $50,000; Senate, $35,000; and House, $25,000.

26. Independent Spending.—Individuals or committees not authorized by a candidate may spend up to $1,000 during the campaign on behalf of the candidate, independent of the candidate's own spending ceiling.

27. Reporting and Disclosure.—Re-enacts the provisions of S. 372, which passed the Senate in July 1973, and which requires full reporting and disclosure of campaign contributions and expenditures.

28. Full Disclosure of Financial Interests.—An annual statement of income over $1,000, assets and liabilities over $1,000, and transactions over $1,000 must be filed with the Federal Election Commission by Members of Congress, candidates for Congress, and Federal employees earning more than $25,000 a year.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama was talking about the public financing aspects of the pending bill, and I know that he is very familiar with its provisions and how it would work.

Am I correct in my understanding that if this bill were passed, each candidate in the general elections for the House of Representatives would receive $90,000 out of the public treasury to spend in his campaign?

Mr. ALLEN. I believe that is correct; yes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. And that would not involve any matching funds or private contributions. Each candidate nominated in the primary would be financed to the extent of $90,000.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Perhaps I should be addressing my question to the sponsor of the measure.

That is my understanding—and I am sure that he will correct this if I am wrong.

Mr. ALLEN. It would provide a permissible mix of public and private funds.

Mr. GRIFFIN. In the general campaign?

Mr. ALLEN. Mix, not match. In other words, if he did receive, say, $5,000 in private funds, that could be received and would come off the other.

Mr. GRIFFIN. But he would not have to raise anything?

Mr. ALLEN. No, he would not.

Mr. GRIFFIN. He would not have to raise anything?

Mr. ALLEN. That is correct.

Mr. GRIFFIN. He would be entitled to $90,000?

Mr. ALLEN. The full amount, yes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I wonder whether the Senator from Alabama has had an opportunity—or perhaps the sponsor of this amendment has had—to check to see how much candidates running for the House of Representatives are spending now in their campaigns.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not believe it would approach that, in my judgment. Many are spending practically nothing.

Mr. GRIFFIN. It seems to me that that would be a very interesting bit of information that we should have.

I will tell the Senator from Alabama that I have done some primary checking, and it is awfully hard to get figures, for some reason or other. I understand that about the only place one can get them is Common Cause. I do not understand why that should be. I am trying my best to find out how much House members and their opponents are spending now in House races.

One statistic I have been able to obtain is that more than two-thirds of those who ran in the last election spent less than $50,000. I do not know how much less than $50,000 was spent. I am sure that in some cases it was down to figures such as $10,000 and $15,000.

The junior Senator from Michigan ran for the House 5 times. I do not believe that any race for the House of Representatives in which I was involved cost in excess of $20,000, and some were in the neighborhood of $12,000 and $14,000.

I would have to do some double checking, but I think it would be a very unusual situation if any race in history for the House of Representatives, in the State of Michigan, has cost more than $90,000. There might have been one or two, but most of them would not be anywhere near that.

I wonder whether the Senator from Alabama would agree with me, as a matter of commonsense judgment, that this would greatly increase the level of spending in campaigns for the House of Representatives.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, I think it would—not only for the House but also for the Senate. I think it would have the same effect for the Presidential nomination contest, because $7.5 million would be available to each candidate who could raise that amount in contributions for up to $250.

I do not believe that any of the sponsors of the measure seriously contend that this is going to cut overall campaign expenses. I do not believe the candidates for the Presidential nomination are spending $15 million apiece on campaign expenditures in seeking the nomination. I do not believe they are.

Mr. GRIFFIN. A candidate today might run in a race in which he would expect to raise $25,000 to $30,000 and could get elected for that under normal circumstances. But if his opponent is going to be given $90,000 out of the Treasury with which to wage a campaign, he is put in a position in which he does not have much choice but to go out and spend his $90,000. Does the Senator agree?

Mr. ALLEN. It would be sort of like an arms race.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes—a political arms race, with taxpayers' money.

Mr. ALLEN. That is right.

Mr. GRIFFIN. If we are interested in trying to eliminate corruption and to do away with sleazy practices, I wonder whether this is a good way to go about it.

If one is going to spend $90,000, would it not be mighty tempting to a candidate to have his brother-in-law go into the advertising business and his cousin go into the business of printing bumper stickers and his relatives and friends to do other things they might use to spend that $90,000? That is what disturbs me. It seems to me that this is an invitation to corruption of public funds.

Mr. ALLEN. I agree with the distinguished Senator from Michigan.

As I pointed out on the floor, there is no requirement that there be prudent management or expenditure of these public funds.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I wonder whether the story will get out to the American people. I wonder whether they will understand that we are talking about greatly escalating the expenditures in campaigns—not cutting them down. I believe most people think that too much money is being spent in campaigns. They are slick, they are expensive, and the people think too much money is being spent.

We ought to do something about it. That is the reason they talk about putting a ceiling on it. But I fear this bill would greatly increase the spending in campaigns. The major difference will be taxpayers' money coming out of the Public Treasury. I wonder if the public will get the story through the media.

Mr. ALLEN. I think they will if we allow this matter to be discussed long enough. If the point is made again and again it might be picked up by the media.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Right now, as the Senator from Alabama said very eloquently, the idea of campaign reform is somehow translated into public financing. They are treated as though they are synonymous; that if one is not for public financing then he must not be for campaign reform. That is what a lot of stories I read in the newspapers indicate.

Mr. ALLEN. I agree with the distinguished Senator. I might point out to the distinguished Senator from Michigan that there has been filed an amendment that would provide for cutting down the amount of permissible contributions from the $3,000 allowed by the bill to $250 in Presidential races and $100 in House and Senate races on the theory that that is all the bill allows to be met; so there must be something sinister, something insidious about that portion of the contribution, more than $250 or more than $100, depending on the race. Therefore, they should be cut down to the amount that does allow them to be matched in full.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I focused on the House races primarily because there are approximately the same number of people and the same number of constituents in each House district, so there are some reasons to make comparisons. When we talk about Senate races I think we all realize there is a great deal of difference in the race from one State to another State, and each of those would have to be looked at as a separate situation. I hope it comes home to the people of this country and to the Senate that we are talking about $90,000 out of the Treasury for each candidate nominated to run for the House of Representatives, and that they will realize what we would be doing in this bill if we pass it.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I am glad to yield to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, the coauthor of this legislation.

Mr. KENNEDY. It is interesting to me that on the opening day of the debate on this important legislation, the opponents are focusing on the House of Representatives. As the assistant minority leader understands full well, we will be glad to let the House set its own figure and write its own ticket for public financing. It may well be that the House will set a different figure than $90,000, or will adopt a different approach to public financing.

We hear this sanctimonious concern that the American people are going to worry about how the $90,000 in public funds is going to be spent, or that it will be used to set up brothers and cousins in the printing business, and so forth. Well, candidates can do that right now. All they have to do is go to the major contributors and collect that money now and put their brothers and cousins in business, if that is the way they choose to run their campaigns. The Senator is simply identifying the existing problem, not a problem peculiar to public financing.

The Senator from Michigan states that two-thirds of the House races were financed for $50,000 or less in 1972. That is largely because so many races in the House are uncontested. That is one of the evils of the present system, that it is very difficult in many cases for a challenger to raise any funds at all to run against an entrenched incumbent.

If the House of Representatives wants to set a different figure, a lower figure, that would be their prerogative.

What interests me this afternoon is that on the first day of debate on this measure, we hear it said how bad this provision is for the House. The opponents are not addressing the problem of where existing campaign contributions are coming from. They are not talking about public financing for the Senate, or what can be done to stop the corrupting power of contribution money. They are talking about the House.

I wish my good friend from Michigan would focus on that issue, and my friend the Senator from Alabama as well, because that is really the essential thrust of this whole effort.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I appreciate the response from the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts. I would say that we are looking at the bill as it comes from the Committee on Rules and Administration. I do not understand quite the point the Senator from Massachusetts makes when he said the House can set its own figure. This is a figure we set and it is only illustrative of the philosophy and the concept in the bill as a whole. I focused on the House because I think we can understand that. Now, I guess we will go back and I will focus on the Senate.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. I would like to ask the Senator a question similar to the question he asked me the other day on the gun control measure. Would the distinguished assistant minority leader support this legislation if we altered the House provision and left it to the complete discretion of the House?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Only to the House? Absolutely not.

Mr. KENNEDY. I think the Senator was trying to make a similar point the other day. I think the point is made here today.

Mr. GRIFFIN. The situation with respect to the House is only illustrative of what is wrong with this bill throughout—with title I throughout, because I do strongly support the other titles of the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts seems to indicate we should focus on some other race besides the House of Representatives. I notice here some of the figures submitted by the present administration. If this bill passes in California, after whoever ran for the Senate had been subsidized to the extent of $700,000 in the primary, each party would be subsidized $2.121 million.

Mr. GRIFFIN. That is each candidate?

Mr. ALLEN. Each candidate in the general election.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Running for the Senate in California would be subsidized how much?

Mr. ALLEN. $2.121 million.

I think also the Senator stated he had difficulty finding the cost of some of these races when we talk about a portion of $15 million for the financing of various candidates for President by the various parties—as to how that $15 million might compare with some races that have been run for the Presidential nomination. We have some experts in the Senate on those figures and how much they have spent on their campaigns for the Presidential nomination.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Would the Senator happen to have any figures on what candidates running for the Senate in California have spent in the past?

Mr. ALLEN. No; I do not have that, but I wondered how campaigns of some Senators who have run for President would compare with the $15 million this bill would allow them to spend. I wonder if the Senator has any thoughts along that line and whether we might get some expert testimony on that point.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I think it will come as a real shock to a lot of people who are interested in campaign reform when and if they get the true story, of what title I of this bill would do and how it would subsidize candidates running for the Senate in California to the tune of $2.5 million.

Mr. ALLEN. $2,121,000.

Mr. GRIFFIN. $2,121,000.

Mr ALLEN. But it would subsidize a candidate for the Presidential nomination, a candidate like Governor Rockefeller or Governor Reagan or Governor Connally, up to a limit of some $7.5 million. I do not think the country realizes that would be the case.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Of course, the tax funds are funds over which the people have no choice insofar as what happens to them is concerned. They are not being used to support their candidate or their cause or their party, and their money is going to go to support both candidates.

Mr. ALLEN. I think another interesting statistic might be how many thousands of taxpayer's returns on Federal taxes will be required to subsidize the Presidential campaign for every man who runs for President. It would take literally thousands of taxpayers' payments to do so.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. Did the Senator from Michigan vote for S. 372, does he remember?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I believe I did, yes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Does the Senator from Michigan remember what the dollar ceilings were in terms of spending for primaries?

Mr. GRIFFIN. No.

Mr. KENNEDY. I remind the Senator that the dollar figure included in S. 372 was a $90,000 spending ceiling for primaries. That is the source of the $90,000

Mr. GRIFFIN. S. 372 was not a public financing bill was it?

Mr. KENNEDY. No. I was addressing myself to the source of $90,000 limitation. The Senator from Michigan was so pained at what a sizable amount was to be expended in a congressional election. He was talking about how the great majority of elections were financed for $50,000 or less. The Senator could have advocated an amendment to reduce the figures in S. 372. He did not, I understand; he supported S. 372, which established the basic $90,000 figure for House elections.

Once again let me point out that I think those who support public financing will be delighted to leave the exact figure to the House of Representatives. I think that is where it should be left. But the source of the $90,000 is not hard to find—it is S. 372, which was supported by both the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Alabama.

I also notice that the Senator from Michigan was a member of the committee that actually reported S. 372 to the Senate. So evidently he was willing to set a ceiling at $90,000 for elections for the House in S. 372, but is unable to support that concept as it applies to public financing at this time.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for calling that background to my attention. I, frankly, fail to see any particular relevance to the fact that in a prior bill there was approval of a $90,000 ceiling for House races, in comparison with the fact that in this bill the legislation, as I understand it, would provide for $90,000 to be paid for every candidate running for the House. I can understand that there may be some races where a $90,000 ceiling might not be unreasonable, provided that there is a full disclosure and tight limits on private financing of campaigns. But to follow along from that and come to the argument that every candidate running for the House of Representatives should therefore be financed to the tune of $90,000 out of the Public Treasury seems a non sequitur, as far as I am concerned.

I yield to the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH).

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR FILING OF REPORT BY COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS ON SOUTHEAST ASIA COLLECTIVE DEFENSE TREATY AND THE TREATY ORGANIZATION

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, Senate Resolution 174, which was passed by the Senate last November 2, directs the Committee on Foreign Relations to conduct a full and complete review of the Southeast Asia Collective Defense Treaty and the treaty organization. The resolution specifies that the committee is to report its findings and recommendations to the Senate by March 31. As the committee has not been able to complete its review, I ask unanimous consent that the deadline for the committee's report of findings and recommendations be extended to June 30, 1974.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSTON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on today, March 26, 1974, he presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 3228) to provide funeral transportation and living expense benefits to the families of deceased prisoners of war, and for other purposes.

PROGRAM

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senate will convene tomorrow at 12 noon. After the two leaders or their designees have been recognized under the standing order, the distinguished Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES) will be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes, after which there will be a period for the transaction of routine morning business of not to exceed 30 minutes, with statements limited therein to 5 minutes each.

At the conclusion of routine morning business, the Senate will resume consideration of the unfinished business, S. 3044, the so-called Federal Election Campaign Act, and the pending question at that time will be on the adoption of Senator ALLEN's amendment No. 1064. A vote will occur on that amendment at the hour of 3:30 p.m., and that will be a rollcall vote.

Mr. President, there may be other yea-and-nay votes tomorrow, but Senators are assured of at least one rollcall vote.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, if there be no further business to come before the Senate, I move, in accordance with the previous order, that the Senate stand in adjournment until the hour of 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and at 5:37 p.m., the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, March 27, 1974, at 12 o'clock noon.

MARCH 27, 1974

MARCH 21, 1974.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ENERGY OFFICE-FARM FUEL, FERTILIZER, BALING WIRE, BALING TWINE, AND TRANSPORTATION REPORT

FUEL

1. National Supply Situation for Biweekly Period Ended March 15, 1974.

A. U.S. Refinery Utilization. Nearly 82 percent of capacity utilized, down from slightly over 83 percent March 1.

B. Motor Gasoline. Refinery production down 1.0 percent from March 1 and down nearly 4 percent from a year ago. Weekend stocks down more than 2 percent from March 1, but up 3.0 percent (6.5 million barrels) from a year ago.

C. Distillate Fuel Oil. Refinery production down 0.5 percent from March 1, and down nearly 17 percent from a year ago. Weekend stocks down 6.6 percent from March 1, but up over 24 percent (or 28.0 million barrels) from a year ago.

2. General Farm Fuel Situation for Biweekly Period Ending March 21, 1974.

A. Gasoline and Diesel Fuel. Situation about the same to slightly worse than two weeks ago. Total of 36 States reported gasoline supplies tight to very tight in varying numbers of counties compared with 26 on March 8. Eight of these States (Virginia, North Carolina, Mississippi, Tennessee, Ohio, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Kansas) reported some critical counties, an increase from four States two weeks ago.

Diesel fuel supplies reported tight to very tight in some areas in 16 States, up from 13 States two weeks ago. Four of these States (Mississippi, Tennessee, Ohio, Kansas) reported some critical counties, up from two States March 8.

Some States report improvement in the allocation system as distributors become better informed and State energy offices become more efficient. Following are major difficulties reported by problem States: Some distributors and suppliers requiring all farmers to file FEO Form 17's; long delays by distributor's suppliers (up to three weeks) in acting upon FEO Form 17 requests for addition fuel, thus putting farmers whose requests are refused in a precarious supply position; delays by regional and State energy offices in processing requests; inability of small farmers who purchase directly from retail outlets to get sufficient fuel.

A total of eight States (North Carolina, Tennessee, Kentucky, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Oregon) report wet weather has delayed field work. All indicate that if farmers had been able to get into the field, fuel supplies would have been inadequate to meet demand. One State (Georgia) reported land preparation was being delayed for short periods in some areas due to lack of gasoline.

First report of U.S. average farm fuel prices, supplied by States at the request of ERS, show that the farm price of gasoline increased about 29 percent, diesel fuel increased about 38 percent, and LP gas increased about 21 percent during the period November 1, 1973 to March 18, 1974.

FERTILIZER

Reports continue to show fertilizer in short supply, with nitrogen in tightest supply position. Overall, the number of States reporting supplies short to tight (usually short) is about the same as reported March 8. A total of 44 States report a nitrogen shortage, compared with 46 States two weeks ago. States reporting a phosphate shortage total 41 compared with 43 on March 8. A potash shortage was reported by 39 States compared with 38 States two weeks ago. Shortages of mixed fertilizer were reported by 42 States compared with 43 States two weeks ago. State ASCS reports show prices paid by farmers for fertilizer increased from February 18 to March 18.

Month-to-month percentage increases from October 25, 1973 (date of CLC decontrol action) to March 18 are as follows:

Kind of fertilizer	Percent price increase from Oct. 25 to Mar. 18
	Nov. 2	Nov. 9	Dec. 10	Jan. 21	Feb. 18	Mar. 18
Nitrogen:
Anhydrous ammonia	33	40	49	71	81	97
Ammonium nitrate	22	29	43	55	70	71
Urea	26	32	54	69	77	99
Nitrogen solution	23	34	40	57	73	80
Phosphate:
Triple superphosphate	20	27	37	42	46	49
Diammonium phosphate	24	28	33	41	48	51
Potash:
Potassium chloride	11	15	15	26	28	32
Mixed fertilizer	20	23	28	40	45	47

Railroads have been ordered by the ICC to deliver 1,100 covered hopper cars for fertilizer shipments out of Florida. Cars must be delivered by April and used for fertilizer service until ICC authorizes other use or until order expires May 1, 1974.

Canadian anhydrous ammonia plants. U.S. anhydrous ammonia supplies could eventually be increased by 1.6 million tons (about 9 percent) annually as result of tentative plans to build four 1,250-ton-per-day ammonia plants in Alberta, Canada. Under proposed agreement by U.S. and Canadian companies, most of the plants' output would be piped into U.S. to be distributed into 15 Midwest States. Some production will be available in 1976, with all plants operative by the end of 1978.

BALING WIRE

Baling wire supply expected to be short about 30 percent if imports and domestic production continue at present rates and requirements are similar to 1973.

Estimated requirements for 1974 hay crop range from 105,000 to 115,000 tons of baling wire. Current rate of domestic wire production estimated to be about 10 percent above 1973, with baling wire imports arriving at about one-third the rate for last year.

Following price relief granted by the CLC January 25, 1974, six of the seven firms that produced baling wire in 1973 resumed production, with five of these operating at or near capacity. As a result of additional price relief and increased cost pass-through granted by CLC on February 28, two additional plants resumed production.

Retail prices for domestically produced baling wire are expected to vary from $22 to $25 per 100-pound box.

Cost of imported wire is much higher, with reported prices varying from $30 to $50 per 100-pound box.

BALING TWINE

Baling twine deficit for 1974 is estimated to be about 15 percent. However, twine imports for the period October 1973 through January 1974 were up 15 percent from last year. If imports continue at this rate, the overall shortage would be less than 15 percent. Domestic twine production is near capacity and probably cannot be increased because of shortages of petroleum feedstocks for man-made twine.

The retail price for natural fiber twine is currently over $22 per bale, with synthetic twine prices over $25. These prices are 250 percent or more above a year ago.

Normally about 75 percent of the total hay crop is tied with twine, 15–18 percent with wire, and the remaining 7–10 percent is not baled.

TRANSPORTATION

1. Motor Carriers. Fewer owner-operators on the road due to inability to handle increased expenses and pay for equipment. High fuel costs, reduced speed limits are blamed. Some unconfirmed reports of another truck strike by end of March. Demand for trucks by beef and pork processors down as result of drop in consumer demand.

2. Rail Carriers. Slight increase in diesel fuel supply, but reserve inventories decreasing. Carriers concerned about getting increased allocation of fuel to reflect increase in freight volume from 1972 and 1973.

3. Ocean Carriers. Fuel availability stabilized; prices about 400 percent above year ago. Reducing number of U.S. ports of call and slower speeds to conserve fuel, plus use of normal cargo space for extra fuel supplies, are causing congestion at ports. Problem aggravated by carriers moving cargo subject to higher freight rates in preference to low-rate cargo.

4. Barge Carriers. No major fuel supply problems.

THE RISING COST OF COLLEGE EDUCATION

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, the College Entrance Examination Board recently released disturbing new figures on the rising cost of a college education.

According to the CEEB the cost of a college education will rise again next fall making it 9.4 percent more expensive than a year ago and 35.8 percent more costly than 4 years ago.

This means that a student at a private college can expect to pay an average of $4,039 next year.

Few families can afford such rates.

As a result I have introduced, and the Senate has passed three times, legislation to grant yearly tax credits of up to $325 for the cost of a higher education. Unfortunately, the House has failed to act each time and the bill has died.

This bill, S. 18, would greatly strengthen the ability of families to finance their son's or daughter's schooling. It must be passed as soon as possible.

I ask unanimous consent that the New York Times article of March 25 concerning the CEEB report be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COLLEGE COSTS WILL RISE BY 9.4 PERCENT IN FALL

(By Gene I. Maeroff)

The cost of a college education, which has been causing growing anxiety among American families, will rise again next fall, making it 9.4 per cent more expensive than this year and 35.8 per cent more than it was four years ago.

A report released yesterday by the College Entrance Examination Board, based on a survey of 2,200 institutions of higher education, shows that in the coming academic year a student living on campus at an average four-year private college will have to pay $4,039, which is $346 more than this year.

Beset by mounting costs in an economy squeezed by inflation, few colleges and universities seem to be winning the battle to hold down expenses. The effect of inflation is such, according to the report, that by next fall a family will find it almost as costly to maintain a commuting student living at home as to send a student away to live at college.

"Meeting the costs of a college education is a problem more and more American families face every year," the college board says in its report. "Not only the lower-income family, but also middle-income and upper-income families are finding it increasingly difficult to meet these costs."

The report makes the following findings:

Community colleges, traditionally the least expensive type of higher educational institution, will have a larger percentage increase in tuition next year than private or public four-year colleges and universities.

Despite the fact that tuition is increasing at a faster rate at public four-year institutions than at private ones, it will still be far cheaper next fall for resident students at public colleges and universities—total cost: $2,400—than for those at private institutions—total cost: $4,039.

The cost of room and board for students living away at college, which requires the largest outlay after tuition, will be fairly similar next fall at public ($1,116) and private ($1,207) institutions.

While averages give a general indication of what the costs will be at colleges and universities, there is a wide range of individual differences.

Among the most expensive four-year private institutions, Harvard will cost $5,700 and Princeton $5,825, according to the college board report. By comparison, the State University of New York College at Brockport will cost $2,800 and Slippery Rock State College in Pennsylvania will cost $2,350.

All of the costs computed by the board, on the basis of figures it says it received from financial aid officers at the various institutions, include tuition, room and board, transportation and miscellaneous expenses including books and toiletries.

There is apparently little hope for financial relief for middle-income and upper-income families that have been complaining this year about soaring college costs and the scarcity of grants and loans. The state of Ohio has put a moratorium on tuition increases at its public institutions and the University of Michigan has reduced its tuition, but these actions do not seem to be harbingers of a trend.

The tuition-free City University of New York will remain one of the best bargains in higher education next year. Student fees at the various C.U.N.Y. units will average $100 a year. The university estimates the total annual costs of its average commuter student next fall will be $1,040.

Copies of the report, entitled "Student Expenses at Postsecondary Institutions 1974-75," are available for $2.50 each from Publications Order Office, College Entrance Examination Board, Box 592, Princeton, N.J. 08540.

The report was prepared under the auspices of the board's college scholarship service, which helps institutions of higher education analyze the financial needs of students applying for grants and loans.

Here is a sampling of the costs, subject to change between now and the fall, that resident students at institutions around the country can expect to pay during the 1974-75 academic year:

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSTON). The time for morning business having expired, the Senate will resume the consideration of the unfinished business (S. 3044), which the clerk will state.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, this afternoon at 3:30 the Senate will vote on amendment No. 1064, which would strike from the pending bill the public finance feature, which would remove any further or additional public subsidy of Federal election campaigns.

In the event that that amendment is not adopted, I plan to offer alternatively two additional amendments, one of which would eliminate the election campaigns and the primaries of Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate from the subsidy provisions of the bill, which would leave both primaries and general elections of House Members and Senate Members in the private sector, but still leave the limitations provided by the other titles of the bill as to overall campaign expenditures and maximum contributions to a campaign.

The other amendment, in the event that amendment No. 1064 fails of adoption, would be an amendment which would eliminate from the bill the subsidy of campaigns for the Presidential nomination of the various parties. This is a most important amendment, because it would prevent the going into effect of the bill's provisions which would provide up to $7.5 million for each candidate for the Presidential nomination of the major parties, and I do not believe that it is in the interest of the taxpayers or in the interest of our governmental processes to spread $7.5 million of the taxpayers' funds among each of the 15 or 20 candidates for the Presidency.

So the order in which the amendments would be offered would be first the one coming up this afternoon to strike all public financing of Federal elections, and the following amendment, in the event that is not adopted, would eliminate House and Senate Members from public subsidy, and following that would be the amendment striking presidential primary campaigns, though we would still have the Presidential campaign for the general election which is also funded by the checkoff provision, which will make $21 million available to each of the parties if they come under the provisions of that law.

I send the additional two amendments to the desk, and ask that they be printed and remain at the desk to be called up at a later date.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be received and printed, and will lie on the table.

The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment (No. 1064) of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call that roll.

Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATHAWAY). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, today, we have on the floor a very significant bill and one with far-reaching implications. S. 3044, the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1974, is a response designed to meet problems of campaign abuse that have plagued campaigns throughout American political history. In the process of reform, however, the members of the Rules Committee have decided to go one step further and significantly, perhaps dramatically, alter the basis by which we elect our political leaders.

I am firmly committed to the goal of campaign reform. For too long, both political parties, have been plagued by campaign pressures and abuses. Whether the abuses in the 1972 campaign were more far-reaching than abuses in other campaigns or whether such abuses were magnified in such a manner as to arouse unparalleled public attention and anger is not the issue.

The point is that campaign abuse has long been a blot on our political history. Breaking the law in order to win elections is wrong in every sense of the word, both legal and moral. As the primary lawmaking body of this Nation, the Congress of the United States must do everything possible to write clear and concise laws so that candidates know exactly what they can and cannot do in a campaign.

Last year the Senate passed a campaign reform bill known as S. 372. It is a bill that had my support. This bill provided strict limitations on campaign contributions and expenditures as well as providing for other reforms in campaign practices. The House of Representatives has yet to act on a similar measure.

As the year progressed, public clamor increased and new cries were heard that further reform of campaign practices was needed. Because it appeared that many of the alleged wrongdoings associated with Watergate were tied to the raising of campaign funds, the idea occurred to alter the basis by which candidates receive funds to run their campaigns. Public financing became the banner for those who sought to reform the system.

The Senate was given an opportunity to debate this issue on the floor late last year when a group of Senators were successful in attaching a public financing amendment to the public debt limit bill. As we all know, my distinguished colleague, the junior Senator from Alabama, led an earnest and successful fight to have that amendment deleted. He was right in that effort, not because it would have been unwise and deceptive to attach such far-reaching legislation to a completely unrelated bill, but because the substance of the amendment was ill-advised and undesirable.

The Senate Rules Committee, therefore, agreed to return to the drawing boards and draft a new campaign reform bill. Now we will have an opportunity openly to debate the central question contained in that amendment: Is public financing the answer to our problems of campaign abuse, or is it a substantial part of such an answer?

In seeking to answer that question, we must first ask ourselves what kind of political system we want. I think my colleagues would agree that we want a dynamic system that is flexible to the demands of changing times, people, and attitudes. We want our electoral processes to encourage the best possible people to enter public life. We want a system that leaves room for the election of only those candidates who are qualified beyond doubt, who embrace the goals and attitudes of their constituents and who in short, consider public service to be the best way to make their contribution to life on this Earth.

Then we return again to the question: Is public financing of campaigns the only way, or indeed a wise way, in which to produce our leaders and on which to base a political system? I think not.

We can achieve campaign reform and improve our electoral processes without overturning our system of privately financed campaigns. I think S. 372 went a long way in that direction. More importantly, I have serious doubts about the efficacy of the public's being called upon to subsidize campaigns. My remarks at this time will, therefore, be devoted to title I of S. 3044.

First and foremost, I doubt whether public financing would do anything to solve problems of campaign abuse. There are several ways by which a candidate gains public exposure and indeed runs a campaign. Money is one. A candidate's ability to raise money is one measure of his viability. Public financing may remove money from categories of influence. In fact, it is the logical place to begin talk of reforming campaign practices. But, by removing money from influence, one simply focuses attention on other areas of influence, and of potential abuse and even corruption.

These other influences include manpower and publicity. A candidate needs people to help him run a campaign. In local elections, we talk of hundreds of workers. In national elections, we talk of thousands and even tens of thousands of workers.

Certainly, publicity is another factor which bears heavily on one's ability to campaign effectively. A candidate needs exposure and lots of it. There are other factors, however, which deserve mention. Organizational skill, durability, the right issues, and that winning personality—which all candidates either fancy they have or wish they have—are all subject to influence of one kind or another.

Transferring money to the public sector, instead of having it originate from private contributions, will only serve to bring greater pressure on these other important factors, including the two principal ones I have already mentioned—namely, manpower and publicity. The candidate who has immediate access to hundreds of workers will have a distinct advantage. Is the union boss who provides manpower really different from the president of the corporation who donates money? Would not a candidate who enjoys the favor of a television commentator have a distinct advantage? Public financing does not address any of these factors.

The goal of public financing is to remove the raising of campaign funds from political pressure. Under the bill, the money is collected and then doled out by the Federal Government. I need not go into a long dissertation about the dangers and problems this method could unleash.

It is common thinking that the best way to confuse a situation and snarl a program is to involve Uncle Sam. I do not see how public financing is going to be any different in this respect.

As I read the bill, if the $2 checkoff system on the income tax return does not provide sufficient moneys in the Federal Treasury to cover the demands of all eligible candidates, then Congress can appropriate additional sums. This is a most interesting proposition. We would have Members of Congress, political candidates themselves, and a President voting on appropriations or signing appropriation bills into law that can affect their campaigns and that of their opponents. I am sure that I do not have to remind my colleagues of the political pressures which could affect this procedure.

The issue against public financing can be made even more simple. The American taxpayer has been footing the bill for just about everything these days. A taxpayers' revolt is no idle joke, as all of us close to the political scene at home are painfully aware. Do we as political leaders and potential candidates have the right to ask the American taxpayer to pay for our campaigns? If I were a retired man living on a fixed income in rural America, I think I might be just a little upset if I heard my Senator or my Representative espousing the virtues of public financing. The same can be said as to any taxpayer living anywhere.

Thomas Jefferson, more than 150 years ago, put it well in these words:

> To compel a man (a taxpayer) to furnish contributions of money for the propagation of opinions which he disbelieves and abhors, is sinful and tyrannical.

That statement is fully applicable today as it was in the time of Jefferson.

Public financing denies the individual his freedom of choice. A portion of his tax dollars would be financing the campaigns of candidates he may dislike, not even know, or, worse yet, completely abhor and despise.

A candidate should pay for his own campaign. He will need the help of many friends and contributors. This does not mean that he needs to be "bought off." Good laws with proper forms for limitation of funds from any one person and for disclosure, timely and completely made, can remedy this part of the situation. Other provisions in the pending bill contain explicit remedies of that kind.

An editorial recently appeared in one of the newspapers in my State. It referred to obvious "dirty tricks" that have occurred in past campaigns, and they are not a monopoly by any of the political parties, including the two major political parties. In referring to public financing as a cure, the editor said:

> Would reformers feel any better if those tricks had been paid for by taxpayers' money instead of private funds.

Yes, we should be in the business to reform our campaign laws and procedures. Let us not be so "hell bent on reform" to the point where we lose sight of the very strengths of our political system and to the point where we invite much worse in solutions we advance than is found in the situation we seek to remedy.

Public financing of political campaigns has additional disadvantages. They include:

First. Unfair advantage to incumbents. This comes about because of the necessity to impose ceilings on campaign spending, inasmuch as taxpayers will be putting up the funds. Challengers almost invariably must spend more money than those already in office. This is so because they have so much to do toward name identification, toward making their qualifications and views known, and in general to counterbalance the many advantages held by a person already in office. Yet, by public financing, both incumbent and challenger would have identical limits on their expenditures.

Second. Under title I of the bill, the level of campaign spending would be increased particularly in House of Representatives races—435 of them every 2 years. That increase would be paid by taxpayers.

Third. Public financing would deprive many citizens of the only opportunity they have to participate in the campaign process. Many are not in a position to take part in it in any other fashion or by any other method.

This might be by reason of demands of their calling, profession, vocation, or it might be because of physical disability or health reasons. The way public financing would operate would tend to reduce or decrease citizen participation which is a valuable and vital component of a strong party system and a wholesome election process. That component would be sacrificed or heavily imperiled.

The Congress would do well to reject an untried, potentially dangerous, and objectionable feature of this bill, and should rather concentrate on those features dealing directly, effectively, and with preponderance of agreement toward correction of abuses which are so obvious and so much in need of remedy. The list is long. I enumerate some of the issues:

Public disclosure of all names and identification of contributors.

Complete and timely accounting for all campaign funds.

Limitation of contributions by an individual to any single campaign.

Limitation of expenditures by any candidate.

In this connection, it is well to note that the bill gives all candidates an option of soliciting all private contributions up to the prescribed limit contained in the bill. Therefore, it must be concluded that such sources are acceptable and in order because they can be monitored, policed, and in a disciplined way held within proper and legitimate bounds. The taxpayer should be spared the added drain on his funds and the new and more evil results which would ensue.

In referring to a comment I made earlier, it is not the source of money which results in a great many abuses and undesirable factors in campaigns and elections, it is the fact that money is used at all. At any rate, private funds, according to the committee report, are not evil in themselves as long as they are encased, modified, controlled, and supervised by public disclosure of all the names and identifications of the contributors, as long as there will be a complete and timely accounting for all campaign funds, and as long as there will be such limitations as Congress in its wisdom will seek to impose.

Other controls over contributions, such as use of checks not cash; single or central campaign treasury; prohibition of all loans to committees; prohibition of stocks, bonds, or similar assets from contributions.

Campaign activities such as distribution of false instructions to campaign workers, disruptive actions, rigging public opinion polls, misleading announcements or advertisement in the media, misrepresentation of a candidate's voting record; organized slander campaigns; legal recourse and redress against slanderous, libelous and unscrupulous attacks on public figures.

Election practices—fraudulent registration and voting, stuffing ballot boxes, rigging voting machines; forging, altering, or miscounting ballots.

There are many more items for the list. Every intent should be to make advances in each case as effective as possible. There should be an avoidance of questionable approaches, those possessing sufficient minus marks to detract from progress by unified, undivided support. Public financing is a divisive factor, a major one. It would not bear upon the solution to the long lists of ills and abuses which have plagued our system, and threaten to do so in the future unless legislation of this type will be fairly considered and enacted into law and applied.

Without it and with a concentration on those other aspects, our election process can be notably strengthened and improved.

It is my hope that as we proceed in the consideration of this measure, there will be such action taken as to delete from the bill the provisions with reference to public financing. This will remove an undesirable feature from the bill and at the same time enable the thorough consideration of other features of the election process.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered

LABOR DAY RECESS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, after discussing the matter with the distinguished minority leader, the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HUGH SCOTT)—and he in turn discussed it with the Republican conference on yesterday—I brought the matter of an August-Labor Day recess to the attention of the Democratic policy committee today. The Republican conference and the Democratic policy committee have agreed that the Senate, barring extraordinary circumstances like, for example, the possibility of a sine die adjournment, will, at the conclusion of business on Friday, August 23, stand in recess until noon, Wednesday, September 4.

This is an official announcement which has been agreed to, and we will see that a card is sent to each Member of the Senate; but I want to emphasize that, as far as this recess is concerned, and any others upcoming, like the Easter and the Fourth of July recesses, they will be undertaken only if nothing in the way of an extraordinary circumstance occurs.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the pending amendment, which is to be voted on at 3:30 o'clock this afternoon, strikes from this bill, which contains five titles, the first title, title I, in which title are contained all of the provisions having to do with public financing of Federal elections.

Mr. President, this title is not needed. It is not needed for two reasons. In the first place, we have public financing of Federal elections in a strict sense; and, in the second place, regulation of campaign expenditures and contributions in the private sector has never really been tried.

Now let us explore the first statement that I made, that we already have Federal subsidy of Federal elections. We have on the book the checkoff provision, which provides for a checkoff by taxpayers of $1 in the case of a single person or $2 in the case of a couple, which amount goes into a fund which would pay for the expenses of Presidential general election campaigns.

Mr. President, it has been estimated by fiscal authorities—the statement has been made here on the floor of the Senate—that by 1976, the next Presidential election, there will be in this fund $50 million of public money, because when the taxpayer checks off the $1 or $2, it does not come out of his pocket, except in the sense that it comes out of tax moneys he is paying on his income tax. It comes out of the Government portion. It comes out of the tax liability that the taxpayer owes to the Federal Government. So this is money from the Public Treasury.

The checkoff plan, which is the existing law—not what is provided by this bill; it is already the law—provides that each major party would get, for the conduct of a Presidential election, 15 cents per person of voting age throughout the country as a subsidy by the taxpayers to carry on a Presidential election. So that there would be $42 million available to the Democratic Party and the Republican Party under existing law.

There is one catch to that, under the existing law, for a party to come under the provisions of the checkoff and to get this $21 million—and I say that $21 million is derived by multiplying the number of people of voting age throughout the country by 15 cents. That ends up somewhere in the neighborhood of $21 million or $22 million. That is available to each party. That would be a subsidy of anywhere from $42 million to $44 million for carrying on the 1976 Presidential election.

As I say, there is a catch to it in this: That in order to come under the provisions of the checkoff plan and have the Presidential election subsidized for a party, the party has to certify that they want to come under the provisions of the law, and that keeps them from accepting private contributions in any amount. There is no possible mix, as is provided in the Senate bill.

With the expense of Presidential elections that we have observed, it seems that if Presidential elections are going to be conducted on the scale that they have been conducted in the past, $21 million would not be sufficient. So it is entirely likely that neither of the parties would come under the provisions of the checkoff, because it is optional whether a man comes under it or not. He can come under the public sector or the private financing. But it seems to me that 100 percent public financing would be bad for the party, and that is one of the weaknesses of public financing. It seems to me that this would be a weakening of a political party.

How much better it would be to receive $5,400,000 in contributions than to receive $21 million or $22 million from the public treasury. I do not believe we are going to see money here authorized to the major parties come under the 1970 law on the checkoff. There is $42 million—$42 million to $44 million—by which Federal elections are already subsidized or for which money is available for subsidy.

By the way, I might add that under another title in the bill, that would not be stricken out by amendment No. 1064, is a doubling of the checkoff. So the checkoff then would be $2 for a single person and $4 for a couple. We are already taking in enough to run a political campaign. What is the use of doubling the amount? By specifying a doubling, we will have changed the whole concept of the checkoff from being a voluntary checkoff. This is Senate bill 3044 that is submitted to us to vote on. It provides for a doubling of the subsidy from $2 to $4. It provides that if a person does not check off the $2 or $4, he is then presumed to have checked it off. In other words, if he does not check it off, he is ruled to have checked it off, because he must have the checkoff to apply against him.

At my request, the Committee on Rules and Administration prepared or obtained some estimates of what these checkoffs are going to cost the Government. This is what it will cost the Government, according to estimates obtained by the Rules Committee, I assume, from the Internal Revenue Service, and appears on page 28 of the report:

> If all returns, individual and joint, should take full advantage of the one dollar checkoff, the total cost would be $117,370,000.

$117,370,000 is what would be brought into the public treasury for the political campaign or available for the political campaign.

But if the provisions of S. 3044 should get through the Senate and go through the House, and if all returns should take full advantage of the $2 checkoff, the cost would be $234,740,000. That is how much this little item of the checkoff would bring if everyone availed himself of it. But the proponents are not satisfied to leave the proposal on a voluntary basis. According to the bill—and that is all we have before us—if the taxpayer does not check it off, if he does not specify that it is not to be checked off, then the bill would make that decision for him, and that decision, naturally, would be that the money is considered to be checked off. It does not cost the taxpayer anything at that point, other than as a member of the taxpaying public. That amount is just a contribution to the public Treasury. It does not increase the taxpayer's income tax. It is simply taken from his tax liability. So there we see what is being done on the checkoff.

I am not a soothsayer, but I believe that it will not be too long before we will see an effort to raise the amount of 15 cents per person of voting age, that comes out of the checkoff, to 20 cents, or possibly 25 cents, because the candidates are not going to be satisfied with $21 million or $22 million for each party, which is already provided under existing law, without any further extension of the Federal subsidy to politicians. After all, why should the Federal Government take over the expenses—the campaign expenses—of the politicians of the country? That is what we would be doing.

Take the State of California, under this proposed law. California would be subsidized, according to the table prepared by the Committee on Rules. The candidates running in the primaries of the State would have half of their expenses—each candidate in the primary—up to $1,414,300, paid by the Government.

So $700 in the primary is what he would get out of the taxpayers' pocket, and maybe there would be seven, eight, nine, or ten candidates in some races.

I asked a Congressman from a Western State the other day how the Senate race looked in that area. He said, "Well, there is one candidate from 1 party, and 10 candidates from the other party." Every one of those 10 would be getting a subsidy from the Federal Government, according to this bill. The Government would match the contributions it received up to $100 each. That is not so terrible, out of $700,000, for a politican in a primary.

It does not take any matching then. As soon as he gets on the ballot as a major party candidate, the Government opens up its coffers and makes a contribution to the candidate for the Senate out of the taxpayers' pockets of $2,121,450. Each major party candidate would be given that subsidy—$2,121,000; why? Why subsidize our good friends who might run for the Senate from the State of California? I use that as an example, admittedly, because it is the largest State population-wise. In New York the amount paid to each candidate of a major party would be—this does not require any matching, Mr. President, it is an outright gift by the Government for use in the campaign; I assume if he did not spend it all it would have to be refunded to the Government, if it could be located—$1,899,750 to each major party candidate for the Senate, out of the Public Treasury.

I am going to get around to the second corollary I laid down a moment ago, that we have not tried strict regulation in the private sector—this other field is so broad it is just going to take a little time to get to it—on the methods we already have of public financing.

I have talked about the checkoff which makes $42 million available to candidates for President, and about the cost of the checkoff. The approximate cost now, if everybody takes advantage of it—suppose just half take advantage of it, under the committee's plan of making them certify they do not want it or it will be checked off. If everyone took advantage of it, it would be $117 million, or, if the committee's version goes through and it is doubled, $234 million.

That is a whole lot of public financing, right there. But that is not all. Look at the campaigns also financed by recent amendments of the income tax laws. Already, under the law—of course, this bill tries to double it—it is already the law, if I am not mistaken, according to my recollection, that an individual under the present law is entitled to a tax credit of $12.50 for contributions he makes to a political candidate.

That can be in a Federal election, a State election, or county or city, I assume. It may be just for Federal elections—$12.50 as a credit; and, of course, a credit is a deduction from the tax. The credit comes off the taxes payable. If the tax bill was $100 before he applied this credit, it would take $12.50 off that amount. Well, that is fine. Then a couple has a $25 credit off of taxes. And that is all right. I do not object to that, the reason being that this provision allows an individual to make a contribution to a candidate of his own choice, someone with his views, with whom he agrees, and not, as under the legislation that is before us, requiring a taxpayer to contribute to someone whose views he disagrees with.

All right. Say the taxpayer figures he could do better going the deduction route. They provide for everyone's convenience, so if he does not want to go the credit route on his contribution, he can go the deduction route, and under the deduction route, if I recall correctly, he can take a deduction from taxable income of $50, or a couple could take a deduction of $100 from taxable income.

The bill would double that, in addition to all of this other public subsidy, so that under the committee's bill the credit would be raised up to a $25 credit for an individual or a $50 credit for a couple filing a joint return, or a deduction of $100 for an individual and $200 for a couple filing a joint return.

So, Mr. President, they have several subsidies already for Presidential elections.

Now, to focus on the generosity of the Treasury as required by the bill to some of the politicians in California and New York, that is just the work of a piker as compared to the subsidy for those seeking the Presidential nominations of the various parties. What do they get there? Well, they are allowed to get the contributions they receive up to $250 each matched by the Federal Government, after they have collected, in contributions of that size, the sum of $250,000, which is referred to as the threshold amount. So once they get the threshold amount, which is $250,000, then they go into the Treasury and pick up a check for that amount, $250,000, and then go on blithely seeking contributions, which the Government will match, up to the astounding sum of $7.5 million—$7.5 million for candidates. Then, if a candidate gets the nomination, $21 million or $22 million is available to him.

Is this campaign reform, Mr. President? It seems to me it is just campaing lunacy—campaign prodigality, I would say. Far from cutting down on the amount of campaign expenditures, this, in all likelihood, would double the amount of campaign expenditures.

Suppose one of the candidates in the Senate—and there are several candidate for the Presidency in the Senate—about or potential—I doubt whether many candidates could collect much over $7.5 million to run for the nomination of their various parties.

Well, that should be fair for one as it is for the other. If they are all limited by the amount they can receive, what is wrong about that, leaving it in the private sector?

It would seem to me that this Federal subsidy just compounds the advantage that a well-known candidate or an incumbent in an office would have over his lesser, well-known opposition because, Mr. President, he could get more of the campaign contributions than could his lesser known opponent and then the Government will match that increased amount.

Say a little-known candidate for the Presidential nomination can raise his $1 million on which to run for the Presidency, then all the Government will match him will be $1 million, but the well-known candidate, say he gets out and gets the whole $7.5 million, what is the Government going to do for him? Why, the Government will give him $7.5 million, so that he will end up with $15 million and the lesser well-known candidate will end up with only $2 million. So he is worse off than if the Government had not interceded to help him.

So if I were a lesser-known candidate—and certainly I would be that, if I became such a candidate—I would say, "Well, do not help me in that fashion by just compounding the advantage that my better-known opponent has, because without this intervention from the public Treasury the difference would be $7½ million to my $1 million. But after you get through me on this public subsidy, the difference would be $15 million as against $2 million."

So, Mr. President, it has not helped the lesser-well-known candidate. As a part of my arithmetic, it would help the better-known candidate.

The better-known candidates, Mr. President, are those who are pushing for this bill, to get right down to brass tacks about the matter. They are not looking out for the lesser well-known candidates. That is obvious from the provisions in the bill.

Who would qualify under this?

Well, Governor Rockefeller would qualify. He would get out and raise $7.5 million in eligible contributions and the Government would then make him a present of $7.5 million.

I remember when this thing was under discussion last year, the same provisions in the same bill, in a different form, of course, but it is there, nevertheless—and I remember Governor Rockefeller's visiting here on the Senate floor. The rules of the Senate permit a sitting Governor in office, the Governor of any of our 50 States, to come in on the Senate floor. He has an automatic privilege of the floor. The Governor of my State, Governor Wallace, was on the Senate floor under that provision as was former Governor Brewer He has been on the Senate floor under the automatic privilege of the floor that he has.

So Governor Rockefeller was here while that bill was under debate. Of course, it was only a coincidence that he was here. He probably did not know what bill was under consideration, but I remarked at that time that I noticed Governor Rockefeller was on the Senate floor and I supposed he had come down to pick up his $7.5 million check, thinking that this bill was about to pass. But it did not pass, and I doubt whether it will pass now. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, as I look about the Senate floor, I do not see anyone on the floor or in the Chair that is very strong for the bill, if at all.

I just wonder whether a whole lot of the push and drive behind this bill has not deteriorated.

Right at that point, Mr. President, I notice here that the Washington Post, which I thought was sort of the Bible for the public finance people. I thought they were in the forefront of the drive for public financing; but not so, Mr. President. I declare, I was very much pleased at the conservative approach of the Washington Post to this problem. It makes me want to reconsider my position. But I am not going to pursue that until after we have disposed of the bill before I start reassessing my position.

But the editorial, for Tuesday, March

But the editorial for Tuesday, March 26, 1974, the day before yesterday—that is their view right up to date—and we are talking about the bill that was passed here in the Senate back on July 30, by a vote of 82 to 8, which provided for campaign reform, but reform in the private sector. It did not provide for public financing. This is what the editorial said about that bill, S. 372. It is over there now in the House and I sort of believe, in the province of WAYNE HAYS, that he will get behind that bill or some approach to the campaign reform. But the editorial commented on that bill, as follows:

Thus the Senate last summer sent the House a very solid bill to curb private giving and spending and to strentghen the enforcement of the election laws.

Mr. President, that was not a public financing bill we passed and that the Washington Post is talking about here.

I think that statement is worthy of being repeated:

Thus the Senate last summer sent the House a very solid bill to curb private giving and spending and to strengthen the enforcement of the election laws.

That is just exactly what it did, Mr. President. It did curb spending. It did curb giving. It did strengthen enforcement of the election laws.

And why, before the House even acts on this bill, are we going to do a 180-degree turn and abandon the regulations in the private sector and get over into the public sector—an uncharted sea, Mr. President?

Why should we do that?

Continuing to read from the editorial:

Today—

This is last Tuesday—

Today, the Senate begins debate on a very ambitious bill to extend public financing to all Federal primary and general election campaigns.

Let us see, Mr. President, what the Washington Post thinks about this bill we have before us. One would think they would laud it to the skies. But, let us see what it says:

The problem with the latest Senate bill is that it tries to do too much, too soon, and goes beyond what is either feasible or workable.

Now, Mr. President, if this amendment that will be voted on in about an hour and a half is adopted, we still have a bill covering a wide territory, but it would be more feasible and more workable without title I.

Continuing to read from editorial:

For one thing, the bill provides for full public financing of congressional general-election campaigns, and that is clearly indigestible in the House this year, since the House leadership even chokes on the more moderate matching-grant approach embodied in the Anderson-Udall bill. The more serious defects in the Senate bill involve the inclusion of primaries.

We can meet the objections, or solve the objections, of the Post if we adopt this amendment, although I am not saying they are for it, but I am sure they are not.

This is what they say about the campaign for the nomination of the two parties:

No aspect of the federal elections process is more motley and capricious than the present steeplechase of presidential primaries. Injecting even partial public funding into this process, without rationalizing it in any other way, makes little sense.

I certainly agree with that statement:

As for congressional primaries, they are so varied in size, cost and significance among the States that no single system of public support seems justifiable without much more careful thought.

So, Mr. President, I commend this editorial to the thoughtful consideration of my colleagues.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. The Senator from Alabama mentioned the legislation which the Senate passed last year. As I recall, that was a very strong piece of legislation. It was, indeed, campaign reform as I visualize it.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes. It was so praised by many people who are now pushing this bill.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. That is a point I cannot understand. When many of the same people felt that that was such a splendid bill, such an important contribution to reforming campaign spending, why is it now that we do not even permit that legislation to go into effect before we try to branch out into another area, in a different way, and begin to take money out of the pockets of the taxpayers to finance political campaigns?

Mr. ALLEN. That is a mystery to the Senator from Alabama, also.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Would it not be logical to enact the legislation which the Senate has already passed, which puts a tight ceiling on campaign expenditures? It seems to me that it is important to put a ceiling on the amount of money a candidate can spend and a tight ceiling on the amount that any individual can contribute to a campaign and to see how that works out, before we talk about digging into the pockets of wage earners, taking money out of their pockets and turning it over to politicians to spend in a political campaign.

Mr. ALLEN. I certainly agree with the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Another thought that occurs to me, as the able Senator from Alabama wages his fight against what I agree with him is a piece of legislation that Congress should not enact at this time, is this: The public these days does not seem to be too enamored of politicians. Do the proponents contend that the public is just demanding that money be taken out of the Federal Treasury, from any tax dollars that have been paid in after working by the sweat of their brow, and be turned over to politicians to spend as they wish in a political campaign? I can hardly believe that the working people of this Nation are very much inclined toward that.

Mr. ALLEN. Little word of any such demand has reached the ears of the Senator from Alabama. He has not heard of any such demand. Far from it. As a matter of fact, the Senator from Alabama can safely say that, based on communications he has received—and they have been in the modest thousands—the ratio has been at least 9 to 1 against any element of public financing.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. This measure is being pushed by a certain group and by certain potential Presidential candidates, I suppose. As to the group that is pushing it, I know many of the members of that group, and the ones I have had acquaintance with are fine, conscientious people who feel that something needs to be done to get campaign spending under control; and I agree thoroughly with that view.

Mr. ALLEN. So do I.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I commend them for the interest they are taking in this matter. Where I differ with them is the vehicle they would use.

The Senate already has passed legislation which, while not perfect, will meet most of the objections we have had in the past about the abuse of campaign spending—namely, by putting a tight ceiling on the amount a candidate can spend and a tight ceiling on the amount any individual can contribute.

I commend and congratulate the able Senator from Alabama for the work he has done in exposing what I believe to be the fallacy of the proposal before the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the distinguished Senator from Virginia for his contribution at this time and for his many contributions throughout the discussion and the consideration of this issue. I believe he has put his finger right on the point, that the answer to the matter of campaign reform is to have strict overall spending limits, as he suggests, and to limit the amount of individual contributions that can be made. S. 372, as passed by the Senate, does impose such a limitation of $3,000 per person, per campaign. If we had such a rule during the last Presidential election, during the last general election, we would not have had some of the abuses we did have.

So the answer is strict regulation and full disclosure of contributions and expenditures. That has not yet been tried. I feel that the proponents of this measure are trying to use the fallout from Watergate as an effort to push this type of legislation to a conclusion.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I commend the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) for the argument he has presented and for the valiant effort he has made in trying to bring some light to this issue of financing campaigns out of the public treasury.

Aside from the question of public financing, most reasonable people in and out of the Senate would agree, I believe, that a number of genuine reforms in campaign financing are needed: to bring such things as milk funds under control, for example; to require that contributions come from individual citizens rather than from special interest groups; to impose a ceiling on the amount that anyone can contribute to a candidate or a campaign; and to impose realistic ceilings on the overall expenditures in any campaign.

A fundamental question is: Are we going to get any reform out of this Congress if we try to load down the many needed, genuine reforms in this bill with this very controversial public financing proposal that could sink the whole ship?

If such a bill stands little or no chance of becoming law, the question is, Who is really for reform? Is it those who press for public financing? Or those who believe public financing should be considered separtely in another bill so that the genuine reforms in this bill can be pressed. It seems reasonable to appeal to those who are for public financing to handle it in separate legislation—to separate it out—as the Senator from Alabama seeks to do with his amendment, and to let it stand or fall on its own merits or lack of merit. But it should not be loaded on top of the other genuine reform measures now in this bill that should be passed and should become law.

As I was seeking to point out yesterday in colloquy with the distinguished Senator from Alabama, I do not think a lot of people realize that in the general election—if this bill were to become law as it is now drafted and presented to the Senate—all of the money for campaigns would come out of the public Treasury. I was pointing out yesterday the situation in the House of Representatives. Let us just take the House races again. I point to the House races because one can compare apples with apples in the House. Everyone represents about the same number of people, and although the expenses of campaigning did vary from district to district, there is a better comparison there than in the Senate, where there is a greater variance in the populations.

As I understand this bill, and the Senator from Massachusetts had to agree, this would happen: In the primary there is a matching arrangement; the candidate raises so much money from private contributors, and that is matched by the Treasury up to a limit of $90,000. Then, in the general election, there is no private contribution. There does not need to be any, and the whole $90,000 going into the general election campaign of each candidate nominated for a House seat would come out of the Treasury.

Mr. ALLEN. That is correct.

Mr. GRIFFIN. One of the important things, as we try to consider whether or not this is reform, is the level of expenditures that is going to be involved under this legislation. I put some figures in the RECORD yesterday. They were somewhat preliminary. I asked my staff to do some more work and they have come up with better figures and they are even more startling than the ones I had yesterday. These figures have come from three sources: The Clerk of the House, who has accumulated information about House races based on the 1972 reports; the Library of Congress, and their figures have come from Common Cause, as I understand it; and also from the GAO. It certainly should be in the RECORD and it should be of some interest, I would think, that in 1972 there were 1,010 candidates in the United States who ran in primary and general elections to seek election for the House of Representatives. The total amount spent by all of those candidates in all of those races was $39,959,276. That is what was spent in 1972 without public financing.

Now, what does the GAO estimate will be the cost for House races, out of the public treasury for the most part, if this bill is passed? Well, that information is on page 27 of the committee report. The GAO estimates that the total cost for races in the House of Representatives, if this bill is passed and goes into effect, will be $100,307,988, or almost three times as much as the 1972 cost.

If the public understands this legislation I cannot believe they are going to think it is reform—campaign reform with this coming out of their tax dollars.

Mr. ALLEN. I think they understand it a lot better than some Members think they understand it. I think that may be the case.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I was pointing out yesterday that every candidate for the House who is nominated is then automatically entitled to receive $90,000 out of the public treasury to run his campaign. A lot of people will say, "Well, he doesn't need to spend it." I guess that is true, but if one's opponent is going to spend $90,000 out of the public Treasury, you do not have much choice other than to spend $90,000. It would greatly escalate the cost of camapigns.

To illustrate the point, I wish to put these figures in the RECORD, and they are based on information from the Clerk of the House of Representatives. In 1972, 8 percent of the candidates for the House of Representatives spent nothing—zero; 52 percent of the candidates spent less than $15,000 on their individual campaigns; and 64 percent spent less than $30,000. I am reading this slowly because I just want to make sure that this is understood. Seventy-four percent of all candidates who ran for the House in 1972 spent less than $50,000. Now, we are going to give all of them $90,000 out of the Treasury.

Mr. ALLEN. And that is to reform the election process.

Mr. GRIFFIN. That is to reform the election process. That will be great reform, will it not?

Mr. ALLEN. That is correct.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I just wish there were some of the proponents of the legislation here so we would not have to debate with ourselves these important points as time runs out and we get close to the vote. But I certainly hope our colleagues will realize what they are doing.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I am glad to yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. McGOVERN. I am curious as to whether or not the figures the Senator is citing represent the filings of the individual candidates. Does that include what the various committees spent on behalf of the candidates? When the Senator said a high percentage of candidates running last year spent less than $50,000 is he talking about all expenditures or just those the candidates personally filed?

Mr. GRIFFIN. As the Senator knows, even though in my opinion it was not nearly strong enough, in 1972 we did have in effect a new law requiring the filing of reports in detail. For the first time Common Cause, the Clerk of the House, and others have been able to accumulate and put together the actual cost of what was involved in various campaigns.

It is my understanding that everything that was required to be filed under that law is reflected here, and that the GAO estimate is approximately on the same basis.

Mr. McGOVERN. As the Senator knows, it has been the practice over the years for candidates to file reports indicating that they spent nothing, because it was handled through committees on their behalf.

Mr. GRIFFIN. That was not true in the 1972 campaign.

The Senator from South Dakota was in the House of Representatives. The junior Senator from Michigan was in the House of Representatives. I do not know what is the cost of running for the House in South Dakota. Perhaps it is entirely different than in Michigan, but I will tell the Senator this: I ran for the House five times, and there was never a time when I or my opponent spent more than $20,000 in those House races. Usually it was less. There may have been one or two races in Michigan in which the candidates spent as much as $90,000, but that would be very rare.

Is that not true generally of the House races? The Senator is familiar with them. Of his own knowledge, would not $25,000 be a lot in those House races?

Mr. McGOVERN. It was double the amount I spent in my first race for the House of Representatives in 1956.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Just on that basis, does not $90,000 for every candidate running for the House of Representatives, coming out of the Federal Treasury, seem a little absurd?

Mr. McGOVERN. Let me say I am not an advocate of full public financing of campaigns. At some point, if it is not done by another Senator, I shall offer a modification of this bill that would make it impossible for anyone to get full public financing. What I would strongly prefer is a system where private citizens are allowed to make modest contributions to campaigns, and that would be matched by public contributions, up to a reasonable amount.

I am not going to debate with the Senator whether $90,000 is the right amount or not. It may be too high. I am not going to advocate the proposal for full public financing. I do not believe in it. I think in 1972 we demonstrated in the Democratic Presidential campaign that it was possible to raise a great deal of money from a large number of people, and do it in a very wholesome and honest way.

Mr. GRIFFIN. That certainly is true, and I think many people, of both parties, respect and admire that aspect, particularly, of the Senator's campaign for the presidency.

Mr. McGOVERN. There is a certain value in preserving at least part of this principle, because there is something to be said for providing an incentive for a candidate to take his case to the people at the grassroots. If he is offered full public financing, I do not think there is the incentive on the part of the candidate to make his appeal, particularly in taking it to the people and making his case there. On the other hand, I think we have to take steps to reduce the influence of special interest money in American politics.

So what I would like to see is a system that combines the best of both these principles—encourage the candidate to go out and raise what he can in limited, modest contributions, from as many people as possible, up to a certain agreed upon limit, and then match that with public contributions, so that we reduce the dependence of that candidate either on his own personal fortune or on special interests.

The reason I am not fully defending the bill before us now is that I intend, at some point, as I say, if some other Senator does not do it, to offer a modification to this bill which will make it more acceptable to the Senator from Michigan and others.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I certainly respect the views of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield.

Mr. CANNON. I think there is getting to be a misunderstanding here as to what the bill actually does. The bill as it exists would not permit any candidate for Congress to get $90,000 Federal funds in a primary——

Mr. GRIFFIN. Not in a primary.

Mr. CANNON. He has to go out and demonstrate a public appeal, and there is a limit on the amount of those contributions he raises up to 50 percent and getting 50 percent matching funds. Once he wins the primary, it would be possible, under the bill, to get up to the $90,000, if that is the amount that is determined upon. The $90,000 is going to match the figure——

Mr. GRIFFIN. Will the Senator yield? Let us be clear that while matching is provided in the primary, once he is nominated, then all of the $90,000 would be public money out of the Treasury. I just want to be sure everybody understands that.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; it is not mandatory.

Mr. GRIFFIN. He does not have to get it.

Mr. CANNON. He can get it if he desires to. The Senator was complaining about the amount being extraordinarily high. Reduce the amount, then. If the Senator likes the principle, but does not like the amount, simply reduce it. I have no brief with the $90,000 figure. I thought it should more appropriately be left up to the House.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I do not think so. We are spending the taxpayers' money. I think the Senate should take a coequal responsibility in the determination of how the taxpayers' money should be spent.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator was indicating a little earlier that a participant could get $90,000 when that sum really was not needed.

Last year, in 1972, in the House, 66 of the winners spent an average of $107,378. So they really spent more than $90,000. That was in the general election. In those 66 races, the losers spent an average of $101,000, so obviously $90,000 was not overly excessive.

It is true that 97 Members who were elected—but I might point out that they got from 70 to 90 percent of the vote, so it is obvious that they did not have a tough fight—spent an average of $38,729. In a case like that, had this bill been in effect, they could not have spent more than $38,729.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I disagree with the Senator.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator may disagree——

Mr. GRIFFIN. This bill would permit every candidate to get $90,000.

Mr. CANNON. Not if they spent an average of $38,729.

Mr. GRIFFIN. But if they spent it they could get it.

Mr. CANNON. If they spent it, they could get it, but I am pointing out that the average spent was $38,729. Obviously it was not a tough race in those cases, if they got from 70 to 90 percent of the vote, which is true of them.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I certainly respect the views of the Senator from South Dakota, and two of his points have merit. But it seems to me, with all due deference, he has made some very good arguments for voting for the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, who seeks to strike title I from the bill. It seems to me the Senator from South Dakota is saying that public financing should go back to the drawing board for some more work and some more study. He is not satisfied with it himself, so I hope he will vote for the amendment.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield.

Mr. McGOVERN. I would like to direct a question to the Senator from Nevada, if he would like to comment on this point, and perhaps the Senator from Michigan would comment on it, too.

Would it be feasible to consider modifying the bill, so that the same principle we have operating in the primary would also operate in the general election? In other words, could we eliminate the possibility of 100 percent public financing, and put the whole thing, both the primary and the general election, on a matching basis, so that 50 percent of the funds would be public and 50 percent would be private? It seems to me that that is a solid compromise, one that includes the very deserving principle of public financing and also preserves the private sector.

Mr. CANNON. To answer the question as to whether it would be feasible, it certainly would be feasible, just as in the bill we provide matching for the primary. But the rationale of those of us who supported this form was that we would try to get away from private financing, and this was a direct result of the Watergate abuses. We saw what had taken place, so many people thought we ought to get away from private financing and go to public financing. That means that if we do not do it in this bill, then it is something like being a little bit pregnant. If the private financing is bad, we have a lot of it in the public. We get away from it now in the general election. There is no reason why we could not carry it on a matching basis in the general election as well as having it in the primary.

I may say in good humor to my friend from Michigan, frankly, that he suggests we eliminate this and go ahead with reform measures. We went ahead with reform measures once before, in S. 372. It is still languishing in the House a year and a half later. If S. 372 had been passed and had become law, I do not think we would be back here arguing the private versus public financing features. I think S. 372 carried a lot of reform features, which made it less likely that we would have such abuses in the private sector.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, much as I admire the chairman and his views, I do not follow his logic at all. If he is saying that if S. 372 had become law, we would not need public financing, I do not understand how the very controversial public financing title, in essentially the same legislation, is going to make it easier to pass. The likelihood is that we will end with no reform at all. But if we will keep our focus on the fuller disclosure, the elimination of the special interest contributions, and those things that really need to be done, I think we could enact legislation that would really be reform in this Congress.

I, for one, am not ready or willing to close the door indefinitely on the concept of public financing. Perhaps it has some merit, but I certainly am not for the public financing in title I, and I must oppose it.

If we wanted to venture into public financing or the Government might provide a set amount of broadcasting time for candidates in a general election, shortening the time of campaigns, and provide a fixed amount of time for each candidate to present his case, with the Government paying for it. Television, as we all know, costs are the biggest expense in a campaign.

Something like this has been done in Great Britain, and it has worked. If we took a modest step like this, it would be something that the people might accept. But they are not going to accept this.

Mr. CANNON. There are a number of reform features in the bill.

Mr. GRIFFIN. There are.

Mr. CANNON. The only importance I attach to public financing is that it gets rid of the undue influence of big contributors. A big contributor, under this bill, cannot have any undue influence and still come within the bill. That is where the reform issue comes up in public financing. It means that a candidate is not dependent upon big contributors.

Mr. GRIFFIN. The way to eliminate the big contributor is to put a definite ceiling, such as a thousand dollars, on any amount a person can contribute.

I call attention to the remarks made a few minutes ago by the distinguished Senator from South Dakota, who pointed out that in his race for the Presidency most of his support came from small contributors. I do not think we should make it impossible for people to run for the House or the Senate, or even the Presidency, by putting a limit on the amount of small contributions.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator will recall that when this matter was under discussion before, our committee was charged with reporting a bill in this session that contained a reporting feature. But at that time we did check with the Senator from South Dakota, and it developed that while he got most of his money from small contributors, still it was necessary to have seed money to operate the campaign—a Presidential campaign—and to go out and make these types of contact.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Where does the seed money come from in this bill? As I understand, in the primaries it is necessary to go out and raise the money.

Mr. CANNON. That is correct; or the candidate would have to raise it on a matching basis in the primary. But, as the Senator pointed out or provided for the RECORD, despite all the candidate's efforts to get a broad distribution, a broad base, he would still have to rely on some very large contributors to come in and provide the necessary seed money. But I do not know whether he is going to get it under this type of provision. I do not know whether this provision would be adequate in a Presidential race. At least, we put smaller limits in than we put in on S. 372, which passed the Senate overwhelmingly. The reason is that if S. 372 had been enacted, we would not have the very loopholes we are taking care of in this bill. As a result, if that bill had been passed last fall, I do not think we would have the pressure now for public financing and other reform measures. That is my personal view.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I thank the chairman for his statement and contributions to the debate. At the time of the earlier debate, in making a commitment to the Senate, it was thought that the Rules Committee would consider reporting a public financing bill, so that the Senate might have an opportunity to have this debate. I wrote the minority views against it in the report. I felt that it was an issue that should not be decided only within the Rules Committee; that it was an issue big enough and of such importance that the Senate itself should have an opportunity to debate it. After performing that funcion as a commitee member, I now am in the position of strongly opposing title I. I do not see it as a reform; I see it as a shocking way of raiding the Public Treasury.

I think one thing ought to be mentioned in this debate, and that is that there is a provision in the tax law for a deduction of up to one-half of small contributions on one's tax return. When you are allowed that deduction, or I think it is even a credit under some circumstances, that is taking money out of the Treasury. That is public financing.

There is an important difference, however: you are able, under that system, to make your contributions and provide support to the candidates and the party of your choice. It seems to me that is an important concept that is overlooked here when we talk about financing all races out of the Public Treasury. That is taxation without representation. It means that regardless of whether you favor a candidate or a party, your tax funds are going to go toward his campaign.

I do not think most people want that, or want this Congress to enact it.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, having made reference, as I did during my remarks, to the views that I included in the committee report, I ask unanimous consent that my statement of additional views as it appears beginning on page 89 of the committee report be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the excerpt from the committee report (No. 93-689) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF MR. GRIFFIN

The astute political observer, David S. Broder, mixed a dash of homely wisdom with a reporter's cynicism when he wrote: "The only thing more dangerous to democracy than corrupt politicians may be politicians hell-bent on reform."

In many minds, the idea of "public financing" has somehow become synonymous with "campaign reform." I am concerned that the reality may be very different.

Even though I have serious doubts about the public financing aspects of this bill, I joined in voting to report it because I believe the Senate as a whole should have an opportunity to debate and decide the issues raised by Title I. Furthermore, except for Title I, the bill contains many campaign financing reforms which are clearly meritorious.

For example, I strongly support such provisions as those in other titles of the bill to create an independent Federal Election Commission, to place strict dollar limits on the amount an individual can contribute to a candidate or to campaigns in any year, to limit the amount a candidate can contribute to his own campaign, to restrict the size of cash contributions; to impose ceilings on overall campaign expenditures; and to require each candidate to use a central campaign committee and depository.

Such provisions truly represent campaign financing reforms, and they should be enacted on their own merit.

Unfortunately, public understanding has not fully penetrated a facade of attractive slogans that has surrounded the promise of public financing for campaigns. As more and more light is focused on the approach of Title I in this bill, the more realization there will be that it does not really represent "reform" at all. That will be particularly true as the people learn that "public financing" means "taxpayer financing"; and when they see that Title I would actually increase, not decrease, the levels of campaign spending, particularly in races for the House of Representatives.

It should be noted also that a number of needed, real reforms have not been included in this bill. For example, I believe everyone—candidates and voters alike—would welcome steps to shorten the duration of campaigns.

ROBERT P. GRIFFIN.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I am opposed to the pending amendment and ask the Senate to reject it. The amendment is very brief but its effect upon the bill would be to destroy it, for title I provides for the financing of Federal elections from the public funds. Without title I we would be left with the existing law as amended by the bill, S. 372, which the Senate passed last July 30 by a vote of 32 to 8.

The Committee on Rules and Administration labored long and hard to prepare this bill and it reflects days of public hearings on the subject of public financing and the reasons for proposing a system of public financing.

There is no need to repeat in detail or at great length the many arguments in support of public financing. Those arguments and the rationale are set forth at length in the committee's report beginning on page 4 and copies are on the desks of all Members of the Senate.

Excesses in contributions and expenditures evidenced in the 1972 campaigns demonstrated clearly that some candidates have no difficulty in raising vast amounts of money while others cannot raise enough to carry out an effective campaign.

The unfortunate ones either drop out or must accept contributions from wealthy individuals or special interest groups. When limits are set for contributions it becomes even more difficult for the little known candidate to raise necessary funds for even a minimal campaign.

This bill, and especially title I of the bill, offers a fair and reasonable opportunity to any citizen to seek nomination or election to Federal office if he possesses the necessary qualifications and meets the standards set by title I for public funding.

Public financing cannot be applied only to general elections because the private financing of primary elections would leave us with a situation in which the potential for a repetition of the scandals of 1972 is obvious.

A candidate could raise money from any source for use in a primary, if he had access to those sources, and, if he won he could then demand public funds to finance his general election campaign.

As the committee report states on page 6:

Unless primary election candidates can be relieved of their excessive dependence on large amounts of public money, a system of public financing in general elections will only move the evils it seeks to remedy upstream to the primary phase of the electoral process.

The bill S. 3044 does not open the vaults of the Treasury to every candidate who enters a race. It requires him to demonstrate a genuine appeal to the electorate by raising a meaningful threshold amount in small private contributions. If he cannot meet the threshold he gets no public money.

The bill also furnishes full funding to major party nominees and only a proportionate amount to minor party candidates.

The thoroughness of the bill's provisions, the requirements which must be met prior to becoming eligible for public funds, the provision for private and public matching, and the option to go for either private or public funding careful auditing and accounting, are all evidence of the painstaking concern of the committee for the public and the use of public money.

Public financing is the only answer to corruption in the field of political finances and to restore confidence in the elective process.

I urge my colleagues to vote against the amendment.

Mr. President, on this subject, today's New York Times carries an editorial entitled "The Time Is Now" and it emphasizes the need for public financing of all Federal elections—primary and general.

Further, it stresses fairness of the pending legislation, S. 3044, in offering public financing as an optional alternative to private financing.

I ask unanimous consent to have the editorial printed at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE TIME IS NOW

Now is the time for a full and fundamental cleansing of the nation's outmoded, corrupt system of financing public elections with private money. Now is the time to break the stranglehold of wealthy individuals and of self-seeking interest groups over the nation's politics. Now is the time to bring into the open sunlight of public responsibility a system half-publicly regulated and half-secret. If Congress cannot reform the nation's politics in this sordid year of Watergate, when will there be a more opportune time?

The campaign reform bill awaiting action in the Senate is an admirable measure. It has bipartisan backing as well as support from ordinary citizens across the country. Senators Mike Mansfield, the majority leader; Robert Byrd, the majority whip, and John Pastore, the party's chief spokesman on this problem, have given the bill stalwart Democratic support. On the Republican side Senator Hugh Scott, the minority floor leader, has been out in front urging action on reform.

The heart of the bill is a sharp reduction in the size of private contributions and, as an alternative, an optional form of public financing. Opposition to this reform concept comes from diverse quarters. President Nixon is opposed. Senator James Allen, Alabama Democrat, who serves as Gov. George C. Wallace's agent in the Senate, is opposed. So are the right-wing conservative Republicans led by Senators Barry Goldwater and Strom Thurmond. The biggest danger to the bill is the threat of a filibuster by Senator Allen with the backing of the Goldwater-Thurmond group. But this bluff can be called if Senators Mansfield and Scott remain firm in support of the bill.

As with any innovation, the advocates of reform are vulnerable to the criticism that they are attempting too much. But primaries as well as general elections need drastic improvement; in many one-party states, the primary provides voters with their only effective choice. It would make no sense to reform the financing of political campaigns at the Presidential level and leave House and Senate unreformed.

Rightly or wrongly, Congress as well as the Presidency suffers from a loss of public confidence in this Watergate season. The members of Congress will be making a serious miscalculation about their own political futures as well as the fate of the institutions in which they serve if they revert to business-as-usual. The people sense the need for reform, and the people's sense needs heeding.

The principles underlying the reform bill are simple: Presidential and Congressional primaries would be financed by matching grants. Thus, Presidential aspirants would have to raise $250,000 in private contributions of $250 or less before they qualified to receive the matching sum of $250,000 from the Federal Government. Like climbing steps in a flight of stairs, the candidate would qualify for another quarter-million dollars each time he raised the same amount privately. There would be an over-all limit of approximately $16 million, half public and half private, for each Presidential candidate in the primaries.

The same principle would apply to House and Senate primaries except that the limit on contributions would be lower—$100 or less—and each step in the staircase would be lower, $25,000 in Senate races and $10,000 in the House. In general elections, the matching principle would not apply. Candidates could finance their campaigns by public or private funds or any mix of the two as long as they stayed within an over-all ceiling.

The bill would not lock parties and candidates into a novel or rigid arrangement. Rather, it curbs the abuses of private financing and offers public financing as an alternate route to elected office. Since the old private route has become choked with scandal, it cannot—unreformed and unaided—serve democracy's need much longer. Now is the time to provide a public alternative.

Mr. BEALL. Mr. President, I wonder whether the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration, the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON) would yield for a question for purposes of clarification.

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. BEALL. As I understand the provisions of this legislation with regard to public financing in the primaries, to be used in my State as an example, we are required to raise 20 percent of the primary spending limit in order to qualify for public financing, which means, as I read the chart, and Maryland would be permitted primary spending of $272,000, that in the primaries we would be required to raise 20 percent of that amount of money, which is $54,000 in order to qualify for the 50–50 participation; is that not correct?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, as I understand what the Senator stated. In other words, the voting age population of Maryland is 2,720,000. So, using the 10 cents per voting age population in the primary, the amount that could be spent in the primary election would be $272,000. The candidate would be required to raise 20 percent of that by private contributions in order to be eligible for the matching formula proposition.

Mr. BEALL. To pursue this matter further, in the State of Maryland we register by party. Assuming there are 1,600,000 voters registered, unfortunately, only 300,000 are registered as Republicans. This means that I have to raise $54,000 from 300,000 Republicans, with a limit of $100 per contribution. Is that correct?

Mr. CANNON. The Senator could raise it from all over the country, and he need not raise it just from Republicans. So he would have the opportunity to raise it from any source, but the limit would be $100.

Mr. BEALL. I would hope that my services would be so much in demand that I could attract attention from all over the country and that I could attract attention from Democrats.

As a practical matter, considering a first-time candidate, I am wondering how successful a candidate would be in raising funds from other than members of his own party if he were in a heated primary.

My next question is this: I cannot possibly see, quite frankly, if in the State of Maryland, for example, we were to have a heated primary in the Republican Party, which has only 300,000 members, how any candidate with a limit of $100 on a contribution could hope to raise $54,000 in order to qualify for the Federal participation, which would then double the amount of money he received.

I am saying that the bill as now written puts an intolerable burden—as a matter of fact, a penalty—on a candidate of what is a major party in a minor party status, so far as registration figures are concerned.

Mr. CANNON. In the first place, I cannot agree with the Senator that out of a voting-age population of 2,720,000 there are only 300,000 Republicans.

Mr. BEALL. I know that there are. I live in Maryland, and I happen to be Republican, and I know how many people are registered as Republicans. I am not only sorry but also a litle ashamed of the paucity of the people who register in that party.

Mr. CANNON. If the Senator is correct on his figures and if he feels that in the State of Maryland he could not go out and raise $54,000——

Mr. BEALL. In the primary.

Mr. CANNON. If he or some other candidate in a primary could not raise that amount, then I would say they had better not be in the race.

Mr. BEALL. I hope I will never have to spend $54,000 to be successful in a primary in the State of Maryland.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator does not have to go to the matching formula basis.

Mr. BEALL. What I am saying is that the public is financing the candidates in the Democratic Party but not the candidates in the Republican Party. So the Democratic Party continues to grow stronger while the Republican Party continues not able to take advantage of the public funds that might be available for the financing of elections. That may sound good to the Senator from Nevada, as a Democrat, but it does not sound good to me, as a Republican.

Mr. CANNON. The requirement is that a candidate demonstrate that he has some public appeal if he is going to get the Federal contribution. If he does not have that public appeal, he is not going to get the Federal contribution. If he says, "Somebody else is going to get it and I am not," the Senator from Maryland is correct. He could say, "Tax money is going to support some other candidate but not me," and that is true, if he cannot demonstrate the public support.

Mr. BEALL. But for a Democrat running in our State, the figure is not the same. He has 1,300,000 people to whom to appeal for contributions, whereas I have 300,000 people to whom to appeal, as a Republican.

Mr. CANNON. I cannot think of anyone on the Senate floor who could raise that question less legitimately than either of the Senators from Maryland, because they are both Republicans, and I think it is quite obvious that they are able to get private contributions adequate to compete in a campaign.

Mr. BEALL. But this is a nonincumbent's bill, I would hope. This bill is not to perpetuate incumbents in office, much as we would like it to be. I thought the purpose of this was to give anybody an opportunity to seek public office, in the U.S. Senate or the House of Representatives, regardless of whether he is in office at the present time.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator is not correct. This bill is not designed to give anybody the opportunity to seek public office. This is an election reform bill, to try to reform the electoral process by providing limits to reduce the influence of large contributions, and it is not directed toward either political party. So far as we can tell, it is not weighted toward either political party.

If the Senator does not like the formula, I would suggest that he offer an amendment to change it.

Mr. BEALL. I think that is a good suggestion. I accept the suggestion. But the reason why I engaged in this colloquy is that I wanted to point out that I think there are inequities. The bill as now written, keeps people from running for public office who might otherwise do so.

Mr. CANNON. May I point out, in response, that it does not keep anybody out, because nobody has to qualify and receive Federal funds. Obviously, when the Senator ran the first time, he received no Federal funds, and he was able to raise private contributions and to compete and to win. A candidate can do that at the present time, and he can do it under this bill. The bill would not change that one iota. But if one is going to compete for Federal funds under this bill, he has to demonstrate that he has some public appeal; otherwise, everybody who wanted to run would come in and say, "I want in on the pie."

Mr. BEALL. Suppose that in 1976, when I am up for reelection, we have a primary—perish the thought—and I, because I am the incumbent, might be able to go out and raise $54,000; and because I raised $54,000, I would then be entitled to another $54,000 from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. CANNON. If the Senator spends it. He is not entitled to it unless he spends it.

Mr. BEALL. It is not very difficult to spend money in an election campaign if you have it or if you know you are going to get it. Then I would be entitled to $108,000, on that basis. Is that correct?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no. The Senator would be entitled to $54,000. If he raised $54,000, he would be entitled to a matching amount.

Mr. BEALL. So I would have $108,000.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, but $54,000 the Senator would raise from private contributions.

Mr. BEALL. The $54,000 I raised and the $54,000 that Uncle Sam would give me. I am the incumbent, and I can hope to raise $54,000 in the primary. How about the fellow challenging me in the primary? Suppose he can raise only $35,000? He is not going to get public funds. I would have a campaign financed half by my supporters and half by Uncle Sam, and any challenger would have to depend on funds that are very difficult for him to collect. So I would have a double advantage. Is that correct?

Mr. CANNON. Not a double advantage; but the ultimate assumption is correct, that a man who cannot demonstrate the public support, cannot share in the public financing. That part of the Senator's statement is correct.

Mr. BEALL. Sometimes there is a difference between demonstrating public support and collecting money. Sometimes one can get the votes but not the dollars to back up the votes.

It seems to me that by using this formula, a terrible burden is placed upon those people who might want to challenge an incumbent in a primary, and I do not think that is in keeping with the purpose of the legislation.

Mr. CANNON. If the Senator is opposed to public financing, he should vote against it.

Mr. BEALL. I started out by saying that I am not opposed to public financing combined with private financing. But I am opposed to public financing that discriminates against people who want to challenge the incumbents.

I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BROCK. I think the Senator is saying that whether or not it was the intent of the bill, as it is written it is an incumbent protection act, particularly in the sense of the primary. Further, if a candidate is a viable candidate and all his supporters happen to be people of low economic standing, he just does not have an opportunity to demonstrate his voter appeal, because the dollars are not there.

Mr. BEALL. That is correct.

Mr. BROCK. So he is penalized, even though he may have enormous appeal for the majority of his constituency. That is the thing here: The incumbency is perpetuated. The process is damaged. It is made almost impossible for challengers to bring any freshness into the system. That is the terrible thing about this kind of approach, and it seems to me that we can do a better job on it.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I wonder if the Senator from Maryland would agree with this observation. It seems to me if the Senator is concerned, as he well might be, about the possibility of raising funds under the present circumstances from that number of Republicans in his State, I wonder how the climate and the attitude of potential givers might be because if we pass this bill, entitled "Public Financing," and the word goes out that the Government is going to finance campaigns from now on, I wonder if the people will be interested in making any contributions, and I wonder if they will understand that it would be necessary for us to raise $54,000—is it 5,400 contributors?

Mr. BEALL. 540 contributors.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I am just wondering if it would not be a great deal more difficult than under circumstances today.

Mr. BEALL. I think it would be.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I think so, too.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I wish to point out that there is another flaw in this approach, and that it is we do try to strengthen the two-party system, but the Republican Party has not been around for 200 years. It was created about 110 years ago or 115 years ago. Had this law been in effect at that time, the grave of Abraham Lincoln would be just another burial plot in the cemetery. He could not have run under this bill and could not have gotten the support. There was no such thing then as a Republican Party. He would have been the candidate of a minor party, and since the bill states that there must be established a basis in a prior election and there is no prior election for a new party, he would have none.

I wonder what would happen in the case of the Bull Moose Party in 1912, when the Bull Moose candidate ran ahead of the Republican Party candidate on a splintered ticket. What opportunity do we have in that situation? This bill freezes the practice, it freezes the incumbent, and it has the possibility of reducing the vitality of our system.

Mr. BEALL. I am really more concerned about the advantages to the incumbent. I was not concerned about the party. But as Republicans we should be concerned about our Republican Party. But it seems to me as presently written the incumbent in the case of a party where there is an imbalance in registration in the State has a tremendous advantage and I think it is an advantage no one can hope to overcome because I cannot imagine a challenger in the State of Maryland in a primary situation being able to raise the required $54,000 that would be necessary to pursue a primary campaign against an incumbent.

Mr. MOSS. Mr. President, today this Congress has the opportunity and responsibility to implement a lasting and comprehensive means to prevent corruption in politics. The 'purchasing" of favors through private political contributions to campaigns has had a demeaning effect on all public officials. Acceptance of S. 3044 can go a long way toward alleviating this problem.

Last summer when the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1973 was being considered by the Senate, I indicated my support for an equitable form of public financing. Last September I testified before the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections that emphasis in politics should be on people, not on money. I further indicated that the public would not be ill-served to have some of its tax money reserved for the assistance of political candidates to public office. Such use of our tax money would improve the representative process by enlarging its scope, and invigorating the workings of democracy.

Only last month I joined in a colloquy with several of my distinguished colleagues and pointed out that the traditional practice of campaign revenue raising is susceptible to much abuse and that an alternative to this abuse was the allowance for taxpayers to a checkoff on their Federal income tax for campaign purposes.

Last November, I was pleased that the Senate accepted an amendment to the debt ceiling bill to provide a means to publicly finance elections. However, following a compromise by the House, a filibuster in the Senate, and a historic Sunday session, opposition hardened and supporters of reform could not muster the two-thirds vote necessary to break the filibuster.

It must be emphasized that campaign financing is not a new issue. It is not being rushed through Congress. Extensive hearings have been held in the Senate. My distinguished colleagues on the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, and the Rules and Administration Committee have devoted many long hard hours to development of a bill that is comprehensive, but fair. S. 3044, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 is such a bill. I commend my colleagues for their work in handling this delicate issue of public financing of campaigns expeditiously but with fairness to the exponents of all viewpoints.

Senator ALLEN is to be respected for his view on public financing of elections. Although I do not agree with his reasoning or conclusions regarding public financing, I certainly cannot dispute his sincerity.

I believe that Senator ALLEN is wrong in contending that title I of S. 3044 is a "raid on the Treasury." Rather, public financing as provided by this bill merely prevents special interests from buying favors and placing undue pressure on public servants. Americans now only end up paying more for campaigns than they would by having tax dollars used for campaigns. Large contributions by representatives of large corporations come from higher prices of commodities that are purchased by the consumer. The milk support price rise in early 1971 is proof of this. The only difference is that such increase in price is a subtle increase.

Certainly, I do not contend that public financing is a panacea to all of the ills of campaigns. But it is a step in the right direction. Until individuals realize that favors will not be purchased by political contributions, politics in the eyes of Americans will not be restored to a place of honor and respect. I think that public financing, although problems will occur in development of means to implement it, is one way in which this honor and respect can be returned to public service.

I ask that my colleagues join in defeating amendment No. 1064 to S. 3044. Only through this means can we indicate our commitment to prevention of corruption evident in recent campaigns.

CAMPAIGN FINANCE REFORM—A TIME FOR CLEANSING

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the Senate has under consideration the most comprehensive campaign finance reform measure ever to come before the Congress. No single piece of legislation before the Senate in this session has the potential of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1974 for cleaning up American politics and restoring confidence in the integrity of our political system and the individuals who work within it.

The most important feature in this legislation, which incorporates and builds on a number of recent campaign reform measures passed by the Senate, is the new provision for the public financing of Federal elections that it authorizes. I totally disagree with those who claim public financing of elections is a diversion of public funds from important public activities. If the tragic drama called Watergate, which has been unfolding for nearly 2 years in our newspapers and on our televisions, has made anything clear, it is that the public has no greater interest or priority than in assuring the integrity of those they choose as their public officials.

While I do not endorse every detail of this bill or feel it can be written on stone tablets for all posterity, I do agree completely with its basic objectives and believe its major provisions are reasonable. Obviously, any legislation of such significance will require very careful monitoring by Congress to be sure it is having the intended effects on our electoral process. This monitoring will lead naturally to the adjustments and fine tuning that always prove necessary as major new legislation is implemented.

Title I of the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974, the public financing title, affords all candidates an opportunity to obtain a certain amount of public financing of their campaigns from the Treasury of the United States. However, to receive such assistance, they must be able to demonstrate a reasonable amount of support from the electorate in the geographic area in which they intend to run for Federal office.

To qualify for public financing assistance in the primaries, a candidate must raise a specific amount of "earnest money" from contributions of $250 or less in the case of Presidential candidates and $100 or less for Senate and House candidates.

After the required threshold level of "earnest money" has been reached, public matching funds would be available on a dollar-for-dollar basis for each contribution of $250 or less for a Presidential primary candidate and $100 or less for a Senate or House primary candidate.

In the general elections, candidates may choose to receive all private contributions and no public funding, a blend of private and public funding, or, in the case of major party candidates, exclusively public funding.

The nominee of a major party would be able to receive full public funding of his campaign for election, up to the specified campaign spending limits. Minor party nominees would be eligible for public funding up to an amount equal to the percentage of the vote their party's candidate received compared to the votes cast for the candidates of the major parties.

The bill would also increase the value of the dollar check-off to $2 for individual and $4 for joint returns and provide that the designation be automatic, unless the taxpayer elects not to make such a designation. If the amount of designated tax payments to the fund do not result in a sufficient total amount to fulfill the entitlement of all qualified candidates, then the Congress may appropriate the additional sums needed to make up the deficit.

The bill would limit individual contributions to a candidate, or committees operating on his behalf, to $3,000 for each election. It would limit the total contribution of an individual to all candidates in any calendar year to $25,000. And, it would limit to $3,000 the contribution of a political committee to any candidate. A limit of $100 is placed on all cash campaign contributions.

While the legislation before us includes a number of other significant reforms regarding campaign finance, I believe that the provisions relating to public financing of campaigns are of the utmost importance.

I have been a vocal advocate of expanded public financing of Federal elections for many years. As one who has been involved in almost all types of Federal elections, I can appreciate, perhaps more than some others, the importance of such a change in the financing of the electoral process. It was with this in mind that I supported the dollar check-off and authored the amendment which put it on the front of the income tax form where people could see it and use it. This was also my reason for speaking in behalf of the Kennedy-Scott public financing amendment when it came before the Senate last July.

Mr. President, if the faith of the American people in their Government is to be restored, this vital campaign finance reform legislation must be passed with its major public financing thrust intact.

There is no doubt that this reform measure is needed.

In politics, I have found that what is true is, regrettably, not always as important as what people perceive to be true. Those of us who run for office can profess that the campaign contributions we receive do not in any way control our votes, but I venture to say that not many believe it.

I have been in a number of campaigns, and I enjoy the campaigns, I like them. But the most demanding, disgusting, depressing and disenchanting part of politics is related to campaign financing. Furthermore, in national elections it is literally impossible for the Presidential and Vice Presidential candidate to have control over or knowledge of campaign finances. All too easily you can become the victim of sloppy reporting or carelessness on the part of your committee or committees. Yet, in the public's mind, it is the candidate that is guilty of wrongdoing.

In my years of public service I have seen the cost of campaigns skyrocket to unbelievable levels.

It is time we stopped making candidates for Federal office spend so much of their time, energy and ultimately their credibility, on the telephone calling friends or committees, meeting with people, and often times begging for money.

Scrounging for funds to bring your case to the electorate is a demeaning experience. The bill before us today gives us our best chance ever of cleaning up our politics.

Frankly, Mr. President, the election of public officials is too important to our Nation, and an electoral process that is above suspicion is too precious to our people, to permit elections to be decided on the auction bloc of private campaign funding. Big money, large private contributions, and the amount of money a politician can raise should not be permitted to continue as a key to election day success.

Mr. President, it is gratifying for one who has labored long in the vineyard of public campaign finance, and it should be very encouraging to all Americans, to see such a creative step toward cleansing our electoral process emerge with nearly unanimous bipartisan support from the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration. Chairman CANNON and his colleagues have done a laudable job and deserve our congratulations.

I hope that the Senate will support, in general, the committee's work, and provide the Nation with the leadership our people seek in restoring confidence in the integrity of their Government.

It is not enough to criticize corruption in politics. That is easy to do, we can all be against evil. But our constituents are demanding more than rhetoric from us, and rightly so. The American people will no longer tolerate lip-service to campaign finance reform. The time for us to act is now and the vehicle is before us. We must act positively on the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 and authorize the extension of public financing to all Federal elections.

Some may say, "All the politicians are doing is taking care of themselves." Others, who should know better, have called it "taxation without representation" and "a diversion of public funds from important purposes."

But, Mr. President, as one who has been to the "political wars" at the national level for 25 years, I say unequivocally that there is no more important use of public funds—no better insurance of effective representation that directly benefits our people—than to assure the integrity of our public officials and to tear away the veil of suspicion that shrouds every politician who must go to the marketplace to finance his candidacy.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, S. 3044 includes a number of campaign reform proposals tied together in a package that we are told will satisfy the public demand for reform and at the same time solve many of the problems that face our society. Some of the proposals that have been woven into this bill have merit and deserve consideration, but those that dominate S. 3044 are so deficient as to render the bill virtually unsalvageable.

Title I of S. 3044 is, I am afraid, chief among these. It is title I, of course, which incorporates public financing of Federal elections with strict expenditure limitations. The concept of publicly financed election campaigns has been the subject of controversy in this body for some years now, but I am still far from convinced that it is an idea whose time has come or indeed, that it is an idea whose time should ever come.

The scheme incorporated into this portion of S. 3044 is quite intricate mechanically, but one that must be thoroughly understood both mechanically and conceptially before we go so far as to vote it into law.

Therefore, before I move into a discussion of what I see as the basic objections to the entire concept of public financing I would like to go over the provisions of the specific plan incorporated into title I of S. 3044.

Under title I tax money amounting to approximately $360 million every 4 years would be made available to finance or help finance the primary and general election campaigns of legitimate major and minor party candidates for all Federal offices.

A candidate seeking the endorsement of his or her party via the primary route must demonstrate his "seriousness" by raising a specified amount through private contributions before qualifying for Federal money. Once this threshold amount has been raised, however, the candidate becomes eligible for public matching funds up to the limit applicable to his race.

Candidates running in the general election for any Federal office are treated differently depending on whether they are running as major party or minor party candidates. Of some interest is the fact at the Presidential level a major party is defined as one that garnered 25 percent of the vote in the previous election.

Major party candidates may receive full public funding up to the limit applicable to their races.

A minor party candidate, on the other hand, may receive public funding only up to an amount which is in the same ratio as the average number of popular votes cast for all the candidates of the major party bears to the total number of popular votes cast for the candidate of the minor party. However, the minor party candidate must receive at least 5 percent of the vote to qualify for any funding.

Minor party candidates are allowed to augment their public funds with private contributions up to the limits set in the act and may receive post election payments if they do better in the current election than they did in preceeding elections.

The indepedent candidate or the candidate of a new minor party isn't entitled to anything prior to the election, but can qualify for post election payments if he draws well at the polls.

This plan is expected, as I indicated a few moments ago, to cost about $360 million every 4 years. The sponsors of S. 3044 would have us believe that this money will be raised through an expanded tax check off provisions such as the one now on our tax forms that permits us to designate that $1 of our tax money shall go to a Presidential Election Campaign Fund.

This strikes me as one of the most objectionable features of this entire scheme. The check off as modified by the authors of S. 3044 is a fraud on the American taxpayer. It is an attempt to give people the feeling that they can participate in decisions that the authors of this bill have no intention of letting them participate in. This provision alone would force me to vote against S. 3044 and should be stricken along with the rest of title I.

As you may recall, the checkoff was originally established to give individual taxpayers a chance to direct $1 of their tax money to the political party of their choice for use in the next Presidential campaign.

When it was extended by the Congress last year, however, the groundrules were changed so that this year taxpayers are not able to select the party to which their dollar is to be directed. They are simply allowed to designate that the dollar should go into the Presidential election campaign fund to be divided up at a later date. Thus, while the taxpayer may still refrain from participating he may well be directing his dollar to the opposition party if he elects to participate.

A theoretical example will illustrate this. Let us assume that two candidates run in 1976 and that the money to be divided up amounts to $10 million. Half of this would go to each candidate, but let us further assume that 60 percent of this money or $6 million is contributed by Democrats. Under this set of circumstances a million Democrats would unwittingly be contributing to the campaign of a candidate they do not support and for whom they probably will not vote.

If S. 3044 passes things will get even worse. During the first year only 2.8 percent of the taxpaying public elected to contribute to the fund. This disappointing participation was generally attributed to the fact that it was difficult to elect to participate. Therefore this year the form was simplified and a great effort is being made to get people to participate.

As a result about 15 percent of those filing appear to be participating and while this increase seems to warm the hearts of those who have plans for this money it will not raise nearly enough money to finance the comprehensive plan the sponsors of S. 3044 have in mind.

Therefore they have found a way to increase participation. Under the terms of S. 3044 the checkoff would be doubled to allow $2 from each individual to go into the fund, but the individual taxpayer will no longer have to designate. Instead his $2 will be automatically designated for him unless he objects. This is a scheme designed to increase participation reminiscent of the way book clubs used to sell books by telling their members they would receive the month's selection unless they chose not to. As I recall, Ralph Nader and his friends did not like this practice when book clubs were engaged in it and one can only hope that they will be equally outraged at the proposal that Uncle Sam join in the act.

But S. 3044 goes further still. If enough people resist in spite of the Government's efforts to get them to participate, the Congress will be authorized to make up the difference out of general revenues. So, after all is said, it appears that the checkoff is little more than a fraud on the taxpayer.

Let us move from the question of the way the money needed to finance this plan will be raised to the question of the propriety of the spending limits that are an integral part of the plan.

Under section 504 of the title we are debating uniform limits are imposed on incumbent and nonincumbent candidates alike. These limits will necessarily favor incumbent Presidents, Senators, and Congressmen because any incumbent has advantages that must be overcome by a challenger trying to unseat him. To overcome these advantages a challenger must spend money.

I have already indicated that I will call up an amendment designed to overcome this problem by allowing nonincumbents to spend more than office holders. Something of this sort strikes me as absolutely necessary at a time when Americans are skeptical enough about Government in general and elected officials in particular.

Congressional and Senate incumbents have generally been fairly safe re-election bets for a variety of reasons. Incumbency itself has been estimated to be worth 5 percentage points on election day, and I just do not think we should do anything that might be fairly interpreted as giving us an even greater lock on our seats.

The $90,000.00 limit on House races imposed by this bill would have a similar effect. Indeed, my own analysis of a recent Common Cause study of expenditures in 1972 convinces me that this legislation is weighed heavily in favor of incumbents and might therefore weaken the ability of our citizens to influence governmental decisions.

I have been discusing the specifics of title I and they are, of course, both interesting, and important.

They represent an attempt on the part of the Rules Committee to answer some of the specific problems that arise when one gets into the business of publicly subsidizing election campaigns.

We could discuss these specifics for days and I fear that we might find ourselves doing just that if we do not accept the Senator from Alabama's amendment to strike the entire title. The problem is that a discussion of specific attempts to overcome problems that are merely symptomatic of a faulty approach to a much larger problem are a complete waste of time.

The scheme before us today like others that have been proposed in recent years seems to be based on the assumption that private financing is an evil to be avoided at all costs.

I am afraid I have to reject that basic assumption. A candidate for public office is currently forced to compete for money from thousands or—in the case of Presidential candidates—millions of potential contributors and voters.

Viable candidates rarely have trouble raising the funds needed to run a credible campaign and, in fact, their ability to raise money is one very good gage of their potential popular support.

As Congressman FRENZEL said during hearings on public financing last year:

> While the ballot box is an essential means of measuring popular support for a candidate, political contributions give individuals and groups an opportunity to register strong approval and disapproval of a particular candidate or party.

Under our present system potential candidates must essentially compete for private support, and to attract that support they have to address themselves to issues of major importance to the people who will be contributing to their campaigns and voting for them on election day. Public financing might allow candidates to ignore these issues, fuzz their stands, and run campaigns in which intelligent debate on important matters is subordinated to a "Madison Avenue" approach to the voters.

Consider a couple of examples. During the course of the 1972 campaign, it is reported that Senator McGOVERN was forced by the need for campaign money to place greater emphasis on his support of a Vietnam pullout than his political advisers thought wise. They felt that he should have downplayed the issue and concentrated on others that might be better received by the electorate.

I do not doubt for a minute that the Senator's emphasis on his Vietnam position hurt him, but I wonder if we really want to move toward a system that would allow a candidate to avoid such issues or gloss over positions of concern to millions of Americans.

The need to court the support of other groups creates similar problems. Those who believe that we should maintain a friendly stance toward Israel, for example, as well as those who think a candidate should support union positions on a whole spectrum of issues want to know where a candidate stands before they give him their vocal and financial support. The need to compete for campaign dollars forces candidates to address many issues and I consider this vital to the maintenance of a sound democratic system.

Second, to the extent that these plans bar the participation of individual citizens in financing political campaigns they deny those citizens an important means of political expression. Millions of Americans now contribute voluntarily to Federal, State, and local political campaigns. These people see their decision to contribute to one campaign or another as a means of political expression. Public financing of Federal general election campaigns would deprive people of an opportunity to participate and to express their strongly held opinions.

They would still be contributing, of course, since the Senate proposal will cost them hundreds of millions of dollars in tax money. But their participation would be compulsory and might well involve the use of their money to support candidates and positions they find morally and politically reprehensible.

Third, S. 3044 and similar proposals combine public financing with strict limits on expenditures. As I have already indicated, these limits must, on the whole, work to the benefit of incumbents since they are lower than the amount that a challenger might have to spend presently in a hotly contested race if he wants to overcome the advantages of his opponent's incumbency.

Fourth, the various schemes devised to distribute Federal dollars among various candidates and between the parties has to affect power relationships that now exist. Thus, if you give money directly to the candidate you further weaken the party system. If you give money to the national party, you strengthen the national party organization relative to the State parties. If you are not extremely careful you will freeze out or lock in minor parties. These are real problems with significant policy consequences that those who drew up the various public financing proposals tended to ignore. The authors of S. 3044 merely managed to make the consequences less clear. They did not solve the problems.

Fifth, public financing will have two significant effects on third parties, neither desirable. In the first place, it will discriminate against genuine new national third party movements—such as that of George Wallace in 1968—because such parties have not had the chance to establish a voting record of the kind required to qualify for preelection financing. On the other hand, once a third party qualifies for future Federal financing, a vested interest arises in keeping it alive—even if the George Wallace who gave it its sole reason for existence should move on. Thus we run the risk of financing a proliferation of parties that could destroy the stability we have historically enjoyed through our two party system.

In addition, S. 3044 and all similar plans raise first amendment questions since they all either ban, limit, or direct a citizen's right of free speech.

In this light it is interesting to note that a three-judge panel in the District of Columbia has already found portions of the law we passed in 1971 unconstitutional. As you will recall the 1971 act prohibited the media from charging for political advertising unless the candidate certified that the charge would not cause his spending to exceed the limits imposed by the law. This had the effect of restricting the freedom both of individuals wishing to buy ads and of newspapers and other media that might carry them and, in the opinion of the District of Columbia court, violated the first amendment.

I would like to state parenthetically, Mr. President, that I intend to vote against all amendments that might ameliorate some of the constitutional objections, so that whatever is enacted will be as vulnerable as possible to judicial attack. I will do so because of my profound convictions that the bill's principal features will do our political system substantial harm.

I have already indicated in references to the specifics of title I that I fear we are debating a bill that would aid incumbents over the candidates. This is so because of the uniform spending limits that are an inherent part of this and most other public financing plans.

In addition to incumbents such plans would aid another class of candidates and therefore artificially tilt the politics of this country.

Any candidate who is better known when the campaign begins or is in a position to mobilize nonmonetary resources must benefit from these kinds of plans as compared to less known candidates and those whose supporters are not in a position to give them such help.

This is necessarily true because the spending and contributions limits even out only one of the factors that determine the outcome of a given campaign. Other factors therefore become increasingly important and may well determine the winner on election day.

Consider, for example, the advantage that a candidate whose backers can donate time to his campaign will have over one whose backers just do not have the time to donate. In this context one can easily imagine a situation in which a liberal campus-oriented candidate might swamp a man whose support comes primarily from blue-collar middle-class workers who would contribute money to their man, but do not have time to work in his campaign.

Or consider the candidate running on an issue that attracts the vocal and "independent" support of groups that can provide indirect support without falling under the limitations imposed by law. The effectiveness of the antiwar movement and the way in which issue-oriented antiwar activists were able to mesh their efforts with those of friendly candidates illustrate the problem.

David Broder of the Washington Post noted in a very perceptive analysis of congressional maneuvering on this issue last year that most members seem to sense that these reforms will, in fact, help a certain kind of candidate. His comments on this are worth quoting at length:

> . . . the votes by which the public financing proposal was passed in the Senate had a marked partisan and ideological coloration. Most Democrats and most liberals in both parties supported public financing; most Republicans and most conservatives in both parties voted against it.
> The presumption that liberals and Democrats would benefit from the change is strengthened by the realization that money is just one of the sources of influence on a political contest. If access to large sums is eliminated as a potential advantage of one candidate or party by the provision of equal public subsidies for all, then the election outcome will likely be determined by the ability to mobilize other forces.
> The most important of these other factors are probably manpower and publicity. Legislation that eliminates the dollar influence on politics automatically enhances the influence of those who can provide manpower or publicity for the campaign.
> That immediately conjures up, for Republicans and conservatives, the union boss, the newspaper editor and the television anchorman—three individuals to whom they are rather reluctant to entrust their fate of electing the next President.

This legislation affects the way we select our representatives and our Presidents. It affects the relationship of our citizens to their elected representatives and to Government itself. It affects the party system that has developed in this country over nearly 200 years in ways that we cannot predict.

In other words, S. 3044 affects the very workings of our democratic system and could alter that system significantly.

Those in and out of Congress who advocate public financing are selling it as a cure-all for our national and political ills. For example, the Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. KENNEDY, recently went so far as to say that—

> Most, and probably all, of the serious problems facing this country today have their roots in the way we finance political campaigns . . .

This statement reminds one of the hyperbole associated with the selling of New Frontier and Great Society programs in the 1960's. The American people were asked then to accept expensive and untried programs as panaceas for all our ills.

Those programs did not work. They were oversold, vastly more expensive than anyone anticipated, and left us with more problems than they solved. Public financing is a Great Society approach to another problem of public concern and, like other solutions based on the theory that Federal dollars will solve everything, should be rejected.

I intend to support the Allen amendment to strike title I and I urge its adoption.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the Allen amendment which, if adopted, would strip public financing from the bill. As a member of the Rules Committee which held long hearings and markup sessions before favorably reporting the bill to the Senate floor, I support the entirely flexible and realistic approach it takes.

Supporters of the amendment claim that public financing, as proposed in title I, would place full Federal control over the election process. This is inaccurate. As a New York Times editorial said this morning:

The bill would not lock parties and candidates into a novel or rigid arrangement. Rather, it curbs the abuses of private financing and offers public financing as an alternate route to elected office.

I hope that the Allen amendment will be soundly defeated.

Mr. FANNIN. Mr. President, public campaign financing as envisoned in title I of S. 3044, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 represents a major effort to restructure our political and electoral process, all in the name of "campaign reform."

Most certainly none of us are opposed to reforms of existing abuses since our political system needs constant monitoring and readjustment, and the Congress has acted to correct some of those abuses. But what is proposed in title I is not a single adjustment or correction. Instead we have a whole new approach to financing Federal elections.

Mr. President, I am aware, of course, that this issue has been considered for years in Congress. In fact, I would point out that in June 1967, Russell D. Hemenway, national director of the National Committee for an Effective Congress, made these remarks at a hearing before the Senate Finance Committee and they bear repeating here today:

The NCEC wishes to be on record as opposed to any proposal which provides direct Treasury financing of elections. We feel this would substitute the Treasury for the voluntary political contributor. To appropriate Federal funds to pay for campaigns is antidemocratic since it excludes the individual from a vital portion of the political process. It also tends to establish a political monopoly which would ultimately erode the process of free elections.

Even with limitations and safeguards—the practical effectiveness of which are open to serious question—the direct subsidy vests in the national party committees an undesirable concentration of power, control, and influence which would ultimately have serious impact on the entire party system and political process. The long-range results are predictable: A lessening of public influence over party platforms and policies, and central control over the decisions and actions of candidates and over State and local party organizations. By reducing the financial dependence of parties on the rank and file constituents, the party hierarchy is insulated against the public will. The inherent dangers of stifling conformity, rigid discipline, and a self-perpetuating power structure within the major parties are obvious.

It is in order here, to take a quick look at how direct Treasury financing of campaigns would operate. Suppose the two national parties were each allocated $10 million from the Treasury. Nominally, they could use this money only for certain specified costs of the presidential campaign. But would not the two national chairmen discover that their slightest whims were respected as orders by party officials, by everyone in the party from supervisors to coroner to candidates for the House and Senate?

Above all, the basic principle of voluntarism is destroyed, since the individual may not determine where his money is going. Nor would he participate in many of the meaningful campaign activities for which fundraising is merely a stimulus. Politically, for the candidate and public, it is far more important to receive a hundred $1 bills than one contribution for $100.

In the effort to cleanse the present system of abuses, we do not want to sterilize the political process. It will do no good to handcraft an unresponsive, bureaucratic mechanism which renders the public will speechless and impotent. The American people are now reacting against the overbureaucratic agencies of Government. At a time when every effort is being made to humanize and personalize the Government, we do not want to build the same difficulties into politics. We see in some of the election financing proposals this same pattern which has characterized much recent Federal legislation; full of good intentions, financed by Federal largess, but functionally incapable of proper administration because of rigid and uniform directives are imposed in situations requiring adjustment and flexibility.

Mr. President, we have had hearings over the years and each time we have found that the financing of election campaigns out of tax money creates many more problems than it could solve.

Mr. President, the place for campaign reform to begin is through the enforcement of the laws which we do have. As Arlen J. Large wrote in an article, "How Should We Finance Elections?" in the May 10, 1973, Wall Street Journal:

There's not yet an obvious need to go to the extreme of taxing people to pay for the antics of barnstorming politicians, or adding their expenses to the national debt. At least that step shouldn't be taken before trying sterner enforcement of existing law.

Mr. President, I believe that this goes right to the heart of the American political process. It would be a serious infringement on the rights of the individual. For some people it would mean taking their tax money for political purposes and processes which they oppose; for others it would mean denial of their right to fully participate in the political process in the manner of their choosing.

Direct subsidies would also raise serious problems of freedom of expression. They would be a form of compulsory political activity which limited the freedom of those who would refrain as well as of those who chose to participate. When an individual is forced, in effect, to make a contribution to a political movement to which he is indifferent or which he finds distasteful, it may be fairly said that a basic freedom is being infringed. When this forced payment is combined with limits on contributions to favored candidates, political freedom is drastically limited.

Mr. President, we also have a number of unanswered questions as to how this bill would be implemented. In the American Bar Association Journal of last October, Carleton W. Sterling wrote an article, "Control of Campaign Spending: The Reformer's Paradox," which observed:

Subsidization schemes raise a number of dilemmas. Every person desiring office cannot be subsidized, so subsidies must be awarded to those who already have demonstrated political power sufficient to warrant subsidization. Parties may gain subsidies for their candidates according to some formula linked to their support in the electorate, which must favor the established parties. Congress has considered subsidies geared to equalizing the campaign financing of the two major parties, but funds for minor parties at best would only approximate their strength among the voters.

Mr. President, this is a very real problem. It is somewhat frightening to envision a government of politicians allocating funds for the campaigns of politicians. Everyone must share the concern of A. James Reichley in the December 1973 issue of Fortune magazine, who in his article, "Financing—But Let's Do It Right," commented:

Total Government financing would also raise the danger that at some future time a dominant political faction or party might deny the opposition the resources needed to reach the public.

Finally, Mr. President, it has been argued that only through public campaign financing can we cure the disease we call Watergate. Yet nothing in S. 3044 will change the conditions for such acts to occur if it is the desire of some individuals to subvert the political and electoral process. Regardless of where the money comes from it can still happen. In this context, then, S. 3044 will accomplish very little. To avoid the "Watergates" of the future will require strict enforcement of existing laws and the prosecution and conviction of those found guilty of such criminal acts as is happening at this very moment.

What the supporters of S. 3044 really hope to achieve is not entirely clear, but what the provisions imply is the beginning of a Federal structure to manage political campaigns and perhaps even the political process itself. It does not take much imagination to conceive of future legislation being proposed to further restrict political operations. In essence, this is a dangerous bill contrary to our tradition of political freedoms. Those who have condemned Watergate because it represented an effort to control political power have only to read this bill to see the potential for achieving the same end only then it would have the cover of law as giving support to restricting political freedom.

If the Congress can choose a formula which favors the major parties over the minor parties then it has effectively chosen to perpetuate existing political arrangements.

If Congress can manipulate funding it can do so in a way to make it impossible for groups to participate in the political process.

If the Congress can limit expenditures it can limit them to the point where the opportunity to express a view is severely restrained.

If the Congress can do all this in the name of "campaign reform" then surely we have taken a major step in eroding our political freedoms.

It is for these reasons that I oppose title I of S. 3044 and will support the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Alabama, Senator ALLEN.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, I defer to no one in acknowledging the need for election campaign reform in many areas. As a Member who has served on the Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities, the so-called Watergate committee, I can vouch for that firsthand.

I have supported legislation designed to achieve campaign reform, including limiting amounts of money that may be contributed and spent in political campaigns, reporting and disclosure of campaign contributions and expenditures, and provisions for enforcement of the law to insure that the election process in our free society is not subverted.

In fact, even before Watergate and campaign reform became highly charged household words, I sponsored legislation to allow tax credits or tax deductions for modest contributions to political campaigns in an effort to broaden the base of public political support.

However, I draw the line on public financing of Federal election campaigns. This is not campaign reform. It is another blatant attempt to poke the long arm of the Federal Government into an area where it has no business.

It is an effort to destroy the freedom of the American people to choose in the election process.

It is an effort to deny the American people freedom of expression in the support or nonsupport of candidates for public office.

It would constitute a raid on the Federal treasury, at a time when our country and hard-working taxpayers are caught in the grip of rampant inflation, when we are unable to even come anywhere near balancing the budget, and when we can not make both ends meet on programs that are needed in our society.

What we have before us today is a program that is neither needed, desirable, or in the best national interest.

The right to vote is as sacred a right that the American people have in our free society. Voting is an expression of support of a particular candidate for public office and an endorsement of his views at the ballot box.

A citizen's contribution to the election of a particular candidate is likewise an expression of support. To make such a choice and to give such a contribution is in my estimation also a sacred right.

How a free citizen casts his vote and how he supports a candidate of his own choosing is a decision only that citizen can make. No one has a right to make that decision for him.

A citizen can support this candidate or that candidate. Or, he can choose to support no candidate. That is his right in our system of free elections.

I know of no American taxpayer who fully understood the situation who would agree to having his tax money spent on the political candidacy of a person whose views were totally repugnant to him. I certainly do not want my tax money spent that way.

Yet, that is precisely what would result from public financing of Federal election campaigns.

It is unthinkable that the Federal Government would presume to tell voters and taxpayers how they ought to contribute to political campaigns. Yet, that would be the effect of this legislation.

It would cut both ways. If I were an arch conservative, I would not want my tax dollars going to the candidacy of an arch liberal. If I were an arch liberal, I would not want my taxes supporting the candidacy of an arch conservative. Such an idea as this flies in the face of everything I understand about freedom to choose in the electoral process.

Under this proposal, the Federal Government first forces the American taxpayer to fork over his money. Then, the Federal Government takes that money and turns it over to the election campaign of a candidate who perhaps could not get even his wife to vote for him. The only way this could be avoided, would be for the citizen to evade the tax collector.

Virtually anyone can file for public office these days. I do not think hard-working people want their taxes spent to finance the campaigns of every crank or crackpot that comes along.

I join efforts to improve the election campaign process and to bring about needed reform. But, the last thing we want is for politicians to put their hands in the public treasury to finance their election campaigns.

I hope the Senate will kill this legislation.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, with regret, I find it necessary to oppose the McGovern amendment. I believe would be an unfortunate backward step in our progress toward reform.

Contrary to some reports, the public financing provisions of S. 3044 are in no sense manlatory. The bill does not prohibit private financing, and it certainly does not prohibit small private contributions.

In fact, it provides strong incentives for small contributions in primaries, since it offers matching public funds only for the first $250 in private contributions for Presidential primaries and the first $100 in primaries for the Senate and House.

Private contributions also have a role to play in general elections, since major party candidates will have the option of relying entirely on private funds, entirely on public funds, or on any combination in between.

And in both primaries and general elections, the bill provides new incentives for small private contributions by doubling the existing tax credit and tax deduction available for such contributions.

In these respects, the bill recognizes the vigorous differences of opinion on the proper role of small private contributions. Some feel that such contributions are an essential method for bringing citizens into the system and encouraging popular participation in politics.

Others, like myself, feel that there are better ways to bring a person into the system than by reaching for his pocketbook, and that the best way to a voter's heart is through his opinions on the issues, not through the dollars in his wallet.

As it should be, the bill accommodates both views, letting each candidate "do his own thing," without forcing any candidate into a rigid formula for financing his campaign.

In this respect, S. 3044, is an improvement over the 1971 dollar checkoff law, which prohibits a person who accepts public funds from accepting private contributions Under S. 3044, there is greater flexibility—a candidate can select the mix of private and public funds he wants for his campaign, such as 50–50 or 80–20, and is not obliged to accept public funds on an all-or-nothing basis.

For that reason, I am opposed to alternative proposals such as the McGovern amendment, that would turn public financing for general elections into a compulsory "mixed" system of partial public funds and partial private contributions, with or without matching grants.

Last November, in the floor debate on the public financing amendment to the Debt Ceiling Act, the Senate voted 52 to 40 against a proposal to cut the amount of public funds in half and to require the remainder to be raised in private contributions. As Senator JOHN PASTORE succinctly put it in the floor debate, in opposing such a mandatory mixture of public and private financing:

"Either we are going to have or not going to have public financing. If we are going for public financing, let us go for public financing. If we are not going to have it, let us not have it. What we have here [in the proposal for a mixed system] is a hermaphrodite."

If participation in politics through small private contributions is the goal, then the dollar checkoff is already achieving it. More than 4 million taxpayers have used the checkoff so far in 1974. At the current rate, 12 million taxpayers will have used it by the time all returns are filed on April 15. That's a world record for public participation in campaign financing, a tribute to the workability of the "one voter-one dollar" approach to public financing enacted in 1971.

Further, it is by no means clear that it is feasible for a large number of general election campaigns across the country to be run on small private contributions.

The Goldwater campaign in 1964, the McGovern campaign in 1972, and the Democratic National Committee's telethon in 1973 are good examples of successful fund-raising through small private contributions, but they prove only that such fund-raising may work in the unique circumstances involved in those campaigns.

They do not prove that the method will work when every Senate, House and Presidential candidate is tapping the pool of small contributors.

The net result of such a system applied to all elections may simply be to put a premium on the best-known candidate, or the candidate who starts the earliest or who hires the best direct-mail expert as his fund-raiser.

Nor would it be desirable, in my view, to adopt a program of matching grants for small private contributions as the form of public financing for general elections.

In the case of primaries, a system of matching grants is appropriate and is the method adopted by S. 3044. In fact, matching is the only realistic method of public financing in primaries, since it is the only realistic way to identify those who are serious candidates. The candidates who deserve public funds are those who have demonstrated broad appeal by raising a substantial amount of private funds from small contributions. Thus, if we are to have any public financing of primary elections, it must be accomplished through matching grants.

In the general election, however, the nomination process has already identified the major party candidates who deserve public funds. It is appropriate, therefore, as S. 3044 provides, to give them the full amount of public funds necessary to finance their campaigns, with the option for every candidate to forego all or part of the public funds if he prefers to run on private contributions.

Thus, full public funding in the general election gives a candidate maximum discretion in running his campaign. If an extra layer of private spending is allowed, all candidates would be obliged to raise the extra amount as a guarantee that they would not be outspent by their opponents.

As a result, all candidates would be forced into the mandatory straightjacket of spending time and money to raise small private contributions, even though many candidates would prefer to spend that time and money in more productive ways in their campaigns.

A system of matching grants in general elections would be especially dangerous to the existing two-party system, since it might encourage splinter candidates—for example, a candidate narrowly defeated in a primary would be encouraged to take his case to the people in the general election as an independent candidate or as a third party candidate. Under S. 3044, by contrast, a third party candidate with no track record from a past election would still be able to obtain public funds, but only retroactively, on the basis of his showing in the current election.

Thus, in its provisions offering full public funds on an optional basis for general elections, S. 3044 avoids the waste, pitfalls, and obvious dangers to the election process of a mixed system of public-private financing or a system of matching grants, and I urge the Senate to reject the McGovern amendment.

Mr. President, in closing, let me add one further note.

Mr. President, today's New York Times contains an excellent editorial supporting the public financing legislation now before the Senate.

The editorial gives particularly strong support to two of the most important aspects of the bill—the provisions extending public financing to Senate and House election, and the provisions making public financing available for primary elections as well.

In addition, the bill praises the leaders of the Senate who have done so much to make this reform legislation possible. Senator MANSFIELD, Senator ROBERT BYRD, Senator PASTORE, and Senator HUGH SCOTT, mentioned in the editorial, have played a vital role in bringing this issue to the front burner of national debate, and I am pleased that the editorial recognizes their important contribution.

In particular, I am pleased at the editorial's clear recognition of the central role played by Senator HUGH SCOTT, the distinguished minority leader of the Senate, who has done so much to lay the genuine bipartisan groundwork that will make this reform possible.

Over the years, Senator SCOTT has been an outstanding advocate of all aspects of election reform, and all of us in the Senate can join in taking pride in the effective contributions he has made to the cause of integrity in Government and to fair, honest, and clean elections.

I ask unanimous consent that this editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Mar. 27, 1974]

THE TIME IS NOW

Now is the time for a full and fundamental cleansing of the nation's outmoded, corrupt system of financing public elections with private money. Now is the time to break the stranglehold of wealthy individuals and of self-seeking interest groups over the nation's politics. Now is the time to bring into the open sunlight of public responsibility a system half-publicly regulated and half-secret. If Congress cannot reform the nation's politics in this sordid year of Watergate, when will there be a more opportune time?

The campaign reform bill awaiting action in the Senate is an admirable measure. It has bipartisan backing as well as support from ordinary citizens across the country. Senators Mike Mansfield, the majority leader, Robert Byrd, the majority whip, and John Pastore, the party's chief spokesman on this problem, have given the bill stalwart Democratic support. On the Republican side Senator Hugh Scott, the minority floor leader, has been out in front urging action on reform.

The heart of the bill is a sharp reduction in the size of private contributions and, as an alternative, an optional form of public financing. Opposition to this reform concept comes from diverse quarters. President Nixon is opposed, Senator James Allen, Alabama Democrat, who serves as Gov. George C. Wallace's agent in the Senate, is opposed. So are right-wing conservative Republicans led by Senator Barry Goldwater and Strom Thurmond. The biggest danger to the bill is the threat of a filibuster by Senator Allen with the backing of the Goldwater-Thurmond group. But this bluff can be called if Senators Mansfield and Scott remain firm in support of the bill.

As with any innovation, the advocates of reform are vulnerable to the criticism that they are attempting too much. But primaries as well as general elections need drastic improvement; in many one-party states, the primary provides voters with their only effective choice. It would make no sense to reform the financing of political campaigns at the Presidential level and leave House and Senate unreformed.

Rightly or wrongly, Congress as well as the Presidency suffers from a loss of public confidence in this Watergate season. The members of Congress will be making a serious miscalculation about their own political futures as well as the fate of the institutions in which they serve if they revert to business-as-usual. The people sense the need for reform, and the people's sense needs heeding.

The principles underlying the reform bill are simple: Presidential and Congressional primaries would be financed by matching grants. Thus, Presidential aspirants would have to raise $250,000 in private contributions of $250 or less before they qualified to receive the matching sum of $250,000 from the Federal Government. Like climbing steps in a flight of stairs, the candidate would qualify for another quarter-million dollars each time he raised the same amount privately. There would be an over-all limit of approximately $16 million, half public and half private, for each Presidential candidate in the primaries.

The same principle would apply to House and Senate primaries except that the limit on contributions would be lower—$100 or less—and each step in the staircase would be lower, $25,000 in Senate races and $10,000 in the House. In general elections, the matching principle would not apply. Candidates could finance their campaigns by public or private funds or any mix of the two as long as they stayed within an over-all ceiling.

The bill would not lock parties and candidates into a novel or rigid arrangement. Rather, it curbs the abuses of private financing and offers public financing as an alternate route to elected office. Since the old private route has become choked with scandal, it cannot—unreformed and unaided—serve democracy's need much longer. Now is the time to provide a public alternative.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, I have a perfecting amendment at the desk on the section the Senator from Alabama proposes to strike. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 10, line 19, following the word "to", insert the word "one half".

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, the thrust of this amendment was designed by the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON). It embraces a principle which I very strongly endorse, which is to combine the concept of public financing with limited private financing. I think something will be lost in our political process if we go entirely to the public financing of campaigns. What this amendment does, in effect, is to say that the same concept that operates in the bill before us in the primaries should operate in the general election. In other words, under the terms of the perfecting amendment I am offering, once a candidate is established as a nominee of his party, he is at that point authorized to receive one-half of the amount of expenditures that the bill permits, rather than the full amount. The remaining half he would have to go out and raise in private contributions under the restrictions that this bill implies. It would have the advantage of giving the candidate the incentive to take his case out to the people, and it would have the advantage of permitting an average citizen to make an investment in the candidate of his choice.

It would reward candidates with broad grass root support. It would strike a favorable balance between those who say, "No public financing at all," and those who want to go the whole distance with public financing. I hope very much the Senate will adopt the amendment. I hope the Senator from Alabama will see it as an improvement over the section of the bill he is proposing to strike and that he might abandon his idea on this portion of the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator understands, I am sure, that under the checkoff provision there is already available 100 percent financing up to the amount set in this bill in Presidential races. Would the Senator's amendment cut that figure in half? There already is a $21 million subsidy available to each party in 1976.

Mr. McGOVERN. It would have no bearing on that. It would relate only to the language of the present bill.

Mr. ALLEN. If all he could get is one-half under this provision, how could he then get all under the other since it is all coming out of the public Treasury? Is it not?

Mr. McGOVERN. Yes, but this bill provides for a different method to finance campaigns. It applies not only to the Presidency but all Federal offices.

I think the language would not have any impact other than to require the candidate to get one-half from private sources.

Mr. ALLEN. No, it does not say that. It says one-half from the public Treasury of his overall limit. It does not require a single dime to be paid in private contributions.

Mr. McGOVERN. That is correct; but if you wanted to spend the total amount under the bill he would have to raise one-half from private sources.

Mr. ALLEN. It looks like the candidate would have the option to proceed under the checkoff, which would give him $21 million without matching, or to proceed under this provision, which would give him $10.5 million with public funds.

Mr. McGOVERN. May I ask the Senator what would be the impact of his own amendment in terms of the checkoff system?

Mr. ALLEN. It would leave the checkoff system exactly where it is now. It would have no effect on it.

Mr. McGOVERN. I cannot see where this affects it, because it does not relate to that language.

Mr. ALLEN. The reason is that there would be no wording there at all for such provision.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from South Dakota have the floor after disposal of the amendment.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, what was the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That the Senator from South Dakota have the floor following the vote.

Is there objection to the request?

Mr. MANSFIELD. On the Allen amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair assumed that the unanimous consent first was on the McGovern amendment.

Would the Senator from Montana restate his unanimous consent request?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I ask for the yeas and nays on the Allen amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are requested.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan will state it.

Mr. GRIFFIN. What are we going to vote on first?

Mr. MANSFIELD. On the Allen amendment No. 1064.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, will the Chair state what the vote will first be on?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. GRIFFIN. So the vote first will be not on the Allen amendment, but on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota to the Allen amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan is correct. The vote on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota takes precedence.

The hour of 3:30 having arrived, the Senate will proceed to vote on the McGovern amendment.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President——

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are requested.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I move to lay the McGovern amendment on the table.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, in view of the fact that we are speeding things up a little, I would hope, in the interest of expediency, that we could agree on a 10-minute vote limitation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. GRIFFIN. The vote now is on the motion to table the McGovern amendment. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. SYMINGTON), and the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. WILLIAMS) are necessarily absent.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) is absent on official business.

I also announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN) is absent because of illness in the family.

I further announce that the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND) is necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND) and the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) would each vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 74, nays 19, as follows:

So Mr. PASTORE's motion to lay on the table Mr. MCGOVERN's amendment to Mr. ALLEN's amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN), No. 1064. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE), and the Senator from Missouri (Mr. SYMINGTON) are necessarily absent.

EXTENSION OF THE CHECK FORGERY INSURANCE FUND

Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 717, H.R. 6274.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARTLETT). The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 6274) to grant relief to payees and special indorsees of fraudulently negotiated checks drawn on designated depositaries of the United States by extending the availability of the check forgery insurance fund, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair hears none and the Senate will proceed to its consideration. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, this is a bill to grant relief to payees and special indorsees of fraudulently negotiated checks drawn on designated depositaries of the United States by extending the availability of the check forgery insurance fund.

This measure would add new language to the Check Forgery Insurance Fund statue (55 Stat. 777; 31 U.S.C. §§ 561–64), which is a revolving fund established in the Treasury Department out of appropriated funds and which serves to reimburse payees and special indorsees whose names are forged on U.S. checks which were negotiated and paid on the forged instrument. Specifically, H.R. 6274 would add a new section 4 to permit similar payment to payees and special indorsees on forged checks drawn in U.S. dollars or foreign currencies on depositaries designated by the Secretary of the Treasury in the United States or abroad.

A deficiency exists in present law which does not allow for full relief for payees or indorsees of Government checks where forged checks are drawn on U.S. Treasury depositaries in foreign countries and paid on occasion in foreign currencies. The increased use of U.S. checks drawn on foreign depositaries and the increased incidence of forged instruments on such accounts necessitates the need for a fiscal resource from which prompt and certain relief can be made to innocent payees and special indorsees. The Check Forgery Insurance Fund currently provides relief for checks drawn in U.S. dollars, but does not now cover situations where the checks are paid in foreign currencies. The purpose of the proposed bill is to provide a recourse for claims arising under these latter circumstances.

Moreover, under present law, claimants in foreign countries must rely on the banking laws and regulations where the U.S. Treasury depositary is located. Since there are now no means for timely and efficient settlement of funds, delays as long as 2 years are frequently experienced by payees and special endorsees seeking settlement. H.R. 6274 would provide a logical and proven remedy for prompt settlement through funds retained in the check forgery fund.

Finally, it should be noted that use of the fund by the Treasurer does not relieve a forger, or transferee subsequent to the forgery, from any liability on the check, and all amounts recovered by the Treasurer as a result of such liability are credited to the fund as necessary to reimburse it.

Mr. President, this measure makes a simple revision of present law which broadens the authorized use of the check forgery insurance fund, and in certain instances by authorizing the use of foreign currencies to make proper settlement in a logical and timely fashion. I recommend its passage.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCLELLAN's amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following:

"SEC. 2. (a) Section 203(j) of the Federal Property Administrative Services Act of 1949, as amended (40 U.S.C. 484(j)), is amended—

"(1) by striking out 'or civil defense' in the first sentence of paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof 'civil defense, or law enforcement and criminal justice';

"(2) by striking out 'or (4)' in the first sentence of paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof '(4), or (5)';

"(3) by striking out 'or paragraph (4)' in the last sentence of paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and "(4), or (5)';

"(4) by inserting after paragraph (4) a new paragraph as follows:

"'(5) Determination whether such surplus property (except surplus property allocated in conformity with paragraph (2) of this subsection) is usable and necessary for purposes of law enforcement and criminal justice, including research, in any State shall be made by the Administrator, Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, who shall allocate such property on the basis of need and utilization for transfer by the Administrator of General Services to such State agency for distribution to such State or to any unit of general local government or combination, as defined in section 601 (d) or (e) of the Crime Control Act of 1973 (87 Stat. 197), designated pursuant to regulations issued by the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration. No such property shall be transferred to any State agency until the Administrator, Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, has received, from such State agency, a certification that such property is usable and needed for law enforcement and criminal justice purposes in the State, and such Administrator has determined that such State agency has conformed to minimum standards of operation prescribed by such Administrator for the disposal of surplus property.';

"(5) by redesignating paragraphs (5), (6), and (7) as paragraphs (6), (7), and (8), respectively;

"(6) by striking out 'and the Federal Civil Defense Administrator' in paragraph (6), as redesignated, and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and 'the Federal Civil Defense Administrator, and the Administrator, Law Enforcement Assistance Administration'; and

"(7) by striking out 'or paragraph (4)' in paragraph (6), as redesignated, and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and '(4), or (5)'.

"(b) Section 203(k)(4) of such Act, as amended (40 U.S.C. 484(k)(4)), is amended—

"(1) by striking out 'or' after the semicolon in clause (D);

"(2) by striking out the comma after 'law' in clause (E) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and 'or'; and

"(3) by adding immediately after clause (E) the following new clause:

"'(F) the Administrator, Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, in the case of personal property transferred pursuant to subsection (j) for law enforcement and criminal justice purposes,'.

"(c) Section 203(n) of such Act, as amended (40 U.S.C. 484(n)), is amended—

"(1) by striking out in the first sentence 'and the head of any Federal agency desig-

The American Legion salutes the U.S. Merchant Marine in its dual role as an essential element of our national security and a vital arm of transport in providing the needs for our economic survival. The American Legion is in your corner, and we believe the American people generally are going to become more and more favorably inclined toward a strong U.S. Merchant Marine as your importance in the daily lives of all of us becomes more widely known and better understood.

Thank you very much.

Now, before I relinquish this podium, I would ask Mr. Jasper Baker, President of the Propeller Club of the United States to join me here for a moment.

Mr. Baker, The American Legion has long shared the concern of the Propeller Club of the United States in promoting and supporting an American merchant marine adequate to meet the requirements of the national security and the economic welfare of the United States.

We appreciate the forthright manner in which you have pursued your total objectives and we are proud of the cooperative relationship we have enjoyed with the Propeller Club as we have sought mutual objectives for the good of these great United States of America.

In recognition of this shared effort it is my personal privilege and pleasure to present to you on behalf of The American Legion this plaque which is inscribed as follows:

The American Legion commends the Propeller Club of the United States for its outstanding and continuing contribution toward a strong, modern American Merchant Marine capable of meeting our nation's economic and defense needs.

Presented this 19th day of March, 1974, Mayflower Hotel, Washington, D.C., and attested by our National Adjutant Bill Hauck and signed by me as National Commander.

Mr. Baker, please accept this with our best wishes for the continuing success of the Propeller Club of the United States as you strive to fill a vital national need.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT TO 9:30 A.M. TOMORROW AND FOR VOTE ON MINIMUM WAGE BILL

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, instead of coming in at 10 o'clock tomorrow, when the Senate adjourns tonight it stand in adjournment until 9:30 a.m. tomorrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, that will allow us approximately 1 hour for the three special orders and morning business.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time, at the conclusion of morning business, until 11:30 a.m., be equally divided between the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. WILLIAMS) and the Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN) or whomever he may designate.

Mr. GRIFFIN. The minority leader, it should be.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Or whomever he may designate; and that the vote on the conference report on the minimum wage occur at 11:30 a.m.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, there will be no objection, but I wondered whether, at that time, as I am for the report as I am the ranking member, it would be understood that the minority leader or I, or anyone designated could assign time to anyone in opposition out of that 1 hour?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Oh, yes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I am sure that I can speak for the distinguished minority leader in giving the Senator that assurance.

Mr. JAVITS. I thank the Senator very much.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on the campaign financing bill, Charles Warren of my office may have the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CAMPAIGN REFORM NOW

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, the Senate has an historic opportunity before it to restore confidence in our publib institutions and public leaders, to reform our political process, and to reinvigorate political life in America on the eve of our Nation's bicentennial commemorations. I earnestly hope that we seize this opportunity courageously and imaginatively by passing the type of comprehensive, broad-based, balanced reform of Federal elections campaigns that is embodied in the pending legislation, S. 3044, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974.

In some ways, it is a sad commentary that we must even confront the necessity of this legislation today. By this I refer not only to the sordid realities of the Watergate experience which has so shaken the confidence of Americans in their political institutions and leaders. I also refer to the fact that most of the provisions in this bill before us have already been passed by the Senate, only to languish and wither from callous neglect. Campaign legislation has been bottled up, corked and cast out to sea to drift until it sinks forever to an unmarked grave.

Yet these are the circumstances we face, and we must make the most of them. The bill before us attempts to do just that. It combines the basic features of S. 372, which passed the Senate last summer, and a public financing amendment which passed the Senate in December. S. 372 includes restrictions on both contributions to campaigns and expenditures by campaigns. S. 372 also establishes an independent Elections Commission to oversee and enforce these Federal election laws. This independent Commission is urgently needed to insure full, fair, and expert supervision of the provisions of this legislation.

The amendment on public financing which received majority approval by the Senate in December was later filibustered to death on this floor. I opposed that filibuster because of the urgent need for the reforms embodied in this bill. I am aware, however, of the sincerity of some of my colleagues who wanted more time to study and perfect this public financing legislation. I am hopeful that these colleagues will now come forth with constructive suggestions on how to improve the bill before us.

Proposals to finance at least some of the costs of Federal elections campaigns from public funds are not a recent development. Almost 70 years ago, President Theodore Roosevelt suggested such measures in his state of the Union address to the Congress. President Roosevelt stated:

> It is well to provide that corporations shall not contribute to presidential or national campaigns and furthermore to provide for the publication of both contributions and expenditures. There is, however, always danger in laws of this kind, which from their very nature are difficult to enforce of enforcement: The danger being lest they be obeyed only by the honest, and disobeyed by the unscrupulous, so as to act only as a penalty upon honest men. There is a very radical measure which would, I believe, work a substantial improvement in our system of conducting a campaign. . . .

This proposed "radical measure" which President Roosevelt endorsed, was public financing of major campaigns.

More recently, former Ambassador and Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, who was President Nixon's running mate in 1960, sponsored specific legislation to begin partial public financing. In his recent book, "The Storm Has Many Eyes," Ambassador Lodge explains his support for this legislation:

> The talk of an 'office market' and of putting high executive and diplomatic missions on the auction block—all this breeding of suspicion and cynicism—would disappear overnight if the primary cause of the evil were obliterated at its roots. If there are no bidders, there can be no auction.

Many other distinguished Americans and recent Presidents have echoed the sentiments expressed by President Roosevelt and Ambassador Lodge.

Of course, today, we already have partial public financing. Americans who make political contributions are entitled to a tax credit of up to $25 for their contributions, or a tax deduction of up to $100. This reimbursement is a form of public financing which passed the Congress overwhelmingly and which has been helpful in encouraging and rewarding small contributions.

In addition, there is in operation the "$1 tax checkoff." Under this provision of the 1971 Revenue Act, each taxpayer can earmark $1 of his tax money to go to a special fund within the Treasury which can be used to finance the general election campaigns of candidates for the Presidency. I am pleased that the response to this measure by the American taxpayer this year has been such that it appears that there will be a sufficient amount in this special fund to cover the costs of the general election campaign of Presidential candidates in our bicentennial year. I believe that this response indicates that the American people are dedicated to ending the dominance of big money and secret contributions in political campaigns.

I do not maintain, of course, that the bill before us is perfect in every way. It provides, for example, for virtually 100-percent, public financing in general election campaigns for Congress. I believe that this degree of public support is unnecessary. The goals we seek could be reached by supplying a moderate amount of public funds, and permitting candidate to supplement this public contribution by small private contributions. I believe our goal should be to insure that all serious candidates have an adequate amount of funds, but this does not mean that all such candidates must receive all their funds from public sources.

Despite this weakness, and others more minor in nature, I believe that this bill would inaugerate such vast improvement over the current way in which political campaigns are financed and conducted that it deserves our support. This is not to say that changes cannot be made. In fact, I hope that some amendments will be adopted on the Senate floor, I am sure that further changes will be made by the House, if it ever acts, and by the House-Senate conference. I hope that these will be wise changes.

In any case, however, I believe the time has come for the Senate and the Congress to work its will. Every one of us knows the realities of American politics. Every one of us knows the fine line—a line so fine it is almost appears imaginary—which all candidates are forced to tread. And every one of us knows that we can enact legislation to reform campaigns.

Let us not, therefore, slash away at what little confidence and trust the public still has for public officials and the political system by playing games with this issue. Two great American traditions are at stake. Our traditional dedication to an honest, open political process responsive to the true values and beliefs of our citizens. And our traditional efforts to enlarge the political arena, and to make access to this arena more equal. The first of these traditions can be furthered by the type of provisions contained in S. 372 and this bill. But some modest, partial public financing is required to further both of these noble heritages.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I have long urged legislation of this sort. I supported the Campaign Reform Act of 1971 which made great progress in insuring full disclosure of political contributions and political contributors. I supported the Revenue Act of 1971 which included the tax checkoff and provisions for tax credits and deductions for small political contributions. I chaired, in December 1972, ad hoc congressional hearings on how we could improve our political campaign process. Partly as a result of information obtained at those public hearings, I sponsored, along with Senator ADLAI STEVENSON III, legislation last year which included many of the provisions in the bill before us. I testified in support of that legislation before the appropriate Senate committees. I have spoken on this subject throughout my State of Maryland and before many groups outside Maryland. I have become more and more convinced that the public wants this type of legislation, and that America needs it.

I shall, accordingly, support this bill, and I urge my colleagues to do likewise.

TO STRIKE TITLE V OF S. 3044, THE PENDING BUSINESS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, first, I do not want to offer an amendment but I may be forced to do so.

I ask unanimous consent that title V of the pending bill be stricken. The chairman of the Finance Committee, the distinguished Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), whose committee has jurisdiction of the subject matter of title V, intends to give the highest priority to this proposal on the first available vehicle that originates in the House Ways and Means Committee.

Senator LONG is the originator of the proposal on the tax checkoff for public financing. The action I am proposing now will assure proper treatment of this measure in the House.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I do not believe I will object—but could we have a short quorum call?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Sure.y.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President under my reservation, I want to indicate that when the unanimous-consent request was made the other day by the distinguished majority leader, I objected not particularly because I personally opposed the request, because I certainly think that title V does appropriately belong in the jurisdiction of the Finance Committee, but because there had not been opportunity for those on this side of the aisle to know that that important step with respect to the legislation was going to be taken and that it would be taken by unanimous consent.

Now there has been notice, and those on our side who have or might have an interest have had the opportunity to register that interest. There has been no indication of opposition and, under those circumstances, I withdraw my reservation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Montana? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I thank the distinguished acting Republican leader.

Mr. MANSFIELD subsequently said: Mr. President, just to make sure, in connection with the unanimous-consent request I made relative to striking title V, I ask unanimous consent that it be referred to the Committee on Finance, and all amendments thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, in connection therewith, I was going to ask that the amendments at the desk to title V also be referred.

Mr. MANSFIELD. All amendments thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair observes that part of a bill cannot be referred, but it could be reduced to a separate bill and then referred.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I will undertake that responsibility, on behalf of the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), and introduce a bill, which will, therefore, negate a request that it be referred to the Committee on Finance at this time.

AUTHORIZATION FOR JUDICIARY COMMITTEE TO FILE ITS REPORT ON S. 354 BY MIDNIGHT TONIGHT

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Judiciary Committee be authorized to have until midnight tonight to file its report on S. 354.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE VICE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARTLETT). The Chair, on behalf of the Vice President, in accordance with Public Law 93-179, appoints the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. MONTOYA) and the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. BROOKE) to the American Revolution Bicentennial Board.

SENATOR HARRY F. BYRD, JR. ON DÉTENTE

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, my good friend and colleague, Senator HARRY F. BYRD, JR., recently made an excellent speech on the floor of the Senate concerning the policy of détente.

I invite the attention of my colleagues to four excellent editorials in newspapers regarding this speech. Senator BYRD is one of the outstanding Members of this body and his position as a Member of the Senate Armed Services Committee and the Finance Committee has given him an excellent perspective of both the national security and the financial dangers of détente.

Senator BYRD's warning to our Nation should be read by each of us in this body, and the well written editorials bring due attention to his well-made points.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following editorials be printed in the RECORD:

Richmond Times-Dispatch, Friday, March 15, 1974; The News, Thursday, March 14, 1974; Staunton, Va., News-Leader, Sunday, March 17, 1974; and

New York Daily News, Monday, March 18, 1974.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AGAINST GIVEAWAYS

The policy of detente—or relaxation of tensions—with the Soviet Union is generally regarded as a signal accomplishment of a Nixon administration whose forte is foreign affairs. Yet, as U.S. Sen. Harry F. Byrd Jr. noted in a major Senate speech Wednesday, detente is looking more and more like a give-and-take proposition: we give and the Soviets take.

In an astute and comprehensive analysis, Senator Byrd said that "while the Russian leaders have signed agreements with the United States, we must remember they have received far more than they have given. This is true both in trade and in arms."

As evidence that the Soviets operate on the principle that it is more blessed to receive than to give, the Virginia senator discussed three American-Soviet agreements signed in 1972 in which the United States now appears to have gotten the short end of the stick:

(1) The grain deal. Not only did Washington sell Moscow wheat at cheap prices to bail the Soviets out of a serious crop failure, but it provided a $300 million subsidy to sweeten the deal for the Communists. So the Russians bought our wheat with our money and now they have a comfortable surplus while Americans confront rising prices and a possible shortage of bakery products. American aid on the food front also made it easier for the Russians to spend more on the weapons front.

(2) The Lend-Lease settlement. The Nixon administration agreed to let Russia settle its remaining $2.6 billion world War II debt to this nation for $722 million—or 28 cents on the dollar. But the Soviets slyly secured a proviso that $674 million would not be repaid unless they were granted most-favored-nation trading status with this nation—in other words, if American taxpayers give the Soviets special trade privileges, the Soviets will pay their debt—or a small part of their debt—to American taxpayers. Since a majority of Congress now appears to be opposed to giving Moscow most-favored-nation treatment, the Soviets may be obligated to repay only $48 million of a $2.6 billion debt.

(3) The Strategic Arms Limitation Talks. SALT-I permitted the Russians numerical superiority in land-based intercontinental missiles, submarine-launched missiles, and missile-carrying submarines. The U.S. ace in the hole was supposed to be technological superiority. But the Soviets are now feverishly developing new sophisticated weapons, including long-range missiles capable of carrying multiple independently-targeted warheads. With its technological edge rapidly being whittled away, the U.S. could find itself in a clearly inferior strategic position vis-a-vis the Soviet Union, and such a result could greatly aid the unending Communist objective of gaining worldwide dominion.

The much-publicized plight of exiled Russian novelist Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn should have reminded Americans of the basic nature of the regime with which our government is dealing. But shameful though it was, the Solzhenitsyn affair is not in itself a logical point of departure for an up-or-down decision on detente. Agreements and commerce with Russia must be judged as to whether this nation's welfare is promoted at least as much as the Kremlin's. As Senator Byrd points out, there is good reason to doubt that at present there is such a two-sided flow of benefits from detente.

All of which is not to suggest that President Nixon and Secretary Kissinger ought here and now to declare an end to detente. But it is high time that some advantages for this country were obtained from deals with the Soviets. A good place for our negotiators to start and for the Soviets to demonstrate their sincerity would be for SALT-II, now underway, to eliminate Soviet numerical superiority in missiles in favor of equality between the two superpowers.

THE HEART OF HARRY BYRD

Senator Harry F. Byrd Jr. is one of the ablest and hardest working members of the United States Senate. He does his homework. He studies the issues, accumulates the information, weighs the evidence pro and con. As a result, when he addresses himself to an issue, he does not speak lightly and his colleagues know it. They have come to recognize him as one of the leading voices of moderation in the Senate.

On Wednesday, Senator Byrd took the floor to speak on the subject of "detente" and United States defense. He subtitled it "an analysis." It was exactly that, a thorough, documented study of this most vital subject. In solemn, measured words directed at the conscience and the reason of the Senate Mr. Byrd placed the subject in historical perspective and warned of the disastrous consequences to the American people if the nation, and the Congress do not face up to the grim truth about "detente" and the aspirations of the Communist rulers.

It was one of Senator Byrd's greatest contributions as a public servant and one of the great speeches of the Senate—reasoned, analytical, ringing with conviction but devoid of extremisms, a sober call to sense and duty in the defense of the United States and the spiritual and physical liberation which it alone can defend.

If the Senate does not pay heed to what this man said, the American people are going to pay a hell of a price in blood and destruction one of these grim days because war, nuclear or otherwise, is not unthinkable to the Communists.

We could not print all of the speech on this page—it was that thorough. But we have printed those excerpts which serve to convey its sense. We have done this because what Mr. Byrd had to say should be heard by all Americans. He was discussing what must be done to keep us alive and free. No more, no less.

Read what he had to say. It is worth your time. There is nothing you need to understand half so well for it is the foundation of your freedom.

A POWERFUL WARNING ON DÉTENTE

There have been warnings from various sources to beware of the supposed détente with Russia. Another one was sounded last Wednesday on the floor of the U.S. Senate. It was by Virginia's senior Sen. Harry F. Byrd, Jr. It was what is termed a "full dress" speech, and was a detailed analysis of the economic, technological, food, monetary, and indirect military assistance this country is providing the Communist nation, and the paucity of its reciprocity.

Sen. Byrd also covered the deterioration of our military strength under the influences of détente, isolationist attitudes in Congress, and U.S. efforts to promote peace in the world through international conferences and agreements.

These short paragraphs from Sen. Byrd's astute review constitute bases for his warning which cannot be pushed under the rug:

"Today the free world is beset by troubles with weakness and disorder apparent both between nations and within nations.

"Inflation is widespread and increasing with no end in sight.

"Militant forces within nations demand and get prerogatives at the expense of the nation and other groups within the nation.

"By contrast in the Soviet Union there are now powerful militant organizations; there is little inflation although productivity is low; there are no strikes or work shortages only inefficiencies; their shortages are not severe and a possible food shortage was averted, thanks to the willing co-operation of the United States.

"Russia, as I see it, is playing a shrewd game.

"The Soviets have come to realize that in order to reach their goals they must utilize all the fundamental elements of national power: political power, economic power, and military power."

Sen. Byrd quoted Russian Chairman Brezhnev to show the Soviet's hypocrisy as to détente. The goal of the Communist dictatorship is worldwide domination, he told the Senate. "If we forget that fact, we imperil ourselves . . . It is the fixed star in the Soviet firmament.

"Chairman Brezhnev made this clear in June, 1972, when he said, 'Détente in no way implies the possibility of relaxing the ideological struggle. On the contrary, we must be prepared for this struggle to be intensified and become an ever sharper form of the confrontation between the two systems.'

"The United States cannot afford to accept a 'détente' which leaves open the way for global domination by the Soviet Union.

"The danger of détente is that it tends to lull the United States into a false sense of security."

Because the United States has been suffering so many internal troubles, went through the trauma of the war in Southeast Asia and then the uplifting encouragement from President Nixon's opening of doors to both of the two great Communist powers, there has been almost national blindness to the fact that the perils of Communist deceit and aggressive designs continue to exist. Wide open eyes, understanding of those perils, and rebuilding of our military strength are vital concomitants of our participation in détente.

Sen. Byrd summed it up this way:

"Let there be détente.

"But let it be based on reality—on a recognition of Russian ambitions and might, and the need for American strength—and not on wishes and unilateral concessions.

"Weakness never has been a basis for peace.

"We must never lose sight of the fact that dollars spent for American defense are an investment in world peace and stability, in turn, are important to our own freedom and prosperity."

The Senator's address was a timely and brilliant one. It should not be blindly ignored by his colleagues, the House, the Executive Branch, or the people.

A TIMELY WARNING

The Soviet Union is playing the United States for a sucker, Sen. Harry F. Byrd Jr. (Ind-Va.) told the Senate last week. Soviet party boss Brezhnev, said Byrd, is using detente to get long-term credits, technology and sweet trade deals.

At the same time, he has been encouraging the Arab oil boycott, jamming our radio programs behind the Iron Curtain and speeding a massive arms buildup.

Byrd was joined by Sen. James Buckley (C-R-N.Y.) in noting that it is okay to bargain with the Soviets as long as we don't lose our shirts. Already we've been taken to the cleaners in the costly wheat sale, the tiny World War II debt settlement, and the arms limitation talks.

Brezhnev's 1974 tactics are identical to Nicolai Lenin's in the '20's. Facing national starvation, Lenin set the captive peasants free, temporarily, to produce the food needed to stave off rebellion. Brezh's U.S. wheat ploy is cut from the same cloth.

Lenin invented the book-burning censorship that is used today to send political dissidents to prison, asylum and exile. He used force (against Poland) just as ruthlessly as Brezhnev did in Czechoslovakia. Neither of them ever abandoned the main aim of world Communist domination.

Lenin once said that capitalists would sell the Communist the rope with which the Reds would hang them. That's just the kind of deal the Soviets are trying to pull off now. We would be fools to fall for it again.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, for the information of the Senate, I understand that the Senator from Alabama has an amendment that he is ready to offer and on which he is willing to agree a very short time limit. If that is so, as soon as he returns to the Chamber, we will try to have the amendment laid before the Senate and try to get a 20-minute time limitation and have another vote this afternoon.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, the able Senator from New York (Mr. BUCKLEY) gave an exclusive interview to the magazine Human Events in connection with the pending measure, S. 3044. Senator BUCKLEY has made an in-depth study of this measure, and the questions and answers in this article are very illuminating.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the interview be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATOR JAMES BUCKLEY ON CAMPAIGN REFORM

(The Senate is scheduled to take up campaign reform legislation this week. The bill under consideraton—S 3044—includes, among many changes, a proposal for public financing of campaigns. Sen. Buckley (C.-R.-N.Y.) has made an in-depth study of the entire measure and in the following exclusive interview discusses the numerous practical and constitutional objections to the bill.)

Q. President Nixon recently made a rather lengthy statement on campaign reform. What was your reaction to his proposals?

A. There were too many proposals included in this package to allow me to give you anything even approaching a definitive answer here, but I will say that I find myself in general agreement with the thrust of his proposals—especially as compared with those included in S 3044, the bill recently reported out of the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration.

The President's proposals seem designed to deal with the problems in our present system, while the Senate bill we will have before us shortly would scrap that system. I would be among the first to admit that our present system of selecting candidates and financing campaigns needs reform, but I am not at all convinced that we should abandon it for a scheme that would diminish citizen participation in politics and, in all probability, would create more problems than it would solve.

Q. S. 3044 is the bill that includes public financing of presidential, Senate and House campaigns, isn't it?

A. That's right. The bill that we will soon debate includes provisions that would allow candidates for any federal office to draw on tax funds to finance their campaigns. This system would replace the essentially private system now in effect and would cost the American taxpayer some $368 million every four years.

More importantly, however, this scheme presents us with grave constitutional and practical questions that I hope will be fully debated on the floor of the Senate before we vote.

Q. Why do you object so strongly to public financing?

A. I object because I am convinced that such drastic measures are needed to clear up the problems we confront, because I suspect that the proposals as drawn are unconstitutional and because if implemented they would alter the political landscape of this country in a way that many don't even suspect and very few would support.

Those in and out of Congress who advocate public financing are selling it as a cure-all for our national and political ills. For example, Sen. Kennedy recently went so far as to say that "most, and probably all, of the serious problems facing this country today have their roots in the way we finance political campaigns. . . ."

This statement reminds one of the hyperbole associated with the selling of New Frontier and Great Society programs in the '60s. The American people were asked then to accept expensive and untried programs as panaceas for all our ills.

Those programs didn't work. They were oversold, vastly more expensive than anyone anticipated, and left us with more problems than they solved. Public financing is a Great Society approach to another problem of public concern and like other solutions based on the theory that federal dollars will solve everything should be rejected.

Q. In what ways should public financing "alter the political landscape"?

A. In several very important if not totally predictable ways.

First, under our present system potential candidates must essentially compete for private support, and to attract that support they have to address themselves to issues of major importance to the people who will be contributing to their campaigns and voting for them on election day. Public financing might allow candidates to ignore these issues, fuzz their stands and run campaigns in which intelligent debate on important matters is subordinated to a "Madison Avenue" approach to the voters.

Let me give you a couple of examples. During the course of the 1972 campaign, it is reported that Sen. McGovern was forced by the need for campaign money to place greater emphasis on his support of a Vietnam pullout than his political advisers thought wise. They felt that he should have downplayed the issue and concentrated on others that might be better received by the electorate.

I don't doubt for a minute that the senator's emphasis on his Vietnam position hurt him, but I wonder if we really want to move toward a system that would allow a candidate to avoid such issues or gloss over positions of concern to millions of Americans.

The need to court the support of other groups creates similar problems. Those who believe that we should maintain a friendly stance toward Israel, for example, as well as those who think a candidate should support union positions on a whole spectrum of issues want to know where a candidate stands before they give him their vocal and financial support. The need to compete for campaign dollars forces candidates to address many issues and I consider this vital to the maintenance of a sound democratic system.

Second, millions of Americans now contribute voluntarily to federal, state and local political campaigns. These people see their decision to contribute to one campaign or another as a means of political expression. Public financing of federal general election campaigns would deprive people of an opportunity to participate and to express their strongly held opinions.

They would still be contributing, of course, since the Senate proposal will cost them hundreds of millions of dollars in tax money. But their participation would be compulsory and would involve the use of their money to support candidates and positions they find morally and political reprehensible.

Third, the proposal reported out of the Senate Rules Committee, like similar proposals advanced in the past, combines public financing with strict limits on expenditures. These limits must, on the whole, work to the benefits of incumbents, since they are lower than the amount that a challenger might have to spend presently in a hotly contested race if he wants to overcome the advantages of his opponent's incumbency.

Fourth, the various schemes devised to distribute federal dollars among various candidates and between the parties has to affect power relationships that now exist. Thus, if you give money directly to the candidate you further weaken the party system. If you give the money to the national party, you strengthen the national party organization relative to the state parties. If you aren't extremely careful you will freeze out or lock in minor parties. These are real problems with significant policy consequences that those who drew up the various public financing proposals tended to ignore.

Public financing will have two significant effects on third parties, neither desirable. In the first place, it will discriminate against genuine national third-party movements (such as that of George Wallace in 1968) because such parties haven't had the chance to establish a voting record of the kind required to qualify for financing.

On the other hand, once a third party qualifies for future federal financing, a vested interest arises in keeping it alive—even if the George Wallace who gave it its sole reason for existence should move on. Thus we run the risk of financing a proliferation of parties that could destroy the stability we have historically enjoyed through our two-party system.

Q. You say public financing raises grave constitutional questions. Are you saying that these plans might be struck down in the courts?

A. It is obviously rather difficult to say in advance just how the courts might decide when we don't know how the case will be brought before them, but I do think there is a real possibility that subsidies, expenditure limitations and contribution ceilings could all be found unconstitutional.

All of these proposals raise 1st Amendment questions since they all either ban, limit or direct a citizen's right of free speech.

In this light it is interesting to note that a three-judge panel in the District of Columbia has already found portions of the 1971 act unconstitutional.

The 1971 Act prohibits the media from charging for political advertising unless the candidate certifies that the charge will not cause his spending to exceed the limits imposed by the law. This had the effect of restricting the freedom both of individuals wishing to buy ads and of newspapers and other media that might carry them and, in the opinion of the D.C. court, violated the 1st Amendment.

Q. But Senator, according to the report prepared by the Senate Rules Committee on S. 3044, it is claimed that these questions were examined and that the committee was satisfied that objections involving the effect of the legislation on existing political arrangements were without real functions.

A. I can only say that I must respectfully disagree with my colleagues on the Rules Committee. The committee report discusses a number of compromises worked out in the process of drawing up S. 3044, but I don't think these compromises do very much to answer the objections I have raised.

The ethical, constitutional and practical questions remain.

The fact is that the ultimate impact of a proposal of this kind on our present party structure cannot be accurately predicted. S. 3044 may either strengthen parties because of the crucial control the party receives over what the committee calls the "marginal increment" of campaign contributions, or it may further weaken the parties because the government subsidy is almost assured to the candidate, thereby relieving him of substantial reliance on the "insurance" the party treasury provides. One can't be sure and that alone should lead one to doubt the wisdom of supporting the bill as drawn.

As for third parties, the effect of the bill is equally unclear. It does avoid basing support for third parties simply on performance in the last election and thus "perpetuating" parties that are no longer viable. But the proposal does not deal, for instance, with the possibility of a split in one of the two major parties—where two or more groups claim the mantle of the old party.

Q. Senator Buckley, advocates of public financing of federal election campaigns claim that political campaigning in America is such an expensive proposition that only the very wealthy and those beholden to special interests can really afford to run for office. Do you agree with this claim?

A. No, I do not.

First, it is erroneous to charge that we spend an exorbitant amount on political campaigns in this country. In relative terms we spend far less on our campaigns than is spent by other democracies and, frankly, I think we get more for our money.

Thus, while we spent approximately $1.12 per vote in all our 1968 campaigns, the last year for which we have comparative figures, Israel was spending more than $21 per vote. An index of comparative cost of 1968 reveals that political expenditures in democratic countries vary widely from 27 cents in Australia to the far greater amount spent in Israel. This index shows the U.S. near the bottom in per vote expenditures along with such countries as India and Japan.

Second, I think we should make it clear that the evidence suggests that most contributors—large as well as small—give money to candidates because they support the candidate's beliefs, not because they are out to buy themselves a congressman, a governor or a President. Many of those advocating federal financing forget this in their desire to condemn private campaign funding as an evil that must be abolished.

Anyone who has run for public office realizes that most of those who give to a campaign are honest public-spirited people who simply want to see a candidate they support elected because they believe the country will benefit from his point of view. To suggest otherwise impresses me as insulting to those who seek elective office and to the millions of Americans who contribute to their campaigns.

I don't mean to imply that there aren't exceptions to this rule. There are dishonest people in politics as there are in other professions, but they certainly don't dominate the profession.

Q. But doesn't the wealthy candidate have a real advantage under our current system?

A. Oh, he has an advantage all right, but I'm not sure it's as great as some people would have us believe.

I say this because I am convinced that given adequate time a viable candidate will be able to attract the financial support he needs to get his campaign off the ground and thereby overcome the initial advantage of a personally wealthy opponent. And I am also convinced that a candidate who doesn't appeal to the average voter won't get very far regardless of how much money he throws into his own campaign.

My own campaign for the Senate back in 1970 illustrates this point rather clearly. I was running that year as the candidate of a minor party against a man who was willing and able to invest more than $2 million of his family's money in a campaign in which he began as the favorite.

I couldn't possibly match him personally, but I was able to attract the support of more than 40,000 citizens who agreed with my positions on the issues. We still weren't able to match my opponent dollar for dollar—he spent twice as much as we did—but we raised enough to run a creditable campaign, and we did manage to beat him at the polls.

At the national level it is just as difficult to say that money is the determining factor and the evidence certainly suggests that personal wealth won't get a man to the White House. If it were the case that the richest man always comes out on top, Rockefeller would have triumphed over Goldwater in 1964, Taft over Eisenhower in 1952 and neither Nixon nor Stevenson would ever have received their parties' nominations.

What I'm saying, of course, is that while money is important it isn't everything.

Q. Wouldn't public financing assist challengers trying to unseat entrenched congressmen and senators who have lost touch with their constituents?

A. I don't like to think of myself as overly cynical, but neither am I naive enough to believe that majorities in the House and Senate are about to support legislation that won't at least give them a fair shake.

The fact is that most of the "reforms" we have been discussing work to the advantage of the incumbent—not the challenger. The incumbent has built-in advantages that are difficult to overcome under the best of circumstances and might well be impossible to offset if the challenger is forced, for example, to observe an unrealistically low spending limit.

Incumbents are constantly in the public eye. They legitimately command TV and radio news coverage that is exempt from the "equal time" provisions of current law. They can regularly communicate with constituents on legislative issues, using franking privileges. Over the years they will have helped tens of thousands of constituents with specific problems involving the federal government. These all add up to a massive advantage for the incumbent which may well require greater spending by a challenger to overcome.

Q. What kind of candidates will benefit from public financing?

A. Any candidate who is better known when the campaign begins or is in a position to mobilize non-monetary resources must benefit as compared to less-known candidates and those whose supporters aren't in a position to give them such help.

This is necessarily true because the spending and contributions limits that are an inegral part of all the public funding proposals I have seen even our only one of the factors that will determine the outcome of a given campaign. Other factors therefore become increasingly important and may well determine the winner on election day.

Thus, incumbents who are unusually better known that their challengers benefit because experience has shown that a challenger often has to spend significantly more than his incumbent opponent simply to achieve a minimum degree of recognition.

In addition, consider the advantage that a candidate whose backers can donate time to his campaign will have over one whose backers just don't have the time to donate. In this context one can easily imagine a situation in which a liberal campus-oriented candidate might swamp a man whose support comes primarily from blue collar, middle-class workers who would contribute money to their man, but don't have time to work in his campaign.

Or consider the candidate running on an issue that attracts the vocal and "independent" support of groups that can provide indirect support without falling under the limitations imposed by law. The effectiveness of the anti-war movement and the way in which issue-oriented anti-war activists were able to mesh their efforts with those of friendly candidates illustrates the problem.

David Broder of the Washington Post noted in a very perceptive analysis of congressional maneuvering on this issue that most members seem to sense that these reforms will, in fact, help a certain kind of candidate. His comments on this are worth quoting at length.

". . . [T]he votes by which the public financing proposal was passed in the Senate had a marked partisan and ideological coloration. Most Democrats and most liberals in both parties supported public financing; most Republicans and most conservatives in both parties voted against it.

'The presumption that liberals and Democrats would benefit from the change is strengthened by the realization that money is just one of the sources of influence on a political contest. If access to large sums is eliminated as a potential advantage of one candidate or party by the provision of equal public subsidies for all, then the election outcome will likely be determined by the ability to mobilize other forces.

"The most important of these other factors are probably manpower and publicity. Legislation that eliminates the dollar influence on politics automatically enhances the influence of those who can provide manpower or publicity for the campaign.

"That immediately conjures up, for Republicans and conservatives, the union boss, the newspaper editor and the television anchorman—three individuals to whom they are rather reluctant to entrust their fate of electing the next President."

Q. You indicated a few minutes ago that public financing will cost the American taxpayer hundreds of millions of dollars and that many Americans might be forced to give to candidates and campaigns they find repugnant.

A. That's right; it is estimated that the plan envisioned by the sponsors of S. 3044 would cost nearly $360 million every four years and other plans that have been discussed might cost even more.

Necessarily, this will involve spending tax dollars, extracted from individuals for the support of candidates and causes with which many of them will profoundly disagree. The fundamental objection to this sort of thing was perhaps best summed up nearly 200 years ago by Thomas Jefferson who wrote: "To compel a man to furnish contributions of money for the propagation of opinions which he disbelieves and abhors, is sinful and tyrannical."

Q. But won't this money be voluntarily designated by taxpayers participating in the check-off plan that has been in effect now for more than two years?

A. Not exactly. As you may recall, the check-off was originally established to give individual taxpayers a chance to direct one dollar of their tax money to the political party of their choice for use in the next presidential campaign.

When it was extended by the Congress last year, however, the ground rules were changed so that this year taxpayers are not able to select the party to which their dollar is to be directed. They are simply allowed to designate that the dollar should go into the Presidential Election Campaign Fund to be divided up at a later date. Thus, while the taxpayer may still refrain from participating he may well be directing his dollar to the opposition party if he elects to participate.

A theoretical example will illustrate this. Let us assume that two candidates run in 1976 and that the money to be divided up amounts to $10 million dollars. Half of this would go to each candidate, but let us further assume that 60 percent of this money or $6 million is contributed by Democrats. Under this set of circumstances a million Democrats would unwittingly be contributing to the campaign of a candidate they don't support and for whom they probably won't vote.

If S. 3044 passes things will get even worse. During the first year only 2.8 per cent of the tax-paying public elected to contribute to the fund. This disappointing participation was generally attributed to the fact that it was difficult to elect to participate. Therefore his year the form was simplified and a great effort is being made to get people to participate.

As a result about 15 percent of those filing appear to be participating and while this increase seems to warm the hearts of those who have plans for this money it will not raise nearly enough money to fnance the comprehensive plan the sponsors of S. 3044 have in mind.

Therefore they have found a way to increase participation. Under the terms of S 3044 the check-off would be doubled to allow $2 from each individual to go into the fund, but the individual taxpayer will no longer have to designate. Instead, his $2 will be automatically designated for him unless he objects. This is a scheme designed to increase participation reminiscent of the way book clubs used to sell books by telling their members they would receive the month's selection unless they chose not to. As I recall, Ralph Nader and his friends didn't like this practice when book clubs were engaged in it and one can only hope that they will be equally outraged now that Uncle Sam is in the act.

But S 3044 goes further still. If enough people resist in spite of the government's efforts to get them to participate, the Congress will be authorized to make up the difference out of general revenues. So, after all is said, it appears that the check-off is little more than a fraud on the taxpayer.

This to me is one of the most objectionable features of the whole scheme. It is an attempt to make people think they are participating and exercising free choice when in fact their choices are being made for them by the government.

Q. If there are problems and you can't support public financing, just what sort of reform do you favor?

A. I said earlier that I prefer the general thrust of the President's message on campaign reform as compared to the direction represented by S 3044. The President, unlike the sponsors of the Senate legislation we will soon be debating, seems to grasp the problems inherent in any overly rigid regulation of individual and group political activity in a free society.

We have to recognize that any regulation of political activity raises serious constitutional questions and involves limitations on the freedom of our citizens. This has to be kept in mind as we analyze and judge the various "reform" proposals now before us. Our job involves a balancing of competing and often contradictory interests that just isn't as easy as it might appear to the casual observer.

Thus, while we are called upon to do what we can to eliminate abuses, we must do so with an eye toward side effects that could render the cure worse than the disease.

I happen to believe rather strongly that this is the case with public financing and with proposals that would impose arbitrary limits on campaign spending and, thereby, on political activity.

The same problem must be faced if we decide to limit the size of individual political contributions. In this area, however, I would not oppose reasonable limits that would neither unduly discriminate against those who wish to support candidates they admire or give too great an advantage to other groups able to make substantial non-monetary contributions.

The least dangerous form of regulation and the one I suspect might prove most effective in the long run is the one which simply imposes disclosure requirements on candidates and political committees. The 1971 Act—which has never really been tested—was passed on the theory that major abuses could best be handled by full and open disclosure.

The theory was that if candidates want to accept sizable contributions from people associated with one interest or cause as opposed to another, they should be allowed to do so as long as they are willing to disclose receipt of the money. The voter might then decide if he wants to support the candidate in spite of—or because of—the financial support he has received.

The far-reaching disclosure requirements written into the 1971 Act went in effect in April 1972 after much of the money used to finance the 1972 campaigns had already been raised. This money—raised prior to April 7, 1972—did not have to be reported in detail and it was this unreported money that financed many of the activities that have been included in what has come to be known as the Watergate affair.

I feel that the 1971 Act, as amended last year, deserves a real test before we scrap it. It didn't get that test in 1972, but it will this fall. I would hope, therefore, that we will wait until 1975 before considering the truly radical changes under consideration.

On the other hand, there are a few loopholes that we can close right away. It seems to me, for example, that we might move immediately to ban cash contributions and expenditures of more than, say, $100.

Q. So you believe that "full disclosure" is the answer?

A. Essentially. But I don't want you to get the idea that disclosure laws will solve all our problems or that they themselves don't create new problems. I simply feel that they create fewer problems and are more likely to eliminate gross abuses than the other measures we have discussed

Q. You say that "full disclosure" laws also create new problems. What kind of new problems?

A. Well, you may recall that Sen. Muskie's 1972 primary campaign reportedly ran into trouble after April 1972 because a number of his larger contributors were Republicans who didn't want it publicly known that they were supporting a Democrat. The disclosure requirements included in the 1971 Act clearly inhibited their willingness to give and, therefore, at least arguably had what constitutional lawyers call a "chilling effect" on their right of self-expression.

These were large contributors with prominent names. Perhaps their decision to give should not be viewed as lamentable in the context of the purpose of the act.

But consider the smaller contributor who might want to give to a candidate viewed with hostility by his employer, his friends and others in a position to retaliate. How about the bank teller who wants to give $10 to a candidate who wants to nationalize banks? Or the City Hall employe who might want to give $5 to the man running against the incumbent mayor? What effect might the knowledge that one's employer could uncover the fact of the contribution have on the decision to give? The problem is obvious when we remember that the White House "enemies list" was drawn up in part from campaign disclosure reports.

Still, it is a problem that we may have to live with if we are to accomplish the minimal reform necessary to "clean up" our existing system.

Q. Senator, are there any other "reforms" that you think worthy of consideration?

A. Well, there are a good many proposals being circulated that we haven't had a real chance to discuss, but I'm afraid most of them raise more questions than they answer.

S. 3044 does contain one proposal that might be worth consideration and has, in fact, been raised separately by a number of senators. Under our current tax laws a taxpayer can claim either a tax credit or a deduction for political contributions to candidates, political committees or parties of his choice. The allowable tax credit that can now be claimed amounts to $12.50 per individual or $25 on a joint return and the deduction if limited to $50 or $100 on a joint return.

The authors of S 3044 would double the allowable credits and deductions. Sen. William V. Roth (R.-Del.) has proposed that we go even further by increasing the allowable credit to $150 per individual or $300 for those filing joint returns.

These proposals would presumably increase the incentive for private giving without limiting the freedom of choice of the individual contributor. If any proposal designed to broaden the base of campaign funding is worth consideration I would think this is it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I call up the amendment I have at the desk having to do with Members of the House and Senate and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 3, line 6, strike out "FEDERAL" and insert in lieu thereof "PRESIDENTIAL".

On page 4, line 6, strike out the comma and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon.

On page 4, beginning with line 7, strike out through line 12.

On page 4, line 13, strike out "(5)" and insert in lieu thereof "(4)".

On page 4, line 17, strike out "(6)" and insert in lieu thereof "(5)".

On page 5, line 6, strike out "any".

On page 5, line 21, immediately before "Federal", strike out "a".

On page 7, line 3, strike out "(1)".

On page 7, beginning with "that—" on line 5, strike out through line 7 on page 8 and insert in lieu thereof "that he is seeking nomination for election to the office of President and he and his authorized committees have received contributions for his campaign throughout the United States in a total amount in excess of $250,000.".

On page 9, line 6, after the semicolon, insert "and".

On page 9, strike out lines 7 and 8 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "'(2) no contribution from'."

On page 9, beginning with "and" on line 13, strike out through line 19.

On page 10 beginning with "(1)—" on line 3, strike out through line 16 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "(1), no contribution from any person shall be taken into account to the extent that it exceeds $250 when added to the amount of all other contributions made by that person to or for the benefit of that candidate for his primary election.".

On page 13, beginning with line 16, strike out through line 18 on page 14 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 504. (a) (1) Except to the extent that such amounts are changed under subsection (f) (2), no candidate may make expenditures in any State in which he is a candidate in a primary election in excess of the greater of—

"(A) 20 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (g)) of the State in which such election is held, or

"(B) $250,000.".

On page 14, line 19, strike out "(B)" and insert in lieu thereof "(1)" and strike out "subparagraph" and insert in lieu thereof "paragraph".

One page 14, line 20, strike out "(A)" and insert in lieu thereof "(1)".

On page 15, line 8, beginning with "the greater of—," strike out through line 17 and insert in lieu thereof "15 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (g)) of the United States.".

On page 18, beginning with line 10, strike out through line 20.

On page 26, lines 2 and 3, strike out "under section 504 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, or".

On page 71, beginning with line 20, strike out through line 2 on page 73 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(a) (1) Except to the extent that such amounts are changed under subsection (f) (2), no candidate (other than a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President) may make expenditures in connection with his primary election campaign in excess of the greater of—

"(A) 10 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (g)) of the geographical area in which the election for such nomination is held, or

"(B) (i) $125,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Senator, or Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, or

"(ii) $90,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Representative from a State which is entitled to more than one Representative.

"(2) (A) No candidate for nomination for election to the office of President may make expenditures in any State in which he is a candidate in a primary election in excess of two times the amount which a candidate for nomination for election to the office of Senator from that State (or for nomination for election to the office of Delegate in the case of the District of Columbia, the Virgin Islands, or Guam, or to the Office of Resident Commissioner in the case of Puerto Rico) may expend in that State in connection with his primary election campaign.

"(B) Notwithstanding the provisions of subparagraph (A), no such candidate may make expenditures throughout the United States in connection with his campaign for that nomination in excess of an amount equal to ten cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States. For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'United States' means the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands and any area from which a delegate to the national nominating convention of a political party is selected.

"(b) Except to the extent that such amounts are changed under subsection (f) (2), no candidate may make expenditures in connection with his general election campaign in excess of the greater of—

"(1) 15 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (g)) of the geographical area in which the election is held, or

"(2) (A) $175,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Senator, or Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, or

"(B) $90,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Representative from a State which is entitled to more than one Representative.

"(c) No candidate who is unopposed in a primary or general election may make expenditures in connection with his primary or general election campaign in excess of 10 percent of the limitation in subsection (a) or (b).

"(d) The Federal Election Commission shall prescribe regulations under which any expenditure by a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President for use in two or more States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

"(e) (1) Expenditures made on behalf of any candidate are, for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by such candidate.

"(2) Expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate for the office of Vice President of the United States are, for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by the candidate for the office of President of the United States with whom he is running.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a Vice Presidential candidate, if it is made by—

"(A) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for the purposes of making any expenditure, or

"(B) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate or an agent of the candidate to make the expenditure.

"(4) For purposes of this section an expenditure made by the national committee of a political party, or by the State commission of a political party, in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate affiliated with that party which is not in excess of the limitations contained in subsection (i), is not considered to be an expenditure made on behalf of that candidate.

"(f) (1) For purposes of paragraph (2)—

"(A) 'price index' means the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and

"(B) 'base period' means the calendar year 1973.

"(2) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1975), as necessary data becomes available from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Federal Election Commission and publish in the Federal Register the percentage difference between the price index for the twelve months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each amount determined under subsections (a) and (b) shall be changed by such percentage difference. Each amount so changed shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

"(g) During the first week of January 1975, and every subsequent year, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Federal Election Commission and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, of each State, and of each congressional district as of the first day of July next preceding the date of certification. The term 'voting age population' means resident population, eighteen years of age or older.

"(h) Upon receiving the certification of the Secretary of Commerce and of the Secretary of Labor, the Federal Election Commission shall publish in the Federal Register the applicable expenditure limitations in effect for the calendar year for the United States, and for each State and congressional district under this section.

On page 73, line 3, strike out "(b)" and insert in lieu thereof "(i)".

On page 73, line 24, strike out "section 504" and insert in lieu thereof "subsection (g); and".

On page 74, strike out lines 1 and 2.

On page 74, line 6, strike out "that Act" and insert in lieu thereof "the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971".

On page 74, line 8, strike out "(c)" and insert in lieu thereof "(j)".

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the vote that was had on the amendment to strike title I from the bill was a most encouraging vote from the standpoint of those who are opposed to public financing of Federal elections because it indicated that more than one-third of the members of the Senate oppose public financing in any form because they were willing to vote to strike from the bill any reference whatsoever to public subsidies in Federal elections, indicating that it might be difficult to pass the bill in the final analysis, and indicating the possibility that some members of the Senate would be willing to strike certain races from the public subsidy provision while leaving others.

Mr. President, the bill, in effect, while the provisions are intermingled and intermixed, really provides for a subsidy on a matching basis for House and Senate members in primaries, and then full financing of campaigns for House and Senate members in general elections. That is one major division of the subsidy provision.

Then, the next major provision of the subsidy portion of the bill relates to subsidies with respect to the Presidential general election and the contests for the nominations for President of major parties.

So taking those subsidized races piecemeal, the amendment that has been reported, and which is the pending business of the Senate, would strike from the bill any subsidy of the U.S. House of Representatives primary races, any subsidy of U.S. Senate primary races, any subsidy of U.S. House of Representatives general campaign races, or any subsidies of U.S. Senate general campaign races. So it would leave the subsidies in the quest for the Presidential nomination, by any number of candidates, and then the Presidential election itself.

We already have the subsidy of the general Presidential election. That is already provided for in the checkoff. As I pointed out on the floor that is available to the parties in the sum of around $21 million or $22 million only if they forego private contributions.

I do not believe either party is going to come under that by certifying they will accept that in lieu of all private contributions.

Let us see, Mr. President, if the Members of the House and the Senate want to subsidize their own primary races and subsidize their own general election races. If they do, they will vote against this amendment when it comes up for a vote. If it is felt that the incumbents have advantage enough by reason of being incumbents, I do not know that that is altogether an advantage based on the polled results showing that 21 percent of the public approves of Congress. So I do not know that being an incumbent is such an advantage.

But I believe that this bill is an incumbent's bill. I believe that it is weighted heavily in favor of the incumbent in many particulars. Why is that? Well, in the first place, in the primary the Federal Treasury matches equally the contributions of up to $100 of the various candidates. It stands to reason that the incumbent, with the prestige of his office, the prestige of the many favors and accommodations he has given his constituents through the years, the fact he is so much better known than the challenger, would certainly give him the advantage in soliciting contributions of any size, contributions up to $100, or above the $100. So certainly, he is going to get contributions of more than the $100 to a greater extent than the challenger.

Now let us examine the maximum contributions; that is, those up to $100. In the first place, before the challenger in a congressional race or a senatorial race is able to get anything from the public Treasury, he has got to collect, in small contributions, 20 percent of the amount that he is able to spend in the primary. The amount he is able to spend in the primary is 10 cents per person of voting age in the political subdivision in which he is running. So, many of the challengers never would get up to that 20 percent.

Take the first State on this list, my own State of Alabama. Before a candidate could participate in public financing, he would have to collect, in small contributions of $100 or less, $46,760. It would be a very big job for a challenger, or an incumbent—either one—to collect $46,000 in contributions of $1 up to $100. Yet that is what he would have to do in order even to qualify for public funds. I think that is unfair.

But let us just assume, in round figures, that a Senator or a Congressman collected the following: Take the State of California. In the State of California it is permissible for a senatorial candidate to spend $1.417 million, half of which could be contributed.

Let us just assume that the Senator from California is opposed by a lesser known candidate, and this lesser known candidate is able to raise $100,000 in small contributions of $100 or less. Well, he can get $100,000 from the public Treasury. The incumbent, though, Mr. President, could raise the whole $700,000 in small contributions, and then the Government would give him another $700,000.

So the lesser known candidate, without the public financing, would have $100,000 to go up against the incumbent with $700,000. He would have a $600,000 spread there. But with public financing, he would get $100,000 to match the $100,000 that he had collected. However, the incumbent would get $700,000 matched.

An incumbent, then, would have $1,400,000, and the poor challenger, the lesser known challenger, would just have $200,000.

So the spread between the amount available to the challenger and the amount available to the incumbent ranges from a $600,000 differential under private financing to a differential of $1.2 million. It doubles the advantage that the incumbent already has.

Mr. CANNON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. CANNON. I think rather than for the Senator to say it doubles the advantage, it would be fairer to say it greatly reduces the advantage an incumbent would already have because of the fact that the nonincumbent is the person who would have the difficulty raising private financing.

Mr. ALLEN. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON. In this fashion, he would at least be able to get some assistance if he raises the threshold amount, but, on the other hand, if we do not put a limit on private financing, and let the person who is the incumbent raise money through whatever source or method he wished to do so, we are going to find that he will have not too great difficulty raising the campaign financing from private sources. Yet the nonincumbent challenger is going to have an extremely difficult problem of raising money from private sources to compete against an incumbent.

Mr. ALLEN. I agree with the Senator, but I believe he has the matter confused, in that where the challenger is permitted to do so on the overall limitation, we do not have to have the use of public funds to put a ceiling on the total amount, and I submit that the incumbent, being able to raise more funds, could receive the entire $700,000 for matching, and he would end up with $1.4 million; whereas the challenger, raising only $100,000, would have a differential, by reason of public financing, between him and the incumbent, from $600,000 up to $1,200,000.

Mr. CANNON. It is not quite that differential, though, because if there is no public financing, one simply places his limit. The incumbent is not going to have difficulty raising that amount, because the facts are that in the State of California, which the Senator uses as an example, the campaigns cost more than that and they have traditionally used more than that amount. So an incumbent is going to spend whatever that limit is, whether it be private or a combination of private and public; but the challenger, on the other hand, if he can only raise $100,000, if he has no public financing, will have only that $100,000 to put into the campaign.

Actually, it would be a little higher than that, because $125,000 is the triggering figure. So if he could raise $125,000, he would get matching funds of $125,000 to give him $250,000 to put into the campaign. On the other hand, if he is limited to what he can raise, and there is no public financing, he would get no money. So he would be competing with $125,000 of funds available in a campaign against an incumbent who could spend, and certainly could raise, as the facts show, $1.4 million.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I submit to the Senator that the amount by which the incumbent can outdraw, so to speak, the challenger is compounded and intensified and exactly doubled by reason of the campaign financing. So the more the incumbent receives in contributions, the more the Treasury is going to give him, up to the limit.

Mr. CANNON. Up to the matching amount

Mr. ALLEN. So the challenger would have been better off with $100,000 as against $700,000, rather than $200,000 against $1.4 million.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know whether he would or not, because that is in exactly the same proportion, but I shall simply say that is not the proportion he would be up against if there were no public financing.

If $100,000 is all a challenger could raise, it would be a proportion of $400,000, because the incumbent in any of the big States consistently spends more than that.

Let me refer to the State of Texas, for which I happen to have figures. In the last campaign in Texas, in the general election, for example, $23 million was spent. The limit we have now, that is covered in the bill, would permit an expenditure of $778,500 in a primary election. So it is obvious that this would be quite restrictive, and thereby, by the restrictive factor alone, would limit the cost of a campaign and make it less disproportionate between the challenger and an incumbent who has more access to private funds.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not think it would be inaccurate to say—and I believe the Senator would agree with me—that the extent to which an incumbent can obtain more contributions is going to be duplicated in the Federal matching. So the incumbent receiving much in contributions would have that amount doubled, whereas the challenger would have his lesser amount doubled. That would adjust downward the difference between the two, according to the arithmetic of the Senator from Alabama, from which he sees no escape.

I feel that it is somewhat presumptuous on the part of Members of Congress to say to the American people, "We want you to finance our campaign for us. We want you to pay half the expenses of our primaries and all of the expenses of our general election. This is necessary to keep out improper influences."

I do not like the suggestion to the people which would say that Members of Congress would be susceptible to improper influences by reason of having received a $3,000 contribution from an individual. The Senator from Alabama has not received any contributions of that size. He has an amendment which seeks to cut the amount of contributions in Presidential races to $250, and in House and Senate races to $100, because that is all that the Government will match, and there must be something evil, something sinister, about that portion above that that the Government will match.

I do not believe, though, that Members of Congress and people who are of sufficient stature to run for the House and the Senate are going to allow themselves to be influenced by the receipt of a contribution of $3,000. I simply believe it is impunging the honor and integrity of Members of Congress to suggest that they would be so influenced.

Is there any law that makes a person accept a contribution that he does not want to accept? I do not know of any. Is there not some reason to believe that Members of Congress could be restrained in the amount and type of contributions they receive? It would seem to the Senator from Alabama that that might be the case.

Then, too, Mr. President, I think that there has developed among Members of the House and Senate a highly commendable restraint in the matter of the acceptance of campaign contributions.

I noticed, some weeks ago, that Representative VANIK of Ohio said that he would not accept a single contribution in his race for Congress. Not only was he not going to accept any contributions; he was not going to make any expenditures.

The distinguished senior Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS) has announced that his policy is going to be that subsequent to a certain time, which he will set, he will not accept any contribution for more than $100. So why do we have to escalate the cost of campaigning? That, I submit, is what we are doing by adding a public subsidy that is matched in primary races, and is paying 100 percent of the cost of general elections by the public treasury. It comes out of the pockets of the taxpayer, with the taxpayer not having any right to designate to whom the contribution will go.

The matter of tax credits and deductions is allowed under the present income tax laws. The reason I do not object to tax credits is that they can be spread by the taxpayer wherever he wants to spread them, and the amounts can be given to the candidates of his choice.

Having wiped out, in the matter of the checkoff, where the taxpayers can designate the party of their choice, the money all goes into a common pot and is then divided between the parties, if they come within the law.

I am glad we are going to have a test vote. I want to see how many Members want to see Uncle Sam pay the cost of their campaigns at a terrific amount, at 15 cents a person per vote in his State, in the case of a Senator, or in his congressional district, in the case of a Member of the House. How much would that be? In California, this is what would be paid to each of the Senate candidates.

I suppose the checks would be written out for them as soon as they became nominees. I hope I will be corrected if my statement is not correct. And the amounts are paid in advance; I do not believe it is on certification of expenses. If I am wrong, I should like to be corrected. I believe that the check is written first. For how much? For $221,450. Possibly there is some formula by which the candidates come by it. I am not advised as to that at the present time. I assume that as soon as the candidates are nominated, they will start to spend the money, and Uncle Sam will have to get there quickly with the money; or perhaps the senatorial candidate can be counted on to drop by the Treasury to pick up his $2 million. I expect that he will find a way to get there.

I expect he would find a way to get there. But the candidate of the Democratic Party would get a check for $2,121,000 and the candidate of the Republican Party would get a check for $2,121,000; we have already taken care of half of their primary costs, so they are getting along pretty good. The candidate for the Senate, sitting on $2 million in campaign funds—what incentive is there for him, as the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN) said earlier this evening, to go to the grassroots for help, for a small contribution? There would be no incentive at all.

Mr. President, we have enough apathy and disinterest in our elections now, and in my judgment this public financing of our elections would only add to and increase manifold the apathy and disinterest on the part of the American people in their elections.

Mr. President, the Senate of the United States, just a few short weeks ago, took action here in the face of strong public opinion and refused to raise the salaries of the Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives—and I was one who voted against the raise—by around $2,500. I believe that every Member of the Senate feels that the strong force of public opinion influenced his vote on that issue.

We were talking about $2,500 to each Senator at that time. But what about giving one $2 million for his election campaign? What is the public going to think about that? That is what we would provide here.

Ido not believe that a public opinion that is opposed to a raise of $2,500 for Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate is going to look with a great deal of satisfaction and approval on subsidizing the election campaigns of of the Members of the House and Senate.

Let us look at some of the States, and see what the Senators would get. For the State of New York, the Senator would get a subsidy in the general election of $1,899,750 whenever he would run, and one of them will be up for reelection this November. I do not see anything to prevent this measure going into effect before the November election.

The Senator from Alabama would receive $350,000, and the Senator from Alabama does not even have opposition in the November election.

The Senator from Pennsylvania would get a subsidy of $1,236,000. The Senator from Missouri, who was here a few moments ago——

Mr. MANSFIELD. He is still here.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON) would pick up a check for $487,650 at the start of his reelection campaign.

Mr. President, we are going to give the Senator from Missouri an opportunity tomorrow to vote against that subsidy for his race out there in Missouri. The Senator from Missouri does not believe he needs it. He thinks he will win without it overwhelmingly. I do not believe he needs that kind of a subsidy.

Mr. President, that is what the amendment would eliminate. It would leave the Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate subject to the wishes of their constituents, subject to letting the constituents have some little influence and input into their thinking, their campaigns, and their philosophy. They would be approachable by their constituents, and not just look to the public Treasury for payment of their campaign expenses.

Mr. President, put any limit you wish on overall expenditures and the Senator from Alabama can live with it. Wipe out contributions, for all the Senator from Alabama would care. Put any limit whatsoever on it. Limit contributions to $10 or $5, but leave it in the private sector. Do not turn it over to Uncle Sam. Do not have Members of Congress dipping into the public till to pay the costs of elections of Members of Congress.

Tomorrow the Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives will have the opportunity to take themselves out from under the provisions of this campaign subsidy bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, would the Senator consider the possibility of a time limitation on the pending amendment, after the vote on the conference report on the minimum wage bill tomorrow?

Mr. ALLEN. Before or after, it does not matter to the Senator from Alabama. I shall be glad to agree to any time the distinguished majority leader would say. I am ready to vote. Say 30 minutes?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the vote on the conference report on the minimum wage bill tomorrow, there be a time limitation of 1 hour on the pending Allen amendment, with the time to be equally divided between the distinguished Senator from Alabama, the sponsor of the amendment (Mr. ALLEN), and the chairman of the committee, the distinguished Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, with the approval of the Senator, I ask unanimous consent that, following the disposition of the Allen amendment, the distinguished Senator from Maine (Mr. HATHAWAY) be recognized for the purpose of offering his amendment.

Mr. HATHAWAY. No. 1082.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Then, with the approval of the distinguished Senator from Alabama, I ask unanimous consent that on the disposition of the Hathaway amendment, the second Allen amendment be brought up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Would the Senator consider a limitation on that also?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes. The same order will be fine.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, on the second Allen amendment, I ask unanimous consent that, as in the case of the first Allen amendment now pending, there be a time limitation of 1 hour, with the time to be equally divided under the same circumstances.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, as I understood on the first one it would be 30 minutes to be equally divided.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Oh, I thought the Senator had suggested 30 minutes to a side. I will change the request to 30 minutes to be equally divided.

Mr. ALLEN. And 30 minutes on the other one also.

Mr. MANSFIELD. And 30 minutes on the second one as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Let me state that the second amendment that the majority leader refers to would take from under the bill the presidential nomination contests.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is in the record now. I would like to ask the distinguished Senator from Maine if he would consider a time limitation on his amendment tomorrow, and if so, of how long.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, let me say to the distinguished majority leader that the Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN) and I debated this matter yesterday, and I think we said just about all that we wanted to say. There are some other Senators, as I understand, who would like to speak in favor of my amendment. There may also be some who want to speak in opposition to it. I hesitate to preclude them from talking if they wish to do so.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is a good "hesitation waltz." I agree with the Senator completely that we should have Senator GRIFFIN and others here tomorrow so that we can, maybe, arrive at an agreement then.

I thank the distinguished Senator.

Mr. HATHAWAY. I thank the distinguished majority leader.

AMENDMENT NO. 1066

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I have an amendment here which I understand is acceptable both to the floor manager and the ranking minority member of the committee. I do not think it will take much time and it can be accepted, I hope. It is amendment No. 1066. I ask that my amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARTLETT). The Chair would advise the Senator from Maine that that would take unanimous consent.

Mr. HATHAWAY. I ask unanimous consent that my amendment No. 1066 may be considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, provided it does not replace the unanimous consent agreement given on the action on the other bill, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would advise the Senator from Alabama that it will not do so.

Without objection it is so ordered, and the clerk will state the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 73, beginning with line 3, strike out through line 22, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(b) (1) Notwithstanding any other provisions of law with respect to limitations on expenditures or limitations on contributions, the national committee of a political party and a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committees of a State committee, may make expenditures in connection with the general election campaign of candidates for Federal office, subject to the limitations contained in subsections (2) and (3) hereof.

"(2) The national committee of a political party may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of any candidate for President who is affiliated with that party which exceeds an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States.

"(3) The national committee of a political party, or a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committees of a State committee, may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate for Federal office in a State who is affiliated with that party which exceeds—

"(A) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Senator, or of Representative from a State where a Representative is required to run statewide, the greater of—

"(i) 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of that State, or

"(ii) $20,000; and

"(B) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Representative in any other State, $10,000.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection—".

On page 73, line 23, strike out "(1)" and insert in lieu thereof "(A) ".

On page 74, line 3, strike out "(2)" and insert in lieu thereof "(B)".

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, this amendment would strike subsection (b) on page 73 and replace it with separate limitations with respect to what a national committee and a State committee may contribute to candidates running for Federal office. Under the bill as it now stands, there is a certain amount which may be used by both national and State committees for candidates in general, but it does not specify amounts with respect to individual candidates. Under the bill as presented, the national committee could funnel all the money it is entitled to under its limit into the race of one candidate. The State committee could do likewise.

My amendment would prevent that from happening. It would be a more equitable proviso for a distribution of funds to be spent by both the national committee and the State committee.

I understand that the distinguished Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON), the chairman of the committee, has no objection to this amendment. I also understand that it has been cleared with the minority side and that there is no objection on that side either.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, do I understand correctly now that, under the terms of the amendment, the national committee could spend 2 cents per voting age population in that State but not to exceed $20,000 or not to exceed $20,000 whichever is greater, but the population formula would depend on the State or the area in which it is to be spent?

Mr. HATHAWAY. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON. In the case of the House of Representatives, the ceiling figure would be $10,000 or the 2 cents per voting age population, whichever is higher in that particular area?

Mr. HATHAWAY. The fixed amount is $10,000.

Mr. CANNON. It is a fixed amount, then, without using the 2 cents formula?

Mr. HATHAWAY. Yes. That is the ceiling, of course.

Mr. CANNON. Very well. Yes, I do understand that now correctly, and so far as this Senator is concerned, I am ready to accept the amendment.

Mr. HATHAWAY. I thank the distinguished Senator from Nevada.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maine, No. 1066.

The amendment was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, what is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) is the pending question.

PROGRAM

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, the Senate will adjourn shortly to come in at 9:30 a.m. tomorrow. There are three special orders which will take up to about 10:15 a.m. We have morning business for not to exceed 10 minutes, with statements therein limited to 3 minutes. At the hour of approximately 10:30 a.m., the Senate will start on the time limitation covering the conference report on the minimum wage bill, the vote on which will occur at 11:30 a.m.

After that vote, the pending Allen amendment will then be the order of business, with a time limitation of one half-hour, to be equally divided.

After the conclusion of that vote, the Senator from Maine (Mr. HATHAWAY) will offer his amendment. Hopefully, a time limitation can be agreed on tomorrow. I hope to discuss this matter with

SENATE FLOOR DEBATES ON
S.3044
MARCH 28, 1974

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield back our time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The agreement provides for the vote to occur at 11:30 a.m. The unanimous-consent agreement could be changed by unanimous consent.

Mr. JAVITS. We yield back our time.

Mr. GRIFFIN. What is the change in the agreement?

Mr. JAVITS. No change. We merely want to yield back our time. We have no further speakers; unless we have a quorum call before the vote.

Mr. GRIFFIN. The Senator can suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. JAVITS. We have only 3 minutes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. We can call it off.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I do not yield back my time. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Under the previous order, the hour of 11:30 having arrived, the vote on the conference report is now in order. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE), and the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), and the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), would each vote "yea."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Maryland (Mr. BEALL), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS), and the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) is absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN) is absent due to illness in the family.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS), and the Senator from Maryland (Mr. BEALL) would each vote "yea."

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND) would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 71, nays 19, as follows:

So the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I congratulate the Senate on approval of the conference report on S. 2747, the minimum wage bill. The minimum wage of $1.60 an hour has not been increased since 1968. Since that time inflation has pushed the cost of living up 32 percent.

Today's vote is the third time in less than 2 years that the Senate has approved an increase in the measure of economic dignity for those working Americans at the bottom of the economic ladder. On one occasin the other body refused to go to conference and on the other, our efforts were vetoed by the President.

I strongly urge the President to sign this bill into law.

S. 2747 fully reflects the will of Congress and the public. Its provisions have been thoroughly examined in committee in both Houses. It has been debated many hours. Every controversial point has been tested by a vote in the Senate. The differences between the two bodies have been fairly compromised. It is a fine bill and should become law.

I also want to thank our chairman, Senator WILLIAMS, for his outstanding leadership and perseverance in bringing this difficult piece of legislation safely through once again. It is my strongest hope that this time we will see our efforts rewarded by becoming law.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENTS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following the vote on the first Allen amendment there be a limitation of 1 hour on the Hathaway amendment, to be equally divided between the distinguished Senator from Maine (Mr. HATHAWAY) and the minority leader or whomever he may designate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that it be in order at this time to ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order at this time to ask for the yeas and nays on the second Allen amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following the disposition of the second Allen amendment, the amendment to be offered by the distinguished Senator from Texas (Mr BENTSEN) may follow, and that there be a time limitation of 30 minutes on that amendment, the time to be equally divided.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I am not familiar with the Bentsen amendment.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I am familiar with the Allen amendments, but I am not familiar with the Bentsen amendment, either. I wonder if the majority leader would consider holding that one in abeyance.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes; I withdraw the request.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas, in conversation with me, said that his amendment provided that no foreigner could contribute to election campaigns It is a recommendation, I believe, that the President made.

Mr. COOK. May I say to the Senator from Alabama, I would think an amendment of that nature could be adopted unanimously by a voice vote, and that it would not be necessary to have a roll-call or to have time for debate.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I will discuss that later.

Then I understand that following the disposition of the Bentsen amendment, the third Allen amendment for today will be offered.

Mr. ALLEN. That suits me.

Mr. MANSFIELD. If I may have the attention of the minority leader and the ranking member of the Rules Committee, the Senator from Alabama has indicated that he would be willing to consider a 30-minute limitation on the third amendment on the same basis as the other two. I understand that the amendment has to do with the positions of the Members of the 93d Congress who will be running for office this year.

Mr. ALLEN. Running for the Presidency?

Mr. COOK. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I remind the Senate that we have a vote on the extradition treaty with Denmark at 12 o'clock tomorrow. There is a rumor going around that that would be the only business tomorrow. However, it is the intention of the joint leadership to consider amendments to the pending business, and it is anticipated that there will be yea and nay votes in addition to the vote on the treaty of extradition.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Marks, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session, the Presiding Officer (Mr. HUDDLESTON) laid before the Senate, messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of Senate proceedings.)

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ABOUREZK). Under the previous order, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, S. 3044, which the clerk will state.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment (No. 1109) of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN), which the clerk will state.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN's amendment (No. 1109) is as follows:

On page 3, line 6, strike out "FEDERAL" and insert in lieu thereof "PRESIDENTIAL".

On page 4, line 6, strike out the comma and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon.

On page 4, beginning with line 7, strike out through line 12.

On page 4, line 13, strike out "(5)" and insert in lieu thereof "(4)".

On page 4, line 17, strike out "(6)" and insert in lieu thereof "(5)".

On page 5, line 6, strike out "any".

On page 5, line 21, immediately before "Federal", strike out "a".

On page 7, line 3, strike out "(1)".

On page 7, beginning with "that—" on line 5, strike out through 7 no page 8 and insert in lieu thereof "that he is seeking nomination for election to the office of President and he and his authorized committees have received contributions for his campaign throughout the United States in a total amount in excess of $250,000.".

On page 9, line 6, after the semicolon, insert "and".

On page 9, strike out lines 7 and 8 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "(2) no contribution from".

On page 9, beginning with "and" on line 13, strike out through line 19.

On page 10, beginning with "(1)—" on line 3, strike out through line 16 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "(1), no contribution from any person shall be taken into account to the extent that it exceeds $250 when added to the amount of all other contributions made by that person to or for the benefit of that candidate for his primary election.".

On page 13, beginning with line 16, strike out through line 18 on page 14 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 504. (a) (1) Except to the extent that such amounts are changed under subsection (f) (2), no candidate may make expenditures in any State in which he is a candidate in a primary election in excess of the greater of—

"(A) 20 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (g)) of the State in which such election is held, or

"(B) $250,000.".

On page 14, line 19, strike out "(B)" and insert in lieu thereof "(1)" and strike out "subparagraph" and insert in lieu thereof "paragraph".

On page 14, line 20, strike out "(A)" and insert in lieu thereof "(1)".

On page 15, line 8, beginning with "the greater of—", strike out through line 17 and insert in lieu thereof "15 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (g)) of the United States.".

On page 18, beginning with line 10, strike out through line 20.

On page 26, lines 2 and 3, strike out "under section 504 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, or".

On page 71, beginning with line 20, strike out through line 2 on page 73 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(a) (1) Except to the extent that such amounts are changed under subsection (f) (2), no candidate (other than a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President) may make expenditures in connection with his primary election campaign in excess of the greater of—

"(A) 10 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (g)) of the geographical area in which the election for such nomination is held, or

"(B) (i) $125,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Senator, or Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, or

"(ii) $90,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Representative from a State which is entitled to more than one Representative.

"(2) (A) No candidate for nomination for election to the office of President may make expenditures in any State in which he is a candidate in a primary election in excess of two times the amount which a candidate for nomination for election to the office of Senator from that State (or for nomination for election to the office of Delegate in the case of the District of Columbia, the Virgin Islands, or Guam, or to the office of Resident Commissioner in the case of Puerto Rico) may expend in that State in connection with his primary election campaign.

"(B) Notwithstanding the provisions of subparagraph (A), no such candidate may make expenditures throughout the United States in connection with his campaign for that nomination in excess of an amount equal to 10 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States. For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'United States' means the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands and any area from which a delegate to the national nominating convention of a political party is selected.

"(b) Except to the extent that such amounts are changed under subsection (f) (2), no candidate may make expenditures in connection with his general election campaign in excess of the greater of—

"(1) 15 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (g)) of the geographical area in which the election is held, or

"(2) (A) $175,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Senator, or Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, or

"(B) $90,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Representative from a State which is entitled to more than one Representative.

"(c) No candidate who is unopposed in a primary or general election may make expenditures in connection with his primary or general election campaign in excess of 10 percent of the limitation in subsection (a) or (b).

"(d) The Federal Election Commission shall prescribe regulations under which any expenditure by a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President for use in two or more States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

"(e) (1) Expenditures made on behalf of any candidate are, for the purpose of this section, considered to be made by such candidate.

"(2) Expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate for the office of Vice President of the United States are, for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by the candidate for the office of President of the United States with whom he is running.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a Vice Presidential candidate, if it is made by—

"(A) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for the purposes of making any expenditure, or

"(B) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate or an agent of the candidate to make the expenditure.

"(4) For purposes of this section an expenditure made by the national committee of a political party, or by the State committee of a political party, in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate affiliated with that party which is not in excess of the limitations contained in subsection (i), is not considered to be an expenditure made on behalf of that candidate.

"(f) (1) For purposes of paragraph (2)—

"(A) 'price index' means the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and

"(B) 'base period' means the calendar year 1973.

"(2) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1975), as necessary data become available from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Federal Election Commission and publish in the Federal Register the percentage difference between the price index for the twelve months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each amount determined under subsections (a) and (b) shall be changed by such percentage difference. Each amount so changed shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

"(g) During the first week of January 1975, and every subsequent year, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Federal Election Commission and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, of each State, and of each congressional district as of the first day of July next preceding the date of certification. The term 'voting age population' means resident population, eighteen years of age or older.

"(h) Upon receiving the certification of the Secretary of Commerce and of the Secretary of Labor, the Federal Election Commission shall publish in the Federal Register the applicable expenditure limitations in effect for the calendar year for the United States, and for each State and congressional district under this section."

On page 73, line 3, strike out "(b)" and insert in lieu thereof "(1)".

On page 73, line 24, strike out "section 504" and insert in lieu thereof "subsection (g); and".

On page 74, strike out lines 1 and 2.

On page 74, line 6, strike out "that Act" and insert in lieu thereof "the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971".

On page 74, line 8, strike out "(c)" and insert in lieu thereof "(j)".

On page 74, line 10, strike out "(a)(4)" and insert in lieu thereof "(e)(3)".

On page 75, line 6, strike out "(a)(5)" and insert in lieu thereof "(d)".

On page 75, line 11, strike out "(a)(4)" and insert in lieu thereof "(e)(3)".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time for debate on this amendment is limited to 30 minutes, to be equally divided between and controlled by the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) and the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON). Who yields time?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

This amendment would merely take from under the bill the races for the House of Representatives and the Senate, both for the primary and the general elections.

Mr. President, I do not believe it is right for Members of Congress to provide that the taxpayers, through the public Treasury, should pay for their election campaigns. I do not believe it is right to present to a candidate for the Senate 15 cents per person of voting age in his State, to allow him to run for the Senate. This would involve astronomical amounts of money. In the State of California, the public subsidy to a candidate for the Senate in the general election would be $2,121,000. In the State of New York, it would be $1,900,000. I do not believe that the taxpayers of the country should be called on to finance elections of Senators and Representatives.

I might say also, Mr. President, that a strong public opinion in this country caused the Senate to vote against a recommendation of the President that the salaries of the Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate be increased by about $2,500. That was overwhelmingly vetoed here in the Senate.

What would public opinion be about presenting a check for more than $2 million to a candidate for the Senate in California, $1,900,000 in the State of New York, and lesser sums on down?

All this amendment would do would be strike the House and the Senate from the provisions of the bill. I do not believe that the House would accept the provision anyway, and I believe that the Senate should take the leadership and strike the primary and general elections of House and Senate Members from the bill.

For another thing, matching funds are provided in the primary for the House of Representatives and the Senate, and this would actually aid the incumbents, in that we would match the private collections of sums up to $100 of House and Senate Members. Naturally the House and Senate Members, being incumbents, and being better known, would be able to collect more funds from individual contributors, and then the Federal Government would match that amount, compounding the advantage that the incumbent would have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield myself 1 more minute.

Mr. President, it is not in the public interest to require the taxpayers to pay for the primaries, or half of the primaries and all of the general election expense, of Senators and Representatives, and I hope that the Senate will approve the amendment.

Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER).

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Alabama for yielding so that I could speak in support of the amendment.

It is no secret here in the Senate that I do not look favorably upon public financing of any campaigns, including Presidential campaigns. I think it would result in the distortive effect of contributions of large sums of private money giving way to the distortive effect of large contributions of public money, with the inevitable effect of a proliferation of Treasury rules and regulations and bureaucratic redtape that ultimately will pervade a system of public financing, no matter how we try to avoid it.

The election of officials to office at the Presidential and congressional levels, in my judgment, is the most intimate of all democratic processes. It was intentionally not structured into the Constitution, so that we would be entirely on our own, free of the dictates of the Government in deciding how we select our officials.

But there is a very real distinction between a Presidential campaign, with two major party nominees who command the attention of the national press corps and the national media including television coverage, and the campaign of a typical candidate for the House of Representatives or the Senate, who does not have similar coverage, especially those who are challengers of established incumbents.

I am an incumbent. Now, by the grace of God and the good will of the people of Tennessee, I have been here a little more than 7 years. But 7 years is not long enough to eradicate from my mind a recollection of how hard it is to run from obscurity, and how hard it is to be a challenger.

I think, Mr. President, that particularly in the cases of candidates for the House of Representatives or the Senate, public financing creates a distinct advantage on behalf of the incumbents, and diminishes the chance for new and aggressive, intelligent and worthwhile challengers.

It tends to cement the status quo of congressional affairs and is far more susceptible to unfavorable results than even the financing of a Presidential campaign from the public treasury, which I also oppose. On the scale of things, I must say that I oppose this more than I oppose that.

So I very much hope that the Senate will support the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Alabama to exempt ourselves from public financing. If the matter of the setting of our own salaries is a patent conflict of interest, the matter of providing for our own war chests to campaign with is an even greater conflict of interest.

I thank the distinguished Senator from Alabama for yielding me this time.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield for a question?

Mr. BAKER. I yield, if I have any more time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield the Senator from Massachusetts 5 minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I oppose the amendment offered by Senator ALLEN to strike the provisions of S. 3044 dealing with public financing of congressional general elections and congressional primaries, and I urge the Senate to reject the amendment.

At a very minimum, yesterday's overwhelming vote cements the existing law providing public financing for Presidential general elections. Obviously, Congress is not about to roll back the clock on the current dollar checkoff by repealing or deleting existing law.

By what logic, then, can Congress fail to see the need for public financing of its own elections?

The issue is the same under both amendments that Senator ALLEN plans to offer today—to strike public financing for all congressional elections, and to strike it for Presidential primaries.

The logic is compelling, and we escape it at our peril. If public financing is the answer to the problems of private money and political corruption is Presidential elections, then it is also the answer to the problems of private money and political corruption in other Federal elections, too. If public financing is good enough for the President, it is good enough for the House and Senate, too. If public financing is good enough for general elections, it is good enough for primaries, too.

For centuries, money and public service have been a corrosive combination in political life. And the more things change the more they remain the same. In "The Prince," Machiavelli put the problem clearly almost 500 years ago:

As a general rule those who wish to win favor with a prince offer him the things they most value and in which they see that he will take most pleasure; so it is often seen that rulers receive presents of horses, arms, piece of cloth of gold, precious stones, and similar ornaments worthy of their station.

The only real change today, when the favors available from the modern Congress and the modern Federal Government would boggle the mind of any medieval prince, is that the most valued presents are not horses and arms, but contributions to political campaigns.

Just as Watergate and private campaign contributions have mired the executive branch in its present quicksand of corruption, so, I am convinced, the present low estate of Congress is the result of the ingrained corruption and appearance of corruption that our system of private financing of congressional election has produced.

Today, in Congress, the problem has reached the epidemic level. For too long, we have tolerated a system of private financing that allows the wealthiest citizens and biggest special interest groups to infect our democracy by buying a preferred position in the deliberations of Congress.

It is no accident that Congress so often fails to act promptly or effectively on issues of absolutely vital importance to all the people of the Nation—issues like inflation, the energy crisis, tax reform, and national health insurance, to name but four subjects where the ineffective action of Congress, sometimes over many years, appears to bear a direct and obvious correlation to the massive campaign contributions by special interest groups. It is no secret to any citizen that such interest groups have a stake at least in the status quo, and often a stake in something worse, in flagrant disregard of where the public interest really lies.

Not until we root out all the corrosive aspects of the present system will we be able to cure this worsening infection of our Government, and bring our democracy back to health.

To make the case for public financing of congressional elections, we need look no farther than the figures released today by Common Cause. Beyond any reasonable doubt, these figures demonstrate that special interest groups have a stranglehold on Congress, and that the stranglehold can only be broken by public financing.

The figures tell a dismal story of how Congress is bought in each election year.

Special interest groups	Contributions to Congress, 1972	Cash on hand, 1974
Total	$14,000,000	$14,200,000
Business professional	3,400,000	5,900,000
All labor	3,800,000	5,000,000
AFL-CIO	847,000	309,000
BIPAC (NAM)	410,000	231,000
AMA	844,000	335,000
Dairy	$1,189,000	$2,018,000
Oil	37,000	NA

One of the most distressing aspects of these figures is the proof that Watergate has not even made a dent in the special interest war chests now being accumulated for the 1974 elections. Already, with the 1974 primary campaigns hardly even underway, the special interest groups have collected more cash on hand for political contributions in 1974 than they contributed in all of 1972.

An equally distressing aspect is that these figures vastly understate the real amount of special interest giving, since they are compiled only from reports filed by registered political committees. Because of limits on current capability for analyzing the published reports, the figures are forced to ignore contributions by individuals. Yet, we know that individuals with a special interest in legislation before Congress contributed immense amounts to 1972 campaigns, and they are obviously tooling up to do the same in 1974.

It is a hollow joke, a very hollow joke whose butt is the people of America, to read that oil committees gave only $37,000 for congressional elections in 1972, when we know from other estimates that oil executives contributed millions to both the Presidential and the congressional elections in 1972.

In sum, Congress owes America a better legislation record on the issues, and the way to start is by cleaning the stables of our own campaigns, by reforming the way we finance our own elections. Only when we have public financing of our elections will we in Congress truly represent the public.

Mr. President, I wonder whether the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Tennessee are familiar with the figures released by Common Cause this morning, which show the sizable contributions made by the special interest groups to Members of Congress in the 1972 elections, and the sizable warchests they have accumulated for 1974. I wonder what kind of reaction the Senators have to these disclosures.

We already have public financing for Presidential elections. Why do we think in the House and the Senate that we are "holier than thou" and that it is not necessary to have public financing for Members of Congress? Most specifically, what is the reaction of the Senator from Tennessee to the analysis by Common Cause, which shows that over $14 million in special interest money has already been collected for the Senate and House elections this fall? How does he respond on that issue to the amendment before the Senate?

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator from Alabama for giving me, again, enough time so that we can have this colloquy with the Senator from Massachusetts.

My response is, I do not think we should have any contributions from anyone except qualified voters. I do not think the Treasury of the United States, or the treasury of the State of Tennessee, or that any corporation, or association or co-op, or whatever, should make contributions or give financial support to any campaign. Rather, I think that the support should come only from individual human beings who can vote. Corporations cannot vote. Common Cause cannot vote. Chambers of Commerce cannot vote. Why should they contribute? I proposed, and there is at the desk, an amendment to the bill which I will call up later, that says that no one except a qualified voter can contribute.

That is my reply.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, so long as we have private contributions, the special interests will find a way to give their money and make their influence felt.

As I indicated earlier, the Common Cause figures are only the tip of the iceberg because they reflect only the contributions reported or collected by organized political committees. They do not reflect contributions by individuals. Yet we know, as in the case of oil money, that vast amounts of special interest money come rolling in, each election year, in the form of individual contributions.

We know why these special interest groups are building up their warchests for 1974. To take but one example, it is clear that this Congress is now well into a major debate on national health insurance. Possibly, a comprehensive bill to establish a program of national health insurance may pass the Senate and the House before the end of the present session. Or, the debate may well carry over into the 94th Congress that convenes in January 1975, after the congressional elections this fall. Obviously, health reform and national health insurance are issues that are now coming into the forefront of the agenda of Congress.

And what do we see when we look at the Common Cause figures, published today, showing the warchests that special interest groups have already accumulated for the purpose of making contributions to the 1974 elections? We find that one of the special interest groups with the fattest warchests is none other than the American Medical Association and its affiliated political action committees in the various States.

Mr. President, I ask at this point that an excerpt from the Common Cause materials showing the breakdown by State of the AMA warchest, may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. KENNEDY. We see from these figures that the AMA and its affiliates have already collected the massive sum of $889,000 in available contributions for the fall congressional elections. We also know the position of the AMA on health reform, which is a position of total opposition to the sort of national health insurance program that many of us believe is essential if the Nation is to have decent health care.

Clearly, the AMA position will be well represented in the next Congress. Money speaks, and $889,000 in campaign contributions speaks with a very loud voice indeed.

But who speaks for the average citizen? Who speaks for the mother trying to get a doctor because her child is sick. Who speaks for the family driven into financial ruin because of the high cost of serious illness? Who speaks for all the people fed up with a health care system that suits the doctors and the insurance companies very well, but that fails to meet the people's basic need for decent health care at a price they can afford to pay?

That is the nature of the problem we face. There are probably only a handful of Members of this body who have not received at least some contribution from one or another of these various interest groups. I think that public financing is the only realistic answer to eliminate the corrupting influence of the special interest contributions on our Senate and House elections.

We see the picture. The special interest groups are waiting with their checkbooks to make their influence felt. If this amendment passes, the effect will be to say that we in Congress are glad to get that money, that we welcome their campaign contributions in 1974 and on into the future.

I oppose the amendment, and I hope that the Senate will reject it.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I do not know what the parliamentary situation is at the moment. The Senator from Massachusetts asked me to yield, but on whose time, I do not know. We have been having this colloquy. If I still have the floor, I should like to have 1 minute more to speak.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield the Senator from Tennessee 1 more minute.

Mr. KENNEDY. Whatever time remains to me I will gladly yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am really most distressed by the concept embodied in the remarks just made by the Senator from Massachusetts, which I read to mean that we can trust ourselves so little to cure the ills spotlighted by the Watergate case that we have got to throw the baby out with the bath water. I really am concerned that we do not consider ourselves to be good enough legal draftsmen or legislative scholars to be able to draft a way to prevent the special interests from having an effect on the elective process.

I know half a dozen ways to do that without tearing down the destiny and the political system of this country.

We could hand out $2 million in California or $365,000 in Nevada, or whatever, and pretty soon we will have a little booklet coming out that says "Federal Rules and Guidelines for Qualifying for the Expenditure of Funds"—and pretty soon the Federal Government will be supervising how campaigns are going to be run. Thus, we will have created political incest.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. KENNEDY. If I have any time remaining, I should like to have 2 minutes——

Mr. CANNON. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the thing the American public should understand is that they are paying for the system now. We hear the statements about the raid on the Federal Treasury. The Senator from Tennessee understands who is paying for what now.

And one of the most obvious the people are forced to pay is through tax loopholes. The Internal Revenue Code is riddled with tax loopholes. The American public is paying for those loopholes. Vast amounts of tax welfare are being paid through the tax laws to big contributors and special interest groups. And we know who makes up the difference. The working man and woman, the middle income and the lower income groups are the ones who pay higher taxes to make up for the various tax loopholes.

We know how those various tax loopholes have been obtained. As the Senator from Tennessee and every other Member of the Senate knows, it is through the work of the highly paid lobbyists and the special interest groups down here in the conference rooms and in the committee rooms and in the halls of Congress. They make sure that the loopholes are written in and stay in and they are always around when campaign contributions are to be made.

So, make no mistake about it, Mr. and Mrs. Public, you are paying for the system, and you are paying for it in hidden billions of dollars every year.

All it takes to change the system and put it on an honest footing is to make sure that the public pays the bill for elections to public office. We are talking about a cost of $360 million over a 4-year period, to make Members of Congress and the Senate, and the President of the United States accountable to the people and not to the special interests. That is a bargain by any standard, a price we cannot afford not to pay.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Colorado (Mr. DOMINICK).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. President, I have not participated very much in this debate so far and I do not serve on the Committee on Rules and Administration, but I think I have just heard the most illogical argument from the Senator from Massachusetts that I have heard in my whole life in the 12 years I have served in this body, and my 2 years of service in the House.

Every single tax thing, including what he calls the tax loopholes, were originally put in for a social reason of one kind or another, like the tax loophole which gives an extra deduction, for example, to one who is blind or over the age of 65. There is a whole group of things like that, which he lumps into so-called tax loopholes. It does not have a single thing to do with the bill which is designed to put Members of the Senate and Members of the House in the public trough.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield for a question?

Mr. DOMINICK. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. Would the Senator support a bill to eliminate all the tax loopholes, say, by the end of this year, over a 2- or 3-year period, then rebuild them back into the Revenue Code, if they really serve a social purpose? I believe that many of those loopholes are directly related to campaign contributions by the people who enjoy the benefits of the loopholes. Would the Senator be willing to test the social purpose of the loopholes by re-enacting them or is he simply prepared to continue——

Mr. DOMINICK. Is the Senator asking me a question?

I wonder whether the Senator from Alabama would yield me another minute to answer the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. DOMINICK. I thank the Senator.

The answer to the Senator from Massachusetts is, "no," I would not support such a bill.

A great many social projects are of extraordinary impact in this country. One of the things I hope to do is to get a tax credit for higher education. We have passed it in the Senate twice, and I have no intention of saying that the Senator from Colorado would simply eliminate these social practices which we try to accomplish in a tax bill. Besides, that comes out of the Ways and Means Committee, not out of the Rules Committee, and has nothing to do with the public trough bill that is before the Senate now.

I have been adamantly against public financing from the very beginning. I am against it for any kind of race—Presidential, Republican, senatorial, or anything else—because all I can see is a continuing effort to get more and more money as expenses go on, increasing the amount of money we are going to be spending on public campaigns for election one way or another. As one who is running this year, it would be helpful to me, of course, if we had public financing. But I cannot think of anything worse for the taxpayers of my State, for the taxpayers of the country, and for the country's government as a whole—its welfare, its honor, and its integrity. To have campaigns run on public financing is the worst thing I can think of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Mississippi (Mr. STENNIS).

Mr. STENNIS. I thank the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. President, last year the Senate passed a good bill. I could not be here to participate in that bill but I have been so concerned about elections, about what has been happening, that I have gone into this matter rather thoroughly; and I cannot support the principle of using taxpayers' dollars to pay for the campaigns, especially our own elections, especially for the election of Members of the House of Representatives, who have only 2-year terms.

As a practical matter, I know of no scandal connected with senatorial races or with races of Members of the House, either—the actual races for election or reelection. I have been here a good while. We have had some matters come up about funds collected and appreciation dinners, whatever one wants to call it. But that was after the election was over. Some of that money, we decided—in one case especially—was misused. But I do not think Congress has any record of scandal or any kind of fraud or anything fixed up. There is a selfish angle, too.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield the Senator 1 additional minute.

Mr. STENNIS. I feel that to get into our races and to let the taxpayers pay for them takes the people out of it, so to speak. The taxpayer pays his taxes because he has to, and he should, of course. But the idea of taking his money and putting it to this use is contrary to what many people believe in. Worse than that, it takes the people out of the race, so to speak, because they feel that what they can do will not count. We have to get these elections back closer to the people, closer to their voluntary actions, to their enthusiasm, to their willingness to be active citizens, to become involved. We need more people actively involved in these elections, particularly congressional elections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, it is my intention to vote against the proposal of the Senator from Alabama, but I would be remiss if I did not say that one of the reasons why I intend to do so is that I think the people of the United States have an opportunity to try what we have proposed for some time.

I must say, in all fairness, that I am surprised at the extreme length of the indictment of Democratically controlled Congresses that I have just listened to as to the Internal Revenue Code as it now exists, with what are called complete and absolute loopholes.

I think that the average taxpayer who files his form 1040 seems to think of everybody who has a loophole as not being an average taxpayer. I am thinking about the fellow who owns a gas station, the fellow who deducts for the utilization of his truck, which he also drives home at night because it is his vehicle, and that is a loophole.

I am thinking of literally hundreds and hundreds of things that give a little individual who is a small, independent businessman, not the giant businessman, an opportunity and an incentive to be a businessman, an incentive to make a living.

I hope that during the course of this debate we will not take into consideration such broad, sweeping statements that we are going to have an amendment that takes away all loopholes. What does "all loopholes" really mean? What are we really saying to the Internal Revenue Service? What are we really saying to every little individual who pays his taxes on a quarterly basis, not once a year?

I hope we will look at this situation from the standpoint that we now have an opportunity to try a process that is not totally untried in the world of politics, and I think we all know that. I know how individuals on this floor feel, but if the Senator feels that he is going to try, he should try it at all levels of elective government.

I know that the next amendment is going to swing around and say that we will do it for this group and not that group.

I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that we have had many misuses, and I think we have a tendency to overkill in the United States. Many times, legislative bodies certainly do. But I believe this issue has been debated enough so that it is no longer the issue of overkill, that it is now the issue that this is a process that may indeed work and can work; and if it does not work, obviously the system can be changed.

To the extent that we in the Rules Committee, under the leadership of our distinguished chairman, have tried to work this matter out to the best of our ability, this amendment would do a great injustice to the work we did in the hearings on the bill. We feel that if we are going to make this experimental attempt to change the methods of campaign operations in the United States, it has to be done at the legislative level and must be done at the Presidential level.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, what is the time situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada has 2 minutes remaining. The Senator from Alabama has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, Congress already acted once on this matter and determined last year that the matter should be referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration and that we should come back with a proposition for the financing of campaigns out of Federal funds. That is exactly what we have done.

We do not provide in this law that every candidate must go to the Federal funding source. We leave it up to his option. If he sees a great danger in it and wants to go the private sector he may do that within the limits of the bill. Of course, we provide a limit on the amount. We will not see another situation, if this bill is passed, where Clement Stone and people like that can make tremendous contributions, or a committee, like the milk fund or a like organization makes tremendous contributions, because we have a limit. It means that a person who is unknown and wants to try, if he can demonstrate initially that he has a certain amount of appeal, can find the funds without going to private interest groups to finance a portion of his campaign, provided the funds are there.

The law now provides for the checkoff provision. In this bill we increase that and double the amount of the checkoff and increase the amount of the tax credit or the tax deduction that may be taken. They can use those to provide funds to the candidate.

I simply say the Committee on Rules and Administration is trying to comply with the instructions given it last year by the Senate in reporting a bill on this subject and we think we have done the best job we could do after holding hearings and listening to the testimony of witnesses who appeared before us.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from Alabama is rejected.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, yes, the Committee on Rules and Administration did discharge its commitment in reporting the bill, but there is no obligation on us to take the bill. It is just a vehicle for the Senate to express its will with regard to public financing.

I do not believe that the people of this country, having rejected the thought of Congress raising its salary by some $2,500, will look with favor on Congress voting itself funds in the primary; up to some $2 million in California and lesser amounts down through other States for Members of the Senate to run their campaigns. I do not believe they want to see Members of Congress have their campaigns subsidized.

This amendment will take House and Senate races, both primary and general elections, out from under subsidy provisions of the bill. I hope it is approved by the Senate.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment No. 1109 proposed by my friend from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN).

The bill as it is currently written would establish public financing for all Federal political campaigns. I am opposed to this because I oppose public financing except in the case of Presidential and Vice-Presidential races. The huge amounts of money spent in the 1972 Presidential campaign—$60 million for President Nixon and $35 million for Senator McGOVERN combined with the Watergate revelations indicate the need to change the method of funding Presidental campaigns.

I support, and voted for, legislation sponsored by Senator RUSSELL LONG, of Louisiana, some years ago, to try the checkoff system on our income tax returns. By this system taxpayers can indicate on their tax forms whether or not they want $1 of their tax money to go to the financing of Presidential level campaigns. I believe that this measure, plus a proposed $15,000 ceiling on contributions, would stimulate a healthier atmosphere for Presidential campaigns. The huge sums required to mount a Presidential campaign force the candidate to seek out the big contributor—to whom he then feels some obligation. We should provide this candidate with an alternative—and public financing is such an alternative.

However, I am opposed to establishing public financing for the congressional and senatorial races. This onslaught on the public treasury to pick up the tabs for campaigning and "politicking" all across America would create chaos. It would entice every Tom, Dick, and Harry to jump into the political arena and take his money, and hence take advantage of the public financing. It is nothing more than a subsidy program for all would be politicians.

I do favor control on Senate and House races in order to keep down spending and disclose all facts concerning contributions and expenditures. One way to do this is to limit campaign expenditures to 10 and 15 cents per voter. Since this would put a ceiling on the total expenditures of a candidate, it would encourage him to go after smaller individual contributions instead of having to seek out big contributors to pay for an unlimited, and hence, expensive campaign. I feel that by limiting campaign spending, the candidates will be drawn to public financing in the true sense of the word—the solicitation of funds from individual citizens. And I also favor a prohibition on receiving contributions from any source other than an individual contributor. No more milk fund shenanigans for example. The last Senator elected in South Carolina spent $660,000. With a voting age population in South Carolina of 1,775,000 and with a limit of 10 cents per voter on campaign financing, future candidates would be limited to spending $177,500 in their campaign. This would be a big improvement.

I also support limiting the amount that an individual can contribute to a campaign, and while I personally favor a $1,000 ceiling, I would agree on a compromise that would set $15,000 as the maximum contribution in Presidential races and $3,000 in Senate and House races.

We must do away with the corrupting influence of big money—far more money than is necessary to present a candidate's views to the people. I think the steps I have outlined here can do the deed. At the same time, they will avoid the pandemonium that public financing and more government meddling are bound to create.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I have said on numerous occasions that the most important task now before us is to restore the confidence of the people in their Government. Public feeling toward elected officials is at an extremely low point. In fact, this Congress—despite its fine record—could muster a favorable rating from only 21 percent of the people interviewed in a recent Lou Harris survey.

It appears to me, then, that this is the worst possible time for Congress to enact legislation that would provide for the use of tax dollars to finance congressional campaigns. I have grave doubts that public financing of House and Senate races would ever be advisable, but I have no doubts as to this being the wrong time, of all times, to provide for Federal financing of House and Senate races.

The bill now before us would allow every candidate in every primary for every House seat in the country to collect $45,000 from the U.S. Treasury. Those who survive the primaries could be rewarded with a $90,000 campaign chest from the Treasury.

Not only is the principle of using tax dollars to finance Senate and House campaigns highly questionable, but the amounts involved here seem way out of line with what would be considered realistic limits.

In the 1972 House races, for instance, 74 percent of all the candidates recorded expenditures of less than $50,000. Instead of setting the limit at that level, the bill would set a $90,000 maximum. In other words, rather than moving to decrease the high amounts spent in a minority of the congressional races, the bill would actually encourage increased spending in the majority of such races.

The amounts available for Senate races, although varying according to the particular States, are also high. In West Virginia, for example, the voting age population is listed at 1,228,000. That means that $122,800 would be available for primary campaigns, based on 10 cents per voting age citizen; and $184,200 would be available for the general election, based on a 15-cent ceiling.

If one of the objects of campaign reform is to limit expenditures—and that certainly should be a main objective—then public financing of congressional campaigns is not going to accomplish it. Actually, public financing of Senate and House races threatens to increase expenditures, not only by setting higher-than-needed limits, but also by opening a crack in the Treasury for this kind of spending. No one can say that the 10-cent and 15-cent limits contained in this bill will not be increased to 25-cent or 50-cent limits in the future. The public became enraged recently when there was talk of dollar-a-gallon gasoline. Imagine how enraged the same taxpayers will become when there is talk of dollar-a-vote Federal expenditures for congressional campaigns.

The way to bring about reform is not through the use of taxpayers' dollars for Senate and House candidates; but rather by setting limits—reasonable but strict limits—on what congressional candidates can spend; limiting the amounts that single contributors can give to campaigns; strict disclosure of contributors; and stricter enforcement of the laws against violations.

With all the problems facing the taxpayers of this country today, we should be trying to find more ways to save their tax dollars—not new ways to spend them.

Therefore, I support the amendment to delete public financing of congressional campaigns from this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE), and the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) and the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE) would vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Maryland (Mr. BEALL), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS), and the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCHWEIKER) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) is absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN) is absent due to illness in the family.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) would vote "yea."

On this vote, the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN) is paired with the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE). If present and voting, the Senator from Vermont would vote "yea" and the Senator from Minnesota would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 51, as follows:

So Mr. ALLEN's amendment (No. 1109) was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1032

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of the amendment by the Senator from Maine (Mr. HATHAWAY), No. 1082. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 75, line 19, redesignate subsection "(a)" as subsection "(a)(1)".

On page 75, line 19, strike the word "person" and substitute the word "individual".

On page 75, line 22, strike the word "person" and substitute the word "individual".

On page 75, following line 23, add the following new subsection:

"(2) No person (other than an individual) may make a contribution to, or for the benefit of, a candidate for nomination for election, or election, which, when added to the sum of all other contributions made by that person for that campaign, exceeds $6,000."

On page 75, line 25, strike the word "person" and substitute the word "individual".

On page 76, line 2, strike the word "person" and substitute the word "individual".

On page 76, line 2, strike the period and add the following: ", or from any person (other than an individual) which, when added, to the sum of all other contributions received from that person for that campaign, exceeds $6,000.".

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I spoke the other day at some length in support of the amendment. I am not going to burden Senators by repeating everything I said the other day, but I should like to make a few points in support of the amendment.

The purpose of the amendment is to differentiate between individuals and organizations with respect to the contributions limitation. The amendment allows organizations to contribute $6,000 per candidate rather than $3,000, which is the limitation now in the bill. The $3,000 limitation will still apply with respect to individuals.

It seems to me that it is inequitable to equate one wealthy individual with an organization whose membership runs to hundreds or thousands. Large citizen groups, whether they be liberal or conservative, or single-issue groups, such as conservation groups, perform a valuable function by serving as funneling organizations to give modest contributors a voice and an impact in the election.

By giving to the political committees that reflect their philosophy or views, more people get interested and stay interested in the electoral process.

In areas where it is difficult to raise funds for a statewide campaign, either because the area simply does not have the funds to provide, or because the candidate is not very well known, these groups provide a means of channeling funds into the area while preventing any outside influence.

Most liberal organizations, trade associations, or business groups already have State, local, or regional affiliates as existing networks to support candidates and each of them may contribute large sums to each candidate. But citizen groups are usually national. They raise funds by mailings to the general public and would not have the means to multiply their committees and set them up in separate States. So the $3,000 limitation which is at present in the bill for contributions is not enough for broad-based citizen groups or nationwide organizations.

An organization representing 80,000 or more people, such as the National Committee for an Effective Congress, or 70,000, such as the American Conservative Union, should be allowed to contribute as much as a man and wife contribute, under the bill, that amounts to $6,000.

It has been said that it would be preferable to have no group contributions at all that only individual citizens could make contributions. I agree that it would be nice to have so many individuals interested in our electoral process that we could rely solely on individual contributions. Ultimately, that should be our goal.

But at present, organizations that pool contributions from groups of citizens who share a view or an ideology perform a valuable function in our system, and I feel that they are being treated unfairly as individuals in the committee bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. I ask unanimous consent that the time for the quorum call be charged to this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I ask unanimous consent that during the consideration of the pending legislation, Mr. Philip Reberg of my staff be granted the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On whose time?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR., On the same time that ran before I called off the quorum call.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I withdraw it.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may require.

The pending amendment would make a change that in my view is wrong in principle.

As the bill is now written, special interest groups—organizations that collect and distribute campaign money for business, labor, farm and other special interest groups—including the infamous milk funds—would be limited to $3,000 in the contributions made to the campaign of any candidate. The amendment proposed would increase that limit to $6,000.

In my humble opinion it would be well if we could wipe out contributions of any size from special interest groups to a candidate's campaign. I considered offering just such a counter-amendment which would eliminate even the $3,000 contribution. I recognize, however, that there would be little chance that such an amendment could prevail.

I shall not argue the constitutional issue—even though I recognize that it does exist. But whether the limit is $3,000 or $6,000 does not really change the constitutional arguments.

The question, so far as I am concerned, essentially is one of direction and principle. It is my view that to increase the limit from $3,000 to $6,000, as the Senator from Maine would do by his amendment, would be to go in the wrong direction; it would be going away from campaign finance reform—which is supposed to be the purpose of the bill.

As the distinguished Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER) said earlier today in a colloquy, special interest groups do not vote; people vote. And it seems to me that we should be endeavoring, in this reform legislation, to focus on more direct participation by individual citizens rather than to encourage the channel of campaign support through special interest groups.

When an individual contributes to a special interest group—whatever its ideology, philosophy or legislative purpose—and then allows the directors of that organization to determine which candidates should be supported opposed with his money, that individual is thereby delegating an important element of his own citizenship responsibility. I just do not think it is in the national interest to encourage that practice.

This amendment, in my view, would erode and weaken the strength that is in the bill now. It should be voted down.

I realize that in many campaigns—in some Senate campaigns and certainly in Presidential campaigns—the enlargement from a $3,000 limit to a $6,000 limit could be considered relatively insignificant. But the amendment would not be so insignificant, I suggest, in many races for seats in the House of Representatives.

At the present time, many candidates who run for House seats conduct their entire campaigns on total amounts of $12,000, $15,000, or $20,000. Certainly, in those situations, a $6,000 contribution coming from a special interest group would be a large portion of the total amount spent in the campaign.

It would be much better, it seems to me, if all contributions made to a campaign were to come directly from individual citizens and if there were complete and full disclosure concerning all such contributions.

The amendment leaves open the possibility, at least, that campaign funds can be "laundered" through the conduit of a special interest group.

Whatever may have been possible in the past in that regard, it seems that this practice should be eliminated. The people want clean elections; they want full disclosure.

To allow contributions to be channeled through special interest groups could be a method of concealing and covering up financial support, rather than disclosing it.

So, for those reasons, I urge my colleagues to vote down the amendment.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I rise to speak for the amendment. I have listened but have not had the opportunity to be exposed to all the arguments on both sides. I realize the point the Senator from Michigan is making, that this permits the enlargement of the laundering fund, but with all this legislation we have to weigh the good and the bad. My own view is that the organizations that would be most affected by the $3,000 limitation would be organizations whose contributions were basically small and that they should be permitted to contribute, because they are organizations that would be representing large groups of people.

The $3,000 figure is an arbitrary figure. The $6,000 figure proposed in the amendment of the Senator from Maine is also an arbitrary figure. Perhaps the $6,000 figure more nearly meets the needs of the situation.

It is for these reasons that I would respectfully disagree with the Senator from Michigan and support the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may require.

I want to answer a few points raised by the Senator from Michigan. He pointed out that we would be allowing organizations such as milk co-ops to double the contribution which they can now make under the bill. To be sure, those co-ops have come under some surveillance in the recent past, and some suspicions have been cast on those particular organizations, but the same thing is true of some individuals. A husband and wife can give $6,000, and I suppose there are husbands and wives that might come under some suspicion as to what motivated them to make such a contribution.

Certainly, in this bill, we cannot pretend to examine every potential contributor and say that only those who do not come under suspicion may make contributions and those who are under suspicion may not do so. That is a matter for the individual candidate to judge for himself when he chooses to accept such a contribution.

Also, I should like to mention that the amount involved is not the point at issue there. The reason for the amendment is to do equity and justice to organizations. Under the terms of the bill itself, an individual can give $3,000 and a husband and wife can give $6,000, even though all the money is coming from the husband.

This simply puts large organizations which have many members—and I have already cited two such organizations—the Committee for an Effective Congress and the Americans for Conservative Action, which have 80,000 and 70,000 members respectively—on the same basis for making contributions as a husband and wife.

Many people throughout this Nation have a propensity to participate in politics. They make contributions to various candidates. Many people throughout the country, from Maine to Hawaii, are interested in knowing the composition of the House of Representatives and the composition of the Senate. They are not necessarily interested only in the candidates who are running in their respective States. Organizations serve as the vehicle for these people to make contributions to those candidates throughout the country who represent their ideology or philosophy. Individuals who may be able to contribute only $5 to $100 each, and who do not have access to information about all the candidates running for office are justified, I think, in relying on the organizations which give them leadership and direction about where to make their contributions.

The point was made by the Senator from Michigan that the people do not necessarily know where their contributions are going. Certainly they know the purpose of the organizations to which they are making contributions. I do not know of any organization that deceives its supporters into believing the contribution will be used otherwise than in a way that will be consistent with what the organization holds itself out to be.

In conclusion, let me say that the amendment merely puts an organization on a more equitable basis than the basis on which it will be if the bill passes in its present state.

Mr. President, I urge Senators to support this amendment.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, how much time remains on this side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUDDLESTON). Fifteen minutes remain.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, of course, I respect the views of the distinguished Senator from Maine. I realize there is some points to what he says, but I do not find his argument weighty enough to convince me that I should support his amendment.

I take issue, particularly, with the thrust of that part of his argument which appeared to condone the delegation by individuals to special interest groups of their citizenship responsibilities.

Of course, there is an infinite number of special interest groups—many of them are interested in only one particular issue. For example, I think of the Right to Work Organization, which is interested in nothing except the one issue of so-called right-to-work legislation. The organization collects funds and provides support for candidates needless to say, it hopes—or expects—that those candidates will vote right on their particular issue.

I do not wish to criticize the right-to-work organization. It is no different than hundreds of other one-issue special interest groups.

I do not believe it serves the national interest when candidates are elected to Congress because of funds supplied by special-interest, pressure groups. Such groups are not interested in the complete record of the candidate. The one-issue special-interest group cares only about the position of the candidate on its issue.

Such an organization will support or work to defeat a candidate solely on the basis of the candidate's views on that one issue.

If the limit on such support were increased as proposed by this amendment, the influence of such groups would be doubled as compared with the pending bill.

I urge the defeat of this amendment.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I yield such time as he may need to the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. ABOUREZK).

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, we must work to create an electoral system where Americans by the tens of millions can and will actively participate. This ultimately is the greatest safeguard of our constitutional freedoms.

In recent years, organizations ranging from the conservative Americans for Constitutional Action to the liberal National Committee for an Effective Congress and the League of Conservation Voters have been working vigorously to achieve more active participation in politics. Many of these organizations have been in the forefront of the fight for meaningful reform of the electoral process. At the same time they have actively solicited tens of thousands of donations from citizens to be pooled together and contributed to congressional candidates.

As the Federal Elections Campaign Act is now written, these groups will be severely limited. Their pooled contributions will be treated the same as individual contributions. The Council for a Liveable World, for example, might get contributions from 500 citizens average $20 for a total of $10,000. The Council might want to give that money to one progressive candidate but it would be allowed to give only $3,000. However, Mr. and Mrs. Clement Stone, if they wanted to, and I imagine they would want to, could give $6,000 to a special-interest opponent. And all the little Stones could each give $3,000 as well.

The New York Times looked at this situation earlier this month and editorialized that:

> Surely such organizations, whatever their political complexion, can be allowed to contribute three or four times the amount of a single person without distorting the will of the electorate.

Senator HATHAWAY in his amendment asks that such organizations be allowed to contribute only twice that of an individual.

I support Senator HATHAWAY's amendment. It is a reasonable compromise. It is a compromise that will be unpalatable to the large corporate interests, each of whom would like to give their $3,000 contributions in splendid isolation. But it is a compromise that will work to expand and broaden the political process, not to narrow it.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes on the bill

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no time on the bill.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield the Senator 5 minutes.

Mr. COOK. First of all, Mr. President, we are talking about a matter of semantics, and I hope it does not get down to an argument between whether C. Clement Stone and his wife give $6,000 or the Committee for an Effective Congress can give only $3,000. We are debating the whole issue that we really picked a figure with no study as to how we got to that figure. Therefore, any place we go from that particular figure to another particular figure is just a matter of making a determination as to whether we agree or do not agree.

Another point I should like to make is that we discussed this business of whether it is or is not a means by which we can launder funds. Obviously, one can launder funds at $3,000 contributions as well as at $6,000 contributions. But this bill depends on the people of the United States to have a basic concept of what the law is and whether they are willing to live by the law or whether they are willing to break the law.

I suggest to the Senator from Michigan that under this act, if we pass it relatively in the form it is in, we provide that one cannot do what the Senator has suggested. I read to him from page 76, paragraph (c):

So the only point we have to raise here, if we believe that in the operation of the political process it is our intention to abide by the law, is that if one wishes to give $3,000 and say, "Will you please give it to the Senator from Maine, and that is whom I want it to go for," under the law, the organization that receives the $3,000, and is a conduit to get it to the Senator from Maine, has to report where it came from, and that it was instructed to pass it on.

The point I really think we are getting down to is not a point between C. Clement Stone and the Committee for an Effective Congress, but an honest-to-goodness point. I think the only point that has merit is whether a husband and wife who have substantial assets can give to one candidate $6,000 and someone who has substantial assets and gives a facility or a lobbying group such as the Committee for an Effective Congress, the Committee for a Federal World, or the Committee for a Cleaner Environment, can give only $3,000 because they cannot marry another committee.

I think that is the issue before us, and that is the issue on which we have to make a determination when we vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ABOUREZK). Who yields time?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, how much time remains on this side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 6 minutes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I do not take issue with the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. COOK. I thank the Senator for the time.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I am pleased that the language to which he refers is in the bill, and it will be helpful. It is an important step in the right direction.

However, I still believe that the basic question is the one I raised at the outset of my presentation—that is whether the citizenship responsibility should be delegated by individual citizens to special interest groups.

I find it interesting and somewhat ironic that some of the organizations that are the loudest in their calls for reform, including ceilings on contributions and expenditures, are in the forefront of support for weakening amendments such as the one pending now. The New York Times, which frequently calls for election reform, is unrealistic when it contends that special interest groups could give 3 or 4 times as much as the bill provides without influencing or affecting elections. That is absolutely absurd as it would apply to House races. If the limit were to be three or four times what it is in the bill, then a special interest group could, in effect, provide the major portion of the funds on which a candidate would run for the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, the arguments have been presented; and so far as I am concerned, I am willing to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the junior Senator from Kentucky.

Mr GRIFFIN. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I thank the distinguished Senator for yielding.

Mr. President, I have a couple of points to make in support of this amendment.

It has been a long accepted concept in this country—and indeed a tradition—that citizens are able to join other citizens of like philosophy, of like purposes or objectives, so that their combined force may have a combined impact greater than the individual would have himself.

I would think that a person who has only a few dollars to contribute to a candidate of his choice must feel somewhat helpless as he considers what impact his contribution might make or what influence he may have, when he considers that other individuals can contribute $3,000 or, in the case of a married couple, $6,000.

provide some impact, if they have $50,000, $100,000, or whatever, comparable to a couple. It is reasonable to assume that the interest of two individuals will be somewhat more narrow in relation to the interest of the general public and the interest of some 50,000 or 60,000 people who join together. So it does not seem unreasonable that this kind of organization would receive the same treatment as a couple who happen to be married, which would represent the interests of only two individuals.

I support the amendment. I believe with the restrictions it would be subject to very little abuse. It would be a contribution to those who like to participate and like to know their views are being felt by joining an organization, knowing that the organization might have some impact, at least as much as a couple, on the outcome of a race in which they are interested because they support a candidate.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, it should be recognized that a $3,000 contribution for some individuals means no more than a $5 contribution for other individuals.

But more important, I believe, is the fact no automatic implication is attached to individual's contribution under normal circumstances.

On the other hand, when a special interest group, organized to promote particular issues, makes a contribution, there is no question as to what the motive and purpose of that special interest group. No one would doubt what the purpose or motive is when a milk fund, for example, makes its contributions.

I think the American people understand this distinction very well. They do not want the Congress to go in the direction of this amendment. They expect more from this Congress in terms of campaign financing reform.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, how much time is remaining to both sides?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has 1 minute remaining and the Senator from Maine has 14 minutes remaining.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I just want to point out in conclusion that as far as the amount involved is concerned, the President advocated a $15,000 limitation, at least with respect to Presidential campaigns. It seems to me the $3,000 for individuals and $6,000 for a group limitation, being considerably below the amount recommended by the President, is realistic. I do not believe that the distinction which was being made by the distinguished Senator from Michigan with respect to special interest groups can be made between the groups and a married couple. A married couple that is able to contribute $6,000 to a candidate is just as apt to have a special interest as a special interest group.

I do not think we can make a legislative decision about whether a special interest group, couple, or individual should or should not make a contribution.

The Senator from Michigan mentioned earlier in his remarks that there are constitutional problems involved. Certainly, we do not want to inhibit any person or group in making a contribution; whether an individual is interested in all legislation before Congress or only in one piece of legislation, he or a group to which he belongs should be able to make a contribution. And as I have said, a group should be able to make the same contribution as a married couple.

Mr. President, I know of no reason not to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield back the time on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maine. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE), and the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. WILLIAMS) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) would vote "yea."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. BEALL), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS), and the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCHWEIKER) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) is absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN) is absent due to illness in the family.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 42, as follows:

So Mr. HATHAWAY's amendment (No. 1082) was agreed to.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendment was areed to.

Mr. COOK. I move to lay that notice on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2747) to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to increase the minimum wage rate under that act, to expand the coverage of the act, and for other purposes.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, before the Senator from Alabama is recognized, I should like to make a request. I ask unanimous consent that following the disposition of the amendment to be offered by the Senator from Alabama there be a 30-minute limitation on the Bentsen amendment, which is next in order, the time to be equally divided between the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN) and the manager of the bill (Mr. CANNON); and that in addition there be a 10-minute limitation on an amendment to be offered to the amendment, to be divided between the sponsor of the amendment, the distinguished Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), and the acting Republican leader, the distinguished Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is this an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Thirty minutes and 10 minutes, the 10 minutes to be on the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I now ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, while a large number of Senators are in the Chamber, would the distinguished majority leader allow me to ask unanimous consent that it be in order to ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment to the amendment, with the understanding that if the amendment is accepted, the order for the yeas and nays will be withdrawn?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order for me to ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator asking that it be in order to ask for the yeas and nays at this time?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator describe his amendment? Or is his request merely to ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That it be in order to order the yeas and nays at this time. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I now ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1110

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Alabama is recognized to call up his amendment No. 1110, which will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 4, line 21, immediately after "(C)", insert "and".

On page 4, line 24, beginning with "and (D)", strike out through line 2 on page 5 and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon.

On page 7, line 9, immediately after the semicolon, insert "or".

On page 7, line 17, strike out the semicolon and "or" and insert in lieu thereof a period.

On page 8, beginning with line 3, strike out through line 7.

On page 9, line 7, strike out "for nomination for".

On page 9, line 8, immediately after the comma, insert "the candidate and his authorized committees must have received contributions for his general election campaign in a total amount of more than $250,000 and".

On page 9, line 12, strike out "primary" and insert in lieu thereof "general".

On page 18, line 4, strike out "(h)" and insert in lieu thereof "(g)".

On page 72, between lines 3 and 4, insert the following:

"(2)(A) Except to the extent such amounts are changed under section 504(e)(2) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, no candidate for nomination for election to the office of President may make expenditures in connection with his primary election campaign in any State in which he is a candidate in such an election in excess of the greater of—

"(i) 20 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under section 504(f) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971) of that State, or

"(ii) $250,000.

"(B) Notwithstanding the provisions of subparagraph (A), no such candidate may make expenditures throughout the United States in connection with his campaign for that nomination in excess of an amount equal to 10 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States. For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'United States' means the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands and any area from which a delegate to the national nominating convention of a political party is selected.

"(C) The Commission shall prescribe regulations under which any expenditure by a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President for use in two or more States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State under subparagraph (A) based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.".

On page 72, line 4, strike out "(2)" and insert in lieu thereof "(3)".

On page 72, line 7, strike out "(3)" and insert in lieu thereof "(4)".

On page 72, line 12, strike out "(4)" and insert in lieu thereof "(5)".

On page 72, line 21, strike out "(5)" and insert in lieu thereof "(6)".

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order at this time to ask for the yeas and nays on the third Allen amendment, on which there is a limitation of 30 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I now ask for the yeas and nays on the third Allen amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 6 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, this amendment removes from the bill, and therefore from the Federal subsidy, the Presidential nomination contest. It would leave the House and Senate primaries and general elections, and the general election for the Presidency, but would take out from under the bill the contest for the nominations for President and Vice President of the two major parties. The bill as it now stands would provide for matching campaign contributions of up to $250, for up to a total of some $7.5 million for every candidate for the nomination of the two major parties who was able to raise $250,000.

I do not believe that the taxpayers of Nation want to subsidize the campaign, not for the Presidential election, which is already provided for in the checkoff and provided for in other portions of the bill, but to give every candidate for the nomination of the Republican Party and every candidate for the nomination of the Democratic Party up to $7.5 million toward his campaign. I thought the idea was to reduce the amount of expenditures in primaries and in general elections.

But far from doing that, I would think $7.5 million is as much as a person could raise in a race for the Presidential nomination. Then this measure would provide for the Government, the taxpayers, putting in icing of $7.5 million on the amount that the candidate raises. So this amendment would simply take out from under the bill the Presidential nomination contests.

I do not think it is right to make available to Governor Rockefeller, for example, $7.5 million, to Governor Reagan $7.5 million, to Governor Connally $7.5 million, or, to bring it a little closer to home, to the distinguished Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY) or the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) or the distinguished Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN). I do not feel that the taxpayers should pay $7.5 million to the Presidential candidacies of these various individuals who want to run for President.

Let them run for President; that is fine. I wish them all well. Though they all cannot be nominated, I wish them well; but I do not think the taxpayers should have to foot the bill for half of their expenditures. I think there are a great many more causes that should have priority over subsidizing the races of candidates for the Presidential nomination.

For another thing, Mr. President, this bill does not set any limit on the Presidential race for which matching is made available. If a fellow said, "I do not want to run in 1976, but I do want to run in 1980, or 1984, or 1988," well, he could be getting Uncle Sam to finance his campaign all through that period.

Also, looking backward, there is no starting point, no cutoff time, back of which matching contributions may not be made. So it appears, and the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island in a previous colloquy on this issue so stated, that there is no cutoff time back of which contributions could not be received. If a man has been running for the Presidency for several years, would those contributions be matchable? As I read the bill, all he would have to do is get his list of contributors, pick up a matching check, and go on his merry way soliciting contributions and having them matched by the Government.

I do not believe this is election reform, Mr. President. I think we ought to limit the amount that can be spent, but keep it in the private sector, demanding strict reporting, strict disclosure of contributions and expenditures, but not just handing the bill to the taxpayer.

That is what this amendment would seek to do in taking from under the provisions of the bill the Presidential primary contests which we see every 4 years, attended with a lot of hoopla and various political goings on of that sort.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield myself 1 additional minute.

I do not believe it is in the public interest to make $7.5 million available to some 15 or 20 candidates for the Presidency, just to get out and waste the taxpayers' money in that fashion.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may require. This is just another attack on the whole concept of public financing. The Senate has voted against the distinguished Senator's proposal to eliminate public financing from the bill. Since that time, he has come up with another amendment that would have eliminated public financing for congressional races, and the Senate has decided against him on that issue. Now, this is the only remaining part of the elimination of public financing. If you vote to eliminate the Presidential race, you are simply voting piecemeal on the issues that are in the bill under the concept of public financing.

If Senators are for public financing, they should vote against this amendment. If they are not, then they should vote for the amendment, because that would strike out public financing on this portion of the bill.

The Senator has made the statement that a number of people could come in and, in effect, raid the Public Treasury for campaign funds. But the requirements in the bill are such that a person has to have demonstrated widespread public support before he is eligible. So it does not mean that everyone who wanted to run for President would be entitled to get matching funds out of the Treasury. They must have demonstrated support to the levels set forth in the bill before they would be eligible for the matching funds contribution, and I might say that they could only receive that money to the extent that the funds are available as provided in the bill in the separate fund, or unless Congress appropriated them. So it in no wise permits someone to come in and raid the Treasury.

But I say again in conclusion, Mr. President—and then I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time—that the issue is very simple. The Senate voted on the issue last fall, and instructed us to come back with a proposal for public financing. This we did. There was a vote to strike out public financing. That was defeated. There was a vote to strike out public financing for candidates for Congress. That was defeated. The only other element in the bill is public financing for candidates for the Presidential nomination, and that is covered by this amendment. I urge the Senate to reject the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN. I am sure that the Senator understands that the amendment is not directed at the Presidential general election; it has to do only with the nominating process.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that the amendment relates only to the primary portion, which does have the triggering factor that the candidate must have demonstrated widespread support.

Mr. ALLEN. He could get that all in one State, could he not, under the provisions of the bill? So it would not have to be really very widespread.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I think he would have a very difficult time raising that kind of money in one State. That would be my own reaction, that he would have a difficult time meeting the triggering factor in only one State, though it might be possible.

Mr. ALLEN. But I guess one could expect that in California, for a candidate to get up to some $700,000 in one State, in $100 dollar contributions, or $250,000 in $250 contributions in Presidential nomination contests.

Mr. CANNON. Well, the triggering factor in the State of California provides a maximum limit as well as the minimum.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, but he could get——

Mr. CANNON. The Senate candidates, if they triggered in California, would raise only $125,000.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes. But $700,000 would be available to him on a matching basis, would it not?

Mr. CANNON. That is correct, provided he met the triggering factor.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, so if he could raise $700,000 in $100 contributions in one State, it would certainly seem likely that a Presidential candidate of not too much stature could raise $250,000 in $250 contributions in one State.

The point I was making was that I was taking mild exception to the Senator's statement that it required widespread support. But the support could come from one State or from the District of Columbia.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator is correct. It could come from one State, provided he raised that triggering amount from one State.

Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. LONG. How many States did the Senator wish a person to raise money in?

Mr. ALLEN. I rather imagine it will be adopted—I am not absolutely sure—because I have not had too much success with my amendments—but I have an amendment that would require that the $250,000 triggering amount would have to be raised with $2,500 contributions from at least 40 States to show widespread support.

Mr. LONG. It would seem to me that if a man had support in 10 States that should be enough.

Mr. ALLEN. Take a man like the head of Common Cause, Mr. Gardner, he could raise the $250,000 without too much trouble. He seems to be able to raise larger amounts than that. That would entitle him to start dipping into the Public Treasury, ostensibly to run for President, if he has the contributions. I do not feel that we should encourage everyone who has the ability to raise $250,000 from getting that matched and getting subsequent contributions matched on an equal basis out of the Federal Treasury up to a limit of $7.5 million in matching funds. I do not believe that is what we want to do with the taxpayers' money.

Mr. LONG. I find myself thinking along the same lines as the Senator, that any Senator from a large State, a personable Senator from a large State, say, who could raise a quarter of a million dollars easily—even an average size State—I think that the man potentially could raise that much money in his own State if the people thought he had the slightest chance. So that it would seem appropriate he should have to demonstrate that he could raise a substantial portion—maybe $100,000 or $150,000—to indicate that he was not purely a candidate of his own constituency.

Mr. ALLEN. I have an amendment to offer later on which would carry that into effect.

Mr. LONG. I thank the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCLURE). All time on this amendment has now been yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) No. 1110.

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. ERVIN), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. McGEE), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE), and the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. WILLIAMS) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE), and the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. McGEE) would vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. BEALL), and the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCHWEIKER) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) is absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN) is absent due to illness in the family.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) would vote "nay."

On this vote, the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN) is paired with the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE).

If present and voting, the Senator from Vermont would vote "yea" and the Senator from Minnesota would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 53, as follows:

So Mr. ALLEN's amendment (No. 1110) was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Hackney, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 2174) to amend certain provisions of law defining widow and widower under the civil service retirement system, and for other purposes.

The Vice President subsequently signed the enrolled bill.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Ric Glaub, a member of my staff, be accorded the privilege of the floor during the debate on this measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Under the previous order, the pending business is the amendment of the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), amendment No. 1083. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 76, between lines 2 and 3, insert the following:

"(2)(A) No candidate may knowingly solicit or accept a contribution for his campaign—

"(i) from a foreign national, or

"(ii) which is made in violation of section 613 of this title.

"(B) For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'foreign national' means—

"(i) a 'foreign principal' as that term is defined in section 611(b) of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, as amended, other than a person who is a citizen of the United States; or

"(ii) an individual who is not a citizen of the United States and who is not lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as defined in section 101(a)(20) of the Immigration and Nationality Act.".

On page 76, line 3, strike out "(2)" and insert in lieu thereof "(3)".

On page 76, line 6, immediately after "(1)", insert "or (2)".

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, my amendment is very simple. The amendment would ban the contributions of foreign nationals to campaign funds in American political campaigns. The amendment specifically excludes resident immigrants living in this country. It in no way stops the contributions of American nationals living overseas who are U.S. citizens. They would be able to contribute to American political campaigns.

Mr. President, I yield myself 7 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, all of us have heard the stories, I am sure, in reecnt months of the enormous amounts of money contributed in the last political campaign by foreign nationals. We have heard of the hundreds of thousands of dollars sloshing around from one country to another, going through foreign banks, being laundered through foreign banks; and we have heard allegations of concessions being made by the Government to foreign contributors. I do not know whether those allegations are true or not. I am not trying to prejudge them. That would be up to the courts to determine. I am saying that contributions by foreigners are wrong, and they have no place in the American political system. The law is ambiguous and confusing. The Department of Justice was asked to make an interpretation. Congress thought it had taken care of the matter long ago, but the Department of Justice said that the law, when it refers to foreign principals, applied only to those who had agents within this country. Therefore, this left a giant loophole for contributions to be made by foreign individuals. It allowed huge sums to flow into the coffers of American political candidates in 1972 and it is essential that we have legislation to clarify the situation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from L. Fred Thompson, Director of the Office of Federal Elections at the General Accounting Office, addressed to me, wherein he indorses the enactment of clarifying legislation to ban contributions by foreign nations.

There being no objection, the letter was odered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE,
Washington, D.C., March 26, 1974.

Hon. LLOYD BENTSEN,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR BENTSEN: Through recent informal contacts with a member of your staff we have learned of your interest in offering a floor amendment to S. 3044, 93rd Congress, 2d Session, which would clarify Congress' intent regarding section 613 of Title 18, United States Code.

This provision prohibits political contributions by any agent of a foreign principal and also prohibits the solicitations, acceptance, or receipt of any such contribution from any agent of a foreign principal or from the foreign principal directly. The responsibility for enforcing 18 U.S.C. 613 rests with the Attorney General of the United States.

In the course of our administration of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, as the supervisory officer responsible for presidential campaigns, we made several referrals of apparent instances of foreign contributions to the Attorney General. We have been advised by the Department of Justice that the term "foreign principal" as used in section 613 does not have the same meaning as "foreign national." The Department's view is that to be a foreign principal within the meaning of section 613 it is essential to have an agent acting or operating within the United States. Therefore, in the opinion of the Department, the mere acceptance of a political contribution from a "foreign national" without evidence to establish that such foreign national is a "foreign principal" having an agent within the United States would not constitute a violation of the statute.

In view of the statutory interpretation placed on the existing law by the Department of Justice, it is our opinion that to prohibit foreign contributions to U.S. political campaigns the statute should be amended to expressly bar a candidate, or an officer, employee, or agent of a political committee, or any person acting on behalf of any such candidate or political committee from knowingly soliciting, accepting, or receiving any contribution from any "foreign national." For this purpose the term "foreign national" should be defined to include:

(1) any person who is a "foreign principal" or an "agent of a foreign principal" as presently defined in 18 U.S.C. 613;

(2) any individual who is neither a citizen nor a permanent resident of the United States; and

(3) any partnership, association, corporation, organization, or other combination of persons organized under the laws of or having its principal place of business in a foreign country.

In testimony last June before the Senate Rules and Administration Committee, Phillip S. Hughes, who was then Director of the Office of Federal Elections, stated his view that restrictions should be placed on political contributions by foreign nationals and, at the very least, that Congress should clarify what it intended to prohibit when it enacted 18 U.S.C. 613. (See Hearings before the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration on S. 372 and other Federal election reform bills, 93rd Cong., 1st sess. 262–264.) I believe that Mr. Hughes' testimony at that time continues to represent the position of this office, as well as the Comptroller General, on the issue of political contributions by foreign nationals.

We endorse your efforts to have the Senate consider an appropriate amendment to 18 U.S.C. 613 at the time it begins floor debate on S. 3044. We will be pleased to provide further information or assistance on this subject if you desire.

Sincerely yours,

L. FRED THOMPSON,
Director.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I wish to point out that last June, in testimony before the Committee on Rules and Administration, Mr. Phillip Hughes, who was then Director of the Office of Federal Elections, stated his views that restrictions should be placed on political contributions by foreign nationals.

President Nixon as well in his recent message on campaign financing and the reform of campaign financing called for a ban on contributions by foreign nationals.

My amendment would accomplish that good by making clear that the present ban on contributions by foreign principals extends to foreign nationals as well; and without this ban American elections will continue to be influenced by contributions of foreign nationals.

I do not think foreign nationals have any business in our political campaigns. They cannot vote in our elections so why should we allow them to finance our elections? Their loyalties lie elsewhere; they lie with their own countries and their own governments.

Many in this country have expressed concern over the inroads of foreign investment in this country, over the attempts by foreigners to control U.S. business. Is it not even more important to try to stop some of these foreigners from trying to control our politics? I think this limitation would accomplish that purpose.

One additional point I should like to mention relates to foreign citizens living in the United States as resident immigrants. My amendment would exempt foreigners with resident immigrant status from the ban on contributions by foreigners. There are many resident immigarnts in the United States who have lived here for years and who spend most of their adult lives in this country; they pay American taxes and for all intents and purposes are citizens of the United States except perhaps in the strictest legal sense of the word. These individuals should not be precluded from contributing to the candidate of their choice under the limitations of $3,000 in S. 3044 as well as S. 372 which passed the Senate last summer.

Let me say a word about implementation of the amendment. The responsibility will be placed on the candidate or the committee established on behalf of the candidate to refuse donations proferred by foreigners. Some will say that this places an unnecessary burden on the candidate or his committee. I would point out that present disclosure and reporting laws require the name of the donor, his mailing address, occupation and principal place of business on all contributions over $10. It will then be up to the committee or the candidate receiving a donation from abroad to refuse the contribution coming from a foreigner. Thus there is no additional recordkeeping requirement. Having to determine whether a contribution coming from abroad comes from a foreign national or from an American citizen living abroad may be an inconvenience but it is minor compared to the loophole it closes.

I know the amendment is not foolproof. There are ways to get around just about every campaign finance measure we bring about but my amendment goes a long way toward getting at the problem.

I repeat that the principle of my amendment has the support of President Nixon. It is my understanding that the Senate Watergate Committee is digging into contributions by foreign nationals and its final report will probably suggest reforms on the present status of the statutes pertaining to foreign contributions.

American political campaigns should be for Americans and a large loophole would be closed by my amendment. I urge the Senate to adopt the amendment.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for 3 minutes?

Mr. BENTSEN. I am delighted to yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, first I would like to have the Senator from Texas give me the privilege of being a cosponsor of the amendment. I ask unanimous consent that I may be added as a cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Texas raises an interesting point and we should look at it in reverse. Let us look at the mandate of Congress. Let us look at our creation of the special subcommittee in the Committee on Foreign Relations to investigate the significance of the corporate conglomerate on international affairs. Let us look at the influence that American corporations attempt to exert on other governments. Let us look at it from the standpoint that we in this country are absolutely rather chagrined, and sometimes horrified, at the extent of America's influence on foreign governments. There are attempts to change governments; there are attempts to bolster a particular candidate at a time the time of an election; and there is the situation we have seen in several situations in South America. Congress is investigating a matter under the leadership of the distinguished Senator from Idaho (Mr. (CHURCH) in regard to Chile.

I would say that the significance of all of this is that the United States and those influences in the United States that are of worldwide significance should frankly mind their own business when it comes to the political significance of other countries. In effect, we are saying that those people abroad should mind their own business when it comes to making contributions to political campaigns in the United States.

Am I correct in my basic philosophy?

Mr. BENTSEN. I agree wholeheartedly with the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. COOK. May I ask the Senator a question? I think this is important. In no way is the Senator from Texas excluding an American national who finds himself by reason of his corporate employment living in Japan, Australia, or anywhere else in the world. Is he excluding that individual from writing his individual check and sending it to a political organization of his choice in the United States in any election?

Mr. BENTSEN. In no way is he precluded from that. He is an American citizen living overseas and he can participate. The American political process should be left to American nationals.

Mr. COOK. I do not think the public knows, and it should be in the RECORD, that in the vicinity of 2 million Americans, who by reason of employment, study, and many, many other situations existing in the commercial world, are located overseas and live there for long periods of time. They are American citizens; their children are American citizens. They maintain voting facilities. The Voting Rights Act of 1965 broadened that ability for American nationals who live overseas to vote.

In no way is the Senator from Texas saying that these people are in any way impeded in making a contribution to the political process in their country.

Mr. BENTSEN. The Senator from Kentucky is absolutely right.

Mr. COOK. I thank the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. I have no quarrel with the basic purpose of this amendment, which is directed toward contributions from abroad to influence political campaigns, but I think it should properly be pointed out that last year in this country there were, as aliens lawfully here, 4,643,457 people. That is a pretty substantial number of people who were here properly in this country, and we permit them to come here for many things other than to come here to be residents.

So I want to be sure the Senator knows exactly what he is doing, because a substantial number of those people are in his own State of Texas, who are lawfully in this country, who are not here as permanent residents, and the only people who would be excluded from this provision are people who are here as permanent residents.

I may say the Immigration people themselves say there is some question in their minds as to the propriety of the language in this particular case. I have no particular brief with it, but I know last year there were 4,633,457 registered aliens in this country. Those people were here in this country lawfully, but by this amendment the Senator is going to preclude many of those people from participating in the elective process by making contributions, and he is also going to impose on the candidate the question of whether he knew or ought to have known that those people were not properly admitted here for permanent residence at the time they made contributions to his campaign. I would venture to say that a mailing campaign that was put out would result in that person's mail going to hundreds of people in his own State, including the great State of Texas, who would not be eligible to make contributions under this particular amendment, if it is adopted.

I simply want to point that out so Senators will know what they are doing.

As one of my distinguished colleagues pointed out a few minutes ago, we have to get money from somewhere for these campaigns. I remember an old song from a few years ago that was titled "Pennies From Heaven." I am sure we realize that money does not come from heaven to carry out political campaigns.

So, by the Senator's excluding contributions from people who are lawfully in this country, but who are not here as permanent residents, he is creating an undue and an unnecessary burden on the persons who are running for office as well as the persons who are here in this country, and properly so, who would be affected by the amendment.

As I said initially, I support the thrust or the purpose for which the amendment was originally drawn and intended, but I think, frankly, that it goes further than would be intended by Members of this body if they were here to hear the discussion on it. I am sure it would impose some undue burdens on any person who might run for political office, as well as for certain people who are properly here.

If the Senator were to restrict the amendment to money coming from abroad, from foreign nationals abroad, or foreign nationals living abroad, or foreign contributions of any sort, I would completely agree with him, because I think that is not correct.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, this amendment was carefully drawn to try to exclude certain people who might be legally in this country passing through here as tourists. I do not think they have any legitimate role to play in the political process of this country, nor do illegal aliens in this country. That privilege to contribute ought to be limited to U.S. citizens and to those who have indicated their intention to live here, are here legally, and are permanent residents. Those people would be and should be allowed to make political contributions in this country.

I think one statement ought to be made in response to the comment made by the Senator from Nevada. It has been stated that no candidate may knowingly solicit or accept such contributions, so he must knowingly have done it in order to be in violation.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BENTSEN. I cannot yield with the limited time I have.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Can I have 2 minutes for a question?

Mr. CANNON. I yield 2 minutes.

Mr. GOLDWATER. How would this affect a person living in Mexico who is an American, working there, who votes by absentee ballot, who has an account in a Mexican bank, with no checking account in an American bank?

Mr. BENTSEN. This amendment does not affect that. If he is an American national living overseas in any foreign country he is allowed to contribute.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Even if the draft is made on a foreign bank?

Mr. BENTSEN. Yes, the distinguished Senator from Michigan has something on that. My amendment does not affect it.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, may I say to the Senator from Arizona that we will face the very situation he is talking about with the submission of the amendment by the Senator from Michigan. This is not a matter which involves the present amendment in its present form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Texas that, if he is through with the basic debate on his amendment, he yield back his time——

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nevada is prepared to yield back his time, I am prepared to yield back my time.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas accept a suggestion? It appears there may be more controversy to my amendment to the Senator's amendment than anticipated. We had only 5 minutes on a side. Perhaps we could make it 10 minutes on a side and use it from the time left on his amendment.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nevada is prepared to yield back his time for that purpose, I am.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we yield back the time on this amendment and that whatever time is left be added to the 5 minutes to a side on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are exactly 11 minutes remaining on this amendment.

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk in the nature of a substitute, which is a modified version of my printed amendment No. 1087.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment is as follows:

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted by amdt. No. 1083 insert the following:

"PROHIBITION OF CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES BY FOREIGN INDIVIDUALS

"SEC. 304. Section 613 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

"(a) by adding to the section caption the following: 'or drawn on foreign banks';

"(b) by inserting immediately before 'Whoever' at the beginning of the first paragraph the following: '(a)'; and

"(c) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"'(b) No person may make a contribution in the form of a written instrument drawn on a foreign bank. Violation of the provision of this subsection is punishable by a fine not to exceed $5,000, imprisonment not to exceed five years, or both.'."

On page 71, line 16, strike out "304." and insert in lieu thereof "305.".

On page 76, between lines 2 and 2, insert the following new paragraph:

"(2) No candidate may knowingly solicit or accept a contribution for his campaign—

"(A) from any person who—

"(i) is not a citizen of the United States, and

"(ii) is not lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as defined in section 101 (a) (20) of the Immigration and Nationality Act; or

"(B) which is made in violation of section 613 of this title.".

On page 76, line 3, strike out "(2)" and insert in lieu thereof "(3)".

On page 76, line 6, immediately after "(1)", insert "or (2)".

On page 78, line 19, immediately after "611,", insert "613,".

On page 78, line 87, strike out "by adding at the end" and insert in lieu thereof "by striking out the item relating to section 613 and inserting in lieu".

On page 78, below line 22, immediately above the item relating to section 614, insert the following:

"613. Contributions by agents of foreign principals or drawn on foreign banks.".

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, at the outset, I want to say that I strongly support the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN). It is almost identical to a portion of my amendment 1087, which I had submitted for printing. I checked with the Parliamentarian as to the best way to present my version, and he suggested that the best way would be in the form of a substitute.

The major portion of my amendment is identical in purpose to the amendment of the Senator from Texas in that it prohibits contributions to compaigns by foreigners and by aliens who have not been admitted for permanent residence in the United States.

I agree with him that, by and large, our political process should be in the hands of those who are citizens and have the right to vote. Actually, our amendment does not really close it up that much. It acknowledges and permits contributions by those who have been admitted for permanent residence. So even though they do not have the right to vote in that instance, they would have the right to make financial contributions.

But my amendment goes further. It also prohibits a contribution in the form of a check written on a foreign bank. The distinguished Senator from Texas, in his argument for his amendment, referred to foreign banks. I would agree with the concern that he expressed by that reference. However, the amendment as he has presented it does not touch the matter of foreign banks.

I realize that some persons will make the argument that it is going to be inconvenient, particularly for American citizens who live abroad, if they cannot write their checks on foreign banks. However, I think that it is also important to underscore the fact that obviously U.S. law does not reach and cannot control foreign banks. We cannot, by the court process of the United States, investigate a foreign bank. We cannot examine its accounts. We cannot have access to its checks.

Some of the stories of abuse that we have been exposed to have involved

Mexican banks and other foreign banks. They have involved unnumbered accounts in Swiss banks.

It seems to me that if we really want to do something about this problem, we should take this additional step and also provide that a foreign bank cannot be used as a means of funneling money into a campaign in the United States. I know that all Americans who live overseas do not have checking accounts in U.S. banks, but I assume that most of them do. If they do not, they might in some other way establish an account in a U.S. bank. I think the matter of being able to investigate, outweighs the disadvantages which would accrue.

That is the argument pure and simple. I think this would be an improvement of the amendment of the Senator from Texas. Perhaps he might want to accept it. If he does, and there is no opposition, we could then go to a vote on his amendment as amended.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I would hope that the Senator from Texas will not agree to take that language as an amendment to his amendment.

Last year I had occasion, while I was in Mexico—as a matter of fact, as a member of the Mexican-American Interparliamentary Meeting—to go to the University of Guadlajara, I spoke to a number of American students. I was amazed to learn that there is a retirement community of American citizens there. They have taken up residence there, having retired on social security. It has not been so long ago that all of us had occasion to view, on television, retirees in Spain and Ireland. Those people are living in those countries because it is cheaper to live there than in the United States. They do not have two checking accounts. They have bank accounts in the country in which they are now residing as American citizens. They do not have an account in the First National Bank of Dallas and also one in the Bank of Guadlajara. They cannot afford it. They have one account.

I agree with the Senator from Michigan that we do have a problem with major contributions. We do have problems with substantial checks. I am quite sure we will not receive a great many contributions from Americans who live throughout the world by reason of the advantages of their retirement situations. But it would be a terrible crime to deny them the opportunity if, in fact, they want it. It would be a terrible situation for an individual who is retired.

The Guadlajara community is largely a military retirement facility. It would be a shame, for those individuals who send in checks of $5, $10, or $15 as contributions to the political process in their country to be told that they were illegal contributions; to be told that if they wanted to make that kind of small contribution, they would have to open an account in an American bank. Obviously, they would not do that.

There are one or two instances where there have been large contributions that have come from foreign banks that were accepted. But I say that the way to resolve this problem is to be totally and completely open so that we will not deprive thousands of Americans of the right to vote.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I have just been advised that the State Department estimates, from its consuls and other officers abroad, that 1,750,000 U.S. citizens are living abroad, not including the military and not including tourists.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, if we are up to well over 2 million, we cannot say that all of those 2 million are going to write a check for $25 or $50 on, say, a Mexican bank. They may write checks for $5, $10, or $50. But we are really denying the biggest percentage of them of that right, and we cannot resolve a bad situation as it now presents itself.

If we pass this bill—and I say this to the distinguished Senator from Michigan—we will know one thing. If such a check came from an individual, if the candidate accepted it, and the amount of the check was in excess of $1,000, then we would know that the candidate was subject to the penalties of the bill if he accepted it.

It seems to me we should not go totally and completely overboard and destroy the incentive of 2 million Americans who live abroad and want to contribute to the electoral process, Therefore, I strongly oppose the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Michigan.

I thank the Senator from Texas for yielding me this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I shall respond to the argument of the Senator from Kentucky in this way: I recognize that there could be inconvenience for some. I point out, however, that the military personnel who live abroad on U.S. bases would have U.S. banking facilities. Also, in most cases, embassy personnel and diplomatic personnel would have such economic facilities at their disposal.

I am convinced in my own mind that a great many of those persons who live abroad would have access to banks in the United States. I suggest that in any campaign that I know anything about, the percentage of contributions that would come in to a campaign from Americans living abroad, who could draw their checks only on foreign banks, would be small.

It is a question of balance in the situation, and I realize that reasonable men can differ. And if there has been enough evidence of abuse, enough concern aroused so far as the American people are concerned, I believe that it would be a healthy thing to do to make sure that all of the institutions which are handling and accounting for the money are subject to the laws and the jurisdiction of the United States, where the elections are held.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield me 30 seconds?

Mr. BENTSEN. How much time do I have remaining, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 6 minutes remaining.

Mr. BENTSEN. I must say that the Senator from Kentucky has been so persuasive I will yield him 3 additional minutes.

Mr. COOK. I thank the Senator; I will not use nearly all that time.

Mr. President, I have no idea, and I really do not think the Senator from Michigan has any idea, either, how many people in the northern rural areas of our border States between the United States and Canada may find that a Canadian community is much closer to their residence, their farm, or wherever they live along that border line, so that they may well do business with a Canadian bank. There may conceivably be some families up there who have never done business with an American bank, because of its location.

Let us take the plains areas of North Dakota, or the areas of northern Michigan, the Senator's State.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I was going to suggest taking Michigan.

Mr. COOK. I am wondering, really, how many people who live along the common border of the United States and Canada do business and have done business for years and years with Canadian institutions. What we are really saying by this bill is, "If you want to do it, drive the 40 miles to an American bank, open an account, write out your check for $10, and then close your account, because you are not going to deal with that place because of its inconvenience, and go back to your own bank that you are now doing business with."

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, if I may respond most respectfully to a Senator who comes from a State within the very center of the United States, responding as a Senator who does live in a State which borders all along the Canadian line, my amendment does not bother me one bit whatsoever insofar as that concern expressed by the Senator from Kentucky. I concede there might be a few contributions that would not come into the campaign as a result of what I am doing, but I really do not think the mischief or inconvenience is all that great. I do not think there is a lot to be gained in terms of building confidence in our election process and in other respects generally called reform, in taking the step which I have suggested.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield.

Mr. BENTSEN. I can understand the concern of the Senator from Michigan with trying to stop this laundering of accounts through foreign banks, but if you are just trying to do that, and you have someone who is trying to move a large sum of money through a foreign bank, they will be able, as I understand it, to take that to their bank, buy a money order on a U.S. bank, if they wanted to, or buy an American Express check, if they wanted to, and circumvent what the Senator is trying to do very easily.

I think what the Senator's amendment would really do is make it inconvenient for 2 million Americans living overseas who might not want to take the time and trouble to overcome its restrictions by going to a U.S. bank, by trying to prevent some person from trying to resort to skullduggery, when, Mr. President, it would not prevent it, and I maintain that the Senator's amendment would not accomplish what he intends.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I think, on the basis of one or two episodes which have occurred, we are trying to decide whether we should interfere with the balance of all international transactions, and say that as a result, this transaction by an American citizen must have the added restriction that it must be through an American institution.

We are saying that American banks cannot have international relations in their banking departments, which obviously every major bank in the United States has, and they make daily transfers of deposits back and forth. Yet we are saying that this individual who wants to contribute to the American political process as an American citizen will have this added problem that he must face. I must say I really think it is an onerous one, and I again hope that the amendment of the Senator from Michigan will be defeated.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, is there time remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has 2 minutes remaining. The Senator from Texas has 1 minute.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I wish to focus again on the major reason why this amendment should be accepted. That is that Mexican banks, Swiss banks with numbered accounts, and other foreign banks are not subject to the laws of the United States. It is not possible to investigate a campaign situation and require a foreign bank to reveal canceled checks or otherwise provide an accounting for what has happened in that bank. I think that the time has come when the American people expect Congress to provide for control by the laws of the United States over the facilities and institutions that are going to handle the funneling of campaign contributions. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I would reluctantly oppose the substitute for my amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan, despite the very noble objectives the Senator from Michigan has outlined. The Senator from Kentucky has convinced me that this would result in substantial inconvenience to a couple of million Americans living overseas, and yet would not accomplish the objective the Senator from Michigan is trying to accomplish in this regard. Therefore, I would urge the Senate to defeat the substitute amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Senator from Michigan has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield it back, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCLURE). All remaining time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the substitute amendment of the Senator from Michigan. On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. McGEE), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE) and the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) would vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. BEALL), the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCHWEIKER), and the Senator from Arizona (Mr. FANNIN) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) is absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN) is absent due to illness in the family.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 66, as follows:

So Mr. BENTSEN's amendment was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be excused from attendance on the Senate on Friday and Monday, to conduct hearing in Alaska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Hackney, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 2747) to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to increase the minimum wage rate under that act, to expand the coverage of the act, and for other purposes.

The enrolled bill was subsequently signed by the Vice President.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an amendment I am submitting to S. 3044 be considered as having met the requirements of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Under the previous order the pending business is the amendment of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN).

The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 13, between lines 14 and 15, add a new subsection (d), as follows:

(d) No Member of the Ninety-third Congress or any committee of such Member shall be eligible to receive matching funds in connection with the candidacy of such Member for nomination for election to the office of President for the term beginning January 20, 1977.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 6 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be given leave of absence for tomorrow, because of the fact that about a month ago I accepted two engagements to speak to Alabama audiences on tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the pending amendment is very short, but it is important.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, may we have order? We cannot hear the Senator. May we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the amendment is very short and to the point. It says:

No Member of the Ninety-third Congress or any committee of such Member shall be eligible to receive matching funds in connection with the candidacy of such Member for nomination for election to the office of President for the term beginning January 20, 1977—

Which would be the term starting after the 1976 election.

We already have, under the checkoff provision, adequate machinery, and there will be adequate funds, to finance the general election campaign of 1976.

Under the checkoff provision there would be accumulated in this fund by the 1976 Presidential elections more than $50 million, and it is provided that some $21 million shall be available to each of the major parties for the conduct of the Presidential election of 1976.

Of course, a minor hitch in the law is that, in order to get that money, the political party would have to certify that it would not accept funds from the private sector, and the members of that party might think they could not run a Presidential campaign on $21 million. So unless they have the law amended, it is possible they will not come under that provision in 1976.

But it is quite obvious where much of the drive for further Federal campaign financing, public Treasury financing, is coming from. It is quite obvious that it is coming from those here in the Congress who have an ambition to serve as President of the United States.

This amendment would preclude any Member of the 93d Congress from receiving funds, not to run for his present position—that has already been decided by the Senate—but would preclude him from obtaining a subsidy from the taxpayers to conduct a campaign for the Presidential nomination of either party.

We frequently hear it said, "Well, it is not the money that is involved; it is the principle." Well, if the candidates for the Presidency who are in the Congress really believe that, and they believe that campaign financing by the taxpayer is a good thing, that the principle is right, they ought not to have any objection to a provision that would preclude them from profiting in running for the Presidency to the tune of up to $7.5 million.

Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT. I note a section of the Constitution that my distinguished colleague is quite familiar with, article I, section 6:

No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time . . .

The Senator is speaking of principles. I wonder if there is not a correlation in principle between this section of the Constitution with regard to appointment to a civil office and creating a fund from which a campaign for the Presidency might be utilized. It seems to me there is a corollary between the two.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the Senator for that suggestion. I doubt, however, if they would be analogous. That section of the Constitution applies to emoluments which would accrue to an individual as an office holder, whereas the present proposal provides for funds to help him get that office. I doubt if they would be analogous, but there occurs the principle of voting for a measure that would result in a person's receiving up to $7.5 million.

I am hopeful that the Senate and those who might possibly be beneficiaries of this provision will see fit to add this amendment to the bill, on the theory that the principle of public financing would still be there; but those who feel so strongly that this is a good principle, and if it is a principle that they are standing for, possibly would be willing to forego the receipt by them or their campaign committees of this subsidy of up to $7.5 million.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. MATHIAS. I understand the principles that underlie the amendment. I want to assure the Senator that, as far as I am concerned, I can approach this with a great deal of objectivity.

Mr. ALLEN. I am sorry to hear that, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. MATHIAS. But, on a more serious note, I wonder if in proposing this amendment the Senator has in mind that the President of the Senate is to be included as a Member of the 93d Congress.

Mr. ALLEN. If what?

Mr. MATHIAS. If the President of the Senate is to be included within the definition of Members of the 93d Congress.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator think he would?

Mr. MATHIAS. Well, the distinguished Senator is the author of the amendment, and I was just probing for his intention.

Mr. ALLEN. No, I would not feel that he would be a Member of the 93d Congress. He presides over one branch of the 93d Congress, but he is not a Member of the Congress, quite obviously.

Mr. MATHIAS. I thank the Senator. I thought it was important to make that a matter of legislative history, to find out what was in the Senator's mind.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know that that legislative history is necessary, because I doubt seriously if this amendment is going anywhere, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. MATHIAS. Well, I think it is useful. Of course, the President of the Senate is, for many administrative purposes, a Member of the Senate, and when he is called upon, under the provisions of the Constitution, to break a tie, he votes as a Senator votes. So I think if this amendment, or if the thought which underlies this amendment, should succeed either now or later, that would be an important point.

Mr. ALLEN. Is it the Senator's idea that the Vice President is a Member of the 93d Congress? I stated it was my idea it was not. What is the Senator's idea?

Mr. MATHIAS. Well, the Vice-Presidency, of course, has been defined in various ways in various periods of history, and sometimes most colorfully, by those who have occupied that lofty and elevated chair. I think we all remember the definition of the office that was given to it by Vice President John Nance Garner. But for some purposes the Vice President is a Member of the Senate. Let us suppose, just hypothetically, that the Senator's amendment would produce a tie and that the Vice President had to be called upon to break the tie.

Mr. ALLEN. He is not here.

Mr. MATHIAS. We are talking hypothetically. Suppose that.

Mr. ALLEN. I see.

Mr. MATHIAS. And then he voted. Certainly under those circumstances the principles of equity which the Senator has described as applying to everybody else would operate on the Vice-Presidency.

Mr. ALLEN. The chances are he would have a lot of company in that predicament, if he voted for the subsidy.

Mr. MATHIAS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the distinguished Senator.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back my time and am prepared to vote, if the Senate so desires.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama (No. 1061). All time having been yielded back, and the yeas and nays having been ordered, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. McGEE), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE), and the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) and the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. McGEE) would each vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. BEALL), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. FANNIN), the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCHWEIKER), and the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCOTT) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) is absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN) is absent due to illness in the family.

I further announce that, if present and voting the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), and the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HUGH SCOTT) would each vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 51, as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 1099

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1099.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. BROCK's amendment is as follows:

On page 48, line 19, strike out "and 617" and insert in lieu thereof ' 617, and 618".

On page 49, line 17, strike out "and 617" and insert in lieu thereof ' 617, and 618."

On page 49, line 23, strike out "or 617" and insert in lieu thereof "317, and 618".

On page 78, line 16, strike the closing quotation marks and the second period.

On page 78, between lines 16 and 17, insert the following:

"§ 618. Voting fraud

"(a) No person shall—

"(1) cast, or attempt to cast, a ballot in the name of another person,

"(2) cast, or attempt to cast, a ballot if he is not qualified to vote

"(3) forge or alter a ballot,

"(4) miscount votes,

"(5) tamper with a voting machine, or

"(6) commit any act (or fail to do anything required of him by law), with the intent of causing an inaccurate count of lawfully cast votes in any election.

"(b) A violation of the provisions of subsection (a) is punishable by a fine of not to exceed $100,000, imprisonment for not more than ten years, or both.".

On page 78, line 19, strike out "and 617" and insert in lieu thereof "317, and 618".

On page 78, after line 22, in the item relating to section 617, strike out the closing quotation marks and the second period.

On page 78, after line 23, below the item relating to section 617, insert the following:

"618. Voting fraud.".

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROCK. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a time limitation of 30 minutes on the pending amendment, to be equally divided between the sponsor of the amendment, the distinguished Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK), and the manager of the bill, the distinguished Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr BROCK. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the consideration of S. 3044, a member of my staff, Mr. Gary Lieber, be accorded the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the further debate on this legislation, a member of my staff, Mr. Jim George, be permitted access to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, this amendment attempts to deal with one notable inadequacy in the proposed legislation which relates specifically to the largest single area of campaign abuse, in my opinion, and that is voting fraud. There can be no greater violation of the civil rights of an individual than to have his ballot stolen by any device. My amendment would attempt to deal with just that particular problem. It says:

No person shall—

(1) cast, or attempt to cast, a ballot in the name of another person,

(2) cast, or attempt to cast, a ballot if he is not qualified to vote,

(3) forge or alter a ballot,

(4) miscount votes,

(5) tamper with a voting machine, or

(6) commit any act (or fail to do anything required of him by law).

with the intent of causing an inaccurate count of lawfully cast votes in any election.

Mr. President, I very much believe that this Congress must pass major and comprehensive campaign reform legislation. But I cannot believe that it is in the interests of the Congress, the elective process, or the American people to deal only with the financial problems of politics. It seems to me that something very essential is at stake in this particular debate, and that is assurance to the people of this country that their ballots will be cast and counted as they are cast. If we are to restore any faith in the elective process, that has to be a fundamental purpose of the bill.

I do not understand why there simply are not Federal laws in this area today. If there is a civil right in this country, it is the right to vote, for the future of ourselves and for our children. To the best of my knowledge, about the only access or the only recourse we have in the instance of ballot abuse would be to say that that would violate our civil rights, although that is probably the most difficult charge in the world to prove. But it is important that we spell out what we mean by vote fraud and what penalty should be established for that vote fraud. It is important, in view of the recent political scandal, that we not forget the tradition of fraud and abuse in this country, which is still ongoing in too many places, in too many communities, and in too many counties.

Each Senator will speak for his own State, of course, and I can speak only for my own and say that Tennessee has made remarkable progress in reducing ballot abuse. But we are not perfect yet, and I am not sure that anyone else is either. It is important that people wherever they may live in this country should have the assurance that we intend to protect this most essential of their rights.

I cannot believe that we can pass comprehensive campaign reform legislation without dealing with this most fundamental reform as it relates to the ballot and the right to vote and the right to have that vote counted.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield for a question?

Mr. BROCK. I yield.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Does the Senator have any idea in how many States the process he outlined is now illegal?

Mr. BROCK. I would say to the Senator that probably, generally speaking, virtually all of them are. The problem, it seems to me, is more with the inadequate ability to deal with the problem. The States' law are either not adequately enforced or else they are poorly drawn so as to be unenforceable. Much of the time the State laws are enforced by the very people who are engaging in the abuse. This is the problem I am trying to deal with.

Mr. GOLDWATER. The Senator would make it a Federal crime for those who participate in the activities that he has outlined and illustrated today and that would apply to the Presidency, to the Senate, and to the House?

Mr. BROCK. That is correct.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Has the Senator suggested any penalty?

Mr. BROCK. Yes, I have a sizable penalty which would go, in the case of extreme abuse, to a $100,000 fine and 10 years in jail. We must have a severe penalty.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Would the Senator's amendment—this sounds funny, but it has happened in my city—would the Senator's amendment cover the use of names in graveyards?

Mr. BROCK. Absolutely.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I thank the Senator. I think his amendment is worthwhile and I shall support it.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield for a question?

Mr. BROCK. I yield.

Mr. TOWER. If I understood the Senator correctly, one of the reasons he is offering this is that although virtually all the States have laws that define such abuses as crimes, the fact is that very often the beneficiaries of the rigged election are those responsible for administering the election laws of the State and, therefore, they are rarely ever brought to justice and justice is often not done.

Mr. BROCK. That is correct. There seems to be no recourse in some instances today and no protection against this kind of abuse. We have seen it on too many occasions, in elections that were stolen, where the enormity of the fraud actually changed the course of the election and the people who then were elected were in the postition to enforce or not to enforce the statute.

Mr. TOWER. Is it not true, in the instance of election fraud, in elections involving people running for Federal office, that almost inevitably those that have been brought to justice under any existing laws have been brought to justice under the aegis of a Federal investigation or a Federal prosecution rather than by the State?

Mr. BROCK. That is correct, to the best of my knowledge.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. BROCK. I yield.

Mr. COOK. May I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee, relative to his response to the Senator from Arizona a few moments ago, that there is one thing in here that gives me a problem. I wish he would consider, although the title says "Intended to be proposed by Mr. BROCK * * "—it goes on to say " * * and general election campaigns for Federal elective office * * *" I would say to the Senator from Tennessee that in the body of his amendment as such, it shall be a part of the bill, but it does not say "for Federal elections." I am wondering, because at least in my State we do have off-year elections, where we have elections for members of the State legislature, the State senate, and for the governorship, I am concerned as to the overall constitutionality of this amendment, unless he would consider, on line 4, page 2, where it reads:

"(a) No person shall * * *"—

Then add, in elections held for the purpose of Federal officials such as the Senate, Congress, the President, and the Vice President.

I am wondering whether I could convince the Senator from Tennessee that that language should be in there, so that we do not have the problem of interfering with State election laws in those years when elections are held on a statewide basis and when no Federal elections are up.

Mr. BROCK. Of course that language should be in there. The Senator is absolutely right. I appreciate his suggestion. If I may, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment on page 2, line 4, to add after the word "shall" the words: "in a Federal election."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HELMS). Will the Senator please send his proposed modification to the desk.

Mr. BROCK. If that language will suit the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the modification of the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee?

Without objection, the modification is so made.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Tennessee. I must say that that resolves the problem. Without that language in there, we were risking getting into a rather serious question in regard to State constitutionality and also with regard to the Constitution of the United States, by the way.

Mr. BROCK. I appreciate the Senator's diligence. I have no intention of interfering with any State process. We have a real responsibility to maintain the sanctity of the ballot box in Federal elections.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, do I correctly understand that the effect of the Senator's modification will be to narrow the effect of the proposed amendment to elections for Federal offices only?

Mr. BROCK. That is correct.

Mr. TOWER. It would not apply to any State, county, or local election then?

Mr. BROCK. That is right. That was the amendment's intention. The Senator has pointed it out correctly. We were not specific enough.

Mr. COOK. If I may enlarge on that a little, under the Constitution of the United States, we do not have the right to prescribe the rules and regulations for the conduct of State and local elections.

Mr. TOWER. That is correct. As an old States' Righter, I would concur with that.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, does the Senator from Tennessee have any objection if he might withdraw the call for the yeas and nays and just have a voice vote?

Mr. BROCK. I would be delighted to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the yeas and anys on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The yeas and nays are vacated.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I yield back the reminder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time on this amendment has been yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 1099, as modified, of the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK).

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1104

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I now call up my amendment No. 1104 and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

ILLEGAL CONTRIBUTIONS AND UNEXPENDED FUNDS

SEC. 317. (a) Any contribution received by a candidate or political committee in connection with any election for Federal office in excess of the contribution limitations established by this Act shall be forfeited to the United States Treasury.

(b) Any political committee having unexpended funds in excess of the amount necessary to pay its campaign expenditures within thirty days after a general election shall deposit those funds in the United States Treasury or transfer them to a national committee.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, this amendment attempts to deal again with what I view as perhaps the inadvertent absence of existing law, dealing with leftover funds after a campaign. It may be there are those who disagree, but it seems to me this bill is not putting sufficient emphasis on the political parties. I would like very much to see a provision made for any leftover funds after a campaign, where there is not sufficient challenge to use all the money raised. I would like to see that money either revert to the Federal Treasury, if that is the wish of the candidate, or revert to his national party.

It seems to me that would be a measure to strengthen the role of the parties and something we need to be concerned with in the process of this bill.

It does one other thing, and I should point it out, that is to say, that any contribution received in excess of the ceiling shall be automatically rebated to the Treasury because then, in effect, it is an illegal contribution. There is no provision in the existing language to deal with that particular situation. I would suggest that illegal or excess contributions of the statute limits should obviously be directed to the Federal Treasury.

I would hope that this amendment might receive the same warm support my previous one did.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield for a question?

Mr. BROCK. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. If a candidate chooses not to use Federal money and he collects a certain amount of private money, and he has a hundred dollars left over after a campaign or $100,000 left over, all the money he raised personally would go back to the Federal treasury?

Mr. BROCK. Or to his national party. It would be at his option.

Mr. CLARK. So it would not just be the Federal money that was expended, but all the private money he raised that is left over as well.

Mr. BROCK, That is right. I raised the issue because we have had problems in the past. I think it would be in the interest of Members of the House and the Senate to have this safeguard, to afford them a justification for dealing logically with this excess fund.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROCK. I yield.

Mr. COOK. I am a little concerned about the language on page 2. Obviously, if we have Federal financing of elections and he has held Federal funds, those must go back to the Treasury. There is no question about that.

Mr. BROCK. That is right.

Mr. COOK. But under the Senator's amendment, I am not sure that is what it says. I read from page 2 of the Senator's amendment:

. . . shall deposit those funds in the United States Treasury or transfer them to a national committee.

What bothers me is that we cannot leave the assumption that funds that have been allocated under a Federal program to subsidize elections could be subject in any way to a choice of whether they would go back to the Treasury or to a national committee.

I am not really prepared to give any substitute language, although it does bother me because I think the Senator has an either/or with unexpended funds regardless of the source. That does bother me. I believe the chairman of the committee wants to raise that point, also.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BROCK. I yield.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I have never been in a situation in which I have had to deal with a surplus of funds.

Mr. BROCK. Neither have I.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I wonder whether it would not be well to have another option, whereby the candidate might be able to return, on a pro rata basis, his excess funds to those who had contributed, if such an arrangement were spelled out in his solicitation of the funds.

Mr. BROCK. Personally, I would like to see that. The problem is more mechanical than in principle. I think it is almost impossible to divide on a pro rata basis $500 among 10,000 people who contributed. I had 10,000 contributors in my campaign in 1970, and it was a matter of great pride to me that we were able to establish that broad a base.

In all honesty, I do not know how we could locate those people and return the 3 or 4 cents that some of them would get as a pro rata share, and that is why I did not include it in the amendment.

The Senator from Kentucky has raised a valid point. In light of that, I think it might be the better part of wisdom if I withdrew the amendment and consider that as a possible alternative.

Until I can rewrite it, Mr. President, I will withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

ANTIHIJACKING ACT OF 1974

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 39.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HELMS) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 39) to amend the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 to provide a more effective program to prevent aircraft piracy, and for other purposes, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

TITLE I—ANTIHIJACKING ACT OF 1974

SEC. 101. This title may be cited as the "Antihijacking Act of 1974".

SEC. 102. Section 101(32) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. 1301(32)), relating to the definition of the term "special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States", is amended to read as follows:

"(32) The term 'special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States' includes—

"(a) civil aircraft of the United States;

"(b) aircraft of the national defense forces of the United States;

"(c) any other aircraft within the United States;

"(d) any other aircraft outside the United States—

"(i) that has its next scheduled destination or last point of departure in the United States, if that aircraft next actually lands in the United States; or

"(ii) having 'an offense', as defined in the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft, committed aboard, if that aircraft lands in the United States with the alleged offender still aboard; and

"(e) other aircraft leased without crew to a lessee who has his principal place of business in the United States, or if none, who has his permanent residence in the United States; while that aircraft is in flight, which is from the moment when all external doors are closed following embarkation until the moment when one such door is opened for disembarkation or in the case of a forced landing, until the competent authorities take over the responsibility for the aircraft and for the persons and property aboard.".

SEC. 103. (a) Paragraph (2) of subsection (i) of section 902 of such Act (49 U.S.C. 1472), relating to the definition of the term "aircraft piracy", is amended by striking out "threat of force or violence and" inserting in lieu thereof "threat of force or violence, or by any other form of intimidation, and".

(b) Section 902 of such Act is further amended by redesignating subsections (n) and (o) as subsections (o) and (p), respectively, and by inserting immediately after subsection (m) the following new subsection:

"AIRCRAFT PIRACY OUTSIDE SPECIAL AIRCRAFT JURISDICTION OF THE UNITED STATES

"(n)(1) Whoever abroad an aircraft in flight outside the special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States commits 'an offense', as defined in the Convention for the Suppresion of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft, and is afterward found in the United States shall be punished—

"(A) by imprisonment for not less than twenty years; or

"(B) if the death of another person results from the commission or attempted commission of the offense, by death or by imprisonment for life.

"(2) A person commits 'an offense', as defined in the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft when, while aboard an aircraft in flight, he—

"(A) unlawfully, by force or threat thereof, or by any other form of intimidation, seizes, or exercises control of, that aircraft, or attempts to perform any such act; or

"(B) is an accomplice of a person who performs or attempts to perform any such act.

"(3) This subsection shall only be applicable if the place of takeoff or the place of actual landing of the aircraft on board which the offense, as defined in paragraph (2) of this subsection, is committed is situated outside the territory of the State of registration of that aircraft.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection an aircraft is considered to be in flight from the moment when all the external doors are closed following embarkation until the moment when one such door is opened for disembarkation, or in the case of a forced landing, until the competent authorities take over responsibility for the aircraft and for the persons and property aboard.".

(c) Subsection (o) of such section 902, as so redesignated by subsection (b) of this section, is amended by striking out "subsections (i) through (m)" and inserting in lieu thereof "subsections (i) through (n)".

SEC. 104. (a) Section 902(i)(1) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. 1472(i)(1)) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) Whoever commits or attempts to commit aircraft piracy, as herein defined, shall be punished—

"(A) by imprisonment for not less than twenty years; or

"(B) if the death of another person results from the commission or attempted commission of the offense, by death or by imprisonment for life.".

(b) Section 902(i) of such Act is further

DEFINITION

"(f) For the purposes of this section, the term 'law enforcement personnel' means individuals—

"(1) authorized to carry and use firearms,

"(2) vested with such police power of arrest as the Administrator deems necessary to carry out this section, and

"(3) identifiable by appropriate indicia of authority.".

SEC. 203. Section 1111 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. 1511), relating to authority to refuse transportation, is amended to read as follows:

"AUTHORITY TO REFUSE TRANSPORTATION

"SEC. 1111. (a) The Administrator shall, by regulation, require any air carrier, intrastate air carrier, or foreign air carrier to refuse to transport—

"(1) any person who does not consent to a search of his person, as prescribed in section 315(a) of this Act, to determine whether he is unlawfully carrying a dangerous weapon, explosive, or other destructive substance, or

"(2) any property of any person who does not consent to a search or inspection of such property to determine whether it unlawfully contains a dangerous weapon, explosive, or other destructive substance.

Subject to reasonable rules and regulations prescribed by the Administrator, any such carrier may also refuse transportation of a passenger or property when, in the opinion of the carrier, such transportation would or might be inimical to safety of flight.

"(b) Any agreement for the carriage of persons or property in air transportation or intrastate air transportation by an air carrier, intrastate air carrier, or foreign air carrier, for compensation or hire shall be deemed to include an agreement that such carriage shall be refused when consent to search such persons or inspect such property for the purposes enumerated in subsection (a) of this section is not given.".

SEC. 204. Title XI of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. 1501–1513) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"LIABILITY FOR CERTAIN PROPERTY

"SEC. 1116. The Civil Aeronautics Board shall issue such regulations or orders as may be necessary to require that any air carrier receiving for transportation as baggage any property of a person traveling in air transportation, which property cannot lawfully be carried by such person in the aircraft cabin by reason of section 902(l) of this Act, must make available to such person, at a reasonable charge, a policy of insurance conditioned to pay, within the amount of such insurance amounts for which such air carrier may become liable for the full actual loss or damage to such property caused by such air carrier.".

SEC. 205. Section 101 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. 1301), relating to definitions, is amended by redesignating paragraphs (22) through (36) as paragraphs (24) through (38), respectively, and by inserting immediately after paragraph (21) the following new paragraphs:

"(22) 'Intrastate air carrier' means any citizen of the United States who undertakes, whether directly or indirectly or by a lease or any other arrangement, to engage solely in intrastate air transportation.

"(23) 'Intrastate air transportation' means the carriage of persons or property as a common carrier for compensation or hire, by turbojet-powered aircraft capable of carrying thirty or more persons, wholly within the same State of the United States.".

SEC. 206. (a) That portion of the table of contents contained in the first section of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 which appears under the center heading: "TITLE III—ORGANIZATION OF AGENCY AND POWERS AND DUTIES OF ADMINISTRATOR" is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new items:

"Sec. 315. Screening of passengers in air transportation.

"(a) Procedures and facilities.

"(b) Exemption authority.

"Sec. 316. Air transportation security.

"(a) Rules and regulations.

"(b) Personnel.

"(c) Training.

"(d) Research and development; confidential information.

"(e) Overall Federal responsibility.

"(f) Definition."

(b) That portion of such table of contents which appears under the center heading "TITLE XI—MISCELLANEOUS" is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 1116. Liability for certain property.".

And amend the title so as to read: "An Act to amend the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 to implement the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft; to provide a more effective program to prevent aircraft piracy; and for other purposes."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House on S. 39 and request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair be authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. CANNON, Mr. HARTKE, Mr. PEARSON, and Mr. COOK conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, informed the Senate that, pursuant to the provisions of section 10(a), Public Law 93–179, the Speaker had appointed Mrs. BOGGS and Mr. BUTLER as members of the American Revolution Bicentennial Board, on the part of the House.

The message announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7724) to amend the Public Health Service Act to establish a national program of biomedical research fellowships, traineeships, and training to assure the continued excellence of biomedical research in the United States, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. STAGGERS, Mr. ROGERS, Mr. SATTERFIELD, Mr. DEVINE, and Mr. NELSEN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. President, I wish to address a question to the distinguished manager of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. HASKELL. I would like to ask the floor manager of the bill as to his interpretation of the bill as applied to a particular situation. Assume that a multiple candidate committee engages in certain expenses in connection with the fund raising for a multitude of different candidates. The concern expressed is that possibly the bill would be interpreted to allocate as a contribution to any candidate raising funds from that committee a pro rata share of expenses incurred in raising those funds.

I would like to ask the Senator's interpretation and intention in that situation and whether the legislation would be so applied.

Mr. CANNON. Do I understand the Senator to mean a general committee that is widespread in scope and that is not a political campaign committee of the candidate?

Mr. HASKELL. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON. It is the intention as to that type committee in the solicitation of funds that the expense of solicitation could not be charged to the candidate because that committee may be contributing to many, many candidates and they are limited in the amount they could contribute to the candidate, but the candidate himself would have to include in his expense itemization the cost they expended in raising those particular funds.

On the other hand, if a candidate's own campaign committee that he designates is out raising money for him, obviously those expenses would be chargeable to the amount he can spend in his election.

Mr. HASKELL. I thank the distinguished Senator from Nevada. That is the way I interpret the legislation. There are Members who expressed some concern. I think this makes the record very clear.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that request?

Mr. HASKELL. I withhold my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 1105

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1105.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment was stated as follows:

On page 64, between lines 5 and 6, insert the following:

"SUSPENSION OF FRANK FOR MASS MAILINGS IMMEDIATELY BEFORE ELECTIONS

"SEC. 318. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no Senator, Representative, Resident Commissioner, or Delegate shall make any mass mailing of a newsletter or mailing with a simplified form of address under the frank under section 3210 of title 39, United States Code, during the sixty days immediately preceding the date on which any election is held in which he is a candidate."

On page 64, line 7, strike out "318." and insert in lieu thereof "319.".

On page 64, line 14, strike out "319." and insert in lieu thereof "320.".

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield?

Mr. BROCK. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, would the Senator be amenable to a 20-minute time limitation on the amendment, the time to be divided in the usual fashion between the sponsor of the amendment and the manager of the bill?

Mr. BROCK. I am.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I make that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the time limit will be set accordingly.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, this amendment would simply extend the current limitation on franking from 28 days, which we passed in this body last December, which was a good first step, to 60 days, for mass mailing. We debated this matter last year in the campaign reform bill. I raise the question again because one of the most damning criticisms of this bill, and one that I share, is that it still largely remains an incumbent bill. One of the participants in a symposium at the Kennedy Center, in which I also participated, estimated that the incumbency is worth $600,000 over 2 years. That amount of money would have to be raised to equal the public relations assets that an incumbent has through mail, and the rest.

One distinct advantage to Members is the unlimited use of the frank, right up to the last month of the election. I believe it is important that we try as best we can to guarantee fairness in the political process.

I also believe that we should provide for people who challenge office holders, now and in the future, a reasonable opportunity to make that effort and to have some chance of success.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

I find no great difficulty with this amendment. I just simply point out to my colleagues that it has been only a few months since we acted on this particular point and we limited it to 28 days prior to the election with reference to the sending out of newsletters under the frank. I would point out that the law prohibits now mailing that is related to political activities under the frank, in any event, so I see no particular harm in amending this to 60 days. The Senate has never been involved in mass mailing to boxholders, such as the House. This may be of difficulty in the other body, but I would have no objection to it if the Senator wants an increase in the period of 32 days over the action which we took a few months ago.

Mr. BROCK. I thank the Senator. He points out that the problem with the boxholder frank is with the House and not with the Senate, but I think it is important that we point out the potential for abuse here and, at least for this body, express our desire that every person should have access to the political process and should have, as much as we can guarantee it, full and free opportunity to seek his own election.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. There will be no further votes tonight, I will say for the information of Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that two members of my staff, Mr. J. V. Crockett and Mr. Jim George, be given access to the floor during the course of debate on this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

JOINT REFERRAL OF S. 3213 TO COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS AND COMMITTEE ON BANKING, HOUSING AND URBAN AFFAIRS

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that S. 3213, which I introduced earlier this month, and which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, be jointly referred to that committee and to the Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee. I have discussed this with the acting chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, who also happens to be chairman of the Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee, and he has expressed his willingness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, what is the bill about?

Mr. BROCK. This bill would support the establishment of an international economic policy board to advise Congress on matters of international policy.

Mr. JAVITS. As a matter of efficiency, if the bill were referred to both committees, so that either could hold it up, would the Senator want to have it referred seriatim, or to both at the same time?

Mr. BROCK. The chairman of the Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee has indicated that the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee had no particular interest in this legislation, but he did not want to lose any jurisdictional right, which I fully understand and support.

So may I amend the request to ask that the bill be referred to the Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee?

Mr. JAVITS. I would object to that, because I do not agree with the chairman, with all respect. I think one of our big failures, and other members of the committee are present, such as the Senator from Montana (Mr. MANSFIELD), has been the failure to realize the critical impact on foreign policy of economic policy. I would just as soon the Senator leave it as he has put it.

Mr. BROCK. Would referral seriatim be preferable?

Mr. JAVITS. No; leave it as it is. We have the explanation. Leave it as it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be so referred.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider executive business.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. COOK).

U.S. COAST GUARD

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to have considered sundry nominations in the U.S. Coast Guard which were reported earlier today, and ask unanimous consent that they be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BENNETT) Without objection, it is so ordered.

The second assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of Rear Admiral William F. Rea III, to be commander, Atlantic area, and Rear Admiral Joseph J. McClelland, to be commander, Pacific area.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations will be considered and confirmed en bloc.

The second assistant legislative clerk read the nominations of the following named officers for promotion to the grade of rear admiral: Rober I. Price, Winford W. Barrow, James P. Stewart, G. H. Patrick Bursley, Robert W. Durfey, and James S. Gracey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations will be considered and confirmed en bloc.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I request that the President of the United States be immediately notified of the confirmation of the nominations.

EXECUTIVE SESSION—TREATY ON EXTRADITION WITH DENMARK, EXECUTIVE U (93D CONG., 2D SESS.)

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session to consider the treaty on extradition with Denmark.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BIDEN). Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will read the resolution of ratification.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved, (Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of the Treaty on Extradition between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Denmark, signed at Copenhagen on June 22, 1972 (Ex. U, 93–1).

LEGISLATIVE SESSION—FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now return to legislative session and will resume consideration of the unfinished business, S. 3044, which will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) is recognized to call up amendment No. 1071, on which there is a limitation of 30 minutes.

AMENDMENT NO. 1071

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I call up Amendment No. 1971.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike out everything after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

COMPLETE DISCLOSURE OF ALL CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

SECTION 1. (a) Section 301 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to definition) is amended—

(1) by striking out "in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000" in subsection (d);

(2) by inserting in subsection (e) (1) after "subscription" the following: "(including any assessment, fee, or membership dues)";

(3) by striking out in subsection (e) (1) "or for the purpose of influencing the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "or for the purpose of financing any operations of a political committee (including a payment made or an obligation incurred by a corporation or labor organization which, under the provisions of the last paragraph of section 610 of title 18, United States Code, does not constitute a contribution by that corporation or labor organization), or for the purpose of paying, at any time, any debt or obligation incurred by a candidate or a political committee in connection with any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office";

(4) by amending subsection (a) (3) to read as follows:

"(3) funds received by a political committee which are transferred to that committee from another political committee;" and

(5) by striking out paragraph (f) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(f) 'expenditure'—

"(1) means a purchase, payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money or anything of value, made for the purpose of—

"(A) influencing the nomination for election, or the election, of any person to Federal office, or to the office of Presidential and Vice Presidential elector;

"(B) influencing the result of a primary election held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President;

"(C) financing any operations of a political committee; or

"(D) paying, at any time, any debt or obligation incurred by a candidate or a political committee in connection with any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office;

"(2) means the transfer of funds by a political committee to another political committee;

"(3) means a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make an expenditure; and

"(4) means any payment made or obligation incurred by a corporation or a labor organization which, under the provisions of the last paragraph of section 610 of title 18, United States Code, would not constitute an expenditure by that corporation or labor organization."

(1) by striking out "in excess of $10" in subsection (b);

(2) by striking out "in excess of $10," in subsection (c)(2); and

(3) by striking out beginning with "in excess of $100" through "exceeds $100" in subsection (d).

(c) Section 303 of such Act (relating to registration of political committees; statements) is amended—

(1) by striking out "in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000" in subsection (a);

(2) by striking out beginning with "or, if later" through "in excess of $1,000" in such subsection; and

(3) by striking out "in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000" in subsection (d).

(d) Section 304 (relating to reports by political committees and candidates) is amended—

(1) by striking out "in an aggregate amount or value in excess of $100," each place it appears in paragraphs (2), (5), and (9) of subsection (b); and

(2) by striking out "in excess of $100" each place it appears in paragraphs (7) and (10) of such subsection.

(e) Section 305 of such Act (relating to reports by others than political committees) is amended by striking out "in an aggregate amount in excess of $100 within a calendar year".

IMMEDIATE DISCLOSURE OF LAST MINUTE CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

SEC. 2. The last sentence of section 304(a) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to reports by political committees and candidates) is amended to read as follows: "Such reports shall be complete as of such date as the supervisory officer may prescribe, which shall be not less than five days before the date of filing, except that any contribution received or expenditure made during the period beginning ten days before the date of the election and ending on the date of the election shall be reported within twenty-four hours after such contribution or expenditure is received or made, respectively.".

DISCLOSURE BY CANDIDATE OF KNOWN INDEPENDENT CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

SEC. 3. Section 305 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by designating the first paragraph thereof as subsection (a) and by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) A candidate who knows of such a contribution or expenditure by such a person shall include the identity of such person and amount of such contribution or expenditure in the statements he files under section 304."

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, on Tuesday, I submitted an amendment to S. 3044, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974. Basically, this amendment in the nature of a substitute calls for full disclosure of all campaign contributions from every source, and of all campaign expenditures.

Additionally, this amendment plugs up a loophole in the 1971 Federal Election Campaign Act regarding the reporting of contributions made immediately prior to election day.

Under the 1971 act as it now stands, section 304 requires that each treasurer of a political committee shall be required to report receipts and expenditures on the 10th day of March, June, and September; on the 15th and 5th days immediately prior to the general election; and on the 31st of January immediately after the election. Under this section, the report which must be filed must be complete as of 5 days prior to the date of filing. This works well for all filing dates except one: That is the reporting date 5 days before the election.

On that date, a report must be filed for all contributions received since the last reporting period, the date of filing for which is 15 days prior to the election. Since the "5-day" report must be filed 5 days prior to the election but must include only those contribuitons received at a period ending 10 days before the election, there is a time lag of 10 days before the election when no reporting of campaign contributions need be made, with one exception: That exception, as laid out in section 304(a), states that any contribution of $5,000 or more received after the last report is filed—5 days before the election—must be reported within 48 hour of its receipt.

While this provision attempts to cover the disclosure of large last-minute contributions, it is obviously inadequate. For example, if a large contribution, more than $5,000 let us say, were given to a campaign committee coming under the purview of the 1971 act, and this money were given 9 days prior to the election, it would go unreported until the January 31 reporting date, long after the election. If the main purpose of disclosing political campaign contributions is to let the public know who supports a candidate and to whom that candidate may be beholden after an election, then the 1971 act does not do the job. As it now stands, the 1971 act leaves a 5-day period of limbo between the closing date for the last filing period prior to the election and the filing date itself, when large contributions over $5,000 must begin to be reported within 48 hours of receipt.

To clarify this further, let me use exact dates, such as will be encountered by campaign treasurers during the upcoming election campaigns this fall. Under the 1971 act, there is a filing date 15 days prior to the election, or on October 21; and one 5 days prior to the election, or on October 31. The report due on October 31 must be complete as of October 26, or 10 days prior to the election, and covers contributions received since the last filing—which was due on October 21, or 15 days before the election, and covered contributions received by October 16.

All contributions received after October 26 will be reported on January 31, 1975, except for those contributions received after October 31 which were in excess of $5,000. There is a 5-day period between October 26 and October 31 when any large contribution can be received and go unreported until January 31, long after the election and of no help to the public in their determination of which candidate they desire to vote for.

Mr. President, what my amendment in part does is to end this inequity in the law. By requiring that all contributions received and expenditures made within the 10-day period prior to the election be reported within 24 hours of their receipt, this glaring loophole in the 1971 act effectively is plugged up. Such a provision will go a long way in restoring public confidence in the election process: for example, much of the alleged last-minute "vote buying" would be curtailed by public exposure or else brought to the public's attention.

The fundamental principle of this amendment is to require that all contributions and expenditures be fully disclosed to the public so that each citizen will have full knowledge of where every dollar which supports a particular candidate comes from and where it goes. This amendment, as a substitute for the public financing and other provisions of S. 3044, avoids serious constitutional questions that have been raised about the provisions of S. 3044 which limit campaign expenditures and limit the amount of money that any individual may give to a candidate. S. 3044's restrictions on an individual's freedom of political expression raises the doubt in my mind as to whether the legislation will stand the test of the Constitution. A recent district court ruling (ACLU, Inc. v. W. Pat Jennings, 366 F.S. 1041, U.S.D.C., D.C., Nov. 14, 1973) already has brought into question limitations on the manner in which money may be spent on media advertising. This case is only the first in a long line of attacks that I see coming, and all for good reason: such limitations —not only on media spending, but also on the size of contributions—are an infringement on constitutional freedoms guaranteed by the first amendment.

Mr. President, amendment No. 1071 to S. 3044 gives the American people true reform in the financing and conducting of Federal elections. It is a realistic and needed reform measure, based on full disclosure and the plugging of a bad loophole in the existing Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971. Further, Mr. President, this substitute amendment, if enacted into law, will stand the test of the courts and the Constitution.

Mr. President, there is one further provision in amendment number 1071 to S. 3044 to which I want to address myself. Too often, political candidates receive support from groups not directly connected with their campaigns but which nonetheless provide assistance to them. I speak here not only of so-called soft money contributions from powerful labor union bosses that we hear so much about these days; but also, I speak of the aid provided by other organizations, formed for the specific purpose of rallying support around a particular candidate by rallying support for a particular issue which he espouses, thereby evading the letter and the spirit of the 1971 Act. Amendment 1071 takes care of these groups also by requiring that they report their expenditures made on behalf of a candidate; and further, by requiring that each candidate who has knowledge of any contribution made to him shall report the contribution and the person making it. This, in effect, places the burden on the candidate and his committee to report the receipt of "soft money" contributions, aid from issue groups, et cetera.

Mr. President, we will never have campaign reform with public financing. Competition for campaign dollars and voter support, with full disclosure of where all of the money came from and is going, is the way to have fair and honest elections. Take away the competition, as public financing will do, and you take away constitutionally guaranteed rights of expression, you encourage candidates to be unresponsive to the people, and you effectively destroy that which you only meant to reform.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a table which demonstrates how my amendment would close the 5-day loophole.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HELM'S AMENDMENT CLOSES 5-DAY LOOPHOLE

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
		1. October	2	3	4	5.
6	7	8	9	10	11	12.
13	14	15	16. Closing date for report due 15 days before election.	17	18	19.
20	21. Filing date for report due 15 days before election.	22	23	24	25	26.[1] Closing date for report due 5 days before election.
27[2]	28[2]	29[2]	30[2]	31.[2] Filing date for report due 5 days before election.	1. November	2.
3	4	5	6	7	8	9.
10	11	12	13	14	15	16.

[1] Also date when reporting of contributions more than $5,000 must be made within 48 hours.
[2] The 5-day gap when large contributions can come in unreported until Jan. 31, after the election is from Oct. 27 through Oct. 31.

Other filing dates under sec. 304(a) of the Federal Elections Campaign Act of 1971 are as follows: Mar. 10, 1974; June 10, 1974; Sept. 10, 1974; Jan. 31, 1975.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes. I do not think that a frivolous amendment such as this deserves more than 2 minutes time in response.

I wish to say to my colleagues that all this does is knock out public financing; it knocks out the central campaign committee which many people feel is important; and it knocks out the Federal Election Commission which would be in this act. Furthermore, it requires complete disclosure of every penny of contributions. If a person makes a 25-cent contribution, there would be $1 worth of paperwork to do the filing and reporting of the terms and provisions of this proposal.

We have a rather full disclosure provision in S. 372. The distinguished Senator from Rhode Island and many other Senators spent a lot of time on that matter, helped in its passage, and it was passed by the House. But this amendment would require absolute disclosure of the name, address, and principal place of business of every person making every contribution. He could not pass the hat at a political gathering. He could not send out a solicitation by mail and have people send in $1 or $2 in contributions without having to spend more than he actually received to carry out the reporting provision.

Again I say to my colleagues that if they are opposed to the bill as it is now, vote for this amendment because all it is intended to do is to kill the bill as now written.

Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back my time.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I would like to propound a question to the distinguished Senator from Nevada. Does the Senator agree that the loophole I described in the present act does exist?

Mr. CANNON. I am sorry. I did not hear the description of the so-called loophole. If the Senator will describe it to me, I shall be glad to respond.

Mr. HELMS. Between the 10th day before election day and the 5th day before election day, as the law stands now, it is wide open. Candidates can do anything they want without the public knowing what is going on because no report is required in that period until January 31 of the following year. Further, under existing law, in the final five days before election day, contributions over $5,000 must be reported within 48 hours. That is a loophole. This means that anything under $5,000 does not have to be reported, if contributed during the final 5 days of the campaign.

Second, it means that the days before the election, 10 through 6, are the big holes because nothing is required to be reported until January 31.

Third, the final days, 5 through 1, are only partially covered that is, the 48 hours' reporting requirement.

Mr. CANNON. I would be happy to respond to the Senator. Under existing law, if a person receives $5,000 it must be reported within 48 hours. If the candidate received a campaign contribution of $5,000, 54 hours before the election he has to file the complete report on it.

Under this bill the Senator is saying this this is a loophole; under this bill he cannot receive a contribution of $5,000.

Mr. HELMS. Oh, yes he can.

Mr. CANNON. The amount he can receive from any one person is $3,000. There is still the 5-day reporting under the terms of this bill. It is $6,000 from the committee but $3,000 is the maximum from an individual. We adopted the $6,000 amendment yesterday so that a committee could give the same as a husband and wife, who together can give $6,000. But one individual can only give $3,000 under the terms of this bill as it stands now, and the filing is required 5 days before the election.

Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, will someone yield me 30 seconds to ask a question?

Mr. HELMS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BAKER. Is it lawful under the present bill or under the amendment as proposed by the Senator from North Carolina to contribute anything during those 5 days before the election?

Mr. CANNON. Is it lawful to do so? Yes.

Mr. BAKER. When is that reported?

Mr. CANNON. There is a reporting period. It is not necessary to report before the election because the committee determined that between the 5 days and the election it is really a bookkeeping process that cannot be reported and publicized in that time. But the dangers of the big contributions have been taken out of the present bill. This is where the last minute big contributions entered into it in previous periods of time. This was an important loophole.

Mr. BAKER. It still is. I am not convinced that a way could not be found through the proliferation of committees to make possible a great many $5,000 contributions.

I have an amendment I will call up later which would place a prohibition on the receipt of any campaign contributions at all, say 10 days before the election, so there will be full disclosure before election day.

May I ask one question of the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HELMS. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. BAKER. Do I understand the Senator's amendment removes the limitation on contribution?

Mr. HELMS. No, it does not address itself to limitation. It specifies what will be reported. But it leaves the limitations as they are.

Mr. BAKER. I do not think it makes much difference. I am not sure how I am going to vote on this amendment, but I want my colleagues to know that there is another amendment coming up which would make it unlawful to receive contributions a certain number of days before the election.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the manager of the bill yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. Is not the main thrust of the amendment which is presently being considered to do away with public financing?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. PASTORE. That is the main thrust of the amendment. The other part is a sweetener, and I think if it is to be considered at all, it ought to be considered separately. The main thrust of the amendment is to knock out public financing. That is another way of getting around the so-called Allen amendment that was defeated.

Mr. HELMS. One of the main thrusts of the amendment is indeed to prevent putting the burden of campaign expenses on the backs of the taxpayer. The Senator is correct, but that is just one of the thrusts of the amendment. There is nothing devious about it. I think I have been as frank and open about this amendment as I can be. If Senators want to put the burden of financing political campaigns on the taxpayers, that is, of course, their prerogative. If they want to leave this gap, where hanky-panky will continue, that is their business, but I am unalterably opposed to it. But, the Senator is correct; this amendment will prevent both. Senators may vote their wishes on the matter.

Mr. PASTORE. I have not accused the Senator of any deviousness. I am merely saying the main thrust of the amendment is to do away with public financing. That is the main thrust of it. I think we ought to know that.

Mr. HELMS. That is one of the thrusts of it. There was no attempt to digress. I am opposed to public financing of political campaigns. There is no question about that. This amendment improves the reporting of contributions provisions.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, will the manager of the bill yield me 1 minute?

Mr. CANNON. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, is the order to vote on the Weicker amendment on Monday at 3 p.m.?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Approximately.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the Weicker amendment occur at 3 p.m. on Monday, and that immediately following the disposition thereof, the Bellmon amendment (No. 1094) be called up, on which there is a time limitation, and that on the disposition of amendment No. 1094 by Mr. BELLMON, amendment No. 1095 by Mr. BELLMON be called up, and that upon disposition of amendment No. 1095 by Mr. BELLMON, amendment No. 1081 by Mr. BUCKLEY be called up, and that there be a time limitation on the Buckley amendment of 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled in accordance with the usual form.

These requests have been cleared on both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK), the Senator from Florida (Mr. CHILES), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. ERVIN), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Maine (Mr. HATHAWAY), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE), the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. MONTOYA), the Senator from Utah (Mr. MOSS), the Senator from Maine (Mr. MUSKIE), the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. NELSON), and the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. STENNIS) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Michigan (Mr. HART), and the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. JOHNSTON) are absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK) and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM) would each vote "nay."

Mr. TOWER. I announce that the Senator from Maryland (Mr. BEALL), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BELLMON), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. COTTON), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. FANNIN), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN), the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY), the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HUGH SCOTT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT), the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) is absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN) is absent due to illness in the family.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HUGH SCOTT), and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT) would each vote "nay."

On this vote, the Senator from Maryland (Mr. BEALL) is paired with the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD). If present and voting, the Senator from Maryland would vote "yea" and the Senator from Oregon would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 43, as follows:

So Mr. HELMS' amendment (No. 1071) was rejected.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Dorothy Parker of Senator FONG's staff be accorded the privilege of the floor during the consideration of S. 3044.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILL

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Heiting, one of his secretaries, and he announced that on March 27, 1974, the President had approved and signed the act (S. 2315) to amend the minimum limits of compensation of Senate committee employees and to amend the indicia requirements on franked mail, and for other purposes.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be recognized out of order to engage in a colloquy with the distinguished Senator from West Virginia concerning the further business of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TOWER. I would simply like to ask the Senator from West Virginia what he can project for us in the way of remaining Senate business today, and, in addition to the Monday orders, what he might anticipate throughout next week.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, in response to the distinguished Senator's inquiry, I have endeavored, on both sides of the aisle, to inquire as to whether or not there are other amendments which we do not already know about that could be called up this afternoon. I find that there are no Senators who are ready to call up further amendments this afternoon, with the exception of the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON), who has an amendment on which there is a time limitation of 30 minutes, and there is every indication that the distinguished manager of the bill will accept the amendment, in which case there may not be a rollcall vote on that amendment.

In that event, there will be no more rollcall votes today. An amendment by the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WEICKER) will be laid down today, but the distinguished author of that amendment wishes to talk at some length on it, and consequently there will be no vote on that amendment today.

The Senate will then adjourn until Monday at noon. After two special orders on Monday of 15 minutes each, there will be routine morning business until 1 o'clock, at which time the Senate will resume the consideration of the Weicker amendment, with a vote to occur on that amendment after 2 hours of debate, at 3 p.m.

Following the vote on the Weicker amendment, the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BELLMON) has two amendments on each of which there is a 30-minute limitation, and they will be taken up in succession, with yea and nay votes thereon, at the conclusion of which a Senator, I believe Mr. ROTH—or rather, I am informed, Mr. BUCKLEY—has an amendment on which there is a 1-hour limitation, and there will be a rollcall vote on that amendment.

So as it looks from here, there will be at least four rollcall votes on Monday.

Mr. TOWER. Can the Senator project what our business is likely to be beyond Monday? I am trying to get his overview of the entire week, if that is possible, to the extent that the distinguished Senator from West Virginia knows.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. The principal thing would be—and I have discussed this with the distinguished majority leader—that the Senate will continue with the consideration of the unfinished business, with no-fault insurance waiting in the wings at some point, and the education bill coming along also. So we have three difficult pieces of legislation which will require some time for the Senate to complete. A busy week lies ahead.

Mr. TOWER. I thank the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order to take up the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI) be vacated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho has an amendment that he will present, probably on Monday, and I am hopeful that perhaps the distinguished Senator from Nevada will accept it. It will not take much time, but we do have an amendment.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. May I ask the distinguished Senator from Washington, is there any possibility that that amendment could be called up today?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Well, I do not know that he is here. He can if he wants to. But we can do it, I think, very quickly; it will not take over 5 minutes on Monday.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. In the event he would want to take it up today, if it is acceptable and can be handled by voice vote, he can do it either today or Monday.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I want to suggest also that we would all like to proceed on the no-fault measure as soon as possible, but it may not be quite ready for taking up in the Senate the early part of next week. It might be later in the week, because it will be a big, complex bill, and there will be a lot of amendments and a lot of debate on it.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. We all understand that. But I wanted to give notice that the Senator from Idaho has an amendment. I have talked with the authors of the bill; I talked briefly with the Senator from Nevada, and I am hopeful that over the weekend they will accept that amendment.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Very well.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

AMENDMENT NO. 1114

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the previous order, the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON) is recognized to call up an amendment, on which there is to be a vote in 30 minutes at the latest.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, I call up my Amendment No. 1114.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HUDDLESTON'S amendment (No. 1114) is as follows:

On page 25, beginning with line 10, strike out through line 14 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 201. (a) Section 315(a) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 315(a) is amended—

(A) by inserting "(1)" immediately after "(a)";

(B) by redesignating paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (4) as subparagraphs (A), (B), (C), and (D), respectively; and

(C) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(2) The obligation imposed by the first sentence of paragraph (1) upon a licensee with respect to a legally qualified candidate for any elective office (other than the offices of President and Vice President) shall be met by such licensee with respect to such candidate if—

"(A) the licensee makes available to such candidate not less than five minutes of broadcast time without charge;

"(B) the licensee notifies such candidate by certified mail at least fifteen days prior to the election of the availability of such time; and

"(C) such broadcast will cover, in whole or in part, the geographical area in which such election is held.

"(3) No candidate shall be entitled to the use of broadcast facilities pursuant to an offer by a licensee under paragraph (2) unless such candidate notifies the licensee in writing of his acceptance of the offer within forty-eight hours after receipt of the offer."

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment is quite simple: To insure that every legally qualified candidate has an opportunity to present his views.

In order to do that, I am seeking to amend section 201(a) of the reported bill.

The purpose of section 201(a) of S. 3044, as reported, is to encourage broadcast stations to schedule debates or discussion programs featuring the major candidates for a particular office. The requirement that all candidates for the same office be given equal time when there are numerous candidates, some of a "minor" nature, has proven to be a significant deterrent to this type of programing. To the extent that the revision proposed by the committee promotes joint broadcast appearances, including debates by major candidates, it is highly desirable.

However, as written, it is subject to great abuse that could be detrimental to the election process and to the public interest. It would, for instance, permit each broadcast station to be sole judge of which candidates could use its facilities. A station could give one candidate an unlimited amount of free time while severely limiting or denying his opponents any use at all. Some candidates could be totally precluded from any broadcast exposure.

As a broadcast station owner and manager for some 20 years, I believe that the vast majority of the Nation's broadcasters would be scrupulously fair in providing all candidates an opportunity to use their facilities. Yet the possibility for the above mentioned abuses does exist as the revision is presently contained in section 201(a) of S. 3044.

Therefore, my amendment would permit the automatic waiving of the equal time requirement of section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934 for Presidential and Vice Presidential races—but for other elections it could be waived only if the broadcast station offers 5 minutes of free time to all candidates seeking the same office.

In my judgment, the requirement of 5 minutes of time for each candidate for a particular office, even if there are several, would not be such an onerous burden on the broadcast station as to preclude the scheduling of debates or discussions with the leading candidates and at the same time would insure that every candidate would have at least a minimal opportunity to present his views.

Again, calling on my experience as a broadcaster, I am convinced that this modification is in the best interest of the election processes, the broadcast industry, and most importantly, the general public.

Mr. President, I believe the managers of the bill are in general agreement with this proposed amendment. I urge its adoption and reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, may I ask a question of the distinguished author of amendment? Do I correctly understand now that section 315 would be waived with respect to the President and the Vice President?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is correct, automatically.

Mr. CANNON. With respect to the other offices, it would be waived only in the event the broadcasters were to give 5 minutes to every candidate or to every major candidate; is that not correct?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. To each candidate running for the same office, not merely major contenders.

Mr. CANNON. To each candidate running for the same office.

May I ask the Senator further, the pending bill relates only to Federal elections. Does the Senator intend by his amendment to extend this beyond Federal elections to elections of a statewide nature for the purpose of section 315?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is correct. The only differentiation in the elections in my amendment is the election for President and Vice President. They can be treated legitimately as a separate case because that is a nationwide contest, of course, and they are viewed by all the citizens of this country at the same time. So those two offices would be automatically exempt from the equal time requirements of section 315 of the Communications Act.

Beyond that, all other races whether for Congress, the school board, the Governor, whatever, would be treated the same. A station could be exempted, provided it offered all candidates seeking the same office 5 minutes free time.

The reason I believe it should apply to all levels and not just Federal is that the broadcast stations then would be able to treat all elections in the same way and would not have to keep a separate set of books or regulations for candidates running for the Senate, for Congress, for Governor, or whatever.

Mr. CANNON. But this amendment would impose no requirement on the broadcasters to furnish free time?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. No, sir.

Mr. CANNON. If they furnish free time, they would have to give the time to every candidate?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is correct. If they give one candidate free time, then they must offer at least 5 minutes free time to every other candidate seeking the same office.

Mr. CANNON. Would that be on a race-by-race basis? For example, let us suppose a broadcaster determined, in a race for the governorship, that he would give the candidates free time and therefore he would have to give every candidate 5 minutes free time. If that were the case, and there were a candidate running for attorney general at the same time, would he have to, likewise, then give that time to the other candidate?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. No sir, he would not. It would be strictly on a race-by-race basis. He could seek exemption in the race for Governor but not for any other race going on at the same time. The amendment applies to all candidates running for the same office.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. I have looked at this amendment. As a matter of fact, I have had a talk with the distinguished sponsor of it. It is quite an improvement over the language in the bill as presently drawn. This would exempt it completely from the office of President and Vice President, which is desirable.

As the Senate knows, I have remarked on this a number of times. When I talked to the presidents of the various networks, ABC, CBS, and NBC, they did promise that if we lifted the exemption from section 315, they would be willing to give adequate time to candidates for the Presidency and the Vice Presidency. Everyone knows how expensive that is and what a boon it would be in the campaign, as we are now talking about a limitation of funds.

As to other Federal offices and State offices, there, I am afraid, that if we lifted it completely, we could open up a can of worms because we have many people who feel that in many cases—and this sensitivity has some merit—if we left it entirely to the discretion of the local stations whether radio or television, we would be more or less at the mercy of the owner who could use the medium to his own advantage day after day editorializing on radio and television. There is no objection to editorializing, of course, expressly favoring one particular candidate. But if he could do that day after day and not give the opposition any time, we could be in serious trouble.

That has been discussed on the floor of the Senate for a long time. With this provision, if they give time to anyone, they have to give 5 minutes to all, to that particular office. So I think this is an improvement and I will support it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, on the basis of that explanation, I am willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I have discussed this with the distinguished minority manager, the distinguished Senator from Kentucky (Mr. COOK), and he has authorized me to say that he is prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All time on this amendment has now been yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment—No. 1114—of the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON).

The amendment was agreed to.

SENATOR BUCKLEY ON CAMPAIGN REFORM

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, in the most recent issue of the publication, Human Events, the distinguished junior Senator from New York (Mr. BUCKLEY) has presented a clear analysis of the campaign reform legislation which is now being considered on the Senate floor.

After observing that the great system of campaign financing needs reform, Senator BUCKLEY states his belief that any new legislation should encourage, rather than diminish, each citizen's participation in the political process. I concur in my colleague's position and I am pleased that he has expressed his support for my proposal that, as an alternative to "public financing" of elections, the maximum tax credit allowable for a political contribution should be increased to a level which will give each private individual a greater incentive to voluntarily contribute to the candidate of his or her choice.

The detailed responses which Senator BUCKLEY has made to the probing questions presented in this interview deserve the considered attention of every public official who is committed to supporting true "campaign reform" legislation. I urge each of my colleagues to study Senator BUCKLEY's comments and to give them their careful attention throughout the debate on S. 3044 and other legislation designed to reform the conduct and financing of political campaigns.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senator's comments be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

[From Human Events, March 30, 1974]

SENATOR BUCKLEY ON CAMPAIGN REFORM

(NOTE.—The Senate is scheduled to take up campaign reform legislation this week. The bill under consideration—S 3044—includes, among many changes, a proposal for public financing of campaigns. Sen. Buckley (C.-R.-N.Y.) has made an in-depth study of the entire measure and in the following exclusive interview discusses the numerous practical and constitutional objections to the bill.)

Q. President Nixon recently made a rather lengthy statement on campaign reform. What was your reaction to his proposals?

A. There were too many proposals included in his package to allow me to give you anything even approaching a definitive answer here, but I will say that I find myself in general agreement with the thrust of his proposals—especially as compared with those included in S 3044, the bill recently reported out of the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration.

The President's proposals seem designed to deal with the problems in our present system, while the Senate bill we will have before us shortly would scrap that system. I would be among the first to admit that our present system of selecting candidates and financing campaigns needs reform, but I am not at all convinced that we should abandon it for a scheme that would diminish citizen participation in politics and, in all probability, would create more problems than it would solve.

Q. S 3044 is the bill that includes public financing of presidential, Senate and House campaigns, isn't it?

A. That's right. The bill that we will soon debate includes provisions that would allow candidates for any federal office to draw on tax funds to finance their campaigns. The system would replace the essentially private system now in effect and would cost the American taxpayer some $358 million every four years.

More importantly, however, this scheme presents us with grave constitutional and practical questions that I hope will be fully debated on the floor of the Senate before we vote.

Q. Why do you object so strongly to public financing?

A. I object because I am convinced that such drastic measures are needed to clear up the problems we confront, because I suspect that the proposals as drawn are unconstitutional and because if implemented they would alter the political landscape of this country in a way that many don't even suspect and very few would support.

Those in and out of Congress who advocate public financing are selling it as a cure-all for our national and political ills. For example. Sen. Kennedy recently went so far as to say that "most, and probably all, of the serious problems facing this country today have their roots in the way we finance political campaigns. . . ."

This statement reminds one of the hyperbole associated with the selling of New Frontier and Great Society programs in the '60s. The American people were asked then to accept expensive and untried programs as panaceas for all our ills.

Those programs didn't work. They were oversold, vastly more expensive than anyone anticipated, and left us with more problems than they solved. Public financing is a Great Society approach to another problem of public concern and like other solutions based on the theory that federal dollars will solve everything should be rejected.

Q. In what ways should public financing "alter the political landscape"?

A. In several very important if not totally predictable ways.

First, under our present system potential candidates must essentially compete for private support, and to attract that support they have to address themselves to issues of major importance to the people who will be contributing to their campaigns and voting for them on election day. Public financing might allow candidates to ignore these issues, fuzz their stands and run campaigns in which intelligent debate on important matters is subordinated to a "Madison Avenue" approach to the voters.

Let me give you a couple of examples. During the course of the 1972 campaign, it is reported that Sen. McGovern was forced by the need for campaign money to place greater emphasis on his support of a Vietnam pullout than his political advisers thought wise. They felt that he should have downplayed the issue and concentrated on others that might be better received by the electorate.

I don't doubt for a minute that the senator's emphasis on his Vietnam position hurt him, but I wonder if we really want to move toward a system that would allow a candidate to avoid such issues or gloss over positions of concern to millions of Americans.

The need to court the support of other groups creates similar problems. Those who believe that we should maintain a friendly stance toward Israel, for example, as well as those who think a candidate should support union positions on a whole spectrum of issues want to know where a candidate stands before they give him their vocal and financial support. The need to complete for campaign dollars forces candidates to address many issues and I consider this vital to the maintenance of a sound democratic system.

Second, millions of Americans now contribute voluntarily to federal, state and local political campaigns. These people see their decision to contribute to one campaign or another as a means of political expression. Public financing of federal general election campaigns would deprive people of an opportunity to participate and to express their strongly held opinions.

They would still be contributing, of course, since the Senate proposal will cost them hundreds of millions of dollars in tax money. But their participation would be compulsory and would involve the use of their money to support candidates and positions they find morally and politically reprehensible.

Third, the proposal reported out of the Senate Rules Committee, like similar proposals advanced in the past, combines public financing with strict limits on expenditures. These limits must, on the whole, work to the benefits of incumbents, since they are lower than the amount that a challenger might have to spend presently in a hotly contested race if he wants to overcome the advantages of his opponent's incumbency.

Fourth, the various schemes devised to distribute federal dollars among various candidates and between the parties has to affect power relationships that now exist. Thus, if you give money directly to the candidate you further weaken the party system. If you give the money to the national party, you strengthen the national party organization relative to the state parties. If you aren't extremely careful you will freeze out or lock in minor parties. These are real problems with significant policy consequences that those who drew up the various public financing proposals tended to ignore.

Public financing will have two significant effects on third parties, neither desirable. In the first place, it will discriminate against genuine national third-party movements (such as that of George Wallace in 1968) because such parties haven't had the chance to establish a voting record of the kind required to qualify for financing.

On the other hand, once a third party qualifies for future federal financing, a vested interest arises in keeping it alive—even if the George Wallace who gave it its sole reason for existence should move on. Thus we run the risk of financing a proliferation of parties that could destroy the stability we have historically enjoyed through our two-party system.

Q. You say public financing raises grave constitutional questions. Are you saying that these plans might be struck down in the courts?

A. It is obviously rather difficult to say in advance just how the courts might decide when we don't know how the case will be brought before them, but I do think there is a real possibility that subsidies, expenditure limitations and contribution ceilings could all be found unconstitutional.

All of these proposals raise 1st Amendment questions since they all either ban, limit or direct a citizen's right of free speech.

In this light it is interesting to note that a three-judge panel in the District of Columbia has already found portions of the 1971 act unconstitutional.

The 1971 Act prohibits the media from charging for political advertising unless the candidate certifies that the charge will not cause his spending to exceed the limits imposed by the law. This had the effect of restricting the freedom both of individuals wishing to buy ads and of newspapers and other media that might carry them and, in the opinion of the D.C. court, violated the 1st Amendment.

Q. But Senator, according to the report prepared by the Senate Rules Committee on S 3044, it is claimed that these questions were examined and that the committee was satisfied that objections involving the effect of the legislation on existing political arrangements were without real functions.

A. I can only say that I must respectfully disagree with my colleagues on the Rules Committee. The committee report discusses a number of compromises worked out in the process of drawing up S 3044, but I don't think these compromises do very much to answer the objections I have raised.

The ethical, constitutional and practical questions remain.

The fact is that the ultimate impact of a proposal of this kind on our present party structure cannot be accurately predicted. S 3044 may either strengthen parties because of the crucial control the party receives over what the committee calls the "marginal increment" of campaign contributions, or it may further weaken the parties because the government subsidy is almost assured to the candidate, thereby relieving him of substantial reliance on the "insurance" the party treasury provides. One can't be sure and that alone should lead one to doubt the wisdom of supporting the bill as drawn.

As for third parties, the effect of the bill is equally unclear. It does avoid basing support for third parties simply on performance in the last election and thus "perpetuating" parties that are no longer viable. But the proposal does not deal, for instance, with the possibility of a split in one of the two major parties—where two or more groups claim the mantle of the old party.

Q. Senator Buckley, advocates of public financing of federal election campaigns claim that political campaigning in America is such an expensive proposition that only the very wealthy and those beholden to special interests can really afford to run for office. Do you agree with this claim?

A. No, I do not.

First, it is erroneous to charge that we spend an exorbitant amount on political campaigns in this country. In relative terms we spend far less on our campaigns than is spent by other democracies and, frankly, I think we get more for our money.

Thus, while we spent approximately $1.12 per vote in all our 1968 campaigns, the last year for which we have comparative figures, Israel was spending more than $21 per vote. An index of comparative cost of 1968 reveals that political expenditures in democratic countries vary widely from 27 cents in Australia to the far greater amount spent in Israel. This index shows the U.S. near the bottom in per vote expenditures along with such countries as India and Japan.

Second, I think we should make it clear that the evidence suggests that most contributors—large as well as small—give money to candidates because they support the candidate's beliefs, not because they are out to buy themselves a congressman, a governor or a President. Many of those advocating federal financing forget this in their desire to condemn private campaign funding as an evil that must be abolished.

Anyone who has run for public office realizes that most of those who give to a campaign are honest public-spirited people who simply want to see a candidate they support elected because they believe the country will benefit from his point of view. To suggest otherwise impresses me as insulting to those who seek elective office and to the millions of Americans who contribute to their campaigns.

I don't mean to imply that there aren't exceptions to this rule. There are dishonest people in politics as there are in other professions, but they certainly don't dominate the profession.

Q. But doesn't the wealthy candidate have a real advantage under our current system?

A. Oh, he has an advantage all right, but I'm not sure it's as great as some people would have us believe.

I say this because I am convinced that given adequate time a viable candidate will be able to attract the financial support he needs to get his campaign off the ground and thereby overcome the initial advantage of a personally wealthy opponent. And I am also convinced that a candidate who doesn't appeal to the average voter won't get very far regardless of how much money he throws into his own campaign.

My own campaign for the Senate back in 1970 illustrates this point rather clearly. I was running that year as the candidate of a minor party against a man who was willing and able to invest more than $2 million of his family's money in a campaign in which he began as the favorite.

I couldn't possibly match him personally, but I was able to attract the support of more than 40,000 citizens who agreed with my positions on the issues. We still weren't able to match my opponent dollar for dollar—he spent twice as much as we did—but we raised enough to run a creditable campaign, and we did manage to beat him at the polls.

At the national level it is just as difficult to say that money is the determining factor and the evidence certainly suggests that personal wealth won't get a man to the White House. If it were the case that the richest man always comes out on top, Rockefeller would have triumphed over Goldwater in 1964, Taft over Eisenhower in 1952 and neither Nixon nor Stevenson would ever have received their parties' nominations.

What I'm saying, of course, is that while money is important it isn't everything.

Q. Wouldn't public financing assist challengers trying to unseat entrenched congressmen and senators who have lost touch with their constituents?

A. I don't like to think of myself as overly cynical, but neither am I naive enough to believe that majorities in the House and Senate are about to support legislation that won't at least give them a fair shake.

The fact is that most of the "reforms" we have been discussing work to the advantage of the incumbent—not the challenger. The incumbent has built-in advantages that are difficult to overcome under the best of circumstances and might well be impossible to offset if the challenger is forced, for example, to observe an unrealistically low spending limit.

Incumbents are constantly in the public eye. They legitimately command TV and radio news coverage that is exempt from the "equal time" provisions of current law. They can regularly communicate with constituents on legislative issues, using franking privileges. Over the years they will have helped tens of thousands of constituents with specific problems involving the federal government. These all add up to a massive advantage for the incumbent which may well require greater spending by a challenger to overcome.

Q. What kind of candidates will benefit from public financing?

A. Any candidate who is better known when the campaign begins or is in a position to mobilize non-monetary resources must benefit as compared to less-known candidates and those whose supporters aren't in a position to give them such help.

This is necessarily true because the spending and contributions limits that are an integral part of all the public funding proposals I have seen even out only one of the factors that will determine the outcome of a given campaign. Other factors therefore become increasingly important and may well determine the winner on election day.

Thus, incumbents who are usually better known than their challengers benefit because experience has shown that a challenger often has to spend significantly more than his incumbent opponent simply to achieve a minimum degree of recognition.

In addition, consider the advantage that a candidate whose backers can donate time to his campaign will have over one whose backers just don't have the time to donate. In this context one can easily imagine a situation in which a liberal campus-oriented candidate might swamp a man whose support comes primarily from blue collar, middle-class workers who would contribute money to their man, but don't have time to work in his campaign.

Or consider the candidate running on an issue that attracts the vocal and "independent support of groups that can provide indirect support without falling under the limitations imposed by law. The effectiveness of the anti-war movement and the way in which issue-oriented anti-war activists were able to mesh their efforts with those of friendly candidates illustrates the problem.

David Broder of the Washington Post noted in a very perceptive analysis of congressional maneuvering on this issue that most members seem to sense that these reforms will, in fact, help a certain kind of candidate. His comments on this are worth quoting at length.

". . . [T]he votes by which the public financing proposal was passed in the Senate had a marked partisan and ideological coloration. Most Democrats and most liberals in both parties supported public financing; most Republicans and most conservatives in both parties voted against it.

"The presumption that liberals and Democrats would benefit from the change is strengthened by the realization that money is just one of the sources of influence on a political contest. If access to large sums is eliminated as a potential advantage of one candidate or party by the provision of equal public subsidies for all, then the election outcome will likely be determined by the ability to mobilize other forces.

"The most important of these other factors are probably manpower and publicity. Legislation that eliminates the dollar influence on politics automatically enhances the influence of those who can provide manpower or publicity for the campaign.

"That immediately conjures up, for Republicans and conservatives, the union boss, the newspaper editor and the television anchorman—three individuals to whom they are rather reluctant to entrust their fate of electing the next President."

Q. You indicated a few minutes ago that public financing will cost the American taxpayer hundreds of millions of dollars and that many Americans might be forced to give to candidates and campaigns they find repugnant.

A. That's right; it is estimated that the plan envisioned by the sponsors of S 3044 would cost nearly $360 million every four years and other plans that have been discussed might cost even more.

Necessarily, this will involve spending tax dollars, extracted from individuals for the support of candidates and causes with which may of them will profoundly disagree. The fundamental objection to this sort of thing was perhaps best summed up nearly 200 years ago by Thomas Jefferson who wrote: "To compel a man to furnish contributions of money for the propagation of opinions which he disbelieves and abhors, is sinful and tyrannical."

Q. But won't this money be voluntarily designated by taxpayers participating in the check-off plan that has been in effect now for more than two years?

A. Not exactly. As you may recall, the check-off was originally established to give individual taxpayers a chance to direct one dollar of their tax money to the political party of their choice for use in the next presidential campaign.

When it was extended by the Congress last year, however, the ground rules were changed so that this year taxpayers are not able to select the party to which their dollar is to be directed. They are simply allowed to designate that the dollar should go into the Presidential Election Campaign Fund to be divided up at a later date. Thus, while the taxpayer may still refrain from participating he may well be directing his dollar to the opposition party if he elects to participate.

A theoretical example will illustrate this. Let us assume that two candidates run in 1976 and that the money to be divided up amounts to $10 million dollars. Half of this would go to each candidate, but let us further assume that 60 per cent of this money or $6 million is contributed by Democrats. Under this set of circumstances a million Democrats would unwittingly be contributing to the campaign of a candidate they don't support and for whom they probably won't vote.

If S 3044 passes things will get even worse. During the first year only 2.8 per cent of the tax-paying public elected to contribute to the fund. This disappointing participation was generally attributed to the fact that it was difficult to elect to participate. Therefore this year the form was simplified and a great effort is being made to get people to participate.

As a result about 15 per cent of those filing appear to be participating and while this increase seems to warm the hearts of those who have plans for this money it will not raise nearly enough money to finance the comprehensive plan the sponsors of S 3044 have in mind.

Therefore they have found a way to increase participation. Under the terms of S 3044 the check-off would be doubled to allow $2 from each individual to go into the fund, but the individual taxpayer will no longer have to designate. Instead, his $2 will be automatically designated for him unless he objects. This is a scheme designed to increase participation reminiscent of the way book clubs used to sell books by telling their members they would receive the month's selection unless they chose not to. As I recall, Ralph Nader and his friends didn't like this practice when book clubs were engaged in it and one can only hope that they will be equally outraged now that Uncle Sam is in the act.

But S 3044 goes further still. If enough people resist in spite of the government's efforts to get them to participate, the Congress will be authorized to make up the difference out of general revenues. So, after all is said, it appears that the check-off is little more than a fraud on the taxpayer.

This to me is one of the most objectionable features of this whole scheme. It is an attempt to make people think they are participating and exercising free choice when in fact their choices are being made for them by the government.

Q. If there are problems and you can't support public financing, just what sort of reform do you favor?

A. I said earlier that I prefer the general thrust of the President's message on campaign reform as compared to the direction represented by S. 3044. The President, unlike the sponsors of the Senate legislation we will soon be debating, seems to grasp the problems inherent in any overly rigid regulation of individual and group political activity in a free society.

We have to recognize that any regulation of political activity raises serious constitutional questions and involves limitations on the freedom of our citizens. This has to be kept in mind as we analyze and judge the various "reform" proposals now before us. Our job involves a balancing of competing and often contradictory interests that just isn't as easy as it might appear to the casual observer.

Thus, while we are called upon to do what we can to eliminate abuses, we must do so with an eye toward side effects that could render the cure worse than the disease.

I happen to believe rather strongly that this is the case with public financing and with proposals that would impose arbitrary limits on campaign spending and, thereby, on political activity.

The same problem must be faced if we decide to limit the size of individual political contributions. In this area, however, I would not oppose reasonable limits that would neither unduly discriminate against those who wish to support candidates they admire or give too great an advantage to other groups able to make substantial non-monetary contributions.

The least dangerous form of regulation and the one I suspect might prove most effective in the long run is the one which simply imposes disclosure requirements on candidates and political committees. The 1971 Act—which has never really been tested—was passed on the theory that major abuses could best be handled by full and open disclosure.

The theory was that if candidates want to accept sizable contributions from people associated with one interest or cause as opposed to another, they should be allowed to do so as long as they are willing to disclose receipt of the money. The voter might then decide if he wants to support the candidate in spite of—or because of—the financial support he has received.

The far-reaching disclosure requirements written into the 1971 Act went in effect in April 1972 after much of the money used to finance the 1972 campaigns had already been raised. This money—raised prior to April 7, 1972—did not have to be reported in detail and it was this unreported money that financed many of the activities that have been included in what has come to be known as the Watergate affair.

I feel that the 1971 Act, as amended last year, deserves a real test before we scrap it. It didn't get that test in 1972, but it will this fall. I would hope, therefore, that we will wait until 1975 before considering the truly radical changes under consideration.

On the other hand, there are a few loopholes that we can close right away. It seems to me, for example, that we might move immediately to ban cash contributions and expenditures of more than, say, $100.

But consider the smaller contributor who might want to give to a candidate viewed with hostility by his employer, his friends and others in a position to retaliate. How about the bank teller who wants to give $10 to a candidate who wants to nationalize banks? Or the City Hall employe who might want to give $5 to the man running against the incumbent mayor? What effect might the knowledge that one's employer could uncover the fact of the contribution have on the decision to give? The problem is obvious when we remember that the White House "enemies list" was drawn up in part from campaign disclosure reports.

Still, it is a problem that we may have to live with if we are to accomplish the minimal reform necessary to "clean up" our existing system.

Q. So you believe that "full disclosure" is the answer?

A. Essentially. But I don't want you to get the idea that disclosure laws will solve all our problems or that they themselves don't create new problems. I simply feel that they create fewer problems and are more likely to eliminate gross abuses than the other measures we have discussed.

Q. You say that "full disclosure" laws also create new problems. What kind of new problems?

A. Well, you may recall that Sen. Muskie's 1972 primary campaign reportedly ran into trouble after April 1972 because a number of his larger contributors were Republicans who didn't want it publicly known that they were supporting a Democrat. The disclosure requirements included in the 1971 Act clearly inhibited their willingness to give and, therefore, at least arguably had what constitutional lawyers call a "chilling effect" on their right of self-expression.

These were large contributors with prominent names. Perhaps their decision to give should not be viewed as lamentable in the context of the purpose of the act.

Q. Senator, are there any other "reforms" that you think worthy of consideration?

A. Well, there are a good many proposals being circulated that we haven't had a real chance to discuss, but I'm afraid most of them raise more questions than they answer.

S. 3044 does contain one proposal that might be worth consideration and has, in fact, been raised separately by a number of senators. Under our current tax laws a taxpayer can claim either a tax credit or a deduction for political contributions to candidates, political committees or parties of his choice. The allowable tax credit that can now be claimed amounts to $12.50 per individual or $25 on a joint return and the deduction if limited to $50 or $100 on a joint return.

The authors of S. 3044 would double the allowable credits and deductions. Sen. William V. Roth (R-Del.) has proposed that we go even further by increasing the allowable credit to $150 per individual or $300 for those filing joint returns.

These proposals would presumably increase the incentive for private giving without limiting the freedom of choice of the individual contributor. If any proposal designed to broaden the base of campaign funding is worth consideration I would think this is it.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON AGING TO FILE ITS REPORT

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to move from March 29 to April 30 the date by which the report of the Special Committee on Aging, "Developments in Aging 1973, January–March 1974," shall be submitted.

I am making this request in order to give additional time for the completion of minority views.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT OF THE LAND AND WATER CONSERVATION FUND ACT

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, at the direction of the distinguished majority leader, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 719, S. 2844.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

S. 2844 to amend the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act, as amended, to provide for collection of special recreation use fees at additional campgrounds, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 4 of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (78 Stat. 789), as amended (16 U.S.C. 4001–6a), is further amended as follows;

(a) The heading of the section is revised to read:

"ADMISSION AND USE FEES; ESTABLISHMENT AND REGULATIONS".

(b) The second sentence of section 4(a) is amended to read: "No admission fees of any kind shall be charged or imposed for entrance into any other federally owned areas which are operated and maintained by a Federal agency and used for outdoor recreation purposes."

(c) Subsection (a)(1) is revised to read:

"(1) For admission into any such designated area, an annual admission permit (to be known as the Golden Eagle Passport) shall be available, for a fee of not more than $10. The permittee and any person accompanying him in a single, private, noncommercial vehicle, or alternatively, the permittee and his spouse, children, and parents accompaning him where entry to the area is by any means other than private, noncommercial vehicle, shall be entitled to general admission into any area designated pursuant to this subsection. The annual permit shall be valid during the calendar year for which the annual fee is paid. The annual permit shall not authorize any uses for which additional fees are charged pursuant to subsections (b) and (c) of this section. The annual permit shall be nontransferable and the unlawful use thereof shall be punishable in accordance with regulations established pursuant to subsection (e). The annual permit shall be available for purchase at any such designated area."

(d) Subsection (a)(2) is revised by deleting in the first sentence "or who enter such an area by means other than by private, noncommercial vehicle"

(e) Subsection (a)(4) is amended by revising the first two sentences to read: "The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture shall establish procedures providing for the issuance of a lifetime admission permit (to be known as the 'Golden Age Passport') to any citizen of, or person domiciled in, the United States sixty-two years of age or older applying for such permit. Such permit shall be transferable, shall be issued without charge, and shall entitle the permittee and any person accompanying him in a single, private, noncommercial vehicle, or alternatively, the permittee and his spouse and children accompanying him where entry to the area is by any other means other than private, noncomercial vehicle, to general admission into any area designated pursuant to this subsection."

(f) In subsection (b) the first paragraph is revised to read:

"(b) RECREATION USE FEES.—Each Federal agency developing, administering, providing or furnishing at Federal expense, specialized outdoor recreation sites, facilities, equipment, or services shall, in accordance with this subsection and subsection (d) of this section, provide for the collection of daily recreation use fees at the place of use or any reasonably convenient location: Provided, That in no event shall there be a charge by any such agency for the use, either singly or in any combination, of drinking water, wayside exhibits, roads, overlook sites, visitors' centers, scenic drives, toilet facilities, picnic tables, or boat ramps: Provided, however, That a fee shall be charged for picnic areas or boat ramps, with specialized facilities or services: Provided, further, That in no event shall there be a charge for the use of any campground not having the following—tent or trailer spaces, drinking water, access road, refuse containers, toilet facilities, and simple devices for containing a campfire (where campfires are permitted). Any Golden Age Passport permittee shall be entitled upon presentation of such permit to utilize such special recreation facilities at a rate of 50 per centum of the established use fee."

(g) In subsection (b) paragraph "(1)" is deleted; the paragraph designation "2" is redesignated as subsection "(c) RECREATION PERMITS.—"; and subsequent subsections are redesignated accordingly.

(h) In new subsection (d) the second sentence is revised to read: "Clear notice that a fee has been established pursuant to this section shall be prominently posted at each area and at appropriate locations therein and shall be included in publications distributed at such areas."

(i) In new subsection (e) the first sentence is revised to read: "In accordance with the provisions of this section, the heads of appropriate departments and agencies may prescribe rules and regulations for areas under their administration for the collection of any fee established pursuant to this section."

(j) In new subsection (f) the first sentence is revised to read as follows:

"(f) Except as otherwise provided by law or as may be required by lawful contracts entered into prior to September 3, 1964, providing that revenues collected at particular Federal areas shall be credited to specific purposes, all fees which are collected by any Federal agency shall be covered into a special account in the Treasury of the United States to be administered in conjunction with, but separate from, the revenues in the Land and Water Conservation Fund: Provided, That the head of any Federal agency, under such terms and conditions as he deems appropriate, may contract with any public or private entity to provide visitor reservation services; and any such contract may provide that the contractor shall be permitted to deduct a commission to be fixed by the agency head from the amount charged the public for providing such services and to remit the net proceeds therefrom to the contracting agency."

SEC. 2. Section 6(e)(1) of title I of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (78 Stat. 897), as amended (16 U.S.C. 4601), is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Whenever a State provides that the owner of a single-family residence may, at his option, elect to retain a right of use and occupancy for not less than six months from the date of acquisition of such residence and such owner elects to retain such a right, such owner shall be deemed to have waived any benefits under sections 203, 204, 205, and 206 of the Uniform Relocation Assistance and Real Property Acquisition Policies Act of 1970 (84 Stat. 1894) and for the purposes of those sections such owner shall not be considered a displaced person as defined in section 101 (6) of that Act.".

SEC. 3. Section 9 of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (78 Stat. 897), as amended (16 U.S.C. 4601–10a), is further amended by deleting in the first sentence "section 6(a)(1)" and substituting "section 7(a)(1)".

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, for the time being, that the Senate go into executive session to consider two nominations for the U.S. Coast Guard.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nominations for the U.S. Coast Guard, will be stated.

U.S. COAST GUARD

The legislative clerk read the nominations in the U.S. Coast Guard, which had been reported earlier today, as follows:

Rear Admiral Ellis Lee Perry, to be Vice Commandant of the U.S. Coast Guard, with the grade of vice admiral.

Rear Admiral Owen W. Siler, to be Commandant of the U.S. Coast Guard for a term of 4 years, with the grade of admiral.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations be considered en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations are considered and confirmed en bloc.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of these nominations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUDDLESTON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT OF THE LAND AND WATER CONSERVATION FUND ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2844) to amend the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act, as amended, to provide for collection of special recreation use fees at additional campgrounds, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a time limitation on the pending bill, S. 2844, for not to exceed 15 minutes, with 10 minutes to be allotted to Mr. BARTLETT and 5 minutes to be allotted to Mr. BIBLE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask that Mr. MCCLURE be allowed to speak for not to exceed 15 minutes, out of order, without the time being charged against the time on the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCLURE. I thank the Senator from West Virginia.

VIETNAM VETERANS DAY

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, the President of the United States has designated today as a national day of recognition of the contributions of the veterans of Vietnam. In conjunction with that observance, we have a delegation in the United States from South Vietnam to pay their tribute and to bring their greetings from President Thieu concerning the contributions of the American fighting men, to the security and the maintenance of South Vietnam.

President Thieu has sent this delegation, which consists of Mr. Pham Do Thanh, who is not only a senator but also the President of the Vietnam Veteran Association; Mr. Buu Thang, Assistant to the Director General of the Central Logistics Agency; and Mr. Le Huu Phuoc, a lawyer in the Court of Saigon.

They presented to me, on behalf of the President of South Vietnam, the proclamation by President Thieu; and I ask unanimous consent that the message from President Thieu be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the message was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MESSAGE OF PRESIDENT NGUYEN VAN THIEU, TO THE AMERICAN VETERANS OF THE VIETNAM WAR, ON THE OCCASION OF THE FIRST VIETNAM VETERANS DAY, MARCH 29, 1974

DEAR FRIENDS: On the occasion of the first Viet Nam Veterans Day, I would like to extend my best personal regards to each and every American who in the past has chosen to make common cause with the Vietnamese people at a dark moment of our history.

Thanks to your noble sacrifice and unselfish determination to stand by a small and struggling nation in its hour of peril, America has proved once again the sterling worth of its commitments and its unshakeable faith in an international order that refuses to condone aggression. This strength and greatness of vision have resulted in a world made much safer after nearly three decades of the Cold War, a world in which the chances of peace are probably greater than at any other time in recent history.

In our case, the aggression from the North, checked only by the sacrifice of countless American, Vietnamese and allied comrades-in-arms, has resulted in an agreement which in spite of its imperfections has nonetheless allowed for the first time the South Vietnamese people to think in terms of reconstruction and development efforts. The Paris Agreement of January 27, 1973, did not merely bring out an honorable conclusion to the direct American involvement in the conflict in our land, it also strengthened the legal bases of the Republic of Viet Nam in its continued struggle for self-defense and freedom in this part of the world.

The army and people of the Republic of Viet Nam are therefore eternally grateful to the American people, especially to its valiant sons, for their past contributions and present continued support; we are confident of the future and vow to consolidate the gains that we all have won together so that the sacrifices you have accepted on our behalf will never be thought to have been made in vain.

In this hour of communion, the people and army of the Republic of Viet Nam also turn our thoughts to the 55,000 Americans who accepted to make the supreme sacrifice of their lives for the cause of freedom in Viet Nam. To them and to the bereaved families of these heroes, we can only incline ourselves in the deepest expression of our respect and gratitude, praying that they rest in heaven in the happy knowledge that they had contributed no small share to the defense of human dignity on earth.

My final expressions of thanks on behalf of the Vietnamese nation go to the parents, wives, sons and daughters of the millions of Americans veterans who had participated in the conflict in our land, for without their faith and silent acquiescence in the heroism of their men, the Viet Nam War could not have been brought to a successful end. To them and to their beloved husbands and sons, we wish a most memorable Viet Nam Veterans Day.

Thank you and may God bless you all.

NGUYEN VAN THIEU,
President of the Republic of Vietnam.

AMENDMENT OF THE LAND AND WATER CONSERVATION FUND ACT

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2844) to amend the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act, as amended, to provide for collection of special recreation use fees at additional campgrounds, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask for 1 minute, the time not to be charged against either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that S. 2844 be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate resume consideration of the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 20, between lines 22 and 23, insert the following:

"(d) No payment shall be made under this title to any candidate for any campaign in connection with any election occurring before January 1, 1976.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the name of the distinguished senior Senator from Washington (Mr. MAGNUSON) be added as a cosponsor of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is very plain. There is an element of self-interest, if not conflict-of-interest, for Members of the Senate who are approaching their own campaigns for reelection in 1974 to vote for Federal funding in their campaigns. This amendment would put over until the election of 1976 the public funding provisions of the act, and thus would eliminate any self-serving by Senators who face elections this year.

It is on that basis the amendment is offered, and I hope it will be accepted.

Mr. CANNON. I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. President, this is a good amendment. I do not believe that the committee contemplated that if this bill were passed, it could take effect prior to the 1976 elections. While we did not write that specifically into the bill, I would have no hesitancy to accept the amendment, to make clear that it could not apply prior to the 1976 elections. Therefore, I am willing to accept the amendment, and I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CHURCH. I thank the Senator very much. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time on the amendment is yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, there will be no further action on the unfinished business, S. 3044, today.

I ask now that the Senate resume consideration of S. 2844.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT OF THE LAND AND WATER CONSERVATION FUND ACT

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2844) to amend the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act, as amended, to provide for collection of special recreation use fees at additional campgrounds, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. I ask that the time not be charged against either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, at the direction of the distinguished Senator from Nevada (Mr. BIBLE), I ask unanimous consent that appropriate extracts from the committee report be printed in the RECORD in explanation of S. 2844.

There being no objection, the extracts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PURPOSE OF BILL

The purpose of S. 2844, as amended, is to amend the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act in order to clarify that Act in several respects relating primarily to user fees on Federal recreation lands.

Public Law 93–81, enacted in August 1973, amended the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act in a manner which was interpreted so as to curtail severely the number of campsites for which user fees may be charged by Federal agencies. S. 2844, as reported, seeks to clarify the situation my detailing those facilities and services for which no fee may be charged while retaining the general criteria for all other facilities.

In addition, the bill makes clear that the Golden Eagle and Golden Age passports allow entry by means other than private, noncommercial vehicle, and may be used by parties entering, for example, on foot, by commercial bus, or by horseback. It also provides that the Golden Age Passport will be a lifetime passport, rather than one which must be reissued annually.

The bill also gives the head of any Federal agency the authority to contract with any public or private entity to provide visitor reservation services and allows the states when utilizing monies from the Land and Water Conservation Fund in connection with land acquisition for state parks to waive the applicability of the Uniform Relocation Assistance and Real Property Acquisition Policies Act of 1970 in cases where a landowner elects to retain a right of use and occupancy.

BACKGROUND AND NEED

Historically, the fee program has encountered problems, especially with areas under the jurisdiction of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, in connection with the collection of recreation use fees. It was the intent of Congress that recreation use fees should be limited to those facilities which require a substantial investment and regular maintenance and that no recreation use fees should be collected for the use of facilities which virtually all visitors might reasonably expect to utilize, such as roads, trails, overlooks, visitor centers, wayside exhibits, or picnic areas.

The 1973 amendment to the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act was meant to spell out and make clear that Congress does not intend to authorize fees for those facilities or combination of facilities which visitors have traditionally received without charge in Corps project areas.

The Interior Department interpreted this amendment in a way that limited the number of campgrounds for which use fees could be charged by Federal agencies. The effect of this interpretation has been a substantial loss of revenues by the National Park Service, the Forest Service, the Army Corps of Engineers and other agencies which had been collecting campground fees at campgrounds which the Departments felt no longer qualified for fee collection. If not corrected, the total loss has been estimated to be between $7.2 million and $8.2 million per year.

Because of the problems which arose as a result of the enactment of Public Law 93–81 and its interpretation by the Executive agencies, S. 2844 was introduced. The Committee is hopeful that this legislation will rectify the situation and that finally a uniform and equitable fee system on Federal recreation lands can be established.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF S. 2844, AS AMENDED

1. Section 1(b) amends the second sentence of section 4(a) of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act.—This amendment makes it clear that the prohibition on charging admission fees for entrance into areas, other than designated units of the National Park System administered by the Department of the Interior and designated National Recreation Areas administered by the Department of Agriculture, applies only to federally owned areas that are operated and maintained by a Federal agency. Outdoor recreation sites in Federal areas are now leased and are operated and/or maintained by a variety of non-Federal public entities and private, nonprofit associations for a variety of purposes. For example, subsection 2(b) of the Federal Water Project Recreation Act, 79 Stat. 214, 16 U.S.C. § 460l–13(b) (1970), authorizes non-Federal interests to collect entrance and user fees at Federal water project recreation sites in order to repay the separable costs of the project allocated to recreation and fish and wildlife enhancement. This amendment ratifies the administrative interpretation that the prohibition of subsection 4(a) does not apply in such instances. Under the language of the amendment the prohibition of the act would apply to Corps of Engineers areas, for example, only if such areas are both operated and maintained by the Corps. If the area or a site within the area is operated by a non-Federal interest, but maintained by a Federal agency, the prohibition against fee collection would not apply.

2. Section 1(c)—concerns the Golden Eagle Passport. The purpose of this amendment is to allow the use of the Golden Eagle Passport for the purpose of gaining admission to a designated entrance fee area when entry is by some means other than by private, noncommercial vehicle, such as by commercial vehicle, bicycle, horse or foot. This expansion of the coverage of the Golden Eagle Passport is consistent with the policy of reducing the number of, and reliance on, the private automobiles in Federal recreation areas.

In the past the single, private, noncommercial vehicle has been considered to be an adequate device for limiting the number of persons entering an area on one passport. With the recognition of other modes of entry, it is necessary to define the number of persons who can enter on one passport. Accordingly, when entry is by some means other than by private, noncommercial vehicle, the permittee and his immediate family are considered by an equitable and just definition of the class of persons who should be entitled to entry. In order for the permittee's spouse, children or parents to be considered as accompanying the permittee, they must enter at the same time as the permittee enters, and in a physically proximate manner.

With the increasing popularity of motor homes and campaign vehicles, there has been a trend for one family or group to take two motor vehicles to a recreation area. Under the langauge of the amendment, only the permittee and the persons accompanying him in one vehicle would be allowed to enter on the permittee's passport. The persons in the second vehicle would not be covered. Such persons would be required to pay entrance fees just as would any other person not covered by the passport.

The word "permittee" has been substituted for the words "person purchasing" to make it clear that a passport may be utilized by a donee, if the passport is given as a gift. In such instances, the provision concerning the nontransferability of the passport would not be considered applicable until the donee has endorsed the passport. The Committee does not intend the same approach for the Golden Age Passport. Because the passport is issued without charge to qualifying applicants, to allow the passport to be given as a gift might invite abuse of the fee collection system. Accordingly, the provision concerning the nontransferability of the Golden Age Passport should be regarded as applicable from the initial isuance.

In addition, section 1(c) would delete the requirement that the Golden Eagle Passport be sold at post offices. Under the amendment, the Passport would be available for purchase at any designated entrance fee area.

3. Section 1(d) is a conforming amendment, consistent with changes made in the Golden Eagle Passport provision.

4. Section 1(e) concerns the Golden Age Passport. The amendment would change the Golden Age Passport to a lifetime passport so that persons entitled to a passport would not have to reapply each year. This change should also result in administrative savings for the issuing agencies.

It should be noted that, in the first sentence of subsection 4(a)(4), the word "entrance" is changed to admission. This change is to make it clear that for the purpose of gaining admission to designated entrance fee areas, the Golden Eagle Passport and the Golden Age Passport operate in the same manner. In addition, the Golden Age Passport allows the permittee to a 50 percent reduction in established recreation use fees. To further insure that both Passports operate in the same manner, the committee has adopted the same language with respect to which persons are entitled to entry on the Golden Age Passport as was used in the Golden Eagle Passport provision with one exception. That exception concerns the parents of the Golden Age permittee.

The amendment would also limit issuance of the Golden Age Passport to any citizen or person domiciled in the United States who is 62 years of age or older. Under existing legislation, any person qualifies, including foreign visitors, 62 years of age or older applying for the passport. In order for a person to be regarded as domiciled in the United States, he must have a fixed and permanent residence in the United States or its Territories to which he has the intention of returning whenever he is absent.

5. Section 1(f) changes the name of special recreation use fees to recreation use fees. This amendment requires each Federal agency, which furnishes at Federal expense, specialized sites, facilities, equipment or services, to collect daily recreation use fees, in accordance with the criteria set out in section 4(d). The amendment would allow such fees to be collected at the place of use or at any other location which is reasonably convenient to the collecting agency and the public. In the case of designated national recreation areas and units of the National Park System, the reasonably convenient location may be the point of entrance into the area in which such sites, facilities, equipment or services are furnished.

The committee wishes to continue to restrict the authority to collect use fees to the use of specialized sites, facilities, equipment, or services. The criteria for determining whether sites, facilities, equipment, or services qualify as specialized shall be whether they involve substantial investment, regular maintenance, presence of personnel, or personal benefit to the user for a fixed period of time. These criteria are deliberately phrased in the disjunctive because the Committee recognizes that each criterion may not be applicable to each use for which a fee would be warranted. For example, a service may merit a fee, even though it cannot normally be said that services involve regular maintenance. On the other hand, a facility may well involve a substantial investment and regular maintenance, but not the presence of personnel.

However, the amendment does attempt to define those sites, facilities, equipment, and services which are not to be considered as specialized, and for which therefore, no fees are authorized, whether or not they are used singly or in any combination. Thus, the committee has decided that in no event shall there be a charge for drinking water, wayside exhibits, roads, overlook sites, visitors' centers, scenic drives, toilet facilities, picnic tables or boat ramps—providing that a fee shall be charged for picnic areas or boat ramps with specialized facilities or services. This prohibition on fee collection applies only to Federal agencies furnishing such sites, facilities, equipment or services at Federal expense. Like the use fee provision generally this prohibition does not apply to sites facilities equipment or services, including those specifically enumerated, furnished at non-Federal expense, i.e., those furnished by concessioners, contractors, cooperators or lessees, even though they are furnished on Federal lands.

In a further attempt to define what use fees can be charged for, the committee has established criteria specifying the level of camp-ground development which must be met before a fee can be collected for use of a campsite and adjacent, related facilities. In other words, the campground in which such site is located must have tent or trailer spaces, drinking water, an access road, refuse containers, toilet facilities and simple devices for containing a campfire (where campfires are permitted) in order to qualify for fee collection. The requirement of drinking water will be satisfied by any potable water whether delivered by a man-made device or natural means. Simple garbage cans will suffice as refuse containers. Toilet facilities may be portable or fixed, nonflush or flush. A simple device for containing a campfire may be a simple rock or concrete fire grill. Like the other enumerated amenities such device may be for individual or group use. The requirement for a fire-containing device shall not be deemed applicable where fires are prohibited because of weather or seasonal conditions or other safety considerations.

Consistent with its attempt to spell out what use fees may be charged for, the Committee's amendment further provides that a fee shall be charged for picnic areas or boat ramps with specialized facilities, equipment or services. For instance, if a picnic area has a gas or electric grill, then those who use that site shall be charged a fee.

In summary, it is the committee's intent to have a fixed level of services provided the visiting public before fees will be charged. Absent this minimal level of facilities the public should not be assessed a fee for use of Federal facilities.

The last sentence of subsection 4(b), as amended by the committee, would entitle the Golden Age Passport permittee to use specialized recreation facilities at a rate of 50 per centum of the established use fee. This entitlement applies only to the permittee. Persons accompanying the permittee are not entitled to any reductions where use fees are charged on an individual basis. This provision also does not apply to group use fees. The word "facilities" is used here generally to refer to specialized sites, facilities, equipment, and services, for which a fee is charged. In other words, the permittee is entitled to a 50 percent reduction in daily fees for the use of specialized sites, equipment and services, as well as for specialized facilities.

6. Section 1(g) redesignates subsection 4(b)(2) and 4(c) to clarify that fees may be charged for recreation permits covering such activities as group activities, recreation events, motorized recreation vehicles, and other specialized uses, even though such activities do not involve the use of specialized sites, facilities, equipment, or services, whether by groups or individuals. The establishment and collection of such fees are discretionary, including their establishment on an individual group, or vehicular basis. This clarifies the intent of Congress in enacting Public Law 92–347 and does not change the language of the act.

7. Section 1(h) broadens the redesignated subsection 4(d) so that the notice provision also applies to fees for recreation permits. The language "at appropriate locations" gives the collecting agencies sufficient flexibility so that notice may be posted at locations other than those where the permitted activities take place. Such locations may be, for example, the point of access to the Federal

Workmen installing a television surveillance unit had cut out power for a key safety device unbeknownst to the night shift.

Unwittingly, a control rod was pulled out, while the one next to it was already fully withdrawn. An "inadvertent criticality"—an unwanted nuclear reaction—began. After about two seconds, computerized controls cut in with a "scram," the nuclear word for an emergency shutdown.

The incident also caused somewhat of a chain reaction at the Atomic Energy Commission, resulting in an instant memorandum on the situation with a 71-destination routing slip, an investigation and, eventually a $15,000 fine, only the second the agency has ever levied against a nuclear power plant.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATOR HATFIELD TOMORROW

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the two leaders or their designees have been recognized under the order, Mr. HATFIELD be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

RECESS TO 1 P.M. TODAY

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 1 p.m. today.

There being no objection, at 12:31 p.m. the Senate took a recess until 1 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. HASKELL).

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HASKELL). Morning business is now concluded.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume the consideration of the unfinished business (S. 3044), which the clerk will state.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

S. 3044, to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum with the time to be taken out of both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, what is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is amendment No. 1070 to S. 3044. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment No. 1070 is as follows:

On page 2, line 1, strike all through page 86, line 17, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

TIME PERIOD FOR FEDERAL ELECTIONS

SEC. 2. The Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new title:

"TITLE V—TIME PERIOD FOR FEDERAL ELECTIONS

"FILING DATE

"SEC. 501. (a) No later than the first Tuesday of September preceding a regularly scheduled election, or sixty days preceding a special election, each candidate must file a registration statement with the State Secretary of State or the equivalent State official, in order to be eligible to appear on the primary or election ballot in such State or States. The registration statement shall include—

"(1) the identification of the candidate, and any individual, political committee, or other person authorized to receive contributions or make expenditures on behalf of the candidate in connection with the campaign;

"(2) the identification of any campaign depositories to be used in connection with the campaign;

"(3) an affidavit stating that no collections or expenditures have or will be undertaken in connection with the campaign prior to the filing deadline;

"(4) the identification of the party whose nomination the candidate will seek, or a statement that the candidate will seek to appear on the primary and election ballot as a candidate independent of any party affiliation.

"PRIMARY ELECTION

"SEC. 502 (a) All candidates for Federal elective office shall be nominated by means of a primary election to be held on the first Tuesday of October preceding the election, or thirty days preceding a special election. There shall be only one primary ballot or list of possible nominees for each party and one primary ballot or list for all nonpartisan candidates, and no candidate may appear on more than one such ballot or list. Each voter shall be entitled to vote for candidates from only one ballot or list.

"(b) Qualification of voters, determination of eligible parties, as well as rules and procedures for conducting the primary election shall be the responsibility of the States. Presidential electors and alternates shall be nominated by State political parties.

"PRIMARY ELECTION RESULT

"SEC. 503. The person receiving the greatest number of votes at the primary as a candidate of a party for an office shall be the candidate of the party at the following election: Provided, That any candidate who, is the sole candidate for that office at the primary election, or who is only opposed by a candidate or candidates running on the same ballot or list of nominees and is nominated at the primary shall be deemed and declared to be duly and legally elected to the office for which such person is a candidate. Any independent candidate receiving at least 10 percent of the total votes cast for the office for which he is a candidate at the primary, or a vote equal to the lowest vote received by a candidate seeking a party nomination who was nominated in the primary shall also be a candidate at the following election.".

LIMITATIONS ON CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

SEC. 3. Section 608 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to real as follows:

"§ 608. Limitations on contributions and expenditures

"(a) No person who is or becomes a candidate, or political committee for such candidate, in a campaign for nomination or in a campaign for election to Federal elective office may, directly or indirectly, in any way whatsoever—

"(1) accept or arrange for any contribution, or expend or contract for any obligation, prior to the filing deadline for the election; or

"(2) accept any cash contribution in excess of $50; or

"(3) accept any contribution, contract for any obligation, or make expenditures not budgeted and reported as provided by section 434 of title 2, United States Code, after a date two weeks prior to the scheduled election date; or

"(4) make expenditures or contributions in excess of $10,000 from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, or from such funds being contributed or expended through the use of a third party.

"(b) Any deficit incurred in connection with a campaign for nomination or election to Federal elective office shall constitute a violation of this section, and such deficit shall be paid only by means of contributions received under the supervision of and according to a procedure which shall have the prior approval of the Comptroller General.

"(c) Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine not to exceed $1,000, imprisonment not to exceed one year, or both.".

SEC. 4. Title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding the following sections:

"§ 614. Contributions by political committees

"Political committees shall not make any contribution to any candidate, political committee, or other campaign for Federal elective office: Provided, That such committees may administer or solicit contributions, so long as such contributions are given directly by the initial contributor to a candidate or political committee.

§ 615. No more than one political committee

"A candidate may establish no more than one political committee, which shall be in such candidate's own name: Provided, That the name of the committee, as well as the name of its chairman and treasurer, shall be filed with the Comptroller General immediately upon its formation; and should such a committee be established, all contributions received or expenditures made in connection with the campaign for nomination or election to Federal elective office shall be received or made by such committee and not by the candidate.".

REPORTS

SEC. 5. Section 434 of title 2, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

§ 434. One report by political committees or candidates

"(a) Each treasurer of a political committee supporting a candidate or candidates for Federal elective office—or each candidate, should such candidate not establish a political committee—shall file a report with the Comptroller General two weeks prior to a scheduled election date for such candidate or candidates.

"Contents of Reports

"(b) The report shall be cumulative, shall report with respect to any activity in connection with the candidacy, and shall disclose—

"(1) the full name and social security number of each person who has contributed to the campaign, together with the amount of such contributions;

"(3) the full name and mailing address of each person to whom expenditures have been made, together with the amount of such expenditures;

"(4) the total sum of all contributions received;

"(5) the total sum of all expenditures; and

"(6) the total sum of all debts and obligations.".

PENALTIES

SEC. 6. (a) Section 444 of title 2, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 441. Penalties for violations

"Any person who violates any of the provisions of this subchapter shall be fined in an amount at least equal to three times the amount of any monetary violation, or, in the case of nonmonetary violations, such amount as will satisfy the provisions of this subsection. The moneys collected from the fine shall be spent by the violator for general publication or transmission, to the widest possible extent in the geographical area in which the campaign or election was held, of at least the content of the Comptroller General's findings. The means of such transmission or publication shall be determined by the Comptroller General, and shall require the complete expenditure of the fine, unless the Comptroller General determines that a lesser amount, determined by him, will achieve complete publication and transmission of the nature of the violation. An additional fine may be levied if the Comptroller General shall determine that, due to the nature of the violation, an additional amount is needed to properly publish the violation.".

(b) Title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding the following section:

"§ 616. Penalties for violations

"Any person who violates any of the provisions of this subchapter shall be fined, in an amount at least equal to three times the amount of any monetary violation, or, in the case of nonmonetary violations, such amount as will satisfy the provisions of this subsection. The moneys collected from the fine shall be spent by the violator for general publication or transmission, to the widest possible extent in the geographical area in which the campaign or election was held, of at least the content of the Comptroller General's findings. The means of such transmission or publication shall be determined by the Comptroller General, and shall require the complete expenditure of the fine, unless the Comptroller General determines that a lesser amount, determined by him, will achieve complete publication and transmission of the nature of the violation. An additional fine may be levied if the Comptroller General shall determine that, due to the nature of the violation, an additional amount is needed to properly publish the violation.".

COMPTROLLER GENERAL

SEC. 7. The Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by inserting the words "Comptroller General" wherever the words "supervisory officer" appear. The Comptroller General shall make such rules or regulations as may be necessary or advisable for carrying out the provisions of this Act: Provided, That any rules or regulations so promulgated shall be published in the Federal Register not later than December 31, 1975.

EFFECT ON STATE LAW

SEC. 8. The provisions of this Act, and of rules or regulations promulgated under this Act, preempt any provision of State law with respect to campaigns for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office (as such term is defined in section 301(c)).

PARTIAL INVALIDITY

SEC. 9. If any provision of this Act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the Act and the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 10. The provisions of this Act shall become effective on December 31, 1975.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is it necessary that the amendment be read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been called up. It is not necessary that it be read.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Messrs. Field, Mihalec, Dotchin, and Baker of my staff be permitted access to the floor during debate on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield me 5 minutes?

Mr. WEICKER. I am happy to yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Connecticut for yielding time to me. I shall support his amendment, but the purpose of asking for the time now is to comment on two amendments that I will send to the desk after I have concluded my remarks, that would change the matching formula on primary races and would change the substantive provisions on general election races as to House and Senate races.

There has been considerable conjecture and argument as to whether the bill is an incumbent's bill or a challenger's bill, that is, whether it is weighted in favor of the incumbents or weighted in favor of the challengers.

The Senator from Alabama feels that if one side or the other should be favored, it should be the challengers on account of certain built-in advantages that the incumbents do have. So in order to remove any doubt about whether the challengers or the incumbents are favored, I have prepared two amendments, one dealing with the primaries of House and Senate Members and the other dealing with general elections of House and Senate Members.

The first amendment would have to do with primaries, and under the provisions of the bill the Federal Treasury would match dollar for dollar the contributions up to $100 received by the various candidates for the House and the Senate, and there would be equal matching.

The amendment I am offering as to primaries, as to incumbents it would match only one-half of matchable contributions, whereas for challengers it would match fully, that is dollar for dollar the contributions received by challengers. In other words, the Federal Government would match only one-half of the private contributions, private eligible contributions for incumbents but would match all of the eligible contributions received by challengers.

In the second amendment, in general elections, whereas the bill provides that the Federal Government would pay a subsidy of 15 cents per person of voting age in the congressional district or in the State, as the case might be, whether Congressman or Senator, the amendment would provide that only one-half of that amount would be paid to an incumbent, whereas the full subsidy in the general election would be paid to a challenger.

Under these provisions there would be no doubt but what this would give the challenger a break and would offset some of the built-in advantages an incumbent would have.

I believe it is necessary to make some distinction between a challenger and an incumbent as to the amount of the Federal subsidy that is given to the challenger and an incumbent. I believe these amendments, if adopted, would remove some of the built-in advantages an incumbent has in races, both in primaries and and in the general election.

Mr. President, I submit these amendments and I ask that they be printed and lie on the table, to be called up at a later date.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be received and printed, and will lie on the table.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time. I thank the distinguished Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, it is my intention to ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment. I will not do so at this time but certainly as we draw closer to hour of 3 o'clock I would appreciate it if we might get a sufficient number of Senators in the Chamber to assure the yeas and nays.

Mr. President, the amendment before the Senate is in the nature of a substitute to the bill. Some of the features of the bill are incorporated, so far as tightening up finance procedures during a campaign, yet the principal thrust of the bill as it relates to our election procedures is not only different from any proposed in the bill but completely different from our common practices so far as the selection and election of candidates within our present political system.

First, I wish to try to set a tone for what I advocate by saying I do not doubt in any way the desire to reform our campaign practices so far as the proponents of S. 3044 are concerned by the members of the committee, the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON) and others who have led the way, the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), and organizations such as common cause. I believe very much in their desire for reform and their desire to set straight that which appears to have been done wrong, as brought forth by various bodies during the past year.

Yet it seems to me the problem is far bigger than any individual abuse of campaign finances and it just cannot be resolved in the normal way. Rather we have to take a careful look at our political procedures and relate back to the abuses that have taken place. So I intend to argue vigorously for my way to achieve reform, and it in nowise is meant to discredit those who have another way of going about the same business.

First let us relate to the bill, if we might, and go over the various aspects of that bill and what they intend to accomplish. Then, I would like to spend most of my time discussing the principles involved.

SECTION 1

Page 1 of S. 3044 is retained, thereby keeping the title of the act as the "Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974". Everything else in the original bill is deleted.

SECTION 2

This section it titled "Time Period for Federal Elections," which indicates the main purpose of the section—to cut down the length of campaigns. This has two objectives: First, to save money; and second, to make campaigns more palatable and reasonable.

This is done by adding a new title—title V—to the "Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971." The first section of the new title sets up a filing date:

On the first Tuesday of September, or 60 days before a special election, all candidates must file a registration statement, containing:

Name of the candidate. Names of any person or committee authorized to accept or spend money.

Names of any campaign depositories.

An affidavit swearing that no money has been collected or spent prior to the first Tuesday in September.

Name of the party of the candidate, or that the candidate will run as an independent.

The second section of the new title V sets up a procedure for one, and only one, primary to select nominees for the election itself.

First. All nominees would be selected through this direct primary, including Presidential, senatorial, and congressional nominees.

Second. The primary date would be the first Tuesday in October.

Third. A candidate could only run for one party's nomination.

Fourth. Voters could only vote for one party's slate of possible nominees.

The qualification of voters, parties, and the procedures for conducting the primary would be handled by the States, which is the same as it is handled presently. No primary runoff.

In summary, the second section means that the people, not some circus-like convention, would select candidates. It would prevent the so-called cross-over vote, which often distorts primaries—voters have to choose one party primary to vote in. It also allows independents to participate in determining who the final candidates shall be.

The third section of the new title V says simply that the nominee selected by the primary shall be the candidate receiving the greatest number of votes from his party's voters.

No runoffs, with their attendent expenses and added campaigning.

The incentive is clearly for the parties to bring their support behind a reasonable number of possible nominees, to avoid excessive fragmentation of the party's vote. This should, as an offshoot, enhance the role of the party.

This is the essence, and I will get into other aspects of the bill, of change that is considerably different from anything that has been discussed in tackling the financial aspects of the problem that confronts our country today. There really are two problems that relate to the difficulties we have encountered in our campaigns. One, we all would agree, is the cost of those campaigns; and two, is the failure to utilize the entire electorate in the selection and election processes. We all concede that the cost of campaigning in this country has gotten beyond all reasonable bounds.

When President Eisenhower was reelected in 1956 the campaign cost was roughly $8 million. To the best of our knowledge President Nixon's 1972 campaign cost $72 million. So clearly the cost of campaigns has soared and given impetus to the type legislation presented on the floor of the Senate. I wish to just ask a simple question, or set forth a hypothetical example in the extreme. If the costs of the Presidential campaign were $100,000 would we be turning to the Federal Government to resolve the problem? The answer is "no." So it is not the question of money; it is the amount of money. We use the $72 million almost as a floor rather than trying to tackle it and cut it down.

We concede the expense. And we turn it over to the Government. We do not do anything to reduce the amount. We merely shift it from the private sector to the governmental sector. We shift it from an area of choosing to an area of law, and I do not know of anything that relates to amounts of money spent by the Federal Government that ever went down. It is going to go up. No politician now has to earn his votes or his contributions, he is guaranteed the contributions, and it seems to me all we are leading to there is the subsidization of mediocrity.

The additional fact is that what you have done is shift the burden to all the taxpayers, whether they like it or do not like it.

Probably the most unfortunate of all is that it is an open-ended type of operation. There is no ceiling on it, either insofar as the number of dollars or the number of candidates is concerned.

I grant you that the abuses presented during the past year are considerable and we do need reformation of our spending practices in the political sense, but I do not concede to you that a presidential campaign has to cost $72 million. I do not concede to you that a senatorial campaign in my own State of Connecticut has to cost $1 million. I do not concede to you that a congressional campaign, in my State of Connecticut, has to cost $1 million. I do not concede to you that a congressional campaign, in my State of Connecticut, has to cost $100,000 or $200,000.

I would rather go ahead and see whether we can cut down that cost so it can be appropriately and properly handled as a matter of choice among the public as a whole, rather than become a governmental obligation.

All the bills to date have had some sort of ceiling. They have implied Government financing. What about changing the basic structure of the campaign itself? There is not a man in this Chamber who does not understand that for 2 years—I speak as a Senator—he makes preparation for his election or reelection—2 years. So the process in effect is a 2-year process to those of you in the business, in the know. But certainly insofar as the public is concerned, they know it takes at least 1 year.

What is there in the nature of a man or woman and their ideas that requires 1 year of hammering away on the ears of the electorate in this country? Cannot the job be done in a lesser period of time, and thus cut down the cost of campaigning? The answer is "Yes."

This inevitably brings me to another phenomenon which is occurring at the some time we increase our consciousness of our political spending abuses, and that is the way the electorate itself is changing. In my State of Connecticut in the last reporting period, 13,000 persons were registered as Republicans, 14,000 were registered as Democrats, and 45,000 were registered as independents. So clearly the role of both major parties is declining instead of continuing, and that is not a phenomenon restricted to my State. The latest Gallup poll has shown again a linking up of the voters between each major party is diminishing month by month and year by year.

What are we going to do with people who call themselves Independents? Do they have to choose either the Republican or the Democratic Party? If so, can anyone on the floor tell them why they should choose one or the other?

I recently received what I considered to be a rather insulting letter from one of the organizational leaders of my party which asked, "Will you please give three reasons why you are a Republican?" I find it a little difficult as a Senator, and I think Democrats would find it similarly difficult, to answer and give three reasons why one is either a Republican or a Democrat. I think more and more it is the Senators and Congressmen who are giving the image to the party rather than the party which is giving it to Senators and Congressmen and those who serve in an elected capacity.

That is nothing to be afraid of. It indicates a maturity on the part of the American voting public, that the man or woman, their ideas, their principles, are far more important than a label. What does it mean if somebody comes to you and says, "Vote for me. I am a Democrat," or, "Vote for me. I am a Republican"? It means very little. People want logic. They want reasons. They do not want labels. And yet, in a technical sense, I suppose each one is saying, "Well, what we do not want to do is abandon the two-party system. It has served us so well in an administrative sense."

What I have tried to do in the course of this amendment is to provide a machinery which will not do away with the two-party system but which permits this huge number of voters to come into the system and to participate in the selection process, which is fully as important as the election process. Fifty percent is selection and 50 percent is election.

What is going to happen if the trends that have taken place continue? As the parties get smaller and smaller, fewer and fewer will dictate who the candidates are going to be. Yet I do not accept as a remedy for that the fact that one has to join the Republican Party or the Democratic Party. Rather, I want to give to the voters of the country the opportunity to join in the election process even if they themselves wish to remain aloof from a particular political label.

So on both counts, in view of the abuses that have occurred in the political system, when we shorten the campaign and when we use the primary process, inevitably the cost comes down. By using that primary to allow the independent to vote, the maximum number of people participate in this political process.

I will tell you, Mr. President, we can write every law on the books from this Chamber and across the way, with the signature of the President, and nothing is so effective in a democracy as the numbers of people participating in the election process, insofar as to safeguard everything we hold dear.

Remember this: When this country was founded, a few men of knowledge, a few men of wealth, wrote down the great concepts that we have in our Constitution and our Bill of Rights. America as a whole did not participate in this country. They could not. Either they were ignorant, had no property, or were in peonage—you name it. Just a few men ran the Nation, and they set down those words, those ideals, from which our present democracy has sprung.

I do not think any one of us would refute the fact that even 20 or 25 years ago, if you got a group of people on the sidewalk, perhaps 5 or 10 were in a position to make decisions and know what was going on. Yet today, out of that same group, perhaps everyone except two or three are in a position to make decisions and know what is going on. That is the result of our investment in education. It is the result of our investment in technology. It is a result of the news media having gone ahead and expanded their own capabilities, their own coverage. So that today we truly have a democracy—not just a few of the leaders, not just the news media, not just those in education, who tell the rest of America what is good for the rest of America, but, rather, Americans themselves standing on their own feet, making their decisions.

Unless you understand that—and I now refer to my colleagues in politics, Democrats and Republicans—you are in danger of not being in politics very long. That is the change that has come over America, an America which is not led just by a few, but, rather, one which is a democracy led by all of its people partaking in the decisionmaking process.

That is why the necessity for reform. That is why the primary route rather than the convention. That is why the convention looks sillier and sillier, as a few of the party faithful gather and the rest of America watches that spectacle for that one moment in time when the rollcall takes place, and the platform and all the hullabaloo along with that. Whoever reads it or sees it, except as it comes over television during the convention?

This Nation and its voters are interested in what the individual stands for, his ideas, his principles, what he is going to do, not some great generality buried in a pamphlet which comes to life during a convention and is then promptly forgotten in the usual tradition.

I have said many times during the recent troubles that in the plurality of our institutions lies the strength of this Nation, and anyone that looks to any one of the institutions as being the answer to its problems will fail. All trust and faith in the judiciary, if nothing else, will be a mistake. All trust and faith in the executive will be a mistake—or in the legislative branch, or in the news media.

Rather, it will be in the plurality of our institutions, because our greatest strengths are in those institutions and in the principles of the country.

The same holds true as far as candidates in the election process are concerned. The more people who are in there doing the job, the better the candidates we will have. People have made comments such as, What will 1974 mean to the various parties? In the light of the facts of the past year, my answer is that it is not going to be a great boon to the Democratic Party and it is not going to be a great disaster to the Republicans. The American people are going to look carefully at the candidates of both parties, something we have neglected to do.

What has happened, that has caused Watergate is that people have failed to pay attention to the political process and have failed to pay attention to the exercise of their right to vote. That has come home to them this year. So I think it is the American people who are going to look at the candidates, from whom will come the largest and best group of new officeholders in the Nation's history.

In the plurality and the number of people participating in elections in our Nation's greatest strength. That is a far greater safeguard against fraudulence or corrupt practices than any law which we can write. That is why, to me, the provision of the 60-day direct primary and independent participation in the election process goes to the heart of reform of both areas—the quality of the candidates and the lessening of the role of money in American political campaigns.

I should like now to move over to the section that deals with financing. But one point just before I leave the time element. The point I should like to reiterate is the period of 60 days for filing by a candidate. What politician will tell us that he is engaged in an extensive campaign prior to that date I will tell you, Mr. President, that in my own political style it is better for me to have a long campaign rather than a short one. God has given me physical stamina to do it. But 90 percent of the campaigns do not get revved up until after Labor Day. So in a practical way this does not change anything a great deal.

Filing would be on the first Tuesday in September; the primary on the first Tuesday in October. This includes the national Presidential primary. Then the general election, as has always been the case, would take place on the first Tuesday of November. Sixty days is certainly a long enough time for people to understand the candidates and to evaluate what it is they stand for and what it is they promise.

I might add that from a financial point of view—and this will lead me into my next area of discussion—there would be no collecting of money and no expenditures of money except within those 60 days.

Let me anticipate one of the arguments that may be presented—that this is going to help the incumbents. I cannot devise—and I do not think any other Senator can devise—a system which will have a degree of unfairness in challenging an incumbent. Actually, we all know that an incumbent has many things going for him, even now. Yet incumbents are turned out rather regularly from all offices throughout the country. In some ways, I think that in the election of 1974, it will be the biggest drawback anybody has to be an incumbent. So incumbency is a problem we have to live with.

Am I willing to see to it, for instance, that everybody who is an incumbent has to declare as a candidate on January 1 of an election year? Am I willing to say that he cannot use his franking privilege in a newsletter after February 1 of the election year? Anything to try to make it fair. Anything to put it on an equal footing. Anyway, insofar as financing is concerned, we are talking about 60 days, not a year or 2 years.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WEICKER. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. COOK. I thank the Senator from Connecticut. As he is aware, the Senate, on June 27, 1973, passed S. 343, a bill introduced by the distinguished Senator from West Virginia (Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD) and myself. The bill passed the Senate by a vote of 71 to 25. It provided that no primary in the United States for a Federal office could occur before the first Tuesday in August. The Senator calls for the first Tuesday in October.

We further provided that no national convention—I notice that the Senator has eliminated national conventions, and that could be a blessing to the American television viewer—could occur before the first Tuesday in August. The general election day would remain the same.

I may say to the Senator from Connecticut, I have no great problem with his October date. I have always contended that one of the ways really to cut down on the demand for tremendous sums of money is to shorten the period in which one could campaign. If we establish a Federal primary date for congressional elections, as we certainly have the right to do, we could then bring the dates of this period closer together. We will find ourselves in the position we find ourselves in today.

It is rather strange to me that a Senate seat in the State of California should cost $7 million or $8 million, or more than that, let us say, in the State of New York. It would seem to me that if we bring the dates closer together, we would eliminate the necessity for the expenditure of such tremendous sums of money.

That bill passed by a vote of 71 to 25 and is now in the House. I must say that I do not know whether the 4-week or 5-week campaign could resolve the problem. I am not saying that it could not.

As the Senator well knows, we do put an expensive burden on the Federal Government in regard to taxpayer expense, unless we have some really strong restrictions on the use of the frank—which I have no objection to doing. I think the Senator knows that. We in the Rules Committee really did not tackle this matter from that point of view.

But I must say that the Senator's arguments are very valid in regard to bringing the dates closer together, shortening the period tremendously. We then find ourselves in a position that we cannot, under any circumstances, call for or justify a tremendous expenditure of funds that we now find candidates feel is necessary to continue a year-long or longer campaign for election to Congress—the Senate or the House.

I commend the Senator from Connecticut for his remarks, because I hope that his argument will dissuade States from making determinations as to who may find himself in a position of filing for a primary—and most of them are Presidential primaries—and finally making a determination as to whether he can make an expenditure in January, or who can establish a basis by which our remarkable friends in the press can start to get the bandwagon rolling, and put things together. I hope that they would be able to dissuade the States from doing that, because we do ourselves tremendous harm in regard to our ability to finance campaigns and raise that kind of money from the public.

One other point, which really does bother us in the bill before us, S. 3044. Although I voted to bring the bill before the Senate, I thought that maybe we had time for an opportunity to finance the campaign. We speak of the large number of independent voters which we now have—and I think that is tremendously helpful—what we do in a way by this bill, and I think the people of the country should understand it and become very aware of it—I have not read it in anything that has come out of Common Cause or any editorials that have said that this is what we must do, and that is that the Constitution does not name any parties.

The Constitution does not say there shall be two parties in the United States. But I am afraid we are looking at a bill that will absolutely build in no more than two parties. I am afraid we are looking at a system whereby we build in, in perpetuity, two major parties in the United States.

Let me give the Senator an example. If, under the election we had the last time, there were two major parties, the Republicans and the Democrats, I give one, for the sake of argument, 50 percent and the other 40 percent. That is, 45 percent of the voters in the country were for one of the two major parties. Therefore, we split the difference, and we allocate to them based on 45 percent.

There is a third party which has a candidate, and that third party candidate had 5 percent. Take the fraction 5 over 45, and it comes out one-ninth. That means we give the Republican Party, in the next Presidential election, $9 million out of the funds, we give the Democratic Party $9 million out of the Federal funds, and we give to the third party $1 million. How can a third party ever become a first or second party in the United States? Are we not building in permanently and forever the two major political parties and saying to the American people "Take your choice"?

I have serious misgivings about this, because nowhere in the Constitution did we say how many parties there shall be in this Nation. Yet, I am afraid that by this bill we may well be doing that. I think we should understand it, and I think the American people should understand it; and I think the American people should also understand—I am not sure they want it this way; if they do, then this is the way we should do it—as we go forward in this effort, and apparently a majority of those on this floor think we should, the consequences of saying, "Here are the two giants, and the third shall always be last."

Because, based on the votes in 1976, the distribution shall be made in 1980, and that means that the two major parties, whatever their percentages are—and a candidate becomes a major if he reaches 25 percent or more, and if he is below he shall always be a minor unless he does not take under this bill, and then he subjects himself to the criticism of the two majors, because he has gone out to try to raise money to make himself equal, in the eyes of the American people, to the candidates of the two major parties.

I think this is something we have got to understand. I thank the Senator for this dialog.

Mr. WEICKER. I thank the Senator from Kentucky. I think it is especially useful to listen to the words of the Senator from Kentucky and understand that simply because he has some reservations about the bill, as indeed I do, it does not mean we are against reform. We just have to start to do our homework in this country, and start facing the fact that we are not about to demagogue this issue.

We all understand the need for reform, but what I am trying to do is come out with something intelligent, that is worthy of the greatest political process ever known to man, rather than just slap a band-aid on to try to make everyone feel good, and then find out we have created something far worse than that which we already have, which is bad enough, and no one is defending it in any way.

I think, as we have listened to the Senator from Kentucky, we have realized that he has pointed out the pitfalls, not because he has anything to gain from private contributors, but because he understands that if indeed there is going to be a cleaning process, and if indeed the voters are to be given a choice, the type of reform we are discussing has to come to pass; otherwise the American people will believe the situation is reform when in fact it will be havoc.

So I commend the Senator for his comments, because I know of his dedication to getting this mess cleaned up. It does not make any difference whether it is his head or my head, we think that we are going to do things right. I think that is basically what the Senator from Kentucky is saying. It is not a question that either of us are going to rely on campaign funds from our own States. That has nothing to do with the debate on this floor. As I said before, it is not simply a case that those who are for the bill as written are for reform, and those who are not are against it. That is not the case at all.

It has got to be clear, from every poll that has been taken, whether in my State or across the Nation, that the American people do not necessarily want to be restricted to the choice of Democrats or Republicans. Otherwise, if the Republicans are doing so badly and the Democrats so well right now, why not just join the Democratic Party?

The fact is that we have gone through two administrations, one of each party, where clearly an excess of power has been turned against the best interests of the people of this Nation, and they have every reason to have a distrust of both parties.

Why should we be subsidized, Mr. President? Why should we not be out there on our own merits, facing the American people, rather than have Federal campaign financing and have our mediocrity and our inattention to detail subsidized by the people of this country?

When we get to the financing areas, the Senator from Kentucky and I can be very much in agreement when it comes to full disclosure, limited contributions, no cash, and all the rest. But there is no point in saying we want the present system. We do not. We want change, but as I say, we want change that is worthy of the institution of Congress, rather than something that is based on temporary emotion.

There are two points I would make in relation to one of the comments that the Senator made. My bill does not eliminate the convention. It does not say a thing about it. Obviously, though, there will be serious debate among the political parties when it comes to the fact that they are just going to meet for the purpose of stating ideas, and so forth. I would imagine that it will have as great an appeal; I imagine that ought to attract the viewing, listening, and reading public as much as anything, but these people will feel, "You are going to take all the appeal away when you eliminate the candidate selection process." But under my amendment, the selection is not going to be done in a convention hall or a smoke-filled room; it will be done across this Nation, with the people of this democracy being the delegates.

We talk about one man, one vote. We have achieved that. Why should it be any the less so when it comes to choosing the candidates? Why should it be any the less so when it comes to choosing a candidate, so far as one man, one vote is concerned? It should not be. And choosing a platform in October should be the same as going ahead and choosing a candidate.

Just so that no one will come back at me, my State of Connecticut is far in arrears on this whole business. We are one of the few States still operating on the basis of a convention rather than a primary. I have already advocated that we change our laws in our State, and that we eliminate the convention by going to the direct primary.

Now we move into the financing area. As I say, I think it is naturally limited by the 60 days. People can say, "Well, you know, you can go ahead and solicit, and throw an awful lot of money in." The fact is that under my amendment 2 weeks before the election a full report is published, so if somebody has gone in there and thrown a great wad of money in, everybody is going to know about it before the election takes place.

But we are talking about gearing ourselves to the exception. The fact is that 60 days of a political campaign, from the choosing right to the election process, will be one heck of a lot cheaper than what is now roughly a year and a half, really, extending out to two years. It has to be. I cannot give any definite figure, that it will cut it in half or cut it by a quarter; it is just going to cut it substantially, and I think bring it within manageable bounds.

The other aspect of the bill relates to the collection of money. As I have stated, no one can collect money and no one can spend money except within that 60-day period. They have to report their expenditures and their collections 2 weeks before the election.

Now, someone is going to step up and say, "How can we possibly do that?"

What it means is that every candidate has to start right from the first day and keep the books. And why should he not? If he cannot keep his own books, he should not be sent to keep the books of the people of this country, either in the capacity of President or Senator or Representative. Two weeks before the election, everything should be right in place, and then people will know exactly the role the money plays. It will be a self-policing measure, which should do a great favor to all of us in politics, and should go a long way toward eliminating the horrendous deficits which occur in the course of campaigns, and which, again, too many of us spend too much time on, after we are elected.

Point No. 2: it calls for one committee, and eliminates the laundering of funds. In other words, in the case of a personal contribution to one committee, the candidate's name sticks to that contribution, even though the contribution goes from one pot to another. We will not get any laundering of funds. It allows a candidate—I am doing this from memory now—$10,000 in personal money, which brings me to the business of deficits. According to the bill as I have written it, you are not allowed to run on a deficit, or to put it this way, if you have $10,000, use it any way you want to. You can have the deficit any way if you want to, but if there are problems, they will be known, and your breaking of the law will be known to the voters before the election.

I would doubt that anyone would want to find themselves in violation of the law which would be known to the public 2 weeks before the election. Again there is another practical reason for setting this deadline at 2 weeks before election. I will speak for myself so that no one else will "sit on my head," but I know that a good portion of the money I received for my successful campaign in 1970 came to me after I was elected. That I do not consider to be much of a testimony to LOWELL WEICKER. It is a testimony to the seat which he has won, to the power which he has achieved through an election win.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. WEICKER. Better let me finish what I am going to say first. What I am talking about is a legal contribution, that comes to all who are elected, but which comes after the election is over and is then put into our campaign. That is wrong. We know it is wrong. To believe in a man or woman and what they stand for is one thing, but to give money afterward, that is merely going ahead and playing the seat. That is not right. It does not lead to healthy politics.

But in my case one-fifth, or fully one-sixth, I believe, of the funds were raised after I was elected. I do not think I am too far off the mark in that situation. That is why the cutoff date in this legislation is 2 weeks before election. You can spend money on those things already committed, but you cannot go ahead and make any new commitments. You cannot go ahead and collect any money, except during those 60 days, which is what we are talking about—46 days of fundraising—the full 60 days being that which applies to campaign spending.

Let me comment on another point brought out by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky. He remarked on the campaign bill we passed last year which now sits over in the House. Many ideas have come to pass since then. As a matter of fact, my bill presented to the Rules Committee then did not include the 60-day provision which I present to the Senate today. What I am saying here is that we need time to generate the best of everyone's thinking and not just to grab the first solution that comes along.

Let me review if I can, in case I have left anything out, that section 3 of the substitute amendments amends the "limitations on contributions and expenditures" that are presently in existence. The proposed law would be as follows:

First. No contributions, or even an arrangement for contributions prior to the first Tuesday in September.

Second. No expenditures on contracts before the first Tuesday in September. No cash over $50.

Third. A cutoff on money 2 weeks before the November election—A candidate can, however, "budget for" his anticipated expenses for the last 2 weeks of the campaign.

Fourth. No more than $10,000 from the candidate's personal funds.

Fifth. No deficits. A deficit would be a criminal violation, and would be known, by the opponent as well as the voters, 2 weeks before election day. To incur a deficit would be to be on public record as in violation of the law, and having to explain this to voters you are asking to give you high public trust—for the protection of creditors, the deficit could be paid off in a proceeding similar to bankruptcy, under the supervision of the Comptroller General.

SECTION 4

Section 4 of the amendments would stop contributions between political committees in a "laundering" sense.

Committees could contribute money. But, it would have to be given in the name of the original donor. This means that the candidates final report will contain the names of people, not organizations. There will be no hiding the true identity of a donor. Committees, such as COPE, could still perform a valid function: Soliciting or administering contributions in the name of an individual donor.

SECTION 5

One political committee. A long overdue, and essential step if the public is to be able to keep track in a practical way, of the candidate's financial activities.

SECTION 5: REPORTS

Vastly simplified over existing law.

First. Only one report, 2 weeks before election day.

Second. Report everything. All money brought in. All money spent, just as any normal business organization is required to do.

Third. The timing of this report will be the greatest deterrent of all against one or a few large contributors from giving such a large amount of money to a candidate. This would happen because such contributions would be known by all voters, before they vote. The candidate is in the position of losing votes, by being clearly obligated to a small special interest—either an individual or a group. There can be no more practical deterrent to excessive contributions than the sanction of losing votes.

SECTION 6

The last section of the amendments I am offering would reform the penalties for campaign financing violations.

This section proposes meaningful penalties.

If a candidate violated financing laws, a fine equal to three times the amount of the violation would have to be paid.

This money would then, under the Comptroller General's supervision, be used to publicize the facts of that violation. It would be exposed in the geographical area in which the election is held.

What greater sanction than to let those who control the fate of an elected official know about his wrongdoing.

Now, Mr. President, that, in essence, is the sum of the amendment and the reforms it proposes.

Now we get to some of the difficulties I have with the present legislation. I cannot think of anything more dangerous than deeply involving the Federal Government in our political elections.

Good heavens, what is it that we have seen that appalls us the most from the revelations of Watergate? It is not the individual guilt or innocence of the various people. It is in the abuse of the tremendous power that the Government has.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOMENICI). All time of the Senator from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. WEICKER. That included the colloquy with the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. COOK) and myself?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. WEICKER. That came from my time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is correct.

Mr. WEICKER. Could I ask the Senator from Kentucky to give me a few more minutes?

Mr. COOK. I yield 5 additional minutes to the Senator from Connecticut.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, we have seen the abuse of governmental power in the FBI, the CIA, the military intelligence, and the various law-enforcement agencies—the internal security of the Justice Department. The integrity of these agencies was totally believed. They had a magic name. We did not have to supervise them. They were good enough. They had the right names. They were in the right business—forget it, no accountability was necessary.

But, what did we learn?

We learned that there always has to be accountability, no matter whether it is an individual or an agency.

Today, we are being asked to do the exact samething, that because it is the Federal Government it is all right. For heaven's sake, the Watergate investigation did not for the most part, investigate the private portion of our populous. What has gone wrong has gone wrong in the Federal Government. But we still want to go ahead and give the Federal Government the power to finance, the power to be responsible for the administration of the financing of our political campaigns.

As I said, I am going to go up or down. I hope that the amendment passes. If it does not, it will stand within the next few years, I can assure you, Mr. President, But I am not going to be party to giving the Government with all of its power ,additional power in this area, until the Government can prove itself.

I feel much safer with the American people than I do with the Government on any aspect of it.

I stated at the outset of my talk that in the participation of the American people in the democratic process lies our greatest safeguard against the abuses which occur within the political process.

Mr. President, I would yield now, if I could, to the Senator from Kentucky and I hope that I might be able to get a few minutes time before the vote to summarize my argument.

I should also ask again—I am trying to accommodate myself to the convenience of everyone—but I should like to ask for the yeas and nays and would appreciate it if we could possibly do something along that line as we get closer to the time of the vote. But I want to indicate my feelings now.

Mr. COOK. May I say to the Senator from Connecticut that there will be time remaining I am sure. There will be no problem in yielding him further time.

At this time, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK), and if he cares for more time, he may ask for more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Kentucky.

Certainly, the distinguished Senator from Connecticut speaks with great information and authority. His record in the Senate on the Watergate Committee, the courage he has shown on that committee, and the fairness and nonpartisan attitude he has had, makes him one of the most informed Senators on this issue.

I would like to talk just briefly about his amendment. It seems to me that it is weighted too much in favor of the incumbent. Presently, 95 percent of all incumbents in Congress are reelected to office. That was true in the last election, and it has been true for decades. We should be very cautious before passing legislation that will make it even more difficult for challengers to be elected by limiting their camapign time so strictly that, in effect, we limit the challenger's opportunity.

By limiting expenditures in campaigns to 30 days in the case of a primary election and 60 days in the case of a general election, an unknown candidate may not become well enough known to be a serious challenger.

I dislike using myself as an example, but many other Senators could use their experience to make the same point. I remember that about 9 months before my campaign, the political polls showed that I was known by less than one-half of 1 percent of the voters. That may or may not have been the situation with the Presiding Officer, the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI), or the Senator who preceded him as Presiding Officer, the Senator from Colorado (Mr. HASKELL). But none of us had held a Federal office before, and it is inconceivable that we could have become well enough known in 30 days to have won a primary, or in 60 days to have won a general election, or even to be serious candidates. And the same is true of many Members of this body—the campaign of the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BIDEN) is probably another example.

One could go on. With 15 million eligible voters in California, how could a relatively unknown person who wants to run for Congress, become known in 30 days? That is probably not true in Connecticut, which is very much the size of Iowa with about 2 million eligible voters. But we are not legislating for Connecticut or Iowa; we are speaking on behalf of the entire country. I think that even in some of the smaller States a severe time reduction would give a natural advantage that would be difficult if not impossible to overcome.

Some people have made the argument that the campaigns are very short in England. A group of high school students just asked me today why we cannot limit the campaign, as England does. The Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WEICKER) did not raise the point, but it is worth discussing.

The simple fact is that we do not have their system. They have no national election in the sense that we do, nor do they have candidates who run nationwide. They have nothing comparable to a Senate race. The House of Commons constituencies are no more than 100,000, so they can become known more rapidly than in California, for example, where there are 15 million voters, or even in Iowa where there are 2 million voters.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. COOK. Is it not true that the area covered by a candidate is in the vicinity of 1-mile square?

Mr. CLARK. That is correct.

Mr. COOK. One has to understand that the State of Alaska has one Representative and that State is twice the size of Alaska. We have other States with one Representative and it is the responsibility of that Representative to cover that entire territory. That is a pretty big job.

Mr. CLARK. That is correct. One other point to be made is that, in England, candidates run on a party label, and they follow party lines almost exclusively, so the vote is for the party rather than for the individual. Here, we run much more as individuals, and we have to become known in terms of personality and issues. To try to do so in 30 days, or in 60 days in a general election, is virtually impossible.

So there are really only two effective ways a candidate can become known: one is through the media, and the other is person-to-person contact. If this amendment were passed, it would cut down on any extensive person-to-person campaigning. If a candidate had only 30 or 60 days to become known, he would have to do it through the media. There is no State in the United States where a person could come in contact with one one-hundredth percent of the people because there are too many people to contact. So campaigns will become entirely media campaigns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for 2 additional minutes?

Mr. COOK. I yield 2 additional minutes to the Senator.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, in conclusion, attractive as the amendment would seem, in the sense that it would limit the time and the expenditures, it would have the effect of virtually assuring the reelection of incumbents, giving them yet another advantage. I know that is not the intent of the amendment, but I think it would be the effect. As we look at the bill now, it does two or three very significant things. It limits the amount that can be accepted to $3,000, and the amount that can be spent to 10 cents in primaries and 15 cents in general elections. It does away with the corrupting influence of unlimited funding and, at the same time, limits expenditures, giving equality of opportunity to challengers and incumbents so that in general elections they can spend the same amount. That is important.

But if we limit the campaigning time, we will have a bill which insures that 98 or 99 percent of the incumbents are returned to office.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may need.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Connecticut on the philosophical ideas he is trying to get across in this amendment. First, with respect to the limiting of campaigns, I think that the period for campaigning should be shortened. It goes on far too long now. We tried to address ourselves to this in previous legislation. On June 27, 1973, we passed S. 343 by a vote of 71 to 25, which would have limited the period of time campaigns can be conducted, so I am completely in accord on that facet.

Second, with regard to contributions by political committees I see no basic harm in contributions by political committees provided that they are properly regulated. It was not the fact it was a political committee, per se, that engaged in wrongdoing in the so-called Watergate campaign that concerns everyone now. That was not the basic problem. The committees, if they are properly regulated, can contribute, should be able to contribute, and can properly contribute, under such regulations as we prescribe, to assure there are no abuses, just as we propose there not be abuses in contributions of individuals, by full disclosure of those contributions and limiting the amounts, and by providing penalties for contributions in excess of those that could be made. The abuses that were pointed out in the recent elections were for violations of law or taking advantages of loopholes in laws that we propose to correct in the legislation we now have before us and in other legislation that we have heretofore passed. I might say that S. 372 that is now in the House would have corrected and closed a number of loopholes that did occur and of which advantage was taken.

With respect to the provision of no contributions before the final date and none from the time beginning 2 weeks before the election, I might say that an unknown candidate would have no way to find out if he had a possibility of getting contributions sufficient that he could carry on a campaign unless he were able to get the facts prior to the filing date. So if he had to file first and then go out to see if he could get contributions to support his candidacy he might have invested his filing fee unwisely.

With respect to the time beginning 2 weeks before election, everyone knows there are many last-minute occurrences that take place in an election campaign that occur in the last 2 weeks. In many instances it is the responsibility of the candidate to be able to respond to charges that may be made during that period. Charges frequently are made in that period and if he has spent his money and cannot respond by radio, television, or newspaper ads he is deprived of the opportunity to participate fully in that campaign. This would be a very bad mistake. On the point of whether a national primary election should be held on the first Tuesday of November, I do not have any particular feeling one way or the other on that issue.

On the matter of no national conventions, I think if we are going to do away with national conventions, we are doing away with the two-party system. We are almost doing away with the two-party system in this bill, if it is enacted, by the restrictions that are prescribed, because, as the distinguished Senator pointed out earlier, a person who is an unkown would find it almost impossible to campaign and to try to win in either a primary or general election under the terms of this bill.

I know the Senator from Connecticut did not intend it, but I cannot think of a bill which would be more of an incumbent's bill than this bill, were it put into effect, because it just virtually precludes a person who is a nonincumbent, unless he has been a Governor of the State or some other very high public official. It virtually precludes everyone except those in that category from having an opportunity to run successfully.

Mr. President, I oppose the amendment even though it has some features that I do not disagree with completely, but the basic parts of this amendment would destroy the political system as we know it.

I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. COTTON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I, too, am sympathetic with the objectives that the Senator from Connecticut obviously had in mind in drafting his amendment, and I think we all agree that the long, drawn-out process we go through now—from the time of the party conventions, which has more or less been in effect from the day when we had to travel by train, and I do not know whether it would be in the day of the stagecoach—could be speeded up.

But, among other general objections, I think it is inconceivable and entirely unwise to try to nominate all our officers, including the candidates for President, on the same day, and only a matter of 5 weeks before the election. I would have to put in a word for my own State. It is known around the United States that New Hampshire has—and this is true—the first Presidential preference primary. Vermont has one a week later. We have it way back in March. The reason for this is that the second Tuesday in March is the date of all the town meetings—many of you know what the old-fashioned New England town meeting is—and our municipal elections are held then in most of our cities. Therefore, by having the Presidential preference primary on that date, we are assured of getting out a good, representative vote, because people pour out to take care of their local business in towns and they turn out for contested municipal elections.

A large percentage of the voters are out, and when they are there, they register their preference as to who shall be their party's nominee for President of the United States.

I am sure that there are many other States that may have Presidential preference primaries that have selected some date that coincides with some other political contest that is sure to make it easier to get out a good, representative vote.

The saddest thing in this country is the fact that such a small percentage of our people vote.

Furthermore, the fact that Presidential preference primaries are spread over a period of various times in various States means that the various candidates get a chance to go into the smaller States. If it were all on the same day, why, outside of television appearances, nobody would see the leading candidates of either party for the Presidency of the United States except in the big metropolitan areas of New York, Chicago, San Francisco, and Los Angeles. They would not have the opportunity to present themselves and mingle with the people and go from State to State.

Furthermore, and this is most practical, frequently it has been our experience—it must be true in many other States—that we have legal contests as to who has been nominated for Congressman or for Senator in the State, and there is provided an appeal directly to the supreme court of our State. If there is any charge that the law has been violated by a candidate in some grave way, which might even cause his name to be removed from the ballot, there is an appeal of that contested election directly to the supreme court of the State. How in the world would we be able to go through that sort of process under this proposal? We would not know who was the nominee in time even to print the ballots, where ballots are used.

Again, there are many other objections. This substitute has, as I said, a good intent, but it is too much of a good thing. It shortens things up so that it would be extremely difficult to have an orderly process in the nomination of Federal candidates within States, and it would certainly disrupt the Presidential preference primaries. I think many of us hope many more States will nominate in that manner. But the States should still have the right, within reasonable limits—I do not object to shortening the time for the campaign—to provide their own procedure and the right to appeal to the courts if there is a contest on the ground of alleged fraud or anything else concerning the primary election.

I must make it very definite that we in New England, following New Hampshire's example, like to have, every 4 years, our Presidential preference primaries on a day when the people of a State are turning out to perform their local business and thus be sure that we have a large turnout and a large vote, and not have just a small number of people expressing their preference as to who shall be their party's nominee for President of the United States.

I agree with the Senator from Nevada that conventions are not always a pleasing spectacle to people watching television, but if we destroy the conventions, we destroy the two-party system. This would result in all kinds of splinter parties, many having candidates elected by only a minority vote because of the large number of people running in a large number of small party organizations.

There are some other objections. I repeat, I commend the purpose of the amendment, but it goes much too far, and I cannot support it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me 5 minutes?

Mr. CANNON. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. WEICKER. I wish my good friend from Iowa were here, so I might comment on, not debate, his statement, because he has the same intensity and feeling about this matter as I do, even though there are some specific points on which we disagree.

But to show what happens under this bill, my campaign ran roughly $625,000 in 1970. Under S. 3044 I could get $767,000 for my campaign.

That is the problem we are confronted with. This is not going to reduce in any way the cost of campaigns. It will go up and up and up. I am sure that my experience will not be dissimilar to that of any other Senator. So if the American people feel that this will cut down the cost of campaigning, they should be told that it will not. The burden will be shifted from those who voluntarily participate in a campaign to every taxpayer in the United States; and when they realize that they will all participate in the cost, it will be "Katy bar the door."

Other factors may be involved. However, cutting down the costs of the campaign will not be the result of this legislation.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a clarification of what will happen to the cost of the campaign if the bill goes into effect?

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield me additional time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield additional time to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, did the Senator say anything about the increases in the levels of spending that would occur with respect to races for the House of Representatives under the committee bill?

Mr. WEICKER. No.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I have some figures which I should like to cite for the RECORD. In 1972, according to the statistics available from the Clerk of the House of Representatives 1,010 candidates ran in the primary and general elections for the House of Representatives. They spent a total of $39,959,356.

Against that total of actual expenditures in 1972 in all races for the House of Representatives the Government Accounting Office estimates that the cost of Government financing in House races, if this bill were to pass—would be, not $39 million, but $103,307,988.

Furthermore, it might be of some interest to know that in 1972, 52 percent of the House candidates spent less than $15,000 in their campaign.

Under the committee bill, once the candidate is nominated, he will be entitled to $90,000 for his campaign. Each and every candidate would be entitled to up to $90,000 out of the public treasury, of course, if one candidate is going to spend $90,000, it would be very difficult for his opponent not to spend that much, especially when it is available out of the treasury.

Mr. WEICKER. In addressing comments to my good friend, the distinguished Senator from Iowa——

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WEICKER. I yield.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator from Michigan did not give a correct figure. He made it appear that a person can get that amount whether he spends it or not. That is not the case. If he does not spend it, he has an obligation to turn that money back into the treasury. He get it only if he elects to go the public financing route. He does not have to go that route.

He has to have made his threshold figure to get any matching at all in the primary race. In that connection, the distinguished Senator from Connecticut mentioned that he got or spent $650,000; but that under the bill he could get $876,000. That is not the case. According to my figures, the Senator from Connecticut would be able to get the maximum of $525,250, because the maximum he could spend is in the primary, and that would be divided by one half the primary figure. So he would really get $105,000 less than that. That would be the maximum he could get with the matching of the figure in the primary and the public financing in the general would be a total of $525,250.

Mr. WEICKER. I have other elements. In a runoff primary the State central committee has the right to spend. Those are my figures, and I think they are correct, based on consultation with various staff members.

Let me get back for a minute to the statement made by the Senator from Iowa, who raised a valid point that is of concern to me. There is no doubt that the factor of incumbency is important. It is an important matter. First of all, the statement was made that the candidate could not become known in 30 days or 60 days. It is true that the political system as we know it, could destroy our system as we know it. The people would not listen to DICK CLARK, for example, until he got within 30 or 60 days of the election. Then they would begin to pay attention.

It is no different when I campaign. I have but a handful of people listening at the beginning, but it is just before the election that large numbers start to listen. We are asking for a major shift among the people themselves. In the last 30 or 60 days, after we have campaigned for a year and a half, do they begin to take notice. Maybe the campaigns of some Senators will be a little better than mine. But the question is whether the people are going to pay attention in the last 30 or 60 days, or whether there will be a gradual buildup in that course of time. I think that proves the point I am trying to make. It is not until a period of 60 days before the general election that people begin to take notice. The distinguished Senator from Iowa said that, just before he left the Chamber.

Let us consider how last-minute occurrences could still be handled. It is possible for a candidate, recognizing his expenses, to plan his campaign to prepare for unfair charges which might be brought against him as he goes into the last weeks of his election campaign. I make no point about the fact that this legislation would overturn the system as we know it. I am afraid nobody listens to us for a whole year. I do not blame them. They figure that maybe 30 or 60 days is enough. So maybe this is an unusual system which makes the time shorter than a year. It relates to what we have got as we go along. It will shorten the campaign to the time from just before Labor Day.

Under this system, the focus of the entire Nation will be on the Federal election. In the final analysis, this system would reduce the amount of campaigning and expense.

The Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. COTTON) has long ago recognized the faults of a convention. His State has a State primary. The candidates go directly to the people. New Hampshire has the wisdom to see that a convention does not take the place of having every man and woman express himself or herself.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WEICKER. I yield.

Mr. COTTON. That is certainly true. I want to make it plain that my objection was not intended to shorten campaigns to an almost impossible date. I agree with the Senator that under the bill we are piling corruption upon corruption and money upon money. My chief objection to the Senator's amendment is the vice it puts us in by shortening the campaign and making everybody vote on the same day, with only a matter of 4 weeks of campaigning. But I did want to make it plain that I am in accord with him in opposing the bill.

Mr. WEICKER. I thank the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. WEICKER. In conclusion, I wish to say that I hope the Senate would lead, not into some esoteric theory, but to changes in the facts of life politically in this country. We as politicians, in the election process, need to communicate with the people who prefer independence to slavish adherence to the present system.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 2 minutes have expired.

Mr. WEICKER. I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Anyone who has achieved political maturity knows that campaigns must guarantee against corruption and against abuses in the financial area or in the areas of power. People will judge us not by how our political parties, Republican or Democratic, are subsidized, but rather by what we say and how we campaign under the system we tolerate and by our own respect for the American people.

I do not for 1 minute mean to impute to the backers of this bill that they are not as anxious for reform as I am. They are. They have so attested in their words and their actions. But no small measure will suffice in these times. Rather, if this democracy is to survive, and it will as long as the people are allowed to go ahead and run it, then artificiality will have to be done away with.

Today we owe our presence here, to too great an extent, not to the Constitution, not to the Bill of Rights, not to the validity of our political system, but rather to artificiality.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I hope that the Senate will reject the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Connecticut.

I want to say at the outset that there are parts of the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, which I think are desirable. Certainly, the overall thrust is desirable, in terms of the shortening of political campaigns. There have been a number of proposals advanced in the Congress to consider the shortening of political campaigns, and to deal with the problem of proliferating primaries. At the national level a proposal has been made by the distinguished Senator from Oregon (Mr. PACKWOOD) for a system of regional primaries. In the House of Representatives by Representative UDALL of Arizona to fix the dates on which primaries may be held. I think it deserves very serious study. The distinguished majority leader has proposed a single national primary. And, in the case of congressional elections, the Senate has already passed a bill, S. 343, that is now before the House, and which is not nearly as drastic as the present amendment.

So I am in sympathy with the direction of the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, but I feel that it goes too far in condensing the election period. The amendment would have long-range implications in terms of our election system, and would in many ways go much farther than the proposals in the bill reported out by the Committee on Rules and Administration and managed by the distinguished Senator from Nevada.

First, if the amendment is accepted, we would still be relying upon private financing of campaigns. We would still have that campaign evil, of which all of us have become crucially aware in the course of the Watergate hearings, as well as the revelations from Common Cause about the vast amount of special interest giving that exists today.

Second, this proposal, in spite of the assurances given by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, would be basically an incumbents' bill. The challenger would have to win a primary in October and then try to familiarize himself to the electorate in time for the November election. That is simply not enough time to do the job.

For these two principal reasons, first because the amendment retains private financing, and second because it is, basically, an incumbents' bill, I believe the amendment should be rejected.

Also, Mr. President, there are two additional points which I think are important. The month of October has a series of Jewish holidays, and the amendment would have an adverse impact on the Jewish participation and involvement of those of the Jewish faith, not only for candidates, but also for others participating in the election system. This issue was debated quite completely in connection with S. 343 last year. Originally, that bill sought to set the general election in October, but because of the impact on the Jewish faith, the bill modified and the November date was retained.

Second, we have the problem where millions of young Americans turning 18 years of age each year might be effectively disfranchised from participating in the primaries. The Senate led the country in enacting the 18-year-old vote proposal, because we thought it was important that the young people participate in the election system. The practical impact of the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut is that many young people, arriving in college towns in early September, might have difficulty in meeting the residence requirements in time to vote in the primary.

We have taken steps in the past to recognize and eliminate some of the hazards and some of the obstacles for young people to participate in election campaigns. I think this measure would provide an unfortunate additional hinderence to that participation.

So, Mr. President, although the thrust of the amendment has value—I think all of us and the American people would like a shorter period of time for campaigns—the impact of the amendment would have too many undesirable effects for the Senate to accept.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I do not wish to be considered anti-Jewish and anti-young people in proposing my amendment. I concede that if the period from the first Tuesday in October to the first Tuesday in November interferes, that is something that can be worked out as a technical matter.

Second, how many young people participate in the selection of the Democratic or the Republican candidate for President? Very few. They do not have the privilege of sitting in the conventions. So let us make it clear that this amendment gives them a far greater voice in the election process than the present system. They not only have the opportunity to vote, but they have a voice in the selection of the candidate without tying themselves into either the Democratic or the Republican party. So as far as young people are concerned, this amendment extends the franchise to a far greater extent than they already have.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, contrary to the Senator's remarks, the Democratic Party has opened up the political system for much greater participation by youth.

Under the amendment in question, the residence laws for voting in most States would severely restrict voting by 18-year-olds if the election is held in October. Congress should not take such a step without adequate information. Certainly, we ought to shorten campaigns, but this is the wrong way to go about it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I would like to address just one point raised by both the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Connecticut: namely, what they consider to be the excessive cost to the Federal Government of this measure.

According to the bill, it would cost about $90 million if all candidates took 100 percent public financing in the general election. I do not consider that excessive. Last year, we voted to build a fleet of Trident submarines. One Trident submarine, at $1.3 billion, would run these elections for more than a decade. That is a cheap price to pay for a better government.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I hope my colleagues will defeat this amendment. As the Senator from Massachusetts has said, the proposals in the amendment ought to be the subject of hearings by an appropriate committee. This proposal, when we were considering an election campaign reform bill this year, was not presented to us. There was no testimony offered on most of the particular points raised in this amendment, and I think it ought to be given due consideration, rather than legislating on the Senate floor.

With respect to the point made by the distinguished Senator from Michigan when he said that we have a much greater amount provided for House campaigns than the average cost of House campaigns, we did not fix this $90,000 figure as any magic figure. We selected it because the Senate had already acted on S. 372 last year, and it has the $90,000 figure in it for House campaigns as a maximum figure. That is why we carried the figure over. If it was good last year—and I would venture to say that the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Michigan, perhaps not both but one of the two of them, voted for it last year, because it went over to the House of Representatives with an overwhelming vote—we felt it should still be valid.

I would simply say we do not have any preference for that particular figure. We felt, really, that the House Members themselves ought to decide on what was a fair amount to reduce the cost of campaigning. If they see fit to come up with a figure of $60,000 or $50,000 as the limit, fine; that would be perfectly all right with us, and I would have no objection to lowering some of the other limits in the bill or the figures in this chart we arrived at. This was the best consensus that we could arrive at between the members of the Rules Committee, after the hearings that were held on the subject matter, in order to report back a bill, as we were committed to do.

TITLE V

Mr. FANNIN. Mr. President, I want to indicate my support of the motion to strike title V of S. 3044, the Federal Campaign Act Amendments of 1974.

Title V of S. 3044 proposed to increase the amount a taxpayer could claim as a tax deduction or tax credit as a result of making a political contribution. In addition, title V proposed to increase the $1 tax check-off to $2, or in the case of a joint return $4.

These provisions of title V, however, pale to insignificance compared to the proposal to reverse the procedure governing the checkoff plan. Under existing law, if a taxpayer wishes to participate he does so by "checking off." In doing so, the taxpayer is electing, through a positive commitment, to support the checkoff plan. Under S. 3044, however, the spirit of volunteerism which is the foundation of the plan, is to be replaced by a procedure which can only erode that spirit. In its place, S. 3044 proposes to amend existing law to provide for the automatic designation of $2 of income tax liability of every individual whose income tax liability is $2 or more for the taxable year to the Federal election campaign fund, unless the individual elects not to make such a designation. It is interesting to note that the report accompanying S. 3044 did not even hint at a justification for reversing the checkoff procedure thus suggesting the absence of any sound position to justify the change.

In my 10 years in the Senate I have never seen anything so cynical or callous as this approach to legislation. This cynicism is clearly evident when one reviews the background and operation of the checkoff plan. With total disregard for the underlying participating spirit of the checkoff plan, the authors of S. 3044 must have calculated that if only 3.1 percent of our citizens were participating in the checkoff plan as was reported in November 1973, then it would surely follow that if the checkoff dollars were taken automatically, only a few citizens would "check-off" against the automatic designation as provided for in S. 3044, thus insuring that the checkoff fund would have sufficient funds to meet the required amounts to underwrite the public financing of political campaigns.

Apparently, the authors of S. 3044 believe that any method which will guarantee the success of the checkoff plan is justifiable even if it involves the kind of cynical calculations that are implied in this particular provision of S. 3044. Such cynicism is a sad enough trait, but it is a disaster in legislation—especially in campaign financing.

Mr. President, I cannot accept, and I hope my colleagues agree, the kind of thinking which has promoted this approach to the checkoff plan. If we are to have honest elections, as the proponents of public campaign financing advocate, then let us have honest straightforward laws. To do otherwise, as S. 3044 proposes, is to insult the intelligence of the American public.

If the checkoff plan is a worthy mechanism for providing funds for political campaigns, then let those who support that approach, like the Dollar-Check-Off Committee, promote it among our citizens. If it is worthy, then let our citizens choose as a free people whether to support it or not. That is the way, the only way, to conduct this program. To do otherwise would be destructive of the very ethic which underlies our political system: The freedom to choose.

Mr. President, I hope that the Senate Finance Committee, to whom title V will be referred as a separate bill, will take the position that the automatic designation approach as contained in title V is wrong and contrary to commonsense and will move to strike that particular part of title V altogether.

Mr. President, in addition to considering the proposed change in the checkoff plan I intend to urge the Senate Finance Committee to review the right of the individual taxpayer to designate the party of his choice for receiving his tax dollar under the check-off plan.

As originally established, the tax check-off plan allowed the taxpayer to either designate that $1 shall be paid over to the Presidential election campaign found for the account of the candidates of any specified political party for President and Vice President of the United States, or if no specific account is designated by such individual for a general account for all candidates for election to the offices of President and Vice President according to a nonpartisan entitlement formula.

Whether we agree or disagree with financing political campaigns through a tax-check-off system, nothing is more fundamental to that system than allowing a taxpayer the right to choose how his tax dollar is to be used, if he cares to participate.

In my opinion, the original conception of the tax check-off plan was correct, and in keeping with our traditional belief that in matters of political choice our citizens should have the right of free choice. By providing the taxpayer with a choice under the tax check-off plan that basic freedom was preserved.

In 1973, however, an amendment to the Public Debt Limit Act, Public Law 93–53, was adopted eliminating the opportunity for a taxpayer to designate the political party to whom his dollar checkoff could be sent. The result is a checkoff plan in which all check-off dollars are collected in a nonpartisan Presidential election campaign fund to be disbursed under an established formula.

Mr. President, it is of course regrettable, that the Senate saw fit to modify the check-off plan by not allowing the taxpayer the right to designate the political party of his choice as a recipient of his tax dollar. But what is even more distressing is the complete lack of concern by the proponents of the amendment as to the effect of the amendment on the value of free choice.

The reason given by the proponents of the amendment is that by striking the opportunity to designate a political party was that it would help to simplify the placement of the checkoff provision on an individual's tax return. So, Mr. President, for the sake of administrative simplicity, we deprive the American taxpayer, should he care to participate, of the right to designate the party of his choice to receive his tax dollars.

If we must sacrifice the value of free choice to gain simplicity in our tax returns, then I am afraid we have failed our responsibilities. If we shall succumb to the kind of reasoning which was the foundation for modifying the checkoff plan, then we might as well turn over our authority to the Federal administration and go home.

Mr. President, I am sure that the Internal Revenue Service could find a way to accommodate the dual choice provisions of the original checkoff plan. In this regard, it is interesting to note that the IRS is able to accommodate two checkoff opportunities on this year's tax form. It would seem possible, therefore, that they could accommodate an opportunity to designate party choice.

But, Mr. President, the real issue here is not the design of tax return forms nor the administrative problems of IRS, but whether Congress will recognize the right of free choice under the checkoff plan. That is the issue and that is what concerns me.

Mr. President, numerous groups concerned with campaign financing have authored statements of principles with respect to laws and programs governing campaign financing. These principles almost always recommend the reform of campaign financing practices and in particular that the Federal Government use public funds to support campaigns. Yet, in respect to the use of Federal funds none of these so-called statement of principles deal with the question of how to guarantee that a taxpayer's dollar will not be used to support a party or a candidate with whom he disagrees.

Those who advocate public campaign financing through the checkoff plan cannot ignore the reality that the taxpayer is deprived of the right to designate the party he wishes to support. Instead, if he chooses to participate, his dollars will be divided not only among the major parties but, perhaps, minor parties as well. This is not fair to those who want to support one party over the others. It is not fair for the simple reason that the taxpayer, if he desires to participate, has no choice.

I hope, Mr. President, that a way can be devised to accommodate freedom of choice under the checkoff plan. If we fail to accommodate that political freedom then any public campaign financing program will be seriously deficient in preserving the right of our citizens to choose whom they wish to support.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOMENICI). The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, under the previous order, the yeas and nays having been ordered, the Senate will now vote on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WEICKER) No. 1070. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE), the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. MONTOYA), the Senator from Maine (Mr. MUSKIE), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON), and the Senator from Missouri (Mr. SYMINGTON) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON) would vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS), and the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCOTT) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM R. SCOTT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT), and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. YOUNG) are absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN) is absent due to illness in the family.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCOTT) and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT) would each vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 68, as follows:

[No. 100 Leg.]

So Mr. WEICKER's amendment (No. 1070) was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Hackney, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the following bills of the Senate:

S. 969. An act relating to the constitutional rights of Indians;

S. 1836. An act to amend the act entitled "An Act to incorporate the American Hospital of Paris," approved January 30, 1913 (37 Stat. 654); and

S. 2441. An act to amend the act of February 24, 1925, incorporating the American War Mothers, to permit certain stepmothers and adoptive mothers to be members of that organization.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 39) to amend the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 to provide a more effective program to prevent aircraft piracy, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. STAGGERS, Mr. JARMAN, Mr. DINGELL, Mr. DEVINE, and Mr. KUYKENDALL were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1341) to provide for financing the economic development of Indians and Indian organizations, and for other purposes.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HELMS). Under the previous order, the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BELLMON) is recognized to call up amendment No. 1094, on which there shall be 30 minutes of debate.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for 10 seconds so that I may make an announcement?

Mr. BELLMON. I yield.

Mr. CANNON. Mr President, for the benefit of colleagues we have a 30-minute time limit on this amendment. I do not expect to use more than 3 minutes inasmuch as we already have voted on this identical issue.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has not been stated.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 78, line 19, strike out "and 617" and insert in lieu thereof "617, and 618".

On page 78, below line 22, after the item relating to section 617, add the following new item:

"618. Early disclosure of election results in Presidential election years.".

On page 86, below line 17, insert the following:

"PART VI.—EARLY DISCLOSURE OF PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION RESULTS

"SEC. 601. (a) Chapter 29 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"'§ 618. Early disclosure of election results in Presidential election years.

"'Whoever makes public any information with respect to the number of votes cast for any candidate for election to the office of Presidential and Vice-Presidential elector in the general election held for the appointment of Presidential electors, prior to midnight, eastern standard time, on the day on which such election is held shall be fined not more than $5,000, imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.'.".

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the debate on this amendment and any rollcalls that occur thereon, Mr. Charles Waters of my staff may be accorded the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, the objective of this amendment is easily understood. As the chairman said, we have had the matter before the Senate on other occasions and it has been voted upon before.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend.

The Senate will be in order.

The Senator may proceed.

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, quite simply, this amendment would make it unlawful for local election officials to announce the election returns for President and Vice President prior to midnight, eastern standard time. In so doing, this amendment would prevent the public disclosure of Presidential election returns in the Eastern and Central States while polls are open and citizens are still voting in Western States.

This amendment previously has been considered by the Senate on two occasions as an amendment to other proposals. It was introduced on June 28, 1973, as S. 2099 and referred to the Rules Committee where it is presently pending.

On June 27, I offered a similar amendment to Senator ROBERT C. BYRD's bill to change the date of Federal elections. During debate on my amendment, the ranking minority member of the Rules Committee, the distinguished Senator from Kentucky (Mr. COOK) stated:

I would vote for the amendment, if in fact the Senator would limit it to Presidential and Vice Presidential elections. I think that it would resolve one of the great problems, and we would be on our way to what the Senator wants to accomplish.

But I think the restriction as to all Federal elections is a serious hardship and I, therefore, will oppose his amendment on that basis.

Senator COOK's objection has been removed from this amendment making the disclosure provision apply only to the election returns in the Presidential and Vice-Presidential elections.

Considering Senator COOK's objection, this amendment was withdrawn and then introduced as a bill, S. 2099, which was referred to the Rules Committee.

On July 28, 1973, this proposal in modified form as suggested by Senator COOK, was called up again as an amendment to S. 372, the Federal elections bill. During debate on this amendment Senator COOK stated:

We all know the effect of television. We know that after ¾ of the votes are counted and the results announced, the people in Alaska are just going to the polls. Something really ought to be done about. I think something ought to be done but I think we ought to have the opportunity to have hearings to make a determination of the best way to do it.

Therefore, the ranking member of the Senate Rules Committee is on record on two different occasions supporting either this approach or Senate consideration of this proposal. There has been ample time for hearings. The problem of early Presidential election disclosures has been the subject of numerous hearings during the past 15 years. Now is the appropriate time and this is the appropriate bill for Congress to finally act in order to end a practice which has the potential of distorting the normal outcome of Presidential elections.

The net effect of this proposal will be to prevent the public disclosure of Presidential election returns until midnight, eastern standard time; 11 p.m., central standard time; 10 p.m., mountain standard time; 9 p.m. Pacific standard time; 8 p.m., Yukon time; 7 p.m. Alaska-Hawaii time; and 6 p.m., Bering time. By these times, polls throughout the United States will be closed.

I ask unanimous consent that a table showing the voting hours of the 50 States, as well as the hour of public disclosure under the terms of my amendment be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[1] Alabama.—In counties of over 400,000 population using voting machines, polls close at 7 p.m.

[2] Approximately 50 percent of the population.

[3] Connecticut.—In primaries, polls open at 12 noon, § 9-438.

[4] Iowa.—In cities, where registration not required, polls open at 8 a.m.

[5] Maine.—Where voting machines used exclusively, polls open at 10 a.m. and close at 9 p.m.

[6] Massachusetts.—Polls must be open at least 10 consecutive hours, and must close not later than 8 p.m.

[7] Nevada.—In counties of less than 25,000 population, polls open at 8 a.m. and close at 6 p.m.

[8] New Hampshire.—Hours vary according to size of town. In primaries, polls must be open 4 hours, opening not earlier than 6 a.m. and closing not later than 8 p.m.

[9] New York.—For special elections, polls open at 6 a.m. and close at 7 p.m. In primaries, everywhere except New York City, polls open at 12 m. and close at 9 p.m. In New York City polls open at 3 p.m. and close at 10 p.m.

[10] North Carolina.—Where voting machines are used, polls close at 7:30 p.m.

[11] Oklahoma.—Voters may file petition to have polls open at 6 a.m.

[12] Rhode Island.—Hour polls open varies from 7 a.m. to 12 m.

[13] Tennessee.—County commissioners of election may prescribe different hours, at least 15 days before election, but in no event may polls be open fewer than 7 hours between 8 a.m. and 9 p.m.

[14] Texas.—Election commissioners may vary hour for opening polls. In counties of less than 100,000 population, polls may open at 8 a.m. In counties of greater than 1,000,000 population, polls may open at 6 a.m.

[15] Vermont.—Hours prescribed by legislative branch in each municipality, but polls must open not earlier than 6 a.m. and close not later than 7 p.m.

[16] Wisconsin.—In cities of 1st, 2d, and 3d class, polls open at 7 a.m. In cities of 4th class, and villages and towns, polls open at 9 a.m. but governing body of such municipalities may prescribe that polls open not earlier than 7 a.m.

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, this amendment would prevent the nationwide publicizing of election results and predictions based on actual returns tabulated in the Eastern States until after 9 p.m., Pacific standard time, or 1 hour after the polls have closed in California. Because polls in Hawaii close at 6 p.m., local time, those polls will have been closed for an hour. Delayed broadcasting in Alaska would avoid serious problems in Alaska where one-half the voters would still have 1 hour to vote. This amendment, in my view, represents a simple, direct approach to the correction of an election abuse whose time for solution is long overdue.

One thing should be made absolutely clear—voting hours would still be regulated by the States and only the hour of public disclosure by local election officials of Presidential results would be affected. The counting of votes in all races, including the Presidential contest, could begin when the polls close and only the public announcement of the Presidential results would be delayed until the appropriate hour of disclosure.

In every Presidential election year since 1960 citizens have been alarmed because of the likelihood that the present practice of publicizing and predicting election returns influences the way many votes are cast and discourages others from voting because of the belief that the outcome of the election has already been decided.

Few would contend that the publicizing of election returns while citizens are voting has anything but a negative impact.

I believe the problem was summarized quite well by Senator HARTKE in a letter addressed in 1967 to Senator PASTORE, chairman of the Subcommittee on Communications of the Senate Commerce Committee.

I ask unanimous consent that Senator HARTKE's letter be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senator HARTKE's letter—

"There is, additionally, the question of whether listeners and viewers who have yet to vote are influenced by actual vote results elsewhere or by projections of results. There have been elections recently where the change of majority in one Western State could have tipped a Presidential election. It is possible that some voter already cast have decided the important elections. This, in turn, may have repercussions in local elections.

"The late President John F. Kennedy won the 1960 National election by a plurality vote. If one voter in each of the 173,000 voting precincts in the United States had switched his vote from Mr. Kennedy to Richard M. Nixon Nixon would have won the popular vote. . . .

"Realistically, had there been a switch of one vote in Kennedy's favor in each of the 10,400 precincts in Illinois plus a switch of nine votes in each of the 5,000 precincts in Texas, Mr. Nixon would have tallied the required 270 electoral votes and would have been our President.

". . . A switch of 27 electoral votes by Illinois and 24 votes by Texas, combined, would have resulted in a different choice of candidate for President of the United States.

"I am not disputing the inherent right of the people to know the facts, and the rights of stations and networks to tell the facts along with interpretations. . . .

"What primarily concerns me is protecting the right of the election process in the greatest democracy on earth.

"I would recommend to you that your schedule hearings of our Subcommittee to inquire into this matter and its attendant problems."

Mr. BELLMON. In response to Senator HARTKE's letter criticizing early disclosure of Presidential election results, public hearings were held before Senator PASTORE's subcommittee which aptly restated the problem in its final report by saying:

Common sense seems to indicate that a man who sits down to dinner just before going out to vote, switching on the television hears that so and so has already been declared the winner, might not engage himself in an exercise in futility.

It seems to me that this was a very practical and common sense way of looking at the problem, and I think quite clearly points out the need for the 93d Congress to take action.

It is in the interest of this Nation that the greatest number of citizens possible exercise their right to vote and that this fundamental right be carried out independent of and unhampered by any prior knowledge of the significance their vote will play in the ultimate outcome of the election. S. 3044, dealing with the reform of our election process, provides Congress with the proper vehicle to finally resolve this long-standing abuse.

It should be stressed that my amendment represents no suppression of the news. It provides a badly needed regulation of Presidential elections providing for orderly returns and the orderly release of information concerning these returns.

Quite clearly, Congress has the constitutional authority and responsibility to so act. Article II, section 1 of the Constitution gives Congress the power to determine the time of choosing the electors for President and Vice President. Article I, section 4 empowers Congress to regulate the time, place, and manner for holding elections for Senators and Representatives. The Supreme Court has indicated that this provision may also be applicable to Presidential elections.

Thus, there appears to be ample constitutional authority to support the proposal that a Federal law be enacted as I have proposed which would prohibit election authorities from releasing Presidential election results until a time fixed by Federal law. Such a law I believe to be not only constitutional, but practical as well.

Mr. President, I wish to refer to a study issued in 1965 by the Congressional Reference Service of the Library of Congress regarding the constitutionality of proposals prohibiting the publicizing of election returns prior to the polls closing in all States. This report concludes as follows:

There appears to be authoritative support of yet another proposal. Namely, the enactment of a Federal law which would prohibit election authorities from releasing Federal election results until a time fixed by a Federal law. Such a time could be set with regard to the differences in time zones across the country. If it were made a Federal crime for election officials to release this information before the time designated, such a law could be practical and might well be held to be Constitutional. It should be noted, that although election officials are appointed by the State, they also serve a Federal function when acting in Federal elections and are thus properly subject to Federal controls.

Mr. President, this study, although not conclusive in nature, indicates quite clearly, that my proposal is constitutional. Certainly, its enactment would solve this serious problem, and, in my view, represents the best approach in achieving the national objective of maximum voter participation. It is time for the Senate to act, I urge adoption of this amendment.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CANNON. I yield myself 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, this amendment is identical in principle as amendment No. 1094 that was previously offered and defeated by a vote of 51 to 25, with 24 Senators not voting.

The Senator said this would not apply to congressional elections. Congressional elections certainly could not be affected. How is a congressional election in one State or district going to be affected by premature disclosure in California? It is absurd on its face. The only race it can apply to is for the Presidency and Vice Presidency.

It would be almost impossible to administer and it would impose a criminal penalty, subject to a $5,000 fine if I or some other Member of Congress at the close of the polls in an eastern seaboard State called a friend in California and said, "We heard the result" and that so and so was winning by so many votes. If we phoned a friend in California to convey that informataion, we would be subject to a $5,000 criminal penalty. The proposal is patently absurd on its face.

We can certainly recognize the unfortunate situation we have where voters are influenced in the Far West when they learn the results of an election in the East at a much earlier time, but I do not know how we can possibly avoid that without making criminals of almost everyone in the Nation.

Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back my time.

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

I disagree with the position the chairman has taken about making criminals of everyone in the United States under this amendment. All this amendment would do would be to require local election officials not to make public the returns of elections until midnight eastern standard time. In this way there would be no way to know what the returns were in the eastern States and people would not be tempted to call someone in another time zone and let them know. We merely say not to release the outcome until midnight. There is nothing here to tempt anyone to violate the law because except for election officials no one would know what happened.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BELLMON. I yield.

Mr. COOK. I shall not argue this matter at great length. It is not just the result that is involved. What bothers many of us and it did in the previous debate is that when a network picks up four precincts in an entire State, and the announcer goes on television and says, "By reason of our projection so and so will carry the State by a certain vote." There is a problem there and it is a very serious problem. It is not only a matter of projecting who will win, which has no effect on voters, but it does on those who courthouses and whose responsibility it is to count votes, particularly where many States still have ballots and where the result is in question. We do have a problem at 5 after 6 in the evening when 15 States well know how they are going to vote based on two or three precincts in a State. This causes a problem and I think it is serious. We can wrestle with this for a long, long time, but that causes more problems than anything else.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BELLMON. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I agree with the Senator. I agree from experience and not from theoretical, academic discussion. I did not like to hear on television in 1968 from a few precincts telling me I was going to be slaughtered, and having all my people across the country so informed. I happen to believe it did have some effect in some parts of the country.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. COOK. That happened when people still had 4 or 5 hours to vote.

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is correct.

Mr. COOK. Where they were watching on television and the polls were still open.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I do not know whether this is the right amendment, but something ought to be done so the "Solomons" cannot just sit around and tell people what is going to happen in the election, particularly when the election, is close, and where a difference of 1 percent in each precinct will make the difference of who is going to be President. I do not know how the rest of my colleagues are going to vote, but I am going to catch up on this one.

Mr. BELLMON. Let me say that this matter has been before the Senate now for months and months. If there is a better approach, we ought to know what it is, but, lacking something better, I, like the Senator from Minnesota, think something ought to be done, and this is the best approach I have seen so far.

I yield now to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I would like to join the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY). I remember in 1964, after the first precinct, we were told I was going to get skunked, and, you know, they were right (laughter).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, I am ready to yield back my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back my time.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me 2 minutes?

Mr. CANNON. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, we have listened to two of the experts, but if we can go back, past 1968 and 1964, to the results of 1960, we find another view. President Kennedy carried practically all of the large eastern States. Then, when the vote came in from the western States, he was not doing as well even though the results in the East had been announced at a time when the polls in the west still had several hours to remain open.

It is a very open question whether people are affected at all, or, if they are affected, whether they may vote for the underdog or vote for whoever seeems to be ahead. Obviously, we do not know whether legislation is needed. I would certainly support a study to determine the answers, but I do not see how we can legislate until we know the magnitude of the problem.

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield a question?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield

Mr. BELLMON. Does the Senator feel that it is healthy or bad if the voters on the west coast know how the voters on the east coast voted, so it may influence them as to how to vote when they go to the polls?

Mr. KENNEDY. I say, with all respect, I have yet to see any convincing evidence that it has a real impact. In some instances people may want to vote for a winner, and there will be a bandwagon effect. In other instances, there may be an underdog effect. A voter may say, "I am going to vote for the other candidate, because he is the underdog, and because I am tired of being pushed around here by computers and being told that is the way I am going to vote. I am going to vote for A because they say I am going to vote for B."

I have not seen convincing evidence presented to the committee or on the floor which would indicate what impact the earlier announcement will have on the other States. As a matter of fact, the evidence seems to be conflicting. We ought not to rush into legislation that will have such a seriously restrictive effect on the media, until we determine how serious, if at all, the problem really is.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield.

Mr. KENNEDY I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator from Massachusetts may be right. Whether or not they are convincing results, I know there is something wrong in people turning on television and having someone in New York tell them what is going to happen across the country. Even if they are right, I think we are entitled to make our own mistakes. In Minnesota we are denied any right to campaign on election day. No candidate can even be near the polling place. No advertisement can appear in a newspaper or anything else except the announcement that this is election day. The reason for that is that there may be last minute election pressures brought to bear.

I think on election day people ought to be left alone to make up their own minds, instead of having the "wise one" tell us how it is going to come out. Just wait for the result. Get a good night's sleep. We can know the result the next day. If one is angry about it, he will not be quite so angry.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts in many respects. What bothers me about prognostication is that they ring a bell and put a big X there and say this State is going in this column because of their projections. I would feel much better if we were talking about results.

Under S. 343, which we have already passed, election day would be a national holiday, so we would not have their matter of whether people could vote or could not vote or have the opportunity to do so. Under S. 343 we already have resolved that issue and made it a national holiday.

My main objection is to the prognostication based on one, two, or three districts.

Mr. CANNON. The prognostication would not be prohibited under this amendment. One could make all the projections he wanted, but this amendment simply says that whoever makes public any information with respect to the number of votes cast for any candidate for election to the office of President and Vice President——

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. BELLMON. Those projections would be impossible if the outcome had not been announced. Those projections are based on certain preselected precincts. If those were not announced until midnight, the projection would be impossible. That is one of the purposes of my amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield back my time.

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM), the Senator from Maine (Mr. MUSKIE), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF), and the Senator from Missouri (Mr. SYMINGTON) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON) is absent on official business.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS), and the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HUGH SCOTT) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT), and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. YOUNG) are absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN) is absent due to illness in the family.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS) would vote "yea."

On this vote, the Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT) is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HUGH SCOTT).

If present and voting, the Senator from Ohio would vote "yea" and the Senator from Pennsylvania would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 38, as follows:

So Mr. BELLMON's amendment (No. 1094) was agreed to.

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. DOMENICI). Under the previous order, the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BELLMON) is recognized to call up amendment No. 1095 on which there is a 30-minute limitation.

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 1095.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, I ask that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with and that the amendment be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BELLMON's amendment (No. 1095) is as follows:

On page 27, line 12, strike out "years." and insert in lieu thereof "years and shall file a copy of such record with the Commission on the first day of each month except that during the period beginning one month before the date of an election, such records shall be filed on the first day of each week until the date of the election. Each such report filed with the Commission shall be complete as of two days before the date on which it must be filed. Such report shall contain the amount received from such advertising, the name and address of the person from whom payment was received, the candidate whose name appeared in such advertising, and a facsimile or other copy of such advertising.".

On page 40, line 2, insert after the period the following: "Each published shall file a copy of such record with the Commission on the first day of each month except that during the period beginning one month before the date of an election such records shall be filed on the first day of each week until the date of the election. Each such report filed with the Commission shall be complete as of two days before the date on which it must be filed. Such report shall contain the amount received from such advertising, the name and address of the person from whom payment was received, the candidate whose name appeared in such advertising, and a facsimile or other copy of such advetrising.".

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, the objective of this amendment is easily understood. The present provisions of S. 3044 provide in section 201 that any broadcast media which engages in political broadcasting must "maintain a record of any political advertisement broadcast, together with the identification of the person who caused it to be broadcast for a period of 2 years." This record would be available for public inspection at reasonable hours. A comparable provision applies to published political advertising in section 205 of the bill.

My amendment would greatly strengthen these reporting provisions of the bill, by placing an affirmative obligation on all communications media to file periodic reports with the Federal Elections Commission which would contain the following information:

First, the amount received for political advertising;

Second, the name and address of the person from whom payment was received;

Third, the candidate whose name appeared in the advertising;

Fourth, and a facsimile or other copy of such advertising.

By adopting this amendment the Senate will further guarantee full compliance with the law by all candidates for Federal office.

In my judgment, adequate reporting procedures are absolutely essential and represent a major method of eliminating the campaign abuses we have witnessed in recent years. In enacting campaign reform legislation, at least two basic objectives must be accomplished: First, we must insure that the law cannot be evaded by either winners or losers, regardless of their ethical standards. Second, we must give voters complete and accurate facts on campaign expenditures by candidates before, not after, the votes are cast and counted.

By adopting this amendment, the Senate would guarantee that these two basic objectives become a reality. Let me explain. Enactment of this amendment requiring the communications media to make periodic reports to the Federal Elections Commission will provide a new and simplified reporting mechanism which will act as a double check on a candidate's own reports. It will make it far easier for the Federal Election Commission to enforce the law without creating an undue burden on the communications media which are already required under the terms of this bill to keep reports. It will simplify the process by not making it necessary, for example, for a member of the Federal Elections Commission to send a representative to the candidate's state and check the records of many sources in order to determine whether a candidate has fully complied with the law.

This amendment would provide a two-pronged approach, involving not only the candidate and his campaign committee, but the communications media as well. By requiring the media to actively participate in the reporting system, we can obtain a true picture of how much money is spent by each candidate for advertising. By comparing reports from advertising media with the reports of the candidate, we can provide a check and balance system that should deter any tendencies toward manipulation.

I urge the adoption of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may require.

This amendment would change the bill before us. It would, I believe, complicate it even further, because we all know how complicated the bill is now and how, with the best of intentions, it would be very hard for individuals to carry out all its provisions.

What the amendment does is add to all the reports that have to be filed, the virtual mountain of them, an additional report, on the first day of each month, as to the advertising that is being placed in the media. And I think we would find that it would apply not only to that report, but also to the financial side as well, because the important thing is not the advertising, but where the money for the advertising is coming from.

In addition to that, it piles a burden on the people who receive the money and who are responsible for the advertising, be it a publisher or his representative; he has to file a copy of such record as well, which is a duplication.

So, while the objective of the proposal is good, it would seem to me to further complicate the bill, and I would be compelled to oppose it.

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, in my judgment this does not in any way complicate the reporting procedures provided in the bill. If the Senator will check on page 27, line 9—and the same language appears in another place in the bill as it applies to newspapers—in line 9 on page 27 it says:

Each station licensee shall maintain a record of any political advertisement broadcast, together with the identification of the person who caused it to be broadcast, for a period of two years.

All my amendment would do is require that a copy of that record be furnished to the Federal Elections Commission. There is no further recordkeeping. All the amendment does is require that the records be accumulated in one place, so there would be a way to check against the records of the media and the records filed by the candidate, to be sure the candidate is telling the truth, and so the people will know before the election.

It would do no good to find out 6 months later that the candidate is not telling the truth, because by that time the election will be over and the people will have made their decisions. We are trying to get the facts out ahead of time, so that people will know who is backing the candidate, and be able to take that into consideration in casting their votes. It does not, in my judgment, complicate the reporting procedures. It only makes the reports available ahead of time, so that people can make that decision as to those they want to have represent them in Congress.

Mr. PELL. The Senator is correct as to the records maintained by radio and TV stations, but it does not apply as to the publishers.

Mr. BELLMON. If the Senator will yield, on page 40, the same provision applies to newspapers. It begins on page 39, line 21, as follows:

Any publisher who publishes any political advertisement shall maintain such records as the Commission may prescribe for a period of two years and so no.

The amendment covers both the electronic media and the publishers.

Mr. PELL. The Senator is correct in that regard, but it does not cover the actual publication of it. There is a good deal of difference between keeping it on file and filing the report.

In addition, the Presidential candidate who has to file now. I think four times in an election year, would have to do it on the first day of each month. The question is whether there should be more reports filed or whether the bill at present provides an adequate number.

The Senator from Oklahoma does not believe it is adequate, and we believe it is. That is the issue.

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, the filing provisions under the law are, I believe, adequate and highly desirable. But the problem is the difficulty of checking with half a dozen television stations and perhaps a hundred newspapers to get the information together in time for the election. We are simply requiring that the information be filed in a central place before the election, so that the voter will have an opportunity to know who is supporting each candidate and to what extent.

This does not complicate the matter, it simplifies it by having one central place to get the information, and not having to scatter all over the country to find out what is going on.

Mr. PELL. Am I not correct in saying that the information is required to be filed by any candidate, and therefore there would be a duplication if not a triplication? This would be at least a duplication, because the candidate files the information now.

Mr. BELLMON. The Senator is correct; this is a duplication, for the very good reason that it is my feeling that we need to have the information from the media to be sure that the candidates are telling the truth, and so that we will know before the election whether they they have been reporting the true extent of their financing.

If a candidate is running badly behind in a campaign, he may decide to spend a large amount of money just before the election in violation of the law, and it would not be known until after the election.

Mr. PELL. Then his election would be invalidated, and he would be subject to criminal penalties.

Mr. BELLMON. That would be true, except that it would happen many months after the election, and, if carried out, would cause his district to be without representation. It seems to me it would be better to have an inducement for the candidate not to file a false report in the first instance.

Mr. PELL. I agree with the Senator's viewpoint; I disagree with the necessity for it, and that is the reason for my disagreement.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I think this really illustrates that the problem——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BELLMON. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. WEICKER. I thank the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. President, the problem here is with the whole bill. I know why the bill contains no such requirement: We did not want to tread on the toes of the press. But as soon as you get the Government into the act of financing political campaigns, then it is inevitable that you come to the point where you are asking the press to participate in an enforcement function. We can go ahead and control just about everything in this country, but there is a big difficulty when we get into the electoral process itself. I do not think there should be any obligation imposed on the press to be candid, and neither do I feel that the Federal Government should be into this area, but as long as we have put the Government into it, then so are the news media all of a sudden brought in, this time as an enforcement arm of the Federal Government.

The problem highlighted by this amendment is the problem with the whole bill. A lot can go wrong with Government, but as long as people are totally free in their elections there is a remedy we have. When the remedy is in the hands of the Government, that is when our troubles start.

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOMENICI). All time on this amendment has now been yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment (No. 1095) of the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BELLMON).

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM), the Senator from Maine (Mr. MUSKIE), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF), and the Senator from Missouri (Mr. SYMINGTON) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON) is absent on official business.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK), the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HUGH SCOTT), and the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. HRUSKA) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT), and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. YOUNG) are absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN) is absent due to illness in the family.

On this vote, the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HUGH SCOTT) is paired with the Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS).

If present and voting, the Senator from Pennsylvania would vote "nay" and the Senator from Alaska would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 52, as follows:

So Mr. BELLMON'S amendment (No. 1095) was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from New York (Mr. BUCKLEY) is recognized to call up his amendment No. 1081, on which there shall be 1 hour for debate.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment by way of substitution to correct certain technical defects that were brought to my attention. It does not in any way affect the substance of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator ask unanimous consent that that be done?

Mr. BUCKLEY. I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is so modified.

The amendment, as modified, is as follows:

On page 13, line 17, strike out "(f)(2)" and insert in lieu thereof "(h)(2)".

On page 13, line 17, after "no" insert "incumbent".

On page 13, line 24, strike "(g)" and insert "(i)".

On page 14, line 9, after "No" insert "incumbent".

On page 15, line 5, strike "(f)(2)" and insert in lieu thereof "(h)(2)".

On page 15, line 5, after "no" insert "incumbent".

On page 15, line 10, strike "(g)" and insert "(i)".

In page 15, between lines 17 and 1, insert the following:

"(d) For purposes of this section, the term 'incumbent candidate' means a candidate who is seeking nomination for election, or election, to a Federal office who—

"(1) holds that office; or

"(2) holds any public office to which he was elected by the voters of an area which is the same as, or includes completely, the area in which the voters reside who may vote in elections held to nominate individuals as candidates for election to that Federal office, and to elect a candidate to that office.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, the effect of the amendment is very simple. It recognizes what has been pointed out clearly from time to time during the course of the debate today, and that is that incumbents have a very significant advantage over challengers and especially those challengers who have never held office from the same basic constituency. Therefore, I propose that challengers be granted 30 percent more money than the limits now stipulated in the pending legislation.

During the course of the debate on S. 3044 that has occupied a major proportion of our time for more than a week now, several references have been made to the fact that this bill may favor incumbent officeholders over those attempting to challenge them.

The fear that S. 3044 will favor incumbents over challengers is, in my opinion, a most realistic one. I am convinced that this legislation as presently drawn would make it even more difficult than it now is to unseat an incumbent Congressman, Senator, or President.

Recent poll figures force one to the conclusion that the Congress is not exactly held in the highest esteem by the American people. In fact, as most of us are aware a number of pundits have observed that we are presently less popular even than the President with a collective approval rating of but 21 percent.

One might conclude from figures like this that incumbents would be frequent victims of the oft-stated desire to "throw the rascals out." But, in fact, we rascals have always fared rather well in seeking reelection. I will grant that we are perhaps all good fellows and that it is at least possible that we are so loved by our constituents as to be personally unbeatable, but I suspect there are other, better reasons for our remarkable success at the polls.

It is well known, and, indeed, obvious to even the most casual observer, that as incumbents we have certain tangible and intangible advantage over almost any prospective challenger.

As U.S. Senators we are more familiar with the issues than most for we are paid to be familiar with them. Our comments and our feelings are news in our home States and occasionally nationwide. We have on our various payrolls people whose job involve communicating our positions to our constituents, servicing the requests of constituents in trouble and portraying our views to the public in the most favorable light possible.

We have access to the frank, to the Senate recording studio and to the professional expertise of people who have worked directly or indirectly all their lives to keep people like us in office.

During the course of a year we answer literally thousands or even millions of letters. We respond personally or through staff members to the requests of countless constituents who call us in Washington or at our State offices seeking help with individual problems.

All of this gives us a significant advantage come time for re-election. We are ordinarily far better known than those seeking to unseat us and after 6 years of experience in office we are usually far more likely to know how to win a campaign.

These same kinds of advantages are available to our colleagues in the House and, in exaggerated form to any incumbent President.

Thus, it is hardly surprising to discover that incumbents are more likely to be reelected than defeated in spite of popular feelings about Government in general or differences on specific issues.

Consider the figures.

During the last half century, U.S. Senators seeking reelection have won more than 80 percent of the time and Congressmen have done even better by beating back their challengers 90 percent of the time.

A number of studies have indicated that incumbency alone is worth at least five points in a House race and six in a Senate race.

Is it any wonder, in light of these figures, that Charles Clapp in his classic work on the House was able to summarize the attitudes of those he talked to thusly:

> There is a tendency to believe that, aside from isolated instances where an over-riding issue is present, there is little excuse for defeat.

I am not claiming that these rates prevail only because of incumbency and I am not about to claim—as common cause's spokesmen seem to—that incumbents win because only they can raise the money that has been described as "the mothers milk of politics." But it is clear that incumbency itself gives one an advantage that the average challenger must overcome if he is to prevail.

It is my firm belief that a certain amount of money must be spent by a challenger just to offset the incumbent's advantage, unless he finds himself in one of Mr. Clapp's "isolated instances where an overriding issue is present."

If this assumption is correct, the uniform spending limits incorporated into S. 3044 can only aid incumbents because they make it impossible for a challenger to spend the money necessary to overcome the incumbent's advantage. It is this feature of S. 3044 that makes it both fair and accurate to characterize the bill as the Incumbent Protection Act of 1974.

It is difficult to place a dollar value on incumbency, especially in Senate races. Senator BROCK last week referred to one estimate that placed the value of House incumbency at some $60,000. I suspect this figure is a bit high, however, because it includes money spent on things that have only marginal value at reelection time.

The true value of incumbency is difficult to determine primarily because it is only one of a number of factors that determine the outcome of any election.

For example, a number of studies have shown that party is even more important as the vast majority of congressional districts especially are dominated by a single party. Indeed, while 90 percent of those incumbents running are reelected in House races 75 percent or more of the candidates representing a retiring incumbent's party are also elected. With this in mind it is indeed difficult to separate out the dollar value of incumbency in a meaningful way so that we can structure our laws to allow all candidates to start the race at the starting line.

Therefore, I must admit that my amendment to S. 3044 which allows nonincumbents to spend 30 percent more than incumbents represents a somewhat arbitrary attempt to compensate for the advantages an incumbent presently enjoys.

Still, arbitrary as the 30 percent figure itself may be, the available evidence indicates that it may well accomplish the purpose. Prior to preparing this amendment, I reviewed various studies that convince me that a 30 percent differential would do much to overcome the advantage of incumbency without tipping the scales too far the other way.

One of these studies was undertaken by common cause. I cited it at the time I originally introduced this amendment and I would call your attention to it again today. I am referring, of course, to the common cause study of 1972 congressional campaign financing that was released last year.

The authors of the study are numbered among the principal supporters of public financing and use its results to bolster their case. But I am convinced that they misread their own data; that in fact it argues against public financing generally and the provisions of S. 3044 specifically.

In 1972 more than three-quarters of all House races were decided by pluralities of 60 percent or more. In these races the average winning candidate spent $55,000 or less and the average loser spent even less.

These races all took place in what political analysts like to call "safe" districts. The districts involved were either so totally dominated by one party that a serious fight for the seat impressed almost everyone as futile, or the seat was occupied by a personally popular incumbent who just was not about to be beaten.

The authors of the study apparently believe that real races might be run in these districts if enough dollars are poured into the campaigns of those challenging now firmly entrenched incumbents. I am not persuaded that this would happen.

For reasons outlined above the incumbents holding these seats are probably impervious to real challenge. Those running against them have not failed, because they have lacked funds; they have lacked funds because their campaigns were doomed to failure.

Common Cause has simply confused cause with effect in a way that has led Mr. Gardner and his friends to precisely the wrong conclusions.

Supporters of incumbents and challengers alike in these districts were apparently reluctant to give to campaigns unlikely to be affected one way or the other by their contributions. Thus, as we shall see in a moment the spending on both sides in these districts was significantly below the spending levels that prevailed in hotly contested races.

This three-quarter figure cited in the Common Cause study helps verify another figure I cited a few minutes ago. As you will recall, I mentioned earlier that another study found that in 75 percent of those congressional districts where an incumbent retires, the next race was won by a member of his party.

The authors of the other study used this figure to demonstrate the importance of party. They found, in effect, that because of party three-fourths of all congressional races are won by the dominant party's nominee regardless of incumbency and other factors.

I must conclude, therefore, that in such districts the $90,000 per candidate allowed under S. 3044 will merely increase the level of spending without having any real impact on the final outcome.

The races in which the Federal subsidy and the limits associated with it will have an impact take place in the 60-odd districts that might be considered marginal.

According to the same Common Cause study, only 66 House races were decided by less than 55 percent of the vote in 1972. These districts could be considered marginal by most standards and the victor in each of them had to fend off an extremely tough challenger.

Winners and losers alike spent more money in these races than was spent in the districts I have described as "safe." The cost to winners and losers alike in these districts averaged somewhat more than $100,000 each. As both the winners and losers spent about the same amount in these races, it suggests that the raising of funds needed for such campaigns is not too different. I will also admit that the limits imposed by S. 3044 might not have much of an effect in the average close race.

The real impact of the limits imposed by this legislation will occur in those races in which an incumbent finds himself in trouble and stands a chance of being defeated. Only 10 House incumbents were defeated in 1972 and in all but 2 cases the challenger had to spend significantly more than his opponent to overcome advantages of incumbency.

The average spent by candidates who unseated incumbents in 1972 was $125,000 as opposed to the average of $86,000 those incumbents spent. Thus, it can be argued on the basis of these figures that a challenger must be able to outspend an incumbent opponent by a significant margin if he expects to beat him and that he will have to spend in excess of $100,000 to stand a realistic chance.

But what effect will the $90,000 limit imposed by S. 3044 have in these races? It is not at all unrealistic to assume that it will prevent challengers in marginal districts from overcoming the advantages inherent in incumbency. It is not at all unreasonable, in other words, to assume that those limits, had they been in effect in 1972, might have saved most, if not all of those 10 incumbents.

I have referred to the figures involving House races because the figures for these races are more easily quantified and compared. But the same principles apply to Senate and Presidential races—under ordinary circumstances it costs money to overcome the advantages of incumbency and a uniform spending limit might well make it impossible for the average challenger to accomplish this.

Mr. President, I think my amendment will encourage real competition in those districts where competition is possible. It will also dispell any public idea that what the Congress is really engaged in the protection of incumbents.

The people of this country are growing more cynical by the day. They are convinced that we care only about ourselves—not about their problems or the system we profess to serve.

I am not at all convinced that public financing will dispell this cynicism, but I do think that if we are going to move in this direction the people are going to demand that we do more than enact reforms that have the practical effect of protecting ourselves from those who would seek to unseat us.

Therefore, I urge the adoption of this amendment.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BUCKLEY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. I have an interest in this amendment and its application where an incumbent Congressman is running against an incumbent Senator.

Mr. BUCKLEY. My amendment specifies that the definition of incumbency includes anyone who holds office or has held office within 5 years, which office has the same general electorate as the person in office. In other words, if a governor should challenge a Senator, he would not receive more money, or in any State where there is one Member of the House, like Delaware or Alaska, Members of the House would not be granted a larger sum of money.

Mr. DOLE. Take Kansas as an example, where there are five congressional districts. Even though the incumbent Member of Congress and the incumbent Senator have one common area, under your amendment the Congressman would still get the total bonus. Is that correct?

Mr. BUCKLEY. He will, because he must also compete in areas where he has not had the advantage of being able to send out literature to constituents.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one correction in the colloquy? I think the amendment the Senator sent to the desk eliminates the 5-year period, if I understand it correctly.

It reads: "holds any public office to which he was elected by the voters in an area which is the same as, or includes completely, the area in which the voters reside . . ."

Mr. BUCKLEY. That is correct. That was one of the technical corrections.

Mr. COOK. So there is no 5-year period provided for.

Mr. BUCKLEY. I thank the Senator from Kentucky for that correction.

Mr. DOLE. I think basically I agree with the statement of the Senator from New York. There are some who would suggest that this year the incumbents should have the bonus because many problems, not of their own making, are faced by incumbents. But is seems to me that where there is a partial incumbency on behalf of the challenger and the incumbent, it might be advisable to provide some sliding scale or some sliding formula. As the amendment stands now it provides, in effect, more of an advantage to an incumbent Congressman who is running against an incumbent Senator, as compared to someone who is not holding office and running against an incumbent Senator.

Mr. BUCKLEY. I believe the point made by my friend from Kansas is well taken.

Mr. DOLE. In other words, both the incumbent Senator and incumbent Congressman have the same advantage in one of their State's congressional districts. That question is of peculiar interest to me, because my opponents is an incumbent Congressman.

Mr. BUCKLEY. The Senator has raised a good point. I think, also, it illustrates some of the difficulties we are apt to run into when we set arbitrary limits and ceilings on expenditures, and so on, none of which I support. Nevertheless, we do recognize the basic problem of the advantage of an incumbent in normal election years, and accordingly, an amendment such as mine is, I think, badly needed. I think it injects equity. It protects the Congress from the charge of self-service.

I am sure that if the Senate will adopt this amendment, in the conference process we may see some kind of sliding scale or other approach taken that would cope adequately with the kind of fact situation suggested by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. If the Senator will yield further, it seems to me it could be reduced proportionately. In the case of the State of Kansas, there are five districts which are approximately equal in population. The Senator from New York's formula could be reduced one-fifth, so the challenger would have 124 percent of the Senator's share instead of 130 percent.

Mr. BUCKLEY. I wish the Senator from Kansas had collaborated with me before I offered the amendment, but I do offer it as a significant improvement over what we now have.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) as a cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question on the time of the manager of the bill, so it will not be taken from his time?

Mr. BUCKLEY. I yield.

Mr. COOK. I think we fight this question of how one handles a nonincumbent, and I think the Senator faces up to the issue very well. My problem is one which I will state for the RECORD, and for no other purpose, so we can get some legislative history.

How did the Senator from New York come to the conclusion that 30 percent was the equitable figure?

Mr. BUCKLEY. The Senator from New York had to close his eyes and think and reach up into the air, which I think, incidentally, is as fine a basis for legislating as the basis for much of the legislation we enact in this Chamber.

Actually, it was not entirely that arbitrary. I did look at the races included in the 1972 Common Cause, study, which seemed to indicate that there was a disparity of between 20 and 40 percent in what was spent by the successful challenger as compared to the challengee.

Mr. COOK. I must say that is our problem when we amend a bill so freely on the floor. I will say to the Senator from New York, in all honesty, I think we have to resolve this problem and I think it should be resolved. I have serious misgiving about pulling figures out of the air. We are pulling substantial financial figures out of the air—30 percent to nonincumbents in 50 States for 435 House seats.

Could the Senator tell me, based on the charts produced for the Rules Committee, the additional sums this would cost in the overall picture, so the taxpayers, who are obviously footing the bill, will have some idea of what the 30 percent really constitutes for 435 House and 33 Senate seats?

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I have not done that, but it is a simple matter of arithmetic. One would take one-half of the cost and add a certain amount to it.

Mr. COOK. I do not disagree with the Senator. I think we ought to know what we are doing. We ought to know what we are doing for the budget. I think the taxpayers ought to know. Whether the amount be 10 percent or 20 percent, there ought to be some basis by which we could evaluate this proposal and know the amount we are talking about.

I know the situation is very serious. The facts prove that incumbency has a value. But when we move in the other direction and take a figure out of the air, we should know what it represents in dollar bills.

Mr. BUCKLEY. If the Senator will yield, this information was not taken out of the air; it is based on such conclusions as could be gleaned from an analysis of the Common Cause study.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on my time?

Mr. BUCKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I think the Senator has raised a good point as to whether an incumbency actually does have a value. We have seen polls which show in what low esteem the incumbent is held, plus the fact that he has to be in attendance here and vote on issues that are very unpopular at home. He has to be here to answer quorum calls, and so on.

There is a real question as to whether he does have an advantage, let alone whether one can evaluate whether the amount ought to be 20 percent, 30 percent, or perhaps 2 percent or 1 percent.

One Senator suggested a few moments ago that the incumbent is the one who has the disadvantages, because the incumbent is held in such low esteem by the public.

Mr. BUCKLEY. It is not only since 1972 that Congress has been held in such low esteem. It is an unfortunate fact that has existed for many years. Nonetheless, election after election demonstrates that 90 percent of the membership of the House is returned to Congress, and more than 80 percent of the Senate is also returned.

Careful studies have been cited by the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK) which place a monetary value on it. We have seen other studies which place a 5 or 6 percent advantage on incumbency.

May I ask the distinguished sponsor of the bill whether, during the consideration of the bill, any hearings were held to determine this?

Mr. CANNON. There certainly were hearings, and the hearings went into almost every question that I could conceive of.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Was this question raised?

Mr. CANNON. I do not believe the precise question was raised as to whether the incumbent ought to get less than the person who is the challenger. But in simple frankness, if we wrote into the bill a different figure, we would kill the bill. If the distinguished Senator from New York is desirous of killing the bill, this amendment is a means of doing it. But if he is honestly trying to save the bill and arrive at a different formula, it is unfortunate that he did not propose that formula at the time of the hearings, because we tried to make the formula as fair as we could. Despite that fact, every member of the committee worked together to try to devise the fairest formula we could come up with, and that is what we did.

Mr. BUCKLEY. I appreciate the sincerity of the efforts that have been made. However, as is so often the case, many of us do not have an opportunity to study the legislation until it is reported by the committee. We have had our own work to do.

I have also had an opportunity to study a careful analysis by Prof. Ralph Winter of the Yale Law School, among others, that highlights and demonstrates a significant advantage.

I would like to refer to the very excellent point raised by the Senator from Kentucky that my amendment has the effect of increasing the cost of $3,044. I ask unanimous consent that I may amend my amendment to provide that we reduce by 30 percent what is allowed the incumbent, instead of allowing it to the challenger.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from New York further modifying his amendment?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, what was the modification?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada asks for a clarification.

Mr. BUCKLEY. In response to the excellent point raised by the Senator from Kentucky for modification of my amendment, if adopted as orginally submitted it would increase the amount allocated to the challengers. I merely provide now that we reduce by 30 percent the amount allocated to the incumbent rather than increasing the challenger's allotment by that amount. The effect would be unchanged.

Mr. COOK. In the form in which the amendment is now, the amount is put in terms of $90 million a year. Half of $90 million is $45 million 30 percent of $45 million is $13,500,000. So what we are doing, in fact, is increasing the cost of the bill by $13,500,000 a year.

Mr. BUCKLEY. If my amendment is adopted, we reduce the cost by $13,500,000.

Mr. COOK. Is the Senator's proposal in the form of a substitute?

Mr. BUCKLEY. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has proposed a modification or a substitute. He seeks unanimous consent to modify his amendment.

Mr. COOK. This is similar to the amendment submitted by the distinguished Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) this morning. The one the Senator from Alabama proposed provided 50 percent for the incumbent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment will be so modified.

The Senator from New York will please send his modification to the desk.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On whose time?

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, how much time have I remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has 8 minutes remaining.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Kentucky yield me some time. The Senator from New York can then draft his proposal.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, while the distinguished Senator from New York is drafting his modification, I think it might be well to point out that it is a matter of concern to this Senator, who is running as an incumbent candidate and who has a vital interest in the proposed legislation.

I would point out to the Senator from New York and other Senators the great difficult we face in trying to make everything uniform and give everyone equal advantage in a political race. I would cite my own efforts to play it straight and to disclose properly my contributions and expenditures; to open political offices and pay those who work in them with political contributions rather than with official staff salary allowances and to lease planes, automobiles, and other things as the campaign approaches.

I just do not see how it is possible in any bill to make certain by legislation that everybody will have an arithmetically equal shake.

I agree with the distinguished Senator from Nevada. I would say certainly that the incumbent always has disadvantages.

Further, in the case of the junior Senator from Kansas, because of early efforts to mount a campaign and because of strict compliance with the laws passed heretofore, the junior Senator from Kansas had spent in excess of $100,000 before any opponent decided to make an announcement. So here is a case where the incumbent has already been penalized. Now we come along with this amendment that says, if one is challenging an incumbent, he is disadvantaged and ought to have 30 percent more.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, is there not a serious constitutional question as to whether Congress can say that a person who is an incumbent can spend only so much money, but that a person who is a nonincumbent can spend 30 percent more? Would that not be a constitutional question that might jeopardize the incumbent?

Mr. DOLE. I think a serious question is involved. Once we start tinkering in this area, we invite real trouble. I believe, in all seriousness, that there are some disadvantages in incumbency in normal times. But I suggest that these are not normal times, and I am not certain there are any advantages to incumbency this year.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk a substitute amendment with the modifications we have been discussing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is so modified.

Mr. BUCKLEY'S amendment, as modified, is as follows:

On page 13, line 17, strike out "(f)(2)" and insert in lieu thereof "(h)(2)".

On page 13, line 17, after "no" insert "incumbent".

On page 13, line 24, strike "(g)" and insert "(i)".

On page 14, line 9, after "No" insert "incumbent".

On page 15, line 5, strike "(f)(2)" and insert in lieu thereof "(h)(2)".

On page 15, line 5, after "no" insert "incumbent".

On page 15, line 10, strike "(g)" and insert "(i)".

On page 15, between lines 17 and 18, insert the following:

"(c) No candidate who is an incumbent may make expenditures in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to any Federal office in excess of 70 percent of the amount of expenditures which a non-incumbent candidate may make under subsection (a) or (b) in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to the same office.

"(d) For purposes of this section, the term 'incumbent candidate' means a candidate who is seeking nomination for election, or election, to a Federal office who—

"(1) holds that office; or

"(2) holds any public office to which he was elected by the voters of an area which is the same as, or includes completely, the area in which the voters reside who may vote in elections held to nominate individuals as candidates for election to that Federal office, and to elect a candidate to that office.

On page 15, line 18, strike out "(c)" and insert in lieu thereof "(e)".

On page 15, line 21, strike out "limitation in subsection (a) or (b)" and insert in lieu thereof "applicable limitation under subsection (a), (b), (c)".

On page 15, line 22, strike out "(d)" and insert in lieu thereof "(f)".

On page 16, line 4, strike out "(e)(1)" and insert in lieu thereof "(g)(1)".

On page 17, line 4, strike out "(f)(1)" and insert in lieu thereof "(h)(1)".

On page 17, line 18, strike out "(a) and (b)" and insert in lieu thereof "(a), (b), and (c)".

On page 17, line 21, strike out "(g)" and insert in lieu thereof "(i)".

On page 18, line 4, strike out "(h)" and insert in lieu thereof "(j)".

On page 18, line 10, strike out "(h)" and insert in lieu thereof "(k)".

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I think we have exhausted the arguments, at least on my side, and I am happy to yield back the remainder of my time, if the manager is prepared to yield back his. Before doing so, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

One of the basic purposes that we were trying to achieve in this bill for public financing was to make it so that people who were not incumbents would have an equal access to funds to be able to carry on a campaign. The distinguished Senator from New York referred to Common Cause a few minutes ago as one of his authorities. I would like to read from the testimony of the head of Common Cause before the committee:

Congressional incumbents averaged a 2 to 1 financial advantage over their opponents in the 1972 elections.

That was where they did not have any public financing, they had a 2-to-1 financial advantage over their opponents.

Our most recent finding furthermore shows that of the money given to 1972 congressional candidates by special interest groups, $2 out of every $3 went to incumbents.

So they got 2-to-1 in private financing, and they got $2 out of $3 from the special interest groups.

The study also shows that, while spending substantial sums does not guarantee victory, it is essential to running a closely contested race.

We also found that less than $1 out of every $3 made available to congressional candidates came from small givers—$100 or less.

This makes it obvious that they rely on the big givers—that is, when I say "big givers," I mean if you want to call the giver of $100 or more a big giver.

There is really only one solution to this fundamental problem. If we are to return to a competitive system of representative government, then we must have public financing of elections.

Mr. President, that is exactly what we tried to do. We tried to devise a fair formula. In my opinion, if we try to write in an inequality for either side by simply saying that because a man is or is not an incumbent he gets a lesser amount, that is something that could not be upheld in the courts. Furthermore, I do not think it could be made fair either way you attempt to set it.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, before I yield back the remainder of my time, I would like to address myself to two points raised by the sponsor of the bill. He cited two conclusions reached by Common Cause from data compiled by Common Cause with respect to the 1972 elections.

In the case of House seats where, by virtue of incumbency or by virtue of the fact that the district is overwhelmingly of one party or another, you have a situation where there is no point in trying to challenge the incumbent, and potential donors understand this. The result is that the average incumbent spends 50 some odd thousand dollars and the average challenger spends less in these races. This is because everyone understands the futility of the race. The incumbents are not reelected because the challenger could not get money; rather the challenger could not get money because it was understood that he could not win.

However, the same figures assembled by Common Cause illustrate that where you have close races; races in which, election year in and election year out, the outcome has hinged on about 5 percent of the votes; in each of those races we see quite a different situation. We see both the incumbent and the challenger able to mobilize and spend significant sums of money. The averages are a little more than $100,000 per race whether the candidate happens to be the incumbent or the challenger.

This demonstrates to my mind that where there is a close race, neither incumbent nor challenger has difficulty in raising the necessary funds. Therefore, the entire premise of Common Cause is falsely placed. I just want the RECORD to include this rebuttal.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOMENICI). All remaining time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York (Mr. BUCKLEY), as modified. On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM), the Senator from Maine (Mr. MUSKIE), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF), and the Senator from Missouri (Mr. SYMINGTON) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON) is absent on official business.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS), and the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HUGH SCOTT) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS), and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT) are absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN) is absent due to illness in the family.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HUGH SCOTT) and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT) would each vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 66, as follows:

[No. 103 Leg.]

So Mr. BUCKLEY's amendment was rejected.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENTS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, for the information of the Senate, there will be no more rollcall votes today.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at such time as amendment No. 1120 of the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BARTLETT) is called up and made the pending business before the Senate, there be a time limitation of 30 minutes to be equally divided and controlled in accordance with the usual form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ABOUREZK). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent at the hour of 12 o'clock tomorrow the Senate proceed to the consideration of amendment No. 1120 of the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BARTLETT).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order at this time to order the yeas and nays on amendment No. 1120 of the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BARTLETT) and for the vote to occur tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

THE PRESIDENCY AND THE IMPEACHMENT INVESTIGATION

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, on March 20 the Honorable Slade Gorton, Attorney General of the State of Washington, spoke to the Seattle Rotary Club about the Presidency and the impeachment investigation now in progress. I have carefully read—and reread—his statement. I am inserting it, in its entirety, in the RECORD with the hope that it will be just as carefully read—and reread—on both sides of the aisle, on both sides of the Capitol and on both ends of Pennsylvania Avenue.

Mr. Gorton, a Republican, has spoken soberly of a most sobering matter. He has used well the lawyer's technical skills to sort through the complexities and define the issues. Yet in his analysis he has gone byond the narrow confines of black-letter law to examine the much broader historical, philosophical, and ethical perspective in which this matter must ultimately be resolved.

Mr. Gorton's conclusions are his own. Some will agree with those conclusions and others will disagree. But none who take the time to study his statement with the same degree of care with which it was so obviously written will casually lay it aside.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of Mr. Gorton's address by printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"REFLECTIONS ON AN INOPERATIVE ADMINISTRATION"

(By Attorney General Slade Gorton)

Today I should like to present for your sober consideration some thoughts about Richard Nixon, his presidency and the impeachment investigation now in progress in the Congress. This is the principal political issue of the day; it is being debated in the press, in classrooms, over dinner tables and in just about every other place in which people gather. Let us focus our attention on determining how a successful path for our nation through these difficult times may best be assured.

To most of us, myself included, the very word "Watergate," and all that it entails, has become a profoundly depressing subject. When one adds to that unique problem all of the continuing challenges of war and peace, the energy crisis, inflation and the increasing influence of government in almost every aspect of our lives, it is easy to become discouraged.

A certain comfort, however, can be gleaned from our own history. One era in the story of our nation in which, from this distance, we Americans seem to have gone from triumph to triumph in a time of constant challenge and daring, was certainly the two decades or so from the opening of the War of the Revolution to the close of George Washington's second term as president. Yet, in the midst of those exciting years, Washington wrote to a friend:

"We have probably had too good an opinion of human nature in forming our confederation. Experience has taught us that men will not adopt or carry into execution measures best calculated for their own good, without the intervention of a coercive power." * * *

"From the high ground we stood upon, from the plain path which invited our footsteps, to be so fallen! so lost!" [2]

One year after that last discouraging commentary, Washington and his compatriots produced the Constitution of the United States. That triumph is perhaps the more significant when we reflect that it was accomplished in a nation with a population roughly equivalent to that of the State of Washington today. But in that new nation, politics was considered everybody's business.

All we need today, I believe, to cause the strengthening and the renewal of free government is a similar dedication and perseverance. Nor can we ever be content with our performance as citizens if we offer our country any less.

During the months since an impeachment of the President was first mentioned as a possible consequence of the Watergate revelations, the views of most persons who have been willing to express themselves have fallen into one of three categories.

The first consists of a collection of radical demands for the impeachment and removal of the President. Most of these demands come from persons who have consistently opposed both President Nixon and his policies for years. Ralph Nader's organization, for example, charges the President with twenty-eight violations of the criminal code.[3] This category is also well illustrated in a recent syndicated column by Garry Wills [4] asserting as impeachable offenses both the impoundment of funds appropriated by Congress and the appointment of Howard Phillips as director of the Office of Economic Opportunity without congressional consent.

Now I am among those state attorneys general who have sued successfully for the release of various impounded appropriations, but seriously to assert that decisions on policy questions such as these, however controversial, amount to impeachable offenses is, in my opinion, the height of irresponsibility. And such an attack is all the less seemly when many of its sources are perceived by most thoughtful citizens to be individuals who have consistently and bitterly opposed President Nixon, both personally and politically, almost from his appearance on the political scene.

The second category includes an opposite, but equally unthinking, reaction. For example, many political conservatives almost automatically characterize all charges against President Nixon as stemming from political persecution, sometimes equating his position with that of President Lincoln, or as being based on minor or inconsequential activities beneath the President's notice. Worst of all, far too many Americans, reflecting an alarming weariness and cynicism, assert that the gravest charges of the past year amount to nothing unusual, that "in politics everybody does it".

Between these two extremes fall the responses of a multitude of thoughtful citizens, from all elements of the political spectrum, whose concerns are based on a fear of the unknown, on the effect of changing presidents in mid-term, or on the possible precedent which might be established for future impeachments or future resignations.

Some persons expressing these views are liberals who profoundly disagree with the President and his policies, but who for just that reason give him the benefit of every doubt and who shrink from advocating impeachment because they do not believe it fair to challenge the mandate of the 1972 election.

Far more of these citizens, however, are conservatives troubled by the effect of President Nixon's precipitous loss of trust and prestige on the fate of his policies, many of which they so strongly support.

All citizens in this category dread the divisive effects of a long and bitter fight over impeachment. All of them wonder at the effect of the resignation or removal from office of President Nixon on the ability of future presidents to hold to unpopular positions, or even to provide strong political leadership for the country in times of deep differences of opinion on a proper course of action. These fears are not, of course, groundless.

On the other hand, at the very least, these arguments fail to recognize that the future is always unknown and that we will change presidents in any event in 1977. But, most important, they fail to consider that the precedent created by not acting decisively in the face of such overwhelming provocation may well turn out to be far more dangerous than the precedent established by any form of positive action. But more of that later.

Most of you in this room probably characterize yourselves, as I do, as moderate or conservative in your political views. No doubt, most of you have, as I have, during the course of the past five years, more frequently than not agreed with President Nixon's foreign policies and with his campaign against excessive government spending and federal centralization. I am convinced that, precisely for these reasons, you are faced more urgently than are the President's philosophical opponents by the question of whether or not the President should resign or be impeached.

It is your attitudes toward government which have been discredited. It is your policies which are being increasingly defeated. It is your voices in Congress who will be stilled in November's elections if events continue to drift as they have for the past year.

It is, in fact, your policies which are being abandoned by the President himself for reasons outlined in a recent front-page article in The Wall Street Journal:

"President Nixon's new budget . . . shows that his double woes of Watergate and economic distress are forcing him to reverse course drastically.

"Now Mr. Nixon appears as a conciliatory, politically weakened compromiser—dusting off some once-discarded liberal initiatives to try to appease his would-be impeachers . . ." [5]

And it was just a week ago Sunday that the chief of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States noted that the administration has:

"Been pre-occupied with [Watergate] and [has] spent more time trying to handle the technicalities and details of that subject than [it has] in handling important economic issues in the Congress." [6]

It is, therefore, incumbent upon each of us to examine the Constitution, to determine what impeachment means, how it came to be a part of our Constitution in 1787, and to speak out, as citizens of a free nation, on what should be the resolution of the crisis created by the acts and omissions of President Nixon.

The right of impeachment of executive officers was a vital element in drafting the Constitution, and resulted in Article II, § 4, which reads:

"The President * * * shall be removed from Office on Impeachment for, and Conviction of, Treason, Bribery, or other High Crimes and Misdemeanors." [7]

The meaning of that last phrase can only be derived from the views of the delegates to the convention. George Mason pointed out that:

"No point is of more importance than that the right of impeachment should be continued. Shall any man be above justice? Above all shall that man be above it who can commit the most extensive injustice?" [8]

James Madison added that it was:

"* * * indispensable that some provision should be made for defending the community against the incapacity, negligence, or perfidy of the Chief Magistrate." [9]

Later, Alexander Hamilton, in The Federalist, stated that the subjects of impeachment:

"* * * are those offenses which proceed from the misconduct of public men, or in other words, from the abuse or violation of some public trust. They are of a nature which may with peculiar propriety be denominated "political", as they relate chiefly to injuries done immediately to the society itself." [10]

Finally, in the first Congress of the United States, James Madison, in advocating the President's right to discharge his appointees, said:

"It will make him, in a peculiar manner, responsible for their conduct, and subject him to impeachment himself, if he suffers them to perpetrate with impunity high crimes or misdemeanors against the United States, or neglects of superintend their conduct, so as to check their excesses." [11]

The Constitution states that it is the duty of the President:

"To take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed." [12]

We must ask ourselves, as dispassionately as we can, how President Nixon's record—not as it is characterized by his enemies, but as he describes it himself—measures up against those standards which our founding fathers required of the president. Let us look at three separate aspects of that record.

First, in June of 1970, President Nixon in his own words,

"* * * approved resumption of certain intelligence operations [including] surreptitious entry—breaking and entering, in effect. * * *" [13]

That authorization was rescinded, according to the President, only because of the opposition of J. Edgar Hoover. No law of the United States allows such operations; they are forbidden by a number of statutes, both state and federal.

A year later, in June of 1971, again in his own words, President Nixon

"* * * approved the creation of a Special Investigations Unit within the White House—which later became known as the 'plumbers' * * *" [14]

The President took aside its leader;

"* * * to impress upon [him] the vital importance to the national security of his assignment [to] find out all [he] could about Daniel Ellsberg's associates and his motives." [15]

The President thus, without legal authorization, created a secret police unit. If the president cautioned the unit not to violate constitutional safeguards or legal prohibitions, we have no record of it.

Rather, after the President's urgent talk, the unit, created because the President had not been able to persuade the director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation to supervise such activities, apparently felt that it was authorized to violate the civil rights of citizens of the United States, and proceeded to do so.

Second, on April 30, 1973, President Nixon reported to the nation:

"Last June 17 [1972], * * * I first learned from news reports of the Watergate break-in. * * *

"Until March of this year [1973] I remained convinced * * * that the charges of involvement by members of the White House staff were false." [16]

Here, I want to emphasize that I am not questioning either of the President's assertions. I make no claim that he knew of the break-in before June 17, 1972, or of the involvement of his personal staff before March of 1973. But, even given the complete truth of his statement, we are faced with the proposition that the President, with all of the power of the federal government at his command, passed those nine months, through newspaper charge after charge, apparently without bothering to learn anything of substance about the cause of the break-in.

The events of this past year, however, have a far greater impact. First, in March of 1973, President Nixon did learn that members of his administration were involved in Watergate.

Moreover, he knew that he had in his possession the best possible evidence of the extent to which they had informed him of their involvement or had hidden it from him, in the form of conversations which he had carried on with each of them and had secretly taped, evidence which also related to their own participation in the cover-up. Nevertheless, the President failed to disclose even the existence of that evidence either to the Department of Justice or to the Congress.

Then, in July of 1973, the Congress discovered the existence of those tapes. The President thereupon refused access to that evidence either to the Department or to the Congress. Thereafter, when those tapes became the focal point of a legal controversy of serious constitutional dimensions, the number and the very existence of some of the tapes were misstated. Finally, after binding court decisions ordering their release to the Department of Justice and after the President assumed what he called "sole personal control" of the tapes, a person or persons unknown but presumably employed under the immediate supervision of the President, apparently destroyed a significant portion of one of the tapes in a fashion which has caused almost everyone to believe was deliberate.

Finally, a third subject. During the trial of Daniel Ellsberg, who was the immediate cause of the creation of the "plumbers", the President directed, and personally participated in, an interview with the presiding judge of that trial during the course of the trial itself on the subject of his possible selection as director of the FBI. It is almost impossible to imagine a more blatant intereference with the administration of justice.

None of these three charges is based on the credibility of John Dean or of any other witness hostile to the President. Each is based upon the President's own reports to the people in explanation of Watergate, or upon factual propositions which are not seriously subject to dispute.

The charges which we have considered to this point, however, do not stand alone in having created the moral climate of cynicism and suspicion in which the federal administration operates today. They exist within a broad pattern of indifference to, and disrespect for, the laws of the United States and the expectations of its citizens.

That pattern includes widespread wiretapping of employees and critics alike, the preparation of "enemies lists" for harassment by the IRS and other governmental agencies and the misuse of the office of the presidency in claiming dubious—or downright illegal—income tax deductions.

That pattern includes the systematic solicitation of illegal campaign contributions, including contributions promised directly to the President by representatives of milk producers, promises which were immediately followed by an order increasing milk price supports. This unedifying spectacle is now justified by the President himself, as having resulted from "traditional political consideration." [18]

That pattern includes the criminal indictments of two of his former cabinet officers, together with two of his closest personal advisers, who were characterized by the President at the time of their forced resignations, as "two of the finest public servants it has been my privilege to know." [19] It includes the two-time selection as vice-president of a man who turned out to have been a common extortionist.

These comments are limited to those of his subordinates who were personally selected by him and responsible to him, and not to the dozens of others farther down the chain of command whose activities he might not have been able to supervise directly.

During his 1968 campaign, Richard Nixon referred to the presidency in this language:

"* * * it [is] preeminently a place of moral leadership. * * * one of a president's greatest resources is the moral authority of his office. It's time we used it * * * to rally the people, to define those moral imperatives which are the cement of a civilized society." [20]

Footnotes at end of article.

This statement appropriately describes the position of the President. In the United States, the President is the head of state as well as the head of the government. He must be able to provide moral leadership to the entire nation, to command respect for his office even when he does not command agreement with his policies.

How does President Nixon's conduct stand up against his own definition of the office, against James Madison's explanation of impeachment as being designed to defend the nation

"* * * against the incapacity, negligence, or perfidy of the Chief Magistrate * * *" [21]

And against the President's own statement in his April 30, 1973 speech:

"In any organization the man at the top must bear the responsibility. That responsibility, therefore, belongs here, in this office. I accept it." [22]

Richard Nixon, out of the evidence of his own mouth, has given the House of Representatives probable cause to vote Articles of Impeachment.

Impeachment is, of course, a legal and a constitutional proceeding. It is my own considered judgment that each of the three sets of incidents which I discussed earlier at some length constitute clear grounds, at the very least, for impeachment by the House of Representatives and trial by the Senate.

But impeachment also seems to me to constitute a judgment about the moral status of the presidency. In that connection, in determining that the President has rightly and irretrievably lost the confidence of the American people, not only the acts of the President himself, but the climate which he and his subordinates have created, are relevant considerations.

While I believe that the House of Representatives is justified in voting for impeachment and will probably do so, it is clear that that process, for whatever reason, still has months to go, to be followed by more months—or years—of trial by the Senate. The nation can ill afford that time, time taken from the gravest of other problems, time which, in any event, can no longer restore the people's confidence in a president who has now forfeited it beyond recovery.

There is, however, another way out of the dilemma.

It is for President Nixon to realize that the nation does not owe him unlimited consideration . . . for Mr. Nixon to place the national interest, the question of confidence in government, above any other interest which relates to him personally, and to resign. The situation in which we find ourselves today is his creation and that of his appointees; the solution is in his hands. I do not agree, as some commentators assert, that resignation is inappropriate in this case. Rather, I believe it to be the finest service which Mr. Nixon can perform for his country, to enable it to start afresh.

To speak of resignation is not to suggest that Mr. Nixon should admit disgrace. Rather, it is to suggest that he face his situation squarely and take the one act which he can take which will put the national interest first . . . an act which would require and demonstrate a high degree of character and courage as well as personal sacrifice.

Mr. Nixon has stated that he will not resign, and so Congress must continue to explore impeachment. For most citizens, either impeachment or resignation is an extraordinary remedy with unknown and fearsome consequences for the future. They agree with Hamlet's dread of an unknown future, which "* * * makes us rather bear those ills we have. Than fly to others that we know not of. Thus conscience doth make cowards of us all;" [23]

The difficulty of the situation in which we find ourselves today is that not only action, but inaction, will have serious and inevitable consequences.

We are all conscious of the low esteem into which all government and all public officials have fallen. We are beginning to be almost equally conscious of the low esteem into which the business community, the free enterprise system, and almost every other institution in our society is falling at the same time.

When we examine with care our strangely quiet campuses, we find that the reaction from the turmoil of a few years ago is not due to a renewed satisfaction with society, but to a passive cynicism about government and society and a pervasive feeling that they cannot and will not be reformed. Inaction by the nation in the face of the present crisis of confidence can only confirm, and make more dangerous, that cynicism.

Equally close to our own concerns must be this question. If the actions of Richard Nixon are not properly the subject of impeachment, what actions of a future president will be? What invasions of your privacy, what viclations of your civil rights, by a radical president, for example, will subject him to impeachment in the future? What acts of the officers of a president after Richard Nixon to extend or preserve his powers or to cause his reelection will cause him to be called to account?

Certainly, no citizen may properly call for impeachment or resignation except on grounds which he is willing to apply to all presidents, and by the same token, it is both improper and dangerous to defend actions on the part of this president which we are not also willing to defend in all future presidents.

We will create, I submit, a far worse precedent by failing to act than by acting. It is our freedom, our rights against an ever present and increasingly powerful government which are at stake.

One last point. Questions of vital public policy affect all citizens and should not be delegated without thought or concern to congressmen, senators or to anyone else. In the most vital public policy question of our day, the views of all citizens are important, but perhaps the views of those who were supporters of President Nixon in 1972 are the most significant, since they clearly do not stem from any possible personal or political hostility. These are questions which we must decide for ourselves; our history and our children's history ride on our answers today as surely as ours did on the answers of 1787.

More than 2,400 years ago, the first of the free societies of which we are the inheritors, the city of Athens, fell upon difficult times. In commemorating the dead of the opening year of a bloody war, Athens' first citizen, Pericles, described his fellow citizens in a democracy in these magnificent words, words which we must make our own as Americans:

"Our ordinary citizens, though occupied by the pursuits of industry, are still fair judges of public matters; for, unlike any other nation, regarding him who takes no part in these duties, not as unambitious but as useless, we Athenians are able to judge * * * all events * * *, and instead of looking on discussion as a stumbling block in the way of action, we think it an indispensable preliminary to any wise action at all * * * [24]

"The secret of happiness is liberty, and the secret of liberty is a brave heart." [25]

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENT OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I have an unprinted amendment at the desk which I call up and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 64 between lines 5 and 6, insert the following:

"PROHIBITION OF FRANKED SOLICITATIONS

"SEC. 318. No Senator, Representative, Resident Commissioner or Delegate shall make any solicitation of funds by a mailing under the frank under section 3210 of title 39, United States Code."

Renumber subsequent sections accordingly.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the amendment states:

No Senator, Representative, Resident Commissioner or Delegate shall make any solicitation of funds by a mailing under the frank under section 3210 of title 39, United States Code.

The franking privilege accorded to Members of Congress is just that, a privilege and an official one. It is not a right guaranteed everyone elected to office.

The frank is intended simply and clearly to enable a Member of Congress to communicate with his constituents on official matters, and on this basis I believe it serves a highly important and valuable public purpose.

There are, admittedly, many gray areas in the franking law. Many questions are raised over what is and what is not frankable matter, and these questions are being reviewed almost continuously by the proper authorities in Congress and elsewhere.

In addition such a use of the franking privilege adds tremendously to the incumbent's advantage over anyone who might seek to challenge him in an election. This is obviously unfair, and the franking law was obviously never intended to be put to such use.

I note that the House Commission on Congressional Mailing Standards agrees with my view on this matter, and I ask unanimous consent that a letter from the Commission's chairman, the Honorable MORRIS UDALL, and a memorandum on the subject of franked solicitations be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter and the memorandum were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMMISSION ON CONGRESSIONAL MAILING STANDARDS,
Washington, D.C., February 27, 1974.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: In past years, many Members have printed, in connection with their newsletters and other mass mailings, a brief appeal for small donations to assist with printing and preparation costs. Recently your Commission was asked to render an opinion on the frankability of newsletters or questionnaires containing such appeals.

Because of the widespread use of this device, and its importance to the Members, the Commission is not inclined to make any final determination without giving Members a full opportunity to be heard on the question.

Accordingly, the Commission at its last meeting adopted a proposed regulation holding that such appeals are not "official business" within the meaning of the statute, and should not be included in franked mailings.

Since this matter is not explicitly covered in the franking law, we are enclosing a memorandum of points on which the Commission's interpretation is based. Your reactions and comments are urgently solicited. To be considered, they should be submitted to the Commission on or before March 14th.

With kind personal regards,

Sincerely,

MORRIS K. UDALL,
Chairman.

MEMORANDUM ON THE FRANKABILITY OF SOLICITATION OF FUNDS TO FINANCE THE PREPARATION OF NEWSLETTERS

Mail matter which is authorized to be mailed under the franking privilege is categorized under paragraphs (A) through (J) of subsection (a)(3) of section 3210 of title 39. The purpose of the Congress in writing these paragraphs was to be as specific as possible in listing the types and content of mail matter which is frankable in order to eliminate the uncertainties which had existed under the prior law.

Even the broadest declaration of frankable matter is carefully restricted to "official business, activities, and duties" of the public officials authorized to use the frank.

Therefore, each item which is transmitted in the mail must meet the test of relating to official business, or it is not frankable.

Newsletters are specifically treated under section 3210(a)(3)(B) and are permitted to be franked if they "deal with such matters as the impact of laws and decisions on State and local governments and individual citizens; reports on public and official actions taken by Members of Congress; discussions of proposed or pending legislation or governmental actions and the positions of the Members of Congress on, and arguments for or against such matters."

Inasmuch as the authority to frank newsletters clearly limits and controls the content of newsletters, the absence of authority to solicit funds for the preparation of these newsletters, would prohibit the franking of such solicitations.

The solicitation of funds by a Member of Congress, for whatever purpose the funds are used, constitutes a personal effort on the part of that Member. The nature of this solicitation being personal, in that he elicits a monetary response to him, causes the solicitation to be non-frankable under 3210(a)(4), which prohibits the use of the frank for the transmission of matter "which in its nature is purely personal to the sender or to any other person and is unrelated to the official business, activities, and duties of the public officials" covered by the franking statutes.

It can also be argued that while funds solicited for the preparation of a newsletter which is a document in and of itself frankable, the solicitation is not official business nor related to official business, and is therefore not frankable.

In an ethical sense, the act of personally soliciting funds, for whatever purpose, under the frank was not intended by the Congress. It should be borne in mind that the cost of transmitted franked mail is paid for by appropriation from the general treasury and that it is an obligation of each Member to adhere to the letter and spirit of the franking law, which confines the use of the frank to official business, activities, and duties.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I believe the law is clear. The commission certainly believes such solicitations are improper. But I believe it would be proper and appropriate to provide an absolute and unquestionable legislative answer to this question.

Therefore, I offer this amendment to S. 3044 to forbid any Senator, Congressman, Resident Commissioner, or Delegate from using the frank to make solicitations. This should end any doubt or confusion and provide the public with firm assurance that we in Congress are vigilant in eliminating the opportunities for abuse of the franking privilege.

Mr. President, I wish to state briefly that there has been a practice in the House of Representatives to solicit funds for newsletters and other purposes under the use of the frank. This simply makes it clear there shall be no solicitation of funds for any purpose under the frank.

I am aware of the provisions of the present law, Public Law 93-191, the restrictions on mass mailing, and other provisions of the law but I am not convinced that in effect they prohibit the mailing under the frank of solicitations. This amendment would clarify that matter and the amendment is in accord with the comments of Mr. UDALL. I have submitted a copy of his letter for the RECORD.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I have discussed this matter with the Senator. In my judgment this amendment adds nothing to existing law. On December 18, 1973, Congress passed and there became law Public Law 93-191, which makes it absolutely clear, in my judgment, that a newsletter could not be accepted for the purpose of solicitation of funds for any purpose. I read from that public law, which states as follows:

(4) It is the intent of the Congress that the franking privilege under this section shall not permit, and may not be used for, the transmission through the mails as franked mail, of matter which in its nature is purely personal to the sender or to any other person and is unrelated to the official business, activities, and duties of the public officials covered by subsection (b)(1) of this section.

I think that section would preclude use of the franking privilege for solicitation of funds, even if it were for publication of a newsletter. In addition, there is a later provision of the law, which describes the intent of the law as follows:

Members of or Members-elect to Congress may not mail as franked mail— (c) mail matter which specifically solicits political support for the sender or any other person or any political party, or a vote or financial assistance for any candidate for any public office.

Therefore, in my judgment, the situation is covered, but if the Senator feels there may be some weakness in the law which was enacted on December 18, 1973, so that perhaps House Members were sending out such solicitations prior to that time, I would be willing to accept the amendment, even though I do not think it adds anything to the law.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. DOLE. As I said in my statement, I am aware of that law and its effect. The written memorandum from the Commission on Mailing standards was written after this law was passed. The memorandum suggests the law is not being observed in that regard. But the gray area is that Members had classified such mailings as official business. They were raising funds for the purpose of newsletters or other business and, therefore, were not soliciting funds for a political candidate or for any other political purpose. To me this is a gray area and it is another advantage that incumbents have over nonincumbents. The amendment would close a loophole that should be closed.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. COOK. I agree wholeheartedly with the remarks of the chairman relative to its illegality. My personal and legal thought, in the framework of the language that the chairman and I have gone over, is that even if he does solicit in his newsletter, it is a solitation of funds that he personally controls and, therefore, constitutes a violation of the law.

I must say that I hope in all fairness that by the adoption of this amendment, and I agree with the chairman we should accept it, this is a reaffirmation of what the law really is. It comes as quite a surprise to me that anyone would use the franking privilege, a newsletter or anything of that nature, to make a direct request for financial assistance for something that the Member of Congress himself controls as a result of solicitation of funds under the franking authority.

Mr. DOLE. It is another of those areas that brings criticism upon Congress and Congressmen. This matter was given special attention by Jack Anderson one evening several months ago, where he named Members of Congress in both parties who follow this practice in the House. It seems to me it is an area that, despite the law passed last December, should be clarified. I offer the amendment with that hope and motive.

I thank the distinguished Senator from Nevada and the distinguished Senator from Kentucky for accepting the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT TO 11:15 A.M.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in adjournment until the hour of 11:15 a.m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATOR BROOKE TOMORROW AND FOR PERIOD FOR TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, following the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. BROOKE) be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes, after which there will be a period for the transaction of routine morning business for not to exceed 15 minutes, with statements limited therein to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RESUMPTION OF UNFINISHED BUSINESS TOMORROW AT THE CONCLUSION OF ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of routine morning business tomorrow, rather than precisely at the hour of 12 o'clock noon in accordance with the previous order entered, the Senate resume consideration of the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of routine morning business tomorrow, when the Senate resumes consideration of the unfinished business, the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Bartlett amendment, No. 1120.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, tomorrow the Senate will convene at 11:15 a.m. After the two leaders or their designees have been recognized under the standing order, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) will be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes, after which the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. BROOKE) will be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes, after which there will be a period for the transaction of routine morning business for not to exceed 15 minutes, with statements limited therein to 5 minutes each.

At the conclusion of the transaction of routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Bartlett amendment—No. 1120—to the Public Campaign Financing bill. There is a time limitation on the Bartlett amendment of 30 minutes. The yeas and nays have been ordered thereon. Consequently, a rollcall vote will occur on the adoption of the Bartlett amendment at about 12:30 p.m. tomorrow.

ADJOURNMENT TO 11:15 A.M.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, if there be no further business to come before the Senate I move, in accordance with the previous order, that the Senate stand in adjournment until 11:15 a.m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and at 5:21 p.m., the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, April 2, 1974, at 11:15 a.m.

SENATE FLOOR DEBATES ON
S.3044
APRIL 2, 1974

answered. "After all, we met almost every morning for four years at White House morning staff meetings. We have a good working relationship, and I'm comfortable in it. . . . Kissinger has devoted much of his career to the study of security problems, and that's what I'm dealing with here at NATO. . . ."

When I arrived at the Rumsfeld home in the Avenue des Verts Chasseurs here, his wife, Joyce, greeted me graciously and then left us alone with Otto (the dog), Sam (the cat) and international politics. During the next hour or so, we had visits from Valerie, 17, who was homecoming queen at the Brussels-American School last fall; Marcy, 13, who is enrolled in a Belgian school and is studying—in French—Latin, math and Flemish, and 6-year-old Nicholas, who showed me his increasing mastery at standing on his head. Nicholas is also in a Belgian school and is doing all his studies in French.

Rumsfeld is clearly glad to be away from Watergate Washington.

There have been rumor-flurries several times here that he was headed back to D.C. For example, a crowd of Brussels journalists quickly assembled on his front lawn one night a few months ago when reports circulated that he would be named Mr Nixon's vice president.

Nothing came of the rumors of course, and the ambassador told me, "I like it here, and I plan to stay for a period. . . . This is an important time for the U.S. in NATO." Observers here believe he felt that the present period is a bad growing season for aspiring Republicans back in the United States.

Rumsfeld and his wife shun much of the social side of Brussels diplomacy. Unlike most Europeans he likes short meals, and he also prefers direct office-type contact with other delegations. He often works at home in the evening, bringing papers with him from NATO. The U.S. delegation smilingly endures "the yellow peril"—a stream of questions, reminders and directives that emerges on special yellow paper from the envoy's office.

NATO is an extraordinary institution—little understood publicly but representing "the cornerstone of U.S. foreign policy," as Mr. Nixon and Kissinger have often said. Because NATO's first task is collective defense, the U.S. ambassador's job involves more military and security issues than any other overseas diplomatic post.

However, NATO is also a Peacemaker. It is the diplomatic instrument with which the 15 allied nations co-ordinate their policies of detente with the Soviet bloc.

CURRENT U.S. POPULATION

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I would like to report that, according to U.S. Census Bureau approximations, the total population of the United States as of April 1, 1974, is 211,906,243. In spite of widely publicized reductions in our fertility levels, this represents an increase of 1,397,476 since April 1 of last year. It also represents an increase of 97,078 since March 1, 1974—that is, in just the last month.

Over the year, therefore, we have added enough people to fill a new Cleveland, Ohio, and San Diego, Calif. And in just one short month, we have added enough additional people for another Ann Arbor, Mich.

THE OIL CRISIS

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, presently we are in a period of negotiations with the Arab Nations reference the oil situation and how it will be applied in future years.

A succinct editorial warning our Government leaders reference these negotiations appeared in the March 25, 1974 issue of the Aiken Standard newspaper in Aiken, S.C. The editor, Samuel A. Cothran, pointed out that this Nation must not yield to blackmail and should push forward in developing our own resources so that in future generations we might be self-sufficient in regards this vital resource.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this editorial be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PLAYING 'CAT-AND-MOUSE'?

One of the most remarkable statistics extant today is a poll which indicates that the anger over the energy crisis of one-fourth of the Americans is directed toward the U.S. government while only 3 per cent of the citizens blame the Arabs who precipitated the problem by imposing an oil embargo some five months ago.

Our eagerness to blame Washington for our problems tells us a lot about our current national state of mind, although we would not dispute with any conviction the argument that several generations of Washington policy helped to incubate our present predicament.

Without confusing the issue with too many statistics, it is accurate to say that Saudi Arabia with its 164 billion barrels of proven reserves is the only Arab nation that can do much to return us to the highway life style that we had come to enjoy until last October. Until the United States of America develops self-sufficiency we will need a very large amount of Arab oil to meet our daily needs.

The incentives for Saudi Arabia to supply the United States with that much additional oil are not all that persuasive. King Faisal has more money than he needs and the oil will gain in value if it remains in the ground. Neither he nor the other Arab nations and Iran appear to be troubled by the international economic dislocations that the oil embargo is creating. Nor does the economic disaster created in the underdeveloped world by high oil prices jar the moral sensibility in Saudi Arabia.

On the other side of the coin, Arab nations need U.S. tools and technology, King Faisal has been a traditional friend of the United States and an implacable enemy of communism. We also have the friendship of President Sadat of Egypt and the yeoman efforts of Secretary of State Henry Kissinger have gone a long way toward bringing warring factions in the Mideast toward accommodation.

The latter is raising the most hope that the embargo will be lifted. However, it is likely that if Mr. Kissinger's efforts to move the Arabs succeed, the producers may respond in degrees—a partial new supply of oil in return for a specific concession.

It is a cat and mouse game that would be entirely unacceptable. Needs larger than oil should establish our policies.

Whether the news from Cairo is encouraging or discouraging, Americans have no alternatives to settling down to meet the energy crisis on their own terms by reaching the state in which we need depend upon nobody else for our fuel.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATHAWAY). Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is concluded.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will resume the consideration of the unfinished business, S. 3044, which the clerk will state.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

S. 3044, to amend the Federal Electric Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BARTLETT) No. 1120, which the clerk will state.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 71, strike out lines 1 through 12, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

CONTRIBUTIONS BY GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS

SEC. 303. Section 611 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) by striking out "Whoever" and inserting in lieu thereof "(a) Whoever";

(2) striking out "(a) entering" and inserting in lieu thereof "(1) entering";

(3) striking out "(1)" and "(2)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(A)" and "(B)", respectively;

(4) striking out "(b) knowingly" and inserting in lieu thereof "(2) knowingly"; and

(5) adding at the end thereof the following:

"(b) No person who has made a contribution may accept any contract referred to in subsection (a) (other than a contract the award of which will be made on the basis of competitive bids) at any time within twenty-four months after making that contribution. No person who enters into any contract described in subsection (a) (other than a contract the award of which was made on the basis of competitive bids) may make a contribution at any time during the twenty-four-month period beginning on the date on which performance under that contract is completed, or, if earlier, on which that person ceases to be liable under that contract. Violation of the provisions of this subsection is punishable by a fine of not to exceed $5,000, imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

"(c) It is not a violation of the provisions of this section for a corporation or a labor organization to establish, administer, or solicit contributions to a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes by that corporation or labor organization if the establishment and administration of, and solicitation of contributions to, such fund do not constitute a violation of section 610.".

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that David Russell, a member of my staff, may be present during the consideration of this bill and the votes thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, title 18, section 611 of the United States Code prohibits anyone who enters into a contract with the Federal Government from making a financial contribution to a Federal political campaign during the term of the contract.

Section 611 was passed in 1972 with the idea of avoiding the abuse inherent in the awarding of Federal contracts.

However, although 611 serves a useful purpose, it leaves gaping holes. Under 611, while a person may not make a contribution during the term of a Federal contract, there is no prohibition on contribution either before or after the contract. The potential for abuse is particularly critical in Federal contracts awarded on a noncompetitive basis.

My amendment has the affect of prohibiting any person who receives contracts from the Federal Government on a noncompetitive basis from making contributions to a Federal campaign for a period of 4 years plus the length of time of the contract.

The amendment will work this way: If a person makes a contribution to a Federal campaign he will for 2 years thereafter be ineligible to receive any Federal contract let on a noncompetitive basis. Likewise, if a person receives a noncompetitive Federal contract he will be prohibited for 2 years thereafter from making political contributions.

The need for this amendment is apparent. The present system of letting noncompetitive contracts is rife with potential for abuse. Architects and engineers are the primary recipients of Federal Government contracts on a noncompetitive basis. There is sound basis for architects and engineer contracts being on a noncompetitive basis and I am convinced this policy should continue. The set fee is one which has been determined to be a fair return to architects and engineers. If these professionals were forced to bid for contracts it could only result in a lessening of the quality of the work performed.

Certainly, a lawyer could not be expected to bid for a client—and a client would not want a lawyer who would do so.

It is not out of an abiding dedication to good government that a high percentage of architects and engineers contribute to many political campaigns, but it is a result of pressure from the political system—at least in many cases to the point of insurance not to be blackballed for not contributing. The system creates unnecessarily a gray area for the architect and engineer and the appearance to the public of evil.

But if we do continue the present system, we must reckon with the potential for abuse or the appearance of abuse in the awarding of noncompetitive contracts.

Certainly, my amendment will not take architects and engineers out of politics. They have a constitutional right to support candidates of their choice. But my amendment will eliminate one means of support, the one which possesses the potential for abuse—namely, the giving of political donations.

Architects and engineers who want or do business with the Federal Government can continue to give of their time and their advice but not of their money.

I have discussed my amendment with architects and engineers and they fully support the goal represented by this amendment. They, too, would prefer that every contract be awarded on merit rather than on the political consideration of who gives or gave how much to a candidate.

Mr. President, if our political system and politicians are to regain some measure of respect with the electorate, we as a Congress must be willing to pass this type of legislation.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. COOK. I yield myself, such time as I may require.

Mr. President, we discussed this aspect of campaign giving in the Rules Committee. What really bothers me is that, in typical fashion, we are saying to the individual who gives that he can be fined. Yet, apparently nothing occurs to the individual to whom he gives. At least, we have seen this happen.

I am on this side of the aisle, and I would only say to the Senator from Oklahoma, as a Republican, that we say people who gave large sums. They were fined as individuals; they were fined as corporations. They were sued by public interest groups to pay the interest on their money. Yet, we still sit here and say, "Where is the end result?" The end result is, who has to pay for the solicitation of having sought a contribution from an individual who the Senator wishes to exclude?

The only thing that bothers me is this: As I read the law now, section 611—perhaps the Senator from Alabama may wish to enter into this—we have a provision on our income tax return, and we have had a discussion about whether we are going to make it mandatory, that $1 or $2 may be allocated to a political fund. I contend that if it is made mandatory that any amount of money from an individual taxpayer has to go into this fund, then the architect or the engineer is already violating the law by filing his income tax return. If it is optional and he happens to make a mistake and checks it, so that he pays $1 or $2 to a political fund, then he is also in violation of the law, because he has made a political contribution.

I say to the Senator from Oklahoma that I get a distinct feeling that this is a much more serious problem on State and local levels than it is on a national level. I get the distinct feeling that, somehow or other, we keep putting the onus on the individual who might make a contribution, and we have very little enforcement on the part of an individual candidate who is the recipient of a contribution.

We read every day that there are literally hundreds of people who fail to file their reports. We read that on State levels, there are numerous candidates who have failed to file a report. Never yet have we seen, to my knowledge, any prosecution of the candidates—the successful candidates or the losing candidates—for their failure to file under the law. Yet, we have just gone through an unfortunate episode. We have seen situations in which somebody put the bite on people, to find a way to give corporate funds, and now, all of a sudden, they are the people who are indicted and they are the people who have paid fines, and the corporations have paid fines. We have to wait and see how long it takes for those who attempted to solicit funds to be dealt with under the law.

Every time we say that this is going to make politics cleaner, we are putting the onus on somebody else, rather than on ourselves. We are saying that somebody else has to be responsible.

I might say that that is why I voted against the amendment of the other Senator from Oklahoma yesterday, which provided that radio and television stations have to make monthly reports. That is our responsibility. We will have a law to live under, if we pass this bill, which will provide what we do with our time and how we handle it. But as we try to handle our own position in the political arena, we keep wanting to force on other people the responsibility to report, to see to it that we are good guys. The responsibility is up to us to do that.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COOK. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. I have not read the amendment, but I have read the explanation given by the distinguished sponsor of the amendment.

After all, contracts on the Federal level are of such magnitude that they are never given to a person. They are given to a corporation or a combine. Does not this necessarily mean that if a contract is given, let us say, to X corporation, every person who is employed in that corporation is forbidden to make a contribution? If any person in that corporation makes a contribution—be it the secretary, be it the manager, be it the worker, be it the draftsman—does that automatically mean that that corporation cannot engage in a noncontractual situation with the Federal Government?

Mr. COOK. I think the Senator presents a question that the Senator from Oklahoma should answer. As Senators know, some of them are partnerships and they have literally scores and scores of members in the partnerships I think it is a proper question to address to the Senator from Oklahoma because I think he is shutting the door.

Mr. PASTORE. Let me ask this question. I think I know the good motive of the sponsor of this amendment. We have had a scandal in our neighboring State of Maryland and that is what he is trying to avoid on the Federal level, and I am all for eliminating that situation if we can. But sometimes in drawing amendments we are counterproductive because they are not explicit enough to accomplish what we want to achieve without creating more of a problem than we are solving.

I am asking the Senator if his amendment means that anyone connected with the corporation that does architectural work or engineering work, that that corporation itself would be forbidden from engaging in a noncompetitive contract.

Mr. BARTLETT. I would advise the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island, first, that this proposal amends the present law. It is illegal, naturally, for corporations to make such contributions. Normally architectural firms and engineering firms are partnerships. It would be my understanding this would pertain to the principles in the firms:

The partners, the architects, and the engineers.

Mr. PASTORE. What about corporations?

Mr. COOK. They are prohibited by law anyway.

Mr. PASTORE. That is the point. Suppose the president of that corporation makes a contribution. My question is: If the president of a corporation checks off a dollar contribution for the Presidential campaign, does that mean that that corporation cannot engage in noncompetitive contracts? This is a simple question. What is the answer? Is it yes or no?

Mr. BARTLETT. The answer is no. It is my opinion it would not. It does not apply to the architects——

Mr. PASTORE. That is not what the amendment states. The amendment states that any person who makes a contribution, that person is forbidden from engaging in noncompetitive contract situations with the Federal Government.

Whom do we mean? Do we mean the president, the vice president, the secretary? Whom do we mean by "person?"

Mr. COOK. May I say to the Senator from Rhode Island that first of all we have to make a distinction and when we make a distinction we also present a problem. The distinction is that the individual is an officer of the corporation, but the corporation is an entity. Therefore, he is not a partner, an association, or acting in his individual capacity.

Mr. PASTORE. Therefore, in the case where there is a corporation and the president makes a contribution, that corporation can engage in noncompetitive contracts, but in a partnership they cannot do it. There is the hiatus and the vacuum in this amendment that should be explained, and we have not had the explanation yet.

Mr. COOK. I say to the Senator from Rhode Island, with all due deference to the Senator from Oklahoma, and I do not support his amendment, that under sections 610 and 611 of the code that problem exists, and that problem is really in the law, where an individual who is an officer of a corporation, in his individual capacity may make a contribution regardless of whether he does or does not do business with the Federal Government. But under the present situation if an individual is an officer of a corporation, he could not. This would extend it for 2 years beyond the life of the contract. Is that correct? Am I correct in my assumption?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes, the Senator is correct. On the first point the corporation cannot make a gift. On the second point, a corporation's employees today, who cannot make a gift legally to campaigns, the employees can and do contribute. That is the point I was making.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PASTORE. Yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays already have been ordered.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, I think that this amendment gives Congress a chance to set a good example for the States. In 1973 there were only 72 contracts entered into between architects and engineers and the Federal Government, totaling $8.5 million in fees. So there are not a lot of contractural relationships, but I do think that it is very clear from conversations I had recently with a number of architects and engineers that there is a gray area here that the professional people do not appreciate or like.

Both point out that when the line is drawn between the pressure they feel to contribute so they will not be blackballed, and not contributing, and then contributing a large amount and have it interpreted as influencing contracts, it is a gray area that they should not be forced into. It places the responsibility in the wrong area.

I think the amendment removes architects and engineers from this kind of invasion of their professional ability because they certainly are interested in doing a good job and they are interested and they should be in doing a good job for the Federal Government. I believe this amendment removes a very muddy area, a gray area that has caused lots of trouble for engineers and architects.

I think it is obvious it would set a great example for the States.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I wish to say that one of the parts here I cannot comprehend is how anybody in his right mind could be forced or compelled and I point out to Senators this language:

> No person who has made a contribution may accept any contract referred to in subsection (a) (other than a contract the award of which will be made on the basis of competitive bids) at any time within 24 months after making that contribution.

That means if an individual in a partnership has made a contribution to the Senator's campaign or my campaign, that partnerhhip is prohibited for 24 months, or 2 years from even bidding on an architectural or engineering contract with the Federal Government.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COOK. I would be glad to yield in just a moment.

Second, I suspect that what one would have to do is get an affidavit. Suppose a person is in the business of bidding on Government contracts. He would have to get an affidavit from every new member brought into the partnership to the effect that he had not made a contribution to a political campaign or to a candidate within the past 24 months; otherwise he would be faced with a problem ex post facto in connection with his ability to bid on a contract for 24 months.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COOK. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. And it does not make any difference whether that contribution is $1 or $1,000?

Mr. COOK. That is right. As a matter of fact, he could check it off on the income tax return.

Mr. PASTORE. As a matter of fact, when he checks it off on the income tax return, he is estopped.

Mr. COOK. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, in our Committee on Rules and Administration, we have a number of contracts that are presented to us by various members of the committee or otherwise for approval, contracts for personal services to carry out investigations or studies on particular subjects. Under this amendment, were it to be adopted, if a person had checked off on his income tax return $1 for political purposes, he would be ineligible to enter into such a contract.

Mr. COOK. Not only if he had checked it off, but for 24 months of time the contract could not be presented to the committee.

Mr. CANNON. And he would be ineligible for 2 years.

Mr. COOK. That is correct.

Mr. BEALL. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, does that mean it would apply to someone who had contributed to a losing candidate?

Mr. COOK. Either one, Senator, either a successful or failed candidate.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COOK. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. My question does not go to the merits or demerits of the amendment, but I would like to ask if it is the distinguished Senator's contention that a checkoff on the tax return is a contribution on the part of the person who makes the checkoff.

Mr. COOK. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. Is it his money?

Mr. COOK. Well, we could get into a debate about that, but it is his tax liability.

Mr. CURTIS. No; he would have the same tax liability whether he checked it off or not.

Mr. COOK. That is right, but he has an option as to what he wants to do with that $1 or those $2.

Mr. CURTIS. But he does not put up any money.

Mr. COOK. I am not disagreeing with the Senator. All I am saying is that until we decide—which, by the way, we will discuss shortly—whether this contribution is to be mandatory or at the option of the taxpayer, I would suggest to the Senator that if the taxpayer takes the option that that part of his tax liability be diverted for the purpose of a political campaign, he may well come under this provision or section 611 of the code as it exists.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time of the Senator has expired. The proponent of the amendment has 7 minutes remaining.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, I appreciate the point that was expressed by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska. I think it is a very good point. I would like to mention to the Senator from Nevada that when he expressed concern about the checkoff, this amendment would not have the effect of an ex post facto law. It would not apply to checkoffs that may have been made in the past, but would only be prospective in nature. It would not apply to firms that had contracts in existence, but would apply only to the future.

I would mention to the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, who expressed concern, that there would be a problem with a new architect entering a firm, as to whether he had or had not made a contribution. I think the whole purpose of this proposal is to remove engineering or architectural firms from the arena of political contributions, and I think that is what they want. They do not want to be involved and they do not want to be in that gray area which is sort of between the contribution of an interested citizen and that of trying to influence people in Government.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield.

Mr. GOLDWATER. In view of the way this debate has turned, I would like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma what the situation would be if we passed a law providing for federally financed campaigns. Would we not all be contributors?

Mr. CURTIS. Not if we had deficits. We would be turning it over to our grandchildren.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I am not talking about deficits. If we passed a law for publicly financed campaigns, would we not, in effect, all be making donations, whether we were doctors, lawyers, or whatnot? What is the Senator's opinion on that?

Mr. BARTLETT. Well, the Senator raises a point. I, of course, am not in favor of the public financing provisions of the proposed law——

Mr. GOLDWATER. Neither am I.

Mr. BARTLETT. And I hope it does not become a reality, but I think public financing does raise a lot of questions. I believe this amendment does the job of removing from the political arena, and the pressure of making a contribution if for no other reason than just to be considerate or not to be blackballed, architects and engineers, and puts them in a strictly professional area, which they would like to be in.

When a number of architects and engineers from my State were here recently, talking about the problems that exist around the country, they brought out the fact that some people feel that the answer would be bidding, but I think bidding would be just as unsuitable for an architect or engineer as it would be for a lawyer in trying to obtain a client, and I think it is very important that they be removed from that area.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a suggestion?

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. Why doesn't the Senator modify his amendment to read in the positive rather than in the negative, by saying that any person who has a noncompetitive contract cannot make a contribution to any political party within 2 or 3 months from the time of the election? Then the Senator would be estopping the person.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, I have an amendment that I would like to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's amendment would not be in order until all time has been yielded back.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to modify my own amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered

The clerk will read the modification.

The assistant legislative clerk read the modification as follows:

The provisions of this subsection shall not apply to any contribution check-off provided on a Federal income tax return.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, has all time been yielded back?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield back the remainder of his time.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BARTLETT), as modified. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD of West Virginia: I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE), the Senator from Colorado (Mr. HASKELL), and the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON) is absent on official business.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS), and the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCOTT) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN) is absent due to illness in the family.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCOTT) would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 62, as follows:

[No. 104 Leg.]

PUBLIC FINANCING: A CALAMITY TO AVOID

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, we are soon going to have to closely examine and debate the most comprehensive campaign reform proposals ever seriously considered by this body.

I am deeply concerned that low uniform spending limits may work to the advantage of those candidates who can muster nonmonetary contributions or who enter a race with other advantages over their opponents that are unrelated to competence.

These advantages include better initial name recognition, better access to the media and access to other methods of reaching the average voter that are not subject to statutory limits. In general, one class of candidates enjoys these advantages over all others and must therefore benefit from such limits.

I am speaking of course of that class to which all of us here belong. We are incumbents. We have access to the frank. We have a greater claim to media attention than do nonincumbents. In short, we may soon be voting on legislation that could increase our advantage over anyone who wants to challenge us.

This is something that we should avoid. If we are going to limit spending on the part of congressional and Senate candidates we should at least give those who must run without the advantages associated with incumbency some chance to offset our builtin advantages.

I urge in this regard that an editorial, published in the Cincinnati Inquirer and just reprinted in Challenge, the publication of the National Federation of Republican Women, be read extremely closely. It represents a reasoned analysis of the problem and one that we should address when we consider S. 3044. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in full at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PUBLIC FINANCING: A CALAMITY TO AVOID

The 93rd Congress is closer than any of its predecessors to taking a step from which there is apt to be no easy retreat—the public [federal] financing of political campaigns.

The allure to public financing is, perhaps, understandable. For like all other easy answers, public financing would seem to eliminate most, if not all, of what is wrong with American politics.

To consider the long-range consequences of using public funds to finance political campaigns, however, is to see that the perils far outweigh the advantages, that the inequities far outweigh the assets, that the potential abuses far outweigh the probable benefits.

It is ironic to find among the supporters of the public funding a number of organizations and individuals who, in general, have advocated "opening up" the political process and making both government and the party structure more responsible to popular tastes and aspirations.

Public funding, it seems to us, would have precisely the opposite effect. The citizen, after all, has only two unfailing devices to influence the political process—his vote and his financial contribution. To deny him the right to contribute, to insulate the parties from the pressures of opinion, would not, in any accepted sense of the word, make American political parties more responsible. Indeed, it would invite them to become even less dependent on the people whose convictions and aspirations they were created to reflect.

There are, in addition, some grave questions about the constitutionality of outlawing individual financial contributions to the political parties. For is not the financial contribution, at bottom, simply an extension of the individual's right to freedom of speech—a right asserted in the First Amendment?

Quite apart from the philosophical and constitutional aspects, there are some significant practical questions that none of the sponsors of public funding has answered satisfactorily to date.

Certainly the most apparent is how to offset the inherent advantage of the incumbent in any political contest. Sen. Robert Taft, Jr. has suggested that an incumbent congressman seeking re-election has, by the very fact of his incumbency, a $150,000 advantage over any possible challenger. He is saying, in short, that the incumbent's opponent would need to spend $150,000 simply to meet the incumbent on an equal footing. Some observers regard Senator Taft's estimate as conservative. The fact remains that an incumbent congressman, senator or President has an immense built-in advantage—the ability to shape events, the ability to command newspaper headlines and television and radio exposure, the ability to blanket his constituency with franked (free) mail. Any method of using tax revenue to finance political campaigns that fails to offset the incumbents' natural advantage, is, by its very nature, legislation to help insure the re-election of incumbents.

Even more troublesome problems are posed by the allocation of funds between the two major parties. What should the yardstick be? If the answer is treating the two parties exactly alike, aren't voter preferences being ignored? If the answer is using the last election to establish a distribution formula, isn't there a danger of overlooking the possibility of significant shifts in people's preference?

The fact of the matter is that the political pendulum in the United States has a habit of swinging far and frequently. The same Republican Party that mustered only 38.5% of the popular vote in 1964 went on to win the presidency narrowly with 43.4% of the vote in 1968 and to swamp its opposition with 61% of the vote in 1972. And the same Democratic Party that could muster only 40.8% of the vote in 1928 went on to win the White House with a 57.4% landslide four years later.

Clearly, any distribution formula that had been based on, say, the 1928 election would have been patently unfair—so unfair, in fact, as to run the risk of distorting or frustrating what popular preferences actually turned out to be.

Quite another problem is posed by the third party that makes an occasional intrusion into U.S. political life. What yardstick is there for determining its share of public funding? In 1968, Gov. George C. Wallace's American Independent Party, which hadn't even existed in the previous presidential election, garnered 13.63% of the popular vote. Four years later, what purported to be the same party saw its support dwindle to less than 1%. What distribution formula in 1968 could possibly have assured the American Independent Party the financial support to which it was entitled? And what distribution formula could have avoided overfinancing in 1972 a political movement that had manifestly run out of steam?

Supporters of public financing appear to assume that the two major parties that exist today will always exist. In fact, of course, there is the distinct possibility that one or the other may cease to exist—as the Whig Party ceased to exist in the 1850s. Public financing emerges, accordingly, as a means of freezing the present party structure for all times.

The challenge to the nation, and in particular to Congress, is to find a series of remedies that will not prove more hurtful than the perpetuation of the existing system.

Certainly one crucial goal should be encouraging truly mass participation in the process by which political campaigns are financed.

Congress took one timid step in that direction through the checkoff plan introduced into last year's federal income tax returns—a plan that allowed each taxpayer to earmark $1 of his tax payment for the party of his choice. In the tax returns for the year just ended, Congress took a regrettable step backward: The checkoff system is still possible, but the taxpayer is no longer able to designate the party to receive his $1; it goes instead into a common fund to be divided between the two parties.

There is a similar need for the full disclosure of political giving—a disclosure system that will permit the voters to judge a candidate as much by the kind of financial contributions he receives as by the other qualifications on which he bases his campaign.

The ability to attract financial contributions is closely akin to the ability to attract votes. To move, as many suggest we do, toward saying that a candidate or a party need not concern itself with attracting dollars, accordingly, is akin to saying that it need not concern itself with attracting votes. It is difficult to see how the cause of responsible, government is hereby served.

Americans do not want to see public office become the exclusive preserve of those personally wealthful enough to finance their own campaigns. Neither do they want to see candidates so beholden to narrow, special interests as to be unrepresentative of those they are sworn to serve.

But neither, we think, do they want to see the political contributor shrouded in suspicion. And neither do they want a political process that is immune from the public attitudes and pressures that have been the historic shapers of public policy in the United States.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Heiting, one of his secretaries, and he announced that on March 29, 1974, the President had approved and signed the following acts:

S. 1615, An Act for the relief of August F. Walz;

S. 1673, An Act for the relief of Mrs. Zosima Telebanco Van Zanten;

S. 1852, An Act for the relief of Georgina Henrietta Harris;

S. 1922, An Act for the relief of Robert J. Martin; and

S. 3228, An Act to provide funeral transportation and living expense benefits to the families of deceased prisoners of war, and for other purposes.

ECONOMIC STABILIZATION PROGRAM REPORT—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATHAWAY) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs. The message is as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I herewith transmit to the Congress, in accordance with section 216 of the Economic Stabilization Act of 1970, as amended, the most recent quarterly report of the Economic Stabilization Program, covering the period October 1, 1973 through December 31, 1973.

The fourth quarter of 1973 was a period of continued although slower growth for the American economy. Our gross national product grew to $1,338 billion, an increase of $33 billion over the previous quarter. Employment increased by approximately one million workers to 85.7 million. The American dollar continued to regain strength abroad.

During the fourth quarter, inflation remained our most serious economic problem. Prices here and abroad continued to rise at an unacceptably rapid pace, due in large part to the worldwide shortages of many raw materials. The pattern of price increases also began to reflect the impact of the Arab oil embargo against the United States and higher world prices for oil.

By the beginning of the fourth quarter, the fourth phase of the Economic Stabilization Program had been fully underway. The increases anticipated after the summer freeze on prices were spread out over time with the help of the Phase IV regulatory mechanism.

Phase IV was also designed to provide an effective system of tight standards and compliance procedures that would lead to a gradual return of industry and labor to the free market. Throughout the fourth quarter, decontrol proceedings demonstrated that the public and private sectors of our economy can work cooperatively and effectively to meet common goals of price restraint. As part of the commitments under which they were removed from mandatory controls, many firms have pledged voluntary price control. More importantly for the future, many have stepped-up their capital expenditure plans to enlarge supplies—the only really effective way to halt inflation.

We are firm in our commitment to meet the challenge of inflation. The energy shortage and the problems resulting from it have significantly added to this challenge. We can, however, look with satisfaction to the efforts and sacrifices our Nation has made in response to these problems.

The Congress is presently debating the Administration's recommendation for continued stabilization authority and this Administration stands ready to work with the Congress to develop effective machinery for economic stabilization.

RICHARD NIXON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 2, 1974.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session, the PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATHAWAY) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of Senate proceedings.)

AMENDED RECESS SCHEDULE FOR 1974

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, on behalf of the distinguished Republican leader and myself, I ask unanimous consent that, the amended recess schedule for 1974 be printed in its entirety.

There being no objection, the amended recess schedule for 1974 was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMENDED RECESS SCHEDULE—1974

Easter (Sunday, April 14)—From conclusion of business Friday, April 12, until Noon, Monday, April 22.

Memorial Day (Monday, May 27)—From conclusion of business Thursday, May 23, until Noon, Tuesday, May 28.

July 4 (Thursday)—From conclusion of business Friday, June 28, until Noon, Monday, July 8.

Labor Day (Monday, September 2)—From conclusion of business Friday, August 23, until Noon, Wednesday, September 4.

NOTE: All recess periods are subject to cancellation or change to adapt to extraordinary situations.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Hackney, one of its reading clerks announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the following bills of the Senate:

S. 71. An act for the relief of Uhel D. Polly;

S. 205. An act for the relief of Jorge Mario Bell;

S. 507. An act for the relief of Wilhelm J. R. Maly;

S. 16. An act for the relief of Mrs. Jozefa Sokolowska Domanski;

S. 912. An act for the relief of Mahmood Shareef Suleiman; and

S. 2112. An act for the relief of Vo Thi Suong (Nini Anne Hoyt)

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 1321) for the relief of Mrs. Dominga Pettit.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5106) for the relief of Flora Datiles Tabayo.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7363) for the relief of Rito E. Judilla.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 6186) to amend the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1947 regarding taxability of dividends received by a corporation from insurance companies, banks, and other savings institutions.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7824) to establish a Legal Services Corporation, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. PERKINS, Mr. HAWKINS, Mrs. MINK, Mr. MEEDS, Mr. QUIE, Mr. ASHBROOK, and Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2) to provide for pension reform; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. PERKINS, Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey, Mr. DENT, Mr. BURTON, Mr. QUIE, Mr. ERLENBORN, and Mr. SARASIN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference on title I of the bill; and that Mr. ULLMAN, Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts, Mrs. GRIFFITHS, Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI, Mr. SCHNEEBELI, Mr. COLLIER, and Mr. BROYHILL of Virginia were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference on title II of the bill.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Under the previous order, the Senator is recognized to call up his amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 1059 and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Amendment No. 1059 is as follows:

On page 75, line 23, strike out "exceeds $3,000." and insert in lieu thereof "exceeds—".

On page 75, between lines 23 and 24, insert the following:

"(1) in the case of a candidate for the office of President or Vice President, $250; and

"(2) in the case of any other candidate, $100.".

On page 76, line 2, strike out "exceeds $3,000." and insert in lieu thereof "exceeds—".

On page 76, between lines 2 and 3, insert the following:

"(A) in the case of a candidate for the office of President or Vice President, $250; and

"(B) in the case of any other candidate, $100.".

On page 76, beginning with line 23, strike out through line 5 on page 77.

On page 77, line 6, strike out "(e)" and insert in lieu thereof "(d)".

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, under the present law, contributions can be made to various committees of a candidate of up to $3,000 without the incurring of a gift-tax liability. This has enabled many wealthy contributors to contribute $3,000 to each of multiple committees, thereby allowing them to contribute much more than the $3,000 to a candidate without incurring gift-tax liability.

On July 30 last year the Senate passed S. 372, which at the time was hailed by many so-called reformers as a great forward step in the regulation of campaign expenditures. That bill provided—and the bill before the Senate at this time, S. 3044 provides—for a $3,000 limitation per contributor per candidate per election.

It is true that this will permit a man and his wife to contribute $3,000 each, thereby allowing a $6,000 contribution by the family.

The present bill provides a $3,000 limitation per contribution, and, Mr. President, I think that is going a long way. I think that is certainly a fine regulation up to a point. It is contained in S. 372 which was passed last year in this Congress, now pending in the House. I believe it would be the better part of wisdom if we waited and saw what the House was going to do with respect to campaign financing.

There is no doubt that the Senate wants strict regulation. The Senator from Alabama wants stricter regulation. So I believe, Mr. President, it would be well for the Senate first to wait on the House to act, because there is some question as to the degree to which the House has embraced or will embrace public financing. Once we find what the House will do, the Senate can write its version, and then we will be very near to an agreement on a bill, which could very nearly be resolved in the conference, and a bill would ensue.

We have already sent one bill over to the House, S. 372, passed on July 30 last year by a vote of 82 to 8. During the course of the consideration and action and passage of that bill, a public financing amendment was defeated by the Senate. That was just July of last year. So we sent to the House a bill providing for strict regulation of campaign expenditures, with a strict regulation on campaign contributions, but confining all of the contributions to the private sector. That was the action of the Senate in July of last year.

Now, before the House has acted on that bill—I will not say before the House has had an opportunity to act on it, not the full House; the committee has not seen fit to report a bill, but there is an indication that the chairman of the committee is going to see that some legislation is reported to the floor—the Senate is being called on to pass a bill with an entirely different approach.

What was the effect of our action before? I am not sure how many days or weeks we debated it. I think it may have been as long as 10 days on the floor. The distinguished chairman of the committee (Mr. CANNON) is here. He could give the exact number of days. But the Senate debated that bill for a week or 10 days and decided to keep campaign contributions in the private sector, by a yea-and-nay vote here on the floor, and by a substantial margin.

The present bill changes that approach entirely and seeks to finance the primaries of the Members of the House and Senate on a 50–50 matching, or potentially a 50–50 matching, as between private contributions and the Public Treasury, and to finance general election expenditures 100 percent out of the Public Treasury, which would allow, taking the largest State in the Union, a candidate for the Senate—and both of the California Senators have voted for public financing—to have a contribution by the Federal Government, or a part of the Federal Government, of up to $700,000 in matching funds. That would be the Government's contribution to the candidacy of any number of candidates for the nomination of the two major parties.

That would be up to $700,000 based on the amount of private contributions for each candidate for the nomination of the two parties. With that kind of financing, I rather imagine quite a number of candidates will be seeking the nominations of the different parties. And if the Federal Government is going to pay up to $700,000 in matching funds for the contributions of the various candidates, I think there will be a large number of candidates running for the Democratic nomination and a large number of candidates running for the Republican nomination. Then, if the two parties choose their candidates, who have been financed to a large extent by the Federal Government, up to $700,000 apiece, the Federal Government will take it over altogether.

Paying half the amount is not enough. We are asked to pay half of a candidate's expense—a large expense, I might say. I think that a little later on I shall offer an amendment to cut down the amounts allowed to be spent under the bill. I think that this bill escalates the cost of a campaign at a time when we ought to be trying to cut down on the cost of the campaign.

What does the bill provide for the fortunate fellows who have been chosen by the two major parties as their candidates in the general election for the Senate? Why, the taxpayers write each one of them a check for $2,020,000. Is that reform? I am for reform; I am not for a public subsidy. I am for cutting down on the overall expenditures, and I am for cutting down on the individual contributions. We cannot write a bill that is too strict for the Senator from Alabama with contributions and expenditures being in the private sector.

I would not care if they eliminated all private expenditures and all contributions just so long as they leave it in the private sector and do not hand the bill over to the taxpayers.

Mr. President, they say that the lessons of Watergate make it imperative that campaign election laws be changed and tightened up. They say that the only way we can do that is by handing the bill to the taxpayer. Well, that has been the solution of all of our problems for the last decade. When any problems come up, they pump a little more Federal money into the area of the problem and say that that will solve it. The same thing applies where they pump a little more money into the pockets of the politicians. They say that we will have a clean election in that way.

I do not see that policy. That is a non sequitur. There is no magic potion attached to a dollar received from the Public Treasury as distinguished from a dollar received from the private sector.

So turning the bill over to the taxpayer is not going to solve anything. But strict regulations, private contributions and expenditures, and strict rules as to the disclosure of the contributions and expenditures will go a long way.

The law that we have on the books now, the 1971 Campaign Expenditures Act, did mighty little in the way of reform. One thing that it did not do was to cut down on the amount of contributions; and that is what needs to be done.

It was argued at that time that disclosure was all that was needed; that if we disclosed what each candidate was doing, we would not need to put any limit on contributions. It does not work that way.

Another shortcoming, another shortfall in the present law, is that there is no effective limitation on campaign expenditures. What is covered in the campaign expenditure field? Why, all they seek to put a limit on is the expenditures for the so-called media advertising. I believe it is 10 cents for each person of voting age in the political subdivision from which the candidate is running. I believe it is up to 6 cents for radio and television and possibly 4 cents for other types of media advertising, but there is no limit whatsoever on the tremendous number and amount of other types of candidate types of expenditures.

What about mass mailing? I have not sent out any mass mailing as a candidate. However, I understand that is frequently resorted to.

Oh, sure, it is hard, with office space, car rental, campaign staffs, and the tremendous number of expenses that can come up. There is no limitation whatsoever on those areas of expenditures. Of course, that means tightening up.

S. 372, which the Senate has already passed, placed a 15-cent limitation per person on those of voting age for campaign expenditures. If we cut that 15 cents down to 10 cents, we would have a better law. That law has not passed. I say that we should wait for the House to send a bill over here that we can work on. Then, at least, we will have the House committed to that much of a concession in the area of campaign reform.

I would suggest caution in moving ahead at this time with an entirely different theory as to the approach on campaign financing, an approach of 180° in about 180 days to switch from private financing to public financing, which is what we are being called upon to do here by the authors of S. 3044.

I say that since the acute need for this legislation is pointed up by what is referred to as Watergate, I think it would be highly appropriate that we wait and examine the report which I understand is going to be filed either this month or next month by the Watergate Committee, the report which the Senate charged that committee with bringing back to the Senate on the recommendation that the committee makes to the Senate, Congress, and the Nation as to the best way of reforming the electoral process and the best way of properly controlling campaign contributions and expenditures.

That mission was assigned to that committee, and it has labored diligently for 15 months or more, and received the plaudits of the entire Nation for the dedication of its members and the results which it achieved. Why not wait and see what recommendations that committee will make?

Mr. President, I would say it is rather obvious why we are not going to wait on that report. All you have to do is read some of the votes here in the Senate on some of the issues both last year and this year. It is quite obvious that five members of the seven-man Watergate Committee are opposed to public financing of Federal elections. That is one reason why we are not waiting on that report, because it is known what the report is going to say, in principle. It is not going to recommend public financing; that is obvious from the votes taken here in the Senate. So that is the reason why this bill must be pushed at this time.

Mr. President, we have not yet tried strict regulation, such as would be provided by S. 372. We have not yet tried strict regulation of campaign receipts and campaign expenditures. If the House of Representatives would pass S. 372, and it were signed into law and given a fair trial, I believe it would go a long way toward cleaning up Federal elections in this country.

And not only has private regulation, or regulation of the election process and control of contributions in the private sector, not been tried, but we already have Federal financing, taxpayger financing of Federal elections, up to a point. We already have the checkoff; this bill as it came from the committee contained a plan not only to double the checkoff from $1 for a single person and $2 for a couple to $2 for a single person and $4 for a couple. But they were not satisfied with doubling that process, which is going to bring in enough money already to finance the 1976 election; they wanted to weight the thing in favor of the tax spenders, of the politicians running for Federal office.

How did they plan to do that? Well, they provided, instead of this checkoff being on a voluntary basis, as it is now, that if the taxpayer did not say that he did not want his money checked off, they would check it off anyway, and he would be assumed to desire a checkoff as to his return if he did not specify to the contrary. That was just a little twist around to where it made the contribution involuntary, requiring him to take affirmative action to prevent the checkoff rather than the present law, which requires affirmative action to implement or put in motion the checkoff.

I am aware of the fact that this section has been deleted, to come up at a later time on another bill, but we might not have an opportunity to discuss it as fully at that time as we have at the present time. So let us see what this checkoff provides in the way of money out of the taxpayers' pockets.

Under the present checkoff regulation or law, which the Rules Committee which brought out this bill passed, I believed, by a vote of 8 to 1—the Senator from Alabama is on that committee, and his vote represented the one opposed to the bill—the committee said, on page 28 of the committee report:

If all returns, individual and joint, should take full advantage of the one dollar check off the total cost would be $117,370,000.

With this amendment that they have:

If, all returns should take full advantage of a two dollar check off the cost would be $234,740,000.

That is what the cost would be under this little checkoff provision that they have got. That sounds like some pretty important money coming under the checkoff. They are going to have enough moeny under the checkoff to finance the Presidential election of 1976.

Would it not be the better part of wisdom—I will ask the distinguished senior Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY)—would it not be the better part of wisdom to see how this plan works on the 1976 Presidential election before adding other offices or adding the Presidential nomination and the House and Senate primary and general elections? Would it not be better to see how it works at the Presidential level before adding other area offices?

Mr. PERCY. If the distinguished Senator from Alabama is asking me, I would be very happy to say that I have no objection to using our best judgment and going ahead with other offices as we in our judgment think may be good for one level as for another.

Mr. ALLEN. He would not want to wait and see how it works before trying to extend it to other areas then?

Mr. PERCY. All I know is that any system, almost, would be better than the present system we seem to be using.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the distinguished Senator from Illinois. We are going to try to give him a better system but keep it in the private sector.

I have been addressing my remarks, I will say for the benefit of Senators who have just come into the Chamber since I started talking, to the fact that we already have public financing of Federal elections up to a point, and the Presidential election in full under certain circumstances, which I will outline in a moment.

Other elections are financed by the Federal Government in the operation of the income tax laws because the present law—and this bill seeks to double what I am going to outline—the present law, I believe gives a single person an absolute credit. In other words, just handing this amount to the taxpayer of $12.50 for any political contribution that he might make, including, of course, to the Presidential or the senatorial or the House of Representatives candidates.

A couple could claim a credit of $25.

Now if they wanted to go a different route and go the deduction route, there was a $50 deduction for an individual or $100 for a couple.

This bill as it came out of the committee doubled those amounts. I think that is going to be the pattern throughout, if we get this Federal financing, as every Congress will double what it will cost the taxpayer.

But here we have got the checkoff already financed by the taxpayers of the country, financed by the Public Treasury it would be better to say, because it does not cost the taxpayer any more as an individual taxpayer to assign a dollar of his tax liability toward this checkoff fund. We have that financed by the taxpayers, by the Public Treasury—the checkoff plan—and we have the credits that are allowed to the taxpayers if they want to go that route, or deductions if they want to go the other route.

Obviously, the deduction route would be chosen by a person whose income was high because he would then get more than this credit. The credit would be better used by a person of low income.

So, Mr. President, the committee bill sought to double these amounts and make it, I believe—speaking from memory, and if I am wrong, I am sure I will be corrected—the committee bill provided for credits of $25 for an individual, $50 for a couple, or deductions of $100 for an individual or $200 for a couple.

So S. 3044——

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield at that point, the Senator is correct. That is the proposal that was in the bill as we reported it, in addition to raising the dollar checkoff to $2. That is the amount, as the Senator correctly stated earlier, which is now in title V and was stricken from the bill and has been referred to the Finance Committee. So it presently is not in the bill as it now stands.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Alabama did not state to the contrary. He stated that the provision had been knocked out, but this might be a better opportunity to discuss it than we might have at a different time.

Mr. CANNON. I was just verifying the fact that the Senator's figures are correct.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, and I thank the distinguished Senator from Nevada. I appreciate his diligence, his dedication, and his great knowledge in this area. Also his sincere desire to set up a workable plan that will inure to the benefit of the people of the United States as he sees it.

I just happen to see it differently. But I would be remiss in my duty if I did not say that I feel the distinguished Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON), the chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration, has done an outstanding job in this area and in coming up with the bill as he was committed to do last year at the time the rider to the debt limit bill was withdrawn.

But the Senator from Alabama disagrees with the conclusion that the distinguished Senator from Nevada has reached, that to a certain extent public financing is in the best interest of the election process and of the people of this country.

I was commenting on the bill as it came from the Committee on Rules and Administration.

So, now, Mr. President, this bill, S. 3044, sets up a system of matching contributions in primaries and financing 100 percent the general elections.

Now let us see who is paying the bill.

In the primaries the Government is paying half of the contributions up to a certain amount in size, and in total amount for that matter.

Now the taxpayer that is the Government, under the present law and to a greater extent under the Senate bill as it came out of the committee, would provide for matching the individual contributions. But the taxpayer can put up a large portion of his and charge it off on his income tax with little net loss or cost to the taxpayer on the small contributions. So the Government is getting it in the neck going and coming. It matches the contributions and it funnels the money over to the taxpayer to put up a portion of his end of it. So, in a sense, it is the Government paying it all the way.

The rider that was not agreed to in the Senate did not go so far as to cover primaries of House and Senate Members. They said, "This is a little farther than we should go." But I notice that the Rules Committee has come out with a bill providing for matching funds in primaries.

Mr. President, let us see what it takes in the various primaries to become a candidate. Let us take the top office and see how that operates under the Senate bill, and let us see if this is in the public interest.

In the first place, it provides that a candidate for the nomination of one of the two major parties can spend up to $15 million in seeking the Presidential nomination. I say that in round figures. It is based on a formula of 10 cents per person of voting age throughout the country, and that is estimated to be approximately $15 million. It is provided that anybody desiring to seek the nomination of one of the parties can do so, but he does not receive any subsidy, any grant, any handout from the Federal Government until he has raised $250,000 in contributions of $250 or less. As soon as he reaches that threshold level, as it is called, of having raised $250,000, he goes in and makes a showing of that to the Commission, I assume, and the Treasury pays him that $250,000. Now he has another $250,000 with which to run.

Every time he receives a contribution of $250 or less, he is entitled to have that matched by the Federal Government, by the taxpayers of the Nation, up to the point of $7.5 million. That is what every candidate for the nomination will receive; and if this bill is passed, there will be several dozen, including 8 or 10 who serve in this Chamber.

I might mention in passing that one of the amendments that has been defeated in the Senate since this bill has been under debate was an amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama that would have provided that no Member of the 93d Congress would be eligible to receive any matching funds for a race for the Presidential nomination for the term starting January 20, 1977, which is the next race. That amendment received 36 votes. Numbered among those 36, however, was not a single person who is reputed to be, or alleged to be, or understood to be a candidate for the nomination of one of the major parties.

I took the position that if this Congress sets up a subsidy program of $7.5 million for everybody who wants to run for President, the Members of the Congress that creates that subsidy program should not be able to participate in any such subsidy. The majority of the Senate did not agree. I was pleasantly surprised, however, to receive 36 votes on that amendment. So 36 Members of the Senate felt that a program should not be set up by the 93d Congress in which Members of that Congress would stand to benefit to the tune of several million dollars apiece. It might be a good idea to reword that amendment before this bill is passed and submit it again, to see what the Members of the Senate think about it, after having reflected on it for awhile.

Mr. President, a person who is very popular in a State and who has no nationwide following whatsoever would not have too much difficulty, in my judgment, in raising $250,000 in his home State; nor would the leader of some pressure group, some far out group, have difficulty in raising that money. He would present the bill to the Federal Treasury and, in effect, would get on the Federal payroll from then on out, by the Federal Government matching his $250 or less contributions on up to $7.5 million.

Another consideration is this: It is not necessary that the recipient of this Federal subsidy spend any of it prior to the convention—or ever spend it, for that matter. But certainly he does not have to spend it prior to the convention. If he has collected $7.5 million in contribution of up to $250 and the Federal Government has matched that amount and he goes to the convention sitting on a warchest of $15 million, and another candidate or two follow the same policy, and we have several candidates in Miami or in Chicago—those seem to be the cities that bid for these conventions—they could be at the convention with $15 million apiece.

Look at the possibilities for improper practices with these Presidential candidates who are greatly desirous of high office and are willing to work hard in an effort to obtain that nomination.

So, Mr. President, I believe that the financing of these Presidential election campaigns or Presidential nomination campaigns certainly is not in the public interest. Look at some of the beneficiaries of such a program. I notice in the newspaper that the former Governor of New York, Mr. Rockefeller, may possibly aspire to the Presidency. This Federal subsidy program would make it possible that the Federal Government would subsidize Mr. Rockefeller up to the extent of $7.5 million. Governor Rockefeller is said to be a candidate for nomination, I believe, of the Republican Party. If he were able to get enough private contributions up to $250 he would be eligible for a Federal subsidy of $7.5 million.

Governor Reagan of California would be eligible for a subsidy of up to $7.5 million. The distinguished senior Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY) has a commission set up to study whether he shall run for the Presidency or not, and if he decides to run and is able to get sufficient private contributions he would be eligible from Illinois (Mr. PERCY) has a com-

On this side of the aisle the distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) would be eligible, if he were able to get sufficient private contributions, for a subsidy of $7.5 million.

Some of the other candidates who have run in the past would be eligible. The distinguished Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN) has shown he can get small contributions in abundance so he would be almost certain to receive a subsidy of $7.5 million if he ran for the Presidency.

This is a strange type reform. If that were the law the candidates for the Presidential nomination of the two major parties could receive up to $7.5 million out of the Public Treasury, and that is provided under this bill. Mr. President, you can rest assured that there will be a cry throughout this land for true reform, and that would be to do away with this $7.5 million-per-candidate subsidy plan. That is what the reform would be. It is not reform to set up a subsidy program for Presidential nomination candidates. That is not reform. That is subsidizing politicians, and that is not in the public interest, in the judgment of the Senator from Alabama.

Now, Mr. President, when the bill first came to the floor of the Senate I questioned the distinguished junior Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), who was one of the original sponsors of the bill. I pointed out to him that my examination of the bill did not disclose that there was a starting point for the making of contributions which would be matchable under the provisions of this bill.

He stated that that was true. So I asked him if that would indicate, then, that contributions made possibly several years ago, prior to the passage of the bill, would have to be matched out of the Public Treasury if they otherwise complied with the law. The distinguished Senator from Rhode Island considered there was no starting point, so these contributions made sometime back would be matchable.

I also pointed out to the distinguished Senator that I saw no statement that the Presidential elections referred to would be the last Presidential election, and it appeared that a man could take the position, "I cannot run in 1976; I am not quite ready and others are better known; I will wait until 1980." So contributions that a person gets now would work toward the 1980 race or the 1984 race. I asked the Senator if that would be matchable out of the Public Treasury. Oh, yes, that would be matchable, too.

Would it be possible, then, to have one class of recipients of the Federal subsidy running for President in 1976, another class running in 1980, and another in 1984? Well, he does not see anything to prevent it; that is what the law would seem to provide. A casual reading of the bill would indicate that and that was confirmed by the distinguished junior Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL).

Now, Mr. President, they talk about whether this is an incumbent's bill or whether it is a challenger's bill; does it make better provisions for the incumbent, or does it make better provision for the challenger? Well, I stated here on the floor before, and possibly some Senators were not here then, as I see it this bill providing for the matching of candidates' contributions in the primary—I started to say for the House and Senate races but it also applies in Presidential races, as well—the candidate in the primary who is well known, who is the incumbent, who is in high office already, is in a better position to obtain more funds and contributions than the nonincumbent who is the less well-known candidate.

I use as an example the State of California. There, Mr. President, it is permitted to receive in contributions $1.4 million in the primary.

By the way, I neglected to mention that the purpose of the amendment is to cut down on the amount of permissible contributions, and I will get to that a little later.

If all of his contributions were $250 or less, or $100 or less in the case of a House or Senate candidate, he could receive in private contributions up to $700,000, and the Government would match that with $700,000.

I use for an example a lesser known candidate who might receive $100,000. My attention was called to the fact that it took $125,000 to even start the matching, but for the purpose of the illustration, the lesser known candidate receives $100,000 in matchable contributions. The better known candidate, the incumbent, if you please, receives, in this hypothetical instance, $700,000 in eligible contributions. Therefore, there is a $600,000 spread, so to speak—a $600,000 advantage—as between the incumbent and the challenger.

That is a pretty big advantage.

Let us see what happens when the formula of Federal matching is applied. There is a $600,000 spread before the matching takes place. The lesser-known candidate's $100,000 is doubled, and he ends up with $200,000 to draw on. The incumbent, being better known, having done favors for hundreds of people, and being the favorite, I assume, would be able to receive larger amounts in contributions. In the hypothetical instance, having received $700,000, that is matched by the Federal Government, so he ends up with campaign funds of $1.4 million. The challenger, having been at a $600,000 disadvantage before the public financing helps out, being $600,000 behind, when public financing gets through with him, he is $1.2 million behind his better known challenger, his better known incumbent.

So what is there here for the challenger? It looks to the Senator from Alabama as though the advantage lies with the incumbent, but we hear a whole lot of pious statements that a bill of this sort, public financing, is needed to do away with large contributions. We do not need public financing to do away with large contributions; all we have to do is pass S. 372. That cuts it down to $3,000 per contribution.

But the pending amendment which, after these few preliminary remarks I have gotten to, makes this provision. The $3,000 is too high. The $3,000 permissible contribution is too high, in the opinion of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, I am glad to yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I have been listening to the comments of the Senator from Alabama, and I am interested in the basis for his feeling that the $3,000 contribution limit is too high. As I understand it, the genius of the proposal that has come out of the Rules Committee is that it provides the alternatives of either public or private financing. It leaves the decision to the individual candidate as to whether he wants to choose one method or the other to finance his campaign, or a combination of the two.

S. 372, which also came out of the Rules Committee, was debated here on the floor of the Senate last July, and by an overwhelming vote of some 80 to 8, it was the considered and overwhelming judgment of the Senate that $3,000 was a realistic limit for private contributions—low enough to prevent the most serious abuses of large contributions, but high enough to enable candidates to finance their campaigns without undue difficulty.

I wonder why the Senator from Alabama, who has obviously taken such a strong position in opposition to public financing, is offering an amendment whose effect may well be to eliminate the possibility of private financing of campaigns for public office, by setting the contribution limits at a level so low that no candidate may be able to finance his campaign privately. Most experts would say, I think, that this amendment would make public financing the only realistic way to go.

It seems that on the one hand, the Senator is saying, "I am opposed to any public financing of campaigns," but on the other hand, he is saying, "I am going to make it extremely difficult to finance campaigns privately, by fixing the contribution limits at very low amounts."

I would appreciate hearing what evidence the Senator from Alabama has which indicates that those who are attempting to run for election to the Senate or the House, particularly those who are virtually unknown, will be able to finance their campaigns under his amendment. How is a candidate going to build up a recognition factor or develop the kind of support to finance a campaign in a major industrial State, where hundreds of thousands, or even millions, of dollars are now routinely spent. How will they be able to reach that amount of money by contributions of $100 or less?

And his effort to raise funds will be more difficult, because other candidates for other offices will be trying to tap the same pool of small contributors. What happens when both candidates for President, both candidates for the Senate, and both candidates for a House seat are trying to raise small contributions in the same congressional district? Is the pool of contributors inexhaustible? What if candidates for State and local office are also making the effort to tap the pool? Would not the well run dry?

I wonder why the Senator is opposed to what I think has been the very constructive and positive compromise in S. 3044. Public and private financing can exist side by side as reasonable alternatives. A candidate could say, "I am going to run on public financing, so that I will not be obligated to any special interest groups, and so that I will be accountable to all the people." Another candidate could say, "I am going to rely on private financing, because I would rather not use public funds for my campaign, and the danger of special influence groups is not very great if their contributions are limited to $3,000." To me, the amendment of the Senator from Alabama runs the risk that it abolishes completely the opportunity to run with these kinds of alternatives.

I would like to know whether the Senator from Alabama can indicate to us the amount of money that has been raised already to fund Senate races. I would like to know whether that money has actually been contributed in amounts of $100 or less. I wonder whether the Senator from Alabama has any figures on that point.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for his comment. I am delighted that he finally got around to asking a question rather than making self-serving comments.

I would say to the Senator from Massachusetts that there is no magic in the $3,000 figure. Certainly, it is a step in the right direction, because under the present law there is no effective limit whatsoever. I support the $3,000 limit, if that is the best we can do.

When S. 372 was before the Senate, if the Senator will recall, there was an amendment that sought to cut the $3,000 down to $1,000. If I am not mistaken, a public service organization known as Common Cause recommended the $1,000 limitation. The Senator from Alabama voted for that limitation. At that time he would have voted for a stricter limitation. The Senator from Alabama is not one who believes that Members of the House and Senate, and those who make races to the point where they might challenge the Members of the House and Senate, are people of such nature that their conduct, their votes, and their actions would be influenced by contributions that they might accept.

I think that Members of the House and Senate should show restraint in this field. I think they should be willing to adopt a lower level of contributions, a lower level of spending. I will submit that public financing, far from cutting down on the amount of average expenditures in political races, is going to escalate, in the judgment of the Senator from Alabama.

So I believe that the best way to reform the election process, the best way to get true reform—I will certainly say we are not going to get true reform just by turning the bill over to the taxpayers—the best way to get true reform is to limit everybody—the incumbent and the challenger—to the overall expenditures and to limit the amount of permissible contributions.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I had not finished answering, but I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. If we follow the reasoning of the Senator from Alabama, it will lead us to public financing. He is talking about reducing the amount of contributions to an exceedingly low limit. That is the essence of public financing and the dollar checkoff—the dollar checkoff can pay for the entire 1976 Presidential election by what are, in effect, $1 contributions from millions of taxpayers.

If we follow the reasoning of the Senator from Alabama, I think it leads us right into the public financing legislation which we are currently considering. Instead of large contributions, the Senator from Alabama thinks that $1,000 is too large. So the Senator from Alabama goes to $250 in a Presidential race and $100 in a congressional race.

Let us carry that argument to the point of the dollar checkoff periods for the individual taxpayer to contribute $1. That is the system of public financing that has been incorporated into this bill. It makes the Members of the Congress responsible to all the people because all the people are financing the campaigns.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts. The point that the Senator from Alabama is making is that if we limit contributions to $250 in Presidential races and $100 in House and Senate races, there is no possibility of these evil, corrupting influences that the Senator from Massachusetts fears. There will certainly be no way for a vested interest to gain any support or influence from a Member of Congress if his contribution is limited to $100, or to $250 in a Presidential race. It would be just as fair for one as for the other. It would deprive the incumbent of his ability—supposed ability—to get large sums of money, and would put him on the same basis as the challenger, whose contributions in all likelihood would be small.

So the effect of the amendment of the Senator from Alabama would be to have a leveling influence, and not have the biggest and fullest amounts, as would be permissible under the bill as presently drawn. I feel that a $3,000 limit is better than no limit whatsoever. When we were unable to reduce the amount in S. 372 to the $1,000 limit, the Senator from Alabama was glad to support the $3,000 limit. At that time the Senate took a stand for regulating campaign contributions and expenditures in the private sector. It saw no need back in July, at the time S. 372 was passed, of presenting a bill of a half a billion dollars every 4 years to the American taxpayers to enable the politicians in the land to run for Federal office.

So, as the Senator from Alabama sees it, under the present bill there is no matching for amounts over $250 in Presidential nomination races and no matching for contributions over $100 in the House and Senate races. So, there must be something evil or sinister about contributions above that amount, therefore, to cut them all down to the amount that the Federal Government will match. Thereby, we would help the challenger, the challenger being unable, according to the theory of the Senator from Massachusetts, to attract large contributions.

So this would put the challenger on the same basis as the incumbent, because every dollar that each of them would get would be matched, and the incumbent would not have the supposed advantage of getting out and getting large contributions that would not be available to the challenger.

So, as the Senator from Alabama sees it, this amendment cuts contributions down to $250 during the presidential races and to $100 for the House and Senate races, and certainly a challenger's amendment.

It is a little man's amendment. It is an average man's amendment, and would better enable any person who aspired to Federal office to become a candidate, and to be on a level with the incumbent.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further——

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY. As I understand the thrust of the Senator's argument, he is concerned about challengers.

Mr. ALLEN. That is one of my concerns.

Mr. KENNEDY. One of his concerns on this particular amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. Honest elections is my main concern.

Mr. KENNEDY. Honest elections.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY. His concern is to make sure that a challenger will be able to finance his campaign and present his campaign program and campaign platform. Second, he is concerned about the sinister influence of large campaign contributions.

Mr. ALLEN. I was quoting the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts in that regard. The supposed sinister influence of large campaign contributions.

Mr. KENNEDY. The fact remains, Mr. President, that the best way to provide for challengers is to adopt the present provisions of S. 3044, because that will make it possible for the challenger to receive the same amount of money as the incumbent. Surely, if an incumbent and challenger are both forced to compete for small contributions, as the Senator's amendment would require, the challenger would be under a serious handicap, because the incumbent would generally be far better known.

So I believe the challenger would be served best by providing him with the opportunity to accept public financing for his campaign. If we carry through the logic and the reasoning of the Senator's argument, if his goal is to provide equity to the challenger, that is what S. 3044 would do. It provides an equal amount to the challenger and the incumbent, so that the challenger can go to the American people and say, "I am accountable to you, because you funded and financed the campaign."

Or, the individual may say, "I do not want to use public funds, I would like to run my campaign on private contributions." In this case, we have to provide some limit, some cutoff point, which will provide sufficient funds to finance a political campaign, but would be sufficiently low that the candidate will feel obligated to his contributors. We have to avoid the situation in which a candidate no longer has the appearance of owing his primary obligation to the American people.

What the Rules Committee has done is close the loophole in the election law that permitted W. Clement Stone, whose business happens to be the health insurance business, to contribute $2 million in 1972. The bill would reduce the total amount that he would be able to contribute to just $3,000. I think that is real progess, down to $3,000 from $2 million.

What the Rules Committee has attempted to do is give the incumbent and the challenger an alternative. If the challenger wants public funds, he can go to the Treasury for public financing. If he wants to use private funds, he can do so, but only at the rate of $3,000 per contributor. I do not maintain that $3,000 is necessarily the proper figure. You can get a difference of opinion as to whether it should $2,000 or $4,000. These are ballpark figures, but they carry through what I think is the sound intent and purpose of the limitation, and that is to guarantee to the American people that no single contributor is going to have undue influence, in the committee rooms or in the Halls of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his valuable contribution to the discussion. I was interested when he said S. 3044 would provide the challenger and the incumbent with an equal amount of money. Obviously that is incorrect, in this respect: that one of the supposed purposes of the bill is to give the challenger somewhere near an even break with the incumbent, because of the incumbent's admitted ability to raise larger sums in contributions for campaign financing.

I submit to the Senate that S. 3044 compounds the advantage that the incumbent already has, because if the incumbent can obtain more money in contributions than the challenger, then the contribution of the subsidy or the handout by the Federal Government to the incumbent is measured by the amount of his private contributions, as is the contribution to the challenger; it is measured by the amount of the contributions that he has received. So if the incumbent has already received more in contributions than the challenger, how in the world is it helping the challenger if the Federal Government doubles the amount that the incumbent has?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. When I finish my thought I will be glad to. I assume that the Senator from Massachusetts was right here when I gave this illustration: Take the State of California, where, in the primary, it is possible for the Government to contribute as a subsidy to a candidate in a primary election up to $700,000, based on the amounts contributed by the individuals to the incumbent or the challenger. The incumbent, supposedly having the ability to get more in private contributions, might well obtain in the private sector $700,000 in matchable contributions, whereas the less known challenger might have to be satisfied with receiving $100,000 in contributions from individual contributors.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. Let me finish my point. I understand that it takes $125,000 to trigger this procedure, but it is harder to work out the problem of mathematics with $125,000, I will say to the Senator, than with $100,000.

The challenger, receiving $100,000 as against the $700,000 received by the incumbent, that is the position he finds himself in before campaign reform, before public financing sheds its beneficent influence on the race. But at that time the Federal Government comes in, and presents to the incumbent $700,000 and to the challenger it presents a check for $100,000; so that, whereas the challenger was only $600,000 behind the incumbent before public financing enters into the picture, when public financing gets through with him, he is $1.2 million behind the incumbent.

So it is hard for the Senator from Alabama to see how the public financing aids the challenger, it looks to me like it is taking care of the incumbent just as this provision for $7.5 million for the various candidates for the nomination for the presidency takes care of Members of the 93d Congress.

So I believe that this amendment should be adopted. It would prevent the case of the incumbent, supposedly able to get larger sums in contributions than the challenger, receiving the large contributions and would put the incumbent and the challenger on exactly the same basis. They would be limited to a $100 contribution if they are running for House or Senate.

I might say to the distinguished Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS), after his campaign has proceeded up to a certain point, and certain contributions have been received in his race, that he put a $100 limit on contributions that he is to receive in his race for the Senate right now.

I notice that Representative VANIK of Ohio is not going either to accept a contribution or to make an expenditure. My hat is off to him, to a man who will receive no contributions and make no expenditures. I would be glad to vote for an amendment of that sort on this bill and would gladly abide by it. If all expenditures and all contributions were eliminated, that would suit the Senator from Alabama.

Certainly the limit of $250 in a Presidential race and $100 in a House or Senate race, properly enforced, would see a transformation in American politics and in the American Government, if this amendment were to be adopted and it became the law of the land.

So, limit contributions to $250 for the presidential nomination or the presidential general election. Limit contributions to $100 in House and Senate primary races.

So, Mr. President, this would be a reform amendment. Public financing is not reform. That is just an added burden upon the taxpayer. That is all public financing is.

Does it help to clean up American politics and provide a system whereby $15 million could be spent by a candidate for the Democratic or Republican nomination for President, as much as half of it coming from the Federal Government?

Put them on the same basis. If they want to run, let them run. If they have the support, they will get the votes. If they have not the support, they will not. It is as simple as that.

It is not necessary for the American taxpayer to provide $7½ million worth of hoopla and carnival type politics. That is what this money will be used for. It will put on a big show. It is not necessary to spend that kind of money to present the issues to the American people.

Whoever gave the public finance people the idea that by making more money available in the contest for the presidential nomination, that would clean things up?

The way to clean things up is to leave financing of Federal elections in the private sector and to reduce the amount of contributions.

Now, Mr. President, this amendment does not eliminate public financing. I wish it did. I wish it could be adopted. All it provides for is that it shall be the limit of a contribution in the private sector by an individual as an individual.

It still provides for public financing. It still provides for matching. But it puts everyone on an even basis. Any challenger, if he has got any following, could get out and raise campaign contributions in this area up to a $100 contribution. It would certainly remove any sinister influence. I do not quite understand the thinking of the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) that every Member of the House and Senate is susceptible to improper influence. I just have a higher opinion of Members of the House and Senate than do some who espouse the cause of public financing. I just do not believe that any Member—I do not know of any Member of the House or Senate who would act improperly as a result of having received a campaign contribution. I feel certain that if contributions were limited to $100, I do not feel that that would put any Member of the House or Senate under a tremendous obligation to any person, to limit contributions to $100.

So, Mr. President, it is a question of whether we want to bring campaigns down to reality.

I remember reading back in the 1920's where one Senator from a State was denied a seat here in the Senate for having spent I think it was around $100,000 in a race for the Senate.

What we need to do is to pass a law limiting contributions in the private sector and then proceed to enforce it and not just turn around and hand the money over to the candidate at the expense of the taxpayer.

I might say, too, Mr. President, that the Federal subsidies that go to the various candidates that are paid in the primaries on the basis of the matching contributions, they are not paid on the basis of matching expenditures. So that after the race is over, it will be up to the Government to get back its money if it could, if all the money was not expended properly.

Mr. President, there is nothing in this bill that provides for prudent management of this Federal subsidy. It is handed over to the candidate on a silver platter, both in the primary and the general election. There is nothing in here that I can read that would prevent a candidate hiring his brother-in-law to serve as his campaign manager at a salary of $100,000. There is nothing in here that would prevent a candidate from giving some person or agency an override on all campaign expenses.

The money would be thrown away, frittered away. But I do not suppose that is reason enough to ask that the Federal Government not institute a subsidy program—the fact that the money might be wasted. But wasted it will be—we can count on that—because some candidates would never have had it so good as under this public subsidy. The Federal Government would be pumping more money into their campaigns than they ever dreamed of. More than $2 million to each candidate for the Senate in each general election in California, $1.9 million to each candidate for the Senate in the State of New York. It would be handed to them, Mr. President.

Let us examine that for a moment. What do Senators make? In a 6-year period, they make a quarter of a million dollars, roughly that. Yet in California the Government is going to pay each senatorial candidate, for his expenses, $2,121,000, and lesser amounts on down. Talk about campaign reform. That is some reform. It is change, yes. But every change is not reform. Reform, I would think, would mean to improve, to perfect. Well, is that improving the election process, to provide a campaign fund, out of the public Treasury, nine times as great as a Senator's earnings in 6 years of his term? There is something wrong with a system of that sort.

The Federal Government, after having financed up to $700,000 for each candidate in the primary, now sets up a campaign fund for each candidate in the general election that is nine times as large as a Senator will earn as a Member of the U.S. Senate in a 6-year period. If that is campaign reform, Members of the Senate have a different idea of reform from that of the junior Senator from Alabama.

Mr. President, the distinguished former Senator from Delaware, Mr. John J. Williams, had a most distinguished career in the U.S. Senate for some 24 years, I believe. He was such a high-minded and able Senator, he was such a man of integrity and nobility of purpose, that he was known for many years as the conscience of the U.S. Senate, and he retired from the Senate voluntarily at the peak of his career. I heard him on one occasion, not on the Senate floor, explain that he had proposed a constitutional amendment that no Member of Congress should take the oath of office as a Member of Congress after he reached the age of 65.

In other words, if he were 64 at the time and took the oath of office, he might finish out his term; but after he reached his 65th birthday—I could be wrong on the date; it could have been 66 or 67, but I believe it was 65—he would no longer be eligible to commence a term in Congress.

He stated that while that amendment never did get anywhere in the Senate, even though it was not agreed to, he felt bound by its provisions inasmuch as he had proposed it. It takes a mighty big man to adopt that attitude. It takes a man of great integrity, integrity one has to admire. So, having served four terms in the Senate, and having passed the age of 65, he did not feel that he should ask the people of Delaware to return him to the Senate, as I feel certain they would have done overwhelmingly, and he retired from the Senate. So certainly he would take an objective view; he would not have a biased view of an issue pending before the Senate.

But this great man, this conscience of the U.S. Senate, has written an article which appeared in the Reader's Digest in March 1974.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have this article printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, former Senator Williams has made five suggestions as to reform of the election process. I believe that Members of the Senate might profit by reading this article and they might profit at this time if I were to read excerpts from the article. The article is entitled "After Watergate, A Plan to Control Campaign Bankrolling." A man known for years as the conscience of the Senate proposes five essential steps to remove the for sale sign from the U.S. Government."

I have heard language like that on the floor of the Senate, that that was the status of affairs in this country. I would hate to think that were true. Let us see what he suggests. Possibly he has a public financing plan to suggest. I did not think he would when I first picked up the magazine and read the article. On reading the article, I find he does not make that suggestion. His first suggestion is to shorten the campaign:

> Political campaigns cost so much, in part, because they last so long.

Well, the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WEICKER) had a plan to shorten the campaign. His amendment did many other things, but I do believe Members of the Senate might be willing to vote to shorten campaigns. As a matter of fact, I believe last year we did pass a bill to shorten the campaign by providing the primary must be held closer to the time of election. That was a good measure, but also in the House and Senate races, campaigns should be shortened. They last too long. There is too much apathy and there is too much boredom. I suggest that is why the sponsors of the bill try to create a $15 million fund for these various candidates for the Presidential nomination, so that they can shake some of the boredom and apathy out of the people and send up a lot of balloons, have a lot of girls dancing, with bands playing, parades, and the like paid for by the taxpayers, of course.

We need to remove some of the apathy from Federal campaigns. I believe the suggestion by Senator Williams to shorten the campaign would do that. I would hope the manager of the bill might offer an amendment to the bill that would accomplish that purpose. I do not believe he feels that the provisions of the bill are so sacrosanct they cannot be amended, although I admit he has not favored the amendments the Senator from Alabama has offered.

I do believe there are amendments he would agree to.

The article states further:

The custom of prolonged campaigning originated at a time when much of the country was sparsely populated and a candidate had to travel by train or even on horseback for many months to communicate with the electorate. This tradition has been made obsolete by the jet airplane, television and other mass media. Yet our campaigns still drag on needlessly, consuming vast amounts of money and providing endless repetition.

I recall that after President Eisenhower once spoke in my state of Delaware, I complimented him on his speech. "Well, Senator," he replied, "the first time I made that speech, I thought it was pretty good. The next ten times I made it, I thought it was okay. Now I've made it so many times I think it's terrible."

I doubt that there is a politician alive who has not felt that way or who could not tell the people all he knows and thinks in two or three months. Thus, I believe that Congress should fix a uniform, nationwide date for the primaries and nominating conventions affecting all federal offices. By commencing the primary campaigns in early August, and the general-election campaigns in early October, we would at once sharply lower the cost of politics. At the same time, we would improve the quality of political discourse and heighten public interest in it.

That is a most constructive suggestion made by the distinguished former Senator from Delaware, Mr. John J. Williams.

I continue to read from the article, and this, in some respects, has been discussed on the floor:

"2. Grant free television time and mailing rights."

The distinguished Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH), I believe, has in mind offering amendments that would carry out these suggestions of his former colleague, Senator Williams.

Candidates in the seven Congressional districts in and around Detroit usually pay about $2000 for one minute of prime network television time. With costs in other metropolitan areas—New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, Philadelphia—even higher, it is not surprising that candidates for federal posts had to spend $32 million for TV and $28 million for radio in 1972.

In urging free time for legitimate candidates, it is important to recognize that television and radio stations exist and make handsome profits because they have been given public property—namely, transmission channels, of which there are a limited number. So it seems to me only fair that the stations partially repay the public at election time by providing bona-fide candidates with the means of free communication of their political views.

Then, skipping ahead, and the entire article will be printed in the RECORD, he goes on to say:

3. Get Big Business and Big Labor out of political bankrolling. The law has long recognized, in theory at least, that it is wrong to allow corporations and unions to try to buy votes through political donations. As far back as 1907, Congress prohibited business contributions and unsecured loans by banks for political purposes, a ban that was reaffirmed by laws enacted in 1925 and 1971. Congress applied the same prohibition to unions in 1943 and 1947. But corporations and unions—as well as both major political parties—have flouted the intent of these prohibitions with virtual impunity.

Mr. President, I submit that that is what the amendment I have offered, No. 1059, would do. It would make small contributors the backbone of political financing.

While reducing the costs of campaigns—

He is talking about suggestions he has made that would reduce the cost of campaigns. I do not see that this bill would reduce any costs—

Make small contributors the backbone of political financing. While reducing the costs of campaigns, we should endeavor to spread the legitimate costs that do remain among as many citizens as possible.

So, Mr. President, I have proposed a limitation for House and Senate races of $100. Say a candidate got 2,000 individuals in his State to comply with the limit of $100. That would provide $200,000 in a primary. Bear in mind that this amendment does not remove the Federal subsidy. The Federal Government would then match that with another $200,000. That would provide $400,000 for a candidate in a primary.

That is over 10 times what the Senator from Alabama would spend in the primary this year in his home State. But all he would have to do would be to get 2,000 people to make a contribution of $100, and he would have a fund of $400,000. Does he want more than that? This is the primary; it is not the general election.

It certainly is not beyond the realm of the possible or likelihood that this provision, if adopted, would change the political climate of this country by putting campaign financing in the hands of people who would contribute $100 or less to House or Senate races and $250 or less in Presidential races, still carrying forward the matching feature.

If this amendment were adopted, we could follow it with an amendment that would cut the 15 cents per person of voting age down to 10 cents per person of voting age in the general election, and in the primary cut it down to 7½ cents from the 10 cents per person of voting age.

Senator WILLIAMS said, and I believe this is the best af the five suggestions that he made:

Make small contributions the backbone of political financing.

That is not what this bill does. This bill permits contributions of up to $3,000 per person. For a man and his wife, it would be $6,000, and I daresay they would find other ways to make $3,000 contributions.

Technically, present law makes it illegal for anyone to give a candidate more than $5,000. However, a donor may contribute to unlimited numbers of local committees established solely to funnel money to a candidate.

As I pointed out at the start of my remarks——

Thus, big contributors continue to supply a disproportionate share of campaign funds.

I believe if the word ever got around in this country that elections were being financed by people who could not contribute more than $250 to a presidential race, and $100 to a race for the Senate or the House, we would have a whole lot more interest being taken in our political campaigns and in our election process and in the operation of government generally. The people would feel that they have an interest in a part of the election process.

Mr. President, I believe this amendment is an amendment that should receive widespread support throughout the country, and I would like to see a vote on it, but I feel that we ought to wait overnight for a vote on this amendment. One amendment the Senator from Alabama offered last week in order to accommodate the leadership. The Senator from Alabama agreed to bring it up. There was no opportunity to test the feeling of the people throughout the country. Senators made their decision on the spur of the moment, and the amendment was defeated after having received 36 votes. That was an amendment which provided that no Member of the 93d Congress would be eligible to receive any Federal matching funds for a presidential nomination campaign for the presidential term starting January 20, 1977, which is the next term, of course. That amendment, if adopted, would have prevented any Member of the House or any Member of the Senate from receiving any Federal subsidy to aid his campaign for the nomination of either of the two major parties for President in 1976. It is clearly an amendment that should have received widespread support, because it is not right for Members of this Congress to set up a brand new scheme to draw money from the public treasury when they will benefit from such subsidy.

And if that amendment had been discussed for some 2 or 3 days, I believe it would have received a larger vote.

So, Mr. President, I believe that this amendment, cutting down the $3,000 down to $250 for Presidential nomination campaigns and to $100 for House and Senate primary and general elections, is a most important amendment and one that should receive the careful consideration of all Members of the Senate. I only wish that more Senators were present to head this matter being discussed.

Let us read on:

Recognizing that a candidate should not become beholden to a comparatively few large donors, Congress is currently considering a proposal to have the federal government finance campaigns for national office. Worthy as the aims of this proposal are, I think such a plan is both undesirable and impractical.

That reminds me, Mr. President, of something the Washington Post has to say about this plan. They did not think much of the primary plan. Let us see what they said. I do not usually quote the Washington Post. However, I think their comment here is rather interesting. This is from the lead editorial of March 26, speaking of S. 372, a bill which I voted for in the Senate, as did most Senators, since the bill passed by a vote of 82 to 8. The lead editorial in the Washington Post of that date, speaking of the bill, though not by name, had this to say:

. . . thus the Senate last summer sent the House a very solid bill to curb private giving and spending and to strengthen the enforcement of the elections laws. And today the Senate begins debate on a very ambitious bill to extend public financing to all federal primary and general-election campaigns.

. . . The problem with the latest Senate bill is that it tries to do too much, too soon, and goes beyond what is either feasible or workable. For one thing, the bill provides for full public financing of congressional general-election campaigns, and that is clearly indigestible in the House this year, since the House leadership even chokes on the more moderate matching-grant approach embodied in the Anderson-Udall bill.

That goes along with my suggestion that we ought to try to wait for the House to send us a bill and let us tack our provisions on and then let it go to conference. As the editorial suggests, this plan is indigestible in the House this year since the House leadership even chokes on the more moderate matching-grant approach embodied in the Anderson-Udall bill.

I continue to read from the editorial:

The more serious defects in the Senate bill involve the inclusion of primaries.

That is one of the things that the Senator from Alabama has been trying to bear down on.

I continue to read from the editorial:

That is one of the things that the Senator from Alabama has been trying to bear down on.

I continue to read from the editorial:

The more serious defects in the Senate bill involve the inclusion of primaries. No aspect of the federal elections process is more motley and capricious than the present steeplechase of presidential primaries.

That is pretty rough langauge about our friends who go out seeking the presidential nomination. And we have some of those in this body, although they are not here right now. However, they are Members of this body.

I continue to read from the editorial:

No aspect of the Federal elections process is more motley and capricious than the present steeplechase of presidential primaries.

That is what the Washington Post thinks about this question of the primaries.

I continue to read from the editorial:

Injecting even partial public funding into this process, without rationalizing it in any other way, kames little sense As for congressional primaries, they are so varied in size, cost and significance among the states that no single system of public support seems justifiable without much more careful thought.

So I say, "Amen" to that phase of the editorial from the Washington Post.

Mr. President, I was reminded of that editorial by the article written by former Senator Williams.

I read again from the article by former Senator Williams:

Worthy as the aims of this proposal are, I think such a plan is both undesirable and impracticable. For one thing, Federal financing would make political parties unresponsive to the people. Guaranteed millions of dollars from the public treasury, a party would pursue extremist or outworn aims year after year simply because it would not have to go to the people for financial support.

And there is a much more important point. In the general elections, if we do deprive the people of their right to make contributions, we would just say that the taxpayer is going to pay it all and the people do not have to participate and that we do not need their money. How much interest is a member of the public going to take in the election then.

There is enough apathy already. There is enough disinterest already in the political process without a bill of this sort that would make for more apathy and more disinterest.

I read again from the article:

In areas that are predominantly Democratic or Republican, candidates of the less-favored party would receive tax funds vastly disproportionate to their popular support.

That is another good point—in areas that are predominantly Democratic or Republican, candidates of the less-favored party would receive tax funds vastly disproportionate to their popular support. In other words, if the Democrats have 80 percent of a district and the Republicans have 20 percent, then both candidates would get the same amount of the public subsidy even though the people in the area are predominantly the other way. I continue to read from the article:

The federal-financing proposal also seeks to impose a ceiling on overall campaign expenditures by limiting the amount a candidate may spend and by restricting individual donations to $100. In reality, this subsidy scheme could easily lead to even costlier campaigns, with the federal treasury simply adding on another layer of money.

Incidentally, that has been the system of Federal programs in the country. They start out small. There is one program—I will not say which one it was—that was just added as an afterthought to an appropriation bill and I heard Senators discussing it. I believe they put in some $40 million in this particular program.

In a matter of some 6 or 7 years, it had increased and mushroomed up to a billion dollars; and it was just put on as an afterthought on an appropriation bill.

So that could well—certainly not to that extent, but an increase in the program would certainly come about. They are already talking about doubling the amount of the checkoff, doubling the amount of the income tax credit, doubling the amount of the deduction. So, Mr. President, we could look for a further escalation of this Federal subsidy if it ever becomes law—this additional Federal subsidy, because, as I have already pointed out, we already had subsidization to a certain point.

While candidates themselves could not exceed specified limits, nothing would prevent so-called 'public interest" organizations from using their own money to promote politicians of their choice. Nor could a wealthy officeseeker be kept from promoting himself before he officially became a candidate.

I notice that the chairman is making some notes from time to time. I would like, at some later date, to be informed as to just when a campaign gets started and when the limit of overall expenditures starts applying.

As an alternative to straight federal financing, I think we should adopt an idea first advocated by President Kennedy. Its objective is to stimulate myriad small contributions, which would leave candidates unobligated to a few big donors. Such stimulus could be provided by allowing taxpayers a 50-percent tax credit on donations up to, say, $300. Thus, if a man earning $10,000 and a man earning $100,000 a year each contributed $300, the two of them would be treated equally—each would receive a tax debate of $150.

Well, that is a little higher than I feel they should go, but that is moving in the right direction, anyway. That is the right plan. And I understand that the distinguished Senator from North Carolina (Mr. ERVIN), joined by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), on tomorrow will offer an amendment that would strike title I and substitute in lieu thereof a provision enlarging on the amount of the credit; it might be this very same figure—I rather believe it is—of $300.

Simultaneously, to discourage large contributions, Congress should bar a candidate from receiving money through more than one committee—

I think that is certainly a step in the right direction. Instead of having 200 or 300 committees, just have one. Just have one, whose books have to be audited. Just have one committee, so that these contributions cannot be split up and lost sight of, and come within the gift tax exemption. I think that is fine, to have only one committee.

Congress should bar a candidate from receiving money through more than one committee and prohibit anyone from giving a candidate more than $300—with stiff tax penalties and jail terms for those caught cheating. Candidacies founded upon the spontaneous, truly voluntary support of many small contributors would be the most likely to produce the best political representation for all the people.

Item No. 5, suggested by Senator Williams:

Enforce the campaign-funding laws. If properly enforced, existing statutes are, by and large, adequate to deal with the individual instances of dishonesty that will always be with us. Thus, no new laws were necessary during the past two years to successfully prosecute former Vice President Spiro T.

Agnew; Sen. Daniel Brewster of Maryland; Representatives Cornelius Gallagher of New Jersey and John Dowdy of Texas; and former Illinois Governor Otto Kerner. However, too often existing laws have not been enforced.

To provide for enforcement of the reforms that inevitably will be enacted, Congress should establish a federal-election commission composed equally of Democrats and Republicans.

This bill does provide an independent election commission made up pretty well as Senator Williams suggests.

The assurance that future scandals will not be covered up, no matter who is involved, will of itself help revive public confidence.

Watergate has damaged the country, and it would be foolish to pretend otherwise. And beyond Watergate we see flaws, inadequacies and multiplying problems in many sectors of our society. But, for all its defects, our democracy is still worth preserving and improving. Thus, it is vital that the Congress begin now to cleanse our politics and thereby to revitalize our faith in the democratic process. If the men presently in Congress do not act convincingly and effectively in the coming months, then at the polls next November all of us can exercise the old-fashioned American recourse of replacing them with men who will.

These are five excellent suggestions made by former Senator John J. Williams, of Delaware, who served with distinuction in this body for 24 years, and who became known as the conscience of the Senate.

Of these five suggestions, not a single one of them calls for public financing of elections in the manner provided by this bill. He does suggest added credit to be allowed to individual taxpayers for their contributions, and he does advocate requiring free broadcasts over television and radio at times.

Mr. President, the Rules Committee has provided a most valuable paper indicating the proposed candidates' expenditure limitations based on the U.S. population figures as of July 1, 1973.

I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the Congressional Digest of February 1974 contains an interesting history of the public financing legislation, beginning on page 35. The foreword points out:

Viewed by some Members of the Congress as the most complex subject which the newly-convened Second Session is likely to face is that of how U.S. election campaigns are financed. One aspect of the subject which will receive particular attention is whether, as some Senators and Representatives have proposed, some system should be adopted of using Federal tax revenues to provide significant financing to campaigns for Congress and for the Presidency.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have this article, beginning on page 35 until its conclusion, printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONTROVERSY IN CONGRESS OVER PROPOSED FEDERAL CAMPAIGN FINANCING

FOREWORD

Viewed by some Members of the Congress as the most complex subject which the newly-convened Second Session is likely to face is that of how U.S. election campaigns are financed. One aspect of the subject which will receive particular attention is whether, as some Senators and Representatives have proposed, some system should be adopted of using Federal tax revenues to provide significant financing to campaigns for Congress and for the Presidency.

Over the years since 1910 (see page 36), Congress has enacted a number of laws seeking to regulate campaign financing. The 92nd Congress took several far-reaching actions in this regard, passing in 1971 the so-called "tax checkoff" plan of presidential campaign financing and—effective in 1972—a comprehensive "Federal Elections Campaign Act" (see page 37) requiring, among other things, detailed disclosure of both contributions to and expenditures by candidates for Federal office.

Notwithstanding these developments, efforts have been mounted in the present 93rd Congress to legislate further in the area of campaign financing. As will be seen in the article on page 40, pending before both House and Senate are a number of bills touching upon diverse areas of campaign reform, with a majority concerned in some degree at least with the question of campaign financing.

Although some Members express the view that the detailed statutes enacted within the past few years will, if properly enforced, adequately serve to prevent major campaign financing abuses, majorities in both House and Senate have indicated a willingness to consider further the subject of general campaign financing reform.

Sharp controversy has arisen, however, over the question of public financing of political campaigns. The present tax check-off system which makes funds available to the major parties' presidential candidates for their general election campaigns was, prior to its 1971 passage, debated and rejected on several occasions since first being proposed in the mid-1960's. In the First Session of the present 93rd Congress, although hearings touching upon public campaign financing were held in both houses (see page 41), the one concerted effort to secure adoption of a public campaign financing law died in the face of a Senate filibuster by opponents of such financing.

Proponents of public financing cite the heavy increase in campaign costs in recent years, a development attributed in part to inflation but, in much greater measure, to the mounting use of expensive mass media, particularly television, in campaigns conducted in even the smallest constituencies. Reliance on private financing, it is argued makes recipient candidates less than wholly independent on legislative questions affecting individuals and interests contributing substantial funds. It is further argued that lack of access to the financing required today to run for public office impairs the democratic process by foreclosing such opportunity to many worthy candidates who lack the financing required to mount a campaign.

Opponents, on the other hand, have characterized the effort to secure campaign financing from tax revenues a "Treasury raid," unnecessary in an open and affluent society. The fear is frequently voiced that public financing would place the allocation of campaign funds to all parties in the hands of the one incumbent national party—an arrangement potentially perilous to the free operation of the American party system.

In the coming months further consideration and debate on the subject have been promised by the leadership of both houses of Congress, with omnibus measures including both general reform provisions and public financing features expected to be included in any proposals finally presented to the respective houses for a vote. How they will fare in the political climate of a congressional election year, in the face of resumed "Watergate" hearings, and in the aftermath of the highly-charged political events of 1973, remains to be seen.

EXHIBIT 1

CAMPAIGN FINANCING REFORM

(By Senator John J. Williams)

It will probably be a long time before we can fully assess the impact of Watergate and related scandals on American life. Indeed, at this point we cannot foresee what more may yet emerge from continuing investigations. But from the squalid evidence already visible, it is clear that political corruption in this country is not just a moral problem. It is one that imperils the very survival of our democracy.

There is, of course, no magic solution to the problem of corruption, and we should be wary of any political nostrum that purports to offer one. But the recent scandals do illuminate one area where reforms are both essential and possible. For the reprehensible, clandestine political acts connected with Watergate were financed and made possible by an excess of campaign donations, many of them secretly and illicitly obtained. Equally important, the flow of massive contributions into both parties has created the impression among millions of Americans that the government of the United States can be bought.

To restore public confidence in the integrity of government, we need to end the dependency of our candidates on special-interest contributions. This we can do to a significant extent by reducing the costs and changing the methods of campaign financing. I believe there are a number of reasonable steps that can be taken toward this goal.

1. Shorten the campaign. Political campaigns cost so much, in part, because they last so long. The custom of prolonged campaigning originated at a time when much of the country was sparsely populated and a candidate had to travel by train or even on horseback for many months to communicate with the electorate. This tradition has been made obsolete by the jet airplane, television and other mass media. Yet our campaigns still drag on needlessly, consuming vast amounts of money and providing endless repetition.

I recall that after President Eisenhower once spoke in my state of Delaware, I complimented him on his speech. "Well, Senator," he replied, "the first time I made that speech, I thought it was pretty good. The next ten times I made it, I thought it was okay. Now I've made it so many times I think it's terrible."

I doubt that there is a politician alive who has not felt that way or who could not tell the people all he knows and thinks in two or three months. Thus, I believe that Congress should fix a uniform, nationwide date for the primaries and nominating conventions affecting all federal offices. By commencing the primary campaigns in early August, and the general-election campaigns in early October, we would at once sharply lower the cost of politics. At the same time, we would improve the quality of political discourse and heighten public interest in it.

2. Grant free television time and mailing rights. Candidates in the seven Congressional districts in and around Detroit usually pay about $2,000 for one minute of prime network television time. With costs in other metropolitan areas—New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, Philadelphia—even higher, it is not surprising that candidates for federal posts had to spend $32 million for TV and $28 million for radio in 1972.

In urging free time for legitimate candidates, it is important to recognize that television and radio stations exist and make handsome profits because they have been given public property—namely, transmission channels, of which there are a limited number. So it seems to me only fair that the stations partially repay the public at election time by providing bona-fide candidates with the means of free communication of their political views. At the same time, the present law, which requires stations to give equal time to anyone claiming to be a candidate, whether he has any serious credentials or not, should be repealed.

Congress should then promulgate criteria by which state-election officials can certify bona-fide candidates for national office. It should also stipulate how much time stations must allot to them. This free access to broadcast media would greatly diminish what is often the largest item in a campaign budget.

The dependency of candidates on outside contributions could be further lessened by allowing them to mail one or two political statements to all voters free of charge. Presently prevailing printing and mailing costs make such mailings prohibitive. A Senate candidate running in California would most likely need to spend at least $1.1 million to reach every registered voter in the state. In Ohio, the total would be more than $500,000; in New Jersey, $400,000; in Georgia $250,000.

Incumbent Congressmen and Senators are already permitted to make mass mailings of "non-political" material that promotes their re-election efforts. By giving challengers limited mailing privileges, we would level the political scales now tipped in favor of those in office. In Great Britain, the practice of awarding candidates mailing privileges—and free television time—has proved both workable and effective.

3. Get Big Business and Big Labor out of political bankrolling. The law has long recognized, in theory at least, that it is wrong to allow corporations and unions to try to buy votes through political donations. As far back as 1907, Congress prohibited business contributions and unsecured loans by banks for political purposes, a ban that was reaffirmed by laws enacted in 1925 and 1971. Congress applied the same prohibition to unions in 1943 and 1947. But corporations and unions—as well as both major political parties—have flouted the intent of these prohibitions with virtual impunity.

As of last December, for example, at least eight executives had publicly admitted that their corporations made illegal contributions to the 1972 Nixon campaign. But Democrats as well as Republicans have shared in such political largess. Dairy lobbyists who gave $100,000 to the Republicans in 1969 also passed out hefty contributions to prominent Democrats in a position to influence Congressional legislation affecting dairy interests.

As for the unions, many, by a variety of measures, extract "voluntary contributions" from their members. These fixed "contributions," regularly deducted from each member's paycheck along with his dues, go into political funds controlled by union bosses. In the 1968 and 1972 elections, millions of rank-and-filers disagreed with the political candidates subsidized by their dollars. But they had no voice in the matter. Unions further aid favored candidates by financing "political education" and "voter registration" drives. Although nonpartisan in name, such campaigns are actually ultra-partisan because they are conducted only in those areas and among those voters known to favor the union leaders' candidates. Author Theodore H. White notes that in 1968 unions registered 4.6 million voters, distributed 115 million political leaflets, supplied 72,225 house-to-house canvassers, and on Election Day deployed 94,500 volunteers for political purposes.

To be sure political activity—including genuinely voluntary contributions—should be encouraged among all citizens. But Congress should enact stringent new laws which effectively bar corporate and union contributions in any form.

4. Make small contributors the backbone of political financing. While reducing the costs of campaigns, we should endeavor to spread the legitimate costs that do remain among as many citizens as possible. Technically, present law makes it illegal for anyone to give a candidate more than $5000. However, a donor may contribute to unlimited numbers of local committees established solely to funnel money to a candidate. Thus, big contributors continue to supply a disproportionate share of campaign funds.

Recognizing that candidates should not become beholden to a comparatively few large donors, Congress is currently considering a proposal to have the federal government finance campaigns for national office. Worthy as the aims of this proposal are, I think such a plan is both undesirable and impractical. For one thing, federal financing would make political parties unresponsive to the people. Guaranteed millions of dollars from the public treasury, a party would pursue extremist or outworn aims year after year simply because it would not have to go to the people for financial support. In areas that are predominantly Democratic or Republican, candidates of the less-favored party would receive tax funds vastly disproportionate to their popular support.

The federal-financing proposal also seeks to impose a ceiling on overall campaign expenditures by limiting the amount a candidate may spend and by restricting individual donations to $100. In reality, this subsidy scheme could easily lead to even costlier campaigns, with the federal treasury simply adding on another layer of money. While candidates themselves could not exceed specified limits, nothing would prevent so-called "public interest" organizations from using their own money to promote politicians of their choice. Nor could a wealthy office-seeker be kept from promoting himself before he officially became a candidate.

As an alternative to straight federal financing, I think we should adopt an idea first advocated by President Kennedy. Its objective is to stimulate myriad small contributions, which would leave candidates unobligated to a few big donors. Such stimulus could be provided by allowing taxpayers a 50-percent tax credit on donations up to, say, $300. Thus, if a man earning $10,000 and a man earning $100,000 a year each contributed $300, the two of them would be treated equally—each would receive a tax rebate of $150.

Simultaneously, to discourage large contributions, Congress should bar a candidate from receiving money through more than one committee and prohibit anyone from giving a candidate more than $3000—with stiff tax penalties and jail terms for those caught cheating. Candidacies founded upon the spontaneous, truly voluntary support of many small contributors would be the most likely to produce the best political representation for all the people.

5. Enforce the campaign-funding laws. If properly enforced, existing statutes are, by and large, adequate to deal with the individual instances of dishonesty that will always be with us. Thus, no new laws were necessary during the past two years to successfully prosecute former Vice President Spiro T. Agnew; Sen. Daniel Brewster of Maryland; Representatives Cornelius Gallagher of New Jersey and John Dowdy of Texas; and former Illinois Governor Otto Kerner. However, too often existing laws have not been enforced.

To provide for enforcement of the reforms that inevitably will be enacted, Congress should establish a federal-election commission composed equally of Democrats and Republicans. The assurance that future scandals will not be covered up, no matter who is involved, will of itself help revive public confidence.

WATERGATE has damaged the country, and it would be foolish to pretend otherwise. And beyond Watergate we see flaws, inadequacies and multiplying problems in many sectors of our society. But, for all its defects, our democracy is still worth preserving and improving. Thus, it is vital that the Congress begin now to cleanse our politics and thereby to revitalize our faith in the democratic process. If the men presently in Congress do not act convincingly and effectively in the coming months, then at the polls next November all of us can exercise the old-fashioned American recourse of replacing them with men who will.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, recapitulating the action that has been taken on some of the amendments which have been acted on here in the Senate, the first amendment that was offered was an amendment by the Senator from Alabama that would have stricken title I of the bill. The bill contained at that time, I believe, five titles, one of the titles being the public financing title. The first amendment that was offered sought to strike that whole title from the bill.

However, it was defeated. The theory of the amendment was that the proper approach to campaign financing and the limitation on campaign financing should be to deduct the overall amount of the permissible campaign expenditures and to limit the amount of campaign contributions.

Strict regulation of Federal elections in the private sector has not been tried as completely and as fully as should be the case, because present law is completely inadequate in this area.

In the first place, it does not place any limitation on contributions, the thought being, I assume, that full disclosure of all contributions would be regulation enough. But this has not been the case, nor were campaign expenditures properly regulated. I believe, under present law, as to media advertising only, that is, radio, television, newspaper, and I believe billboards, the expenditures in that area are limited, the overall limit being 10 cents per person of voting age in the political subdivision from which the candidate runs.

And not more than 60 percent to go to radio and television and the balance to other forms of media advertising. But no limitation whatsoever was placed on the large number of other forms of expenditures, and no limitation was placed on the amount that could be spent for a campaign manager, so to speak, and no limitation was placed on the amount of expenditures for mass mailing literature, or for the printing and distribution of brochures and cards.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. SYMINGTON. I am trying to make my own plans. May I ask the Senator if he plans to have a vote today?

Mr. ALLEN. I respond to the distinguished Senator from Missouri by saying that I would like to see the amendment carried over until tomorrow and, at such time as we could reach an agreement to that effect, I would be glad to see the Senate recess for the day. But I feel that this amendment should go over until tomorrow rather than to be voted on, especially since we do not appear to have a quorum of Senators present on the floor, and Senators are refraining from asking for quorum calls hoping that other Members of the Senate might come in, so that we could discuss the matter. But the Senator from Alabama is not insisting on a vote. If an agreement could be reached that we vote at a given time tomorrow, the Senator from Alabama would be glad to yield the floor.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Then the chances are that there will be no vote today?

Mr. ALLEN. I believe we need to vote on this tomorrow.

Mr. SYMINGTON. I thank the Senator from Alabama very much.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama was discussing the inadequacies of present law regarding campaign expenditures and he pointed out that there is no limitation, as he recalls, in areas other than media advertising, that limitation being 10 cents per person of voting age, I believe, with not more than 60 percent of it going to the media and 40 percent to other forms of expenditures. But he pointed out that this leaves so many other areas for expenditure that are not limited, as in all traveling expense, all lodging expense, all overhead, all payrolls, all printing, all stationery, all telephones, all automobile expense—no limitation at all on any of that. So there should be a limit on that. I am glad that the present bill does increase this overall amount to—I say increase it—I am not glad about the increase, but I am glad they made it apply to all forms of advertising. I would prefer to have the 10 cents per person of voting age, but the Rules Committee has raised it up to 15 cents per person of voting age in a general election and 10 cents in the primary. This Senate bill adds the primaries, the House and Senate primaries. They were not covered in the original rider that was offered here last year and that failed of passage.

So the present law is inadequate; and the Senate last year, realizing that fact, passed a bill on July 30, 1973, by a vote of 82 to 8 and sent it to the House, where it still reposes. That bill did limit campaign contributions to $3,000. It provided that no cash contributions in excess of $50 could be made. A separate election commission was set up. All these were constructive proposals; and in time, I daresay, the House will act on this measure and send it back to the Senate.

The significant feature of S. 372 was that it provided for financing Federal elections in the private sector. No mention was made of public financing whatsoever. No extension of what we already have was provided for. As a matter of fact, the Senate, while this was still under consideration in the Senate, defeated a public financing amendment by a vote, I believe, of 52 to 40. It defeated the Scott-Kennedy amendment at that time, because it proposed Federal financing. That was turned down; and a pure bill—that is, a bill not infected with the public financing feature—went over to the House.

Now, Mr. President, this whole theory has been changed. No longer, apparently, do some Senators want to keep financing all campaigns in the private sector. They want to add public financing. They want to turn this bill for Federal campaign financing over to the public Treasury. That is their answer to the lessons, if any, of Watergate.

Reform the procedure? Greatly restrict contributions and expenditures? Provide for full disclosure? Is that enough? No. You have to hand the bill to the taxpayer. You have to let the taxpayer pick up the bill. If that is the answer to Watergate, if that is all the ingenuity and resourcefulness the Senate has, to present this multihundred million dollar bill to the taxpayer, we do not have too much originality.

When the Watergate Committee was set up some 15 months ago or so, the resolution provided that the committee would investigate these various happenings and make recommendations to the Senate as to what changes should be made in the election procedure. They are going to come out with a report, either this month or next month, making recommendations. I do not believe anyone has to be a seer or a soothsayer to predict that their recommendations are not going to embody any public financing proposals. Why do I say that? It is not that I am a member of the committee. It is not that I have made inquiry as to what recommendations they are going to make. All one need do is to check the votes of the Senators on the Watergate Committee. By checking the votes closely, or just casually, one will find that five of the seven members do not favor public financing. They believe that there are better answers to our problems, and better solutions, than just presenting a great, big, fat half-billion dollar bill—and by "bill" I mean statement of account—to the taxpayers. They think there are better solutions than that, and I agree with them. They are voting against these public financing provisions, because they know that is not a true reform. If you reform something, you improve it, you change it for the better, and you do not just give up and say, "Let the taxpayer pay the bill."

I note that pending at this time are amendments by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina (Mr. ERVIN) and the distinguished Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER) to knock out title I, the public financing feature, and to substitute in lieu thereof a tax credit provision allowing the taxpayer a credit on his political contribution. It may be asked, Why not just subsidize the election? This would give the taxpayer the right to funnel his own funds to such candidate as he sees fit. The plan embraced in this bill, S. 3044, requires the taxpayer to pay for the campaigns of candidates with whose views and with whose philosophy he is in entire disagreement.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ALLEN. I am delighted to yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. TOWER. The 24th amendment prohibits the imposition of a poll tax or the payment of any other tax as a qualification for voting. I wonder what the Senator might think of perhaps amending the Constitution and applying the user theory here, to the extent that every voter pays a fee and that fee is used to provide the fund for public funding of the campaign. In that way the people who do not choose to vote or participate will not get soaked for the expense of the campaign.

Mr. ALLEN. That is an interesting proposal, but I do not think I would submit such a proposal or be in favor of it.

Mr. TOWER. I doubt that I would either, but it seems to me that would be a fair way, rather than to take money from the general revenues of the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. It may be, but it does not offer too much appeal to me.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield when he completes his thoughts?

Mr. ALLEN. That will take quite a while.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the Senator yield now?

Mr. ALLEN. I am delighted to yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Alabama does not desire to vote on his amendment tonight.

Mr. ALLEN. That is the request made by the Senator from Alabama; that it be voted on tomorrow.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Would the Senator care to suggest a time?

Mr. ALLEN. I have no suggestion at all; any time the distinguished majority leader would suggest.

Mr. MANSFIELD. How about 12:30 p.m. tomorrow?

Mr. ALLEN. That is all right, or an earlier time.

Mr. MANSFIELD. How about 12 o'clock noon?

Mr. ALLEN. That suits me.

Mr. MANSFIELD. We will come in at 11 a.m. I wonder if the Senator, in view of the informal agreement just made, would consider the possibility of continuing his remarks tomorrow in the free period left, so that the distinguished Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH) could offer his amendment this afternoon, on which amendment there is a time limitation of ½ hour.

Mr. ALLEN. I have no objection. I wonder if the distinguished majority leader would incorporate in his request a little time for further discussion when we might possibly have a greater number of Senators present.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Senator from Montana wishes to ask the Chair what Senators have been recognized under special orders for tomorrow, if any.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are no special orders for the recognition of Senators tomorrow.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 11 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate adjourns tonight, it stand in adjournment until 11 a.m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR PERIOD FOR THE TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS TOMORROW

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a brief period tomorrow for the conduct of morning business for not to exceed 15 minutes with a time limitation of 3 minutes attached thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR DIVISION OF TIME AND VOTE ON ALLEN AMENDMENT NO. 1059

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the time on the Allen amendment be equally divided between the distinguished Senator from Alabama who now has the floor, the author of the amendment (Mr. ALLEN), and the manager of the bill, the distinguished Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. And that the vote on the Allen amendment occur at the hour of 12 noon tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I express my appreciation to the distinguished Senator from Alabama for the agreement which has been reached.

CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I send to the desk a cloture motion and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The cloture motion having been presented under rule XXII, the Chair, without objection, directs the clerk to read the motion.

The assistant legislative clerk read the cloture motion, as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of Rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close the debate upon the pending bill S. 3044, a bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mike Mansfield, Warren G. Magnuson, James B. Pearson, Robert Dole, Hugh Scott, Clairborne Pell, Frank Church, Quentin N. Burdick, Marlow W. Cook, William Proxmire, Clifford P. Case, Henry M. Jackson, Daniel K. Inouye, Hubert H. Humphrey, Joseph R. Biden, Jr.,

Ted Stevens, Stuart Symington, Floyd K. Haskell, Birch Bayh, William D. Hathaway, Edmund S. Muskie, Jennings Randolph, Dick Clark, Jacob K. Javits.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the distinguished Senator for his remarks made in the first half of his statement about the Senator from Alabama. I appreciate his kindliness in that regard. I offer no thanks for his offering the cloture motion.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I am sure that the Senator from Alabama was not caught by surprise.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order at this time to ask for the yeas and nays on the Allen amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is before us.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I ask for the yeas and nays on the Allen amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there sufficient second? There is a sufficient second. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, again my thanks to the distinguished Senator from Alabama.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum pending the arrival of the distinguished Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ALLEN. May I first yield the floor?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to ask the distinguished Senator from Montana if in his unanimous-consent request he asks that the pending amendment be set aside so that there can be a discussion of the amendment by the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I did not. I appreciate the suggestion of the Chair. I make that suggestion at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Now, Mr. President, what is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is still the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I take it upon myself, with the approval of the acting Republican leader, to ask unanimous consent that the Roth amendment be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

The amendment is as follows:

TITLE VI—MAILING OF CAMPAIGN MATERIAL

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 601. For the purpose of this title—

(1) "candidate" means any legally qualified candidate for election who (A) meets the qualifications prescribed by the applicable laws to hold the office for which he is a candidate, and (B) is eligible under applicable State law to be voted for by the electorate directly or by means of delegates or electors;

(2) "Federal office" means the office of Senator or Representative;

(3) "Representative" means a Member of the House of Representatives, the Resident Commissioner from the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the Delegates from the District of Columbia, Guam, and the Virgin Islands;

(4) "general election" means any regularly scheduled or special election held for the purpose of electing a candidate to Federal office; and

(5) "State" means each State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and any territory or possession of the United States.

AUTHORIZATION

SEC. 602. (a) Each candidate for election to a Federal office in a general election is authorized to make three mailings of his campaign material, free of postage, to persons registered to vote—

(1) in the case of a candidate for election as Senator, in the State in which he seeks election; and

(2) in the case of a candidate for election as a Representative, in the district in which he seeks election.

(b) Campaign material of such a candidate may be mailed free of postage only if the material—

(1) is mailed not earlier than sixty days preceding the date of the general election in which the candidate seeks election;

(2) bears on the outside in the upper right-hand corner the words "Campaign Material"; and

(3) sent to each registered voter each mailing does not exceed sixteen ounces.

(c) There are authorized to be appropriated to the United States Postal Service an amount equal to the postage that would have been paid on the campaign material mailed in accordance with this section if this section had not been enacted. In determining such amount, the campaign material shall be considered matter mailed by a qualified nonprofit organization under section 4452(b) of title 39, United States Code, as such section existed on August 11, 1970.

LIMITING USE OF FRANKED MAIL

SEC. 603. Section 3210(a)(5)(D) of title 39, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out "or general"; and

(2) by inserting immediately after "runoff)", the following: "and less than one hundred and twenty days immediately before the date of any general election (whether regular, special, or runoff)".

PROHIBITION AGAINST OTHER MAILINGS

SEC. 604. (a) Except as authorized by section 602, no candidate for Federal office shall make a mass mailing of his campaign material less than one hundred and twenty days immediately before the date of a general election (whether regular, special, or runoff) in which he is a candidate.

(b) As used in this section, the term "mass mailing" shall mean mail matter the content of which is substantially identical but shall not apply to mailings—

(1) which are in direct response to inquiries or requests from the persons to whom the matter is mailed; or

(2) of news releases to the communications media.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum without the time consumed thereby being charged to either side on the Roth amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER TO HOLD TEMPORARILY AT THE DESK MESSAGE ON H.R. 12627 AND THE BILL

Mr. MANSFIELD. I understand this unanimous-consent request has been cleared on the Republican side.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when received from the House, the message on H.R. 12627 and the bill be held temporarily at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, would he amend the request so as not to charge the time to either the proponents or opponents of the Roth amendment?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I make that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER TO LAY UNFINISHED BUSINESS BEFORE THE SENATE TOMORROW

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow the unfinished business be laid before the Senate at the conclusion of the morning hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, without the time being taken out of anyone's time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceed to call the roll.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AUTHORIZATION FOR COMMITTEE ON LABOR AND PUBLIC WELFARE TO FILE REPORT ON S. 3203 UNTIL MIDNIGHT TONIGHT

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the report by the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare on S. 3203, to amend the National Labor Relations Act, may be filed by midnight tonight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. ROTH obtained the floor.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I ask unanimous consent that the time on the Senator's amendment run from the time of the recognition of the Senator from Delaware.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware is recognized.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1121.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is already before the Senate.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Ray Jacobsen, of my staff, be permitted the privilege of the floor during the consideration and votes on my pending amendment and others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I am today offering the first in a series of amendments which I plan to offer to S. 3044, the Federal Elections Campaign Act Amendments of 1974.

Before proceeding to explain this amendment, however, I am compelled to state my general views concerning campaign reform on which each of these amendments are built.

Without a doubt, there must be a reform of the current methods of conducting and financing political campaigns. These campaigns are too long, they are too expensive, they force a potential candidate to raise large amounts of money to purchase television time, make mass mailings, or travel throughout the Nation, his State, or his district.

The bill now under consideration, S. 3044, corrects several of the abuses associated with improper campaign activities. It limits the amount of money which any candidate can spend on behalf of his campaign. It limits the amount of funds which any particular person can contribute to a candidate's campaign. It requires each candidate to disclose the identity of his contributors and the amounts received by each donor. Moreover, an independent Federal Election Commission will be created by this bill to enforce the reporting and disclosure requirements of the 1971 Election Act and the penalties for violating these provisions have been increased.

Yet, in addition to these salutary provisions, S. 3044 goes one step further by authorizing the use of Federal funds to pay the costs of all future campaigns for Federal office. I have opposed the concept of "public financing" because I believe that it makes a fundamental change in campaign financing which diminishes each citizen's role in the political process.

As an alternative to "public financing," I have introduced legislation to allow each taxpayer to take a 50 percent tax credit for a political contribution of $150 by a single taxpayer or $300 on a joint return.

It has been estimated that public financing would cost $200 million in a Presidential election year while the Treasury Department says my tax credit approach will cost only $152 million. Through a combination of my proposal and the present dollar checkoff, it is my estimate that over $200 million will be available for the financing of all Federal elections in 1976.

I intend to present this proposal to the Senate Finance Committee when the Committee considers each of the tax-related provisions of S. 3044.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the "public financing" provisions of S. 3044, in reality, place more, rather than less, emphasis on the use of money in political campaigns.

In addition, these provisions may tend to separate the candidate from his constituency. For, once a candidate learns that he can tap the Federal Treasury for his campaign funds, he will no longer be encouraged to seek the maximum amount of personal contact with prospective voters.

Instead of carrying his campaign to the people through personal appearances or on television debates, a candidate will be encouraged to allow an elite group of specialists—such as "campaign consultants"—to manage his campaign by "packaging" the candidate through use of the latest Madison Avenue techniques.

In the future, slick, well-rehearsed "spot" announcements will become even more prevalent once "public financing" becomes law.

In order to give each citizen the knowledge which is a prerequisite to an informed exercise of the right to vote, I am offering two amendments to the Federal Election Campaign Act.

One amendment will amend the Communications Act of 1934 to direct the Federal Communications Commission to develop regulations to require television licensees to grant free air time, on an equitable basis, to candidates for Federal office. This will help equalize campaign resources.

The second amendment—and the one which I am today submitting for the Senate's consideration—will permit all candidates for congressional office, whether incumbents or challengers, to mail, at Government expense, three mass mailings of their campaign material to their potential constituents in the 60 days prior to a general election.

In exchange for the authorization to make three mass mailings during the final 60 days of the campaign period, all congressional candidates will be prohibited from making any mass mailings of their campaign literature within the 120 days immediately preceding a general election day. This provision is in accordance with S. 343, the bill presented by Senator BYRD of West Virginia and passed by the Senate last June which would shorten the campaign period to approximately 8 weeks.

Included in my amendment is a change in the laws governing the use of the franking privilege by Members of Congress. At present, no Member of Congress can make a mass mailing to his constituents during the 28 days prior to a general election in which he is a candidate. My amendment lengthens this time period to 120 days in order to place both an incumbent and a challenger on equal terms.

As used in my amendment, the term "mass mailings" includes literature, such as newsletters, which are substantially identical in appearance or content. It excludes mailings which are in response to persons who have written to the candidate during the campaign period. In addition the term does not include news releases sent by the candidate to the members of the press.

Mr. President, by giving each candidate the opportunity to mail, without postage, these mass mailings to potential voters, each candidate will be encouraged to present his or her views to those whom they seek to represent without incurring the large postage costs which are associated with large-scale mailings. By adopting this amendment, I believe the Senate will have made a substantial contribution toward reforming our present methods of campaigning for Federal office. I urge the Senate to adopt this amendment.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I recognize the objective of the Senator from Delaware. It is an excellent objective. I recognize also his thinking here, that it would eliminate abuses, while I feel compelled to oppose it. However, I believe the principal cost of three mass mailings of this sort to every registered voter would be substantial and should not be paid for by the Public Treasury. It actually could amount to more than the present 10-cent allowance in a primary or a 15-cent allowance in a general election. We are just checking now with the Post Office for the actual figures as to what it would cost. I think these are expenses that should be properly borne by the candidates and committees. And the way to handle it is to make sure that the frank is not abused. And this we have done by stretching out the present 30-day prohibition to make it 60 days. Those are my reasons for objecting to the Senator's amendment.

For that reason, and recognizing the objective and the merits of the Senator's arguments, I feel compelled to oppose the amendment.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I would like to make two or three observations with respect to my amendment.

As I stated, what I would like to see done is a deemphasis of money in the campaign rather than an emphasis on funds.

Of course, I feel that is the basic thrust and one of the basic criticisms that can be made about public financing and that what we are really saying is that public funds should continue to be a major factor in the conduct of the campaign of any candidate.

What I am trying to do through the series of amendments I am offering not only with respect to this bill, but also in legislation which I have introduced in the past and will propose in the Finance Committee is to deemphasize money and the use of funds.

I would say to the Senator from Rhode Island that these mass mailings would go third class and they would not require, as they do not on the House side, the cost of addressing. I do not mean that it will not cost some money to the Government, because it will, but it will not involve the great cost that is envisioned.

In any event, it provides in an equitable manner for a fair means toward all candidates, whether they be incumbents or not, to communicate with their voters in such a way as to help deemphasize the use of money and bring back the campaign of the people directly to the candidates themselves.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment be modified so as to provide for two, rather than three, mass mailings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is so modified.

Will the Senator from Delaware send his modification to the desk?

Mr. ROTH. Yes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and ask unanimous consent that the time be not charged to anyone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I have ascertained what the cost of third-class postage rates would be. The bulk rate is 32 cents a pound. Since this amendment, as modified, would provide for the sending of up to 2 pounds to each registered voter, or 64 cents, which would actually be more than six times the allowance for primaries or four times the allowance for general elections, I would be compelled more strongly than I had believed to oppose the amendment, because of the cost to the Government.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I would point out that those figures are, as I understand them, what the post office would charge. Is that correct?

Mr. PELL. That is what the post office charges; that is correct.

Mr. ROTH. That is not necessarily exactly what the out-of-pocket cost to the Government would be.

Mr. PELL. We have not been able to ascertain that, but knowing Uncle Sam's reputation, I cannot believe that he would charge many times the cost of delivery. Perhaps he makes a little profit.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware has 3 minutes plus.

Mr. ROTH. I just want to make one further observation. It seems to me that if we are willing to pay unlimited postage for incumbents, as we are—every Member of this body as well as every Member of the House of Representatives has no limit on the number of mass mailings he is permitted to make—this proposal would be well worth the cost to help the election process ase well as to deemphasize the need of money. I agree that while it would involve a certain amount of cost to the Federal Government, it seems to me that if we can justify it for our own use during our time in office, it is justifiable as well during the campaign period.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ROTH. I am happy to yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. COTTON. From my hasty reading of the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Delaware, I take it that it refers to mailings.

Mr. ROTH. That is right.

Mr. COTTON. To three mailings?

Mr. ROTH. That is correct.

Mr. COTTON. I am in sympathy with that, the purpose of the amendment, because I come from a State that depends on mailings, since we have no television that reaches the entire State. However, the postage is now 10 cents, and if I were running for reelection—with the 10-cent postage rate, and depending on direct mail, as I have in every one of my campaigns, I would find some way, through my own organization, to distribute from door to door such literature and campaign material as I wanted to distribute, because I would not want to pay 10 cents postage on even three mailings.

If the Senator really wants to accomplish the purpose and limit all candidates to the same policy, to only three pamphlets or three letters or three appeals, I would find a substitute for mail distribution, because with a 10-cent mailing rate I think you would find in many States, particularly in the smaller States, that even as a matter of just saving dollars and cents, the candidates would be able to devise and find some other way.

I know that the night before election——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Delaware has expired.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 more minutes.

Mr. PASTORE. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island has 5 minutes.

Mr. PELL. I yield it to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. COTTON. As I was saying, I remember that just before an election recently, I think it was my distinguished colleague from New Hampshire (Mr. McINTYRE) who was running that year, I had a very beautiful brochure pushed under the front door of my residence. They were distributed by hand.

That is my inquiry.

Mr. ROTH. Let me answer the Senator quickly, as I wish to yield, if I may, the remaining time to the Senator from New York.

As I mentioned during my statement, what we are trying to do is deemphasize funds. I have a series of amendments. It seems to me that this provision, even though it would cost the Federal Government a certain amount of money, affords all candidates, whether officeholders or not, an opportunity to communicate directly with the voters. I understand there are other methods to communicate, and they still might use those, but I would hope that this means would decrease the demand for other media.

I yield whatever time I have remaining to the Senator from New York.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I thank my friend from Delaware for yielding me this time, and I thank my friend from Rhode Island for yielding the time to my friend from Delaware.

I do believe that this is a very important amendment. It is one of which I am very pleased to be a cosponsor. It goes to the heart of what has been one of my great concerns over this legislation; namely, the fact that incumbents have undeniable advantages, the advantages of incumbency.

I feel that we must recognize that one of the principal sources of the advantage of incumbents is their ability to communicate with their constituents at public expense. This is a necessary right of communication. I have no objection to that. But I believe we should also recognize that it is terribly difficult to draw the line between those communications that are, you might say, in the line of duty as a Senator or Member of the House of Representatives and those communications that undoubtedly begin poaching on the whole campaign process.

So I see in this amendment two elements of reform: first, drawing a dividing line beyond which an incumbent is not allowed to mail, on a basis that gives him an advantage that is not equally applicable to the opponent, so that it seems to me that equity, it seems to me that considerations of trying to give a challenger some of the advantages that accrue to incumbency, it seems to me the kind of convenience of access that the mails apply, which is not necessarily possible especially in the more rural areas to people to volunteer—all of these considerations taken together suggest that the amendment is necessary, that it is an amendment that will spare this body a great deal of criticism, and that it is an amendment that recognizes there are advantages of incumbency that should be neutralized and equalized.

I want to compliment the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH) for offering the amendment. I hope that my colleagues will vote in favor of it.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to my distinguished senior colleague, Mr. PASTORE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BIDEN). The Senator from Rhode Island is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, if I thought for 1 minute, without trying to impugn the motives of any sponsor of an amendment, that those sponsoring these amendments were amenable to the idea, the philosophy, and the ideology of public financing, I would be more reluctant to do what I intend to do, and that is to move that this amendment be tabled.

Mr. President, what we are doing here is imposing on the Postal Service. The Postal Service is more or less, a private institution today. Here we are, bringing up all these amendments in a debate that is fast becoming a charade to the people of this country, a charade essentially because these amendments are being sponsored by those who will vote against public financing.

Financing is the name of the game insofar as this bill is concerned. So that when the proper time comes, Mr. President, I am going to move that this amendment be placed on the table because I am afraid, with all the pressing problems that confront the people of this country today, here we are in the Senate, with the price of meat going up, with the price of food going up, and we are in this inflationary spiral—why only today I heard from my own Governor who told me that the fuel adjustment will cost the consumers of Rhode Island one third additionally on their heating bills. But here we are, fussing around whether we will have two mails, or three mails, on a bill that is not going to go anywhere once we pass it in the Senate. I think we can use our time to a more advantageous purpose. After all, if this Congress is against public financing, let us stand up and vote against it: If we are for it, then let us vote for it. But we are beginning to puncture it with holes. As the days go by, it begans to look more like a sieve.

These people who sit up in the galleries and watch us, will look down on this very austere body and to the last breath of their survival, they will say, "What are you doing down there? You are acting like a bunch of schoolboys."

We have been at this thing for 2 weeks now and we are going nowhere—and we are going nowhere pretty fast. I say, if we are for public financing, let us say so. If we are against it, then let us say so. Let us have it done with, regardless of how we decide it—it makes no difference to me. But we get up here and say we should do this, and then we should do that, and then we should do the other thing. We passed a similar bill a short time ago. It is lingering and languishing over in the House of Representatives. It will never see the light of day. Now we come along with this one. It will never see the light of day, either.

I say, we have got the no-fault insurance bill to consider, have we not? I say to my good friend, the distinguished Senator from Washington (Mr. MAGNUSON), that this is a bill which is very important to the people of this country. We have got a lot to do in education. There are many other pressing problems that will come before the Senate.

I say, let us begin to act like legislators and stop kidding ourselves, because the people of this country are not buying this charade for one moment.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Rhode Island yield?

Mr. PASTORE. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN. Has not the Senator from Rhode Island just made a very fine argument for drawing the bill down and let us proceed to other matters more important?

Mr. PASTORE. I do not want to draw down the big issue, which is, are we for or not for public financing? Let us face it. That is what this bill is intended to do. That is the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BIDEN). All time has now expired.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH).

Mr. HRUSKA and Mr. PASTORE asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH).

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD of West Virginia. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. ERVIN), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Georgia (Mr. TALMADGE), and the Senator from California (Mr. TUNNEY) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON), is absent on official business.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), and the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS), are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT), is absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN), is absent due to illness in the family.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 55, nays 32, as follows:

CAMPAIGN SPENDING

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, we now have the opportunity to debate and vote in the Senate on the type of financing of campaigns that we think best serves the interests of this country.

In studying this issue I keep three fundamental objectives in mind: First. Elections should be won and lost on the relative merits of the candidates and their positions, not on the basis of who can raise and spend the most campaign funds;

Second. No contributor should be in a position to extract special treatment from an office-holder; and Third. Additional safeguards are needed to prevent self-enrichment through the improper use of public office.

I favor realistic, enforceable limits on campaign spending with insurance that credible challengers have a fair chance to obtain campaign funds. In my own case in 1972, committees for my reelection campaign raised and spent a total of $1,700,217, including $298,140 raised and spent prior to April 7, 1972, when the provisions of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 became effective. This sum of money, though $1,000,000 less than a senatorial campaign for reelection also conducted in 1972 in a State of comparable population, still enabled me to far outspend my opponent in the 1972 Illinois Senate race, leaving him at a substantial disadvantage in getting his message across.

The Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974, S. 3044, currently being debated in the Senate, would limit a Senatorial candidate in Illinois to $756,800 in the primary and $1,135,200 in the general election in 1974 for a total of $1,892,000. If this expenditure ceiling had been in effect in 1972, I would have been under the allowable spending total by $191,783.

I am aware that campaigns in other States may have been over the new proposed limits as they were more costly per capita due to other variables such as a hotly contested primary, the number of media markets, the viability of the State party organizations, and so forth, so Illinois may not be the best example of the effects that passage of S. 3044 would have in the future. However, I think Illinois is an instructive example.

Therefore, Mr. President, I have come to the conclusion that we need responsible legislation on campaign spending that will make the system fair for all who seek public office and a main concern of ours must be equity for the challenger.

To further elaborate my views on the subject of campaign spending, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a speech I delivered before the Money/Politics Conference in Washington on February 27 be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KEYNOTE ADDRESS BY SENATOR CHARLES H. PERCY

FEBRUARY 27, 1974.

I'm not sure that it's fair to ask me to cover the subject "Money—dash—Politics" in the brief time allotted. Alice Roosevelt Longworth, who is sharper than the rest of us, has been talking about money and politics for 90 years, and even she has barely dented the subject. Add gasoline lines, the Redskins and sex to money and politics, and you encompass 90 percent of the conversation in Washington on any given night.

The temptation and consequences of money in politics have been with us for a long time. While Washington's army starved at Valley Forge, Samuel Chase, a signer of the Declaration of Independence and later Chief Justice of the United States, tried to corner the flour market on the basis of inside information. Andrew Jackson's Postmaster General was forced from office for accepting kickbacks in awarding contracts for carrying the mail. President Lincoln had to remove his Secretary of War, Simon Cameron, who had arranged military contracts for companies in which he and his friends had an interest.

Two things, I suspect, have been responsible for transforming the dilemma of money in politics from a nuisance into a catastrophe:

1) Elected officials now often play the decisive role in both our personal and institutional financial affairs. If, for example, government did not have the power to influence milk prices and milk profits, it is doubtful that we would be concerned with the propriety of a political "milk fund" today.

And 2), the costs of gaining public office have reached stratospheric proportions. In 1956, it cost Dwight Eisenhower some $8 million to campaign successfully for re-election to the presidency; in 1972, Richard Nixon spent more than $60 million to do the same thing.

It has become expensive to run for almost any broad-based office, but staggeringly expensive to run for the presidency.

This year, as most of you know, I am exploring the feasibility of a '76 presidential race myself. Our proposed 1974 budget for this limited exploratory effort is $200,000—a puny amount compared with the cost of recent full-scale campaigns, but nonetheless an enormous sum of money—especially for those who have to raise it.

As more and more money oozed its way into the political process, it probably was inevitable that the irresistibly seductive nature of so much cash would one day take its toll. And in 1972, it finally did.

Today, it is not just the President who is paying a dreadful price for the perversion of money and power we call Watergate; we all are paying—Republicans, Democrats, big business, politicians at every level—and especially those of us in Congress. The entire country is paying a telling price in national self-esteem.

In a way, unhappily, we all deserve to pay. For much too long, we often turned away from obvious abuses of money in American politics.

When John Kennedy won Illinois' electoral votes in 1960 on the basis of some widely disputed returns from Chicago, much of the country winked at the triumph of good old fashioned machine politics.

In 1972, when burglars connected to the Nixon campaign were apprehended in the offices of the Democratic National Committee, much of the country—including most of the media—dismissed with a shrug the ominous implications. The nation had become so cynical about politics and politicians, in fact, that spying and break-ins were widely assumed to be commonplace facets of campaign strategy.

I, for one, do not believe they are politically commonplace at all, but the corrupting influence of big money in politics unquestionably is. If ever we are to reform the rickety apparatus which supposedly regulates the interaction of money and politics, surely this is the moment. In the aftermath of Watergate, public attention and concern at last are focused on the problem; we must act now, for if not now, then when?

The trouble is that while the malady is obvious, the sure cure is not. That is one reason I believe this conference is so timely and important.

In the weeks just ahead, Congress will be dealing with highly complex legislative initiatives in this area, some of which would reshape our politcial landscape. This is particularly true of taxpayer-financed federal election campaigns, which Common Cause and others believe is the only workable alternative to the present system.

I don't know if it is the only workable alternative, but some form of public financing seems the most sensible one that any of us have yet proposed if we are to preclude a repeat of 1972.

Public financing, like the other reforms now under consideration, deserve the most thorough possible airing, in floor debate, in the media and right here for the next two days.

Throughout this refining process of discussion and debate, I hope we all can keep in focus at least three fundamental objectives:

#1: Elections should be won and lost on the relative merits of the candidates and their stands, not on the basis of who can afford the most elaborate and costly campaign. In my 1972 senatorial race, my campaign committee far outspent that of my opponent. I like to think that I would have won on the basis of my record in any case, but obviously Congressman Pucinski was at a substantial disadvantage in trying to get his message across to the voters of Illinois. Not only must we place realistic, enforceable limits on campaign spending, but we must see that credible challengers somehow have a fairer chance to obtain sufficient campaign funds.

Objective #2: No financial contributor should be in a position to extract special treatment from an office-holder, which means that we must place enforceable ceilings on campaign contributions and ensure that all contributions and expenditures are matters of public record. I am reluctant to place an absolute prohibition on individual contributions, for I believe that widespread citizen participation in politics is a healthy and desirable thing. But Watergate is a harsh reminder of the perils of five- and six-figure political contributions. We ought to get rid of them once and for all and try the more reasonable upper limit of $3000 proposed in the Senate passed reform bill.

Objective #3: Additional safeguards are needed to prevent self-enrichment through the improper use of public office. In this regard, I regret that there was no time on the conference program for an examination of the entire question of disclosure.

Frankly, I do not like the loss of privacy that goes hand-in-hand with mandatory financial disclosure by candidates and office-holders. As the Hearst case demonstrates, public knowledge of a family's financial status can sometimes directly affect its very safety.

Nonetheless, the public trust has been so frequently and flagrantly abused that I am forced to conclude that some form of significant disclosure—especially by candidates for national office—is in the public interest. Therefore, should I decide to become a full-fledged candidate for the 1976 Republican presidential nomination, I will disclose the value of my assets, now held in a blind trust, and will release full tax data for all the years I have held office, whether the law then requires it or not.

As we grapple with such thorny issues as disclosure and campaign financing, those of us in Congress have a two-sided opportunity. We can pass legislation which will help prevent fast and loose money from further perverting the political process; that's one opportunity. Or—its reverse—we can fuel the contempt we already have earned by perpetuating the toothless guidelines which govern money in politics now.

Many national institutions are on trial today, some literally, some figuratively. So, too, Congress stands at the bar of public opinion as once again we assume responsibility for policing ourselves, a role we have performed with minimal distinction in the past.

Perhaps it has always been the case, but one of the roadblocks to genuine political reform is that those of us who devise the rules of the game are hardly disinterested spectators; one asumes the Redskins would have made it to the Super Bowl this year, if only George Allen had been the referee.

My hope is that time, we will look beyond our self-interest to the public interest. The country is understandably demoralized. Americans need a clear sign that their elected representatives remain capable of actually doing something about a given national problem. If we fail this time, we shall richly deserve the election-day consequences which are almost sure to follow.

Ultimately, of course, even the best legislation can not by itself stop pay-offs, unreported contributions, peddled ambassadorships, laundered money, and all the other shoddy political rip-offs to which America has become so cynically accustomed. With or without legislation, it is going to remain difficult to clean up American politics in an atmosphere of widespread public callousness. "Everybody does it" is hardly a maxim conducive to reform, much less national distinction.

Everybody does not do it—every politician does not flaunt the law or grow rich through public service. That is not our most common lapse within the American political community. Rather, our most pervasive failure, especially these past ten years, is in the realm of intellectual integrity, or the lack of it.

Most of us, myself included, are drawn too easily into the subtler deceptions of politics—the 10-second spot, the groundless charge, the rainbow promise. Forever understating our ambitions, *over*stating our accomplishments, over-rating our "solutions", we hardly notice that we have created a nation of disbelievers through this process of indirection. Our political dialogue has become so laden with minideceptions that now they are completely taken for granted. It is as if deception is what is expected of us politicians. Score one for the "everybody-does-it" syndrome.

One result of all this is that something important and quite wonderful has slipped away from us in recent years—not so much innocence as mutual trust. We trusted our leaders in America, as indeed we trusted most of our institutions, and each other. Government has long been viewed as foolish, bureaucratic and hopelessly extravagant, but only recently has it become an object of national contempt.

I don't know if we can reverse these trends toward disgust, despair, and disbelief; some would say it's foolhardy to try. But I think we must make a determined effort if these United States are to remain united in any fundamental sense.

Political leaders can help . . . must help, really, if we are to regain what John Gardner calls "a sense of ourselves as a people . . . of our own worth and our own values."

A good way to start is by seeking an end to the kind of duplicity and secrecy in government which produced first Vietnam and then Watergate. Much too much of the public's business is stamped "Top Secret", or shrouded in a dubious cloak of national security, or carried on behind closed doors. Why be so secretive about the workings of a government, which, after all, still belongs to and serves the people?

The reforms you will be analyzing at this conference can do much to "declassify" the elective process. But those of us who run for office must do more than merely comply with the letter of the election laws. I think we must take our case to the voters in a much more straightforward way than either we or they are accustomed to. For if we don't level with voters as we seek an office, how can they possibly expect us to level with them once we get there?

Our campaigns ought to address themselves more to the often unspoken realities of government, chief among which is that everything costs something—usually money, sometimes freedom, too often human life. Whatever the costs, candidates are reluctant to discuss them. And because citizens have been promised so much—great societies, law 'n' order—at no apparent cost, they are understandably angry and disillusioned when the costs turn out to be staggering and the promises overblown.

Isn't it about time that we eliminated this shadow-dance we perform at election time? It's long past time we faced up to extremely difficult and complicated choices in this country. How can the American people be expected to choose wisely if they are continually uninformed and misinformed by their present and would-be representatives in government?

More critical still, how can political leadership be effective until people find cause again to trust politicians? We in political life must work to regain that trust, for the cynicism which today engulfs American politics makes it terribly difficult to recover our national momentum.

But trust must be earned. And to earn it, our commitment must go well beyond reform of campaign financing. We have got to revamp communications between candidate and voter, government and the governed. Our entire political dialogue in America has to be more open and direct. It is time, quite simply, to trust the people with the truth. Only then will we truly deserve the privilege of holding public office in a free society.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1124 and ask that it be stated.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There will be order in the Senate. Senators will please be seated. The Senate will be in order so that the Senator can be heard. The Senator has requested that his amendment be called up. Unanimous consent is required since it already has been agreed that the amendment of the Senator from Alabama is pending.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that amendment No. 1124 may be called up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, if anyone wishes to object, I do not mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the amendment first?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the Senator explain the amendment?

Mr. DOMINICK. I am happy to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. It is the intention of the Senate to have no further votes tonight.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I would like to have this measure as the pending business. I would be happy when we come back in to take it up. It may be there will not be a vote. There is a possibility the amendment will be accepted. This amendment provides for a simultaneous poll closing throughout the country.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I have no objection, but I would call to the attention of the Senator that the pending business is the Allen amendment. An agreement has been reached to vote on that amendment at 12 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. DOMINICK. That is fine.

Mr. MANSFIELD. So the Senator's amendment would follow the Allen amendment. I suggest if the Senator's amendment is not accepted, any rollcall vote be put over until tomorrow because I have gone out of my way and told Senators on both sides that there would be no further votes tonight.

Mr. DOMINICK. I am happy to comply with that request. If there is to be a rollcall vote maybe we could put this right after the Allen vote.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is fine.

Mr. DOMINICK. I could talk about it tonight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from Colorado is recognized.

The amendment will be stated.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

The amendment is as follows:

TITLE V—POLL CLOSING TIME

SEC. 501. SIMULTANEOUS POLL CLOSING TIME.—On every national election day, commencing on the date of the national elections in 1976, the closing time of the poling places in the several States for the election of electors for President and Vice President of the United States and the election of United States Senators and Representatives shall be as follows: 11 postmeridian standard time in the eastern time zone; 10 postmeridian standard time in the central zone; 9 postmeridian standard time in the mountain time zone; 8 postmeridian standard time in the Pacific time zone; 7 postmeridian standard time in the Yukon time zone; 6 postmeridian standard time in the Alaska-Hawaii time zone; and 5 postmeridian standard time in the Bering time zone: Provided, That the polling places in each of the States shall be open for at least twelve hours.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I shall not take very long because I think this is a relatively simple amendment.

The other day the Senate adopted, and I might say against my vote, the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BELLMON), which provides that none of the media can release any information on Presidential elections until midnight of the day that the election occurs. Well, it seems to me that there are a lot of difficulties with that measure. First of all, I do not think it is going to be possible to enforce, as the distinguished Senator from Nevada said. Second, I do not think it is constitutional. I think there is really grave doubt as to whether we in the Senate can pass a law stating that no one can do something of that kind.

Therefore, this amendment, which has been accepted before as part of the American Bicentennial deal, was proposed, first, to take the sting out of the Bellmon amendment and, second, because it is advisable in and of itself.

The different time zones have a great effect on elections, as the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY) and the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER) said the other day; and I shall not mention New Hampshire, but I have, and New York, for instance, can influence votes and in other time zones, particularly when predictions are made on a nationwide basis.

It seems to me that the easy way to get out of this situation would be to have simultaneous closings of the polls. This would be difficult unless the people are given enough time to vote, so we have required that the polling places would be open for 12 hours, starting in the eastern zone from 11 until 11, the central zone from 10 to 10, mountain time from 9 to 9, the Pacific time zone from 8 to 8; then we go to the Yukon, Alaska, Hawaii, the Bering Straits, which would be 5 to 5. But I do not think that an awful lot of people will be voting out there anyway. But they do get up earlier than we do in the Eastern zone and they would have plenty of time to vote. So it does not create a problem for anyone. If it does not create a problem, then it would take some of the sting we have as a result of the Bellmon amendment. It is advantageous that we seek a solution to this matter.

Mr. President, I have felt for a long time that predictions made on the basis of computer projections before people go to the polls create a difficult situation for many voters. Many stay home, saying, "It is not worth voting," and others get mad and say, "I am going to vote because I do not like the computer system," and still others simply want to be on the winning side, if the computers show that that is the way people feel about it.

This provision would be effective in 1976, not in 1974, so we would have plenty of time before the next Presidential election to see if there are any serious difficulties in it, other than the preemption of the right of the States to set their polling times. That is the only defect I see, but if we are going to have major elections it seems to me advisable to close the polls at the same time regardless of whether the States say it is easier for their people to get up at 10 o'clock, or whatever it may be.

I hope my friend, the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON), who I am sure has run into this problem in his State as I have in Colorado, will agree to the amendment.

I remember during the debate on this matter—I think it was last year or early this year—the Senator from Kentucky said he thought this was a far better approach than the Bellmon approach. It would be my hope, therefore, in view of the fact that the Bellmon approach has been accepted, that we can take some of the sting out of it by putting this particular amendment on the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

I think there are a lot of practical problems in this amendment. The Senator has suggested that the polling places would close, for example, in this area at 11 at night and open at 11 in the morning. There are many people who prefer to vote as they go to work, in the morning. This has been traditional throughout the country. Therefore, most of the people, before they go to work, would have the opportunity to vote. If this amendment were adopted, it would mean there would be complete shifts of people working at the polling booths, on the election boards, and so on, or else there would be a whole series of overtime problems, if the polls should open early in the morning and then remain open until 11 in the evening.

I wonder if the Senator has explored what cost might be involved with respect to the various States that would have to make this kind of shift, increasing the number of hours, and going into nighttime hours.

Mr. DOMINICK. No, I can say to the Senator; I have not explored that.

Mr. CANNON. I suppose it would be quite difficult. Basically, the Constitution provided that this would be a matter that the States would determine, although it provides that Congress may make such changes as it deemed advisable, except as to the places of holding elections. However, I think it is quite clear that at least the intent of the Constitution was this was an area in which the States will make a determination.

While I recognize the problem posed by the amendment that was adopted the other day—and I, too, voted against it; I think it was bad legislation; I do not think it should have passed through this body; I do not think it will ever get through conference—I do not know whether we ought to compound one piece of bad legislation by substituting for it another bad piece of legislation, because I am not at all convinced in my own mind that this is the kind of legislation we ought to be adopting to get at the problem that the Senator is very much concerned with.

Mr. DOMINICK. I can say to the Senator that, under the circumstances, I guess I had better get a yea and nay vote on it to see how the whole Senate feels about it. I do not think there are enough Senators here to order the yeas and nays on it at the present time, but let me say this to the Senator from Nevada. Let us say that there is a plan with a two-shift arrangement. There is plenty of time for them to go home in the daytime, and if they happen to have the early morning shift, they can vote before they go to work. Under present circumstances, it is perfectly easy for them to do it right after supper. If it goes from 11 to 11, there is more time, generally speaking, than there is otherwise, although most of the States now have a 12-hour polling time. Certainly they do in my State. I believe they have a 12-hour polling time in Nevada.

My guess is that it would not be any more expensive, and it would far more equitable.

If one wants to put it this way, in a horse race, we would like to be there at the finish line. A person is not there at the finish line under present circumstances, because all he is doing now is picking up a television projection. It does not always turn out right, but the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER) has said it did hurt him, and the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY) said he thought it hurt him in 1968. All I can say to the Senator is that I cannot see how there could be much additional expense, and I think this is a far more equitable way to handle it than any way we have now.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOMINICK. I yield.

Mr. COOK. I wonder if I may make a suggestion. The Senator knows how I have felt on this for some time.

Mr. DOMINICK. Yes.

Mr. COOK. My chairman and I differed on the Bellmon amendment.

In view of the fact that the Senator from Colorado wishes to have a rollcall, and therefore that would occur after the vote on the Allen amendment, I wonder if the Senator, if he has completed his discussion, would withdraw his amendment now, and we could agree that his amendment could be disposed of after the Allen amendment.

To make a further suggestion, if the Senator would take the language of S. 372, we have already provided in that bill that Election Day would be a holiday. If that provision were in his amendment, along with the time zones, I think it should be a holiday. I think we are probably the only major country in the world that does not have a holiday in general elections. That is why in our history we have never even gone as high as 70-percent participation of the qualified voters, which I think in itself is nothing to brag about.

If the Senator were to combine those two provisions into his amendment, I think it would be more palatable.

Mr. DOMINICK. I thank the Senator from Kentucky for his courtesy. I think the first part of his suggestion would be something I would be happy to comply with, namely, to withdraw the amendment and put it off for a vote after the Allen amendment.

As far as making election day a holiday is concerned, I went into that at some length. There were enormous problems connected with that proposal. One of the problems that everybody cited was that this was a Tuesday. If it were a holiday, immediately there would be a demand for a long weekend, upon which occurrence everybody would take off, some to go South and go fishing, and some to go North and go hunting.

Mr. COOK. There is merit in the Senator's remarks. I do not know why we in the Congress and we who are responsible for the conduct of elections should find a great deal of magic in Tuesday. Again, I think we would have many more people participating in the elections in the United States if the election were held on a Saturday.

Somehow or other, it is very easy to sit here in Congress and decide to shift birthdays and decide to make someone's birthday on a weekend, when that was not his birthday at all, and then we get accolades from the people because of a long weekend. Perhaps the best thing we could do about elections is to have them held on a weekend, so the people could get another long weekend. There is nothing magical about Tuesday. I think we make a mistake when we do that. I think the question ought to be considered on the basis of the fulfillment of our responsibility and seeing to it that the biggest percentage of the American people possible—95, 96, 99.44 percent—who are registered and who are eligible to vote participate in the American electoral process. That is really what we ought to be looking for. If that cannot happen on a Tuesday, then it ought to be our responsibility to find a time when we could get the greatest number of people who have the greatest amount of time to participate in a national election.

Mr. DOMINICK. I can say to the Senator from Kentucky that I wrestled with the problem of changing the whole structure and trying to have an election earlier and the primary earlier and the convening of Congress earlier, so that we do not come into session in January and that we try to comply with the school law. I did all kinds of things in this area. The difficulty I ran into is that part of it requires a constitutional amendment, part of it requires a law, and after 18 months of it I gave up, realizing that I was not getting anywhere.

Mr. COOK. OK. When the Senator from West Virginia, who is present on the floor, discussed an amendment to have all primaries in the United States for Federal elections take place in August, and moved the date for the general election from November to October, unfortunately he and I were still traditionalist, because we stuck with Tuesday. Yet we were perfectly willing to move the primary dates, we were perfectly willing to move the general election dates, but we still stuck to Tuesday. Yet I think the Senator would honestly agree with me that we could move that date for the election.

Mr. DOMINICK. I agree with the Senator. It has been done for years, that is all.

And I hesitate to change it at this point and make it a holiday and undoubtedly give a lot of people a long week end when they would not do much about voting.

Mr. COOK. That was merely a suggestion.

Mr. DOMINICK. I would say to the Senator that much as I would like to comply with him, I will comply with him at this time and withdraw my amendment at this time and offer it after the Allen amendment in the morning.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may withdraw my amendment and call it up right after the Allen amendment with a one-half hour time limitation, the time to be equally divided in accordance with the original order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FRANK S. HOGAN

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I wish to announce to the Senate the passing of Frank S. Hogan, a man who served for three decades as a district attorney of New York County.

There can be no greater tribute to a man than that he carried out his duties in the service of the law and its equal application to all with a single-minded devotion to the tradition and purity of that law unmatched in his time.

The death of Frank S. Hogan today marks the end of a legendary career which for more than 30 years stood for integrity, competence, and fairness in the administration of justice.

From his earliest days as an assistant to the late Thomas E. Dewey, Mr. Hogan sought to make the Manhattan District Attorney's Office a model for the Nation and he succeeded greatly in this endeavor. The independence or the integrity of his office was never in question. Assistant district attorneys were chosen on a nonpartisan, merit basis. Many alumni of Mr. Hogan's office went on to distinguished careers in law, Government, and business. Examples are: Former Secretary of State William P. Rogers, former judge and Ambassador to the Paris Peace Talks, Lawrence E. Walsh, Judges Stanly Fuld, Charles Breitel, Murray Gurfein, William Herlands, Whitman Knapp, Charles Tillinghast, chairman of the board of TWA and many State Supreme Court Justices, members of the State legislature and law professors.

Especially in times like this when the integrity of the administration of justice and of the legal profession are constantly an issue before us Frank Hogan's career stands as a model inspiration.

For Mrs. Javits and myself I extend our most profound condolences to Mary Hogan.

DEATH OF PRESIDENT POMPIDOU, OF FRANCE

Mr. JAVITS Mr. President, I feel certain that Senators have heard of the announcement from France that President Pompidou has died. I know that many will join in the expression of sympathy for the people of France, who have lost their Chief of State, which is always a tragic moment in the life of any people.

It is uniquely applicable, because death merges all the cares of life and allows restatement of the tremendous bonds of friendship which exist between the French people and ourselves. This goes back in our history to the most perilous, earliest days, when France, through its great military leaders, helped to win the Revolutionary War and to bring into being American independence. All of our difficulties—and they are many and are serious—become very small when compared with the bonds of friendship and the love of freedom and our comradeship in arms, including comradeship in arms in World War II, in which I had the inestimable privilege, as a military officer, to serve.

I express the hope that in France, as here, the really profound values of freedom and justice, of civilization and culture, which we share with France, may bring us both to a better understanding of our respective positions, and may enable us to work out our immediate problems and continue under our auspices for all mankind.

France is a great nation with a proud history. I knew President Pompidou personally. Nothing could in any way be of more benefit in the effort toward the peace and prosperity of all mankind to rekindle as a result of President Pompidou's untimely death this new attitude of cooperation and common striving. That, I believe, would be President Pompidou's finest memorial.

Mrs. Javits and I extend our deepest sympathy to Madam Pompidou and the Pompidou family.

PROGRAM

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senate will convene at 11 a.m. tomorrow.

After the two leaders or their designees have been recognized under the standing order, there will be a period for the transaction of routine morning business for not to exceed 15 minutes, with a 3-minute time limitation on each speech made therein, at the conclusion of which the Senate will resume consideration of the unfinished business, S. 3044. The pending question at that time will be on the adoption of the Allen amendment (No. 1059), on which there is a division of time with a vote to occur on the Allen amendment at 12 noon. The yeas and nays have been ordered thereon.

Upon the disposition of the Allen amendment, the Dominick amendment, Amendment No. 1124, will be called up again with a time limitation of 30 minutes thereon after which a vote will occur. And we have been notified that it will be a rollcall vote.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, if there be no further business to come before the Senate, I move, in accordance with the previous order, that the Senate stand in adjournment until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and at 5:48 p.m. the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, April 3, at 11 o'clock a.m.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Marks, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session, the Presiding Officer (Mr. HASKELL) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on April 2, 1974, he presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 969. An act relating to the constitutional rights of Indians;

S. 1341. An act to provide for financing the economic development of Indians and Indian organizations, and for other purposes;

S. 1836. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to incorporate the American Hospital of Paris," approved January 30, 1913 (37 Stat. 654); and

S. 2441. An act to amend the act of February 24, 1925, incorporating the American War Mothers to permit certain stepmothers and adoptive mothers to be members of that organization.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is concluded.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will resume the consideration of the unfinished business, S. 3044, which the clerk will state.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

S. 3044, to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) No. 1059. Time for debate on this amendment is equally divided and controlled between the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) and the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON), with a vote thereon to occur at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, with the time taken from both sides.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, what is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, No. 1059.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the time is under control until 12 o'clock. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Each side has 15 minutes. The vote will take place at 12 o'clock.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to reduce the amount of permissible contributions to Presidential primary or Presidential general elections and House and Senate primaries and general elections.

Under present law, the existing law, there is no effective limit on the amount of contributions, and I feel that therein lies much of the problem, and that by limiting the amount of total overall contributions, the amount of total overall expenditures, and by limiting of the amount of individual contributions, the election process can best be reformed, and not by turning the bill over to the taxpayer and requiring that individual taxpayer, in half the cases, probably, to support the views and philosophies of candidates with whom they disagree, and taking out of the election process the voluntary participation by the electorate. That is the evil of public financing.

The bill, S. 3044, as it comes to us, provides that in Presidential nomination contests, the contributions can be matched, provided they are $250 or less in Presidential races and $100 or less in House and Senate races, and permitting candidates for the nomination for the Presidency to receive up to $7.5 million of public funds to aid them in their campaigns. But the bill, S. 3044, permits contributions far beyond the matchable contributions.

We have heard so much talk about, "Well, you have got to take care of the challenger in these various races. You have got to protect the challenger." It is admitted all the while that the incumbent, by reason of his being known, by reason of his name identification in the minds of the voters, by reason of the many favors he may have done for his constituents through the years, would be in better shape to attract larger contributions, and the challenger would be at a disadvantage in this country.

So this bill, while it matches contributions up to $250 for the President and $100 for the House and Senate, allows contributions to be made up to $3,000——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 5 minutes of the Senator have expired.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield myself an additional 3 minutes.

And in the case of a man and his wife, up to $6,000. That is something that is going to benefit the incumbent. That is not going to take care of the challenger.

The purpose of the amendment that is now pending, cutting contributions down to $250 for the President and $100 for the House and Senate, is to broaden the base of those participating in our elections. The proponents of reform say they want to eliminate the large contributions. I believe the $250 limit is going to eliminate the so-called large contributor. The $100 contribution for the House and Senate is going to eliminate the large contributor. That would put the incumbent and the challenger on exactly the same basis.

This whole process can be solved inside the framework of private financing, by the small contributor and still allow Federal matching. It seems Members of the Senate are going to insist on having their campaigns subsidized by the taxpayer. That vote is quite evident here in the Senate. Members of the Senate want to see the taxpayers finance their campaigns, because I had an amendment knocking Members of the House and the Senate out of the subsidy, and that amendment was voted down. So it is evident Senators are going to want public financing.

Therefore, let us limit the public financing to the amounts set out, $250 and $100, but let us chop off all amounts above that, because there seems to be something evil or sinister about contributions that are over $250 for the President and over $100 for the House and the Senate, because we are not allowing the Government to match these excessive contributions.

So if Senators want reform and not just public subsidy, let us cut these contributions down to where the campaigns can be financed by the average citizen of our country, which will encourage citizen participation in our election process. That is what the amendment does. It drastically cuts the amount that can be contributed.

We have heard a lot from Common Cause to the effect that, "Well, we want to cut these contributions down." Let us see if Senators who seem to be influenced by that plea—or demand, would be a better word—by Common Cause——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield myself 1 minute.

Let us see if they are going to be for cutting contributions down to a realistic amount, an amount that would lead the average citizen to feel he has a part in the election process. Let us see if they want election reform or if they want Federal subsidy. That is the issue presented by this amendment.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. President, the problem of campaign reform is certainly not a black-and-white issue. It is not susceptible of very easy solutions. It requires a long time and a lot of lessons need to be learned before something is actually accomplished.

As a matter of fact, since I have been in the Senate, I have been involved in campaign reform bills. Since 1959 the Senate has either passed in the Senate or has reported to the Senate out of the committee a bill in 1960, another one in 1961, another one in 1967, which I may say passed the Senate by a vote of 87 to 0 and went to the House side, and then amendments were passed in August of 1971.

On top of that, S. 372 that we passed by an overwhelming vote last year and sent to the House, has not been acted on as yet.

I might say frankly, Mr. President, to the Senator from Alabama that I believe that had S. 372 been acted on by the House last year, I believe we would not have had the pressures we now have to get into the area of public financing. But we have had pointed out, as a result of the Watergate hearings, the unfortunate aspects of big money in campaigns. That is what we have tried to resolve. We have not done it completely, but we have tried to do it an an equitable fashion in the pending bill. We have left it so that the candidate need not go to public financing if he does not desire to.

On the other hand, we have limited the effect of big contributions and have made it so that only small contributed amounts can be used in computing the triggering factor in determining whether a person would be entitled to match the difference if he went the public funds route. We believe it is fairer, in that fashion, to a nonincumbent than to an incumbent, because it would give the challenger an opportunity to procure small contributions to get up to his triggering amount on an equal basis with an incumbent who might not have any trouble going out and raising larger amounts. But we do not let the incumbent use those larger figures in determining eligibility.

Much can be said on both sides of this issue. There is no special magic in many of the figures we have used.

For example, in the limit on expenditures, the Senator from Alabama correctly pointed out yesterday that last year was the first time we limited expenditures and then only as to a portion of the expenditures. In this bill we have tried to limit the overall expenditures. I must say frankly that I am certainly not wedded to the formula we have used here. If Senators feel the figure is too high, we ought to have a vote on an amendment to reduce it. We used the figure somewhat arbitrarily, I might say, but by looking at past experience in trying to determine what expenditures had been made, and recognizing the fact that too much money has been spent in Federal campaigns, not only in the congressional races, but most certainly in presidential and Vice-Presidential races.

So we came up with a formula of 10 cents per voter in a primary election for an eligible voter of voting age, and then 15 cents in a general election. We used a somewhat arbitrary figure of $90,000 in the House races. Actually, I felt, and I am sure some other members of the committee felt, last year, that this is a matter that the House itself ought to determine. So we used the arbitrary figure, as has been pointed out in the argument. Some Members of the House used less than that figure; some used much more.

So we used an arbitrary figure, hoping that the House would make a determination as to what the correct figure should be. I am not wedded to any of these figures. I would be willing to go along with a reduction in both the amount that could be spent in the primary or the amount we have in the bill, and the amount that could be spent in the general election, if that is consistent with the wishes of a majority of this body.

But we have seen, as a result of the Watergate hearings, the inherent danger of large contributions and the undue influence that is exerted, or at least is attempted to be exerted, by the making of tremendous contributions. Those are the sorts of things we want to do away with.

I do not often quote from the New York Times. But I read an editorial in the April 2 issue from which I shall read a part into the RECORD, because it expresses my views on this matter:

Although small contributions are important, experience has shown that they are easier to raise at the Presidential level than in many Senatorial and Congressional contests. Even in Presidential races, the candidate who appeals to a passionate minority, a George McGovern or a George Wallace, is likely to have an easier time of it than a middle-of-the-road candidate.

I may say that in the discussion on this matter last year, the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN) on the floor of the Senate admitted that he had, or was forced, to take some large contributions—seed money—to get himself into a position to make a large solicitation for funds at a low level, because most of his money came from small contributors.

I continue to read from the editorial:

Even those with devoted followings do not escape the need for large gifts or loans from wealthy individuals or interest groups to pay for campaign start-up costs, for direct mail solicitation of small givers, and to tide campaigns over rough spots. In short, if large contributions are not a wholly reliable substitute, there has to be an alternate source of funds, and that can only be public money.

The choice is not between exclusive reliance on private money or on public money. In the best pluralistic tradition, the Senate reform bill provides a mixed system in which small and medium sized contributors perform a critical function but in which public money is available as the necessary alternative and supplement. It is a plan that deserves the support of all those such as Senators Weicker and Baker who genuinely favor cleaner elections.

Mr. President, I must say that I agree with the assessment of the importance of making some contributions available and providing access to public funds if we are going to do away with larger contributions. If we are going to rely on large contributions, as we have done in the past, then we could very well forget about public financing because some people could go out and raise large sums of money, and they will continue to do so if we do not have a limit.

We tried to get at that to some degree in S. 372 last year by fixing the amount of expenditures in the campaign. We used roughly the same formula in the bill in determining, this year, the amount that could be spent.

Yesterday the distinguished Senator from Alabama pointed out that what we ought to do is to try to shorten the campaign. The Senate has already acted on that point. I hope that the House will act on it. I am all for shortening the time of the campaign. That will do more to reduce the cost of a campaign, perhaps, than any other one thing, other than providing free time and free mailing privileges, which would certainly reduce the cost to the candidate as the Senator from Alabama suggested yesterday.

But even a former Member of the Senate, whom the distinguished Senator from Alabama quoted yestreday, pointed out that small contributions are the backbone of political financing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 5 minutes of the Senator have expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself additional time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I agree with that statement. That is why we reduced the matching amounts to $100 in congressional races and to $250 in a presidential race. However, we do permit contributions up to $300 limit per person so that the person can get seed money and have an opportunity to start his campaign which is so important, as pointed out in the editorial from which I have just quoted.

One of the suggestions he made yesterday was to increase the tax credit or tax deduction and to make possible a gift tax deduction for this purpose.

We did not go that far on the gift tax. We did under title V, that has now been taken out of the bill, and I support the doubling of the tax deduction and/or the tax credit, and doubling the checkoff.

I might say the distinguished Senator from Alabama has found some fault with the checkoff provision by saying that in order not to be—that you have to check if you do not want the money used. I agree with him on that. I think it ought to be an affirmative action on the part of the taxpayer, so that if he wants his money used for that purpose, to go into the political fund, the $1, which I support increasing to $2 per person, then I think he ought to have the affirmative obligation of making a check to so indicate, and have that money go into the fund.

But I hope the Senate will not support the Allen amendment on this particular issue, even though I find myself in agreement with him to a very high degree on the basic principles of what we are trying to do. We just differ on some of the procedural aspects, as to what would get the job done.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 6 minutes remaining.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Nevada has not said one single thing that would detract from the wisdom of the amendment that is before the Senate. He speaks of cutting out large contributions, and that is just exactly what this amendment seeks to do. The question is, what is a large contribution?

Well, I feel like a $3,000 contribution is a large contribution. Under the bill, a $6,000 contribution would be permitted for a couple. I think that is a tremendous contribution, and I think that campaigns can be run on $100 limits for the House of Representatives and the Senate, and $250 for the Presidency.

If we do not limit all contributions in this fashion, we are going to have the incumbents able to get these $3,000 and $6,000 contributions, and the challengers will not be able to get them.

The purpose of this amendment is to cut the size of the incumbent's advantage down to where he would be on the same basis with the challenger.

Even at that, the challenger will have a disadvantage, because the incumbent can get more in contributions, even small contributions, than can the challenger. The challenger would be way behind the incumbent in contributions of up to $100, because the incumbent would get those contributions, and then the Government would compound that advantage by doubling the amount that the incumbent had received.

This amendment would go a long way toward eliminating the influence of large contributions. So if what we want is to limit the influence of large contributions—and the proponents say that is what it is—why not reduce drastically the amount of the contributions that can be made? That is all that can be matched, so what is the use of having this wide area between $250 and $3,000 or $6,000, as the case might be, and between $100 and $3,000 or $6,000, as the case might be? Why have that area where the incumbent would have this tremendous advantage of greater ability to obtain funds?

Mr. President, let us have true reform. Let us not just mouth a few pious platitudes, that this is the only way to reform the system and this is the way to get the influence of big money out of the campaigns, by turning the cost over to the taxpayers.

I have been interested to note that five out of the seven Watergate Committee members—and the Watergate Committee was charged with making recommendations for campaign reform—are opposed to public financing. They do not think it is such a good idea.

I believe the answer is in the realm of private financing, where a person has the right to contribute to the candidate of his choice. He will not have that right under the public financing feature in the general elections, where the money is paid by the taxpayers through the Federal Government.

As I pointed out yesterday, in the State of California the nominees of the two parties will receive from the Federal Government to conduct their general election campaigns for the Senate, from the public treasury, to each of those two nominees, $2,121,000, which is more than nine times what a Senator would earn as a U.S. Senator in the entire 6 years of his term.

If that is reform, I do not believe I know the meaning of the word, to just write a check, Mr. President, with no control over it whatsoever except post-election auditing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. President, I do not believe that we ought to permit contributions of $6,000 to be made. I believe we should limit Presidential campaign contributions to $250, and House and Senate campaign contributions to $100. That is the amount that can be matched, and that is all that ought to be permitted to be contributed. That will get the influence of large contributions and large contributors out of the election process.

So I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The Senator has made one proposition that I think does not truly represent the situation, when he says that an incumbent would be able to get $1,000 or $3,000 contributions, and then go to the Federal Government and get the matching funds. That is simply not true. Whatever amount——

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, the Senator from Alabama did not say that. I said he would have greater ability to get the contributions up to $3,000. What I am trying to do is cut the permissible contributions down to what can be matched. The Senator must have misunderstood. The record will show.

Mr. CANNON. Perhaps I did. But I want to make it absolutely clear that the challenger and the incumbent would be on an equal footing with respect to the matching funds, the contributions which could be matched at the Federal level. If the candidate of either party receives funds in excess of the matching formula funds, those moneys then go to offset moneys that the Federal Government would not necessarily have to match, would not be able to match, as a matter of fact, and the overall expenditure limit would still be in effect. That would include moneys over and above the matching formula triggering funds, as well as those within those limits, for the purpose of the overall limitation.

So I would simply suggest to my colleague that if he supports this concept, we ought to have amendments to get the bill in the proper form. For example, if he feels that the amounts of expenditures permissible are too high, we ought to have amendments along that line, rather than try to add the type of amendments such as this one, which would make it impossible for a person to carry on a campaign without being able to get contributions of more than that amount, even according to Senator McGOVERN's own testimony, and he has had more experience than any other one person in raising tremendously large campaign funds from small contributors.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, will the distinguished chairman yield on that point for a brief comment?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. MATHIAS. While I cannot claim to rival the scope of Senator McGovern's experience, I have perhaps the most recent experience. I announced earlier this year that I would take no contributions of over $100.

I am speaking in support of the amendment. Since December 21, 1973, it is interesting to note that more than 2,700 individuals have contributed to my campaign. No contribution has exceeded $100. The total amount has been over $45,000. Thus, the total average contribution has been approximately $16.25.

I could only say to the distinguished chairman that I have to be enormously encouraged by this kind of response.

Mr. CANNON. Let me ask the Senator, that is a period of 4 months. Is the Senator saying, then, that if he collects twice that amount in the next 4 months, which would be $90,000, and he adds that to the present $45,000, would that be enough to run his campaign, $135,000?

Mr. MATHIAS. I wish I could say yes to that, but there is another rule here, that in the course of a campaign public interest tends to rise, and the number of contributions, and perhaps the average size of the contribution, would rise with the interest as we come closer to the campaign.

Mr. CANNON. I would simply say to the Senator, based on his experience up to the present time, that if it continues in that fashion up to the primary, he will not have raised much more than half the amount that would be needed in Maryland.

Mr. MATHIAS. I thank the Senator from Nevada for his comments.

The pending amendment would limit contributions from any individual to $100 for congressional races and $250 for Presidential races. This amendment would not affect the public financing provisions of this bill, and thus must be considered in the context of the entire bill.

In such a context, the question is raised: Can candidates raise a substantial amount of funds in congressional contests from contributions in amounts of $100 or less?

Last December I announced on the Senate floor that I would make my reelection campaign this year an experiment to test that proposition, as well as a number of other reforms which have been proposed, debated, passed by the Senate in some cases, but not yet enacted into law.

Although the fundraising efforts for my campaign have not yet really gotten underway in a substantial way, the very early returns clearly show that the people will respond, and that sufficient funds can be obtained from small contributions.

Since December 21, 1973, more than 2,700 individuals have contributed to my campaign organization. No contribution exceeded $100. The total amount donated in this time has been over $45,000. Thus, the average contribution has been approximately $16.25.

I am enormously encouraged by these totals. They result principally from voluntary, unsolicited contributions and from returns on a preliminary test mailing which was sent out just before Christmas. The percentage of responses from this test mailing are more than double what is normally considered an excellent response. I am told that the percentage of responses may well exceed any other similar political mailing in our history. So, while the total number of persons solicited was small, the results clearly indicate that if the people believe in the candidate, know that their contribution is important, and feel that their small donation is significant, then they will respond.

I recognize, of course, that all candidates may not have the advantage of incumbency that I enjoy, having served 5 years in the Senate and 8 years in the House. And so I would not favor to impose by law such severe restrictions on candidates unless there were a realistic state of equality among candidates or some sort of compensatory public funding available to make up part of the money which a candidate sacrifices by refusing large gifts. In the context of a bill such as this, however, where significant public funds would be available, I believe we should all seriously consider whether political expenditures cannot be curtailed and therefore whether all contributions cannot be limited to the amounts suggested in the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. HASKELL). At this time, the hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, under the previous order, the Senate will proceed to vote on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) No. 1059.

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), and the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON), is absent on official business.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK), and the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY), are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT), is absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN), is absent due to illness in the family.

On this vote, the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN) is paired with the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY).

If present and voting, the Senator from Vermont would vote "yea" and the Senator from Illinois would vote "nay".

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 73, as follows:

So Mr. ALLEN's amendment (No. 1059) was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Colorado is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 1124

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1124.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

TITLE V—POLL CLOSING TIME

SEC. 501. SIMULTANEOUS POLL CLOSING TIME.—On every national election day commencing on the date of the national elections in 1976, the closing time of the polling places in the several States for the election of electors for President and Vice President of the United States and the election of United States Senators and Representatives shall be as follows: 11 postmeridian standard time in the eastern time zone; 10 postmeridian standard time in the central time zone; 9 postmeridian standard time in the Pacific time zone; 7 postmeridian standard time in the Yukon time zone; 6 postmeridian standard time in the Alaska-Hawaii time zone; and 5 postmeridian standard time in the Bering time zone: Provided, That the polling places in each of the States shall be open for at least twelve hours.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a unanimous consent request?

Mr. DOMINICK. I yield.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that upon the disposition of the amendment by Mr. DOMINICK, Senator STEVENSON be recognized to call up his amendment No. 977, and that there be a time limitation thereon of 40 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled in accordance with the usual form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes, and I say to my colleagues I think this is an interesting amendment. I talked a little about it last night.

The purpose of the amendment is to try to make Senator BELLMON'S amendment inoperative insofar as criminal penalties are concerned and constitutional insofar as the rest of it is concerned. What the amendment does in accomplishing this is to say that in every time zone, the polling will be staggered, so that all the polls throughout the entire United States, including the Bering Straits area and Hawaii, will close at the same time.

In order to do that, and in order to be able to give everybody a proper chance to vote, we have a provision in the amendment that all the polls in each time zone must be open for 12 hours.

So that on the eastern seaboard, with eastern standard time, for example, it specifies that the polls would open at 11 in the morning and close at 11 at night. By the time you get to the Bering Straits, they would open at 6 in the morning and would close at 6 at night.

The effect of this is to say to the media or television, or whatever it might be, that there is no way by which you can predict what the results are, because you will not know what the results are until the closing time in any precinct, unless everybody has voted in one precinct by noon.

I suppose they can predict on that basis, but that is pretty unreliable, and by so doing there would not be the obvious opportunity, that there would be in the Bellmon amendment, of someone dropping off a sheet somewhere for money or otherwise, and have someone go ahead and publish it and then have someone try to enforce the law with criminal penalties. I voted against the Bellmon amendment beacuse I thought it was unenforceable and that it was not in keeping with the rights of the news media under the first amendment.

This amendment means that the information will not be available, not by law but by circumstance. All polling places will be closing at the same time and no one will know the results in any time zone until all polls are closed. They will be open from 11 until 11 in the eastern standard time zone, from 10 to 10 in the central standard zone, from 9 to 9 in the Rocky Mountain area, where

I come from, from 8 until 8 in the Pacific zone, and so on through Hawaii and the Bering Straits.

In order to make this effective it seems to me we should concentrate, first, probably on the presidential election of 1976 rather than trying to do it in the senatorial and congressional elections of 1974. I say this because although predictions are made in senatorial and congressional races, those races do not influence as many voters as the presidential election. It would be effective in every national election starting with the national election in 1976.

Last night the distinguished Senator from Nevada, my good friend Howard Cannon, brought up the question of expense. Frankly, most of the States that lie in a specific time zone have 12 hours of polling time, anyway. This happens in Colorado, it happens in Kansas, and in New York. I have been a watcher in many of these places on various occasions in the past, and unless they have changed the laws recently there are still 12 hours available and so there will be no additional expense, and if there is additional expense, it will be minimum.

It is interesting that in our election process, for reasons I am not sure of, we probably have less people voting that in any other affluent and economically viable free state in the world. Our average is extraordinarily low. I wish to give some figures in that regard. In 1964, the year Senator GOLDWATER ran for the presidency, only 62 percent of eligible Americans cast a ballot for one of the presidential candidates, that is, either Lyndon Johnson or BARRY GOLDWATER.

In the off year congressional elections, the record is even worse. Less than 50 percent of Americans over 21 voted. On the other hand, in Europe, where uniform, nationwide voting hours are common practice—and granted in most of those countries there is a much smaller population—the percentages range from 87 percent in Denmark, which is quite small, to 72 percent in France, a country with which, as everyone knows, we are having some difficulty at the moment.

This might increase the number of people who feel they have the opportunity and privilege of going to vote when the horserace has not been decided by the electronic news media after the results are in from precincts.

The other day during the debate on the Bellmon amendment, the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY) said that he felt the predictions made after polling places in the eastern time zone had closed affected his election for President in 1968. The Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER) said that the news media had predicted after three precincts were in in the eastern time zone that he was going to be clobbered, and he said they were right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado may proceed.

Mr. DOMINICK. Nevertheless, what I am saying in general is that we have a provision which, in my opinion, is a very bad provision. Second, we will not need that provision in force and we can get away from all enforcement problems if this amendment is agreed to. Third, it will not cost any more money. Fourth, we might get away from the problem of what is going to happen.

As the Senator from Rhode Island said in previous colloquy, some years ago the National Governors Conference recommended this provision in 1966. In addition, the chairman of the board of ABC, surprisingly enough, also has come out in favor of this type resolution of the problem.

Mr. President, when the National Governors' Conference favors this provision, when the chairman of the board of ABC favors the provision, and we have the criticism of people throughout the country who do not know whether it is worthwhile to vote after there have been electronic predictions, it seems to me that here we have an inexpensive way to take care of the problem.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, in the absence of the chairman of the committee, speaking of the ranking minority member of the committee, and speaking with respect to the amendment, it was interesting that last night on ABC News Mr. Reasoner and Mr. Howard K. Smith discussed this matter.

Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield to me 3 minutes of his time?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. COOK. I was amazed because they went back to the election of 1972 to sustain their point. At no time during the discussion between Mr. Reasoner and Mr. Smith did they give actual voting figures. They talked about the fact that "based on our predictions we have predicted so and so will carry such and such a State." This is the very point we got into in a discussion with the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY) and the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BELLMON) the other day. Mr. Howard K. Smith proceeded to say that their studies showed there was no problem. I thought to myself what a lacing we would get if we stated that based on a study we had made it was shown that it does have an effect. It reminds me that they would have their own fox in their own chickenhouse.

I must say to the Senator from Colorado that one of the things they did say at the conclusion of their remarks blasting the Bellmon amendment and giving them right, not to make any fiat figures, but to make predictions, and the president of ABC now is on the side of the Senator from Colorado, because he said if they wanted to resolve that problem they would stagger the voting hours so all returns would come in at the same time. So I do not know whether the Senator from Colorado wants a major network on his side in regard to his amendment, but I would have to say, in all fairness, he now has one.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

I sort of have mixed emotions about this amendment, because I agree with the author of the amendment in principle as to what he is trying to do. I just have some reluctance about imposing these restrictions on the States. Again, I voted the same way he did on the Bellmon amendment. I think it was bad legislation, but the majority of our colleagues did not agree with us, even though some of them agreed with us last year, and some of them changed their positions, because it was defeated last year two to one, but it was passed a few days ago.

I cannot help but refer back to section 4 of article I of the Constitution, which says:

> The time, places and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof.

It is true that the section goes on to say:

> But the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

I hearken back to the initial statement there, where it was quite clear that it was the intent of the framers of the Constitution to leave it to the States to make their own determination as to the times of holding elections.

I personally do not find any fault with the Senator's amendment with respect to my own State, because it coincides somewhat with the times that we use, but I am thinking about the eastern part of the United States, where the polls could not open until 11 o'clock in the morning, in the State of Maryland, for example, unless Maryland decided it wanted to open them more than 12 hours a day, and, if it did that, it would have the problem of having to have another shift of workers or paying overtime to the people who were working.

So my basis of opposition to this amendment solely is that it ought to be left to the States to make the determination as to what hours will be set for holding the election, a time best suited to their needs.

I am fully cognizant of the fact that I did not support the Bellmon amendment, which precluded making any of that information public, and making it a criminal offense to do so. I can imagine someone being prosecuted because he called a friend on the phone in California and told him that the results of the election are such and such. There is a worse penalty for violation of that law than for transmitting illegal gambling information, I may say.

Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I yield myself 30 seconds.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER) be added as a cosponsor of the amendment, along with the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOMINICK. I yield.

Mr GOLDWATER. This is a subject to which, naturally, I have given quite a bit of thought. I would go further than the Senator's amendment; however, I am happy and honored to be a cosponsor.

I had thought of making election day a national holiday, which we did at one time, and making the day 20 hours long, starting at 6 one morning and ending at 6 another morning, and having the whole country on central time for that 1 day. That would eliminate all of the problems that seemingly would have come up in the reporting of early results from the East.

I think anything we can do to point up the importance of election day, regardless of how we go about it, is really the important thing.

If we can get only a bare majority of our people to vote, it would be well. Other nations, which have holidays on their election days, get 75 or sometimes 95 percent of the vote. That is a sad reflection on the state of apathy and disinterest of the citizens of this country. Frankly, we in politics have caused a lot of that, but we have to do everything we can to revitalize the interest of the people in the subject of politics.

I am very hopeful the amendment will be agreed to. I am happy the Senator has offered it.

I might say, by way of information for my colleagues, the only study I have ever seen on the subject of the influence of Eastern election results on Western voting was a doctor's thesis that was done at the University of Colorado. I long ago lost the paper, but he came out with some rather surprising results that are contrary to what we in politics believe to be the truth. He found it had very little effect, but I frankly believe it has a lot of effect. I think when people begin to hear how New York, Pennsylvania, and Ohio are voting, the people out in the boondocks of Arizona, Colorado, and California are likely to be influenced by that. I do not like to believe that Eastern thinking has that effect on the West, but, with all due respect, I think that is what happens.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I thank the Senator, and I yield myself 1 minute.

This amendment would not restrict the polling hours to 12 hours. Any State can make it 24 hours or whatever amount it wants to. All it provides is that each time zone has to close at the same time. That is all it says.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado (Mr. DOMINICK). The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. MCCLELLAN), and the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE), are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON), is absent on official business.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK) and the Senator the Illinois (Mr. PERCY) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT), is absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN) is absent due to illness in the family.

The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 42, as follows:

THE PRESIDENT'S TAX RETURNS

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to file with the Senate a report of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, transmitting a report of the committee staff to the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HASKELL). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. I might add, Mr. President, that the document I have just submitted is a staff analysis of the President's tax returns, as requested of the committee by the President. This document is not fully available to the press at this point. We believe that it will be available at 2 o'clock and that there will be copies made available in the caucus room of the Senate Office Building at that time.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Illinois is recognized to offer an amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 977

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 977, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistance legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENSON's amendment (No. 977) is as follows:

On page 79, strike lines 6 and 7 and insert the following in lieu thereof:

"SEC. 401. (a) Any candidate for nomination for or election to Federal office who,".

On page 79, following line 21, insert the following new subparagraph and renumber subsequent subparagraphs accordingly:

"(1) the amount of each tax paid by the individual, or by the individual and the individual's spouse filing jointly, for the preceding calendar year: Provided, That for purposes of this subparagraph 'tax' shall mean Federal, State, or local income tax and any any Federal, State, or local property tax;".

On page 81, line 9, strike the words "of political parties" and insert the following in lieu thereof: "for nomination for or election to Federal office".

On page 84, strike lines 3 through 5 and insert the following in lieu thereof:

"(1) The first report required under this section shall be due thirty days after the date of enactment and shall be filed with the Comptroller General of the United States, who shall, for purposes of this subsection, have the powers and duties conferred upon the Commission by this section."

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Basil Condos of my staff be granted the privilege of the floor during the debate and the vote on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, title IV of S. 3044 requires financial disclosure by all elected Federal officials, highl paid Federal employees, and candidates for Congress in general elections.

Its provisions are a vast improvement over existing law, and I commend the Committee on Rules and Administration for reporting them out. This amendment would strengthen disclosure requirements in three important respects.

First, and perhaps most important, my amendment requires disclosure of the amounts of all income and property taxes paid. Recent revelations about the tax affairs of the President and former Vice President have created the impression that there are two sets of tax laws, one for the politicians and one for everybody else. There is only one way to convince the public that Federal officials pay their fair share of taxes, and that is by disclosing the amount of taxes they pay.

Second, this amendment expands the dislcosure requirements to include nonincumbent candidates for President and primary candidates for all Federal elective office. This will discourage persons with questionable financial backgrounds from seeking Federal office and will make available to the electorate information about the finances of all—not just some—candidates in Federal primary and general elections. It would place all candidates for Federal office on the same footing.

Finally, the amendment advances the effective date of the first disclosure from May 15, 1975, to 30 days after enactment. This maximizes the chances that financial disclosure will occur prior to the November elections.

This amendment strikes a fair balance between the public's right to know and the candidate's right to privacy. It does not require disclosure of each charity to which every candidate makes a contribution or his tax return. It requires disclosure of the amounts of taxes; and that is all. And that, Mr. President, ought to be enough to assure the public that the candidate has in fact paid his share of State and Federal taxes.

Financial disclosure is needed not so much, because of the wrongdoing it may expose or prevent, but because of the doubts it will lay to rest. The overwhelming majority of public officials abide by the laws they make and administer. The primary purpose of financial disclosure to convince the public that it can trust its elected representatives. There is no other way. Trust must be earned with facts; it cannot be elicited with empty words.

Watergate and other sordid events of recent months have shown us politics at its worst. In the actions of Judge Sirica, Elliot Richardson, Archibald Cox, and Leon Jaworski, it has also shown us public service at its best. Watergate could have occurred anywhere in the world, but only in a great and good nation could the subsequent effort to find the truth and do justice have been made.

The legacy of Watergate can be either lingering public cynicism and governmental drift, or more open and effective self-government. I believe we have the will and the vision to make the right choice, and that the enactment of financial disclosure legislation is an important part of that choice.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

I have sort of mixed emotions about this amendment. The full disclosure provision that is in the bill now before us was my amendment, and I thought it was quite comprehensive. It related, I thought, to every item that would reflect on a person's public life, that is, the source of each item of income, of reimbursement, of any gift that they might receive outside of the immediate family, the identity of assets held, the amount of liabilities, all transactions in securities, all transactions in commodities, and the purchase or sale of homes, and I thought we did everything in there that was necessary to have a full and complete disclosure. I did stop short of an amendment requiring them to file the income tax return which would carry with it the items the Senator from Illinois has suggested. I did that because many people have felt and still feel that everyone is entitled to some privacy and perhaps the only privacy left is that which is covered on the income tax return. But I may say, if this amendment is adopted, then the only thing that would be omitted would be contributions to charity. That would be the only thing I can think of that would not be covered under this disclosure feature.

I do not feel very strongly about it but I think it is a question of whether Congress wants to include all these people—not simply Congress—but to include civil servants with grade 16 and above, to include the military, and to include all members of the judiciary.

So I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time and, at such time as it is appropriate, I intend to move to table the amendment, because it is just a straight up and down issue of whether we want to have complete disclosure to include the income tax return, or whether we do not, because, as I see it, the only thing remaining after we have this, is contributions to charity. I can well understand the reasons for the amendment. It arises out of the publicity given to the report filed here a few minutes ago.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in adjournment until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATHAWAY). Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE ON FRIDAY, APRIL 5, 1974

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on Friday next, the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. PROXMIRE) may be recognized for 15 minutes, after the two leaders or their designees have been recognized under the standing order.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—may I inquire of the distinguished majority whip, is it the intention at that time that the vote on cloture will occur at 1 o'clock?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. The vote on cloture will occur after the call to establish a quorum, which would begin at 1 o'clock.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, an excellent, comprehensive editorial in today's Christian Science Monitor wraps up the entire campaign finance reform picture. In view of our continuing debate on this subject, I offer this outstanding article for the review of my colleagues.

I ask unanimous consent that this editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE MONITOR'S VIEW: CAMPAIGN FINANCE REFORM

Campaign reform, made daily more imperative by the continuing flood of disclosures of massive abuses during the 1972 campaign, is not moving ahead through the Congress as fast as we would like. But it is moving. And prospects are reasonably good for a healthy reform bill.

The legislative situation is as follows:

The Senate has before it a comprehensive reform bill which was approved by the Rules Committee last month. It has been on the floor of the Senate for the last week. Sen. James Allen of Alabama, who was outvoted by the Rules Committee 7-to-1, is running a sophisticated filibuster effort on the floor. The first stage of his delay campaign was to offer a series of amendments. Fortunately these were defeated. He may next try to provoke a series of cloture votes and delay action long enough so the senators may feel compelled to move on to something else. The public should support a cloture move to cut short delay and let the Senate vote on the bill on its merits.

In the House, too, public backing is needed to keep campaign reform action going. The House is considering two bills. The first, the Anderson-Udall bill which was submitted to the House last year, embraces most of the Senate bill's desirable campaign reforms. The second bill is that emerging from the House Administration Committee under Chairman Wayne Hays. The Hays bill appears to be shaping up as a version asking the least change—but unfortunately it, not the Anderson-Udall bill, will be the basis for House action. Thus the task in the House will be to beef up the eventual Hays bill in the three areas it appears likely to be weak—in providing for a strong enforcement arm under an independent Federal Election Commission; in making sure campaign spending limits are set high enough so that rivals will have a fair chance to unseat incumbents; and in providing public financing for congressional as well as presidential races.

Representative Hays only a couple of weeks ago seemed determined to clamp procedural restrictions on his bill so the House would have to pass it or reject it, without democratic debate and amendment. Fortunately, after a stiff public rebuke catalyzed by a full-page Common Cause ad, Representative Hays has reportedly decided to let his committee's bill get the review by the House that it needs.

ITS SHAPE

What are the campaign finance reforms it is now hoped Watergate will bring?

Reform advocates put them into four main groups:

1. An independent enforcement body. Both the Senate bill and the Anderson-Udall bill would create a Federal Election Commission (FEC) with its own power to prosecute offenders. The Hays bill would omit the FEC and would leave enforcement in the Justice Department. The Nixon proposal would create an FEC, but would follow the Hays bill in leaving enforcement to the Justice Department. A conflict is posed by having the Justice Department—a Cabinet department within the executive branch shown vulnerable to political pressure by Watergate—police election finances. Reform advocates think the Senate/Anderson-Udall provision for independent enforcement will likely be passed.

2. Limits on contributions. The amount individuals or interest groups could contribute to campaigns varies in the Senate, Anderson-Udall, Hays, and Nixon versions. But limits appear likely to pass. The Senate bill would allow individuals to give a candidate $3,000 for a primary race, another $3,000 for the general election, for a total of $6,000 per candidate. An individual could give no more than $25,000 for all campaigns he wanted to cover. In the various versions, interest groups—such as the political action committees of business, labor, and public interest organizations—could be limited to a ceiling ranging from $2,500 to $6,000 in contributions to single candidates. But they could give in all House and Senate as well as presidential contests, without the $25,000 aggregate limit individuals would face.

3. Limits on campaign spending. The Nixon administration is against limits on campaign spending; the Hays and Senate versions include them, using different formulas. The Hays bill would set a $20 million limit on a presidential race, which appears a sufficient sum. But it would set a low House race ceiling, say of $50,000 or $60,000. Since in most recent tight House races spending passed the $100,000 mark, the low ceiling has been dubbed an "incumbents protection act" by reform advocates. Ironically, then, reformers want to keep campaign spending high enough so that incumbents don't swap the 2-to-1 advantage they now hold in attracting funds, for a law that would keep challengers from mounting a viable campaign.

4. Public subsidies for primary and general elections. Emerging proposals vary on this issue. The administration opposes any mandatory or voluntary public financing for any election. The Hays bill would make public financing of presidential general elections mandatory, the revenue to come from the existing tax checkoff system; but it would skip public financing for presidential primaries or for congressional races. The Senate bill would allow full public funding for presidential and congressional general elections, plus public funds in primaries on a matching basis. Some compromise is likely to develop.

The healthy inflow of tax-checkoff money on federal income tax returns now indicates there would be plenty in the Treasury to pay for a presidential primary and general elections in 1976. Raising the money for public funding of all federal elections thus should be no problem.

AND PURPOSE

The purpose of campaign finance reform is to reduce the influence of special interest money-givers to tolerable limits.

Reducing the amount an interest group can give any officeseeker to, say, $2,500 in a $100,000 campaign should keep politicians from being pocketed by big givers. When contributors can give as much as $20,000 or more as they do now, it is much harder for office holders to ignore their wishes.

The purpose of campaign finance reform is not to do away with influence groups, however. Lobbies presenting the views of business or labor or of the environmentalists should have the right to petition congressmen openly and to present their cases to the public. This is democratic procedure.

Nor is the purpose of campaign reform to weaken the present political system and eliminate entirely such rites as the fund-raising dinner. Abuses should be stopped. Interest groups should not be able to buy up seats at party dinners or earmark gifts for specific candidates. Functions like dinners help in rallying the faithful. But with such events as the $1,000-a-plate Republican and $500-a-plate Democratic fund-raising bashes in recent days; with most giving coming from interest groups, rallying the voters seems less the goal than raking in the dollars.

Nor need parties be weakened because candidates would be less dependent on them for financial support. The two major parties have been losing voter allegiance as it is, under the present system. They could perhaps regain influence among thoughtful voters if the parties stressed platform and policies more, and financial power less.

Again, the purpose of campaign finance reform is to hold the influence of money-giving to tolerable limits. When 90 percent of campaign contributions come from only 1 percent of the people, as is now the case, too much influence is clearly in too few hands.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on each of the two amendments to be offered by the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), No. 1126 and No 1075, there be a time limitation of 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled in accordance with the usual form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, the pending amendment No. 977, does not require the disclosure of income tax returns. As the Senator from Nevada mentioned, it does not require disclosure of charitable deductions. It does not require disclosure of any other deductions; it requires only the disclosure of the amount of income taxes and property taxes.

The reason for the disclosure requirement should be painfully obvious to every Member of the Senate. The reason is that the public wants to make sure of the integrity of its tax system, it wants to make sure of the integrity of the political institutions in this country, and of its public men and women. Doubts in the public mind about whether all Federal officials are really paying their fair share of taxes are understandable; and the American people have a right to be reassured on that score. I do not expect the amendment will prevent wrongdoing or expose wrongdoing. I am sure that most public officials pay their taxes. This is for the benefit of the vast majority of public officials who are law abiding and who do abide by the laws which they make and administer, as well as for the public's benefit. Its primary purpose is to put to rest those suspicions and those doubts about not only the integrity of men and women in public office, and candidates running for public office, but about the institutions of this country, including its tax system.

Mr. CANNON. On the matter of property taxes, that is already a matter of public record so the Senator has not asked for anything that is not a matter of public record. The only thing the Senator is asking for is the amount of the income tax they file. The question is, does the Senator want to require everyone to make public the amount of his income tax? If the Senator does, he might just as well have them file the entire income tax return and make it public.

So far as I am concerned, I would just as soon make everyone's public and I may offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. STEVENSON. If it is true that property taxes are a matter of public record, then there should not be any objection to that portion of the amendment. The fact is that information on property taxes is very difficult to obtain. In some States it is more difficult than in other States. This amendment would collect that information in one central place and make it easily available to the public.

On the other point, I feel strongly that public officials do have a right to privacy, and that their privacy should be protected. Disclosure of the income tax return would invade that right. This amendment is intended to strike the balance between the right of privacy on the one hand and the American public's right to know.

Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I move to table the amendment of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON).

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President I ask for the yeas and nays.

There was not a sufficient second.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada to table the amendment of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON).

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON) is absent on official business.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN) is absent due to illness in the family.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY) would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 55, as follows:

[No. 108 Leg.]

So the motion to table was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, does the distinguished Senator from Illinois ask for a rollcall vote?

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the yeas and nays be vacated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 1052 and ask that it be stated by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Amendment No. 1052 is as follows:

SEC. 402. No Member of Congress shall accept or receive any honorarium, fee, payment, or expense allowance other than for actual out-of-pocket travel and lodging expenses from any source whatsoever for any speech, article, writing, discussion, message, or apearance other than in payment of his official salary and for official reimbursements or allowances from the United States Treasury.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; I am delighted to yield.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. It is my understanding the Senator would want the yeas and nays on this amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Having discussed this amendment with the distinguished Senator, I understand it is agreeable with him if we get consent to vote on the amendment at the hour of 2:30 p.m. today.

Mr. ALLEN. That would be entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I propose a unanimous-consent request, without any division of time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. COOK. Does the Senator have any idea how long he wishes to take on this amendment?

Mr. ALLEN. Well, I will speak all the time that another Senator does not wish to speak. If the Senator would wish to use the entire time, it would be satisfactory to the Senator from Alabama. I will yield any time the Senator desires to speak.

Mr. COOK. All I wish to do is clear up the time situation. I have no objection to the amendment. From my standpoint, I would be perfectly willing to accept the amendment. I was wondering, with the vote not occurring until 2:30, whether the Senator would wish to dwell on this subject until 2:30, or recess until a convenient time.

Mr. ALLEN. No, I do not think we ought to recess. I think this is a very important matter, which should be fully debated. I do not think we should recess. I think it would be well if the Senator could encourage other Senators to come in and listen to this discussion.

Mr. COOK. I would suggest that this is his amendment. I appreciate the suggestion that I encourage other Senators to come in and hear the debate, but it is his amendment, and I am sure he would want other Senators to come here.

Mr. ALLEN. I appreciate the distinguished Senator from Kentucky's sitting through the discussion. I hope he will lend his approving voice to the amendment. I understood him to say he was for the amendment.

Mr. COOK. That is right.

Mr. ALLEN. I apppreciate that position of the distinguished Senator. I believe it would be about the first amendment that we have agreed upon since this bill has been under discussion for the last 7 or 8 days.

Mr. COOK. I am not sure whether it is or not.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator is for public financing, and the Senator from Alabama is not; many of the amendments have had that context in them.

Mr. COOK. I am not here to get into a colloquy with the distinguished Senator about the rest of the bill; it was just about this amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I think it might be well, in accordance with the custom, inasmuch as the clerk did not read the amendment except by title, to read what is in the amendment. The amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Alabama would add a new section to the bill, section 402, which is to be inserted on page 85, between lines 5 and 6. The following new section would be added:

No Member of Congress shall accept or receive any honorarium, fee, payment, or expense allowance other than for actual out-of-pocket travel and lodging expenses from any source whatsoever for any speech, article, writing, discussion, message, or appearance other than in payment of his official salary and for official reimbursements or allowances from the United States Treasury.

That would include a Member of the House of Representatives or a Member of the Senate.

The figures that I noticed in a memorandum just the other day—I do not have the memorandum with me at the time, but this would be an important point—indicated that in 1972, Members of the Senate received more than $600,000 in honoraria or payments for speeches or appearances.

I have no hesitancy in offering this amendment, because the Senator from Alabama, since he first entered politics as a member of the Alabama State Legislature in 1939, has never accepted any fee, payment, honorarium, expense payment, or anything else of value whatsoever for any appearance or speech that the Senator from Alabama has ever made.

The Senator from Alabama takes the position that if he feels that it is a part of his duty and responsibility as a Member of the U.S. Senate to accept an invitation to speak or appear on a program, that appearance should be at the expense of the Senator from Alabama. That is the invariable custom the Senator from Alabama has followed for some 35 years, and he expects to continue that custom.

Much more important, though, than this amendment, which I anticipate will get a fairly good vote, was an amendment that the Senator from Alabama introduced some time ago. That amendment received very little notice in the media. It was an amendment that would have prevented——

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, so that we might ask for the yeas and nays?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, I yield for that purpose.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COOK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the amendment the Senator from Alabama offered would have prevented any Member of the 93d Congress, the Congress which we are now in, from receiving any matching funds, or any Federal subsidy, in connection with a race for the Presidential nomination of either of the political parties for the Presidential term commencing January 20, 1972, which, of course, will be the position that will be at stake in 1976. A fairly good vote was cast for that amendment.

The Senator from Alabama took the position that if the public taxpayer subsidy was an idea whose time had come, then certainly a Member of Congress who favored the subsidy plan would have no objection, in order to get the principle enacted, to waiving his right or claim to any subsidy payment by the taxpayers which would aid him in furthering his political ambition in the race for the presidential nomination of one of the two major parties.

The Senator from Alabama felt that surely what was involved was not money, but principle. He felt certain that those who are pushing the bill—and it is quite obvious that some of the people who are pushing the bill are perpetual candidates for President—the Senator from Alabama thought that since there was so much interest in this principle, they would be willing to waive their claim to a subsidy in their race for the presidential nomination. But he was wrong about that. There was not a single Member of the Senate who was regarded as a possible or probable potential candidate for the Presidency who voted for the amendment of the Senator from Alabama—not a single one of them.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. DOLE. Let me say, as a part of the question, that I share the view that the Senator expressed with reference to the amendment. I was wondering whether the Senator could not modify his amendment to include a Member of Congress, so as to prevent a Senator or Member of the House from receiving any such income. It might be fair to prevent him from receiving any other income, whether it be stocks, bonds, interest, or whatever else it may be.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator wishes to offer an amendment, the amendment will be open to amendment at 2:30 o'clock. There would be nothing to prevent the Senator from offering an amendment of that sort.

Mr. DOLE. The question is whether there might be any income different from an honorarium.. There might be income from some other source.

Mr. ALLEN. I have no opinion, one way or the other, on the Senator's proposal. But anything which makes use of the office of the U.S. Senator or Member of the House of Representatives is, I think, subject to regulation by Congress.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. TOWER. As the Senator from Kansas has said, the outside income part would be waived.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know about outside income.

Mr. TOWER. Would the Senator from Alabama agree to accept such an amendment?

Mr. ALLEN. I woud have to see the amendment.

Mr. TOWER. It occurs to me that what the Senator is proposing means that perhaps the people who, before they came to the Senate, had never accumulated any of the world's wealth, will not be allowed to make any additional income, while those who have inherited wealth may continue to enjoy such wealth. I hope that that never occurs.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Alabama does not see it that way. The fact is that no Member of Congress should use his office for the purpose of obtaining outside honoraria or payments that he would not receive if he were not a Member of Congress.

Mr. TOWER. What about Members of Congress who were lecturers for honoraria before they came to Congress.

Mr. ALLEN. This does not control that. This just seeks to control the actions of Members of Congress while they are Members of Congress. Obviously that is all that can be controlled.

The Senator from Texas, on the expiration of his term of office, would be abel to obtain all the honoraria that anyone is willing to accord to him.

Mr. TOWER. What the Senator's amendment does is deny a professional lecturer or writer income from that profession after he becomes a Senator, but it does not deny a business man, lawyer, or farmer his income after he comes to the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, but the Senator seems to overlook the fact that service in Congress is public service, whereas these other services the Senator is talking about are private services, and one private service added to another private service is all right. A private service added to a public service does not come out just right, in the opinion of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. TOWER. Could a Senator use his public office to enhance his personal wealth by using the office to enhance his business interests?

Mr. ALLEN. This Senator does not have any business interests.

Mr. TOWER. This Senator does not, either.

Mr. ALLEN. What is the Senator arguing about, then?

Mr. TOWER. I am simply pointing out what I consider to be the shortcomings in the Senator's amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator has a right to argue against it, and also vote against it, and I imagine the Senator will be in the majority.

Mr. TOWER. Because he is prorich and antipoor, is that it?

Mr. ALLEN. That is what the Senator says. The Senator from Alabama does not see it that way.

Mr. President, going on with the amendment forbidding Members of the 93d Congress from running for President on the political subsidy provided by this bill: I say, Mr. President, that if we knock out of this bill—and the Senator from Alabama has tried to do that and failed—this tremendous subsidy for candidates for the Presidential nominations of the two parties, we would find practically all the wind out of the sails of this bill. This is a monumental subsidy, Mr. President, that is given to potential candidates for the Democratic nomination and the Republican nomination for the Presidency.

Mr. President, there are more candidates for the Presidency here in the halls of Congress than in any other area. From reading in the newspapers from time to time about the various candidates of potential candidates, it appears that there are some 8 or 10 in Congress that are regarded as candidates for the Presidency. None of them have made any outright announcements, but every single one of them will have the right to get from the Public Treasury up to $7.5 million, each.

Is that campaign reform? That adds a new element: in order to get that $7.5 million, it would be necessary for one of these candidates—and do not forget that this subsidy provisions is going to increase greatly the number of candidates—to receive in contributions of up to $250 a like amount, because the matching is on a 50–50 basis.

I thought the argument had been made that one of the reasons that political campaigns are not conducted properly is that there is too much money being spent. Well, if that be stricken, why add this $7.5 million to the campaign funds of the various candidates for the Presidency? That would be doubling, I assume in most cases, what had been raised from private sources.

What ought to be done, Mr. President—and earlier today the Senator from Alabama offered an amendment that would have done so—is cut the amount of contributions to be made down to a maximum of $250 for Presidential races and $100 for congressional races. But it got mighty few votes, because there is no interest in cutting down on overall expenditures. There is no interest in that, as witness the Presidential nomination contests, adding $7.5 million to the $7.5 million that the candidate collects.

Another danger that I foresee, Mr. President, in this tremendous subsidy given to Presidential candidates, is in the fact that they do not have to go into these Presidential preference primaries. All they have to do is receive contributions and get them matched by the Federal Government, matched by the taxpayers. They could refrain from going into the primaries, conserve these tremendous sums of money, and go to the national conventions of the parties with a campaign fund for expenditures at the convention of up to $15 million.

Well, I do not say that anything improper would take place with a candidate or two candidates or three candidates being in Chicago or Miami at the national convention armed with $15 million in cash. That is possible under this bill. I do not know that a sinister use would be made of that $15 million. But I do not see that the Federal Government, the taxpayers of the country, should be called on to put up a subsidy of $7.5 million to everyone who wants to run for President and who can get out and raise a quarter of a million dollars. That is the requirement.

I guess you have to be 35 years old to get this money, but that would be the only requirement—that and getting $250,000 in contributions of not more than $250. So it could all be raised in one State; it could all be raised in one county, or it could all be raised in one city. It could all be raised by members of a pressure group, and once they raise the $250,000, they apply to the Federal Government to match them. It backs up and takes that in, and acts prospectively and retrospectively. It takes them all in, everything they have collected and everything they will collect in the future, on matching.

I believe that that amendment, if properly presented to the country, would receive the support of the American people, not making that money available to Members of Congress to set up the subsidy plan.

There has been talk about the danger of big contributions. Well, if Senators have any worry about big contributions, they ought to support the amendment I introduced earlier today—to limit the contribution to $250 to a Presidential fund for House and Senate. They are not worried so much about that. It seems to me that they are worried about wanting tremendous sums on which to run. That is what they want.

A time or two I have used the example of the State of California. I use that because that is a large State. Not only do they provide for matching half the contributions in the Senate race up to a $100 contribution, not only do they provide for matching all those contributions up to a total of $1,400,000 in a Senate race, which would be, potentially, possibly $700,000 from the Federal Government and $700,000 from the candidate—that is, in the primary—but once they get to the general election, what do they do?

The Federal Government writes them a check for each one of the candidates in the major parties. They may have financed half a dozen or a dozen candidates in the two primaries, but once that shapes down and it gets down to one on each party, they write each one of those candidates a check for $2,121,000. That is a pretty nice little "kitty" to be paid out of the taxpayers' pockets.

Mr. President, earlier this year, the Senate, when a proposal was submitted to it of raising the salaries of Members of Congress, House and Senate, by some $2,500—and the Senator from Alabama voted against that—the Senate by a top-heavy vote, as a result of strong public opinion against it, voted down that pay raise, even though it provided for only a $2,500-a-year raise for Members of the House and Senate.

Mr. President, what is the public going to think—if they are ever advised, and of course the news media are not going to do a great deal about advising the public—when they find out that we are setting up a fund of up to $7.5 million for each Member of the House and Senate that wants to run for President—$7.5 million, up to that amount?

I do not believe that the public will look with much favor on that. I do not believe the public, and I do not believe the citizens of California, would favor it for every candidate in both primaries out there running for the Senate, and then $2,121,000 for each candidate for the Senate in the general election.

If they balk at raising a Senator's salary by some $2,500, do you not think, Mr. President, they would choke on a $7.5 million fund for a Presidential candidate who is a Member of Congress?

I believe that they would. Do you not think, Mr. President, that they would look with disfavor on setting up a general election campaign financed to the extent of $2,121,000 for each party candidate for the Senate?

Why should such tremendous sums be spent, Mr. President, in taking the election process and removing it far from the grassroots, far from the people back home, at a time when we need to take more interest in our campaigns, when we need more voluntary participation, and not this mandatory contribution by the taxpayers?

Mr. President, on the general election subsidy, it would require the taxpayer—as a member of the great body of taxpayers throughout the country to help finance, because every taxpayer and every citizen has an interest in the condition of the Treasury and where the tax money goes—to pay for the campaign expenses of a candidate with whose views and political philosophy he is in strong disagreement.

Is that democracy? Is that reform, to put that burden on the taxpayer and say; "Whether you like it or not, your funds will be used to support a candidate whether you agree with his views or not"?

A dyed-in-the-wool conservative would be paying the campaign expenses, or helping to pay them, or an ultraliberal taxpayer would be required to help pay the expenses of an ultraconservative candidate.

I would much prefer the approach of the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. ERVIN) and the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER). Later on today, as I understand it, they will propose an amendment to knock out title I and substitute a provision giving the taxpayer a credit of half his contribution up to $300. In other words, that would be in effect a rebate of $150. That would let the taxpayer make contributions to anyone he saw fit, someone whose views more nearly coincided with his own.

So that sort of approach appeals to the Senator from Alabama. Certainly he would support that amendment.

Mr. President, getting back to the case of the situation in California—and it is the same picture throughout the country, although to a lesser degree, but naturally the figures are higher in California—the subsidy that the taxpayer would be giving each of the candidates for the Senate in the general election, this subsidy of $2,121,000—and I get that figure from information prepared by the Committee on Rules and Administration—I did not furnish it myself—after consulting the information, I see that my memory was right on it—the figure is $2,121,000.

Let us compare that with the salary of a U.S. Senator. There should be some relationship, I would assume, between the compensation paid to the holder of an office and the amount of his campaign funds. Let us see how that compares with the Government paying each of the Senate candidates $2,121,000. There is no provision about prudent management of this money. It is turned over to him, apparently, just in one big check. He can go out and hire his brother-in-law to be his campaign manager, at a big salary. He can give some cousin in the advertising business an override on his expenditures. He can set up a high-salaried campaign staff. The Government is paying it all, every dime of it. There is no requirement whatsoever for prudent management of this money. It just hands it over to him.

According to my arithmetic, a U.S. Senator would make, during his 6-year term, in the neighborhood of a quarter of a million dollars, slightly more. But the Government, the taxpayer—the regimented taxpayers, I might say, not the voluntary taxpayers—would be paying for his campaign fund 9 times as much as the Senator would earn in his entire 6-year term. There is something wrong somewhere with a situation such as this. That is what this bill provides. I am not making this up; I am not advocating it; as a matter of fact, I am condemning it. The Government would pay 9 times as much money to the Senator as he would earn in 6 years of service in the U.S. Senate, with not a single bit of control over that money, except that it is required to go for campaign expenses.

MR. TOWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. TOWER. I agree with the Senator and his argument against public financing. I am strongly opposed to it. I do not quite see the relationship between the amendment the Senator has offered now to the issue of public financing, and I am wondering whether the Senator would accept an amendment in this form.

At the end of line 7, strike the period and insert in lieu thereof a comma and the following language:

nor shall he accept any subsidy payment from the U.S. Treasury, nor shall he accept any income from any enterprise that is regulated or financed either wholly or in part by the government of the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. I am sorry; I did not hear the first two words. Would the Senator read it again or let me have a copy?

Mr. TOWER. I will be glad to provide the Senator with a copy.

At the end of line 7, strike the period and insert a comma and the following:

nor shall he accept any subsidy payment from the U.S. Treasury, nor shall he accept any income from any enterprise that is regulated or financed either wholly or in part by the government of the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. I would suggest to the Senator that I would like to have a vote up and down on the amendment I have offered. If the Senator would like to offer it as an amendment, he would certainly have a right to do so; and I would be willing at this time, inasmuch as we have a vote scheduled at 2:30, to yield to him, if we can get unanimous consent, so much of that time as he would like to have in order to advocate his amendment.

Mr. TOWER. If I might ask the Senator a further question——

Mr. ALLEN. I would not want to dilute the amendment I have offered.

Mr. TOWER. This would not dilute it; it would strengthen it.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator feels that way about it, he is at liberty to offer an amendment.

Mr. TOWER. Does not the Senator feel that this is consistent with the amendment he is offering?

Mr. ALLEN. What the Senator from Alabama is seeking to reach is one thing. If the Senator from Texas wishes to reach something else, he has a right to offer an amendment.

Mr. TOWER. It is my understanding of the thrust of the Senator from Alabama's amendment that a Senator should not use his office to make additional money. What about a Senator who votes on an agricultural subsidy and yet receives that subsidy? What about a Senator who votes on the regulation of the securities industry and has income from securities?

Mr. ALLEN. Is the Senator talking about a Senator using his office to obtain additional funds? The Senator is talking about a Senator using his vote.

Mr. TOWER. Is he using his office to lecture, if perhaps it is a professional lecture? Why is it necessary that he use his office for a lecture fee?

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the Senator if he thinks that a Senator is as much in demand for lectures after leaving the U.S. Senate as he is while he is a Member of the Senate?

Mr. TOWER. It is very probable that membership in the Senate enhances one's ability to be invited to speak for honoraria. But it also occurs to me that a Senator does have the opportunity to vote on matters from which he may derive income. That is the thrust of this amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I suggest to the Senator that he offer his own amendment. The Senator from Alabama has offered his. It would be up to the Senator from Texas to offer his amendment, if he thinks well of it.

Mr. TOWER. I am sorry; I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. Did the Senator offer an amendment?

Mr. TOWER. I will offer it as an amendment when the time of the Senator from Alabama has expired.

Mr. ALLEN. As I told the Senator, if he wishes time, the Senator from Alabama will yield him such time as he wishes, in order that he might offer his amendment and discuss it.

Mr. TOWER. All right.

Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask that it be stated.

Mr. ALLEN. How much time does the Senator wish?

Mr. TOWER. 3 minutes.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield 3 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises the Senator from Alabama that he has no time under his control.

The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 7, strike the period and in lieu thereof insert a comma and the following:

nor shall he accept any subsidy payment from the U.S. Treasury, nor shall he accept any income from any enterprise that is regulated or financed either wholly or in part by the Government of the United States.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TOWER. Inasmuch as this is an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered, is it necessary to get the yeas and nays on this amendment, specifically?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The answer is "Yes."

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COOK. If the Senator asks for the yeas and nays, he may have the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. COOK. But am I not correct, from a parliamentary point of view, that the yeas and nays on his amendment cannot take place until 2:30?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote on the amendment of the Senator from Texas can come right now, if he has finished speaking.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment. I will ask for them as soon as we get enough Senators in the Chamber to provide a second.

Mr. President, while other Senators are coming to the floor, let me say that if we are going to bar one form of outside income from Members of Congress, I think we should bar other forms. I do not believe that anybody I know in the U.S. Senate uses his office in an untoward or unethical or illegal way to line his pockets. I believe there are a hundred honorable men here. But if the intent of this amendment is to remove any suspicion from Members of the Senate, it seems to me that we should go all the way.

It appears to me that the amendment I offer is entirely consistent with the letter and the spirit of the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so we may ask for the yeas and nays?

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second. The yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. TOWER. I yield for a question?

Mr. PELL. In the Senator's amendment when it is stated that no Senator may accept a subsidy, would that include the subsidy of public financing?

Mr. TOWER. It would not include public financing, and that is explicit, in that public financing is expressly authorized. The subsidy would be such matters as agricultural subsidies, and other funds the Government offers as an inducement to do or not to do something, or to pursue or not to pursue a certain enterprise.

Mr. PELL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOWER. I yield.

Mr. COOK. In other words let us take this example. This Senator voted in favor of the so-called Lockheed bill. I have no stock in any airline, any airline company, or anywhere else but if he had had voted in favor of such a thing that would be in the nature of receiving a subsidy from the United States. Is that correct?

Mr. TOWER. In connection with that legislation I was the minority floor manager. I maintained that was not a subsidy but that it was a Government guarantee to them. But had someone here been a stockholder in Lockheed he could have been a beneficiary in that the Government guaranteed loans and keep the company from falling to its knees.

Mr. COOK. If we take that situation to be in the category of a loan guarantee, which I am willing to accept, let us take the receipt of a direct benefit. Take the so-called farm pond programs where they build ponds all over the United States.

Mr. TOWER. That would be included in the purview of my amendment. In addition, the interstate sales of securities in this country is restricted by the Securities and Exchange Commission, which would deal with any money from securities.

Mr. COOK. I know there are many types of direct agricultural subsidies. Would the Senator say this would be included in parities? As long as he sold his goods on the open market it would not be included.

Mr. TOWER. It would not be included, if he took the market regulated price. But if he took the subsidy, this would bar taking the subsidy, and he would have to go to the open market.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TOWER. I yield.

Mr. PELL. So that I can understand what the amendment provides, would this mean that if a Senator were a stockholder in a corporation and that corporation received a direct benefit of one sort of another from the Federal Government he would be prohibited by law from being in that position?

Mr. TOWER. He would not, provided that the corporation was not regulated or financed by the U.S. Government.

Mr. PELL. This really provides that all Senators must be sure that their investment portfolios do not include any industry affected by actions of the Federal Government, and that is every industry.

Mr. TOWER. I specify directly affected, through regulation or financing. I assume it would not apply to some business that is wholly without Government regulations, loans, financing, or funding.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOWER. I yield.

Mr. HART Would a Senator who had on deposit funds in a savings account in a federally insured bank be subject to this provision?

Mr. TOWER. He would be subject to it because banks are regulated by the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. HART. Does the Senator think that that reaches a little broader than is needed or that is required in order that the people have confidence that we are not being influenced in our role here?

Mr. TOWER. I admit it is extreme, but Where does one start? What should be considered legitimate and what should not be considered legitimate. To obviate doubt in anyone's mind we should go all the way.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. TOWER. I yield.

Mr. PELL If the Senator goes all the way, as this amendment would do, it would mean that a Senator who has 100 shares in the XYZ corporation is not going to benefit; it would be impossible to count up the benefit to the infinitesimal part of a penny and he would be hard put, if he were lucky enough to have money, to know where to invest it.

Mr. TOWER. That is true. We make it difficult for people we confirm for the executive departments and agencies. We require them to put everything in a blind trust that might result in a conflict of interest. We virtually made Mr. David Packard take an oath of poverty before confirming him. I do not know why we cannot use that standard ourselves.

Mr. President, I am prepared to yield the floor.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOWER. I yield.

Mr. COOK. Would the Senator accept an amendment to his amendment, in the last sentence, which would say that the purchase of Government bonds and securities would be exempt from the amendment? I am a great believer in the purchase of Government bonds. I have bought them almost all my adult life and during a great deal of my young life. I try the best I can to get all the employees in my office to purchase them, to the best of their ability.

I am wondering because I feel strongly about making an investment in one's country and Government.

Mr. TOWER. I think the Senator has made an excellent point. I would be prepared to modify my amendment to that extent. If the Senator will frame such an amendment for me I would accept it.

Mr. President, in the interim, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator modifying his amendment?

Mr. TOWER. We have to draft it first.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may modify my amendment by adding a comma after the words "United States" and the words:

Provided that any income from U.S. Government securities shall be exempt from this provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TOWER's amendment, as modified, to Mr. ALLEN's amendment is as follows:

Nor shall he accept any subsidy payment from the U.S. Treasury, nor shall he accept any income from any enterprise that is regulated or financed either wholly or in part by the Government of the United States, provided that any income from U.S. Government securities shall be exempt from this provision.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I move to table the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to table the Tower amendment, as modified, to the Allen amendment. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), and the Snator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON) is absent on official business.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY) is necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN) is absent due to illness in the family.

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 49, as follows:

So Mr. ALLEN's motion to lay on the table Mr. TOWER's amendment, as modified, to Mr. ALLEN's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Texas, as modified, to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the yeas and nays be vacated and that we be permitted to have a voice vote.

Mr. ALLEN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska Mr. GRAVEL), and the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON) is absent on official business.

So Mr. TOWER's amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I have an amendment to the Allen amendment at the desk which I ask be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the Allen amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On line 5, following "appearance", insert the words:

"or any other compensation including but not limited to income from a law practice, stock and bond dividends and rentals,

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. ABOUREZK) to the Allen amendment.

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), and the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. JOHNSTON) are necessarily absent.

So Mr. ABOUREZK's amendment to the Allen amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, few people question the conclusion of public opinion polls which show that the citizens of this country do not have a very high regard for the Congress, as an institution. We are all aware that recent ratings show the Congress in less favor than the President, despite his massive difficulties. I suggest that cynical political maneuvers such as the one we just witnessed do little to dispell this attitude. The people of this country are not stupid, Mr. President. They demand a degree of candor in our public dealings which is not met by political posturing. I do not mean to question the motives of any individual Senator, but the effort to load the amendment of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) in order to kill it should be too evident to pass notice. I am opposed to the Allen amendment, but I am not going to hide that behind a motion to table. Let those who voted for the substitute of the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) now reveal their motive by voting on adoption of the amendment as amended. Let no one be misled by looking only at one vote or the other by itself.

Mr. President, this kind of silly schoolboy activity does not lend great credit to our institutions which are under such constant attack today. I am sorry we sometimes act in a way which justifies the accusations of our critics.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I want the record to be clear as do why I am supporting the Allen amendment, and the amendments thereto, that would outlaw honoraria and other sources of outside income. I personally see no reason why a Senator should not supplement his income in such spare time as he may have. It is no secret that many of us need supplementary income to cover the full cost of servicing our constituents. Expense allowances for larger States simply are inadequate to cover all expenses. But if it takes adoption of this kind of pious and hypocritical nonsense to scuttle a bill that I am convinced will do profound harm to our political system, I will gladly cooperate.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, now that the folly of the last few minutes has had an opportunity to sink into my colleagues, may I pose a parliamentary inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HELMS). The Senator will state it.

Mr. CANNON. Does the question now occur on the Allen amendment as modified, as amended by the Tower amendment as modified?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON. And would the Chair advise whether a motion to table would now be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would not be in order.

Mr. CANNON. Would the Chair state the reason why the motion to table would not be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A unanimous-consent agreement was entered into to vote on the Allen amendment. Therefore, a motion to table is not in order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, was the unanimous-consent agreement to vote on the Allen amendment as modified, as amended and modified?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the answer is "No," but the precedent prevails since there was unanimous consent on the Allen amendment, regardless of whether it was modified or not.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to move to table the Allen amendment as modified, as amended by the Tower amendment, as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLEN. I object.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. PASTORE. What is the ruling of the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. PASTORE. No; I mean with respect to the question of laying it on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to table is not in order.

Mr. PASTORE. I make an appeal from the ruling of the Chair. I appeal the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second. The yeas and nays are ordered. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. If a Senator wishes to uphold the ruling of the Chair, does he vote yea or nay?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He would vote "Yea."

Mr. MANSFIELD. And if he does not, he votes "Nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, the Chair is correct in its ruling. The unanimous-consent request earlier was to vote on the Allen amendment at the hour of 2:30 p.m. By virtue of that order, a tabling motion would not be in order.

I hope, with all due deference to my distinguished friend from Rhode Island, that the Senate will not now vote to overrule the ruling of the Chair because if we do that we are going to overrule precedents going back a long way, and I think it is a very dangerous thing for the Senate to do.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. We had a unanimous-consent agreement to vote at 2:30 p.m. Why have we waited until 3:20 p.m. to do it?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Because amendments were offered to the amendment.

Mr. PASTORE. Why were they in order?

Mr .ROBERT C. BYRD. Because under the precedents, even though a vote is to occur at a given time on an amendment, any Senator is entitled to offer an amendment when the time has expired and have a vote on his amendment without debate.

Mr. PASTORE. Did the distinguished majority whip agree with the Senator from Alabama that this would be the situation on the unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. The whip, and I am sure the Senator from Alabama, did not foresee all the amendments, but in accordance with precedent, may I say to my distinguished friend that I hope we do not overrule the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. PASTORE. Would it please my distinguished friend the whip if the Senator from Rhode Island were to withdraw his motion?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I wish the distinguished Senator would do that.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, in order to accommodate the distinguished whip, I withdraw my motion.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I would suggest that the Senator ask unanimous consent to do so because he asked for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will take unanimous consent.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I wonder if the distinguished Senator from Alabama would now allow the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON) to propound anew his unanimous-consent request that a tabling motion be in order.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I think that while we are discussing rules we should go a little further.

The unanimous consent agreement was to vote on the Allen amendment on an hour certain. There was not a unanimous consent to vote on the Allen amendment, as amended and as modified.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. No, because no Senator could foresee that the amendment would be amended. When consent of the Senate is given to vote on a designated amendment at a designated time any Senator can offer an amendment, when time has expired, without debate and get a vote on it; but when the Senate gives consent to vote on an amendment at a given time, there has to be a vote on the amendment up and down, and there can be no motion to table.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Just to develop the record further because the rules are important, there was unanimous consent to vote on the Allen amendment.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. That is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Not the Allen amendment, as modified, as amended by the Tower amendment, as modified.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. That is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I wonder if we might not develop some record for future guidance: that when you get unanimous consent like this, it includes anything that might happen along the way. I do not think the unanimous-consent agreement prevails in light of all that has happened here.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. If we did not follow the precedents, it would mean that in the future, if we got an agreement to vote on the Allen amendment at a certain hour, we would have a vote on it, and if the Senator from Minnesota came in at the last minute and wanted to offer an amendment to the Allen amendment he would be deprived of offering the amendment. Under the precedent he can now offer an amendment, even though without time to debate it.

There is one way to meet the situation the Senator is talking about. We could get unanimous consent to vote on the Allen amendment at 2:30, with the understanding that no amendments to that amendment be in order.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The only other point, I would say, is that it is also understood at the time you get the unanimous consent to vote on the Allen amendment, that it be as it may be modified because otherwise you are not establishing a clear line.

Mr. PASTORE. Is the Senator saying the unanimous consent agreement on the Allen amendment was made on the Allen amendment as introduced?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Exactly.

Mr. PASTORE. And now the Allen amendment has been changed; it is no longer the amendment agreed to. Something has been added. Does not that break the unanimous consent agreement?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. No, because the Senator from Rhode Island, if he wished, would be entitled at 2:30 p.m., after all time has expired on the Allen amendment, to offer an amendment. He has that right.

I wonder if the Senator from Alabama would allow the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON)—now that the Senator from Rhode Island has yielded on his point, which was very gracious of him—to make a motion to table?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object and I shall not object, in view of the request of the assistant majority leader, it occurs to me that two things evoke the most interest in the Senate in addition to public financing: Matters having to do with the pay of Senators and something having to do with the honorarium system. So I have no illusions that this amendment is going anywhere. Whether it is voted up or down, or up or down on a motion to table is not of too much concern, so I withdraw my objection.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment that we are to vote on now be stated so that we may understand what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 85 between lines 5 and 6 add the following new section 402, as follows:

SEC. 402. No Member of Congress shall accept or receive any honorarium, fee, payment, or expense allowance other than for actual out-of-pocket travel and lodging expenses from any source whatsoever for any speech, article, writing, discussion, message, or appearance other than in payment of his official salary and for official reimbursements or allowances from the United States Treasury, nor shall he accept any subsidy payment from the U.S. Treasury, nor shall he accept any income from any enterprise that is regulated or financed either wholly or in part by the Government of the United States, provided that any income from U.S. Government securities shall be exempt from this provision.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Does that include income from a bank where he may have been drawing interest?

SEVERAL SENATORS. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY. How ridiculous can one get?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order for me to make a motion to table the Allen amendment, as modified, as amended by the Tower amendment as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I make such a motion. I move to table and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of Mr. CANNON to lay on the table the amendment of Mr. ALLEN, as amended by the modified Tower amendment. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), and the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON) is absent on official business.

So Mr. CANNON'S motion to lay Mr. ALLEN'S amendment, as amended, on the table was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the following Senate bills, each with an amendment, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 1585. An act to prevent the unauthorized manufacture and use of the character "Woodsy Owl," and for other purposes; and

S. 2770. An act to amend chapter 5 of title 37, United States Code, to revise the special pay structure relating to medical officers of the uniformed services.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 2537. An act for the relief of Lidia Myslinska Bokosky;

H.R. 3534. An act for the relief of Lester H. Kroll;

H.R. 4438. An act for the relief of Boulos Stephan;

H.R. 4590. An act for the relief of Melissa Catambay Gutierrez;

H.R. 5667. An act for the relief of Linda Julie Dickson (nee Waters);

H.R. 5907. An act for the relief of Capt. Bruce B. Schwartz, U.S. Army;

H.R. 7207. An act for the relief of Emmett A. and Agnes J. Rathbun;

H.R. 7682. An act to confer citizenship posthumously upon Lance Corporal Federico Silva;

H.R. 7685. An act for the relief of Giuseppe Greco;

H.R. 8101. An act to authorize certain Federal agencies to detail personnel and to loan equipment to the Bureau of Sport Fisheries and Wildlife, Department of the Interior;

H.R. 8586. An act to authorize the foreign sale of the passenger vessel steamship Independence;

H.R. 8823. An act for the relief of James A. Wentz;

H.R. 9393. An act for the relief of Mary Notarthomas;

H.R. 10942. An act to amend the Migratory Bird Treaty Act of July 3, 1918 (40 Stat. 755), as amended, to extend and adapt its provisions to the Convention between the United States and the Government of Japan for the protection of migratory birds and birds in danger of extinction, and their environment, concluded at the city of Tokyo, March 4, 1972;

H.R. 10972. An act to delay for 6 months the taking effect of certain measures to provide additional funds for certain wildlife restoration projects;

H.R. 11223. An act to authorize amendment of contracts relating to the exchange of certain vessels for conversion and operation in unsubsidized service between the west coast of the United States and the territory of Guam;

H.R. 12208. An act to confer exclusive jurisdiction on the Federal Maritime Commission over certain movements of merchandise by barge in foreign and domestic offshore commerce;

H.R. 12627. ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 11 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stands in adjournment until 11 o'clock a.m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DIVISION OF TIME FOR DEBATE ON CLOTURE MOTION TOMORROW

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time for debate on the motion to invoke cloture tomorrow be equally divided between the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON) and the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER THAT AMENDMENTS AT DESK BEFORE CLOTURE VOTE QUALIFY UNDER RULE XXII

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow all amendments at the desk at the time the vote on the motion to invoke cloture begins, be considered as having been read by the clerk so as to qualify under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 1102

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1102 and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 75, between lines 4 and 5, insert the following:

"(3) This subsection does not apply to the Democratic or Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, the Democratic National Congressional Committee, or the National Republican Congressional Committee."

On page 77, between lines 5 and 6, insert the following:

"(e) This section does not apply to the Democratic or Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, the Democratic National Congressional Committee, or the National Republican Congressional Committee."

On page 77, line 6, strike out "(e)" and insert in lieu thereof "(f)".

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I offer this amendment to exempt in a limited fashion the two campaign committees of the Senate and the two campaign committees of the House simply because I do not believe that as the bill is written we could literally operate in support of our candidates under the existing language. I am not sure that that was the intent, but it is a matter of great concern to me, and I think it is important that we know the potential hazard for our two major parties in the proposed legislation as it may finally be enacted.

I think it is important that our parties not be weakened, but strengthened, by whatever action Congress takes. I would hope that in writing this particular bill we can provide that kind of sense of purpose with this amendment. The amendment simply exempts the House and Senate campaign committees from the specific limitations established for other political committees.

I have discussed the amendment at length with my colleagues, both those on the committee and those who are involved in campaign activities. I would hope the amendment will find favor on both sides of the aisle and that it can be expeditiously handled. I do not see the need for extended debate, so I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. DOMINICK. My immediate impression, when my colleague was offering his amendment, was that I would like to be added as a cosponsor.

Mr. BROCK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the name of the Senator from Colorado be added as a cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BROCK. I thank the Senator very much for his support.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, would the Senator explain just what he intends by this amendment now, in order that the RECORD may be clear?

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, this amendment is to page 75, between lines 4 and 5. We are dealing here with a section—if I may find the place in the bill—which relates to limitation on expenditures generally. This limits expenditures made on behalf of any candidate for national office—in essence, limitations on contributions by political committees.

We have an exemption, under subsection (5)(b) on page 73, for the national committees, of 2 cents per voter, and an exemption for the State committees of 2 cents per voter, which is not counted toward the sum total. But under subsection (c)(1):

No person may make any expenditure (other than an expenditure made on behalf of a candidate under the provisions of subsection (a)(4)) advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate during a calendar year which, when added to all other expenditures made by that person during the year advocating the election or defeat of that candidate, exceeds $1,000.

Mr. President, that simply is impossible for us to comply with. The purpose of these committees is to afford people an opportunity to give to a large agenda of candidates, and we cannot adequately support a House or a Senate candidate who is a viable candidate in any other sense of the word with that limitation.

What I am trying to do is simply say that the dollar ceiling on committee giving shall not apply to the Senate and House committees, but I would say to the chairman that this has nothing to do with the limit on how much a candidate can spend. We leave that as it is, intact. We simply are trying to afford to the committees an opportunity to support the candidates of their party, and the effort here is to strengthen the parties involved.

Mr. CANNON. So the net effect, as I understand it, then, would be that the Democratic or Republican Central Campaign Committee and the Democratic National Congressional Committee or Republican National Congressional Committee could collect funds through contributions or dinners or otherwise, but would not be held to the limit imposed on the amounts committees could contribute to a candidate?

Mr. BROCK. That is right.

Mr. CANNON. They would be exempt from the $6,000 limit that we have in here now, that a committee could contribute to a candidate, in the light of the fact that these contributions collected would have come from a total source or a great number of people; is that correct?

Mr. BROCK. Exactly.

Mr. CANNON. And it is not the intention to attempt to vary the limit on expenditures that a candidate can spend, nor would it change the amount of money that a person himself could contribute to a candidate or to a political committee?

Mr. BROCK. By no method whatsoever would it affect either of those.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, in the light of that, I personally would have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROCK. I am delighted to yield the floor.

Mr. ALLEN. I commend the distinguished Senator from Tennessee for the concern that he is manifesting with regard to the party system. The party system, it occurs to the Senator from Alabama, will be a near casualty if not a casualty of public financing, and I can certainly understand, since the Senator is an organization member, that he would be concerned about the party system.

But I am concerned that this amendment would constitute a great big loophole being created before this bill is even passed, and I would envision that as time goes on other loopholes will be created.

To create a loophole right at this time, before the bill even becomes law, seems to me to be unwise. I would like to inquire of the distinguished Senator if there would be any limitation whatsoever on a congressional campaign committee, either Republican or Democratic, on receipts that it may receive or expenditures it may make. Would there be any ceiling at all?

Mr. BROCK. I would assume, and I believe I am correct—if the chairman of the committee disagrees, he may correct the impression—that there are ceilings given under other sections of the bill. There would be no ceiling on what the committee could receive in sum total, nor would there be any ceiling on what the committee could spend, except as it applies to a specific candidate and the limitation in that particular candidate's campaign.

Mr. ALLEN. In other words, theoretically, then, the campaign committees could take in and disburse literally millions of dollars in furtherance of the candidacies of House and Senate Members; is that correct?

Mr. BROCK. I would say so.

Mr. ALLEN. And this money could be spent separate and apart from the campaigns of the Members of Congress, could it not?

Mr. BROCK. No, it is still subject, as the chairman has pointed out, to the limitations the bill imposes on an individual candidate.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well. But this money could be used to supplement the campaigns or the campaign funding of any candidate for the House of Representatives or the Senate that these committees selected?

Mr. BROCK. That is correct.

Mr. ALLEN. But that could add millions of dollars of receipts and expenditures, could it not?

Mr. BROCK. Well, I do not know that it would be added, because what the committees do is afford a vehicle for people to give broadly rather than specifically, if there are a few individuals left in the country who would prefer to give to the political party of their choice rather than trying to seek out candidates individually.

Mr. ALLEN. Well, would it be possible for an individual to give, say, $1 million to one of these campaign committees?

Mr. BROCK. No. Under other sections of the bill, that would be prohibited. We exempt here, by this amendment I have offered, the committees only from that section which limits the giving by a particular committee to a particular candidate. It does not change the limitation on political contributions on the part of any individual at all.

Mr. ALLEN. Well, it adds a section there under the provisions for limitations on contributions, and another one——

Mr. BROCK. They are both to the same section.

Mr. ALLEN. To the section on limitation on expenditures.

Mr. BROCK. No; the amendment here applies only to section 615, which is limitations on contributions. It does not affect the limitation on expenditures at all, as the Senator from Nevada has pointed out.

Mr. ALLEN. Well, what would be the maximum amount that could be received by a campaign committee, a senatorial or House campaign committee, from any contributor?

Mr. BROCK. There have been so many amendments that I may be a little confused on what is the present limit, but the same limit that would apply to giving to a campaign or to the national committees would apply here. I am not sure what the amendment says with respect to that—was it a $3,000 or a $6,000 limit?

Mr. ALLEN. If the committee is authorized to make contributions in any size, would the House or Senate Member be authorized to receive a contribution in any size?

Mr. BROCK. From these committees?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. BROCK. That is correct.

Mr. ALLEN. In other words, the senatorial or congressional campaign committees could get money from all over the country within certain limits and then funnel that without limitation as to the amounts into the campaigns of the various Members of the House and Senate; is that not correct? Provided it did no run over the amount he could spend, of course.

Mr. BROCK. That is right. If I may say to the Senator, the purpose of the section as originally written was to diminish and, hopefully, to eliminate the possibility of undue influence on the part of special interest groups who form committees for the purpose of legislative advocacy on a particular issue and raise a great deal of money and then give to those candidates who would support, say, a consumer protection bill, or who would be opposed to such a bill. For example, there is no similar situation as it relates to House and Senate campaign committees. These are party committees. They receive their funds from a broad base. We have thousands of contributors—hundreds of thousands—and the average contribution would be well under $100, I am sure, from both committees. I am sure I can speak for the Republican Party.

The contribution would be on a broad base, to incumbent and challenger alike. In the sense that this bill must preserve and enhance the party structure, as I know the Senator feels, and we share this concern with the bill as it is written, the bill, unless amended further, impinges on our ability as parties to support our own candidates.

Mr. ALLEN. Would it be impossible, as the Senator from Alabama sees it, then, for a candidate who has a legal right to spend $1 million in his campaign but, having collected only one-half that amount from private sources and from the party, could apply to one of these committees for a contribution—that is, theoretically—of half a million dollars; is that not correct?

Mr. BROCK. I think it is.

Mr. ALLEN. I am just wondering if that would be in the public interest, to allow these contributions to come in to a big fund there and have it parceled out without any limitation as to the amount. That is what worries me.

Mr. BROCK. May I say, there is a limit on the individual candidates and on how much he can spend.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; but if he is running short, then the committee can give him a present of tremendous sums of money under the Senator's amendment; is that not correct?

Mr. BROCK. That is correct, I would say to the Senator, and I think that he would agree with the statement that this is far preferable to receiving a check from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; if he would accept this instead of the other provisions, that would be fine; but I am afraid that we will have the other provisions and what the Senator is adding to. If I thought his amendment would help defeat the bill, I would be for the amendment, but as it is now, it looks like a tremendous loophole to provide a method of making large contributions not otherwise permitted under the bill to various candidates for the House and Senate.

I wonder whether the same objective could not be accomplished, possibly, by increasing the amount that the committee can receive and expend rather than leaving it with the sky as the limit.

Mr. BROCK. Perhaps I have an unwarranted faith in our two parties. I do have that faith. I have enormous respect for both parties, for their adherence to their basic principles, in their belief in their own party philosophy and their belief in this country. I frankly fear no conflict of interest with the parties disbursing the money. I have a great deal of fear of a conflict of interest when the Federal Government, or when we, enhance vested interests. That is what I am trying to avoid.

I would point out to the Senator, if my figures are correct—and I think they are fairly close—that as of a month ago, our average contribution was something on the order of $23.75 in the Republican Party. We have survived and sustained ourselves simply because we have a huge number of people willing to participate in support of the party. By no definition can that $23.75 be sufficient to influence the election or the vote of an individual running for the Senate. But individual Senators do not have the capacity to establish that broad base in sufficient magnitude to warrant the confidence that they can finance their own campaigns.

It is the purpose of the committees not to finance a candidate's campaign. That must come essentially from his own State. But it is supportive in the early stages—at the genesis—of a campaign so that it will attract a broad level of support. The candidate must have a chance to win. Unless this exemption is given to Senate and House Campaign Committees, I think that what we will do will be to run the terrible risk of making the bill worse than it is. I share this concern with the Senator from Alabama, in the public aspect of it. But we will make the bill worse unless we afford the party some opportunity to support the people who adhere to the party's philosophy.

Mr. ALLEN. Would it be possible for contributors who might not want to appear on the report of a given candidate to make a contribution to the congressional committee, and then the congressional committee makes a contribution to the candidate without the identity of the contributor being made known?

Mr. BROCK. No contributor can, either directly or indirectly, overtly or covertly or even implicitly, imply that he wants his funds to go to a particular candidate, without its being reported as a donation by the committee for the candidate. Even under current law in our own committee—I am not sure about my colleague's committee, but I would assume it is similar—we will take a campaign contribution for a particular Senator or challenger and report it forthwith. But we tell the contributor and the challenger that we do not operate a laundry in the Republican Party and have no interest in it whatsoever. We adhere religiously not only to the letter but the spirit of the law as it is today. We do report those, and we should.

Mr. ALLEN. Under the Senator's amendment, would a contribution to the committee be limited to $3,000?

Mr. ROTH. Yes, as I understand the bill, that is correct.

Mr. COOK. Yes, that is correct.

Mr. ALLEN. What would be the value of getting the same contributor to contribute to the candidate direct? What magic is there in going through congressional committees?

Mr. BROCK. I would say to the distinguished Senator from Alabama, for whom I have such enormous respect, that nothing at all is wrong with that. In many cases, this Senator would so advise a particular contributor. We do not have many $3,000 contributors. That is not the problem. What we are trying to do is to broaden the base of the party. As I said, the average contribution is $23.75 and we are trying to enlist large numbers of people. That, frankly, is not to give to the candidate broadly. Certainly we can support our candidate broadly. That is the kind of contribution I want to attract, and I think we can attract. If we do, then we have to have some method of exemption so that we can get the contributions in bulk. We could not physically handle the volume of each one individually, as the Senator was suggesting the $3,000 contribution, which we could do quite readily.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the distinguished Senator for giving me this information. I will not stand in the way of the amendment. Rather, I would say, I should like to be recorded as voting "nay" on the amendment.

Mr. BROCK. I have nothing further, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills:

S. 71. An act for the relief of Uhel D. Polly;

S. 205. An act for the relief of Jorge Mario Bell;

S. 507. An act for the relief of Wilhelm J. R. Maly;

S. 816. An act for the relief of Mrs. Jozefa Sokolowska Domanski;

S. 912. An act for the relief of Mahmood Shareef Suleiman; and

S. 2112. An act for the relief of Vo Thi Suong (Nini Anne Hoyt).

The enrolled bills were subsequently signed by the President pro tempore.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1126 and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

On page 78, line 16, strike the closing quotation marks and the second period.

On page 78, between lines 16 and 17, insert the following:

"§ 618. Prohibition of contributions other than by individuals

"Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 615 and 616, no person other than an individual may make a contribution. Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine of not more than $50,000 imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.".

On page 78, at the end of the matter appearing below line 22, insert the following:

"618. Prohibition of contributions other than by individuals.".

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, this amendment would allow only individuals to make contributions to political campaigns. It would strictly prohibit contributions by organizations, associations, co-ops, caucuses, committees, or any other group which aggregate funds from its members and gives those funds in the name of a cause, interest, or section of the country.

Having served for over a year as vice chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities, I can conceive of no more effective way to eliminate the distortive influence of special interests than by banning group contributions altogether. Obviously, not all contributions by groups distort or, in any way, influence the political process. However, there is no effective way to eliminate the groups that do, short of prohibiting group contributions or segregated funds completely—and that is precisely what I propose to do.

I do not think corporations or labor unions should be permitted to contribute. They cannot now, but they do through AMPAC, BIPAC, COPE, and a half dozen other devices. Moreover, I do not think purely political action groups should be permitted to contribute.

They cannot vote. The American Medical Association cannot vote. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce cannot vote. Common Cause cannot vote—except as individuals. So, why should they be allowed to contribute. Only individuals can vote, and I believe only individuals should be allowed to contribute.

I do not wish to infringe upon the freedom of association. That freedom is guaranteed by the first amendment to the Constitution; and I do not believe that my amendment would diminish that right in the least. However, it would diminish the ability of groups to assert influence beyond what they wield by virtue of their numbers and that, in my judgment, is the way it should be.

Throughout the debate on S. 3044, I have heard repeated references to the inordinate influence of special interests as a primary defense for public financing. But, according to the study released last week by Common Cause, I was the top recipient of political contributions in 1972 from business committees; and I am positive that I could have raised the same amount of money from individual contributions if I had been required to by the law. The fact of the matter was, and is, that I am not.

The study released last week by Common Cause states that at least $14.2 million has already been raised this year by various groups and special interests to support candidates in the House and the Senate.

Mr. President, I might say that the aggregation of contributions by special interest groups is a matter that has been discussed widely in public forums and in private. There is a great distinction between those contributions which are legal, and those to which I refer as legal, but undesirable.

In my case, it was stated that $50,000 or thereabouts had been contributed by business interests. That is roughly 5 percent of the total amount of the money collected from over 10,000 individual contributors to my campaign in 1972. That 5 percent, I do not believe, is going to have any distortive effect by its numerical value and weight on my position on issues of the day. It should be eliminated.

In colloquy with the distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) the other day he said:

How would you eliminate the force and effect of business money and labor money if you did not go to public financing?

Mr. President, this is my answer. I would simply prohibit any contribution by any special interest group, and require instead that financial contributions be a matter of individual initiative, and only those qualified to vote, individual human beings, as distinguished from legal entities, organizations, associations, co-ops, and committees, be able to add their support for any candidate.

The Associated Milk Producers has collected $1.4 million; the American Medical Association has collected $889,000; the United Automobile Workers have collected $717,000.

These figures have been quoted by sponsors of the bill as proof of the need for public financing. And yet, even if we have public financing under the provisions of S. 3044, the ability of these groups to contribute to various campaigns will not be impaired. In fact, an amendment adopted narrowly last week doubles the contribution limitation imposed on groups of $6,000, applied separately to primaries, runoffs, special, and general elections. I understand that to mean that special interests can then contribute $6,000 to a candidate in the primary and an additional $6,000 in the general election, or a total of $12,000.

Virtually all public officeholders are not influenced in the least by $12,000.

However, I suspect that some might be if that $12,000 were matched by three other committees or corporations of similar interest—interests which would then be represented by $48,000, and probably far more influence than they deserve. This is what I mean by the distortive effects of special interests.

The sponsors of the bill argue that S. 3044 is the only reasonable answer to this most serious problem. But, I respectfully urge them to tell me how they can make such a claim. Granted, S. 3044 imposes a limit on the amount individuals and groups can give to political candidates. But, S. 372 did that; and we could impose such limits without ever having to resort to partial or full public financing. Under S. 3044, any special interest can contribute up to $12,000 to a candidate if it is given separately in the primary and general election campaigns.

I realize that if a major party candidate reaches the required threshold during the primary campaign, he is eligible for a grant from the Treasury to the tune of 15 cents times the voting age population of the State or district. However, individuals or groups can still contribute if they wish, so long as their contribution is deducted from the subsidy provided by the Government. Moreover, in cases where an incumbent is contested, but not seriously challenged, and that incumbent decides against public financing, the special interests can contribute $6,000 in the primary and another $6,000 in the general election. So what has been done to protect the political process from special interests in this bill? They can still contribute at least $6,000, and possibly $12,000.

Limiting the total amount of their contributions is a significant improvement over what we have had in the past and what we have today; but I do not think it is enough to convince the American people that the financial influence of the special interests has been diminished, much less eliminated. That is why I propose that only individuals be allowed to contribute and that group contributions, particularly special interest contributions, be strictly prohibited. Otherwise, the $14.2 million which Common Cause reports has already been raised for House and Senate races will be given and public suspicion about corporations, labor unions, and others wielding inordinate political influence will continue.

In disclosing the study last week, a spokesman for Common Cause said:

> Anyone who thinks the Watergate scandals have put special interest givers out of business had better take a close look at these figures." He went on to say that there is "no way to restore confidence in this system when the same old thing is going on.

This is precisely my point. The special interest givers are alive and well in 1974, Watergate and potential indictments not withstanding. Moreover, I could not agree more that confidence will only be restored if we correct the glaring abuses of past campaigns. Nevertheless, S. 3044, with the avid support of Common Cause, allows the same old things to continue. It will allow groups or organizations, whether they are occupational or otherwise, to distort the most sensitive of all processes. It will perpetuate the worst part of our electoral process. And it will continue the serious erosion of public trust in our major governmental institutions.

I cannot accept the argument that group contributions are necessary to adequately fund an effective two-party system. But even if they were necessary in the past, they certainly should not be under a new system of public financing, or even under a refined form of private financing through realistic tax incentives such as I have proposed with Senators ERVIN, TALMADGE, GURNEY and others.

I would be willing to bet, though, that under the provisions of S. 3044, in which the role of private contributors has been substantially reduced, the reduction will not be felt so much by the special interests as by the individual contributor. In fact, I doubt very serious whether S. 3044 will reduce at all the number of special-interest givers. It may only reduce slightly the amount of money they can give to individual candidates.

Now, is that real reform? It seems to me that the only realistic way to eliminate the distortive effects of special interests is to prohibit contributions by groups altogether. They cannot vote. Only individuals can vote; and I, therefore, propose that only individuals be allowed to contribute. In my view, it would be the single most constructive improvement we could make in the political process, in the wake of the events of the past 2 years.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. President, while the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee is very laudable in its objective—all of us want to see a reduction in the influence of special interest groups—it is sort of like throwing the baby out with the bath water. It is an overkill situation. It would put all political committees out of business, as well as other types of groups, over and above that of individuals I do not think it is practical. I do not think a campaign could be carried on in this fashion, under the terms of the bill, as we have drafted it, if we are to prohibit any contributions from committees. And I do not see that it really achieves an objective that would be very helpful to the process.

I think the main thing that is going to result in a lessened influence in the political giver field is the fact that we have not required a complete and full disclosure and have limited the amount, so that a person cannot give more than $3,000, and in turn we have limited the expenditures.

So I would hope my colleagues would not support the amendment. As I said, I do not think it is a practical one. I think we are gradually getting ourselves into a position where it is going to be impossible to carry on political campaigns.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me some time?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, after my discussion the other day with the Senator from Connecticut, I find myself in a strange position with the amendment of my good friend and colleague from Tennessee. I, as he knows, have very serious reservations about the Federal Government's subsidizing and paying for political campaigns, but I also know that what the Congress giveth, the Congress can taketh away, and I think somewhere along the way we have to at least attempt to give things a try. I guess I find myself in the kind of situation where maybe we should try.

I know that we on this side of the aisle, as Republicans, are always told that all the big givers in the United States somehow or other are Republicans. I have just got to say, Mr. President, that in my State that "just ain't so."

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so I may ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment?

Mr. COOK. I yield.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. COOK. In my part of the country that just is not so. Somehow or other that is a much used and I must say, in all fairness, a much maligned remark, and I think my good friend from Minnesota would say there are some pretty good givers in the South other than Republicans, and they are Democrats.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Not so many.

Mr. COOK. They are not nearly enough, I am sure.

I ran my last campaign on a third of the money that the last two candidates, Democrat and Republican, ran on in my State, and I would like to feel this could work. I would like to feel that some day, if we try and we fail, this is what we will do. I do know that we passed a bill last year and we sent it over to the House, and it got nowhere, and I am sure there are those who say the Republicans are trying to do something about it and are against Government financing, but I think even the gentlemen in the news gallery would have to say it is not the Republican leadership position that is stopping the movement of the political campaign bills in the House of Representatives.

So I have just kind of taken the position that I want to send the House as much as I can so I can at least get something. Maybe that is a poor excuse. Maybe that is an easy way out. But I am awfully tired of being, somehow or other, blamed, and when we read an article in the morning paper we read that the Republicans attempt to stall something else. I hate to be grouped together in that way. I stand for what I stand, and we are here on the floor to stand up for the basic concepts and basic principles in which we believe. Somehow or other, I resent those kinds of characterizations that occur.

But I must say to the Senator from Tennessee that I wish he were right. He may very well wind up being right. I think in the meantime, as the process closes and as the process subjects itself to criticism, there are times when we have to look to different answers and at least try.

I have convinced myself that maybe we ought to try. I do not like it too much. I think what I dislike the most is the idea that we are really building two political parties, as we know them—the Democratic Party and the Republican Party. But nowhere does the Constitution say that there shall be two political parties in the United States. I think that we are saying that a third party will never see the light of day in this country, because the biggest portion of the money will go to the two principal parties, and that those who really wish to seek reform and make a major impact on the country will not be able to do it.

Abraham Lincoln was not a Republican all of his life. It was in 1854 that he joined another group and established the Republican Party. It was a minority party, because he came from the Whig Party. But he decided to change and that he should do something about the basic philosophy in this country. I really cannot see that happening, and it bothers me.

I look to the future. I look to 1976 and to 4 years later, and I see ourselves in this situation. We discussed it the other day. One party will get 40 percent and the other will get 50 percent. That is 90 percent. The other party gets one-ninth of that 90 percent, or 10 percent. That means that if there is $19 million, one party would get $9 million and the other party would get $9 million. That would leave $1 million for the other party.

How can a third party be an effective party in the United States philosophically, to impress its desire and philosophies on the American people, when only $1 million is going to be applied as against the parties with $9 million each at the polls?

This bothers me. It truly bothers me as to how we will freeze in something that the writers of the Constitution never intended us to do. My salvation is that what Congress can do, Congress can undo. If we can find a better way, we will find a better way. However, I do not honestly believe that in looking for a better way, maybe we will have to try this way. Maybe we will have to try to find a more equitable solution for equitable distribution in what we do.

I just cannot see how we can say to the American people that we have made honest givers out of them so that each one will give $100, and only $100, and that no organization can give more.

We have done this so many times that we cannot count them. We have said we have the Corrupt Practices Act saying how much Members of Congress can spend on our campaigns. It has not been done for 40 or 50 years or more. So if this is the route we are to take, I am afraid it will not be long before we do not know what we are to do. What are we to do? Are we to put a person in jail because we gives $50? Reports that have failed to be filed, and nobody is even concerned over doing anything about it.

So maybe we have to make a stark change, as bad as it may sound to me, adn maybe find a way out of this to a better way. Maybe we have to go all the way over the hill before we find a way to get back. That would be a terrible thing. However, every time we make a slight change, we find a way to violate it, knock holes in it, and get around it.

So, Mr. President, I am going to vote against this amendment purely and simply because I think we have to reflect a consideration of the American people. Rightly or wrongly, we have made a remarkable change. Some people may totally dislike it. We may be putting the system in jeopardy. But then it is their system that is changed, and if they do not like it, it will be reflected in this Chamber.

Whether they like this system or not, we are not trying to make a change for our convenience. Certainly, some politicians have cheated. For everyone who made a contribution, somebody cheated.

Mr. President, I am opposing the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee because I think, on reflection, that we have tried, at least, to send to the House of Representatives a change that will be tremendous, but by now we have gotten no action at all. We will get some action, and up to now we have gotten no action at all.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Kansas as much time as I have.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I do not know how much time the Senator has, but I want to propound a question to the Senator from Tennessee.

In the discussion he defined the word "contribution." Is that limited only to money, or is it limited to so-called volunteer services? What is the meaning of "contribution" under the amendment?

Mr. BAKER. The definition of "contribution" in the body of the bill itself is unchanged As I understand the bill, that would include many things of value. It would not include, as I understand the description in the bill, the efforts of volunteer workers. It would include office rent, stationery, and things of that sort. The amendment in no way changes the definition in any section of the bill itself.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, a recent article of the Wall Street Journal—which I do not have before me—which speaks about the money spent in Cincinnati, Ohio, and Grand Rapids, Mich., where labor through paid volunteers, was used to work for the candidates and for the telephone banks.

It occurs to the junior Senator from Kansas whether it is a labor organization or one of the organizations mentioned by the Senator from Tennessee, whether or not they are paid volunteers, paid by the associations or paid by COPE or paid by the unions or paid by the milk producers, we are getting into another area that deserves some attention.

As I understand the amendment, I think it is a step in the right direction. This problem may be addressed in another amendment, but, as I understand the amendment, I think it is a step in the right direction.

I do not share the views expressed by my friend the Senator from Kentucky that we ought to do this because nothing else has worked, and that we will not have a first party, let alone a second or a third party. If we adopt such a financing plan, I think that the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee is a big step in the direction not only of disclosure, but also of limiting contributions to an individual. As far as I am concerned, this goes a long way toward cleaning up the process.

I support the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAKER. I yield.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I am strongly in favor of this amendment. I think it is the right approach. I think it has a twofold virtue. It enables a party's candidates to get sufficient campaign funds if they have sufficient public appeal.

Furthermore, it interests the American citizens in the electroal process voluntarily, and not involuntarily as the bill does. I sincerely believe that this will come nearer to solving this problem than any suggestion that has been made at any time prior to this amendment, and I strongly support it.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am certain that the Senator from North Carolina has more experience on this problem than any other Member of this body. I appreciate his remarks.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAKER. I yield.

Mr. BROCK. I commend the Senator for this amendment. I have great sympathy with it.

I would like to clarify one point, for the purpose of establishing legislative history, and that is, does the amendment inhibit the right of the Senate or House of Representatives Democratic or Republican campaign committees to support the candidates of their choice?

Mr. BAKER. It is my understanding that the effect of this amendment on the bill as a whole—has to do solely with those who can legally contribute; the amendment would require that only qualified voters be allowed to contribute to those committees. It would not prevent those committees, however, such as the Democratic or Republican congressional committees or campaign committees, from performing their function.

Mr. BROCK. And the committees could support the candidates of their choice?

Mr. BAKER. That is my intention. That is the way I interpret the amendment when read in context with the rest of the bill.

Mr. BROCK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOLE. I yield.

Mr. COOK. If only qualified voters can contribute to that fund, which then, in turn, contributes to a candidate, if that fund is not a qualified voter how can it contribute to a candidate?

Mr. BAKER. Because there is another section of the bill which recognizes campaign committees.

Mr. COOK. In other words, the section the Senator is amending allows not only qualified voters, but campaign committees, to contribute to a candidate?

Mr. BAKER. That is right. The committees which are described in the bill itself, the central campaign committees, for instance, in section 310, and congressional and senatorial campaign committees which are referred to in the bill as well. We do not change that section, therefore we do not change their rationale, their reason for being, or the legitimacy of contributions by them.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the Senator very much, and I appreciate his intent and purpose.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAKER. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Do I correctly understand, in other words, that the COPE organization of the AFL–CIO, under the amendment, would be able to make a contribution?

Mr. BAKER. No, it would not.

Mr. HUMPHREY. What is wrong with that? It is a committee.

Mr. BAKER. Yes, but neither COPE, the Anti-Defamation League, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, nor anything of that sort could contribute to one of the committees involved, except the senatorial or House committee of either party or its central campaign committee.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Why not, if the workers want to contribute $2 apiece, let the committee write out a receipt showing that they contribute $2, and put it into a fund? Why cannot someone make a contribution under the limitations of the bill? I do not think they ought to have an unlimited right, but if I understand, under the bill the maximum amount would be $6,000.

Mr. BAKER. That would be $12,000 for a primary and a general election; $6,000 if it is only one.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes.

Mr. BAKER. My reason for it, in answer to the question of the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, is that I think the aggregation of money in that way creates an enormous sum of money, in many instances, that has a distortive impact far beyond the importance of the individual committee, whether it is a labor organization, a business association, a cooperative, or COPE.

I think it is perfectly appropriate and much to be desired that the individual worker make his $2 contribution, but he should send that $2 contribution to the central campaign committee of a candidate, or a congressional or senatorial campaign committee, and not under the aegis or auspices of his company, his union, or any other group that itself is not a bona fide member of society.

This strikes at the very reason and rationale for this amendment, I might say to the Senator.

It is my belief that only individuals should contribute, and that special interest groups, whether they are business-oriented, labor-oriented, industry-oriented, geography-oriented, ethnic-oriented, or whatever kind of groups, should not be able to make these huge contributions that they do frequently make.

Mr. HUMPHREY. What about the Democratic or Republican Central Campaign Committees?

Mr. BAKER. They are specifically referred to in another section of the bill, and would continue to function, except that this amendment would preclude the receipt by those committees of contributions except from individuals.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Except from individuals?

Mr. BAKER. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY. But it would not prohibit those committees, as such, after they have garnered in the money from individuals, which is exactly basically what they do, from contributing up to the maximum of $6,000; is that right?

Mr. BAKER. It would not prohibt them from functioning as they now function.

The distinction, and the reason for it, is that the party system itself contemplates that the party will contribute to its nomineees and candidates, but that is distinguished from special interest groups, whether it be the milk industry, labor unions, or whatever.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Or the AMA?

Mr. BAKER. Or the ABA, or the Sierra Club. There is a legitimate reason for a party to try to elect its candidates.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator does not call the Democratic National Committee a party as such, does he?

Mr. BAKER. Yes; there are two, one Democratic and one Republican.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Well, it is not a party, it is a national committee.

Mr. BAKER. I think that the party system in the United States is a blessing in many respects, and one of its great blessings is that it is so loosely knit that it is not inflexible, but it is strong enough and identifiable enough so that we know, for instance, that the Democratic National Committee, the Democratic Central Campaign Committee and the Democratic Congressional Committees are in fact a part of the Democratic Party.

No one doubts that. I think they add strenth to the party system, and I have a great deal of respect for the two-party system, and believe this amendment will strengthen it rather than diminish it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Just to get the record clear, then, once again, this amendment would eliminate, for example, any campaign funds from, let us say, the political action committee of the American Medical Association?

Mr. BAKER. That is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Or the Chamber of Commerce?

Mr. BAKER. That is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Or the insurance industry?

Mr. BAKER. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Or the labor movement?

Mr. BAKER. That is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Or all the dairy cooperatives?

Mr. BAKER. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Or the Friends of the Wilderness?

Mr. BAKER. That is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Or you name it; in other words, if they went out and solicited their membership for voluntary contributions, and they were truly voluntary contributions, they would still not be eligible under this particular amendment?

Mr. BAKER. This is absolutely correct.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time, if the chairman is prepared to yield back his.

Mr. CANNON. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HELMS). All remaining time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee. On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON) is absent on official business.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from New York (Mr. BUCKLEY), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY), and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. YOUNG) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN) is absent due to illness in the family.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 53, as follows:

THE INCOME TAX MATTER OF THE PRESIDENT

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, this morning I made a statement before the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation which outlines my position in reference to the income tax matter of the President of the United States, which had been referred to the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation. I ask unanimous consent that the statement be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR CARL T. CURTIS BEFORE THE JOINT COMMITTEE ON INTERNAL REVENUE TAXATION, APRIL 3, 1974

Mr. Chairman, as you are aware, I have devoted a substantial amount of time to careful line-by-line study of the draft of the Staff's report on the gift of pre-presidential papers and the brief which Messrs. Rose and Gemmill submitted on behalf of the President, which I received last Saturday.

Let me say at the outset that to me it is clear that the Staff has made an exhaustive examination into the facts surrounding the controversy over the propriety of the income tax deductions claimed with respect to the papers. This task assigned to the staff was an onerous and extremely difficult assignment, in the performance of which the staff clearly has devoted an enormous amount of time and effort. I have always had a high regard for this staff. I therefore trust that neither you, my colleagues, nor the members of the staff will in any way view my comments as a criticism of the staff.

Having said that, however, I do have a few observations that I think must be made if we are to carry out our task to fairly and impartially seek the truth.

When we agreed to undertake a review of this question, I believed, and I think others did as well, that, by careful investigation, we could arrive at an agreement as to what the true facts were and then proceed to apply to those facts sound legal principles. It is now apparent to me that this is impossible. The facts are in dispute and competent lawyers are in apparent disagreement as to the proper legal principles.

Let us look at the factual disputes first. As I reviewed the staff's report, certain items of testimony literally cried out for cross-examination under oath. For example, questions have been raised about Mr. Erlichman's recollection of the President's statements of donative intent. For further example, take the testimony of Mr. Newman, the appraiser. He has modified his earlier statements of the facts. Was his subsequent recollection in fact more accurate than his original one, or was it the other way around? We don't know and we can't know absent his testimony under oath, and subject to the rigors of cross-examination. Similarly, there seems to be a question as to the understanding under which the GSA and the National Archives accepted possession of the President's papers on March 26 and 27, 1969. Some of the evidence indicates that the papers were received on those dates "for gift purposes." The staff has apparently gained the impression that the papers were perhaps received only for custodial purposes. Again, we cannot simply pick one version over another. The need for sworn testimony with full opportunity for cross-examination is clear.

There is another facet of the factual problem which troubles me. The staff's report calls into question whether the President intended to make a gift of some $500,000 worth of papers or whether he merely intended a gift which would give him the maximum tax benefit for 1969. Do we know that we have all of the facts on the critical question of donative intent? I respectfully suggest that we may not have in the staff report which was delivered to me last Saturday all of the information on this and other questions of fact. For instance, there is no mention of the letter from Mr. James E. O'Neill, Acting Archivist, to former Senator John Williams of Delaware dated December 7, 1973, which states that President Nixon's gift of papers was made on March 27, 1969. For further example, I found no reference to the Foundation which the President was reported to have formed in the forepart of 1969 which, I assume, was to be a Presidential Library such as Presidents Johnson, Eisenhower and Truman created. This might have a bearing on the issue of donative intent.

What all this means to me is that there are legitimate factual disputes and that we have no proper way to resolve them. Let me explain. It apepars that the staff's report was based on interviews not under oath and at which the President's representatives were not present and thus had no opportunity for cross-examination. In my view, therefore, all we have accomplished with certainty so far is to establish that there are fundamental disputes as to the facts. The resolution of such factual controversies, particularly where the facts have legal significance as they do here, has, in our legal system, long been a function of the judiciary. This is proper. The courts are equipped to receive testimony under oath and to subject that testimony to cross-examination. Equally important, in resolving factual disputes the courts permit only that testimony which is competent and material to be admitted in evidence. For example, testimony which is hearsay and that which is unfounded opinion is disregarded because history has taught us that such testimony may be entirely wrong.

We are legislators and our procedures are not equipped to gather evidence under such standards. In short, as to the facts, a judicial approach, and nothing less, is required. We are not the persons to do so.

I also now appear that, even if we had an agreed statement of facts, which we do not have, we could not simply apply well-established principles of law to those facts as we originally thought we could do. This is because it now has become apparent there are honest differences of opinion as to what the law requires.

Let me illustrate. The staff's report states that a deed was required to effect the 1969 gift of papers because there were restrictions on their use. The President's counsel disagreed. They say that there was no need for a deed since it should have been assumed that the restrictions attached to the 1968 gift were equally applicable to the 1969 gift. As a matter of common sense, this is persuasive to me. Moreover, if I recall the principles of the law of gifts correctly, a deed is not an essential element of a gift of personal property. Additionally, the Presidential Libraries Act suggests a strong public policy in favor of gifts of papers. The President's counsel make much of this fact. It seems to me that some of their points are well-taken. Yet, it seems to me that the staff may disagree. I could go on, but these two examples illustrate to me that the legal principles are not as clear-cut as we had supposed they would be.

Since there are both fundamental factual disputes and disagreements over legal principles, what course of action should we take? In my view, there is only one proper course. We should let the matter be decided in a proper judicial forum. In fairness to the public, to the President, and to the truth, I see no other alternative. If the facts were undisputed and complete, and they are neither, perhaps we might make a judgment. But, at present, we have no basis for such a judgment.

I therefore propose that we let the IRS make its assessment and, if the President disagrees with the assessment, he, like any other taxpayer, may have his recourse to the courts. The Staff's exhaustive report may be forwarded to the IRS. If a majority of the Committee so desires, it may be made public together with an explanation of why, contrary to our original expectation, we could not properly reach a definitive conclusion.

If we cannot at this time agree on a decision to follow the course which I have outlined in the above paragraph, we should take ample time to study the Staff report and meet at a later date to determine our course of action.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote taken on amendment No. 1102, for a technical correction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, that amendment appeared to remove the calendar limit on the $25,000 which an individual may contribute to all candidates and committees, as applied to Senate and House campaign committees. The colloquy showed that that was not the intent.

We have discussed the matter with the Parliamentarian and the legal counsel in order to get the correct wording; and I therefore move to amend that amendment as follows: On line 7, after the word "to" insert the following: "contributions made by".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 7, after the word "to" insert "contributions made by".

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I say to my colleagues that all this does is to make absolutely clear that this does not remove the $25,000 overall contribution limit that we had written in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1075

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1075.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 35, line 14, strike out "tenth" and insert in lieu thereof "fifth".

On page 36, line 9, after "other than", insert the following: "the fifth day preceding an election and".

On page 36, line 15, after "filed on" insert the following: "the fifth day preceding an election or".

On page 63, beginning with line 11, strike out through line 5 on page 64.

On page 64, line 7, strike out "318." and insert in lieu thereof "317.".

On page 64, line 14, strike out "319." and insert in lieu thereof "318.".

On page 75, line 19, strike out "(a)" and insert in lieu thereof "(a)(1)".

On page 75, between lines 23 and 24, insert the following:

"(2) No person may make a contribution to, or for the benefit of, a candidate for that candidate's campaign for nomination for election, or election, during the period which begins on the tenth day preceding the day of that election and which ends on the day of that election.".

On page 76, between lines 2 and 3, insert the following:

"(2) No candidate may knowingly accept a contribution for his campaign for nomination for election, or election, during the period which begins on the tenth day preceding the day of that election and which ends on the day of that election.".

On page 76, line 3, strike out "(2)" and insert in lieu thereof "(3)".

On page 76, line 6, strike out "paragraph (1)." and insert in lieu thereof "paragraph (1) or (2).".

On page 77, between lines 5 and 6, insert the following:

"(e) No candidate, or person who accepts contributions for the benefit or use of that candidate, may accept a contribution which, when added to all other contributions accepted by that candidate or person, is in excess of the amount which is reasonably necessary to defray the expenditures of that candidate.".

On page 77, line 6, strike out "(e)" and insert in lieu thereof "(f)".

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, it is my intention, if it is agreeable to the managers of this bill and the leadership, now that the amendment has been laid before the Senate, to reserve until tomorrow the debate on the amendment and the vote. It is 5:20 p.m., and if the leadership or the managers of the bill wish, I will be happy to proceed; but it appears now more appropriate to make this the pending business after the cloture vote tomorrow.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Senator will be doing us a favor if he does that. I wish he would.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Regardless of the outcome of the cloture vote.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BAKER. Does that require a unanimous-consent agreement? If it does, I so propound that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does not require unanimous consent.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Chair.

Under those circumstances, I reserve my time until the appropriate point during the proceedings on tomorrow.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE ACT OF 1974—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on H.R. 6186, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PELL). The report will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (H.R. 6186) to amend the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1947 regarding taxability of dividends received by a corporation from insurance companies, banks, and other savings institutions, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by a majority of the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 27, 1974, at p. H2271.)

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, this conference has been cleared with both sides.

I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 6186. This legislation must be viewed in the context of the Home Rule Act. The need for this legislation arose when the Civil Service Commission rendered an opinion indicating that the current appointed Mayor-Commissioner, Chairman, and members of the City Council of the District of Columbia would have to resign their offices in order to seek one of the elective offices created under the Home Rule Act. The legislation has a twofold purpose. First, it prevents a possible hiatus in governance in the District of Columbia by allowing the current appointed officials to run for elective office without resigning. Second, the legislation is intended to actively promote the widest possible participation in the first elections held under the Home Rule Act.

This legislation provides that persons employed by the U.S. Government or by the government of the District of Columbia shall be permitted to be candidates in the first elections for the offices of Mayor, Chairman, or member of the Council. Without this legislation, the Hatch Act, which prohibits Federal and District employees from taking an active part in political management or political campaigns, would have prevented such persons from being candidates. The legislation provides that an individual who works for the U.S. Government or the government of the District of Columbia who becomes a candidate may take an active part in political management or political campaigns in the elections for the office of Mayor, Chairman, and member of the Council. The exemptions apply only to candidates.

The exemptions are very limited and are intended to allow Federal and District employees to be candidates for these offices without resigning their employment. It is important to stress that participation in political management and political campaigns will still be prohibited by persons who do not qualify as bona fide candidates. It is also important to stress that all of the other provisions of the Hatch Act will continue to apply to both candidates and noncandidates.

The conference report limits the duration of the candidacy so as to insure as far as possible that only bona fide candidates will qualify for and continue to operate under the exemption. Candidacy is specifically defined as the period of time from which the candidate secures a nominating petition until: First, the day following the day he does not qualify to be a candidate by failing to secure the appropriate number of signatures; second, 30 days after he loses in the primary election; third, 30 days after he loses in the general election; or fourth, if elected, on the day he takes office.

The exemptions contained in the conference report applying to Federal and District employees will take effect on the day the residents in the District ratify the charter, May 7, 1974. These provisions will terminate, however, on January 2, 1975. This will insure that the exemptions will be available for only Federal or District employees who intend to run for office in the first elections held under the Home Rule Act.

In order to have the fullest assessment of the impact of this legislation, it is the sense of the managers of the conference that the U.S. Civil Service Commission should review the administration and operation of this legislation to determine its effect on elections in the District of Columbia and to report to the Congress on its findings and recommendations.

The conference report also adopts language which would exempt the offices of Mayor, Chairman, and member of the Council as established under the self-government legislation from the prohibitions against active participation in political management and political campaigns contained in the Hatch Act. The intent of this provision is to put these elected officials in the same position as elected State and local officials nationwide, and thereby allow them to be politically active.

In order to specifically deal with the possible hiatus in governance in the District of Columbia, the Commissioner of the District of Columbia and the members of the District of Columbia Council, including the Chairman and Vice Chairman, are exempted from the provisions of the Hatch Act prohibiting participation in political management and political campaigns for the first election. The operative effect of this section will be that the current appointed Mayor-Commissioner and City Council members would not have to resign their positions in order to run for elective office under the Home Rule Act.

This legislation is very limited in what it does do and intentionally so. Allow me to indicate specifically what the legislation does not do. The legislation does not exempt anyone from any provisions of the Hatch Act except that section which prohibits active participation in political management or political campaigns. The limitations on political contributions and services, political use of authority or influence, and influencing elections still stand.

SENATE FLOOR DEBATES ON
S.3044
APRIL 4, 1974

ernment in Britain holds a majority of unprecedented small proportions. Chancellor Brandt is said to be facing serious political difficulty within his own party which places added pressure on his coalition government. The Italians are continuing to have many of the same problems they have been experiencing over the years and with the death of Georges Pompidou, there is new political uncertainty in France as the election process begins.

The clear lack of political stability in Europe, combined with the uncertain economic climate on both sides of the Atlantic, makes the coming months a particularly inauspicious time to embark on unilateral troop reductions. Some European experts of the political process see the very likely possibility that an American unilateral troop reduction would greatly "radicalize" European politics. Whether this is the case, it is clear that the political implications of an abrupt American move would add new and troubling uncertainties to the European political scene at a time of existing economic and political difficulties.

If a unilateral American troop withdrawal would cause increased political uncertainty, it would surely heighten nationalistic sentiment in Western Europe. I have little doubt that greater European nationalism could, in turn, trigger an increase in economic protectionism in the United States. Ultimately, the alliance would suffer from such a deterioration of economic and political relations. It is important to realize that security is not to be found in military power alone. It is also to be found in economic and political cooperation in a context of greater consultation.

Almost every member of our alliance at one time or another has complained because its allies were not giving it material or moral support in some area outside of the geographical limitations described as the treaty area. This is another fundamental issue which must be faced and discussed openly.

The Dutch had their complaints about the U.S. attitude toward the former East Indies. The Belgians have often believed that the United States somehow promoted the loss of the Congo. Above all, the French have complained bitterly about inadequate U.S. support in Southeast Asia and virtually nonexistent support with respect to North Africa. The United States for its part turned right around and complained about the lack of enthusiasm of its alliance partners for the struggle in Southeast Asia when we took it over from the French. There is a certain irony and a certain justice involved in that proposition.

Most recently and most importantly, the United States and its Western European Allies have had a very real difference of opinion over developments in the Middle East. This is a matter of profound regret to me personally because of my deep interest in a Middle East settlement. I have been disappointed that the weight of the Atlantic Alliance has not been placed in the scales alongside us in helping to bring about such a settlement.

At the same time, I can intellectually, if not emotionally, appreciate a number of the arguments made by our European friends about their desire for noninvolvement. Considering the more fortunate position of the United States with respect to energy, and the dominant role played by American companies in the oil business, I can even understand why Western Europeans should have parted company with us to some degree in their rather frantic efforts to deal with the energy crisis. The fact is they had some reason to feel frantic because of their higher collective rate of inflation, their far greater exposure to Arab blackmailing efforts, and their already enormously high cost for energy. I can only hope and express the belief that we have been making substantial progress in remedying the breach caused within the alliance by these very important disagreements. I am not just being an instinctive optimist in expressing the view that we will overcome any such problems; as we have overcome others in the past.

But I must state that on almost every occasion one NATO member or another has been disappointed by the behavior of other allies when efforts are made to transfer the moral and political authority of the alliance outside of the European context. Despite these understandable differences, the NATO alliance remains strong and durable.

During the past few weeks both Americans and Europeans have spoken more bluntly and frankly about European-American relations both within and outside of the NATO alliance than at any other time in the postwar period. I have expressed my dissatisfaction with the remarks made by President Nixon and others which seemed to threaten our allies and demand certain behavior from them in order to insure our participation in their defense.

I want to restate my strong belief that these tactics do not strengthen a military alliance and surely do little to encourage greater economic and political cooperation across the Atlantic. If the American presence in Europe is indeed a key element in our national security, then using this fact as a bargaining chip in economic and political negotiations among allies does little to convince Europeans of our desire to see the defense of Europe and the United States as one and the same. It is an unfortunate way of behaving when time and time again we have heard that our commitment to Europe is nonnegotiable.

It is clear that we must search for a way to increase the consultation procedures both in and outside of the alliance. Both the United States and its NATO allies have been guilty of failing to consult one another. Without the development of formalized consultation procedures, I fear that we will be continually faced with recurring crises as a result of precipitous action taken without consultation. The tendency for action without consultation to occur in the economic and political context is much greater than in the military context. But it is impossible to contain the resulting ill feelings and hostility among allies solely in the original area in which the crisis occurred. There is, of course, spillover which damages the entire range of European-American relations.

These are only some of the complicated areas we must deal with on a daily basis in order to maintain and improve our alliance relationships.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I believe we must continue to deal with the Soviet Union and the countries of Eastern Europe in ways approaching normal relationships as closely as possible, while simultaneously remembering that we cannot help but express and act in consonance with our opposition of the totalitarian rule of societies to the East. We are going to have to deal more vigorously with the question of creating a more coherent policy governing the use of nuclear weapons, in all their varieties and in all their menace. The critically important SALT talks must be fostered and assisted to the best of our abilities, as well as the current MBFR negotiations.

These are all great and challenging tasks. And the road ahead assuredly cannot be regarded as a smooth one. On both sides of the Atlantic we face serious economic and political dislocations which only serve to exacerbate tensions within a military alliance. But I am confident that both Europeans and Americans will be able to work together to assure their mutual security as they have done over the last quarter of a century. NATO continues to be the shield of our defense, and a vital force for peace and cooperation.

THE PRESIDENT'S TAXES

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation has reviewed its staff report on the President's taxes for the years 1969 through 1972. While we have not completely analyzed all of the technical aspects of the report, the members agree with the substance of most of the recommendations made by the staff. Because of the President's decision to pay the deficiencies and interest for 1969 through 1972, as asserted by the Internal Revenue Service, whose determinations closely approximate the recommendations of the committee's staff, the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation has decided to conclude its examination of the President's returns. The committee commends the President for his prompt decision to make these tax payments.

The above statement was agreed to by all of the members of the joint committee present except the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS).

Senator CURTIS expressed the view that he concurred in the motion to conclude the examination but dissented from the concurrence with the staff report.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the hour of 11 a.m. having arrived, the Senate will now resume the consideration of the unfinished business, S. 3044, which the clerk will state.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

S. 3044. To amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Time for debate between 11 a.m. and 12 o'clock noon will be equally divided and controlled by the distinguished Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON) and the distinguished Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN).

Who yields time?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the question now before the Senate is whether debate on this great and fundamental issue shall be brought to a close and the bill in its present shape, with little likelihood of amendments, will be rammed through the Senate. A vote in the negative—a vote against cloture—would allow the bill to remain before the Senate in order that amendments not now at the desk may be presented and considered by the Senate and acted on. Hopefully, one such amendment would be to remove the public financing feature from the bill and retain the other features, the features providing for limiting contributions to $3,000. That is too high. Hopefully, that will be reduced.

On yesterday, the Senator from Alabama sought to get that reduced to $250 in Presidential races and $100 in congressional races. But that amendment was voted down.

Mr. President, the pending bill in its public financing aspects is not campaign reform.

What atrocities have been committed in the name of liberty. What atrocities have been committed in the name of campaign reform. Turning a bill for political campaigns over to the taxpayer is not reform.

That is what this bill provides, for greatly accelerating the costs of many races, and providing subsidies for candidates for the nomination for the Presidency up to $7.5 million for each of the multitude of candidates.

You can rest assured, Mr. President, that there will be a multitude running, with the Government paying up to $7.5 million per candidate.

With the Government paying the bill, it will draw our Government farther away from the people. The Government is already too far away from the people. But, as the taxpayers are required to pay the costs of Federal elections, there will be less consideration on the part of the incumbents in Federal offices for the people they represent. They will be less in touch with them. They will be farther removed from them. They will be less responsive to the wishes of the people.

If the public treasury is financing their campaign, there will not be the voluntary participation on the part of the electorate, on the part of individual citizens, because they are coerced into contributing, by the provisions of this bill, requiring the Treasury to pick up the tab. That will create apathy and less interest in political campaigns. Also, Mr. President, with the Treasury paying the bill and the taxpayers—that is a synonym for the Treasury—with the taxpayers paying the bill, this of necessity would require the taxpayer as part of the Treasury, whose funds go to make up the Treasury, to support candidates with whose views and philosophy he disagrees.

Now, what reform is there in that? What reform is it to pay, for example, in the State of California, over $2 million to each of the senatorial candidates in the general elections to enable them to carry on their campaigns, after having contributed up to $"00,000 for each candidate in the primary?

A U.S. Senator from the State of California—and I notice both the California Senators are supporting this, and I use California obviously because it is a State with the largest population—but under this bill, if we do not have an opportunity to amend it, and I do have amendments that would cut these amounts down, but as the bill now stands, the public treasury would turn over to each of the candidates for the office of a U.S. Senator in California, each of the candidates of the two major parties, at the start of their campaigns, a check for $2,121,000.

When I talk about the evils of big contributions—and the Senator from Alabama has been trying to get them reduced, but the advocates of public financing do not want them reduced, they want it to be $3,000—I call that a big contribution myself—I would like to see it reduced to $250—what reform is there in financing half of the campaign of all the candidates in California, or any other State in the Union, and then paying a subsidy running up to over $2 million in the State of California for the senatorial campaign?

As I pointed out here on the floor, a U.S. Senator's compensation over a 6-year period would run about $250,000—about a quarter of a million dollars in 6 years; yet the Government, to enable the senatorial candidate under this bill—and I have tried to knock out House and Senate coverage in the bill, but Members of the Senate apparently want their campaigns financed by the taxpayers—and that is what this bill says—it provides that Senators and House Members will have their campaign in the general election financed 100 percent by the taxpayers.

Is that reform, Mr. President?

Reform comes from cutting down the overall amount of expenditures and contributions, with full disclosure of all the contributions and expenditures, and then cutting down on the amount of the individual contributors.

Now, Mr. President, on July 30 of last year the Senate passed a good reform measure, S. 372, and sent it over to the House. It did not have any public financing whatsoever in the bill. As a matter of fact, an amendment to put public financing in was rejected by the Senate by a substantial vote. We have not even waited on the House to act on that bill before changing the entire theory of our legislation.

I believe we are acting too hurriedly in this matter, Mr. President. I believe we need to consider this further, rather than to adopt a gag rule that will prevent the submission of any other amendments not now at the desk. There is no amendment at the desk that would try again to knock the public financing feature out of this bill; and if cloture is adopted, no such amendment can be offered.

I am hopeful that the Senate will not cut off debate and go ahead and ram this bill through, because the solution of the problems arising from political campaigns and the financing of political campaigns lies in true reform, not merely in public subsidy.

The issue presented here, as the Senator from Alabama sees it, is whether by extending the debate we might end up with a true reform measure, or whether we are going to settle for a solution of handing the bill to the taxpayer. Handing the bill to the taxpayer would require an "aye" vote on the cloture motion. Holding out for further consideration and possible true reform would call for a "no" vote on cloture. That is the issue here, as the Senator from Alabama sees it.

The issue is whether we are going to pass a measure, a so-called reform, which in actuality is for a Federal subsidy. We already have Federal subsidy to a great extent—Federal subsidy in every field one can think of, for that matter—and we are now getting around to subsidizing the politicians directly. There has been a great deal of talk about subsidizing them indirectly. This would subsidize them directly.

Mr. President, earlier this year, the Senate rejected an effort to increase the compensation of the Members of the House and the Senate by $2,500. The Senator from Alabama voted against that effort. How can we consistently say that we are not going to pay the House and the Senate Members $2,500 more in salary, but that we are going to make it possible for them to reach into the Federal till and pull out up to $2.1 million in the State of California, on the part of Senators, and lesser amounts on down? I am not saying it is that amount in all States. It is going to enable the candidates for the Presidency—and there are approximately 10 of them in the Senate—to reach into the public till and pull out up to $7.5 million each. Is that reform? I submit that it is not.

If the public is unwilling to compensate the Members of the House and the Senate by an additional $2,500, once the media is willing to make this issue known, do you think they are going to look kindly on a bill that provides up to the neighborhood of a half billion dollars every 4 years for the politicians of this country, those who are in the House and the Senate, or want to be in the House and the Senate, and those who want the Presidency? I do not believe that the people of this Nation will do so, if this issue is properly presented, not presented as a reform measure. It is reform, all right, in the sense that it reforms. It reforms the law; it reshapes the law; but it is not reform. Yes, it changes the law by taking it out of the private sector and reforming the law to make the Public Treasury pay for it.

If the public ever finds out the true issues involved here, they are not going to look kindly on this effort to saddle the taxpayers of this land with the campaign expenses of all the politicians in the country who aspire to serve in the House and the Senate or in the Presidency.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time, and I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN).

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I shall cast my vote today against the cloture motion, although I realize full well that my position may be misunderstood. It is likely, I fear, that the public will be misled into the belief that campaign reform is being filibustered to death in the U.S. Senate.

Tragically, in my view, the American people will find it difficult to get the facts. Three of the four titles left in this bill can be described as genuine campaign finance reform. But unfortunately, title I, which would establish public financing of campaigns—financing directly out of the Public Treasury—does not contribute reform at all. It represents, instead, a raid on the Treasury and a huge escalation of the levels of campaign spending.

However, aside from the merits of public financing—there is also an important procedural question: whether it is appropriate at this point to cut off debate, particularly in light of the fact that there are some 86 proposed amendments pending at the desk which have not yet been considered.

Needless to say, this subject is not only controversial, but it is very complex. It is not surprising that many Senators have many ideas concerning amendments that should be adopted.

Now that the Senate has turned its attention to the subject of campaign reform, it seems to me that we should take the time necessary to fully and adequately consider all the proposals and options. If cloture were invoked, there would be no way that the Senate could give that kind of consideration to the 86 amendments still pending.

Aside from the merits, then, it seems to me that even those who may favor public financing should vote against cloture today. That would be a vote for orderly and careful deliberation of a most important and complex subject.

Returning to the merits of title I, taxpayer financing, I find it interesting—although I have not read this in the news report—that five out of the seven Senators who serve on Watergate Investigating Committee have registered opposition to public financing. The members of that committee have uncovered and exposed the abuses we are supposed to be seeking to correct. The Watergate Committee has been charged with the responsibility, not only of investigating but also of recommending needed reforms to correct the abuses.

Senate attention should be taken, by the Senate as well as the press, of that fact that a substantial majority of the committee best qualified to pass judgment does not view public financing as reform.

I wonder how many people know that. The Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), for example, has an amendment which will be considered later. It is my understanding that his amendment which would strike from the bill the title I public financing provisions and insert in lieu thereof a more liberal income tax allowance for individual contributions.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's 5 minutes have expired.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield the Senator an additional 2 minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan may proceed.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, the amendment to be proposed by the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), is a very meritorious and important amendment, in my opinion. It can be said that to give tax recognition to an individual contribution is a form of public financing—and that is so. To that extent, the Government is being denied an amount of tax that otherwise would be paid into the Treasury. But there is a very important difference between this approach and the approach of title I in the bill.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's 2 minutes have expired.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield the Senator 2 additional minutes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Under the Baker amendment, the individual citizen retains the important right of contributing to and supporting the candidates of his choice.

As I have pointed out before, one of the most serious defects in title I, as it appears in the bill, is that, instead of holding campaign spending in check or reducing the level of campaign spending, it would greatly escalate the levels of campaign spending. And, of course, the additional dollars to be spent would come out of the Treasury—which means that they would be taken involuntarily out of the pockets of the taxpayers.

As I have said before, looking at races for the House of Representatives alone, if title I should become law, the level of campaign spending for House races would increase from $39 million—which was the total for 1972 according to records on file with the clerk of the House—to a total of over $100 million, according to an official estimate by the General Accounting Office.

If the taxpayers of America ever become fully informed taxpayers on this point, and if they regard that as campaign reform, I will be a "monkey's uncle." I urge the Senate to vote today against the cloture motion.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I was delighted to hear the distinguished Senator from Michigan say that he supported the other provisions of the bill except for title I, and thought that was, indeed, campaign reform. That is exactly what we were attempting to achieve in the Committee on Rules and Administration. I may say, to respond to his statement concerning title I on public financing, that the Committee on Rules and Administration was charged with that responsibility by the Senate last fall, wherein we were to attempt to report to the Senate a bill on public financing within 30 days after the new session commenced.

This bill is the result of that charge which the Senate gave to us by a vote of Senators. The Senator has spoken at some length against title I, and said that he is opposed to the concept of public financing. The Senate already has voted on this issue and said, in effect, they want some form of public financing.

I do not know whether this is the correct formula for public financing, but it is quite clear that the majority of the Senate wants some form of public financing, not as a raid on the Treasury of the United States, but in an attempt to cure a greater evil, that of tremendously large contributions from private sources to individual campaigns, and to eliminate so far as possible the danger of undue influence as a result of those large contributions to particular candidates, or to particular committees for the candidates.

Now, we could argue a lot about the formula. The distinguished Sentor from Michigan said the amount for Members of the House is too big. It may well be that it is too big. There is no magic in the figure of $90,000 maximum. We arrived at that because it was a figure we had used in S. 372 last year. But basically, I, for one, felt, and I think the remainder of the committee members felt, this is a matter that the House should determine. So let the bill go over to the House, and whatever figure they decide is reasonable for Members of the House we can go along with, but we did try to arrive at a formula that would determine the races for President and Vice President and would determine senatorial races.

I am not wedded to the figures there. When we use the figure 10 cents per voting age population in the primary, that may not be the correct figure. Perhaps 8 cents is more correct, with a maximum and a minimum floor to cover small States and small districts. I do not know whether 15 cents per voting age population is the correct formula or not on the general election. But I say the way to decide that is not to try to kill the bill. The way to decide that is to try to offer amendments to this particular bill to change the formula if one does not like that particular formula.

Last year the Senate voted 58 to 34 for some form of public financing of presidential primaries and general elections and congressional general elections only. In this bill we went further than that. We made one-half matching in the primary election if the person reached the threshold amount, so we would attempt to discourage persons who were not really serious candidates and who had no widespread appeal. We did include the primary elections based on that matching amount in this bill.

So, Mr. President, I find myself in a rather unusual position this morning. I am a person who has traditionally opposed cloture in the Congress, because I felt these matters should be debated at length. On the other hand, as floor manager of the bill here, I would like to get at the issue. I have not voted for cloture many times in the period I have been in the Congress. While I did not join in signing the cloture motion, I do intend to vote for cloture in this instance, in the hope that we can go through the other amendments, that we can adopt amendments that may vary the formula we have adopted, may change some particulars of the bill itself, but mainly so that we can carry out what has now been determined on at least two occasions by the Senate—that we do want some form of public financing bill, and that we can get it to the House so they can work their will on it.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, on whose time?

Mr. CANNON. On my time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield 4 minutes to the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON).

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Nevada very much for yielding, and I also thank him for the very effective work he has been doing in handling this measure on the floor.

I want to say to the Senator from Alabama that I am delighted he is on the floor, because I wanted to cover one point while he was present, since he has been mentioning one aspect of the bill as it relates to the State of California from time to time.

As I listened to his remarks a couple of days ago, I found myself in some agreement with him in his references to the amount of funding which would be available to a candidate from California under this bill.

This aspect of public financing of election campaigns has given me real concern. I am troubled by the amount of Federal funding which would be available to me personally as a candidate for the U.S. Senate in the Nation's most populous State, although, obviously, there is almost no chance that a public financing proposal might be enacted in time to affect this year's election.

So, as far as I am concerned, if I am reelected, we are looking ahead to the 1980 election.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that precise point?

Mr. CRANSTON I yield.

Mr. CANNON. One of the amendments we have already adopted now is to completely eliminate the 1974 election, so if the bill is passed with that amendment in it, it would preclude the Senator himself from being involved in it in any way.

Mr. CRANSTON. I thank the Senator very much. So, whether or not I will ever be affected by it depends on what will happen in this year's election.

My first reaction—and this was when I developed a similar bill affecting California campaigns as well as the rest of the Nation—was that I should propose a ceiling lower than 15 cents per eligible voter in Senate and Presidential races in such large States as California and New York—so that my proposal would not appear to be self-serving, monetarily, and also to reduce the total cost of public financing.

My second reaction was that such a ceiling in itself could be self-serving, since it might deny a potential opponent adequate funds to overcome whatever built-in advantage I have as an incumbent.

On Monday, I had the opportunity to vote with the distinguished Senator from New York (Mr. BUCKLEY) on his amendment to reduce by 30 percent the amount of money available to an incumbent. I supported that amendment, because I believe that incumbents do have a substantial advantage in their efforts for reelection.

A number of Senators in the course of this debate have commented on the inconsistency between recent polls showing that though Congress is held in extremely low esteem, a number of individual incumbents are running stronger in polls taken on their own races, and the majority of incumbents are expected to win reelection.

Possibly fewer incumbents will be reelected this year, but a majority will be reelected—that is normal insofar as incumbents seeking reelection is concerned.

This inconsistency, it seems to me, illustrates the enormous advantage to holding public office, which enables an incumbent to overcome this public doubt about the legislative body in which he serves. Clearly, it is reasonable to allow nonincumbents more campaign funds in order to try to equalize the imbalance in the present system.

Even though that amendment was defeated, the bill before us, which provides equal funding for incumbents and nonincumbents, will be of greater advantage to the challenger than the present system. The reason for this is fairly obvious: an incumbent usually finds it easier to raise campaign funds than does a nonincumbent. When I support public financing, I do so knowing full well that almost surely public financing will help my opponents more than it will help me.

The $2.1 million which a senatorial candidate in California would receive under the present bill is a lot of money. I, for one, indicated yesterday my willingness to reduce that $2.1 million by better than $600,000 for an incumbent.

But for a nonincumbent—a challenger who has not campaigned to the enormous constituency of a State of 21 million people—$2.1 million is in line with the amounts normally spent in major statewide elections under the present system of private financing.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, may I have 3 or 4 additional minutes?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield 4 additional minutes to the Senator from California.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I believe a challenger must reasonably, under normal conditions and under present law, face the task of raising such sums to finance a successful campaign against an incumbent. And let us remember that California's $2.1 million is still based upon only 15 cents per voting age person—the same amount which would be available for a candidate in Alabama or any other State.

I do not know how much or how little my opponent this November will be able to raise for his campaign against me. But I do know that if this bill had been enacted, my November opponent would have $2.1 million to spend against mine.

Nevertheless, I support the principle of public financing and I support this bill—not because it is to my own political advantage, for it clearly is not.

I support the bill because it will end the corrosion big money brings to our system of representative democracy.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, is it not also very true that if a person does not want to go the public financing route, he has the option of remaining with private financing, if that is something that he prefers to do? It seems to me that public financing would help the challenger more than it would help the incumbent, which is quite contrary to the objection of the distinguished Senator from Alabama.

Mr. CRANSTON. Yes, I believe that to be the case.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the central issue in the struggle for cloture on the election reform bill now before the Senate is who owns Congress? Put another way, the question is whether we in Congress are going to put our own house in order by adopting public financing for our own elections.

We already have public financing for Presidential elections. In fact, we enacted it into law 7 months before the Watergate break-in. Yet, today, nearly 2 years after that break-in, Congress is still trying to decide whether public financing is right for its own elections.

If any set of facts can tip the balance in favor of public financing for Senate and House elections, it ought to be the news of the unconscionable warchests that special interest groups have already put together for the 1974 congressional elections. By the end of February, as reported recently by Common Cause, registered political committees affiliated with special interest groups had already amassed the enormous sum of 11.6 million, or more than the entire amount spent by such committees in all of 1972.

The message from that list is unmistakable. The lobbyists and special interest groups are alive and well in Washington. They haven't missed a stride over Watergate. Their pockets are already bulging with contributions to be made. They are on the prowl today in the halls of Congress, assessing Senators and Representatives for possible investment in the fall elections. Take but two examples:

One might have thought that after Watergate and the furor over the milk deal, the Associated Milk Producers, Inc., would have been gun-shy about campaign contributions. Hardly. Not when vast benefits worth hundreds or thousands or even millions of dollars are to be gained for the bargain price of a well-placed campaign contribution. And so, AMPI's political action arm, TAPE, leads the list of all special interest groups in the size of the warchest for 1974—$1.4 million by the end of February and still counting. The price of a quart of milk is already higher than Skylab. Who knows how much more the forgotten American consumer will be paying, once AMPI's 1974 war chest works its way into the mainstream of Federal legislation.

Or take the American Medical Association. The AMA has a warchest of $889,000. Is there any doubt that this AMA money will be used in the fall elections to subvert national health insurance and to support candidates who oppose health reform?

Undoubtedly, anyone in Congress who goes down the list of special interest committees and their warchests knows what each group wants from Congress.

The issue is an ancient one. No man can serve two masters. No Senator or Congressman can serve both the people of America and his big campaign contributors. So long as we in the Congress continue the practice of financing our campaigns with the dollars of a wealthy few who have a stake in the laws we pass, corruption will keep increasing and democracy will keep decaying.

The names of future scandals will be different, but the problem will be the same, because the laws we pass will always bear the brand of the special interest groups.

We can end this shameful spectacle by which Congress puts itself up for auction every second year. We can wash away the growing stain on America's democracy. But we can do so only by making a clean break with our corrupt and discredited system of private financing of elections.

It is time for Congress to change its spots. It is time we held up the mirror of Watergate to ourselves—if we take an honest look, we will recognize ourselves. And when we do, we will realize that we owe our constituents a better deal. Then, cloture will be invoked, and the Nation will begin a new era of clean and honest elections to Federal office.

Mr. President, the Senate itself first voted for public financing for presidential elections in 1966. Now, almost a decade later, we are trying to decide whether to have public financing for our own elections. I don't think we need more debate. This issue has been extensively debated. It was debated in 1966, in 1967, and in 1971, when the dollar checkoff was enacted into law. It was debated last year, as a major amendment to the debt ceiling bill. That is when the filibusters first began. We heard at that particular time that the reason why we needed extended debate was that we had not had hearings; that Congress must have a chance to consider public financing more fully, and must give people of differing views a chance to speak out.

Now, under the distinguished leadership of the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON), we have had extensive committee hearings. Different groups put forward their ideas and suggestions. The committee has acted. We are ready to vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. KENNEDY. I ask for 3 more minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I yield the Senator 3 additional minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Nonetheless, after we have come through this extensive and exhaustive procedure in the Senate, we find ourselves embroiled again in a full and extended debate that cannot go by any other name than filibuster. The overwhelming majority of Members of this body, want to face up to this issue. The overwhelming majority of the American people want Congress to face up to the issue. Still, we are being frustrated in facing up to it by a filibuster.

Many Members of this body recognize extended debate as the means of protecting a minority who feel strongly about an issue. Traditionally, a minority of one-third of the Members of this body is able to prevent the majority from acting. And so, the vote today presents a difficult decision and a difficult moral judgment because all of us in the majority want to respect the strong views of the minority among us, but all of us also want the Congress to get back on the path of truly representing all the people. It is not just today's vote we look at, but the road ahead for Congress in the Nation's future.

Few issues have been debated and discussed as extensively as this one has. There is a very clear mandate for this proposal from the American people. That mandate has been expressed here by past votes and during the course of this debate by the Members of this body. What we are asking is an opportunity to face up to the issue, and not to be prohibited from doing so by those who are unalterably opposed to this reform. I am hopeful that we will invoke cloture on this issue.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, how much time remains to the Senator from Alabama?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has 3 minutes.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts has said that the issue is who owns Congress, indicating, I assume, that some Members of Congress are subservient to special interests. He did not bother to name any, and I wonder who those Senators are.

The Senator from Alabama is not one of them. I daresay that the Senator from Alabama, in the upcoming race in his home State this fall, will not spend one-twentieth of the amount of money that would be available to him under this public financing, so it would be interesting to know who some of these Senators are who are subservient to special interests.

Also, Mr. President, there is the nonsequitur that the distinguished Senator from Nevada has used and the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts is using that the way to remove the influence of the special interests is to provide for public financing, and hand the bill to the taxpayers.

That is not necessary at all. All that is necessary is to cut down on the amount of permissible contributions. That is what the Senator from Alabama has been trying to do. But I notice that the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Nevada voted against my amendment to cut permissible contributions to $250 in Presidential races and $100 in House and Senate races. That is the way to remove any sinister influence, if there be any sinister influence.

Also, the Senator from Nevada said:

> Well, we ought to improve the bill by offering amendments.

The Senator knows that if cloture is invoked in a few minutes, there will be no way to offer any other amendments; so the way to get perfecting amendments offered and considered would be to vote down cloture, Mr. President, so that other amendments can be presented.

The issue here is whether we will continue to have the process of voluntary participation by the American people in elections, or whether we are going to turn the bill over to the taxpayers, and let the taxpayers pay the bill.

I was somewhat amused by the doubts of the distinguished Senator from California, who said he was disturbed about this $2.1 million that would be handed to a candidate for the Senate out there. He was troubled about it, but he has resolved his doubts and is willing to see a candidate for the Senate received $2,121,000 to make his general election campaign.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. CANNON. What is the time situation, Mr. President?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada has 3 minutes remaining. The Senator from Alabama has 1 remaining minute.

Mr. CANNON. At 12 o'clock, does a quorum call ensue?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. A quorum call is automatic under the rules.

Mr. CANNON. To be immediately followed by the cloture vote?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. When there is a quorum, that is correct.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I do not know that there is much I can add to what has already been said on this matter. The issue is simply whether we do or do not want campaign reform, and with that reform, whether we have it include the public financing of campaigns on a matching basis in the primaries and on a complete basis in the general elections.

As I said before, the Senate has already spoken on that particular issue. A majority of the Senators have voted at least twice that that is what the Senate desires. So this is an opportunity, now, to make a determination of whether the percentage is high enough that cloture can be invoked, in order that this bill can come to a vote of the Senate and the Senate can invoke its will.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. Do I correctly understand that if cloture is invoked today, various amendments—of which I understand there are about 80 at the desk, dealing with a range of public and private financing issues—will be considered by the Senate, and that the Senate will have an opportunity to debate these amendments and vote on every one of them, and get an expression by Members of the Senate on each amendment? Is that correct?

Mr. CANNON. The Senator is correct. It is my understanding that there are about 86 amendments at the desk, each of which would be available to be called up and for a vote to be had on them in the process after the conclusion of the cloture vote, so that those particular issues certainly could be considered over and above the issues that have already been considered in the bill.

I do not know just how many amendments we have adopted so far, but I know we have had a considerable number of votes on the bill thus far.

Mr. KENNEDY. Would the Senator not agree with me that it would be surprising if any new issues are introduced, since this matter has been thoroughly discussed over the last 2 weeks?

Mr. CANNON. This issue has been before us for a long time, and it would seem to me that Senators who have issues about which they feel strongly would have them at the desk by now. I cannot conceive of many new issues that would come up by this late date.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. All time of the Senator from Nevada has expired. The Senator from Alabama has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield my 1 minute to the Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN).

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, if this bill passes in its present form, the public may be fooled by the reports into thinking that the abuses of Watergate have been corrected—that Congress has voted for reform.

It is important, I believe, to state again that five out of the seven members of the Senate's Watergate Investigating Committee have positioned themselves against public financing. They do not regard public financing as the reform needed to take care of Watergate.

Furthermore, while the bill dips deep into the Treasury, it does not eliminate special interest contributions and influence. Indeed, the other day, an amendment which I opposed, was adopted to increase the ceiling on a contribution from a special interest group to a candidate from $3,000 to $6,000. So, we have been going in the wrong direction.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the campaign reform bill pending before the Senate today may well be more important than any other legislation to come before this Congress, in terms of its long-range ramifications for our country. In my judgment, it is essential that we overcome the delaying tactics being employed by opponents of this bill; I for one certainly will vote to limit debate so that we may take a final vote on this bill, and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

Every responsible American citizen has recoiled in revulsion at the disclosure of the abuses of our political system committed during the 1972 Presidential election campaign. These acts, lumped together generically as "The Watergate Scandal," represent an alien and diabolic perversion of our political system. Nevertheless they did occur, they occurred within the very highest levels of our governmental and political structures, and they occurred despite laws which prohibit such behavior.

The aftermath of Watergate has been a national trauma that continues to this day, and is likely to become even more serious before it is ended. It is a tribute to the American people that they have insisted on a full airing of this dismal business, despite the pain involved. It is a testament to our system of justice that those guilty of crimes are being called swiftly to account. And it is confirmation of the strength of our political and governmental systems that they will survive Watergate, perhaps stronger than before.

The Watergate scandal is the disgrace and tragedy of a handful of cynical men. But, it would be a national disgrace, and perhaps a national tragedy, if we as a people failed to learn from this experience and act to prevent it from happening again.

The mail I get from constituents, personal contacts, and the public opinion surveys, all tell the same story; Americans are disillusioned with elected officials, and are demanding steps be taken to guard against future Watergates. The bill before us today, S. 3044, is the single most important step we can take to both restore confidence, and prevent future political scandals.

As a member of the Committee on Rules and Administration, where this bill was developed, I can say it was carefully drafted with both the lessons of Watergate, and the guiding principles of our democracy, firmly in mind. It is certainly not a panacea, but no legislation is. However, I think nearly all Senators would agree that most provisions of this bill are necessary reforms that would be effective in insuring high standards of political conduct.

The provision that some Senators strongly disagree with is public financing of election campaigns. It is appropriate that this be the greatest point of controversy, since it is assuredly the most important reform contained in this bill.

I am not sure whether I would agree that "money is the root of all evil." But, it was unquestionably the root of much of the evil associated with Watergate, and much of the evil exposed in many other areas of political activity. Furthermore, we have seen that no number of laws to regulate the matter of political contributions can be effective in eliminating all abuses in this area. The only way we will ever effectively eliminate the abuse of political contributions as a deterrent to good politics and good government is to finance campaigns for public office, from the public treasury.

This bill establishes the principle of public financing in both primary and general elections for Federal office. At the same time, it allows for gradual transition by offering candidates for Congress and for President the option of relying entirely on public financing, or on private contributions, or on a mix of both. Furthermore, it is carefully designed to preserve the two-party system, while allowing for challenges from serious third-party, or independent candidates. And, it contains safeguards against the public financing of frivolous candidates.

Mr. President, the provisions of this legislation, the reasons why it is needed, and the arguments for and against it, are well known to Members of the Senate. If we are to behave responsibly and respond to the demands by our constituents for reform, we must turn away from further debate and get quickly to a vote on the merits of this legislation.

CLOTURE MOTION

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. NUNN). The hour of 12 o'clock noon having arrived, under the unanimous-consent agreement, pursuant to rule XXII, the Chair lays before the Senate the pending cloture motion, which the clerk will read.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of Rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close the debate upon the pending bill S. 3044, a bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mike Mansfield, Warren G. Magnuson, James B. Pearson, Robert Dole, Hugh Scott, Claiborne Pell, Frank Church, Quentin N. Burdick, Marlow W. Cook, William Proxmire, Clifford P. Case, Henry M. Jackson, Daniel K. Inouye, Hubert H. Humphrey, Joseph R. Biden, Jr.,

Ted Stevens, Stuart Symington, Floyd K. Haskell, Birch Bayh, William D. Hathaway, Edmund S. Muskie, Jennings Randolph, Dick Clark, Jacob K. Javits.

CALL OF THE ROLL

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under rule XXII, the Chair directs the clerk to call the roll to ascertain the presence of a quorum.

The second assistant legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote the yeas are 60 and the nays are 36. Fewer than two-thirds of the Senators present and voting having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected.

The pending question is on the amendment by the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), No. 1075, on which there is a 1-hour limitation.

Who yields time?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and ask unanimous consent that the time not be charged against either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, would the Chair state the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read amendment No. 1075.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendments be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Amendments No. 1075 are as follows:

On page 35, line 14, strike out "tenth" and insert in lieu thereof "fifth".

On page 36, line 9, after "other than", insert the following: "the fifth day preceding an election and".

On page 36, line 15, after "filed on" insert the following: "the fifth day preceding an election or".

On page 63, beginning with line 11, strike out through line 5 on page 64.

On page 64, line 7, strike out "318." and insert in lieu thereof "317.".

On page 64, line 14, strike out "319." and insert in lieu thereof "318.".

On page 75, line 19, strike out "(a)" and insert in lieu thereof "(a)(1)".

On page 75, between lines 23 and 24, insert the following:

"(2) No person may make a contribution to, or for the benefit of, a candidate for that candidate's campaign for nomination for election, or election, during the period which begins on the tenth day preceding day of that election and which ends on the day of that election.".

On page 76, between lines 2 and 3, insert the following:

"(2) No candidate may knowingly accept a contribution for his campaign for nomination for election, or election, during the period which begins on the tenth day preceding the day of that election and which ends on the day of that election.".

On page 76, line 3, strike out "(2)" and insert in lieu thereof "(3)".

On page 76, line 6, strike out "paragraph (1)." and insert in lieu thereof "paragraph (1) or (2).".

On page 77, between lines 5 and 6, insert the following:

"(e) No candidate, or person who accepts contributions for the benefit or use of that candidate, may accept a contribution which, when added to all other contributions accepted by that candidate or person, is in excess of the amount which is reasonably necessary to defray the ependitures of that candidate.".

On page 77, line 6, strike out "(e)" and insert in lieu thereof "(f)".

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may utilize.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to purify the process of public disclosure of campaign contributions by requiring the completion of that process before rather than after the election has taken place. In other words, my amendment would require political candidates to disclose the size and source of all contributions a time certain before each election. In this way the public is afforded their full and legitimate right to examine the sources of a particular candidate's financial support, and then draw their own conclusion prior to voting.

The mechanics of my amendment are quite simple. A deadline is established 10 days before each election. No contributions can be received by candidates after that deadline, from any source. This means that unless a contribution was either personally delivered or postmarked prior to the deadline, it would have to be returned to the contributor by the candidate.

Five days after the deadline, and 5 days before the election, each candidate is required to file a final report of all campaign contributions, including, of course, the sources and amounts. This better enables the public to review relevant disclosure data, so as to base their ultimate judgments on the complete record. That is the point of public disclosure, and we mislead ourselves and the American people if we give the impression that all the financial cards are on the table before the election. The fact of the matter is that they are not under the present system and will not be under the reforms embodied in S. 3044. That is why I have offered this amendment.

As of now, any candidate can postpone disclosure of potentially damaging information on political contributions until after the election and after it is too late to make a difference. My amendment would not permit this. The only circumstances under which contributions could be received after the 10-day period leading up to and including the election would be to defray debts incurred during the campaign.

I am aware that the establishment of a deadline 10 days before an election with the final report due 5 days preceding the election will require a massive amount of accounting at a very critical time in most campaigns. However, I believe, as I am sure most of my colleagues do, that public disclosure is essential to the success of any system of private financing of political campaigns, regardless of how limited the role of the individual contributor might be. This was evidenced by the unprecedented public disclosure requirements enacted in the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971. Moreover, it now appears obvious that we might have avoided a great deal of the campaign finance abuses associated with the 1972 campaign for President, and other races, had these provisions been in effect long before the spring of that year. For that reason, I have proposed an amendment which would not only seek to avoid the abuses of earlier campaigns, but also enhance the public's right to know.

That right is significant as it relates to the matter of public disclosure, because normally, a great deal can be learned from examining the sources of individual contributions. The names and occupations of the individual contributors tells the public where a particular candidate's strongest support lies; and it can often imply how that candidate would vote on a particular issue without knowing the candidate's personal view.

For example, if it were disclosed that a candidate had received contributions, regardless of the amount, from a dozen or two dozen individuals who all happened to work for various veterans organizations, then it might be assumed that those individuals considered that candidate generally sympathetic to veterans' concerns; and the same example could be applied to countless other occupations. The point is that public disclosure plays a very important role in assisting the voters to make up their minds, whether it is for a primary or general election.

And yet, that role is substantially hindered by the present reporting procedures. The question is not so much whether those procedures are used to purposefully deceive the public, but rather whether they actually retard the public's ability to base their judgment on all the facts. I believe clearly the present procedures and the reforms proposed in S. 3044 do retard that ability and that they are not consistent with the true intent of public disclosure. Thus, I urge that we amend that procedure by prohibiting the receipt of additional contributions after 10 days preceding the election, and require a full and final reporting of those contributions 5 days before the election takes place. It is the only way I know of to guarantee the public's right to know, and it is for this reason that I urge the support of my colleagues.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I am opposed to this amendment. In the first place, with respect to the contributions, it is completely unrealistic, because the rough part of the campaign, insofar as the need to have funds available is concerned, occurs in about the last 10 to 15 days. The prohibition in the amendment would make it so that no contribution could be made within 10 days of an election, and the candidate could not accept a contribution within that period of time. So really, if we are going to do this, we may just as well move the election up 10 days. That, for all practical purposes, is what it means.

With respect to the reporting provisions, we have checked carefully with the peope who have had some experience in the field of reporting and making the information available on some useful basis, and they advise us that this type of reporting is not long enough for a report to be mailed in and for them to put out that information and make the information public as it should be made.

Therefore, I am opposed to the amendment. I think that page 3 subsection 6, is completely redundant. It provides that a person cannot accept a contribution in an amount in excess of the amount reasonably necessary to defray the expenditure. We will never know what the expenditures are until they have been incurred. Sometimes the expenditures occur late, at the last minute. Sometimes bills come in even after the campaign is over. We have in the bill a provision for payment to the Treasury over the excess amount that may have been collected. That provision is in the bill. I think it is adequate.

This amendment is vague and uncertain and would impose an undue burden on a candidate and those working in his behalf to determine what is reasonably necessary to defray the expenditures of the candidate, so that he will not have excess money and be in violation of that particular provision.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am virtually prepared to yield back the remainder of my time and proceed to a vote. I have one brief remark in response to the observations of the distinguished chairman, the manager of the bill.

Briefly stated, the rationale of the amendment is that if there is to be public disclosure, it has to be an integral part of the system if it is to attract importance in the eyes of the public, and if it is to have something to do with whether one votes for or against a candidate. It seems essential to make that final report before the election, because between the time 10 days before the election and January 31, a candidate could collect a million dollars, and the public would never know it. The sole purpose of the amendment is that if we are going to have full disclosure, let us make it before the election, not after the election.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), and the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON) is absent on official business.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. COOK), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS), and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent an official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 57, as follows:

So Mr. BAKER's amendment (No. 1075) was rejected.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK). The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Marks, one of his secretaries.

REPORTS OF SIX RIVER BASIN COMMISSIONS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATHAWAY) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying reports, was referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. The message is as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am happy to transmit herewith the annual reports of the six river basin commissions, as required under section 204

(2) of the Water Resources Planning Act of 1965.

The act states that commissions may be established, comprised of State and Federal members at the request of the Governors of the States within the proposed commission area. Each commission is responsible for planning the best use of water and related land resources in its area and for recommending priorities for implementation of such planning. The commissions, through efforts to increase public participation in the decisionmaking process, can and do provide a forum for all the people within the commission area to voice their ideas, concerns, and suggestions.

The commissions submitting reports are New England, Great Lakes, Pacific Northwest, Ohio River, Missouri River, and the Upper Mississippi. The territory these six commissions cover includes all or part of 32 States.

The enclosed annual reports indicate the activities and accomplishments of the commissions during fiscal year 1973. A brief description of current and potential problems, studies, and approaches to solutions are included in the reports.

RICHARD NIXON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 4, 1974.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATHAWAY) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of Senate proceedings.)

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I call up an amendment at the desk and ask that the clerk please state the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 75, line 23, strike out "exceeds $3,000." and insert in lieu thereof "exceeds—".

On page 75, between lines 23 and 24, insert the following:

"(1) in the case of a candidate for the office of President or Vice President, $2,000.; and

"(2) in the case of any other candidate, $1,000.".

On page 76, line 2, strike out "exceeds $3,000." and insert in lieu thereof "exceeds—".

On page 76, between lines 2 and 3, insert the following:

"(A) in the case of a candidate for the office of President or Vice President, $2000; and

"(B) in the case of any other candidate, $1000.".

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that time on the pending amendment be limited to 35 minutes, to be controlled and divided as follows: 25 minutes under the control of the distinguished author of the amendment (Mr. ALLEN), and 10 minutes under the control of the distinguished manager of the bill (Mr. CANNON).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority whip.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I thank the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the argument has been made time and again here on the floor that in order to remove the influence in Government of large contributors to Federal election campaigns, it is necessary to resort to public financing. It occurs to the junior Senator from Alabama that this is certainly a non sequitur, that it is not necessary to resort to public financing in order to remove the influence of large contributors or to prevent the making of large contributions. All that is necessary is to reduce the amount of the contribution.

The bill provides the limit that is a step in the right direction, because under the present law there is no effective limitation on a contribution. There is a limit as to how much can be contributed to one committee. I believe that is $5,000. There is a limit to how much can be contributed without incurring the gift tax liability. I believe that is $3,000. But we have seen that many candidates set up multiple committees—in some cases, a hundred or two hundred. The Senator from Alabama does not have but one committee during a campaign. Some candidates apparently find it necessary to have 100 or 200 or 300 committees so that these massive contributions can be split up among all those committees. So there is no effective limitation. But the $3,000 permitted by the bill and the $6,000 for a man and his wife are tremendous contributions, in the view of the Senator from Alabama, and should be cut drastically.

Earlier this week, the Senator from Alabama offered an amendment to cut the maximum permissible amount of a contribution in Presidential campaigns to $250—that is, both the nomination race and the general election—and $200 for House and Senate races. How did we arrive at those figures? Very simply, Mr. President, because the bill before the Senate, S. 3044, provides that in primaries, contributions to Presidential races up to $2,500 shall be matched out of the Public Treasury and contributions up to $100 in House and Senate races shall be matched out of the Public Treasury by subsidizing, out of the pockets of the American taxpayers, the campaigns of politicians running for various Federal offices.

Apparently, the theory of the bill is that there must be something evil, something sinister about contributions in the area between $250 in the one case and $100 in the other case, and the $3,000 permissible contribution, because they do not match those amounts.

Where does that leave a challenger and an incumbent? Mr. President, it leaves the incumbent at a decided advantage—and I suppose this certainly could be called an incumbent's bill—because it provides matching funds for incumbents as well as challengers who run for the constituencies that they have or that they might hope to have. So only these amounts are matched. It gives the incumbent the decided advantage that since the amounts in the area from $100 to $250 up to $3,000 are not matched, the incumbent, on account of being better known and having accommodated, during the term of his office, many of his constituents, is in better position to get contributions in that area—from $250 up to $3,000—leaving the challenger at a decided disadvantage. Even as to the matching amounts, it is stacked in favor of the incumbent, because—I have used this example before—in the State of California, theoretically, they match up to $700,000 of contributions, of up to $100 in House and Senate races.

Let us assume that the challenger in a State, because of being less well known, is able to raise $100,000—or $125,000, since that is the threshold amount, but let us say $100,000 because it makes the arithmetic a little easier—and the incumbent raises $700,000. So there is a $600,000 spread.

Then public financing comes into the picture and matches the incumbent's $700,000 and then matches the challenger's $100,000. This is in the primary. The incumbent then would have $1.4 million, and the challenger would have only $200,000, which would give the incumbent a $1.2 million advantage over the challenger.

The Senate, in its wisdom, saw fit to strike down the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama to cut the contribution down, to leave it in the private sector; but the amendment, of course, would not have accomplished that, and still kept the public financing. But it would have reduced the amount of permissible contribution. The Senate voted down the $250 and the $100 limits.

The pending amendment would raise the permissible contribution from those figures to $2,000 in Presidential races and $1,000 in House-Senate races, which would be a reduction from the flat $3,000 provided by the bill. That still would leave the right to make massive contributions, in the view of the Senator from Alabama—a $2,000 limit in a Presidential race and a $1,000 limit in the House and Senate races.

It is said that we should get rid of the big contributors. I submit that this amendment would do that to a greater extent than would the pending bill, which allows contributions of up to $3,000 a person or $6,000 for a couple. The figures in this amendment still would be capable of being doubled by a man and his wife. So, effectively, it would be $2,000, but it could be doubled by a man and his wife. Therefore, $4,000 really could be contributed in a Presidential race.

Then, doubling the $1,000 permitted by the bill in House and Senate races would increase to $2,000 the amount that a couple could contribute. So these amounts are large enough if we want to get rid of the influence of so-called large contributors. I am not familiar with large contributors myself. I have not had the benefit—or detriment—of that situation. I would feel that these limits are ample. I might say that this bill does not cut down on campaign expenses. It greatly escalates the cost. It gives each candidate for the Presidential nomination of the two parties up to $7.5 million. They talk about that being campaign reform.

Mr. President, how much time does the Senator from Alabama have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 13 minutes remaining.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, these contributions offered by the amendment would still be ample. If we are going to try to clean up the political campaign, the way to do it is not to just hand a great big pile of money to these various candidates to office but to restrict the amount that individual contributors contribute.

A little later on I have an amendment I wish to bring up that would reduce by one-third the permissible overall expenditures.

For instance, in the State of California they would give a candidate for the Senate in a general election, a candidate from a major party, a check for—I guess he could ask for cash, I do not know, but he could get the check cashed if he were given a check—he is handed $2.1 million. I have another amendment that I shall call up later to cut that down to $1.4 million. That would seem quite adequate to the Senator from Alabama to present to the various candidates; $1.4 million in California, and lesser amounts on down as the population of States would decrease from that level.

So, Mr. President, the answer is not just giving tremendous sums to candidates out of the Public Treasury. The answer is limiting the overall amount that can be spent by a candidate and then reducing drastically the amount of individual contributions.

The amendment that we have before us now approaches one of those aspects, that is, reducing the amount of permissible contributions.

If Senators want reform, this is reform. I get a little displeased and frustrated sometimes when I read in newspapers that an effort is being made here to kill a campaign reform bill. Well, if this bill providing for paying for political campaigns out of the public treasury is reform, a different idea of what reform is must prevail from the idea that I have about reform.

This bill reforms the law, changes the law, changes it over from a voluntary participation by all the people to recommended payment out of the Public treasury. So this is no reform bill we have before us. It is another Federal subsidy bill. It is a bill that would remove Government and candidates away from the people they represent. How do we figure that? Well, if they give a candidate up to $2 million to run a general election campaign, do Senators think he is going to bother to ask for modest amounts of support from his constituents, or would his campaign committee bother to try to get voluntary participation from his constituents? Why, no.

The Senator from California earlier today was stating that he was a little bit worried about this $2.1 million. He thought maybe that was too much, but then he got to worrying about the challenger out there and thought he should be well funded and, therefore, he was not going to raise any point about the $2.1 million a senatorial candidate might receive.

I might say with respect to the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON), who was making the remarks, that the subsidy would not apply to his upcoming race, because it would go into effect January 1, 1976. But it would apply to all these candidates in Congress who are running for the Presidency.

As I read the various Gallup polls and Harris polls, there are about 10 candidates for the presidency here in the Halls of Congress, candidates eligible for up to $7.5 million in Federal subsidies. Is that campaign reform? That is a campaign handout, in the view of the Senator from Alabama.

Now, Mr. President, earlier today we had a vote in the Senate on the matter of whether the debate on this issue should be brought to a close. I believe that by a vote of 60 to 36, a two-thirds vote being required and that not being a two-thirds vote, the Senate refused to stop the debate. That is fine. The Senator from Alabama is glad to see that. But he recognizes and realizes from the analysis of that vote that this bill, this pernicious bill has not been defeated because there will be subsequent votes on the clotures issue. I understand another vote is coming, possibly next Tuesday, and the battle is far from being won. The task will be to encourage the 36 Senators who voted against stopping debate on this bill so it could be rammed through the Senate, to continue being against the bill, and pretty soon it is going to get down to the point where, if one is against public financing, he will vote against the invoking of cloture. If he is for public financing, he will vote for it. There is not going to be any middle position on it. Either one is for it or against it.

So the lengthy discussion and the lengthy amendment process that the bill is being subjected to might possibly result in agreeing on a true campaign reform bill, a bill leaving out the Federal subsidy provisions, provisions requiring that the taxpayers pay for the campaign of the politicians throughout the country, when the people realize that this is not a reform bill, but is a scheme whereby a large number of Members of Congress, a minimum of 10, would obtain massive financing for a race for the Presidential nomination. Knock that out of the bill and we would see the wind go out of the sails of this bill. That is the important feature of the bill, followed by the provisions giving Members of the Senate and Members of the House up to a 50-percent subsidy in primary campaigns and a 100-percent subsidy in general elections.

Mr. President, I do not see that. I do not see that it is in the public interest. I will have to oppose that, but I do feel that this amendment would be in the public interest, because it reduces to $2,000 the amount of permissible contributions for President and to $1,000 the amount of permissible contributions for House and Senate primary and general elections. It would not knock out the matching feature. Senators and Representatives would still be able to participate, to put the hand in the Federal till. They would still have that right. Members of Congress who want to run for President still have the right to get up to $7.5 million, but their ability to get matching funds would be reduced if we cut down the amount of permissible contributions.

I hope the amendment will be agreed to. It would improve the bill. It would not improve it to the point where the Senator from Alabama would go for it, but it would make it a better bill, and he is hopeful it will be agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. President, how much time does the Senator from Alabama have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Less than 1 minute.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield back my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I find the Senator from Alabama's argument somewhat amusing in some particulars, in that he suggests we ought not to have public financing and then at the same time says that we ought to reduce the amount of financing from private sources. If we are not to have public financing, when there has to be some form of raising money to carry out a campaign. The committee considered that, and this is one of the reasons why we put in the alternative provision so a person could elect to go to public financing, if he could meet the matching money requirement in the primary and desired to do so, but, on the other hand, candidates were not forced to go to public financing if they did not desire to do so.

The Senator's amendment, if it were adopted, would force practically everyone to go to public financing, which is the very thing he opposes. The very thing he is speaking against is public financing. If his amendment were adopted, and if his amendment of the other day, which was more restrictive, had been adopted, there would have been no alternative, because it would have been impossible to raise funds for campaigns for these types of election and raise enough money to carry on a campaign.

He also indicated that the amendment was not really going to reduce the expenses of campaigns. I have made just a quick review of some of the States involved in the last campaign to see if it would, and I will read some of them. Here are 12 States, and I may say, they were States which had the most expensive campaigns last year: Texas, Michigan, Illinois, Alabama, Kentucky, Oklahoma, North Carolina, Tennessee, Louisiana, Georgia, Idaho, and South Dakota. Those States would not be able to spend as much under the limits of this bill as was spent in the last campaign, and some of those States actually had no primary. There are others besides the ones I read; these just happen to be some on which I had statistics readily available, partly because the chart indicates that some of those States did not have primaries and partly because the chart indicates they were some of the most expensive States when it came to spending in the last general election.

I may say that in some of those very States, the reduction would be quite substantial in the amount that could be spent for a particular race.

The Senator has indicated that he is going to move later on to reduce the formula that we set as the limiting factor. I have already stated I find no particular magic in the formula. It was the best we could devise in committee. We tried to do it, based on some experience we had on what the previous races had cost, recognizing the fact that some of them had cost too much and there ought to be some limit imposed. The Senator has indicated he is going to make a move later to reduce authorized spending to 5 cents per voting-age population, and to 10 cents per voting-age population in the general election. Frankly, I think that is too low. I think it would overly restrict a campaign and would really make it an incumbent's bill if we cut it down to the area where a nonincumbent, a challenger, would not have an opportunity to go out and make himself known to the proposed constituency in order to compete against the incumbent.

If the Senator from Alabama were to increase that figure somewhat, I would be inclined to support it. If he were inclined to reduce the primary figure perhaps from 10 to 8 cents and the general figure from 15 to 12 cents, I myself would find no difficulty in going along with some sort of reduction along that line. I think that the people who really should be heard in that instance are those who come from some of the larger States that have problems peculiar to their own States and may feel that that limit may be too small.

So I think that issue should be thoroughly debated before the vote comes up and should be debated by those who have more of a personal interest in it than I have. As I said, we decided on this particular figure based on an overview of what campaigns had been costing and recognizing that the 10 States whose names I read a moment ago had campaigns that were entirely too costly, and that some of the States had no primaries but still had campaigns that were too costly. That was the basic information we considered in deriving the formula of 10 cents per voting age for the primary election and 15 cents per voting age for the general election.

I see my good friend from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN) in the Chamber. I read the definitions a few minutes ago under the formula. In the general election campaign in the State of Texas, the formula, at 15 cents per voting age population, would permit an expenditure of $1,167,750. According to our table, the expenditures in the general election in Texas, in the last election for the winning party, amounted to $2,301,870.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, will the chairman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. BENTSEN. Will the chairman also say that was not for this particular Senator? [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Yes. I merely wanted to point out that the expenditure was considerably above the amount of the limit that would be imposed under this formula.

Mr. BENTSEN. Let me also say, so far as the limits are concerned, that I think that the committee has done a good job. I wanted to be sure that we did not have an incumbent's bill.

I know that when I was considering running for the Senate, running against an incumbent, we took a public opinion poll to see what my name identification was. It was a little under 1 percent. I was practically unknown. Most people confused me with Ezra Taft Benson, who was an unpopular Secretary of Agriculture. So, in effect, I had a negative recognition. I stayed well within the amount of money that is indicated by the committee. I ran against an incumbent; and to win in the general election means that one has to have enough money to spend. But this has not become an incumbent's bill. I commend the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. CANNON. I pointed out to the Senator from Alabama that that was the effect of an amendment he had offered, to reduce the amount to 5 cents in the general election. If the amount were to be reduced in that magnitude, it would really become an incumbent's bill. I said I would support something identical.

Mr. BENTSEN. I stayed within those limitations; but if they were dropped back to the limits here proposed, I think it would be very difficult to secure recognition by the public and interest them in what the issues are.

Mr. CANNON. We have gotten somewhat off the track of the amendment; but the Senator from Alabama had discussed these very issues. If his amendment were to be adopted, it would drive people away from the opportunity to use private financing, if they did not want to go the public financing route.

That is the reason we arrived at a somewhat arbitrary figure and used $3,000 in the bill. It is true that a husband and wife could give $6,000—$3,000 for each of them.

Mr. ALLEN. I appreciate the Senator's saying that he would personally favor a reduction in the figures; and possibly the Senator from Alabama will modify his amendment to conform to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time on the amendment has expired.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I thought we had until 12:45.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Until 12:44. Debate started at 12:14.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CANNON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN). The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), and the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON) is absent on official business.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. COOK), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 53, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Hackney, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 12253) to amend the General Education Provisions Act to provide that funds appropriated for applicable programs for fiscal year 1974 shall remain available during the succeeding fiscal year and that such funds for fiscal year 1973 shall remain available during fiscal years 1974 and 1975.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H.R. 5186) to amend the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1947 regarding taxability of dividends received by a corporation from insurance companies, banks, and other savings institutions.

INCREASES IN CERTAIN ANNUITIES

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEVENS). Under the previous order, the hour of 2 p.m. having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1866) to provide increases in certain annuities payable under chapter 83 of title 5, United States Code, and for other purposes which was to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That section 8345 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this subchapter, other than this subsection, the monthly rate of annuity payable under subsection (a) of this section shall not be less than the smallest primary insurance amount, including any cost-of-living increase added to that amount, authorized to be paid from time to time under title II of the Social Security Act.

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of this subchapter, other than this subsection, the monthly rate of annuity payable under subsection (a) of this section to a surviving child shall not be less than the smallest primary insurance amount, including any cost-of-living increase added to that amount, authorized to be paid from time to time under title II of the Social Security Act, or three times such primary insurance amount divided by the number of surviving children entitled to an annuity, whichever is the lesser.

"(3) The provisions of this subsection shall not apply to an anuitant or to a survivor who is or becomes entitled to receive from the United States an annuity or retired pay under any other civilian or military retirement system, benefits under title II of the Social Security Act, a pension, veterans' compensation, or any other periodic payment of a similar nature, when the monthly rate thereof, is equal to or greater than the smallest primary insurance amount, including any cost-of-living increase added to that amount, authorized to be paid from time to time under title II of the Social Security Act".

"SEC. 2. (a) An annuity payable from the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund to a former employee or Member, which is based on a separation occurring prior to October 20, 1969, is increased by $240.

(b) In lieu of any increase based on an increase under subsection (a) of this section, an annuity payable from the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund to the surviving spouse of an employee, Member, or annuitant, which is based on a separation occurring prior to October 20, 1969, shall be increased by $132.

(c) The monthly rate of an annuity resulting from an increase under this section shall be considered as the monthly rate of annuity payable under section 8345(a) of title 5, United States Code, for purposes of computing the minimum annuity under section 8345(f) of title 5, as added by the first section of this Act.

SEC. 3. This Act shall become effective on the date of enactment. Annuity increases under this Act shall apply to annuities which commence before, on, or after the date of enactment of this Act, but no increase in annuity shall be paid for any period prior to the first day of the first month which begins on or after the ninetieth day after the date of enactment of this Act, or the date on which the annuity commences, whichever is later.

The Chair will state that one-half hour of debate is allowed. The Senator from North Dakota (Mr. BURDICK) is recognized.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, it is my strong hope that the Senate will agree to S. 1866 as amended by the House. The House amendments are minimal, so that the measure before us is very similar to the bill to which the Senate has already agreed.

There are three main purposes of the bill. The first of these would establish a minimum civil service retirement annuity equal to the minimum social security benefit. Under present law, this is $84.50 per month, with increases provided for under the provisions of Public Law 93-182.

Second, the bill would increase the annuities of those who retired prior to October 20, 1969, by $240 annually—$20 per month—for a retiree and by $132 annually—$11 per month—for a retiree's surviving spouse. Members will recall that October 20, 1969, was the date on which the law liberalized the retirement-computation formula. Prior to that date, an annuity was computed upon the basis of the high-five highest salary; after that date, annuities were computed on the high-three average salary. With higher salary averages used as a computation base, retirees since October 20, 1969, enjoy substantially improved annuities. The thrust of this provision is to take a step toward redressing this inequal computation method.

Third, the bill provides that the surviving child of a deceased annuitant would receive a monthly minimum annuity of $84.50—the social security minimum—and provides that no more than three times $84.50 would be payable to the surviving children of any annuitant.

When I introduced S. 1866, it contained the $20 per month across-the-board benefit which I have described. In committee, the bill was amended to remove that provision because of its cost. In floor action, however, Senator GURNEY's amendment restored it by a vote of 70 to 20. This vote represents strong Senate approval; we know the provision was approved in the other body; and I am satisfied that it should remain, as being in accord with a substantial congressional consensus.

Mr. President, the merits of this measure speak for themselves— to help those Federal annuitants and their families who need help most, those struggling to subsist on small annuities based on the lower salaries of past decades and computed under a less liberal average-salary formula. Approximately 15 percent of current civil service annuity beneficiaries are receiving less than the present minimum social security benefit of $84.50. Included among these 145,000 people are 65,000 retirees, 75,000 surviving spouses, and 5,000 children. Many of these people live on the ragged line of poverty; they need and deserve congressional help.

Now, as to cost. Members are aware that, under law, increases in the unfunded liability of the civil service retirement and disability fund are amortized by payment of 30 equal annual installments. The annual cost of this bill over 30 years would amount to $119 million.

I mentioned earlier that the House amendments were minimal in their scope. Under the Senate bill, the $84.50 minimum would not apply to a retiree receiving social security benefits; the House version broadens this exclusion to a retiree receiving any other pension, including social security.

The effective date of the measure as amended by the House is upon enactment. In the Senate version, the effective date was 90 days after enactment.

For the surviving child, the House measure allows $84.50 per month, but limits the total amount payable to the children of a deceased retiree to $243.50 per month. The Senate bill allowed three-quarters of $84.50 or approximately $65 for the first child and $84.50 a month each for additional children.

Mr. President, the Senate has already enacted virtually the same measure. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

Mr. FONG. Mr. President, in rising to oppose passage of S. 1866 as amended, I would like to cite the following reasons for my opposition:

First. This bill was originally unanimously reported from the Post Office and Civil Service Committee and I concurred in approving it. It came from the committee for one purpose, and one purpose only; namely to help about 70,000 Federal retirees and their survivors who are in dire financial need by raising the annuity of each retiree or survivor to the minimum amount payable to beneficiaries under social security.

It was felt that if a Federal retiree or his survivor was not receiving any social security benefits, his Federal annuity should at least match the minimum payment under social security, which is now $84.50 per month.

Second. The bill now before us, however, is greatly expanded, by amendment in the Senate and in the House of Representatives, so as to give a $20 monthly increase to pre-October 1969 retirees, even those receiving more than the social security minimum benefit. It would also give an $11 a month increase to their surviving spouses.

These additional retirees and their surviving spouses—numbering more than 500,000—have not been neglected by the Congress. They have been given automatic cost-of-living increases on their annuities. Since 1969, their annuities have increased by 35.4 percent. They will continue to receive cost-of-living increases according to law, all without contributions from them.

Third. Retirees benefiting from this relating to members of the armed forces, and for other purposes, which were on page 2, line 16, strike out "$12,000," and insert "$15,000,".

On page 2, line 18, after "computation.", insert "Bonus authority provided under this section shall be administered in such a manner that no member reenlisting for two or more reenlistments may receive a total bonus amount that is larger than the amount to which he would have been entitled had his initial reenlistment or active duty extension been for a total period of additional obligated service equal to the two or more reenlistments."

On page 3, line 14, strike out "Navy.". and insert "Navy."

On page 3, after line 14, insert:

"(f) No bonus shall be paid under this section with respect to any reenlistment, or voluntary extension of an active-duty enlistment, in the armed forces entered into after June 30, 1977.".

On page 5, line 14, strike out "January 1, 1974." and insert "the first day of the month following the date of enactment."

On page 5, strike out all after line 14 over to and including line 4 on page 6.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House and request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. STENNIS, Mr. SYMINGTON, Mr. JACKSON, Mr. THURMOND, and Mr. TOWER conferees on the part of the Senate.

AMENDMENT OF CHAPTER 5, TITLE 37, UNITED STATES CODE

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 2770.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEVENS) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2770) to amend chapter 5 of title 37, United States Code, to revise the special pay structure relating to medical officers of the uniformed services, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That chapter 5 of title 37, United States Code, is amended as follows:

(1) Section 302 is amended to read as follows and the item in the chapter analysis is amended to correspond with the revised catchline:

"§ 302. Special pay: physicians, dentists, veterinarians or optometrists

"An officer of the Army or Navy in the Medical or Dental Corps or in the Medical Service Corps if he is designated as an optometry officer, an officer of the Army in the Veterinary Corps, an officer of the Air Force who is designated as a medical, dental, veterinary, or optometry officer, or a medical, dental, veterinary, or optometry officer of the Public Health Service, who is on active duty for a period of at least one year is entitled, in addition to any other pay or allowances to which he is entitled, to special pay at the following rates—

"(1) $100 a month for each month of active duty if he has not completed two years of active duty in a category named in this section; or

"(2) $350 a month for each month of active duty if he has completed at least two years of active duty in a category named in this section.

The amounts set forth in this section may not be included in computing the amount of an increase in pay authorized by any other provision of this title or in computing retired pay or severance pay."

(2) That portion of the first sentence of section 311(a) preceding clause (1) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of Defense or by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, as appropriate, an officer of the Army or Navy in the Medical or Dental Corps above the pay grade of O–6, an officer of the Air Force who is designated as a medical or dental officer and is above the pay grade of O–6, or a medical or dental officer of the Public Health Service above the pay grade of O–6 who—".

(3) By adding the following new section after section 312a and by inserting a corresponding item in the chapter analysis:

"§ 313. Special pay: medical, dental, veterinary or optometry officers who execute active duty agreements

"(a) Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense or by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, as appropriate, an officer of the Army or Navy in the Medical or Dental Corps or in the Medical Service Corps if he is designated as an optometry officer, an officer of the Army in the Veterinary Corps, an officer of the Air Force who is designated as a medical, dental, veterinary or optometry officer, or a medical, dental, veterinary or optometry officer of the Public Health Service, who—

"(1) is below the pay grade of O–7;

"(2) is designated as being qualified in a critical specialty by the Secretary concerned;

"(3) is determined by a board composed of officers in the medical, dental, veterinary or optometry profession under criteria prescribed by the Secretary concerned to be qualified to enter into an active duty agreement for a specified number of years;

"(4) is not serving an initial active duty obligation;

"(5) is not undergoing intern or residency training; and

"(6) executes a written active duty agreement under which he will receive incentive pay for completing a specified number of years of continuous active duty subsequent to executing such an agreement; may, upon acceptance of the written agreement by the Secretary concerned, or his designee, and in addition to any other pay or allowances to which he is entitled, be paid an amount not to exceed $15,000 for each year of the active duty agreement. Upon acceptance of the agreement by the Secretary concerned, or his designee, and subject to subsections (b) and (c) of this section, the total amount payable becomes fixed and may be paid in annual, semiannual, or monthly installments, or in a lump sum after completion of the period of active duty specified in the agreement, as prescribed by the Secretary concerned.

"(b) Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense or by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, as appropriate, the Secretary concerned, or his designee, may terminate, at any time, an officer's entitlement to the special pay authorized by this section. In that event, the officer is entitled to be paid only for the fractional part of the period of active duty that he served, and he may be required to refund any amount he received in excess of that entitlement.

"(c) Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense or by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, as appropriate, an officer who has received payment under this section and who voluntarily, or because of his misconduct, fails to complete the total number of years of active duty specified in the written agreement shall be required to refund the amount received that exceeds his entitlement under those regulations. If an officer has received less incentive pay than he is entitled to under those regulations at the time of his separation from active duty, he shall be entitled to receive the additional amount due him.

"(d) This section does not alter or modify any other service obligation of an officer. Completion of the agreed period of active duty, or other termination of an agreement, under this section does not entitle an officer to be separated from the service, if he has any other service obligation.

"(e) The Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall each submit a written report each year to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives regarding the operation of the special pay program authorized by this section. The report shall be on a fiscal year basis and shall contain—

"(1) a review of the program for the fiscal year in which the report is submitted; and

"(2) the plan for the program for the succeeding fiscal year.

This report shall be submitted not later than April 30 of each year, beginning in 1975.".

(4) By repealing sections 302a and 303 and the corresponding items in the chapter analysis.

SEC. 2. The amendments made by this Act become effective on April 1, 1974. Except for the provisions of section 313 of title 37, United States Code, as added by section 1(3) of this Act, which will expire on June 30, 1976, the authority for the special pay provided by this Act shall, unless otherwise extended by Congress, expire on June 30, 1977.

And amend the title so as to read: "An Act to amend chapter 5 of title 37, United States Code, to revise the special pay structure relating to medical officers and other health professionals of the uniformed services."

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House and request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. STENNIS, Mr. SYMINGTON, Mr. JACKSON, Mr. THURMOND, and Mr. TOWER conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. STENNIS. I thank the Senator from Nevada for his courtesy in yielding.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEVENS). The matter before the Senate is the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Pursuant to the previous order, the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER) is to be recognized to call up an amendment.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1134 and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment ordered to be printed in the RECORD is as follows:

On page 3, beginning with line 1, strike out through line 4 on page 25 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"TITLE I—INCREASE IN POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS CREDIT AND REPEAL OF PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION FINANCING

"TAX CREDIT

"SEC. 101. (a) Section 41 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to contributions to candidates for public office) is amended by—

"(1) striking out 'one-half of' in subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof thereof 'the sum of'.

"(2) amending section 41(b)(1) of such Code (relating to maximum credit for contributions to candidates for public office) to read as follows:

"'(1) MAXIMUM CREDIT.—The credit allowed by subsection (a) for a taxable year shall not exceed $50 ($100 in the case of a joint return under section 6013).'.

"(b) The amendments made by this section apply with respect to any political contribution the payment of which is made after December 31, 1973.

"PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION FINANCING

"SEC. 102. (a) Subtitle H of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to financing of Presidential election campaigns) is repealed.

"(b) Part VIII of subchapter A of chapter 61 of such Code (relating to designation of income tax payments to Presidential election campaign fund) is repealed.

"(c) The amendments made by this section apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1973.".

On page 26, lines 2 and 3, strike out "under section 504 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, or".

On page 54, lines 3, 4, and 5, strike out "A candidate shall deposit any payment received by him under section 506 of this Act in the account maintained by his central campaign committee.".

On page 63, lines 14 and 15, strike out "(after the application of section 507(b)(1) of this Act)".

On page 64, line 9, strike out ", title V,".

On page 71, beginning with line 20 strike out through line 2 on page 73 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(a)(1) Except to the extent that such amounts are changed under subsection (f)(2), no candidate (other than a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President) may make expenditures in connection with his primary election campaign in excess of the greater of—

"(A) 10 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (g)) of the geographical area in which the election for such nomination is held, or

"(B)(i) $125,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Senator, or Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, or

"(ii) $90,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Representative from a State which is entitled to more than one Representative.

"(2)(A) No candidate for nomination for election to the office of President may make expenditures in any State in which he is a candidate in a primary election in excess of two times the amount which a candidate for nomination for election to the office of Senator from that State (or for nomination for election to the office of Delegate in the case of the District of Columbia, the Virgin Islands, or Guam, or to the office of Resident Commissioner in the case of Puerto Rico) may expend in that State in connection with his primary election campaign.

"(B) Notwithstanding the provisions of subparagraph (A), no such candidate may make expenditures throughout the United States in connection with his campaign for that nomination in excess of an amount equal to 10 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States. For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'United States' means the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands and any area from which a delegate to the national nominating convention of a political party is selected.

"(b) Except to the extent that such amounts are changed under subsection (f)(2), no candidate may make expenditures in connection with his general election campaign in excess of the greater of—

"(1) 15 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (g)) of the geographical area in which the election is held, or

"(2)(A) $175,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Senator, or Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, or

"(B) $90,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Representative from a State which is entitled to more than one Representative.

"(c) No candidate who is unopposed in a primary or general election may make expenditures in connection with his primary or general election campaign in excess of 10 per centum of the limitation in subsection (a) or (b).

"(d) The Federal Election Commission shall prescribe regulations under which any expenditure by a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President for use in two or more States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

"(e)(1) Expenditures made on behalf of any candidate are, for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by such candidate.

"(2) Expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate for the office of Vice President of the United States are, for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by the candidate for the office of President of the United States with whom he is running.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a Vice-Presidential candidate, if it is made by—

"(A) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for the purposes of making any expenditure, or

"(B) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, or an agent of the candidate to make the expenditure.

"(4) For purposes of this section an expenditure made by the national committee of a political party, or by the State committee of a political party, in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate affiliated with that party which is not in excess of the limitations contained in subsection (i), is not considered to be an expenditure made on behalf of that candidate.

"(f)(1) For purposes of paragraph (2)—

"(A) 'price index' means the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and

"(B) 'base period' means the calendar year 1973.

"(2) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1975), as necessary data become available from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Federal Election Commission and publish in the Federal Register the percentage difference between the price index for the twelve months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each amount determined under subsections (a) and (b) shall be changed by such percentage difference. Each amount so changed shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

"(g) During the first week of January 1975 and every subsequent year, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Federal Election Commission and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, of each State, and of each congressional district as of the first day of July next preceding the date of certification. The term 'voting age population' means resident population, eighteen years of age or older.

"(h) Upon receiving the certification of the Secretary of Commerce and of the Secretary of Labor, the Federal Election Commission shall publish in the Federal Register the applicable expenditure limitations in effect for the calendar year for the United States, and for each State and congressional district under this section."

On page 73, line 3, strike out "(b)" and insert in lieu thereof "(i)".

On page 73, line 24, strike out "section 504" and insert in lieu thereof "subsection (g); and".

On page 74, strike out lines 1 and 2.

On page 74, line 6, strike out "that Act" and insert in lieu thereof "the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971".

On page 74, line 8, strike out "(c)" and insert in lieu thereof "(j)".

On page 74, line 10, strike out "(a)(4)" and insert in lieu thereof "(e)(3)".

On page 75, line 6, strike out "(a)(5)" and insert in lieu thereof "(d)".

On page 75, line 11, strike out "(a)(4)" and insert in lieu thereof "(e)(3)".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a 1-hour limitation on this amendment. Who yields time?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may require. I would advise the Chair, before I begin to discuss the merits of the amendment, that I wish to yield briefly to the distinguished senior Senator from West Virginia, chairman of the Committee on Public Works, so that we may have a brief colloquy on another matter, the time for the colloquy to be charged to my time. But first, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE) be added as a cosponsor of my amendment No. 1134.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DISASTER RELIEF

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, a large section of the United States was struck yesterday by tornadoes which whipped through the countryside.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point, so that we may ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment before we lose that capability?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, the exact number of persons reported as having been killed by this disaster runs well over 300, the exact number not being known yet. But destruction and hardships follow in the wake of such a disaster.

The able Senator from Tennessee, who is the ranking minority member of the Committee on Public Works, will speak in a colloquy, as he has indicated.

I have just been given the latest figures. As of 2:30 p.m. the number of dead is 338.

Agencies of the Federal Government have responded, and they are providing relief services. Our Committee on Public Works has jurisdiction over disaster relief legislation. Since early morning, we have been contacting several Senators from States ravaged by the tornadoes of yesterday. Members of our subcommittee, and other members of the full committee, will visit disaster sites in four States tomorrow and Saturday.

They will examine the extent of the damage and evaluate the implementation of disaster assistance measures by the Federal Government. It will be a first-hand inspection, and it will take place under the leadership of the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. BURDICK), who is the chairman of our Subcommittee on Disaster Relief.

There are damaged areas in Tennessee, in Indiana, in Ohio, and in Kentucky, and in response to requests of Senators BAKER and BROCK, BAYH and HARTKE, METZENBAUM and TAFT, COOK and HUDDLESTON we shall go into those States. The Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI), the ranking Republican member of our subcommittee, will, of course, participate.

I think that the tour is necessary. The information that can be obtained by an on-the-ground check into the matter will provide important guidance, not only for this committee and subcommittee, but for the Senate as well.

The subcommittee is at the present time considering major revisions of the Disaster Relief Act of 1970. Many Members of the Senate will remember the devastation wrought in several States during the period when that act was being developed. Alabama, I will say to Senator ALLEN, was one of the States struck at that time.

We have tried to set in motion a response mechanism to disasters at the Federal level that will assure us the quickest possible relief to the victims of these disasters—tornadoes, hurricanes, floods, or whatever, because they strike suddenly, without warning.

The Federal role must also include an effective recovery effort, so that the communities can be rebuilt as quickly as possible and the persons who live there can go back to their occupations and their normal lives. I think we all agree that while there is no way that we can prevent natural disasters from occurring, we can provide the relief and rebuilding programs which are necessary.

So, Mr. President, I think it is the duty of the Senate to see that any suffering and any disruption that result from such tornadoes as struck yesterday be minimized, and that the problems that ensue be kept to an absolute minimum.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from West Virginia, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Public Works. I might add to his remarks by pointing out that according to the Weather Bureau this is the worst tornado disaster in 49 years; that in Kentucky there are 98 known dead, in Tennessee 58, in Ohio 40, and in Indiana 43 known dead; and that 91 tornadoes were reported sighted by the U.S. Weather Bureau in just the eastern part of Tennessee last night.

It is hard to imagine the destruction that accompanied these untimely and unfortunate deaths, and I commend the chairman for authorizing this first-hand field examination into the disaster by a subcommittee chaired by the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. BURDICK), the ranking Republican Member of which is the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI), to begin in the morning and to cover the affected States.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? And I ask unanimous consent that if the Senator does yield the time not be charged against his amendment. Will the Senator from Tennessee yield in order that I might question the chairman of the Committee on Public Works a moment?

Mr. BAKER. I am happy to yield. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time not be charged against my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, we all recognize the vast compassion that the distinguished Senator from West Virginia always manifests when the American people are in distress and when they sustain tragedies such as have befallen many of our people in the last 36 to 48 hours.

The Senator mentioned the damage to Alabama back in 1970. I call to his attention that Alabama this time also was one of the hardest hit States, and that already there are 70 known dead in Alabama, with the likelihood, inasmuch as some of the buildings have been destroyed to such an extent that they have not been able to ascertain what bodies are still in the buildings, that many more dead are anticipated, a larger number injured, and tens of millions of dollars in property damage sustained.

I appreciate the interest that the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER) are manifesting in this tragedy, and I am hopeful that the subcommittee will be able to get into Alabama, in the northern tier of counties there, and see our ravaged areas firsthand, also.

I do feel that we should have some permanent legislation that will do the necessary job and will provide the mechanics for doing the necessary job to alleviate the suffering that our people have sustained. We feel that the present legislation is inadequate, and I am pleased that the President has declared Alabama and the other States mentioned by the distinguished chairman as disaster areas, which will allow public facilities, public utilities, and public improvements to be restored and will make available loans for assistance. I am pleased with the reaction that we understand has taken place among the Federal agencies in rushing to aid our people. We hope that that is taking place throughout the damaged area.

I commend the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), his full committee, and particularly his subcommittee which is going to travel over large portions of the country examining the extent of the damage.

I wonder if the members of the committee might have Alabama on their itinerary.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, I appreciate the concern that the Senator from Alabama has expressed for the people of all the affected areas. He correctly calls attention to the very heavy damage in his own State of Alabama, and to the very high death toll there.

We are not certain of just how our trip can move, but I have a feeling that we will want to inspect other disaster areas.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. While it might not be possible this week it would be our intention to inspect, insofar as we can, the area the Senator has spoken of in Alabama.

I know that Senator DOMENICI and, of course, Senator BURDICK identify with these matters in subcommittee leadership. As I have indicated earlier, they are working with the staff very carefully, and we want to do a thorough job.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, I know.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Hopefully we will not miss those areas that need to be covered.

I want to indicate this before I finish: I have noted that the Senator spoke about the inadequacy of the present law.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. There was a time not so many years ago when, frankly, all we did, when disaster came by way of tornado, flood, hurricane, or earthquake, was to come into the Senate Chamber and appropriate money to be spent on relief and on rebuilding. But we did, back in 1970, set in motion a good——

Mr. ALLEN. I agree.

Mr. RANDOLPH (continuing). Program, by which we have been able to give relief and to rebuild in a very realistic and helpful manner. Thus, I respond again to the Senator from Alabama, that I am sure we will give attention to the areas which have been devastated. I appreciate his understanding of our problem and the words that he has spoken.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I should like to say, on behalf of my senior colleague (Mr. SPARKMAN), that he shares the concern that I feel for the plight of our people and also on behalf of our distinguished Governor, George C. Wallace; so that if the subcommittee will come to Alabama and it can project its plans in such a way as to provide for a visit by the subcommittee or the full committee to our State, such transportation by State trooper car, or by State airplane will be made available to the committee, and all the necessary lodging requirements of the committee will be arranged for. We would certainly welcome the committee with open arms.

Mr. RANDOLPH. That offer of cooperation at the local level is very valuable and necessary oft times. We will keep that in mind. I thank the distinguished Senator from Alabama.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I should like to comment on the dialog which has proceeded between the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Alabama. I am the ranking Republican member of the subcommittee, and I should like to tell the Senator from Alabama that our schedule is still indefinite. Our chairman is not here to explain it. But to the best of my knowledge, we will start out early tomorrow morning and for at least 2 days we will plan our itinerary. Whether we will continue to travel on Sunday and Monday is still indefinite, but I personally will confer with Senator BURDICK, and will ask about plants for next week, about going into other States if we cannot complete it this week. The subcommittee, as the Senator knows, has had numerous hearings around the country. By coincidence, we are scheduled to mark up the bill on April 9. There are two parts of the bill that are major improvements and we must do something about them quickly. Certainly we will be able to act, immediately after the trip, to carry out what everyone thinks is the implementation of two shortcomings. One, I might say, is what do we do to take the place of the $5,000 forgiveness loan area. We have under serious consideration a $2,500 grant program to be administered by the State with Federal money to the people who have become needy; that is, needy not by definition of economic circumstances but by definition of what the emergency has caused that makes them needy. We have about agreed on it. I do think it will take more than 4 or 5 days to come up with it. The history of the Senate, I am sure, is such that the bill will be acted on immediately and given every consideration. The long-term aspect must be adequate. We will arrive at a better long-range implementation for improvements to group communities, or a community, in addition to the public facilities which have always been covered. I think we have several improvements to that which can be done rather quickly. I assure the Senator and others interested that we are on the verge of producing a bill and this will expedite it.

We will be able to give due consideration to the new kinds of facts that we find here because we find them in every kind of disaster. We will do this at the earliest possible time.

Mr. ALLEN. I want to state to the distinguished Senator that I hope he will use his good offices to see that the committee or the subcommittee does come to Alabama. This Senator hopes that the Senator, the ranking minority member, or the chairman, will notify the junior Senator from Alabama and my distinguished senior colleague (Mr. SPARKMAN) if a plan can be arranged to include Alabama so that one or both of us can be on hand to greet you and accompany you throughout the State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEVENS). If the Senator from Alabama will yield to the Chair to intervene at this point, the Chair would state that the unanimous consent agreement was that the Senator from Tennessee yielded to the Senator from Alabama for the purpose of engaging in colloquy with the Senator from West Virginia. It is not to be charged to the Senator from Tennessee. The Chair is constrained to note that this colloquy has extended beyond the unanimous consent agreement.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, to make sure that this worthwhile colloquy does not gobble up all of my time on my amendment, I ask unanimous consent that this and any further colloquy regarding tornadoes, and so forth, not be charged against my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, so far, the documenation given by the able Senator from New Mexico is very helpful. I had said at the hearing today, as we began this discussion, that the work of the subcommittee in strengthening the present legislation has been in process, and we will, of course—the leadership, Senators BURDICK, DOMENICI, and with the cooperation of all the other members of the subcommittee and the committee—give attention to these matters.

I want to tell you, Mr. President, that when we had the trouble with the earthquake in California, there was literally documentation of hundreds of people who took advantage of that situation. So that we have to be very careful when we set a sum of money, that is, money like that. That is a side issue, of course.

I yield now to my colleague from Illinois.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I want to commend also the distinguished Senator from West Virginia for his vigilance and the way in which his committee instantaneously responded to the plight of the people whose homes have been damaged by recent tornadoes. Many of those people reside in Illinois. Illinois was not so severely damaged as other States, such as Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, but there are people in the State of Illinois who are suffering some damaged property. There has also been some loss of life.

So, in addition to commending the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, I simply want to express the hope that in the deliberations of the committee, it might try to find some time to visit the districts damaged in Illinois. It would be helpful to the committee's understanding of the suffering caused in Illinois, as to the division of relief and also, perhaps, in the preparation of legislation for a longer term.

I am sure our Governor and all of our local officials would be more than grateful and delighted to provide every accommodation possible for the convenience of the committee, if it were possible to include a visit to the State of Illinois in forthcoming trips by the subcommittee.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the able Senator from Illinois. We do know that the President is now declaring certain States as disaster States or areas within those States. As the Senator indicated, the death toll in his State is no so large as that compared with other States but the impact in many ways is felt in West Virginia. There was the death of one small child in West Virginia, which of course saddens us all very much, especially the little community of Meadow Creek, which I know very well and have visited there dozens of times. The damage was quite severe in the community. But we have the responsibility, certainly as a Congress, the committee, and especially, the subcommittee, in moving quickly and earnestly to discharge our duties as responsible legislators.

Mr. BAKER. ~~Mr. President, I thank my chairman for his remarks about this important matter and the opportunity to listen to the colloquy by so many other Senators, including the distinguished occupant of the Chair, Mr. DOMENICI, who is the ranking minority member on the subcommittee. This is an important matter, one to which the committee, Congress, and the Senate have responded very quickly~~.

Mr. President, turning my attention now to amendment No. 1134, I yield myself such time as I may use.

Mr. President, this amendment would strike all of title I of the bill regarding public financing of campaigns for Federal office. In its place, I would substitute a refined form of private financing designed to broaden the base of participation and prevent the abuse of earlier campaigns.

Specifically, I would propose a 100-percent tax credit on all political contributions made in a calendar year up to $50 for an individual return and $100 for a joint return. As it is now, an individual can claim a tax credit of 50 percent of all contributions made in a calendar year up to $12.50. On a joint return, the credit is up to $25. In S. 3044, the tax credit is still 50 percent; but the amount is increased to $25 on an individual return and $50 on a joint return. Once again, my amendment would allow a 100-percent tax credit on all contributions made in a calendar year up to $50 on an individual return and $100 on a joint return. In this way, the small contributor is offered a clear and realistic incentive to contribute between $50 and $100 to the candidate of his or her choice.

Moreover, we can avoid most of what I consider to be the intrinsic liabilities of partial or full public financing of campaigns for Federal office. What are those liabilities, in my view? I shall attempt to list them.

The question of public participation in our political process is one which concerns me greatly, as I am sure it does most of my colleagues. In the past few years, that participation has declined steadily, as has public trust and confidence in our major governmental institutions. In the wake of Watergate and related events, it becomes increasingly incumbent upon us to ascertain the key to increasing public participation and promoting public trust in elected officials.

Those who advocate public financing argue that the only way to prevent further erosion of public confidence is to remove the opportunity for financing that process from the hands of the special interests, and to entrust a substantial portion of that responsibility in the Federal Government. I do not quarrel with the need to eliminate the inordinate influence of special interests. In fact, I believe that only individuals should be allowed to contribute to political campaigns; and even then, not in excess of the limits prescribed in S. 3044. But, I strongly disagree with the presumption that eliminating the financial influence of special interests necessitates granting that influence of responsibility to the U.S. Treasury. It seems to me the American people should be given the option of assuming that prerogative rather than the Federal Government. It is not just a question of whether we need the power of the Government to enforce the relevant statutes, nor whether we need an effective means of prosecuting those who violate those statutes; for clearly, the Government must play a major role in this regard. But, the question is really how necessary is it that the Government directly involve itself in financing political campaigns. If it were the only viable means of funding a clean and competitive two-party system, then I might support public financing. But it is not, in my judgment, for the following reason.

To the present day, the Congress has never successfully sought to effectively limit the amount of money an individual or group could contribute to a political campaign. In fact, I believe S. 372 was the first time that either House had passed legislation which actually sought to bring this about. Thus, rather than political candidates being compelled to raise 50 contributions of $100 each, they have always opted in favor of the single $5,000 contribution when they could find it.

It is only natural; and as a politician, I can certainly understand why candidates find it easier to raise a specific amount of money in large contributions rather than small ones. But we should also realize what influence this has had on our respective fundraising techniques. For reasons of expedience, we have traditionally geared our fund-raising efforts to the so-called fat cats and sought small contributions when the big money was not available. Thus, we are comparatively inexperienced when it comes to undertaking a broad, low-level solicitation effort.

Under the expenditure limitations of S. 3044, a Presidential candidate can spend up to 15 cents times the voting age population of the country in the general election campaign. If my calculations are accurate, that comes out to about $24 million. Pursuing this arithmetic argument a little further, that translates into 8,000 contributions of $3,000 each. I realize that we are talking about only one Presidential candidate during the general election campaign, but this can be extrapolated into other races for Federal office; and I submit that a thorough examination of the actual number of contributions required to adequately fund campaigns for Federal office would shock a great many people. In fact, that number is infinitesimal in light of a voting-age population of over 140 million people. Nevertheless, a great many of my colleagues in the Congress are convinced that we cannot raise sufficient funds so long as we limit the size of individual contributions. It is proposed, therefore, that we enlist the aid of the Federal Government through a system of partial, but substantial public financing.

But I cannot accept that alternative. I cannot accept it because there seems to me something politically incestuous about the Government financing, and I believe inevitably then, regulating the day-to-day procedures by which the Government is selected. It is extraordinarily important, in my judgment, that the Government not control the machinery by which the public expresses the range of its desires, demands, and dissent. And yet, that, in a sense, is what we are debating here. I do not question the motives of those who drafted this legislation, but rather the possible consequences of its enactment.

Indeed, I can even visualize a scenario in which bureaucrats, empowered to write checks on the Public Treasury—checks essential to the success of various political campaigns—can abuse, manipulate, or otherwise influence the outcome of those elections by generating the kind of bureaucratic red tape which is characteristic of our burgeoning Federal Government.

For these reasons, I would urge that we avoid delegating significant funding authority to the Government until it is absolutely necessary. The American people should retain exclusive responsibility for funding political campaigns, and they should be encouraged to do so on a much broader scale.

The amendment which I have offered proposes to vastly expand the base of public participation and increase, by literally millions, the number of people who have a personal stake in political campaigns. This would be done by offering the kind of clear tax incentive required to prompt small contributions from concerned Americans. Moreover, it would entitle those Americans to choose the individual to whom they wish to contribute. Under the present dollar checkoff, as well as the provisions of S. 3044, the individual taxpayer is unable to determine who receives his or her tax dollars. However, under my approach, the taxpayer is not only able to designate the particular recipient, but also the amount involved, thereby leaving complete discretion to the individual contributor. This brings me to my final argument in opposition to public financing.

Although S. 3044 does not specifically prohibit private contributions during any phase of a political campaign, it certainly discourages them, particularly between the primary and general elections. It is during that time that private contributions are subtracted from the Government subsidy available for major party candidates who have reached the required threshold. The thrust of the bill is that once the threshold has been reached, private contributions are no longer sought nor needed; and this would seem to clearly infringe upon the individual's first amendment right of freedom of political expression.

Not only does that right include the option of contributing to a political campaign at the appropriate time, but it also includes the option not to participate at all if the individual so chooses. And yet, under S. 3044, $2 on an individual return and $4 on a joint return is automatically paid into the Federal election campaign fund unless the taxpayer indicates to the contrary. In other words, the only option available to the individual is a negative one; and this, in my judgment, is wrong. Morover, if insufficient funds are raised by the proposed $2 or $4 checkoff system, the Congress is required to appropriate the necessary difference, thereby negating the decision of taxpayers not to have their tax dollars used for political campaigns. This, too, is wrong, in my opinion, and abridges still further the individual's first amendment right of freedom of political expression.

However, this amendment would avoid all of these constitutional questions by protecting the freedom of political expression and by encouraging that expression through a realistic tax credit system.
