At a time when public confidence in our Government is at an all-time low, it is difficult to resist the temptation to throw the baby out with the bath water. And it is equally difficult to enact constructive and meaningful reform. But, going from one extreme, that is, essentially unrestricted private financing, to another, that is, public financing of all campaigns for Federal office, is not the answer. Rather, we should consider a refined form of private financing in which the size of individual contributions is strictly limited, and in which there is full public disclosure and an effective enforcement mechanism. That would seem to be the most logical next step, and that is what I am proposing with a majority of my colleagues on the Senate Watergate Committee as well as a number of other Senators.

Mr. President, in a word, I am not prepared to say we have reached the place where we can no longer discuss the political process. We can and we should refine, refurbish, and redesign our political system so that it is fully supported by voluntary contributions of individuals. We should eliminate contributions of special interest groups and restrict contributions to those made by qualified voters only. We should have timely disclosure of all contributions, and by "timely" I mean to have the final report on contributions before the election and not after.

Mr. President, S. 3044 provides for the final report to be filed on January 31 in the year following an election, when it is of precious little importance to the average voter.

We should limit the amount of contribution that an individual can make. We should limit the dollar amount that can be expended.

There is a range of other options which will bring more representative government to the people and together they form a package infinitely more attractive to this Senator than the present system.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I find myself in agreement with the distinguished Senator from Tennessee on a good many points he made. However, there are a number of points I cannot support in this amendment for reasons I shall enumerate.

First, the most recent point he made, that he thought a final report should be filed prior to election so voters could know about it. This is a practical impossibility, because the final report is intended to finalize everything that was transacted from a reporting standpoint, in the campaign. Obviously, one cannot file any report that would take care of those details in the 2 or 3 days of the campaign. It would be a physical impossibility. A written report has to be prepared, it has to be filed with a receiving officer, and it has to be made available and publicized. One cannot even get something in the newspapers unless it involves something of a headline nature these days. So the practicality of that suggestion is out of the question.

Now, we have required a number of reports in the reporting process. The latest one would be a complete report of everything that happened up to 10 days before election day. We felt that was as close to election day as we could go and still make information available to the public so that they could be informed and make an informal judgment with respect to the voting process.

The distinguished Senator made some reference to the checkoff provision in title V. I would point out that title V has been eliminated from this bill and is no longer a part of the bill. Therefore, we should not discuss the matter in the context of title V, except as he proposes to put it back in in his amendment and have it called title I.

I agree with the Senator on the provision as it was originally in title V on the checkoff. I think a person should take affirmative action if he desires his money to be contributed to the political process rather than to have it go to this purpose unless it were checked off otherwise.

When that proposal comes up in the proper form from the Committee on Finance on the finance bill I would expect to vote with the Senator from Tennessee and others on that point.

I would hope that the Senator would not press for proposals here today related to the tax credit, tax deduction, and checkoff. I say that, because there is a serious constitutional question involved as to the propriety of that issue on this bill.

We have discussed this on the floor on numerous occasions before. There is no question that it would be subject to a point of order in the House. We have had that ruling from the Parliamentarian on three occasions, and on this occasion we have had the motion of the distinguished Senator from Louisiana that title V be referred to the Committee on Finance with the assurance from him that they would attach that to an appropriate revenue bill from the House and report it to the floor of the Senate so that we would have an opportunity to vote thereon.

With respect to the compensation, I completely agree with the distinguished Senator from Tennessee on the compensation, doubling, or increasing the amount. I am in favor of increasing the tax credit; I am in favor of increasing the deductions; and I am in favor of the checkoff position. But I am very fearful that if we leave it on this bill we are going to run into some serious difficulties. We have voted already on the floor of the Senate on one occasion to strike that from this bill and refer it to the Committee on Finance. So I would be quite hopeful that the Senator from Tennessee would at least modify his amendment to take out that particular portion. If that is done, then we have remaining only the bill S. 372, which we passed last year without public financing added.

So we get back to the issue we voted on earlier with the Senator from Alabama. If one is for public financing, he should vote against the amendment; if one is against public financing, he should vote for the amendment.

The Senate already has expressed its judgment overwhelmingly on S. 372, which is a good bill, and the House acted on it. Had the House acted on it last year, I do not think we should be here going through this exercise at this time, because the pressure would have been relieved somewhat. It was a good bill although it did not have the feature of public financing and other features in this bill.

So, Mr. President, I again say to my colleague that I would be very hopeful he would not press his amendment with respect to the financing items. The issue already has been determined once. It is not properly on the bill and will create more difficulties for us. If that is the Senator's objective, we might have a vote on it. I would vote for the tax credit, the tax deduction, and the checkoff, but I cannot vote for them in his amendment which would delete public financing.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, before I yield to my distinguished colleague from North Carolina, I would like to make a brief remark. If I were to withdraw the amendment, if I were to fail to insist on this alternative, it seems to me it would deprive the Senate of an effective reform measure as an alternative to public financing.

All the Senate could vote for would be for public financing or nothing. Therefore, I feel a strong obligation to insist on this amendment. I might point out that there is no tax deduction included in this amendment.

I yield now to the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. ERVIN).

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, in furtherance of the remarks of the Senator from Tennessee, if the Watergate affair indicates anything, it indicates that we need some reform in raising of campaign funds for Federal officers.

Despite my great respect for my good friend from Nevada, I cannot agree that there is any constitutional question involved here. The constitutional provision which is germane to a claim of that nature is in section 7 of article I, which says:

> All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives.

There is not a syllable in the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, of which I am a cosponsor, that undertakes to raise a single penny of revenue. It does not undertake to raise revenue. It does not impose any taxes. But it not only does provide a method whereby we can reform the financing of Federal elections in such a way as to leave the power to make voluntary contributions to the taxpayers of this country, but is also calculated to stimulate the political parties and candidates for political office to insist on further involvement by the people of the United States in the election processes—and that is the crying need, along with the need for reform.

We have gotten into an unfortunate state in this country—when anything goes wrong, we say, "Go down to the bottom of that empty hole we call the Treasury of the United States and get some money out of that empty hole to cure the problem." In my judgment, it would multiply the problems, because here is an indirect encouragement to anybody who wants to have a lot of money at his disposal to have a good time traveling through this country by becoming a candidate for the Presidency of the United States. This bill is going to be a stimulation to get more money out of the Treasury of the United States so people can indulge their political fantasies, and I do not think that is something to be encouraged.

I think the Senator from Tennessee should insist on having a vote in the Senate on this amendment, since this is not an amendment which would raise a single penny of revenue, but, on the contrary, would form a method by which the taxpayers could voluntarily make a contribution to the candidates of their choice and to the parties of their choice. I think it is a highly desirable amendment, and I sincerely hope the Senate will adopt it.

Mr. BAKER. I thank my colleague from North Carolina, who not only is a great constitutional authority in the country and the Senate, but I point out, has a greater familiarity with the very abuses we are trying to prevent in this country than anybody in this Chamber.

The point he makes with respect to the constitutionality of this legislative situation is entirely correct. The point he makes with respect to the awesome authority of the anonymous bureaucracy being brought to bear against the political system, the most delicate of all its governmental devices, is one that must commend itself to this body for consideration. I thank the Senator from North Carolina for his support.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAKER. I am happy to yield to my colleague from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. I would like to compliment the Senator from Tennessee for offering his amendment. I think it is a highly desirable alternative to the public financing approach.

I would just like to emphasize a point he made a few minutes ago. Those of us who support the "tax credit" approach to campaign reform, as opposed to public financing of elections, are placed in a very difficult position. We are told that this option of a tax credit is parliamentary not feasible. I was happy to hear the arguments made by the Senator from North Carolina, but there are editorials, for example, including in my own paper, which say those of us who support the other options should nevertheless vote for cloture, so there is an up-and-down vote on "public financing."

What this means, in effect, if it is ruled that the "tax credit" amendment is out of order, is that we really have no opportunity to debate an alternate approach to "public financing."

I would just say that one of my great concerns with public financing is that we are emphasizing money, rather than deemphasizing it. It seems to me that if we are really going to restore public confidence and get greater citizen participation in campaigns, we have to use another approach than just to vote into law big spending.

I do not intend at this stage to debate either the merits or demerits, but I want to point out that the parliamentary situation, if this amendment is not proper, puts those of us who support an alternate way in the position of having to vote up and down on public financing without a full opportunity to debate another way, which comes closer to correcting the problems of campaign spending.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am grateful for the remarks of the Senator from Delaware.

I am prepared at this time to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes for an observation.

There has been considerable discussion about the constitutional question here. I correctly stated the proposition that this matter had been raised, I believe in 1961, and it was on a campaign reform bill, an amendment of which I was a sponsor and which was before the Senate at that time. The then distinguished Senator from Virginia, Harry Byrd, who is no longer with us, made the point that the amendment would be subject to a point of order, and it was for a tax credit similar to the tax credit in this particular amendment, and the Senate was advised at that time that the House would not even consider a bill with this type of provision in it for that reason.

So my statement with respect to the point of order has been borne out historically here by what happened on the floor of the Senate, and I was the author of the particular amendment that was offered.

As I said earlier, I support that provision of the distinguished Senator's amendment, and when I have the opportunity, in the proper forum, I expect to vote for it.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me 3 or 4 minutes?

Mr. BAKER. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. BAKER. I yield that 1 minute to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I have already read to the Senate the provision in the Constitution which states:

> All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives . . .

This amendment does not propose to raise a single penny of revenue. The House has some rules over there, but I think the Senate ought to assert its right to legislate under the Constitution, irrespective of House rules, and I am not willing, as far as I am concerned, to let the Senate take a subordinate position as a legislative body. There is nothing in the Constitution that would prevent the Senate from adopting this amendment, and I think the Senate ought to insist that it is at least an equal body with the House of Representatives in every respect that the Constitution does not deprive it of the privilege of so doing, and this amendment has no constitutional implications whatsoever.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, my time has expired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time on the amendment having expired or been yielded back, and the yeas and nays having been ordered, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), and the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON) is absent on official business.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT) is necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 58, as follows:

So Mr. BAKER's amendment (No. 1134) was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 10 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in adjournment until the hour of 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, a number of States, including Indiana, Iowa, Tennessee, Alabama, Kentucky, and two or three others—especially Kentucky—have been hit rather hard by tornadoes, windstorms, and the like within the past 24 to 36 hours.

It is imperative, in my judgment, that Senators from those States return to their States to assess the damage, to see what can be done to alleviate the situation, and in that manner to carry out their responsibilities.

Therefore, after discussing the matter with the distinguished Republican leader, the joint leadership has decided that while we will be on the pending business tomorrow, there will be no votes tomorrow, and that any votes which may arise will be carried over until Monday.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, if the distinguished majority leader will yield, I think it is essential that Senators from the affected States have the opportunity to return home for the reasons cited, and for the further reason that they can best estimate the role of the Federal Government in applying such legislation as we have already enacted, whether we need additional legislaion, or what Congress may do to assist in the relief of those people who have suffered from the effects of the tornado damage; and if legislation is needed, they can best advise it.

Moreover, they can advise the Executive, as we did in the case of Hurricane Agnes, where the Federal Government moved both on the legislative and executive sides very promptly indeed. For example, mobile trailers and other equipment may be very promptly needed, and Senators, as representatives of their people back home, are needed there.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I would agree with what the distinguished Republican leader has just said. To reiterate, there will be no votes tomorrow. If there are any votes, they will be carried over until Monday, and no votes will occur before the hour of 3:30 p.m. on Monday, which should give the affected Members a reasonable opportunity to assess the damage and to come to their own conclusions as to what should or could be done.

It is the intention of the leadership to lay down a cloture motion tomorrow. It is the hope of the leadership that the Senate will agree that a vote will occur on the cloture motion, which will be laid down tomorrow at 4 o'clock, on Tuesday afternoon next.

That is about it, I think.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. This has been, apparently, a more serious thing that we estimated. I do not think legislation might be necessary. I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania. But it gets down to the question of appropriations and money. I see the distinguished chairman of the committee here and I would think that we might suggest to our colleagues that we would be available for maybe some special meeting on Monday to discuss the matter of what appropriations may be made.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is a good idea and include it in the supplemental now before us.

Mr. MAGNUSON. In the supplemental now before us, yes. But I do not think that legislation is necessary.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, of course, any appropriation will have to originate in the House of Representatives. I think we would want to wait until Senators return from their respective States and bring us some concrete information as to probable need. If that is done, why the subcommittee under the Senator from New Mexico can hold immediate hearings or if he requests it, we will hold full committee hearings. In other words, the Appropriations Committee is ready to act. All we are awaiting is adequate and necessary information to inform us, so that we can act intelligently and effectively.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, I am informed that the Subcommittee of the Senate Public Works Committee is considering comprehensive disaster relief legislation much of which involves the consolidation—I know we have other information on that—of existing disaster relief legislation. The subcommittee, as I understand it from the distinguished Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH), consists of Senator BURDICK and ranking Republican Member, Senator DOMENICI. Senator BAKER also has been active in this regard, I am informed.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I might say that they will look at the distressed areas on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday if need be and part of Monday.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I wish to express my sincere and deep thanks to the distinguished majority leader and the distinguished minority leader for working out this plan that will enable Senators to return to their home States and be with their people—the people they represent here in this body—during their time of tragedy and travail.

Certainly, I could do nothing less than to agree with the distinguished majority leader's request that the cloture vote be set, I believe the majority leader said, for 4:30?—for 4 o'clock?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Four o'clock.

Mr. ALLEN. Four o'clock. Certainly I would not object, but I wish to commend the distinguished majority leader and the distinguished minority leader for working out this plan that will accommodate Senators. It is very kind of them.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I thank the Senator from Alabama very much.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT FROM TOMORROW TO MONDAY NEXT

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, when the Senate completes its business tomorrow, it stand in adjournment until the hour of 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCLURE). Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT FROM MONDAY NEXT, APRIL 8, 1974, TO TUESDAY, APRIL 9

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, when the Senate completes its business on Monday next, it stand in adjournment until 12 o'clock noon on Tuesday, April 9, 1974.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that the time for the 1-hour debate on the cloture motion begin at 3 p.m. on Tuesday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER) for yielding us this time.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the distinguished majority and minority leaders for working out this schedule so that those of us who are affected will be able to make the trip.

SOLAR ENERGY

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be an extension of 30 days from April 12, 1974, to file the report on H.R. 11864, to permit the committees having jurisdiction to complete their work on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER) may yield to me so that I may proceed for 5 minutes, with the understanding that by so doing the Senator from Tennessee will not lose his right to the floor.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I will be glad to do that but may I ask my distinguished colleague from North Carolina to permit me to lay down my amendment and ask for the yeas and nays while there are still a sufficient number of Senators in the Chamber?

Mr. ERVIN. Of course.

AMENDMENT NO. 1135

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1135 and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 71, beginning with line 20, strike out through line 2 on page 73 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(a)(1) Except to the extent that such amounts are changed under subsection (f)(2), no candidate (other than a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President) may make expenditures in connection with his primary election campaign in excess of the greater of—

"(A) 10 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (g)) of the geographical area in which the election for such nomination is held, or

"(B)(i) $125,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Senator, or Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, or

"(ii) $90,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Representative from a State which is entitled to more than one Representative.

"(2)(A) No candidate for nomination for election to the office of President may make expenditures in any State in which he is a candidate in a primary election in excess of two times the amount which a candidate for nomination for election to the office of Senator from that State (or for nomination for election to the office of Delegate in the case of the District of Columbia, the Virgin Islands, or Guam, or to the office of Resident Commissioner in the case of Puerto Rico) may expend in that State in connection with his primary election campaign.

"(B) Notwithstanding the provisions of subparagraph (A), no such candidate may make expenditures throughout the United States in connection with his campaign for that nomination in excess of an amount equal to 10 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States. For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'United States' means the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands and any area from which a delegate to the national nominating convention of a political party is selected.

"(b) Except to the extent that such amounts are changed under subsection (f)(2), no candidate may make expenditures in connection with his general election campaign in excess of the greater of—

"(1) 15 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (g)) of the geographical area in which the election is held, or

"(2)(A) $175,000, if the Federal office is that of Senator, or Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, or

"(B) $90,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Representative from a State which is entitled to more than one Representative.

"(c) No candidate who is unopposed in a primary or general election campaign in excess of 10 percent of the limitation in subsection (a) or (b).

"(d) The Federal Election Commission shall prescribe regulations under which any expenditure by a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President for use in two or more States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

"(e)(1) Expenditures made on behalf of any candidate are, for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by such candidate.

"(2) Expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate for the office of Vice President of the United States are, for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by the candidate for the office of President of the United States with whom he is running.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a Vice-Presidential candidate, if it is made by—

"(A) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for the purposes of making any expenditure, or

"(B) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, or an agent of the candidate to make the expenditure.

"(4) For purposes of this section an expenditure made by the national committee of a political party, or by the State committee of a political party, in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate affiliated with that party which is not in excess of the limitations contained in subsection (i), is not considered to be an expenditure made on behalf of that candidate.

"(f)(1) For purposes of paragraph (2)—

"(A) 'price index' means the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and

"(B) 'base period' means the calendar year 1973.

"(2) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1975), as necessary data become available from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Federal Election Commission and publish in the Federal Register the percentage difference between the price index for the twelve months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each amount determined under subsections (a) and (b) shall be changed by such percentage difference. Each amount so changed shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

"(g) During the first week of January 1975, and every subsequent year, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Federal Election Commission and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, of each State, and of each congressional district as of the first day of July next preceding the date of certification. The term 'voting age population' means resident population, eighteen years of age or older.

"(h) Upon receiving the certification of the Secretary of Commerce and of the Secretary of Labor, the Federal Election Commission shall publish in the Federal Register the applicable expenditure limitations in effect for the calendar year for the United States, and for each State and congressional district under this section."

On page 73, line 3, strike out "(b)" and insert in lieu thereof "(i)"

On page 73, line 24, strike out "section 504", and insert in lieu thereof "subsection (g); and".

On page 74, strike out lines 1 and 2.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am happy to yield 5 minutes to the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. ERVIN).

AMENDMENT NO. 1068

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may call up my amendment No. 1068, which can be disposed of in less than 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1068 and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The text of the amendment (No. 1068) is as follows:

On page 26, lines 2 and 3, strike out "under section 504 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, or".

On page 54, lines 3, 4, and 5, strike out "A candidate shall deposit any payment received by him under section 506 of this Act in the account maintained by his central campaign committee.".

On page 63, lines 14 and 15, strike out "(after the application of section 507(b)(1) of this Act)".

On page 64, line 9, strike out ", title V,".

On page 71, beginning with line 20, strike out through line 2 on page 73 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(a)(1) Except to the extent that such amounts are changed under subsection (f)(2), no candidate (other than a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President) may make expenditures in connection with his primary election campaign in excess of the greater of—

"(A) 10 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (g)) of the geographical area in which the election for such nomination is held, or

"(B)(i) $125,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Senator, or Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, or

"(ii) $90,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Representative from a State which is entitled to more than one Representative.

"(2)(A) No candidate for nomination for election to the office of President may make expenditures in any State in which he is a candidate in a primary election in excess of two times the amount which a candidate for nomination for election to the office of Senator from the State (or for nomination for election to the office of Delegate in the case of the District of Columbia, the Virgin Islands, or Guam, or to the office of Resident Commissioner in the case of Puerto Rico) may expand in that State in connection with his primary election campaign.

"(B) Notwithstanding the provisions of subparagraph (A), no such candidate may make expenditures throughout the United States in connection with his campaign for that nomination in excess of an amount equal to 10 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States. For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'United States' means the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands and any area from which a delegate to the national nominating convention of a political party is selected.

"(b) Except to the extent that such amounts are charged under subsection (f)(2), no candidate may make expenditures in connection with his general election campaign in excess of the greater of—

"(1) 15 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (g)) of the geographical area in which the election is held, or

"(2)(A) $175,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Senator, or Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, or

"(B) $90,000, if the Federal office sought is that of a Representative from a State which is entitled to more than one Representative.

"(c) No candidate who is unopposed in a primary or general election may make expenditures in connection with his primary or general election campaign in excess of 10 percent of the limitation in subsection (a) or (b).

"(d) The Federal Election Commission shall prescribe regulations under which any expenditure by a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President for use in two or more States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

"(e)(1) Expenditures made on behalf of any candidate are, for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by such candidate.

"(2) Expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate for the office of Vice President of the United States are, for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by the candidate for the office of President of the United States with whom he is running.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a Vice Presidential candidate, if it is made by—

"(A) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for the purpose of making any expenditure, or

"(B) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate or an agent of the candidate to make the expenditure.

"(4) For purposes of this section an expenditure made by the national committee of a political party, or by the State committee of a political party, in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate affiliated with that party which is not in excess of the limitations contained in subsection (i), is not considered to be an expenditure made on behalf of that candidate.

"(f)(1) For purposes of paragraph (2)—

"(A) 'price index' means the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and

"(B) 'base period' means the calendar year 1973.

"(2) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1975), as necessary data become available from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Federal Election Commission and publish in the Federal Register the percentage difference between the price index for the twelve months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each amount determined under subsections (a) and (b) shall be changed by such percentage difference. Each amount so changed shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

"(g) During the first week of January 1975, and every subsequent year, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Federal Election Commission and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, of each State, and of each congressional district as of the 1st day of July next preceding the date of certification. The term 'voting age population' means resident population, eighteen years of age or older.

"(h) Upon receiving the certification of the Secretary of Commerce and of the Secretary of Labor, the Federal Election Commission shall publish in the Federal Register the applicable expenditure limitations in effect for the calendar year for the United States, and for each State and congressional district under this section.".

On page 73, line 3, strike out "(b)" and insert in lieu thereof "(i)".

On page 73, line 24, strike out 'section 504" and insert in lieu thereof "subsection (g); and".

On page 74, strike out lines 1 and 2.

On page 74, line 6, strike out "that Act" and insert in lieu thereof "the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971".

On page 74, line 8, strike out "(c)" and insert in lieu thereof "(j)".

On page 74, line 10, strike out "(a)(4)" and insert in lieu thereof "(e)(3)".

On page 75, line 6, strike out "(a)(5)" and insert in lieu thereof "(d)".

On page 75, line 11, strike out "(a)(4)" and insert in lieu thereof "(e)(3)".

On page 84, between lines 9 and 10, insert the following:

"SEC. 501. (a) Section 41(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to contributions to candidates for public office) is amended by striking out 'an amount equal to one-half of all political contributions', and inserting in lieu thereof 'an amount equal to the sum of all political contributions'.".

On page 84, line 10, strike out "SEC. 501. (a)" and insert in lieu thereof "(b)".

On page 84, line 15, strike out "$25" and insert in lieu thereof "$125".

On page 84, line 16, strike out "$50" and insert in lieu thereof "$250".

On page 84, line 17, strike out "(b)" the first time it appears, and insert in lieu thereof "(c)".

On page 84, line 21, strike out "$100" and insert in lieu thereof "$250".

On page 84, line 21, strike out "$200" and insert in lieu thereof "$500".

On page 84, between lines 22 and 23, insert the following: "(d)(1) Section 41(c)(1)(C), (D), and (E) of such Code (relating to definition of political contribution) are each amended by striking out 'national political party' and inserting in lieu thereof 'political party'.".

"(2) Section 41(c)(3) of such Code (relating to definition of political party) is amended by—

"(A) striking out 'NATIONAL POLITICAL PARTY.—' and inserting in lieu thereof "POLITICAL PARTY.—";

"(B) striking out "national"; and

"(C) striking out 'ten or more States' in subparagraph (A) and inserting in lieu thereof 'at least one State'.".

On page 84, line 23, strike out "(c)." and insert in lieu thereof "(e)".

On page 85, beginning with line 1, strike out through line 17 on page 86.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, this is an amendment which I drafted to eliminate from the pending bill, S. 3044, the Federal financing provisions to provide for financing of Federal elections through the voluntary contributions of taxpayers who would receive substantially increased rights to a deduction from their income tax and a substantial increase in their tax credit.

The vote on the amendment just offered by Mr. BAKER, with my cosponsorship, and that of other Senators, that is, amendment No. 1134, convinces me by the overwhelming nature of the vote that the Senate would not be exercising good judgment by adopting my amendment.

For that reason, I withdraw the amendment and thank my distinguished friend from Tennessee for yielding me this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I will not take very long with this amendment. It would simply eliminate public financing for Members of Congress and substitute an increased tax credit.

That is the sole purpose of the amendment. It leaves the bill intact otherwise.

I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, do I correctly understand that this amendment is the same as the prior amendment, except that it would eliminate public financing in congressional campaigns only?

Mr. BAKER. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON. The tax credit would remain at $50 or $100 on a joint return, but there would be no tax checkoff provision and no tax deduction; is that not correct?

Mr. BAKER. There would be as to a Presidential race but not a congressional race.

Mr. CANNON. In the Senator's previous amendment he struck out the tax checkoff provision. He also struck out the tax deduction. Is that out of this amendment as well?

Mr. BAKER. No; those provisions as the relate to Presidenial races would remain intact, but as they might relate to congressional relations, they would be deleted.

This amendment simply takes leave of the presidential situation as the Senator has stated in S. 3044 but eliminates the congressional races from the coverage and puts a tax credit in its place.

Mr. CANNON. I thank the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. BAKER. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time on this amendment has now been yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER) No. 1135.

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), and the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON) is absent on official business.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT) and the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. CASE) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. CASE) would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 54, as follows:

So Mr. BAKER's amendment (No. 1135) was rejected.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I have joined today in submitting three amendments to S. 3044 with Senators TAFT and DOMENICI which would authorize partial, but substantial, public financing of Federal general elections and eliminate from the bill public financing of congressional primaries.

The first amendment is directed at Federal general elections. In place of the 100-percent public financing provided for major party candidates, our amendment provides for not less than 25 percent nor more than 50 percent public financing for such candidates. Major party candidates would become eligible for a 25-percent formula grant upon nomination. They could also qualify for up to an additional 25 percent in Federal matching payments against small contributions, but no candidate could receive Federal payments totaling more than 50 percent of the applicable campaign expenditure limit. It is probable that all major party general election candidates for Federal office could qualify for 50-percent public financing. It is also probable that the amounts "checked off" by taxpayers would more than equal the cost to the Treasury over the 4-year election cycle of 50-percent public financing for the Federal general election campaigns.

The small contributions eligible for matching are the same as those which the committee bill applies to primary elections, that is, $250 in Presidential campaigns and $100 in congressional campaigns. The relative size of the maximum subsidy available to minor party candidates in general elections is the same as in the committee bill.

This amendment also lowers the contribution limit for congressional general elections, now at $3,000 for individuals and $6,000 for political committees ,to $1,000 for all donors. The contribution limits for primaries and Presidential general elections are not changed.

This amendment endeavors to strike a fair and sensible balance between a host of competing considerations, including the need to replace big money with unquestionably clean money, the need to encourage citizens to make—and candidates to seek—small contributions, the need to assure the less well-known candidate enough start-up funds to mount an effective campaign, and the need to minimize the cost to the Treasury.

The second amendment combines all of the features of the first amendment with a provision that would eliminate public financing of congressional primaries. While I believe that a good case can be made for the principle that public funds should be made available to encourage greater and more equitable competition at the prenomination stage, particularly in connection with Presidential elections, I am convinced that the risks are so great in regard to congressional primaries and experience so slight that there exists a substantial possibility that the extension of public financing to congressional primaries at this time would do more harm than good. I prefer not to run what I regard as a serious risk of weakening the political system in the name of reform.

Among the problems I see in public financing of congressional primaries are the following: First, it is not at all clear that a candidate's ability to raise the threshold amount is a good measure of his popularity or legitimacy. It may merely measure the sophistication of his fund-raising operation, or it may be a reflection of the amounts of big money he or she was able to raise early.

Second, the matching system magnifies the amounts by which one primary candidate is able to outspend another. Assume, for example, that in a Senatorial primary in a State where the total contribution limit is $1.5 million there are two candidates, one who has raised $400,000 and one who has raised $700,000. Without matching the second candidate can outspend the first by $300,000. If all the funds raised by both candidates are eligible for matching, the first candidate will have a total of $800,000; the second, $1.4 million. The result is that the first candidate is outspent by $600,000 instead of $300,000. It is not at all clear that such a system promotes more equitable competition between primary contenders; it may well have the opposite effect.

Third, matching may encourage a proliferation of primary candidacies, some insincere, all of which will be more heavily funded. The cumulative effect could well be heightened public confusion and irritation, lower turnouts, less well-informed decisions in the voting booth, and the nomination of candidates unrepresentative of the party as a whole. The result could be a weakening of the two-party system.

By no means does this exhaust the doubts about public financing of primaries on a matching basis. I do not contend that the prenomination stage of the electoral process is perfect, or that it is impossible to design a system of public financing which will improve that stage. I do maintain that the criticisms of public financing of congressional primaries are serious enough—and the risks of irreversible damage great enough—that the issue is best left for another day, a day when, through the experience with public financing in general elections, we will be in a better position to act constructively.

We have also joined in introducing a third amendment which does not contain the partial public financing scheme and would simply eliminate public financing of congressional primaries.

I believe that these amendments could substantially improve S. 3044. They would eliminate the corruptive influence of large contribution, but not the healthy influence of small contributions by citizens seeking a voice in their Government. Indeed, to go that far, as does S. 3044, raises doubts about its constitutionality.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to order the yeas and nays on my amendment No. 1152 at any time, which vote will not occur until Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment No. 1152.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second. The yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BAKER. Do I understand the order included an order for the vote to occur on Monday?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, it did not.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. He just stated that the vote would occur on Monday.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Chair and the Senator from West Virginia.

AMENDMENT OF GENERAL EDUCATION PROVISIONS ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on H.R. 12253, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 12253) to amend the General Education Provisions Act to provide that funds appropriated for applicable programs for fiscal year 1974 shall remain available during the succeeding fiscal year and that such funds for fiscal year 1973 shall remain available during fiscal years 1974 and 1975, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by a majority of the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 2, 1974, at pages H2434–2435.)

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I am pleased to report to the Senate that the conference was amiable, and the theory of the Senate amendments to the House-passed bill was accepted. The filed report goes through the exact recessions and amendments point by point.

Suffice it to say that the portion which has aroused the most interest, the clarification for subsidized loans under the guaranteed student loan program, has been adopted in the following manner. Youngsters from families with an adjusted gross income of less than $15,000 will be eligible for a subsidized loan of $2,000 without a needs analysis. The yearly loan limitation will remain at the $2,500 level, and those same youngsters could get an additional $500 subsidized loan if they show a need; that need can only pertain to the $500 in excess of the $2,000. Students from a family with an adjusted gross income of $15,000 and above will still be eligible for a subsidized loan of up to $2,500 but must show need.

To my mind, what the conference has done is to make clear what we in the Senate thought we had adopted in the 1972 Education Amendments. It was then, and still is, our contention that under the language there was no authority for the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to require a needs test from students from families with an adjusted gross income of less than $15,000. However, the intransigence of the agency made necessary legislation of an emergency type.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the conference report has been signed by all conferees on both sides. Is that correct?

Mr. PELL. That is correct.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the minority, therefore, commends it to the Senate, as does the majority.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. PELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

HENRY AARON HITS HOMERUN NO. 714—TIES RECORD OF BABE RUTH

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, I am very proud to notify the Senate that in today's 1974 baseball season's opening game between the Atlanta Braves and Cincinnati Reds, Henry "Hank" Aaron hit his 714th home run—tying the record of Babe Ruth.

This is indeed a momentous day in baseball history, and I extend my personal congratulations to Hank Aaron and the Atlanta Braves. It is my understanding that Aaron may be benched for the other two games in Cincinnati, and I hope that this is true. As a Georgian, I would like to see "Hank" hit the big one—the one to break Babe Ruth's record—in Atlanta Stadium Monday night in the Braves' game against Los Angeles.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment ordered to be printed in the RECORD is as follows:

On page 71, between lines 12 and 13, insert the following:

DEFAMATORY STATEMENTS ABOUT CANDIDATES FOR FEDERAL OFFICE

SEC. 304. Section 612 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(a) by adding at the end of the section caption a semicolon and "defamatory statements about candidates for Federal office";

(b) by designating the first paragraph thereof as subsection (a); and

(c) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) No person shall cause to be published a false and defamatory statement about the character or professional ability of a candidate for Federal office with respect to the qualifications of that candidate for that office if such person knows that such statement is false. Violation of the provisions of this subsection is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine not to exceed $1,000, imprisonment not to exceed six months, or both."

On page 71, line 16, strike out "304." and insert in lieu thereof "305.".

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, this amendment is designed to correct the situation that we observed during the Watergate hearings, where people go around the country issuing defaming documents that are knowingly false and willfully sending them throughout the country. We have seen several instances of that.

A man named Segretti was hired to perform dirty tricks and dirty tricks alone. Two of our colleagues in the Senate were victimized by that practice.

The cutting edge of this amendment states:

(b) No person shall cause to be published a false and defamatory statement about the character or professional ability of a candidate for Federal office with respect to the qualifications of that candidate for that office if such person knows that such statement is false. Violation of the provisions of this subsection is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine not to exceed $1,000, imprisonment not to exceed six months, or both

I have discussed this amendment with the manager of the bill (Mr. CANNON) and the assistant majority leader, and I understand they are prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator answer a question on the amendment?

In every case of this character, it would always be a question of first amendment rights and constitutionality.

Mr. TALMADGE. Yes.

Mr. JAVITS. I think it would be extremely useful. It sounds intelligible and sounds right and does not sound contrary to the Constitution.

Mr. TALMADGE. I may say I checked out the very question the Senator raises with the legislative counsel, and was informed that the first amendment did not protect a person knowingly publishing false and defamatory statements. The amendment is drawn so it must be willfully and knowingly done.

Mr. JAVITS. As I say, it sounded right to me, but I think it would be useful to us if we could get the legislative drafting services to get a legislative memorandum which the Senator could put into the RECORD.

Mr. TALMADGE. I think I have one in my office. I did not anticipate offering the amendment at this time.

At this time I would like to make the following statement as a part of my remarks.

Mr. President, during the so-called Watergate Committee's investigation into the 1972 Presidential campaign, what has since come to be known as the "dirty tricks" escapades came to light. An extreme case involved the actions of one witness who deliberately put together a false and malicious letter accusing two prominent candidates of deviancy. Other campaign workers prepared and circulated brochures and letters grossly misrepresenting prior remarks of opposition candidates. Major candidates became the targets of calculated half-truths and complete falsehoods.

American politics has always been rough and tumble. Campaigns are often highly partisan and, in many ways, this is a healthy sign of a free society. Certainly, none of us advocates a one-party system, or even a system where the major parties closely resemble one another. Most people want and all of us are entitled to hear both sides of the issues. But I do not think that people ought to be misled by fraud and deception.

Tricks and pranks in political life have been with us since the early days of our Republic. Americans enjoy humor, and humor has a legitimate place in the give-and-take of political campaigns. So does criticism. If a candidate or party has a weak point, I agree that other candidates should be able to lampoon or criticize it. Democrats have done it to Republicans, and Republicans have done it to Democrats. Anyone who stands for election realizes that you have to take the heat, or else you should get out of the kitchen.

Mr. President, the right to vote is sacred. I do not ever want to see the election process in our country subverted. There is no need and there is no place for outright lying in campaigns, especially when such lies carry strong and sensational charges. The law should be strengthened to deter and, if necessary, to punish those who would use the calculated falsehood to take unjust advantage of the voting public.

For this purpose, I am proposing an amendment which makes it a Federal crime to prepare or otherwise participate in unscrupulous "dirty tricks" aimed at destroying the character of political candidates on untrue grounds. We should take sensible steps to stop such grossly unethical practices.

In so doing, we must be ever mindful of the first amendment, which protects free speech. The Constitution says that you have a right to speak your piece. It protects those who, in good faith, verbally blast or put on satires or criticisms of political candidates. It protects those who, in good faith, attack the views of candidates. I know of no other country on Earth whose citizens enjoy such broad freedom.

Still, in my view, there is a point at which speech becomes unprotected conduct. Political speech is usually protected, but calculated lies are not. The Supreme Court has recognized this in a wide variety of cases.

My amendment attempts to clarify just where that point is in Federal political campaigns. It makes it unlawful to knowingly and willfully prepare or send out clearly false and defamatory information about recognized candidates for elected Federal office. For example, my amendment makes it unlawful to write a letter to a newspaper falsely stating that a candidate has been in a mental institution when the letter writer knows this assertion is not true.

On the other hand, this statute does not extend to the good faith preparation or distribution of material reflecting the author's views, no matter how controversial they might be. If a man honestly disagrees with a candidate or that candidate's positions, he can write what he will, so long as he does not send out what he either knows is or has deliberately and maliciously arranged so as to be defamatory and untrue. If Congressional Candidate X constantly socializes with corporate executives, a critic could print an advertisement a picture of X shaking hands with these corporate officials and caption it "Do You Want Fat Cats Running the Country?" But it would be unlawful for that advertisement to say "X" Accepts Big Contribution from Fat Cats" if that was known by the author to be untrue.

Mr. President, actual knowledge and deliberate lying are the keys to this crime. It does not extend to reckless or negligent conduct, which is already adequately covered by the libel and slander laws. It does not extend to the press' innocently printing a spurious or false letter to the editor. It does not make it unlawful for the media to transmit a candidate's speech, even though that speech might misrepresent the facts or be laden with inaccuracies. It is a carefully drafted proposal which permits the free flow of ideas in the political marketplace. It forbids outright lying and intentional misrepresentations.

In Garrison versus Louisiana, the Supreme Court stated that:

"The use of calculated falsehood, however, would put a different cast on the constitutional question. Although honest utterance, even if inaccurate, may further the fruitful exercise of the right of free speech, it does not follow that the lie, knowingly and deliberately published about a public official, should enjoy a like immunity. At the time the First Amendment was adopted, as today, there were those unscrupulous enough and skillful enough to use the deliberate . . . falsehood as an effective political tool to unseat the public servant or even topple an administration. That speech is used as a tool for political ends does not automatically bring it under the protective mantle of the Constitution. For the use of the known lie as a tool is at once at odds with the premises of democratic government and with the orderly manner in which economic, social, or political change is to be effected. Calculated falsehood falls into that class of utterances which "are no essential part of any exposition of ideas, and are of such slight social value as a step to truth that any benefit that may be derived from them is clearly outweighed by the social interest in order and morality. . . ." Hence the knowingly false statement do[es] not enjoy constitutional protection."

This amendment is not a cure-all for "dirty tricks." I recognize the right to dissent and to speak out. I have no quarrel with those who "shoot from the hip" when they speak. But, there is no right to prepare calculated falsehoods. My amendment shuts the door on a tiny minority of people who would sit down and deliberately write a defamatory lie concerning a candidate for elected Federal office. I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TALMADGE. I yield.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I support the amendment offered, and I think it is a valuable contribution. It goes without saying—and I want to establish this—that the amendment would apply to a newspaper reporter, a newspaper publisher, just as much as it would apply to someone else who caused to be published matters that were knowingly false. Is that not true?

Mr. TALMADGE. I think it perhaps would. However, it is aimed at mails shipped in interstate commerce, and I think it would.

Mr. GRIFFIN. It says, "No person shall cause to be published a false and defamatory statement about the character or professional ability of a candidate."

Mr. TALMADGE. That is right.

Mr. GRIFFIN. "No person" is an all-inclusive category, and I would assume that if there were a newspaper reporter or a newspaper publisher who caused to be published a false and defamatory statement about a candidate, knowing it to be false, this amendment would apply to them. I want to be sure that is a proper understanding.

Mr. TALMADGE. I think that is right.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. TALMADGE. I thank my distinguished colleague.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, there is a question I would like to raise here, and that is, would this amendment apply to books as well as articles or campaign literature?

Mr. TALMADGE. The amendment reads:

No person shall cause to be published a false and defamatory statement about the character or professional ability of a candidate for Federal office with respect to the qualifications of that candidate for that office if such person knows that such statement is false.

I think it would. However, it is not a common practice to publish books in political campaigns. What this amendment is aimed at is some fellow circulating around the country, creating an instance like we had in New Hampshire, where they said Senator MUSKIE has said something derogatory about some particular ethnic group in the State of Maine.

Also, the distinguished Senator from Minnesota was victimized in the State of Florida by the same group. Also, the distinguished Senator from Washington was victimized.

This amendment is intended to provide a prohibition against that kind of action. I think it would be applicable to anyone who published it, but he must publish it knowing it to be false at the time.

Mr. PELL. It is my understanding that, under Sullivan against New York Times, if one is a public figure—and that includes any candidate for public office—there is virtually no law of libel that is applicable.

Mr. TALMADGE. They reduced severely, as I understand the Sullivan case, the ability to recover in a libel suit by anyone in public office. I believe it must be proved that it was malicious and false and done with a malicious motive.

Mr. PELL. To prove a motive—the Senator from Georgia as a lawyer is much more familiar with this than I am—is a very difficult thing.

Mr. TALMADGE. This does not relate to motive.

Mr. PELL. That is correct.

Mr. TALMADGE. It relates to whether or not the man who makes the publication knew it to be false at the time.

Mr. PELL. I completely support the objective of the Senator from Georgia. I am wondering if this amendment would run counter to the Supreme Court ruling in Sullivan versus New York Times.

Mr. TALMADGE. Of course, that was a suit in libel. This does not deal with libel cases at all.

Mr. PELL. So there would be no conflict with constitutionality?

Mr. TALMADGE. There would be no conflict with respect to libel at all under this amendment as it is written. This creates a new penalty, a misdemeanor, for someone who publishes a false and defamatory statement about the character or professional ability of a candidate and introduces it into a campaign, if he knew the publication to be false at the time he made it.

Mr. PELL. I think it is an excellent idea, and, at the moment, I look forward to recommending to my colleagues that it be approved.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TALMADGE. I yield.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Is it the intention of the Senator from Georgia to have this amendment adopted without a rollcall vote? I think it is unfortunate——

Mr. TALMADGE. I understood, after conference with the floor manager (Mr. CANNON) at the time, and also his Republican counterpart, that they were prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I have no doubt about that.

Mr. TALMADGE. I never ask for a rollcall when I can get a default judgment.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I do not doubt that. I think it is unfortunate that we do not have a rollcall vote so the Senate could express itself overwhelmingly in favor of this amendment; and I am thinking that it might possibly have some side effect on the Supreme Court when they have another case coming up and they are considering the constitutionality of it, but maybe not.

Mr. TALMADGE. I have no objection to a rollcall vote.

I understood one Senator to tell other Senators a few minutes ago that there would be no more rollcall votes tonight. It could go over until Monday. I would have no objection to that. If the distinguished acting majority leader would set a time certain for a vote, I would have no objection.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, may I ask the distinguished Senator, along with the assistant minority leader and the acting manager of the bill, how much time they think they would want to debate this amendment?

Mr. TALMADGE. Thirty minutes, 15 minutes to a side.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday, after conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate resume consideration of the unfinished business, S. 3044, and that at that time the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Georgia (Mr. TALMADGE) be made the pending question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. And I ask unanimous consent that there be a time limitation on the amendment by the distinguished Senator from Georgia (Mr. TALMADGE) of 30 minutes, to be equally divided between Mr. TALMADGE and the manager of the bill, or if the manager of the bill supports the amendment, then the time in opposition thereto be under the control of the distinguished minority leader or his designee, and that the time be equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota.

HANK AARON AND HIS HOME RUN RECORD

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, we listened with great interest—and I did with excitement—to the announcement made by our distinguished colleague from Georgia (Mr. TALMADGE) about the spectacular feat of Henry "Hank" Aaron, of the Atlanta Braves, tying the home run record of the great George Herman "Babe" Ruth on this day of April 4.

I have consulted with my good friend from Georgia, who is always a charitable and considerate gentleman, and he knows I am a real baseball enthusiast and cheer even when my Minnesota Twins lose, and refuse to admit that they lose. On this occasion he has permitted me to initiate, on his behalf and on behalf of his colleague Senator NUNN, and the distinguished acting minority leader (Mr. GRIFFIN), and the distinguished majority whip (Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD), to submit a resolution, for which I shall ask immediate consideration. The resolution reads as follows:

S. RES. 303

Whereas, baseball is a great American sport;

Whereas, baseball is a great American sport;

Whereas Hank Aaron of the Atlanta Braves has brought great honor to his team, his race, and himself;

Whereas Hank Aaron on the date of April 4, 1974, has tied the home run record of George Herman (Babe) Ruth;

Be it hereby Resolved, That the United States Senate expresses its congratulations to Hank Aaron on hitting home run number 714 on the date of April 4, 1974, in the game between Atlanta Braves and the Cincinnati Reds, at Cincinnati, Ohio.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am happy to yield.

Mr. TALMADGE. I congratulate the Senator on his leadership in submitting the resolution, and I am happy to be a consponsor thereof.

A few moments ago we heard remarks on the Senate floor congratulating Hank Aaron. I urge the Senate to approve overwhelmingly the resolution that has been submitted by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY), of which I am proud to be a cosponsor.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, as in many other instances in my life, I have received inspiration and guidance from the distinguished Senator from Georgia. In this instance, I did so again. The Senator from Minnesota, who loves baseball night or day, win or lose, has had wholehearted cooperation from these remarkable men of the Senate, who are baseball fans—our two friends from Georgia (Mr. TALMADGE and Mr. NUNN), the distinguished Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN), and the distinguished Senator from West Virginia (Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD).

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we proceed to the consideration of the resolution and that it be approved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCCLURE). Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 303) was considered and agreed to.

Mr. GRIFFIN. It was agreed to unanimously.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The record will so reflect.

SENATE FLOOR DEBATES ON

export these crops and earn the foreign exchange necessary to purchase needed imports and to strengthen the dollar." I should add that, as of late December, the Agriculture Department had not publicly factored the world energy crisis into its projections of world demand for American food.

Agriculture's sense of new strength is also apparent in the American approach to trade, particularly in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) negotiations which began formally last September. Within the Agriculture Department there is a certain residual bitterness that in the Kennedy Round the interests of agriculture were given second billing to those of industry. Now, however, Paarlberg points to recent export figures to show "what our farmers and marketing system might be able to do consistently—several years down the road but with greater price stability—if many of the artificial barriers to import demand in other nations were reduced." American agriculture, he said last fall, now seeks "a major, perhaps decisive role" in the GATT talks. "Our resolve must be to put increasing international pressure on those foreign trade barriers which prevent one of the most efficient U.S. industries—one of the world's most efficient farm sectors—from bringing its weight to bear to improve our trade and payments position." Our policy is easy to summarize: food for cash.

FOOD: FOR PEACE OR POLITICS?

While commercial exports have climbed toward $20 billion, shipments under Food for Peace have dropped below $1 billion. "The future mechanism for aiding food-deficit countries is," an Agriculture Department publication notes dryly, "uncertain." Now it is true that, for receipients, Food for Peace has not always been an unmitigated benefit: it has sometimes depressed their agriculture and has involved political and psychic costs. It has also become true in recent years, as Butz told me in an interview, that P.L. 480 "is no longer primarily a surplus disposal program. It's for humanitarian purposes and for national security—to help infuse purchasing power into countries on our defense perimeter. South Vietnam is a case in point." Indeed, last year most 480 supplies went to Vietnam and to these other countries regarded, in varying degrees, as segments of the American "defense perimeter": South Korea, Israel, Pakistan, and Indonesia.

Nonetheless, through three decades, Food for Peace and its predecessor programs have fed hungry millions. They have nourished our better instincts as a people.

For three decades, moreover, American diplomats have used food as a political tool: to relieve the misery of our friends, to spare them the cost of buying food on the open market, and to help them keep popular discontent within politically manageable bounds; to show off American productivity and generosity; to bargain for other benefits; and so on. It is within this tradition of food diplomacy that administration officials now suggest that we may stop selling food to countries which won't sell us oil.

It is perhaps worth noting here that while countries in duress may appreciate—sometimes through clenched teeth—our food largesse, they tend to react strongly against the overt use of food as a political weapon. During a period of bad relations in 1964, for instance, President Nasser of Egypt denounced the United States for failing to provide emergency food supplies and told the United States to "go drink sea water." During another bad period in 1966 he declared: "The freedom we have bought with our blood we shall not sell for wheat, for rice, or for anything." Three days before President Allende of Chile was overthrown and killed last fall, his government said that the United States had refused to sell it, for cash, vitally needed supplies of wheat, because of a "political decision of the White House"; less than a month after the coup, the United States approved a credit sale of wheat to the new Chilean government in an amount eight times the total commodity credit offered to Chile in the Allende years. Oil states, however, with their cash and small populations—and their oil—are not similarly vulnerable. Plainly, it depends.

Until quite recently, nonetheless, the idea of feeding hungry foreigners was fading for other than political reasons. The chairmen of the two agriculture committees, Senator Herman Talmadge and Representative W. R. Poage, are known for their conservative philosophy and their national, as opposed to international, outlook; they both have pronounced themselves content with America's past and present performance on food aid. Food for Peace is "a drain on American dollars," Poage said, "and it should be treated as just another kind of foreign aid like medicine or printing presses." The Agriculture Department, whose Secretary has been known to warn darkly of "alarmists," has consistently played down the possibility of famine, playing up the helpful influence of good weather and pointing to the "international" nature of the world food problem without offering initiative or leadership. Even in the State Department, the attitude was growing more negative. "Food for Peace was based on the ethnocentric idea that we could pacify the world by food," a State Department official said to me last summer at a time when Bangladesh was beginning, largely in vain, for a trickle of wheat. Now our thinking is that feeding the world is an international problem, maybe one for the United Nations. The worst thing we could do for a country would be to put it on a permanent dole. That would just give it the excuse to avoid solving its own problems, especially population. Then Secretary of State William P. Rogers uttered a faint call in his last annual report for "an over-all review of U.S. food production policy in relation to its effect on our assistance to the LDC's [less-developed countries]," but no one answered and his own department did not follow up.

A WORLD FOOD RESERVE

In fact, Food for Peace must be considered all but defunct. Only last summer did a "new" idea appear for a program or mechanism to fill its chief purpose of easing world hunger. The idea was a "world food reserve" and it came from A. H. Boerma, the Dutchman who is Director General of the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization. To be sure, the idea of a planned reserve is not new. A report prepared in the Senate Agriculture Committee recalls that, as early as 1912, Henry A. Wallace cited the Biblical story of Joseph storing grain against famine, and the Confucians' creation of a "constantly normal granary" in China, in order to urge a similar food storage plan upon the United States. As Secretary of Agriculture, Wallace steered into law in Depression America a storage program intended to protect American farmers' income. A British-American Combined Food Board provided some experience in internationalizing food cooperation in World War II. In 1945, John Boyd-Orr, the Food and Agriculture Organization's (FAO) first chief, proposed a plan for purchase and storage of international food reserves.

His plan foundered on the same rocks that have endangered all like proposals since, whether the reserves be meant for the domestic or international market. That is, essentially, the fear of producers everywhere that at some point the reserves will be dumped on the market, thus depressing the prices. In the United States, the farm bloc for many years had the strength not only to induce the government to buy surpluses but to keep them off the market. Farmers, though politically weaker now, make the same appeal, the more so in a period of strong market demand and high prices. "Food reserves held by government can never be perfectly insulated from the market," Butz warned in December. "Farmers should not be fooled by promises that a system can be designed to protect farmers from a premature release of stocks. Any set of rules would certainly be subject to change—especially in light of public pressures like those which prevailed in 1973, pressures which forced this Administration to impose counterproductive price controls." And even those officials who are indifferent to the welfare of farmers are slowed by the high costs of buying and storing food for a reserve and by the idea, encouraged by the Agriculture Department, that the United States has done plenty in the past and that other developed countries, to say nothing of the developing countries themselves, should do more now.

Now, Boerma, offering his proposal in July, helped publicize the great need to which his proposal was addressed. The "nonaligned" nations, meeting in Algiers in September, made a like appeal. At the same time, the Brookings Institution sponsored a report focusing on reserves and agricultural trade among North America, the European Economic Community, and Japan. A British economist, Timothy Josling, published a widely circulated paper on international grain reserves. Concern for reserves was in the air, like, if you will, a gas. But given the political and economic facts of life in Washington, a spark was needed to give the idea life within the American government. Such a spark could only be struck by people outside the American agricultural establishment.

THE NSC STUDY

This was done on September 11, at the former's confirmation hearing, by Secretary of State Kissinger and Senator Hubert Humphrey. Humphrey first started talking about reserves in the 1950's. Senator Edward Kennedy, among others, now brings publicity and support to the idea, but Humphrey has been the commanding figure among the handful of legislators with not only an internationalist outlook and a conscience but with farm expertise. As chairman of the Senate's Foreign Agricultural Policy Subcommittee, he has produced a prodigious public record on issues of world food security. As a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, he conducted this colloquy with Kissinger, a city boy through-and-through:

HUMPHREY. Would you initiate, after consultation with the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and obviously with the President, a discussion amongst the main exporting nations and the main importing nations as to what we are going to do in the coming year to relieve conditions of human misery and, in some areas, famine, in the light of the world food supply situation?

KISSINGER. You know, Senator Humphrey, that your suggestion runs counter to all our traditional attitudes with respect to agriculture.

HUMPHREY. Correct.

KISSINGER. We have always resisted the idea of commodity-type agreements because we wanted to have the maximum opportunity for the export of American products, and we thought we would have enough to take care of all needs. In this respect the experience of the last year (1972-73) has been a challenge to all our traditional assumptions. We recognize that now we are living in a new world.

We have recently started an interdepartmental study of this problem. The proposal you make is one that some of us were discussing informally earlier this year; at that time it did not receive too much favor because of the weight of previous assumptions.

All I can say, pending the completion of that interdepartmental study, is that the approach you have suggested is needed, and we will look at it with the greatest sympathy.

That "interdepartmental study," a project of the National Security Council, concluded, in essence, that although the world food outlook is uncertain, the United States should explore new ways of promoting an international approach to related issues of food aid and development. Those familiar with the NSC study report that it, and Kissinger's personal impetus behind it, provoked a thorough and continuing review in the downtown departments and made the bureaucracy focus on the new vistas of world food. In turn, the review helped educate Kissinger, who at his confirmation hearing, was speaking strictly off a staff briefing. He was initially outraged that in 1973, almost overnight, the United States had to stop selling certain farm commodities—with troublesome foreign policy consequences—in markets which it had spent five years trying to expand. He is described now as soberly heedful of the interrelationship of agriculture and diplomacy, and as determined not to leave policy in that area to "economists."

A WORLD FOOD CONFERENCE

Less than two weeks after his confirmation hearing, Kissinger went to the United Nations and proposed a World Food Conference along the precise lines suggested by Humphrey. This was, I am prepared to believe, more than a gesture to show the Third World gallery that the United States is interested in more than countries big and rich enough to be part of the balance of power. It was an acknowledgement, more meaningful for having been made in a political forum and in the expectation of indefinite food shortages, that the United States regards the world food situation as an urgent issue demanding an international solution and transcending the complex ongoing questions of agricultural trade. The Conference will be held in Rome next November under the auspices of the United Nations, with technical assistance by the FAO. It was put under the United Nations rather than the FAO because the U.N. has a universal membership (the Russians don't belong to the FAO) and because grain-exporting countries tend to look at the FAO as a club (in both senses) of the food-deficit countries. The Conference will consider a range of issues chosen, or so the United States hopes, for being particularly amenable to international cooperation—pest control, disaster relief, technical assistance for self-help programs, and so on. But an international food reserve remains the key issue.

As usual, an international timetable is forcing national decisions. Kissinger has appointed a coordinator to oversee the shaping of the American position at the World Food Conference. The fact that the Conference will be under the United Nations, not the FAO, facilitated his effort to put State rather than Agriculture in charge of the American position. The Agriculture Department named the deputy coordinator. The bureaucratic byplay is, by consensus, brisk but positive. The FAO's Boerma has been applying pressure of his own, on Butz, from what might be called the left flank. They seem to have pushed each other into a mutually acceptable position on reserves. Butz now agrees that the government as well as private traders will have to hold reserves. Boerma has eased off his earlier preference that reserves be controlled internationally, rather than by each participating nation. Over-all, the inevitable and healthy difference in viewpoint of Agriculture and State—Agriculture representing a powerful domestic interest group, State representing a more abstract foreign policy "interest"—ensures a lively process of policy formulation. Butz is a tough, able, and outspoken man, a gamecock, and those who know him well are confident that in joining this process with Kissinger, he is quite up to ensuring that agriculture's—and Agriculture's—interests will be properly served.

GAMES RUSSIANS PLAY

The Soviet Union needs a separate word. Détente has brought the Russians into the world grain market. Their resources allow them to make a huge impact on world supplies and prices. More than any other single factor, it was the Russian purchases of 1972 which left the United States able to respond only stingily to emergency appeals from West Africa and Bangladesh. Those countries could well have concluded that détente is a conspiracy of the rich against the poor. The 1972 purchases also contributed to boosting food prices here and elsewhere. Yet the Russians still play an irresponsible loner's game. Take carryover stocks: their size indicates whether a country facing a bad harvest or an unexpected surge in demand will go on the world market. The Russians keep stock information secret. Not even the bilateral Soviet-American agricultural agreement signed at the second summit obliges them to report in that critical area. (That agreement was signed, by the way, before Kissinger started getting wise to agriculture.) Nor do the Russians take an organized part in international efforts to feed the hungry. They shun the FAO. Presumably, the World Food Conference will help smoke them out.

Just what will come out next November, at the Conference, is hard to say. I would guess that we are only at the beginning of composing a national policy consistent at once with our best instincts, with our producer's interests, and with our gathering awareness that we live in a world which may force us into new patterns both of cooperation and competition in order to assure ourselves the resources necessary for our national life. Until now, our thinking and policy on resources have assumed either an adequate domestic supply or adequate foreign access. In this condition of plenty, we could indulge a casual and unplanned approach. But we seem now to be entering a period of shortages, world or national. George McGovern, a farm state politician and former Food for Peace administrator, told the Senate last August:

We have chosen commercial sales of wheat to the Soviet Union over guarantees of an adequate diet for those impoverished Americans who subsist on surplus commodities. We have chosen, at least indirectly, to feed American livestock—in support of our taste for meat over grain—instead of meeting desperate human needs in West Africa, South Asia and elsewhere. We are forced to such results because we simply have no policy for choosing which needs to fill and which to ignore when we cannot fill them all.

The country is now starting to choose.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, is there further morning business?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which the clerk will state.

The assistant legislative clerk read the bill by title, as follows:

A bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia (Mr. TALMADGE).

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, it is my understanding that that amendment will not be voted on until Monday. It is my hope that other amendments which may be available will be offered this afternoon, and if there are to be rollcall votes, they, too, can be put over until Monday under the previous agreement.

CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, at this time I send to the desk a cloture motion and ask that it be read.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The cloture motion having been presented under rule XXII, the Chair, without objection, directs the clerk to read the motion.

The assistant legislative clerk read the motion, as follows:

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of Rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close the debate upon the pending bill S. 3044, a bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Talmadge amendment be laid aside temporarily until the close of routine morning business on Monday.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and at 10:44 a.m., the Senate took a recess subject to the call fo the Chair.

The Senate reconvened at 10:47, when called to order by the Acting President pro tempore.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the senior Senator from Virginia.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I wish to commend the difficult and lonely fight being made by the distinguished Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) against an unjustified raid on the Treasury of the United States. The Senator from Alabama has led the fight against taking tax funds to finance political campaigns.

As one Senator, I shall not vote to take money from the pockets of the hard working wage earners of our country and turn that money over to the politicians. The polls show that politicians these days are not in very good standing. Yet many in Congress say, "Oh, the people want us to vote this money. They want us to take tax funds for our campaigns." I do not believe that. I do not believe that the wage earners of the country want to have the House and Senate dip into their pockets and take money from the hard-working people of the country and turn it over to the politicians to use as they wish.

So I commend the able Senator from Alabama. I hope he will prevail in his difficult struggle against this new program for an additional use of tax funds. The record shows that whenever Congress gets into something, the cost increases. This campaign financing bill will not decrease the cost of campaigns; it will increase the cost of campaigns. That is the whole history of congressional spending.

That is the whole history of Congress. Whenever Congress gets involved in a matter, the cost goes up.

I say that the cost of campaigns is too high now. What needs to be done is to put a tight ceiling on campaign expenditures and a tight ceiling on the amount of money that any individual can contribute to a campaign.

I hope Congress will do just that. But I hope that Congress will reject dipping into the pockets of the wage earners in order to get money from the Federal Treasury to turn over to the politicians of our Nation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to speak out of order on another subject.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. First, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to my distinguished colleague from Wisconsin (Mr. NELSON) without losing my right to the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak very briefly out of order.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

S. 3318—INTRODUCTION OF A BILL TO AMEND THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I send to the desk a bill to amend the Interstate Commerce Act and provide for regulation of certain anticompetitive developments in the petroleum industry, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I reserve the right to object.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan reserves the right to object.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will permit me to comment, there is dual jurisdiction over this bill. It has antitrust provisions in it, and it amends the Interstate Commerce Act. Either committee could handle it. Probably both will want to before any action is taken on the bill. I ask unanimous consent that initially it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I ask, is the Finance Committee involved in this legislation?

Mr. NELSON. I think it could be. The bill would amend the Interstate Commerce Act. It provides for divestiture of certain activities of the oil companies, divestiture of refining if they in fact refine, produce, and engage in other activities. So I would not be surprised if Finance, Judiciary, and Commerce all have legitimate jurisdiction over parts of the measure.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Irrespective of the merits of the proposal, I would hate to see the Finance Committee bypassed on a matter which is within its jurisdiction. Would the Senator be inclined to let——

Mr. NELSON. I would like to have it referred to the Committee on Commerce, although I am sure that any other committee that desires at any stage could have its own hearings, as is very frequently done, or have it referred for its own consideration that would be perfectly appropriate, as frequently happens here.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I do not want to object to the request of my distinguished friend from Wisconsin, and I shall not object, but I would hope that if aspects of it are matters that should be considered by the Committee on Finance, the Senator from Wisconsin would urge that it be referred to the Finance Committee at the appropriate time.

Mr. NELSON. I am not sure whether there are. It had not really occurred to me until the Senator raised the question as to whether or not there are Finance Committee jurisdiction problems involved. There clearly is jurisdiction in both the Commerce Committee and the Committee on the Judiciary, because it would amend the Interstate Commerce Act, but it also has antitrust provisions as well.

It has to go somewhere initially, and as I say, I would have no objection—and would not be entitled to make any objection anyway—to any committee that has jurisdiction over some aspect of the subject matter requesting that, at the appropriate time, there be a referral of the bill to that committee.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I am not seeking additional work for the Finance Committee, but I would not like to see it bypassed on a subject in which it has jurisdiction.

I have no objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I do not know that I shall object except to observe that there is an Antitrust Subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary which is chaired by my senior colleague from Michigan (Mr. HART). It would seem that, since the bill clearly is directed to the matter of antitrust laws, it would be a little unusual, at least without consulting—and perhaps the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin has consulted and cleared with the other committees, particularly the Judiciary Committee, which I would think would have primary jurisdiction—to bypass that committee by unanimous consent on the Senate floor.

Perhaps there could be joint referral to both the Judiciary Committee and the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I have no objection to that. It is perfectly clear that there is important jurisdiction in the Judiciary Committee.

Many years ago—I do not know the date—on a similar problem, which involved prohibiting the railroads from hauling products that they owned, which is similar to this matter, the Commerce Committee handled that problem. But there clearly is dual jurisdiction.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be referred to both the Committee on the Judiciary and the Committee on Commerce.

I have no objection to Finance, either. I am not sure there is a primary Finance Committee jurisdiction, but if there is, and the Senator from Virginia or the chairman of the Finance Committee asks for jurisdiction, I would have no objection to that.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, as the request has now been phrased, I have no objection. As the Senator from Wisconsin well knows, not only do we have an Antitrust Subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, but it is very adequately staffed by experts in the field. It would not seem wise for the Senate to bypass that expertise and send it to the Committee on Commerce, on which I serve, but which is not particularly experienced with antitrust questions.

So I am delighted that the Senator has revised his request.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. METCALF). Without objection, the bill will be received and referred jointly to the Committee on Commerce and the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, Mr. ABOUREZK and I have joined in sponsoring this legislation entitled the Free Enterprise in Petroleum Act.

Massive amounts of evidence accumulated over the past quarter century indicate that those major oil companies, engaged in the whole process of oil management and control from drilling to retailing, are in fact monopolistic, anticompetitive, and destructive of free enterprise in the oil industry. This legislation is designed to eliminate this kind of monopolistic control by requiring divestiture of vertically integrated oil companies.

The legislation contains three prohibitions. First, it forbids pipeline companies engaged in interstate commerce from transporting petroleum products which it produced or manufactured. Second, it prohibits oil refiners from engaging in development or production of petroleum products; and, third, it forbids refiners from marketing finished petroleum products. These prohibitions do not apply to "independent" refiners defined as those who buy three-fourths of their crude oil and sell most of their products at the refinery.

The problem of monopolistic practices in the oil industry is not new nor are the proposals to cure it. In July of 1937, Congressman Biermann introduced similar legislation and in every decade since Members of both Houses have proposed legislation aimed at the same problem. These proposals have borne the names of distinguished Members of both Houses such as Borah, Gillette, Nye, Harrington, and Roosevelt. Currently, legislation concerning this problem is pending in both Houses. It is time for Congress to act.

Mr. President, there can no longer be any doubt that a law of this kind is needed. There can be no doubt of the abuses caused by a petroleum industry which is vertically integrated and monopolistic. According to figures in a Government Operations Committee print entitled "Investigation of the Petroleum Industry," that industry has in certain respect become even more concentrated and top-heavy in 1969 than it was in 1960. The top eight oil companies together accounted for 50 percent of the domestic net crude oil production while the top 20 companies had 70 percent. In 1960, those figures were 43 and 63 percent, respectively. All by themselves, four companies—Standard of New Jersey, Texaco, Gulf, and Shell—accounted for 31 percent in 1969 while in 1960 they shared 26 percent. In 1970, the top 20 companies accounted for 94 percent of proved domestic crude reserves, the top eight had 64 percent and the top four had 37 percent. In 1970, the company shares of domestic crude oil and gasoline refining capacity were as follows: The top four had 33 percent, the top eight had 57 percent, and the top 20 shared 86 percent.

In hearings before Congressman Roosevelt's committee in the mid-1950's, before Senator HART's Antitrust Subcommittee, and in a lengthy study by my own staff, the same facts have been consistently brought out: The abuses include short leases for retailers, unwarranted cancellations, artificially induced price variances, forced trinket "give-aways" which are beneficial only to the oil companies, and on and on. As recently as last month, in a front page article in the Milwaukee Sentinel it was stated that 3,600 independent retail gasoline dealers had begun concerted efforts to effect State legislation of this sort. The retailers list additional abuses including being forced to purchase such things as batteries and accessories from the majors at prices dictated by the majors.

The oil industry monopoly has had a truly devastating effect on retail gasoline dealers. Intestifying before the Senate Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, Mr. H. C. Thompson, president of the National Congress of Petroleum Retailers, has described the retail dealers' position as "largely that of an economic serf rather than that of an independent businessman." In his July 14–15–16, 1970, testimony, Mr. Thompson estimated that the turnover in gasoline station operators is 25 to 35 percent each year, or about 50,000 to 70,000 dealers.

The legislature has not been the only branch to attempt to bring about competition in the oil industry. In his fine speech on this subject last July 12, the distinguished Senator from South Dakota (Mr. ABOUREZK) traced the history of Federal court cases in this area since the landmark case of Standard Oil Company of New Jersey v. United States, 221 U.S. 1 in 1911.

An exhaustive examination of this whole problem has recently been completed by the Federal Trade Commission. It is a 141-page document entitled "Complaint Counsel's Prediscovery Statement," dated February 22, 1974, and is in support of the Commission's complaint in In the Matter of Exxon Corporation et al. This document is discussed in two recent newspaper articles.

The first is an article by Morton Mintz in the Washington Post, February 24, 1974, and the second is from the Wall Street Journal, February 25. Among the remedies it proposes, the FTC suggests refinery and pipeline divestiture.

Unfortunately, proceedings of this sort take very much time. Mr. Mintz suggests a final resolution is 8 to 10 years away. Given the present state of our petroleum supply and the state of the oil industry, I suggest that we cannot wait that long.

We can no longer put off legislation of this sort as being premature or ill-considered. Nor can we hide from the fact that there continues to be a petroleum crisis, even though its immediate effects may have been eased by the recent lifting of the oil embargo. This is a bill whose time has come.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill and its summary be printed in the RECORD along with an excerpt of my remarks on this subject in 1971 and the three newspaper articles that I have just referred to.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3318

A bill to amend the Interstate Commerce Act and to provide for regulation of certain anticompetitive developments in the petroleum industry

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled.

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the Free Enterprise in Petroleum Act of 1974.

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds: (1) that Paragraph (8) of section (1) of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 U.S.C. 1 (8)) which divorces the business of transporting by railroad comomdities in interstate commerce from their manufacture, thereby avoiding the tendency to discrimination, should be amended to apply to "pipeline companies", as that term is defined herein; (2) that the industrial organization of the petroleum industry in its present form does not serve the public interest; (3) that industry is characterized by aggregations of capital of tremendous size; (4) that these large companies are engaged in petroleum refining, but are interlocked at various levels of industry operation to the degree that the national policy of competitive free enterprise is frustrated; and (5) that by virtue of intercompany arrangements and vertical integration of refiners into the production of crude oil, the transportation of crude oil and finished products and the marketing of finished products, these large refiners have acquired and hold substantial monopoly power over interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum, adversely affecting the ability of the United States to establish a rational energy policy or conduct its foreign relations properly in important areas.

(b) The Congress further finds that an ample supply of energy at reasonable cost is essential to the national interest, and that petroleum hydrocarbons are a very significant portion of our energy supply. Current and projected levels of hydrocarbon imports from foreign sources entail serious consequences to the national defense and foreign policy of the United States, to the stability and health of the domestic economy, to the competitive position of this Nation in world trade, to the purchasing power of United States currency, and to the welfare of its citizens.

(c) It is therefore essential that action be taken on an amergency basis to reorganize the structure of the petroleum industry, to restore the free enterprise system in energy development, to assure an adequate flow of capital into exploration and development of secure and environmentally safeguarded sources and to accord investors, consumers and taxpayers adequate protection in relation to energy development and the divestitures required hereunder.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. (a) "Refinery" means a plant constructed or operated for the purpose of separating or converting liquid hydrocarbons to finished products or unfinished oils for further refining;

SUMMARY OF FREE ENTERPRISE IN PETROLEUM ACT OF 1974

Section 1 contains the short title of the measure.

Section 2 recites detailed findings by the Congress concerning: the applicability of a section of the Interstate Commerce Act—which divorces the business of transporting by railroad, commodities in interstate commerce from their manufacture—to the petroleum industry; the present highly concentrated organization of the industry, its effect frustrating the national policy in several areas; the policy of competitive free enterprise capitalism generally; energy policy provisions for an ample supply of petroleum products at reasonable costs in interstate and foreign commerce; in carrying out foreign policy in important areas; and in maintaining the stability and purchasing power of the United States currency. This Section also finds that it is therefore essential to reorganize the petroleum industry in such a manner as to make possible effective policy decisions in these areas while at the same time protecting the interests of investors.

Section 2 defines the critical terms used in the legislation. Particularly, it defines the term "affiliate" of a company as including parents, subsidiaries or companies under common control with such companies, whether such relationship is established by ownership, direct or indirect interlocking directorates, by contract or by any other means. It also specifically defines an "independent refiner," a company excepted from the divestment provisions of other sections of the Act, as a company operating a refinery of which not more than 25% of the total input is derived from crude oil produced by or for such refiner or any affiliate, and which sells at least half of its total finished products through other than owned or controlled marketing facilities.

Section 4 prohibits integration into pipeline transportation. This is accomplished by an amendment to the Interstate Commerce Act to prohibit any common carrier pipeline from transporting crude oil, other liquid hydrocarbons, or finished products, if the commodity transported is owned by the pipeline or any affiliate. This provision is similar to the "commodities clause" provision of the Interstate Commerce Acts imposing limitations on railroads, and is in form an amendment to that provision.

Setcion 5 prohibits any company operating a refinery, other than an independent refiner, from owning or controlling any interest in exploration for, development of or production of crude oil or other liquid hydrocarbons, including synthetics.

Section 6 is a similar prohibition relating to marketing facilities, forbidding any company operating a refinery, other than an independent refiner, from owning, controlling or operating facilities for the sale of finished products, other than those facilities necessary for sale of produce directly from the refinery.

Section 7 makes provision for procedures to accomplish the divestment of properties which would otherwise be held in violation of the provisions of the Act. As with public utility holding companies, the Securities and Exchange Commission is given authority to receive and consider divestment plans filed by integrated companies. If the Commission finds such plan as submitted, or as modified by the Commission, to be fair and equitable in its protection of investor interests, and to be in accord with the purposes of the Act, it is authorized to approve the plan and direct its implementation. Pending approval of any plan, however, the Commission is directed to prescribe rules and regulations for petroleum company accounting which will effectively segregate the costs, both capital and operating, and the profits, which are appropriately allocable to each level of company operation.

Section 8 makes necessary allowance for operations during the period before divestiture can be accomplished. It permits companies otherwise subject to the prohibitions of Section 5 and 6 of the Act to continue operations for one year prior to the filing of an appropriate divestment plan with the Securities and Exchange Commission, and thereafter during the period required for the consideration, approval and effuctuation of such a plan by the Commission.

Section 9 imposes penalties for the violation of the Act, to consist of a forfeiture of $5,000 for each day a company is in violation. It also provides that this forfeiture can be declared by application to a United States District Court at the request of the United States or any customer or competitor of the company, or of any other person affected by the violation. In the event suit is brought by private interests, an appropriate informer's fee is to be paid, calculated as are those fees allowable in customs or tax matters. Costs and expenses of suit are also to be allowed a successful private party.

TRADE WITH THE SOVIET UNION AND RHODESIA

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, like many Americans, the Richmond Times-Dispatch, a newspaper published in the city of Richmond, Va., is deeply concerned over the dual standard employed by the State Department. The Times-Dispatch editorial of Wednesday, April 3, 1974, entitled "No and Yes," discusses the matter of trade with two nations and the attitude of the State Department. The two nations are the Soviet Union and Rhodesia.

The State Department advocates trade concessions to Soviet Russia and this very same State Department advocates an embargo on trade with Rhodesia.

This embargo on trade with Rhodesia is advocated even though such an embargo would mean that the United States would become dependent on Communist Russia for a vital war material; namely, chrome. All of U.S. needs must be imported.

There are only three nations in the world with large deposits of chromium and those nations are Rhodesia, South Africa, and Russia. The largest of all the deposits are in Rhodesia.

When Rhodesian chrome is embargoed, that means that the United States must rely for the largest part of its chrome needs upon Russia; yet, it is because of Russia, it is because of the potential threat to world peace posed by Russia, that the American taxpayers are spending some $80 billion a year for defense.

Thus, to many Americans, the attitude of the State Department makes little sense. It says on the one hand that we want to embargo trade with Rhodesia, which by no conceivable stretch of the imagination can be considered a threat to world peace but, on the other hand, we want to give special trade concessions to Soviet Russia which we all recognize is a potential threat to world peace.

Incidentally, I put this question to Secretary of State Kissinger when he appeared to testify before the Committee on Finance.

I said this to him:

In your judgment, is Rhodesia a threat to world peace?

Secretary Kissinger's reply was one word, "No."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the editorial from the Richmond Times-Dispatch printed in the RECORD. The editor of the editorial page is Edward Grimsley. The chairman and publisher is David Tennant Bryan.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NO AND YES

In determining its official views toward other countries, should the United States be decisively influenced by their domestic characteristics and internal governmental policies? Well, no and yes. "No" in the case of the Soviet Union but "yes" in the case of tiny Rhodesia. This, in effect, is what Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger admitted to the Senate Finance Committee recently in response to a series of piercing questions from Virginia Sen. Harry F. Byrd, Jr.

Mr. Kissinger had appeared before the committee to support a trade bill that would give most favored nation treatment to Russia, a concession opopsed by some congressmen who object to the Soviet Union's refusal to permit its Jewish citizens to emigrate more freely. Calling the concession a "practical necessity," the secretary argued that Russia's internal policies should not be a decisive factor in the formulation of Soviet-American trade arrangements.

At that point, Mr. Kissinger found himself in a trap skillfully set by Senator Byrd. As all Americans should be, the senator is offended by the duplicitous attitudes of those—including the Nixon administration—who simultaneously favor trade concessions for Russia, one of the world's most oppressive dictatorships and a continuing menace to international peace, and a trade embargo against Rhodesia, which is a threat to no other country. Sponsored by the United Nations, the embargo was conceived as punishment against Rhodesia primarily because of its internal racial policies. Having heard the secretary of state insist that Russia's internal affairs should not influence American policy toward the Soviet Union, Senator Byrd was eager to hear his justification for support of the embargo against Rhodesia.

"You recognize our action in embargoing trade with Rhodesia as being just?" Senator Byrd asked Mr. Kissinger.

"Yes."

"Do you regard the Soviet Union as being governed by a tight dictatorship, by a very few persons over a great number of individuals?" Senator Byrd continued.

"I consider the Soviet Union, yes, as a dictatorship of an oligarchic nature, that is, of a small number of people in the Politburo," replied Mr. Kissinger.

"In your judgment, is Rhodesia a threat to world peace?"

"No," answered Mr. Kissinger.

"In your judgment, is Russia a potential threat to world peace?"

'I think," said the secretary, "the Soviet Union has the military capacity to disturb the peace, yes."

"In your judgment, does Russia have a more democratic government than Rhodesia?"

"No," Mr. Kissinger conceded.

One can almost see the secretary squirming in the witness chair. As the questioning continued, Mr. Kissinger finally offered a flimsy excuse for the embargo. It was not motivated by Rhodesia's internal policies, he said, so much as by "the fact that a minority has established a separate state . . ."

"Well, then," Senator Byrd concluded, 'you say it is because Rhodesia seeks to establish her own government. Is that not what the United States did in 1776?'"

Despite Mr. Kissinger's efforts to find other reasons to justify the boycotting against Rhodesia, the truth is that it was inspired by foreign disapproval of Rhodesia's internal racial policies. Though blacks constitute an overwhelming majority of Rhodesia's population, its government is controlled by whites and is accused of pursuing discriminatory policies against blacks. But many of the very same people who castigate the Rhodesian government for its racial policies endorse diplomatic and economic intimacy with Russia, which keeps all of its people under the brutal heel of totalitarianism.

Whether Rhodesia's internal policies are good or bad, they are Rhodesia's own business. Besides, if "practical necessity" is, as Mr. Kissinger suggested, a paramount factor in shaping American foreign policy, there is one compelling practical reason the United States should not support an embargo against Rhodesia. It is a major source of chrome, a metal vital to the American defense industry in particular and to our domestic economy in general. Denied Rhodesian chrome as a result of the embargo, we become dependent upon—of all nations—Russia, the major potential threat to America's survival.

THE PANAMA CANAL

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, the Virginia Legislature has adopted a resolution urging the Congress of the United States to—

Reject any encroachment upon the sovereignty of the United States of America over the Panama Canal and insist that the terms of the Hay-Bunau-Varilla Treaty of 1903 as subsequently amended be adhered to and retained.

The patrons of this resolution are Senators Barnes of Tazewell County; Campbell of Hanover County; Means of Caroline County; and Willey of Richmond city. Senator Willey, incidentally, is the President pro tempore of the Virginia Senate—and the senior member of that body.

Senators Hopkins of Roanoke city; Aldhizer of Rockingham County; Buchanan of Wise County; Canada of Virginia Beach; Burruss of Lynchburg; Truban of Shenandoah County; Anderson of Halifax County; Thornton of Salem; Goode of Franklin County; Townsend of Chesapeake; Warren of Bristol; Parkerson of Henrico County; and Michael of Charlottesville.

The resolution was agreed to by the Senate on February 22, 1974, and by the House of Delegates on March 8, 1974.

I applaud the action of the Virginia Legislature. In my judgment, this represents the thinking of the people of Virginia.

It is unfortunate that the State Department seems determined to give away U.S. sovereignty over the Panama Canal, which sovereignty was obtained in perpetuity by treaty 71 years ago.

The Secretary of State in a ceremony in Panama recently encouraged the Panamians to believe that the United States is committed to a change in the treaty which would eliminate U.S. sovereign perpetuity.

If the State Department had its way, such would happen.

But any change in the current treaty with Panama must be submitted to the Senate for approval.

The Senate, in my judgment, will not approve such a change as has been agreed to by Secretary Kissinger.

It is important to note that a resolution has been signed by 34 Senators, pledging that they will not support such a proposal.

That means that any such proposal is dead, because any change in the treaty with Panama requires a two-thirds vote. I submit that this body will not vote by a two-thirds majority to give away the Panama Canal.

I believe that the State Department is out of touch with reality when it believes the Senate will give two-thirds approval to changing a treaty to eliminate U.S. sovereignty over the Panama Canal.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the sooner the Panamanians understand this, the better off both countries will be.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CRANSTON). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

AMENDMENT NO. 1067

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1067.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 3, beginning with line 6, strike out through line 4 on page 25 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"TITLE V—PUBLIC FINANCING OF FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGNS

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 501. When used in this title—

"(1) 'candidate' means an individual who seeks nomination for election, or election, to Federal office, whether or not he is elected, and, for purposes of this paragraph, an individual seeks nomination for election, or election, if he (A) takes the action necessary under the law of a State to qualify himself for nomination for election, or election, to Federal office, (B) receives contributions or makes expenditures, or (C) gives his consent for any other person to receive contributions or make expenditures for the purpose of bringing about his nomination for election, or election, to such office;

"(2) 'Commission' means the Federal Election Commission established under section 502;

"(3) 'contribution'—

"(A) means a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value, made for the purpose of—

"(i) influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office or as a Presidential or Vice-Presidential elector; or

"(ii) influencing the result of a primary election held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President;

"(B) means a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution for any such purpose;

"(C) means a transfer of funds between political committees; and

"(D) means the payment, by any person other than a candidate or political committee, of compensation for the personal services of another person which are rendered to such candidate or committee without charge for any such purpose; but

"(E) does not include—

"(i) (except as provided in subparagraph (D)) the value of personal services rendered to or for the benefit of the candidate by an individual who receives no compensation from any person for rendering such service;

"(ii) payments under section 509;

"(iii) newsstories, commentaries, and editorials on broadcast stations or in newspapers, magazines, and other periodical publications (other than a publication of a political party, a political committee as defined in section 591(d) of title 18, United States Code, a candidate or an agent of any of the foregoing); non-partisan registration and get-out-the-vote activity; communications by an established membership organization (other than a political party) to its members, or by a corporation (not organized for purely political purposes) to its stockholders;

"(4) 'expenditure' means—

"(A) a purchase, payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money or anything of value, made for the purpose of—

"(i) influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, or as a Presidential and Vice-Presidential elector; or

"(ii) influencing the result of a primary held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President;

"(B) a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make an expenditure; and

"(C) a transfer of funds between political committees;

"(5) 'Federal office' means the office of President of the United States or of Senator or Representative in the Congress of the United States;

"(6) 'general election' means any election, including special elections, held for the election of a candidate to Federal office;

"(7) 'major party' means a political party which, in the preceding general election nominated a candidate who—

"(A) received, as the candidate of that party, 25 percent or more of the total number of popular votes cast for all candidates for election to that office; or

"(B) received, as the candidate of that party, the largest number or second largest number of popular votes cast for any candidate for election to that office;

"(8) 'minor party' means a political party which is not a major political party;

"(9) 'political party' means a committee, association, or organization the primary purpose of which is to select and to support individuals who seek election to Federal, State, and local office as the candidate of that committee, association, or organization;

"(10) 'primary election' means (A) an election, including a runoff election, held for the nomination of a candidate for election to Federal office, (B) a convention or caucus of a political party held for the nomination of such a candidate, (C) an election held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party, and (D) an election held for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President;

"(11) 'Representative' includes Delegates or Resident Commissioners to the Congress of the United States; and

"(12) 'State' means each State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and any territory or possession of the United States.

"FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION

"SEC. 502. (a)(1) There is established, as an independent establishment of the executive branch of the Government of the United States, a commission to be known as the Federal Election Commission.

"(2) The Commission shall be composed of seven members who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Of the seven members—

"(A) two shall be chosen from among individuals recommended by the President pro tempore of the Senate, upon the recommendations of the majority leader of the Senate and the minority leader of the Senate; and

"(B) two shall be chosen from among individuals recommended by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, upon the recommendations of the majority leader of the House and the minority leader of the House. The two members appointed under subparagraph (A) shall not be affiliated with the same political party; nor shall the two members appointed under subparagraph (B). Of the three members not appointed under such subparagraphs, no more than two shall be affiliated with the same political party.

"(3) Members of the Commission shall serve for terms of seven years, except that, or the members first appointed—

"(A) two of the members not appointed under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for terms ending on the April 30th first occurring more than six months after the date on which they are appointed;

"(B) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2)(A) shall be appointed for a term ending one year after the April 30 on which the term of the member referred to in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph ends;

"(C) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2)(B) shall be appointed for a term ending two years thereafter;

"(D) one of the members not appointed under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for a term ending three years thereafter;

"(E) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2)(A) shall be appointed for a term ending four years thereafter; and

"(F) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2)(B) shall be appointed for a term ending five years thereafter.

"(4) Members shall be chosen on the basis of their maturity, experience, integrity, impartiality, and good judgment. A member may be reappointed to the Commission only once.

"(5) An individual appointed to fill a vacancy occurring other than by the expiration of a term of office shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member he succeeds. Any vacancy occurring in the office of a member of the Commission shall be filled in the manner in which that office was originally filled.

"(6) The Commission shall elect a Chairman and a Vice Chairman from among its members for a term of two years. The Chairman and the Vice Chairman shall not be affiliated with the same political party. The Vice Chairman shall act as Chairman in the absence or disability of the Chairman, or in the event of a vacancy in that office.

"(b) A vacancy in the Commission shall not impair the right of the remaining members to exercise all the powers of the Commission and four members thereof shall constitute a quorum.

"(c) The Commission shall have an official seal which shall be judicially noticed.

"(d) The Commission shall at the close of each fiscal year report to the Congress and to the President concerning the action it has taken; the names, salaries, and duties of all individuals in its employ and the money it has disbursed; and shall make such further reports on the matters within its jurisdiction and such recommendations for further legislation as may appear desirable.

"(e) The principal office of the Commission shall be in or near the District of Columbia but it may meet or exercise any or all its powers in any State.

"(f) The Commission shall appoint a General Counsel and an Executive Director to serve at the pleasure of the Commission. The General Counsel shall be the chief legal officer of the Commission. The Executive Director shall be responsible for the administrative operations of the Commission and shall perform such other duties as may be delegated or assigned to him from time to time by regulations or orders of the Commission. The Commission shall not delegate the making of regulations regarding elections to the Executive Director.

"(g) The Commission may obtain the services of experts and consultants in accordance with section 3109 of title 5, United States Code.

"(h) In carrying out its responsibilities under this title, the Commission shall, to the fullest extent practicable, avail itself of the assistance, including personnel and facilities, of the General Accounting Office and the Department of Justice. The Comptroller General and the Attorney General are authorized to make available to the Comsion such personnel, facilities, and other assistance, with or without reimbursement, as the Commission may request.

"(i) The provisions of section 7324 of title 5, United States Code, shall apply to members of the Commission notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (d)(3) of such section.

"(j)(1) When the Commission submits any budget estimate or request to the President or the Office of Management and Budget, it shall concurrently transmit a copy of that estimate or request to the Congress.

"(2) Whenever the Commission submits any legislative recommendations, or testimony, or comments on legislation requested by the Congress or by any Member of Congress to the President or the Office of Management and Budget, it shall concurrently transmit a copy thereof to the Congress or to the Member requesting the same. No officer or agency of the United States shall have any authority to require the Commission to submit its legislative recommendations, or testimony, or comments on legislation, to any officer or agency of the United States for approval, comments, or review, prior to the submission of such recommendations, testimony, or comments to the Congress.

"(k) In verifying signatures on petitions required under this title, the Commission shall avail itself of the assistance, including personnel and facilities, of State and local governments to the extent those governments have already established programs to verify signatures on petitions. The Commission may make agreements with State and local governments to reimburse those governments for such assistance.

"POWERS OF COMMISSION

"SEC. 503. (a) The Commission shall have the power—

"(1) to make, pursuant to the provisions of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code, any rules necessary to carry out its functions under this Act, including rules defining terms used in this Act and rules establishing procedures for gathering and certifying signatures on petitions required under this title;

"(2) to make rules governing the manner of its operations, organization, and personnel;

"(3) to require, by special or general orders, any person to submit in writing reports and answers to questions the Commission may prescribe; and those reports and answers shall be submitted to the Commission within such reasonable period and under oath or otherwise as the Commission may determine;

"(4) to administer oaths;

"(5) to require by subpena, signed by the Chairman or the Vice Chairman, the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all documentary evidence relating to the execution of its duties;

"(6) in any proceeding or investigation, to order testimony to be taken by deposition before any person designated by the Commission who has the power to administer oaths, and to compel testimony and the production of evidence in the same manner as authorized under paragraph (5) of this subsection;

"(7) to pay witnesses the same fees and mileage as are paid in like circumstances in the courts of the United States;

"(8) to initiate (through civil proceedings and through presentations to Federal grand juries), prosecute, defend, or appeal any court action in the name of the Commission for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this title and of sections 602, 608, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, and 617 of title 18, United States Code, and to recover any amounts payable to the Secretary of the Treasury under section 510, through its General Counsel; and

"(9) to delegate any of its functions or powers, other than the power to issue subpenas under paragraph (5) to any officer of the Commission.

"(b) Any United States district court within the jurisdiction of which any inquiry is carried on, may, upon petition by the Commission—

"(1) in case of refusal to obey a subpena or order of the Commission issued under subsection (a) of this section, issue an order requiring compliance therewith; and any failure to obey the order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof; and

"(2) upon the request of the Commission, convene a special Federal grand jury to investigate possible violations of this Act.

"(c) No person shall be subject to civil liability to any person (other than the Commission or the United States) for disclosing information at the request of the Commission.

"(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commission shall be the primary civil and criminal enforcement agency for violations of the provisions of this title, and of sections 602, 608, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, and 617 of title 18, United States Code. The Attorney General shall prosecute violations of this Act or those sections of title 18 only upon the request of the Commission.

"(e) Upon application made by any individual holding Federal office, any candidate, or any political committee, the Commission, through its General Counsel, shall provide, within a reasonable period of time, an advisory opinion whether any specific transaction or activity may constitute a violation of any provision of this title or of any provision of title 18, United States Code, over which the Commission has primary jurisdiction under subsection (d).

"ELIGIBILITY FOR FINANCING

"SEC. 504. (a) Each political party and candidate shall—

"(1) agree to obtain and to furnish to the Commission any evidence it may request about the expenditures by that party or candidate;

"(2) agree to keep and to furnish to the Commission any records, books, and other information it may request; and

"(3) agree to an audit and examination by the Commission under section 509 and to pay any amounts required under section 509.

"(b) Each political party and candidate shall certify to the Commission that—

"(1) the candidate will not incur expenditures greater than the limitations in section 506; and

"(2) no contributions greater than the limitations on contributions in section 615 of title 18, United States Code, have been or will be accepted by the party or candidate.

"(c) To be eligible to have the Commission make any payments under section 508, a candidate shall file all agreements and certifications required under subsections (a) and (b) with the Commission before the date of the relevant election at the time required by the Commission.

"(d) To be eligible to have the Commission make any payments in connection with a major party primary election campaign under section 508, a candidate who seeks the nomination of that party must in addition to the requirements of subsection (c), file with the Commission not later than two hundred and ten days before the date of that primary election—

"(1) a declaration that the candidate is seeking the nomination of a named major party for election to the office of Representative and a petition in support of his candidacy signed by a total number of people in excess of 2 per centum of the voting age population (as certified under section 506(f)) of the congressional district in which he seeks election; or

"(2) a declaration that the candidate is seeking the nomination of a named major party for election to the office of Representative in a State which is entitled to only one Representative, to the office of Senator, to the office of Vice President, or to the office of President, and a petition in support of his candidacy signed by a total number of people in excess of 1 per centum of the voting age population (as certified under section 506 (f)) of the geographic area in which the primary election for that office is held.

"(e)(1) No candidate is eligible under subsection (d) until the Commission verifies that the petition filed by the candidate meets the requirements of subsection (d) and that—

"(A) the signatures on the petition are valid;

"(B) the individuals who signed the petition are eighteen years of age or older;

"(C) the individuals who signed the petition live in the geographic area in which the general election for the office the candidate seeks is held or are qualified to vote in the primary election under the laws of the State in which that election is held; and

"(D) no individual who signed the petition has signed a petition required under this section of any other candidate for the same office.

"(2) The Commission shall approve or disapprove any petition filed under this subsection not later than one hundred and eighty days before the date of the primary election in connection with which that petition is filed.

"(f) To be eligible to have the Commission make any payments under section 508, a political party must, in addition to the requirements of subsection (c), file with the Commission, at the time and in the manner the Commission prescribes by rule, a declaration that the political party will nominate candidates who will actively campaign for election in the next regular general election.

"ENTITLEMENTS

"SEC. 505. (a)(1) A candidate who is eligible for Federal financing of his campaign under section 504 is entitled to payment by the Commission of expenditures he incurs in connection with his campaign for nomination by a major political party.

"(2) No candidate who seeks the nomination of a major party is entitled to payment of his expenditures by the Commission under this subsection in excess of an amount which is equal to the amount the candidate is permitted to incur in connection with his primary election campaign under section 506(a)(1) or (b), as applicable.

"(b)(1) Every candidate nominated by a political party who is eligible for Federal financing of his campaign under section 504 is entitled to payment by the Commission of expenditures he incurs in connection with his general election campaign.

"(A) No candidate of a major party is entitled to payment of his expenditures by the Commission under this subsection in excess of an amount which is equal to the amount the candidate is permitted to incur in connection with his campaign for election under section 506(a)(2) or (b).

"(B) No candidate of a minor party is entitled to payment of his expenditures by the Commission under this subsection in excess of an amount which is equal to the greater of—

"(i) an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of payments to which a candidate of a major party for the same office is entitled under this subsection as the total number of popular votes received by the candidate of that minor party for that office in the preceding general election bears to the average number of popular votes received by the candidate of a major party for that office in the preceding general election; or

"(ii) an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of payments to which a candidate of a major party for the same office is entitled under this subsection as the total number of popular votes received by the candidate in the current general election bears to the average number of popular votes received by the candidate of a major party for that office in the current general election.

"(2)(A) Every independent candidate who is eligible for Federal financing of his campaign under section 504 is entitled to payment by the Commission of expenditures he incurs in connection with his general election campaign.

"(B) No independent candidate is entitled to payment of his expenditures by the Commission under this subsection in excess of an amount which is equal to the greater of—

"(i) an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of payment to which a candidate of a major party for the same office is entitled under this subsection as the total number of popular votes received by the independent candidate as a candidate for that office in the preceding general election bears to the average number of popular votes received by the candidate of a major party for that office in the preceding general election; or

"(ii) an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of payment to which a candidate of a major party for the same office is entitled under this subsection as the total number of popular votes received by the independent candidate in the current general election bears to the average number of popular votes received by the candidate of a major party for the same office in the current general election.

"(c) A minor party candidate or an independent candidate who (1) was the candidate of a major party for the same office in the preceding general election, (2) received the largest or second largest number of popular votes cast for a candidate for that office in the preceding general election, or (3) received more than 25 per centum of the total number of popular votes cast in the preceding general election for that office shall be considered to be the candidate of a major party for purposes of this section.

"(d)(1) Every political party which is eligible for Federal financing under section 504 is entitled to payment by the Commission of expenditures it incurs in connection with Federal election activities such as voter registration drives, get-out-the-vote drives, and nominating conventions.

"(2) No political party is entitled to payment of its expenditures by the Commission under this subsection in excess of—

"(A) 20 per centum of the amount of payment by the Commission to which the Presidential candidate of that party is entitled under subsection (b), in any year in which a regular quadrennial Presidential election is held; or

"(B) 15 per centum of the amount of payment by the Commission to which the Presidential candidate of that party is entitled during a regular quadrennial Presidential election year under subsection (b) in any other year.

"(e) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (b), no minor party candidate or independent candidate is entitled to payment by the Commission of any expenditures under this section which, when added to the total amount of contributions received by him in connection with his campaign, exceed the amount of expenditures he may incur in connection with that campaign under the provisions of section 506.

"EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS

"SEC. 506. (a)(1) Except to the extent that such amounts are changed under subsection (e), no candidate, other than a candidate for the office of President, may incur any expenditure in connection with his primary election campaign in excess of—

"(A) in the case of a candidate who seeks nomination for election to the office of Senator, the greater of—

"(i) 15 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (f)) of the State in which he seeks nomination for election; or

"(ii) $175,000;

"(B) in the case of a candidate who seeks nomination for election to the office of Representative—

"(i) 25 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (f)) of the congressional district in which he seeks nomination for election; or

"(ii) the limitation under subparagraph (A) if the State in which he seeks nomination is entitled to only one Representative.

"(2) Except to the extent that such amounts are increased under subsection (e) no candidate, other than a candidate for election to the office of President, may incur any expenditure in connection with his general election campaign in excess of—

"(A) in the case of a candidate who is seeking election to the office of Senator, the greater of—

"(i) 20 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (f)) of the State in which he seeks election; or

"(ii) $250,000;

"(B) in the case of a candidate who is seeking election to the office of Representative—

"(i) 30 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (f)) of the State in which he seeks election; or

"(ii) the limitation under subparagraph (A) if the State in which he seeks election is entitled to only one Representative.

"(b)(1) No candidate for nomination for election, to the office of President may incur with his campaign in excess of the amount which a candidate for nomination for election, or election, to the office of Senator (or for nomination for election, to the office of Delegate, in the case of the District of Columbia) may incur within that State in connection with his campaign for that nomination or election.

"(2) No candidate for election to the office of President may incur any expenditure in connection with his general election campaign in excess of 20 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (f)) of the United States.

"(3) The Commission shall prescribe rules under which any expenditure incurred by a candidate who seeks nomination for election to the office of President for use in two or more States shall be attributed to that candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State based on the number of persons in each State who can reasonably be expected to be reached by that expenditure.

"(4) The Commission shall prescribe rules under which a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President may authorize his national campaign committee to incur expenditures in connection with his national campaign in an amount not in excess of 10 per centum of the amount of expenditures which he may incur in connection with his primary election campaign in a State under this section. The expenditure limitation applicable to that candidate for such campaign in that State shall be reduced by an amount equal to the amount the candidate authorizes under this section.

"(c)(1) No candidate who is unopposed in a primary election may incur any expenditure which is in excess of an amount which is equal to 20 per centum of the limitation applicable to that candidate under subsection (a) or (b) of this section.

"(2) A candidate in a primary or general election runoff election shall have an expenditure limitation which is 50 per centum of the limitation in subsection (a) or (b) of this section, as applicable.

"(3) A candidate who seeks the nomination of a political party which selects its nominee by means of a convention or caucus system which does not include a popular election or elections shall have an expenditure limitation which is 10 per centum of the limitation in subsection (a) or (b) of this section, as applicable.

"(d)(1) Expenditures incurred on behalf of any candidate are, for the purpose of this section, considered to be incurred by that candidate.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection, an expenditure is considered to be incurred on behalf of a candidate if it is incurred by—

"(A) an agent of the candidate for the purposes of incurring any campaign expenditure,

"(B) any person authorized or requested by the candidate to incur an expenditure on his behalf, or

"(C) in the case of the candidate of a political party for President, the candidate of that party for Vice President, or his agent, or any person he authorizes to incur an expenditure on his behalf.

"(e)(1) For purposes of paragraph (2)—

"(A) 'price index' means the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average—published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and

"(B) 'base period' means the calendar year 1973.

"(2) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1975), as necessary data become available from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register the percentage difference between the price index for the twelve months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each amount determined under subsections (a), (b), and (c) shall be changed by such percentage difference. Each amount so changed shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

"(f) During the first week of January 1975, and every subsequent year, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, of each State, and of each congressional district as of the first day of July next preceding the date of certification. The term 'voting age population' means resident population, eighteen years of age or older.

"PETITION DRIVES

"SEC. 507. (a) Except to the extent that such amounts are changed under subsection (d)—

"(1) no candidate who seeks a major party nomination for election to the office of Representative may incur any expenditures in connection with his petition drive to meet the requirements of section 504 which exceed an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under section 506(f) of the congressional district in which he seeks election; or

"(2) no candidate who seeks a major party nomination for election to the office of Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, Senator, or President, may incur any expenditures in connection with his petition drive to meet the requirements of section 504 which exceed an amount equal to the greater of—

"(A) 1 cent multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under section 506(f)) of the geographic region in which he seeks election; or

"(B) $7,7500.

"(b)(1) No person may make a contribution to any candidate for use in connection with the petition drive of that candidate to meet the requirements of section 504 which, when added to all other contributions made by that person to that candidate in connection with the same petition drive, exceeds $100.

"(2) No candidate may knowingly accept a contribution from any person made in connection with the petition drive of that candidate which, when added to all other contributions from that person made in connection with that petition drive, exceeds $100. For purposes of this paragraph, a contribution accepted by any person who makes any expenditures in connection with the petition drive of a candidate is considered to be accepted by that candidate.

"(c) No candidate may make any expenditure or accept any contribution in connection with his petition drive except during the period beginning three hundred days before the date of the primary election of the major party whose nomination the candidate seeks and ending two hundred and ten days before that date.

"(d)(1) Each candidate who files a petition with the Commission under section 504 shall report to the Commission the amount of each contribution he receives in connection with his petition drive, the identity of each contributor, and any other information the Commission requires at the time and in the manner the Commission prescribes.

"(2) If a candidate meets the requirements of section 504, the Commission shall pay an amount to each person who contributed to the petition drive of that candidate an amount equal to the contribution made by that person under subsection (b) to that candidate.

"(e) Each amount under subsection (a) shall be changed at the beginning of each calendar year by the percentage difference between price indexes as determined under section 506(f). Each amount so changed shall be the amount in effect for that calendar year.

"PAYMENTS BY THE COMMISSION

"SEC. 508. (a)(1) There is established on the books of the Treasury of the United States a fund to be known as the Federal Election Campaign Fund.

"(2) There are authorized to be appropriated to the fund such amounts as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this title.

"(3) On the day after the effective date of this title, the Secretary of the Treasury shall transfer to the fund any moneys in the Presidential Election Campaign Fund established under section 9006 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

"(4) The Secretary of the Treasury may transfer to the general fund of the Treasury any amounts from the Federal Election Campaign Fund which he determines, after consultation with the Commission, are in excess of the amounts which are necessary to carry out the provisions of this title.

"(b) The Secretary of the Treasury shall transfer to the Commission such amounts as the Commission certifies to the Secretary from time to time are necessary to make payments under this section.

"(c)(1) The Commission shall create on its books an account for each political party and candidate eligible for payments under section 504.

"(2) The Commission shall allocate the funds it receives from the Secretary of the Treasury under paragraph (1) among the accounts of each political party and candidate according to the amount to which each party and candidate is entitled under section 505.

"(3) The Commission shall credit all contributions which a political party or candidate sends to the Commission under section 615 of title 18, United States Code, to the account of that party or candidate.

"(d)(1) A candidate who seeks the nomination of a major political party may contract for goods, services, or other expenditures in connection with his primary election campaign only during the period beginning one hundred and eighty days before the date of the primary election of that party and ending on the date of that primary election.

"(2) A candidate may contract for goods, services, or other expenditures in connection with his general election campaign only during the period beginning on the date on which he is nominated by a major political party for that election and ending on the date of that general election. A minor party or independent candidate may contract for such goods and services only during the period beginning one hundred and eighty days before the date of the general election, or on the date on which a major party nominates a candidate for the office the minor party or independent candidate seeks, whichever date is earlier, and ending on the date of the general election.

"(3) A political party may contract for goods, services, or other expenditures in connection with its Federal election campaign activities only during the period beginning two years before the date of the next general election in which it will nominate candidates and ending on the date of that general election.

"(4) The Commission may void any contract made by a party or candidate under this subsection which is fraudulent or illegel before performance of that contract begins according to procedures it prescribes by rule.

"(e)(1) The Commission shall pay all expenditures incurred by each political party or candidate by contracts created by that party or candidate under subsection (d). The Commission may not pay any amount in excess of the amount to which that political party or candidate is entitled under section 505.

"(2) If a candidate becomes entitled to an increased amount of payments under section

505 (b)(1)(B) or (b)(2)(B) because of the number of votes he receives in an election, the Commission shall pay the amount of that increase in payments to which the candidate is entitled on a pro rata basis directly to the persons who contributed to that candidate in connection with that election.

"(f)(1) The Commission shall make all payments under this section directly to the person with whom the political party or candidate contracts for goods, services, or other expenditures. Except as provided in paragraph (2), no political party or candidate shall pay any expenditures which it or he incurs in connection with a Federal election campaign except through payments by the Commission under this title.

"(2) A candidate may maintain a petty cash fund out of which he, or one individual he authorizes in writing, may make expenditures not in excess of $25 to any person in connection with a single purchase or transaction. A candidate for Vice President or President may maintain one petty cash fund in each State. Records and reports of petty cash disbursements shall be kept and furnished to the Commission in the form and manner the Commission prescribes.

"EXAMINATIONS AND AUDITS; REPAYMENTS

"SEC. 509. (a) After each Federal election, the Commission shall conduct a thorough examination and audit of the expenditures incurred by every candidate.

"(b)(1) If the Commission determines that any portion of the payments it makes for a political party or candidate under section 508 was in excess of the aggregate amount of the payments to which the party or candidate was entitled under section 505, it shall so notify that party or candidate, and the party or candidate shall pay to the Secretary of the Treasury an amount equal to the excess amount.

"(2) If the Commission determines that any amount of any payment made by the Commission for a political party or candidate under section 508 was used for any purpose other than—

"(A) to pay expenditures, or

"(B) to repay loans the proceeds of which were used, or otherwise to restore funds (other than contributions to pay expenditures which were received and expended) which were used, to pay expenditures, it shall notify the party or candidate of the amount so used, and the party or candidate shall pay to the Secretary of the Treasury an amount equal to such amount.

"(3) If the Commission determines that a major party candidate for whom it has made payments under section 508 received—

"(A) a total number of popular votes in the primary election, in connection with which the Commission made payments for that candidate which is less than 15 per centum of the total number of popular votes cast for all candidates seeking the same office that candidate seeks in that primary election;

"(B) a total number of delegate votes in the nominating convention in connection with which the Commission made payments for that candidate which is less than 15 per centum of the total number of delegates votes cast for all candidates seeking the same office that candidate seeks in that convention; or

"(C) a total number of popular votes in the general election in connection with which the Commission made payments for that candidate which is less than 25 per centum of the total number of popular votes cast for all candidates seeking the same office that candidate seeks in that general election, it shall notify that candidate and the candidate shall pay to the Secretary of the Treasury an amount equal to the total amount of payments which the Commission made for him under section 508.

"(4) No payment shall be required from a political party or candidate under this subsection in excess of the total amount of all payments by the Commission for that party or candidate under section 508.

"(c) No notification shall be made by the Commission under subsection (b) with respect to a Federal election more than three years after the day of the election.

"(d) A candidate for whom the Commission has made payments under section 508 in an amount which is less than 25 per centum of the amount to which that candidate is entitled for a primary or general election under section 505 may withdrawn as a candidate in that primary or general election at any time up to the forty-fifth day before the date of the primary election, or the thirtieth day before the date of the general election, in connection with which the Commission made those payments. A candidate who withdraws under this subsection shall pay to the Secretary of the Treasury an amount equal to 50 per centum of the payments which the Commission made for him under section 508.

"(e) All payments received by the Secretary under subsections (b) and (d) shall be deposited by him in the fund.

"REPORTS TO CONGRESS; INVESTIGATIONS; RECORDS

"SEC. 510. (a) The Commission shall, as soon as practicable after each Federal election, submit a full report to the Senate and House of Representatives setting forth—

"(1) the expenditures incurred by each political party and candidate which received a payment under section 508 in connection with that election;

"(2) the amounts paid by it under section 508 for that political party or that candidate; and

"(3) the amount of payments, if any, required from that political party or candidate under section 509, and the reasons for each payment required.

"(b) The Commission may conduct examinations and audits (in addition to the examinations and audits under section 509), investigations, and require the keeping and submission of any books, records, and information necessary to carry out the functions and duties imposed on it by this title.

"JUDICIAL REVIEW

"SEC. 511. (a) Any agency action by the Commission made under the provisions of this Act shall be subject to review by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit upon petition filed in such court by any interested person. Any petition filed pursuant to this section shall be filed within thirty days after the agency action by the Commission for which review is sought.

"(b) The Commission, a political party, a candidate, and individuals eligible to vote in an election for Federal office are authorized to institute any action, including actions for declaratory judgment or injunctive relief, which are appropriate to implement any provision of this title.

"(c) The provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, apply to judicial review of any agency action, as defined in section 551 of title 5, United States Code, by the Commission.

"PENALTIES

"SEC. 512. (a) Any person who violates the provisions of section 506, 507, or 508 of this title shall be fined not more than $50,000, or imprisoned for not more than five years, or both.

"(b)(1) It is unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully—

"(A) to furnish any false, fictitious, or fraudulent evidence, books, or information to the Commission under this title, or to include in any evidence, books, or information so furnished any misrepresentation of a material fact, or to falsify or conceal any evidence, books, or information relevant to an examination and audit by the Commission under this title; or

"(B) to fail to furnish to the Commission any records, books, or information required by him for purposes of this title.

"(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $50,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

"(c)(1) It is unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully to give or accept any kickback or any illegal payment in connection with any expenditure incurred by a candidate or political party which the Commission pays under section 508.

"(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $50,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

"(d)(1) Any person who violates any provisions of this title or of section 602, 608, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, or 617 of title 18, United States Code, may in addition to any other penalty, be assessed a civil penalty by the Commission under paragraph (2) of this subsection of not more than $10,000 for each violation. Each violation of this title and each day of noncompliance with an order of the Commission shall constitute a separate offense. In determining the amount of the penalty the Commission shall consider the person's history of previous violations, the appropriateness of such penalty to the financial resources of the person charged, the gravity of the violation, and the demonstrated good faith of the person charged in attempting to achieve rapid compliance after notification of a violation.

"(2) A civil penalty under this subsection shall be assessed only after the person charged with a violation has been given an opportunity for a hearing and the Commission has determined, by decision which includes findings of fact, that a violation did occur, and the amount of the penalty. Any hearing under this section shall be held in accordance with section 554 of title 5, United States Code.

"(3) If the person against whom a civil penalty is assessed fails to pay the penalty, the Commission may file a petition of enforcement of its order assessing the penalty in any appropriate district court of the United States. The petition shall designate the person against whom the order is sought to be enforced as the respondent. A copy of the petition shall forthwith be sent by registered or certified mail to the respondent and his attorney of record, and thereupon the Commission shall certify and file in such court the record upon which such order sought to be enforced was issued. The court shall have jurisdiction to enter a judgment enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside in whole or in part the order and decision of the Commission or it may remand the proceedings to the Commission for such further action as it may direct. The court may determine de novo all issues of law but the Commission's findings of fact, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive.

"RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER FEDERAL ELECTION LAWS

"SEC. 513. The Commission shall consult from time to time with the Secretary of the Senate, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, the Federal Communications Commission, and with other Federal officers charged with the administration of laws relating to Federal elections, in order to develop as much consistency and coordination with the administration of those other laws as the provisions of this title permit. The Commission shall use the same or comparable data as that used in the administration of such other election laws whenever possible.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 514. There are authorized to be appropriated to the Commission, for the purpose of carrying out its functions under this title, such funds as are necessary for the fiscal year ending July 30, 1975, and each fiscal year thereafter.".

On page 75, beginning with line 19, strike out through line 8 on page 77 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(a)(1) No person may make a contribution to a major party, to a candidate who seeks the nomination of a major party, or to the candidate of a major party for use in connection with a primary election or general election campaign of that party or candidate.

"(2) No major party candidate who seeks the nomiation of a major party, or candidate of a major party may knowingly accept a contribution from any person in connection with a primary election or general election campaign of that party or candidate. For purposes of this paragraph, a contribution accepted by any political committee which makes any expenditures in connection with the primary or general election campaign of a major party or the candidate of a major party shall be considered to be received by that party or candidate.

"(b) No minor party may accept contributions in connection with its Federal election campaign activities in excess of an amount which, when added to the maximum amount of payments by the Federal Election Commission to which that party is entitled under section 505 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, exceeds the amounts of payments by the Commission to which a major party is entitled under section 505 of such Act.

"(c)(1) No candidate who seeks the nomination of a minor party may accept total contributions in connection with his primary election campaign which exceeds the amount of the limitation on expenditures which applies to a candidate in a primary election campaign under section 506 (a)(1) or (b) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

"(2)(A) A candidate of a minor party or an independent candidate may accept contributions in connection with his general election campaign only during the period beginning one hundred and eighty days before the date of the general election, or on the date on which a major party nominates a candidate for the office the minor party or independent candidate seeks, whichever date is earlier and ending on the date of the general election.

"(B) No candidate of a minor party or independent candidate may accept total contributions which, when added to the maximum amount of payments by the Federal Election Commission to which that candidate is entitled under section 505 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, exceed the limitation on expenditures which applies to a candidate in a general election campaign under section 506 (a)(2) or (b) of such Act.

"(d) For purposes of this section, a contribution accepted by any political committee which makes any expenditures in connection with the primary or general election campaign of a minor party, a candidate who seeks the nomination of a minor party, a minor party candidate, or an independent candidate, is considered to be accepted by that party or candidate.

"(e)(1) No person may make a contribution which, when added to all other contributions made by that person to the same party or candidate in connection with the same campaign, exceeds $100. This $100 limitation applies separately to contributions made in connection with a primary election campaign and with a general election campaign.

"(2) No party or candidate may knowingly accept contributions in connection with its Federal election campaign from any person which, when added to all other contributions accepted by that party or candidate which were made by that person in connection with the same campaign, equals an amount in excess of $100. This $100 limitation applies separately to contributions made in connection with a primary election campaign and with a general election campaign. For purposes of this paragraph a contribution accepted by any political committee which makes any expenditures in connection with the primary or general election campaign of a candidate shall be considered to be accepted by that candidate.

"(f) No person may make a contribution which, when added to all other contributions made by that person to all political parties and candidates in connection with any primary election or general election campaigns during the preceding twelve months, exceeds $1,000.

"(g) All contributions which a party or candidate receives shall be sent to the Federal Election Commission in the manner and with any information about the identity of the contributor which the Commission prescribes by rule.

"(h)(1) No person shall make any expenditure advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate or political party during any calendar year (other than an expenditure made on behalf of a candidate, as defined in section 506(d)(2)) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 which, when added to all other such expenditures made by that person during that year exceeds $1,000.

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1), 'clearly identified' means—

"(A) the candidate or political party is named;

"(B) a photograph or drawing of the candidate appears; or

"(C) the identity of the candidate or political party is apparent by unambiguous reference.

"(3) For purposes of paragraph (1), 'person' does not include a political party.

"(i) For purposes of this section—

"(1) 'contribution' does not include moneys collected for a petition drive under section 507 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971; and

"(2) 'major party' and 'minor party' have the same definitions as under section 501 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971."

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, this amendment is offered as a substitute for title I of the Senate Rules Committee bill (S. 3044) now under consideration, and the amendment is identical to the Comprehensive Election Reform Act (S. 2943) which I introduced in February. The legislation goes beyond the provisions of S. 3044, and far beyond anything previously considered by the Senate, but there is no question that this is the time and the place to again raise the concept of total public financing of Federal elections. It is a proposal to eliminate the dominance of the private dollar in the public's business.

The introduction of this amendment in no way reflects a lack of support for the public financing legislation that Senator HOWARD CANNON and Senator CLAIBORNE PELL have managed so ably over the last week or so. If anything, my support for the Rules Committee bill has grown during the debate as the Senate has considered the arguments of the opponents to public financing.

But the introduction of this amendment does reflect a fundamental belief that S. 3044 does not go far enough. Given the incredible abuse of the political process, given the skepticism and doubt of the American people, a system of public financing that is either partial or optional simply will not be enough.

Over the last few days, the Senate has heard hours of debate over public financing, and in all of that time, we have gotten lost in the complexities of amendments and counterproposals, and there has been a tendency to forget about one central point: the present system of financing political campaigns simply does not work.

It is beyond reform. Like an old tire with too many miles and too many patches, it cannot be repaired. It has to be changed—and that change must include more than partial or optional public financing.

The Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) has argued at length that the public financing proposal now before the Senate has its own problems and infirmities. Perhaps it does, but whatever those problems and infirmities, it is definitely preferable to the current system. As the Clear Rapids Gazette observed in an editorial just yesterday:

> There is no great reassurance in the idea of tax monies paying for the self-centered blandishments of political candidates. But distasteful as the proposal may seem, it beats the daylights out of the present abuse-prone financing system.

And total public financing of political campaigns beats the daylights out of partial and optional public financing of political campaigns.

Total public financing would eliminate many of the questions that the opponents of S. 3044 have raised. There would not be loopholes available for anyone to funnel private money to candidates for public office if only because candidates would have no need for private money. And every citizen would have the same influence, the same access, the same degree of representation from public officials. Each of us could vote, each of us could volunteer in a campaign.

None of us could use money and wealth to buy public office or political influence.

There is an inherent inconsistency in relying on private funds in any way to support election to public office. As long as candidates have to depend on private funds—however large or small the amount—the potential for abuse will remain. And the people know it.

The only way to dissipate their doubt and distrust, the only way to restore faith in the integrity of popular government, is to put public actions beyond the influence of campaign contributors. That requires total public financing of elections, and absolutely no reliance on private contributors.

Mr. President, my amendment would remove the influence of private money in public elections. It is the only proposal which does so. It provides for total Federal financing in primary and general elections for all Federal offices.

It is the only proposal which allows candidates to qualify for public financing in primaries by demonstrating the only legitimate evidence of public support—the petition signatures of registered voters. This is a far more satisfactory and representative way of determining public support than continued reliance on private contributions. All the people should control the access to public offices, not just those who have enough money to devote part of it to politics. And for those people concerned about the chance of public financing attracting too many candidates, the proposal provides that the candidate must obtain a minimum percentage of the vote—to avoid reimbursing the Federal Treasury for the cost of the campaign.

The plan would distribute campaign funds in primaries equally to all candidates who qualify. Everyone should have an equal chance at the public's attraction. Matching and mixed plans of private and public financing simply reinforce, at public expense, the candidate preferences of those with enough money to contribute to political campaigns. The "incumbency advantage" inherent in all matching plans for public financing is significant, and the only way to eliminate it is to eliminate the use of private funds as a measure of public support.

The terrific advantages that incumbents now have over their challengers arise chiefly out of the system of private financing. Incumbents have a built-in advantage in raising campaign funds. Only by eliminating the need to raise private funds can that advantage be substantially reduced and the campaign contest balanced. Matching plans not only fail to reduce the advantage, but tend inevitably to increase it. Decreasing the total amount of private funds required means candidates have to raise less money, but incumbents will always raise it quicker. Putting a ceiling on the size of contributions means the number of contributors is increased.

And here again, incumbents have an enormous advantage because of their network of friends and supporters.

Finally, this proposal provides for effective enforcement of campaign finance laws. Unlike any other bill, it creates a commission which covers all permissible political expenditures—goods, services, and salaries. And it charges them against the candidates' accounts maintained by the commission.

Perhaps the central lesson of Watergate is that we must carefully guard, not only the sources of campaign contributions, but their use. The Commission established in my amendment would police expenditures before they are made, rather than simply audit them after they are made—when it is too late either to prevent the harm or to remedy its consequences. The threat of punishment alone is too weak a deterrent when so much political power is at stake.

The cost of my proposal is necessarily higher than the cost of the committee bill but at most, it will take $250 million a year to fully finance all Federal election campaigns. That amounts to less than one-tenth of 1 percent of the annual budget of this Government. It amounts to less than one-fifth of the cost of one Trident nuclear submarine. It amounts to about $1 a year from every American. It amounts to an awfully small price to pay to restore trust and confidence in our political system, and to return to a government truly responsible to all the people.

Many contend that we must encourage, not discourage, small individual contributions to political campaigns. There is an argument that encouraging small contributions increases participation in the political process.

But only a tiny percentage of the American people now contribute in any amount to political campaigns. Fewer than than 2 percent of those who voted in 1972 contributed to either Presidential campaign, and less than one-half of 1 percent of any constituency ever contribute to an individual candidate. When they do contribute, it is usually by virtue of their wealth and education. If we continue to allow private contributions, whatever the rules or limits, we will inevitably continue to favor that tiny group and discriminate against the vast majority of Americans. I believe very strongly in increasing political participation, but only in a way that allows everyone to participate equally. This proposal would encourage equal involvement—with the provision of an income tax checkoff—and involvement on a volunteer basis where consideration of economic status is not a factor.

Others have suggested that to outlaw private contributions would somehow violate the first amendment right of freedom of expression. But in a number of cases, the U.S. Supreme Court has consistently affirmed the existence of another basic right—the right of citizens to be free of wealth distinctions in the political process—and the court has further implied an affirmative obligation to eliminate the influence of wealth on political campaigns.

Prof. Archibald Cox, whose combination of scholarly and practical knowledge of this issue is unique, made the case convincingly in the March 9, 1974 Saturday Review/World. He wrote:

> The objection is sometimes raised that prohibiting private campaign contributions violates the freedom of speceh guaranteed by the First Amendment. Money is indeed necessary in order to make speech effective. Those of few or modest means can make themselves heard only by pooling their resources. Even so, spending money is one step removed from speech, and the contributor is a second step away because he is using money to promote not his own speech but anothers.
> Nor can it fairly be said that ideas would be suppressed or opportunities for speech be restricted. Everyone would be left free to speak and write as an individual. Except for the very wealthy, everyone would be left free to spend money in disseminating his personal expressions. As for parties and candidates, the public subsidy would merely replace the private contributions. The opportunities to travel, to buy space or time in the media, to leaflet and advertise, would remain. The relative size of expenditures by one or another candidate might be affected, but the First Amendment has never been supposed to guarantee those able to raise the most money the greatest opportunity for organized political expression.

A "constitutional right" to use wealth in the political process is a right that only destroys the rights of others. The elimination of private contributions and the substitution of public financing of political campaigns is both legal and desirable.

In 1976 this country will celebrate its 200th birthday. I hope the Senate passes a bill that will enable us to cleanse politics of the real and perceived corruption that haunts the country, and that will encourage our citizens to renew their faith in the institutions of self-government. That is the only way to enter our third century with heads unbowed by shame, confident in the future. We can not afford to do anything less.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, a summary of my amendment.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMPREHENSIVE ELECTION REFORM ACT OF 1974

Provisions:

CANDIDATES AND ELECTIONS COVERED

President: Primary and general (incorporates Presidential check-off fund)

Congress: primary and general.

TYPE OF FUNDING

Automatic full funding of all qualifying major party candidates with partial funding of minor and independent candidates on basis of vote performance. Campaign bills paid by and through Federal Election Commission.

PARTY ORGANIZATIONS COVERED

National party (major and minor) automatically receives funding in presidential election year of up to 20% of amount allowed its presidential candidates. In all other years, it's up to 15% of that amount. Party may spend public funds for election activities such as voter registration, nominating conventions, get-out-the-vote drives. Bills paid directly by Federal Election Commission.

HOW ADMINISTERED

Seven member Federal Elections Commission, appointed by President with consent of Senate to serve staggered seven year terms. Two recommended by Senate leadership, two by House. No more than four of seven of same political party. Responsible for administering, auditing, enforcing federal campaign finance program. Has full investigative, subpoena, prosecutorial powers. Commission responses to Executive Branch.

Executive Branch prohibited from censoring Commission comments or testimony.

Commission sets up accounting system for each qualified candidate, pays all bills directly, except for petty cash expenses of $25 or less.

AMOUNT OF FUNDING

President: Primary: 15¢ x VAP * in each state; General: 20¢ x VAP in each state.

Senate: Primary: 15¢ x VAP (or $175,000 if greater); General: 20¢ x VAP (or $250,000 if greater).

House: Primary: 25¢ x VAP (or Senate amount if state has only one Congressional district); General: 30¢ x VAP.

HOW QUALIFY

Candidates agrees to file all necessary records and comply with audit requirements, certifying that he or she will not exceed spending and contribution limits.

President: Primary: Petition signatures of 1% of VAP in each primary state must be filed with Commission 210 days before primary, to be validated by Commission within 30 days.

General: Major party candidates automatically qualify for full funding.

Senate: Primary: Petition signatures of 1% of VAP in State must be filed with Commission 210 days before primary.

General: Major party candidates automatically qualify for full funding.

House: Primary: Petition signatures of 2% of VAP in district must be filed with Commission 210 days before primary (1% if single district state).

General: Major party candidates automatically qualify for full funding.

National party: Automatically qualifies for funding based on a percentage of the presidential candidate entitlement.

CANDIDATE SPENDING LIMIT

Same as total entitlement allowed major party candidates (see "Amount of Funding"). In presidential primary, candidate can authorize his or her national committee to spend up to 10% of his or her total allowable limit in states entered, reducing own spending by that same amount. Unopposed primary candidates may spend only 20% of amount allowed opposed candidate.

LIMITS ON INDIVIDUAL PRIVATE CONTRIBUTIONS

No private contributions can be given to or accepted by major party candidates or major parties in primary or general elections. (Exception for $100 maximum contributions allowed in petition gathering, all contributions to be refunded later from primary entitlement). Limit of $100 on contribution to minor party, independent candidate (separate limit for primary, runoff, general). Minor party, independent candidates may accept private contributions up to overall spending limit.

LIMITS ON CONTRIBUTIONS BY POLITICAL COMMITTEE TO CANDIDATE

No contributions allowed to major party candidates or to major party. $100 limit on contributions to minor, independent candidates.

TREATMENT OF MINOR AND NEW PARTIES/CANDIDATES

Entitled to a fraction of major party funding based on ratio of minor/new party candidate votes received to average votes received by major party candidate. May raise proportionately more in private funds up to spending limit.

Can receive additional funding—up to total funding—after election on basis of performance.

SPECIFIC RESTRICTIONS

Major party candidate must repay full entitlement if he or she receives less than 15% of votes in primary or 25% in general election.

Candidates may withdraw under certain conditions, repaying half of entitlement received.

Post election audit can require repayment of excess funds received by candidate.

Minor party candidate or his or her family can spend $1,000 on primary or general election (treated separately); major party candidate or family can spend $1,000 in connection with petition drive.

All private contributions to minor, independent candidates must be sent to Election Commission, fully identified.

Full reporting of petition drive contributions.

*VAP—voting age population.

Spending limits for petition drives:
House: 2¢ x VAP.
Senate: 1¢ x VAP or $7,500, whichever is more.
Limit of $100 on individual's contribution to petition drive.

TAX INCENTIVES FOR SMALL CONTRIBUTIONS

Increase tax credit to 100% of contribution up to $100 ($200 on joint return). Provides automatic income tax payment to Election Fund of $2, unless taxpayer specifically designates "no."

OTHER PROVISIONS

Repeals Sec. 315 "equal time" requirements of Communications Act for all federal candidates.
Bans use of frank for mass mailings 90 days before any federal election.
Directs Postal Service to establish special rates for all federal candidates.

PENALTIES

Up to $50,000/five years.
Civil penalty: Up to $10,000 per day per violation.

ESTIMATED ANNUAL COST

$250 million (assumes three candidates in each party primary for every Federal office).
Effective Date: January 1, 1975.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I congratulate the Senator from Iowa on the completeness and fairness of his amendment an for the thought that has gone into it. It is, as he suggests, a very innovative and major suggestion. It would involve substantial expense, substantial amounts from the public treasury, perhaps twice or three times as much as is foreseen in the bill that is presently under consideration. This matter was not considered in the deliberations of the subcommittee. It was not adequately considered at that time. Finally, there is the question of what the courts would rule in connection with the flat out prohibition on private contributions. They might be willing and already have supported a limitation on the amount an individual can contribute. To prohibit him from contributing anything might be a violation of his constitutional rights.

For these reasons, as the acting manager of the bill, I would be compelled not to support the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. President, I move that the amendment of the Senator from Iowa be tabled at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1156

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, today I submit an amendment for myself and my distinguished colleague from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER) that would make the day on which Federal general elections are held a legal public holiday.

While I have been successful in each of the last 2 years in winning Senate approval of similar amendments, neither of them have been enacted, for various reasons unrelated to the substance of this proposal. I hope that this time it will be passed by the Congress and become law.

The logic of this amendment is just as compelling today as it has been for years. Under our present electoral system, a number of serious obstacles have been erected that block full democratic participation by all Americans in our Government and politics.

We have made some great strides in the last 25 years, however, in reducing and eliminating these barriers. Unconstitutional voting requirements posed by the poll tax, literacy requirements, residency laws, and some of the more subtle racially motivated obstacles, have been removed. And, we are making some progress in facilitating voter registration—a step of great importance in increasing democratic participation in our Government.

Yet there is more that we can, should, and must do, in the name of true popular democracy, to bring the mass of the people into the political system of our Nation.

Mr. President, according to a survey conducted by the U.S. Census Bureau, 51.2 million eligible Americans did not vote in the general elections in November 1972. That number represented a full 37 percent of the voting-age population in this country at that time. Many of these people have been denied this basic right of citizenship because of hard-to-find registration offices and a full day's work.

The amendment I submit today would eliminate one of the major obstacles to fuller voter participation in elections. It would assure that millions of American working families are not deterred from excercising their franchise in Presidential and congressional elections.

My amendment makes election day the first Wednesday after the first Monday in November, and also creates a legal holiday on that day.

Several other Nations—Denmark, Italy, France, Germany, and Austria—which enjoy 85 to 95 percent voter turnout in nearly every election have designated election day a holiday.

These are nations that are industrialized. They find that the workers participate freely openly, and in much larger numbers when there is an election holiday.

I believe that it would substantially improve participation in our elections, as well.

Workers who commute long distances to work often leave home before polls open and return after they have closed. People working irregular shifts in a shop or factory are also discouraged from voting. In some areas rush hours at the polls mean a long wait in line causing many who must get to work, and many others who are tired from a full day's labor, to give up their franchise in despair.

Mr. President, it is time we put an end to this obstacle to democracy. The amendment I am introducing today would achieve this goal, it would eliminate the work day as an obstacle to expanding suffrage.

The right to vote should not be hampered by any economic consideration. It is too important to the survival of our system of government. In the 19th century we eliminated property ownership requirements for voting in this country. As we enter the last quarter of the 20th century, it is time for us to act to prevent a job from keeping the 80 million Americans who work in factories, on farms, and in the businesses of this Nation, from the voting booths.

Mr. President, I believe this amendment—providing a legal election holiday every 2 years beginning in 1976—would increase voter participation for the most important office in the land: The Presidency of the United States—an open day so that every citizen will have all the time in that day available to consider the candidates and exercise his franchise. And the same, of course, would apply to the offices of U.S. Senator and Member of the House of Representatives.

I send to the desk my amendment, for myself and for Mr. GOLDWATER, and ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and printed, and will be on the table.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I might ask the acting manager of the bill, since this amendment has passed through the Senate twice with overwhelming votes, as to whether or not he would just like to accept the amendment or let is go over so we can vote on it. It will be adopted again, I am sure, unless the Senate has completely changed its mind.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I would like to ask, in view of the fact that, as the Senator has suggested, I am the acting floor manager, that it go over until next week, when the floor manager will be here.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Very good.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session to consider certain nominations which have been reported today by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

U.S. ATTORNEY

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first nomination.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of S. John Cottone, of Pennsylvania, to be U.S. attorney for the middle district of Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is considered and confirmed.

U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Murray M. Schwartz, of Delaware, to be a U.S. district judge for the district of Delaware.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is considered and confirmed.

U.S. ATTORNEY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Mr. William J. Schloth, of Georgia, to be U.S. attorney for the middle district of Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is considered and confirmed.

U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Joseph W. Morris, of Oklahoma, to be U.S. district judge for the eastern district of Oklahoma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is considered and confirmed.

U.S. MARSHAL

The legislative clerk read the nomination of George A. Locke, of Washington, to be U.S. marshal for the eastern district of Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is considered and confirmed.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate return to the consideration of legislative business.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

PROGRAM

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, on Monday, the Senate will convene at the hour of 12 o'clock noon. After the two leaders have been recognized under the standing order, there will be a period for the transaction of routine morning business of not to exceed 30 minutes, with statements limited therein to 5 minutes each, at the conclusion of which the Senate will resume consideration of the unfinished business, S. 3044.

At that time the pending question will be on an amendment by Mr. TALMADGE, on which there is a time limitation of 30 minutes. Any rollcall votes on the Talmadge amendment or other amendments, motions, et cetera, will not occur until the hour of 3:30 p.m. The leadership would expect several rollcalls on Monday.

Mr. President, if there is anything in my statement of the program that has not been previously ordered, I ask unanimous consent that it be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, if there be no further business to come before the Senate, I move, in accordance with the previous order, and, pursuant to Senate Resolution 304, as a further mark of respect to the memory of Georges Pompidou, President of the French Republic, that the Senate now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and at 11:33 a.m. the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 8, 1974, at 12 noon.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 5, 1974:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

William J. Schloth, of Georgia, to be U.S. attorney for the middle district of Georgia for the term of 4 years.

S. John Cottone, of Pennsylvania, to be U.S. attorney for the middle district of Pennsylvania for the term of 4 years.

George A. Locke, of Washington, to be U.S. marshal for the eastern district of Washington for the term of 4 years.

(The above nominations were approved subject to the nominee's commitment to respond to requests to appear and testify before any duly constituted committee of the Senate.)

IN THE JUDICIARY

Joseph W. Morris, of Oklahoma, to be U.S. district judge for the eastern district of Oklahoma.

Murray M. Schwartz, of Delaware, to be U.S. district judge for the district of Delaware.

tation and reconstruction stage (e.g. to avert the recurrence hopefully of such disasters) may not be available. Without a reasonable assurance of continuity of food supply, the voluntary agency programs of rehabilitation and development may have to be abandoned or greatly reduced in many of these instances.

The voluntary agencies pointed out these problems in testimony presented last year before both Senate and House Agriculture Committees relative to the extension of PL 480. They declared at that time ". . . we voice our concern lest, in the face of continuing and expanding need, there be failure to implement or to fund the programs adequately." In reply, PL 480 was remandated by the Congress for an additional four years. In addition, the Foreign Assistance Act of 1973 declared it to be the sense of Congress that in assessing food production levels, "the expected demands for humanitarian food assistance through such programs as . . . Public Law 480" be included and that increased flexibility be provided through consideration of legislation to amend Section 401 of PL 480. In the same Act the sense of Congress also was expressed that "The United States should participate fully in efforts to alleviate current and future food shortages which threaten the world." The voluntary agencies concur fully in this position.

It is the particular plea of the American Council of Voluntary Agencies for Foreign Service, and particularly those of its member agencies operating relief, rehabilitation and development programs overseas that especially now with renewed Foreign Assistance emphasis on development and the impending food crisis which confronts the world, the Congress should take whatever steps it deems appropriate to give material substance to the above "sense of Congress" provisions to the end that insofar as possible a continuing and regular food resource will be available to the voluntary agencies under PL 480 for their overseas programs.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATHAWAY). The time for the transaction of routine morning business has now expired.

Morning business is closed.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order the Senate will now resume the consideration of the unfinished business, S. 3044, which the clerk will state.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

S. 3044, to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I believe that the distinguished Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK) is prepared to call up his amendment on which the yeas and nays have already been ordered. It is my understanding that when debate is completed on his amendment, if completed prior to 3:30 p.m. today—which I am sure it will be—the vote on the Clark amendment will occur at the hour of 3:30 p.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I thank the Chair.

AMENDMENT NO. 1152

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1152 and ask that its reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the text of the amendment will be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The text of the amendment follows:

REPEAL OF CERTAIN EXCEPTIONS TO CONTRIBUTION AND EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS

SEC. 305. Section 614(c)(3) of title 18, United States Code (as added by section 304 of this Act), and section 615(e) of such title (as added by section 304 of this Act) (relating to the application of such sections to certain campaign committees) are repealed. Section 615 of title 18, United States Code (as added by section 304 of this Act), is amended by striking out "(f)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(e)".

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the name of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON) be added as a cosponsor of my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, last Wednesday, with only a handful of Senators in the Chamber, the Senate passed amendment No. 1102 by voice vote. The amendment exempted the House and Senate campaign committees of the two major parties from the contribution and expenditure limitations of the campaign financing bill now before the Senate.

In my judgment, the amendment opens an obvious loophole that will allow massive amounts of private money to influence congressional campaigns, seriously compromising the excellent legislation that Chairman CANNON and the rules committee have brought to the floor.

The amendment I have introduced would repeal the sections of the bill added by the amendment passed last Wednesday.

In offering that amendment, the distinguished Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK) said:

It is important that our parties not be weakened. But strengthened, by whatever action Congress takes. I would hope that in writing this particular bill we can provide that sense of purpose with this amendment. (Pg. S. 5189 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, April 3, 1974).

This bill had just that "sense of purpose" already—without the Brock amendment. The committee bill as reported provided a major role for both the State and national political parties by allowing each of them to contribute an additional 2 cents a voter to a campaign, over and above a candidate's expenditure limitation. The amendment approved last Wednesday deals not with the role of political parties, which have millions of supporters and thousands of small contributors, but with the role of the "In-House" campaign committees of both Houses of Congress.

During the course of the debate, Senator ALLEN expressed some concern about "leaving—contributions and expenditures for these committees—with the sky as the limit." In response, Senator BROCK said:

Our average contribution was something on the order of $23.75 in the Republican Party . . . by no definition can that $23.75 be sufficient to influence the election or the vote of an individual running for the Senate.

Perhaps the average contribution to the Republican Party is $23.75, but that certainly can't be the average contribution to the Campaign Committees of the House and Senate. The ticket price for the Republicans' annual fund-raising dinner is $1,000—for the Democrats, the price is $500. And many of those tickets are purchased in blocks by various groups. No one should confuse national political parties, supported as they are by thousands of people giving in $5 and $10 amounts, with the Senate and House Campaign Committees.

There was another confusing aspect of the amendment which Senator ALLEN inquired about: The maximum amount that could be received from any contributor by one of the "in-house" Campaign Committees. Senator BROCK said:

The same limit that would apply to giving to a campaign or to the national committees would apply here.

I am not at all sure that's the case.

Under S. 3044, an individual is limited to giving $3,000 and a group is limited to giving $6,000 to any single candidate's campaign. But an individual would be limited only by the $25,000 overall ceiling in contributing to one of these committees, and for groups there would be no limit at all.

What this amendment has done is exempt the House and Senate Campaign Committees from any effective restrictions. Individuals could contribute to them almost without limit. Groups could contribute completely without limit. And, unlike any other political committees, these committees could contribute unlimited amounts directly to the candidates—with the candidates' total expenditure ceilings as the only effective restraint.

In the case of a Senate race in California, it would mean that the legal limitation on what the Democratic and GOP senatorial campaign committees could give would be $2,121,450 in the general election. In Iowa, it would be $288,000. In Tennessee, it would be $406,500. It is apparent that last Wednesday the Senate set aside any effective limitation on contributions.

My amendment No. 1152 would repeal the provisions added by amendment No. 1102. I would not lightly raise an issue that already had been considered. But if the Senate allows amendment No. 1102 to stand, it will be compromising the very integrity of this campaign financing legislation.

Let me provide an example. Suppose that in 1976 the Democratic or Republican senatorial campaign committee has pinpointed 10 key Senate races. An organization—and there are many that would be willing and able—decides to give $100,000 to the campaign committee, which in turn passes along $10,000 to each of its 10 "key" candidates.

Now there would be nothing illegal about that transaction—the money would not have been specifically earmarked for any particular candidate. But the effect would be clear. Each of those candidates would know how they got that $10,000 check, and its real source.

The rules committee has withstood virtually every challenge to S. 3044 so far. Amendment No. 1102 is the one glaring exception. As the Washington Post reported last week.

It is the first substantial breach in provisions of the bill that limit individuals to a $3,000 contribution to any one candidate and organizations to a $6,000 contribution.

The amendment passed last Wednesday directly contradicts the basic goal that we have been working toward over the past 2 weeks—the cleansing of our political process. It should be repealed.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 2770) to amend chapter 5 of title 37, United States Code, to revise the special pay structure relating to medical officers of the uniformed services, disagreed to by the Senate; agrees to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and that Mr. STRATTON, Mr. NICHOLS, Mr. HUNT, Mr. HÉBERT, and Mr. BRAY were appointed managers of the conference on the part of the House.

OPPOSITION TO CAMPAIGN FINANCE BILL

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, one of the greatest dangers of congressional service is that some Members get so imbued with what they read and hear in the Washington news media that they tend to forget that the greatest number of Americans and the bulk of our country lie beyond the Potomac River.

I fear that this is the case in consideration of S. 3044, the bill for public financing of campaigns. The pell-mell rush to support public subsidies for politicians, as is proposed in this legislation, is being led—or should I say misled?—in part by the Washington news media.

But there is a rising chorus of opposition throughout the rest of the country to this proposed raid on the Public Treasury. And as newspaper editors in the 50 States understand the implications of this proposal, they are writing editorials opposing public financing of campaigns. The heartland of America is speaking, but I feel that some Senators are still not listening.

Mr. President, as examples of this rising public outcry, I have an editorial, "A Misuse of Public Funds . . .," from the Saturday, March 30, 1974, issue of the Chicago Tribune, and an editorial, "Mired in Molasses," from the Wednesday, April 3, 1974, issue of the Birmingham Post-Herald.

I ask unanimous consent that these editorials be printed in the RECORD for the edification of all Senators.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Chicago Tribune, Mar. 30, 1974]

A MISUSE OF PUBLIC FUNDS . . .

An irresponsible majority of the United States Senate has twice defeated attempts by Sen. James Allen to remove public financing of political campaigns from the Senate's campaign reform bill. The measure now seems assured of Senate passage.

The House soundly defeated a similar measure last year and is not happy about this year's entry. President Nixon has warned that he will veto the bill if public financing is included. Five of the seven members of the Senate Watergate Committee, whose mission it was to draft campaign reform legislation for the Senate, are strongly opposed to public campaign financing.

Still its supporters persist. Their apparent strategy is to keep battering away until the opposition begins to crack. It must not crack. Public campaign financing poses an insidious threat to this country's two-party, majority-rule system of government.

As the President and many others have noted, the bill is designed to eliminate private contributions, and thus deny to voters the right to give financial support to the candidate of their choice. Instead, their tax money would be used to support all candidates, including those they opposed. Black taxpayers, for example, could be supporting the candidacy of Gov. George Wallace.

True, the scheme would curb the appalling cost of Presidential elections, shown in the accompanying graph, but in congressional campaigns, spending might well increase. Congressmen who have been reelected easily with campaign treasuries of only $20,000 would find themselves with $90,000 to spend.

As Sen. Howard Baker, vice chairman of the Watergate committee noted, public financing would give the government fiscal control over elections. This could easily lead to assuming regulatory control, thus giving the party in power tremendous influence.

Public financing has been rationalized as a means to prevent corruption, but it goes much farther than that. As Walter Pincus, executive editor of the New Republic, put it in a statement supporting the proposal: "Don't kid yourself that you back public financing to prevent Watergates and corruption. You do it to change the system."

The scheme would hand out public money to any and all qualified comers in congressional and Presidential primaries. Candidacies would multiply like rabbits. Special interest organizations like the American Civil Liberties Union, Nader's Raiders, the gun lobby, Common Cause, corporate associations, and labor unions could become political parties in their own right. The two major parties and the two-party, majority-rule system could founder. Chaos could result.

In the words of Mr. Baker: "We are burning down the barn to get rid of the rats."

[From the Birmingham Post-Herald, Apr. 3, 1974]

MIRED IN MOLASSES

Despite all the lofty rhetoric, it will take some fancy legislative maneuvering to get an effective campaign reform bill through Congress this year.

A more likely prospect is that campaign reform will disappear in a vat of election-year molasses and not be seen or heard from again until 1975.

The reason for this dismal prediction is the current disagreement among the House, the Senate and President Nixon over what needs to be done to curb excessive spending and loose bookkeeping in congressional election campaigns.

Judging by its past lack of enthusiasm, the House would like to do nothing—or at least do nothing to make it easier for challengers to oust incumbents.

Rep. Wayne L. Hays, D-Ohio, the man in charge of reform legislation, is adamantly opposed to setting up an independent elections commission. Under present law, the House and Senate police their own campaign practices, which is like sending a barkless dog on burglar patrol.

The Senate has been much more responsive, passing a reform bill last July that would have set limits on campaign spending and campaign giving; outlawed all cash contributions of more than $50; required full disclosure of a candidate's assets and income; encouraged television debates among major candidates; funneled each candidate's spending reports through one central committee, and set up an independent elections commission.

Now the Senate is on the verge of sabotaging its own bill by insisting that tax money be used to help finance all congressional and senatorial election campaigns, both primary and general.

This is a bad proposal. It would make money available to candidates who have no real base of support. It would provide too much money in some places, too little in others. Even if it passes the House, which is unlikely, the President, who opposes public financing, is expected to veto it.

That would leave the reform campaign back where it started—with no limits on how much pressure groups can give to candidates; no limits on how much candidates can spend, and no independent commission to blow the whistle when necessary.

This is fine and dandy for lobbyists and special interest groups, who stand ready to pour millions into political campaigns this year, much of it aimed at keeping good old Jack ("he'll take care of us") in office for another term.

But it's a strange way to restore voter confidence in a much-abused political campaign system that badly needs some basic reforms.

RECESS UNTIL 2 P.M.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess until 2 p.m. today.

There being no objection, at 1:18 p.m. the Senate took a recess until 2 p.m.; at which time the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. MANSFIELD).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair (the Senator from Montana, Mr. MANSFIELD, in the chair) suggests the absence of a quorum.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MONTOYA). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, what is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Amendment No. 1152 of the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK).

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the pending amendment occur at the hour of 3:30 p.m. today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I thank the Chair and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL 3 P.M.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 3 p.m. today.

There being no objection, at 2:35 p.m. the Senate took a recess until 3 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. BARTLETT).

TRIBUTE TO THE STAFF OF THE JOINT COMMITTEE ON INTERNAL REVENUE TAXATION

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an insertion in the RECORD be permitted by the distinguished senior Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG).

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARTLETT). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement by Senator LONG and the Washington Post article of April 4, 1974, by Spencer Rich as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR R. LONG

In connection with the entry into the Congressional Record of Spencer Rich's April 4, 1974, Washington Post article on the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, I would like to add a few brief comments.

It is our privilege, as Senators, to work with many outstanding committees and their respective staff members. Of all those with whom I have had contact as a U.S. Senator, the professional staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation must rank as one of the most visible in terms of professional expertise, impartiality and discretion on sensitive matters. In this regard, I would, therefore, like to add my commendations to the Committee for the outstanding job it has done in its recent and extensive examination of the President's tax returns.

This is an example of our Congressional Committee system and general government operations at their very finest. It certainly is my privilege and pleasure to be chairman of such a dedicated and outstanding committee.

[From the Washington Post, Apr. 4, 1974]

JOINT TAX STAFF REGARDED AS BEST ON HILL

(By Spencer Rich)

When members of Congress get legislative advice from Larry Woodworth, the 56-year-old soft-spoken son of an Ohio Baptist preacher, they listen with special care and respect.

For Woodworth—who heads the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation which has just issued a devastating report on President Nixon's taxes—has a universal reputation as one of the best, perhaps the very best, staff man on Capitol Hill.

And the 40-member staff over which Woodworth has ridden herd for the past 10 years is known as the ablest, most discreet, most savvy and most professional group of committee aides in Congress.

Few people on Capitol Hill and virtually no one off the hill—except the Treasury Department and the private tax lawyers and lobbyists—know much about the joint committee. Yet it is one of the most powerful in Congress, with tremendous influence over legislation affecting the lives of millions.

The joint committee, created under the Revenue Act of 1926, consists of members of the tax-writing committees—House Ways and Means and Senate Finance. The chairmanship alternates and the chairman this year is Sen. Russell B. Long (D-La.), with Rep. Wilbur Mills (D-Ark.) as vice chairman For years the Senate chairman was Harry Flood Byrd Sr. (D-Va.), an arch-conservative in fiscal matters.

The joint committee provides the major staff for both chambers of Congress on tax matters, and right now—in addition to Woodworth, who holds a doctorate in public administration and isn't an economist or a tax lawyer—it has 25 professional staff members.

Including secretarial and clerical positions, the total staff is about 40. The professional staff members include two legislative counsels, six legislative attorneys, six economists and a number of economic and tax-statistic analysts. Several of the members have accounting training as well. The staff has been built up as a civil service-type staff—nonpolitical and nonpartisan.

When a tax bill is before either Ways and Means or Finance or on the floor of either chamber, it is the business of the joint committee staff to draft the legislation, to write the reports and to be at the side of committee members to advise and assist. Four or five staffers are almost always seen on the House and Senate floors whenever a tax bill is being considered.

Woodworth gets $40,000 a year, the highest possible staff salary in Congress. With the committee since 1944, he is a master at trying to tailor and stitch the proposals of members into a coherent whole. He is the model civil servant—able, discreet, honest and hardworking, according to members and associates. He could probably triple his salary in private industry but he won't jump.

Second in command on the committee staff is Lincoln Arnold, 64, a one-time municipal judge in Thief River Falls, Minn., who was an Internal Revenue Service attorney, senior legislative counsel for the House, and worked in private practice for 15 years with Alvord and Alvord.

Another staff aide with a major role on the Nixon tax report is Bernard (Bobby) Shapiro, a soft-spoken lawyer in his early 30s with a trace of a drawl (he's from Richmond) and training in accountancy as well as law. Shapiro sometimes serves as a surrogate on the floor when Woodworth can't be there.

Assistant staff chief Herbert L. Chabot, 42, who comes from New York and got his law degree from Columbia, provided staff work on pension reform bills when they were considered by the Finance and Ways and Means committees.

From the start, a staff team worked extensively and virtually full time on the president's tax matters. It consisted of Woodworth, Arnold, Shapiro, attorney Mark McConaghy, attorney Paul Oosterhuis, accountant Allan Rosenbaum and economist James Wetzler. From time to time, other staffers pitched in, and at the end most of the staff was working to get the final report in shape.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, earlier in the debate, I discussed at some length the reasons that the Senate should adopt my amendment (No. 1152) to repeal amendment No. 1102 passed by voice vote last Wednesday. That amendment exempted the House and the Senate campaign committees of the major parties from the contribution and expenditure limitations of the campaign financing bill now before the Senate. In my judgment, that is the first loophole we have written into a very excellent bill.

The committee bill as reported does provide a major role for both the State and national political parties by allowing each to contribute an additional 2 cents a voter to a campaign—over and above the candidate's expenditure limitation. The amendment approved last Wednesday deals not with the role of political parties, which have millions of supporters and thousands of small contributors, but with the role of in-house campaign committees of the House and the Senate.

This is the essential point: all other committees are limited to $6,000 in terms of what they can contribute to an individual candidate. This amendment lifts that restriction leaving $25,000 as the only effective limitation on what an individual can give to a committee. It leaves a loophole allowing committees unlimited contributions to the congressional campaign committees, and in turn, allows them an unlimited amount of money to give to individual candidates.

There is another serious problem with the amendment passed last Wednesday, section 614(c), on page 71 of the Rules Committee bill. The amendment exempted the senatorial and congressional campaign committees from the $1,000 independent expenditure limitation. It is true that the State and national parties are also exempt from this limitation, but they are subject to a 2-cent-a-voter ceiling on any contributions to or expenditures for a particular candidate.

The senatorial and congressional campaign committees, however, are not subject to any restrictions. I am sure this is not the intent of the amendment, but its effect is certain.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I should like to take a few minutes to explain the purpose of the amendment as it was offered and as it was intended.

Upon reading the Rules Committee bill, we felt that perhaps by inadvertence there were no safeguards to maintain the viability of the various congressional committees of the two parties. The bill as it was written would have effectively eliminated the operation of the House and the Senate campaign committees of the two parties, respectively; and that, I think, is one of the things that I find dangerous in the proposed legislation.

The bill, to my way of thinking, goes too far already toward damaging the two-party process. I believe it places that process very much in jeopardy. If we are going to have an effective political system, we have to have some mechanism by which the parties not only maintain themselves but also have some opportunity for internal discipline.

The amendment was not drawn with the view of escaping the safeguards of the campaign contribution ceilings. I said on the Senate floor during the debate on the amendment that we would still be limited, as I understood it, to a $3,000 gift from an individual or a committee. Perhaps my impression is wrong. If it is, I would be delighted either to modify the amendment or to accept other language that would so correct it.

I am not sure that that is the case. However, I would be willing to make sure it is, not only by legislative history but also by specific language. But the Senator's amendment does a great deal more than that. In effect, it strikes all the language of the amendment; and, in effect, he would put us back into position originally reported by the Committee on Rules and Administration. I do not find that acceptable. I hope the Senate does not support the amendment as presently worded.

The Senator from Nevada, the Senator from Texas, and a number of other Senators and I have discussed the thrust of my amendment at length. There is no disagreement as to intent. If clarification is necessary in terms of legislative history, that is one thing, but to simply strike and, in effect, go back to the original position of eliminating these two committees, which do perform a valuable function in terms of supporting and serving our candidates, would be self-defeating and highly dangerous.

I cannot support the amendment, although I do understand the concern of the Senator in raising the particular point. I think he goes too far and I hope the Senate does not accept this particular amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, as has been pointed out, the Senate did adopt the Brock amendment last week. I do not share the concern of the Senator from Iowa with respect to the one provision that he contends opens wide the door.

I think the possible opening of the door here, if the door is open, relates to the paragraph beginning on line 8, page 74 which, under the bill, prohibits independent expenditures in excess of $1,000. It does appear that perhaps the Brock amendment (No. 1102) exempts the Senate and House from limits on independent expenditures. If it does, and counsel is checking this now, later an amendment could be offered to change that possibility and make it clear that those committees were not exempted from subsection (C)(1) on page 74.

But I think the hazard, if it can be called a hazard, and I do not think it is a hazard, of larger contributions being made to these committees—I think that was what was hoped for by the amendment—was that larger contributions could be made to those authorized committees, and let them make contributions to the candidates which are within the candidates' spending limits, obviously, and that this would help maintain the party structure by permitting the campaign committees and national committees of both parties to make contributions to the respective candidates.

So while I would be inclined to support the amendment if it did not go as far as it does, I think under the circumstances I would be opposed to it here. If we need a perfecting amendment later that could be offered with respect to the limit.

Mr. BROCK. I know the Senator's intention and I think he understands the situation. We are both seeking the same thing in this amendment; and I think the Senator from Iowa has raised a valid point. But the amendment he has offered goes so far as not to permit the committees to do anything. That is unacceptable, but I would urge that language be posed to take care of this concern on his part by offering an amendment. I appreciate the chairman's position in trying at least to keep the two committees in operation.

Mr. CANNON. I think in the colloquy that took place last week it is clear what was intended by the Senator's amendment, and I would hate to see the Senate now take action to simply reverse itself on the action that it took last week.

Mr. BROCK. I agree, and I thank the Senator.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, the problem with the discussion on the floor last week was that the Senators present assumed, as did the Senator from Tennessee, that there was a $3,000 limitation on the amount the congressional campaign committee could receive and a $6,000 limit on the amount the congressional campaign committee could contribute to an individual candidate. Clearly, that is not the case. It is unlimited.

If we do not agree to the pending amendment, we will leave the loophole open. This is the first time so far that we have said to a political committee, "You can collect as much money as you want, an unlimited amount, and give us as much as you want—up to $2 million in the case of California—without limitation."

In this one case of senatorial and congressional committees, we are saying that they can collect unlimited amounts of money. The Committee on Rules and Administration was wise when it reported the bill without that loophole.

As it reported the bill, the committee said in effect that these "in-house" committees would be restricted exactly the same way as other political committees.

My amendment would do one thing: It repeals the Brock amendment and takes us back to the bill reported by the Committee on Rules and Administration. The committee's original judgment was correct. To permit unlimited expenditures would be a serious mistake.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 3:30 having arrived, the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK). The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH), the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT) the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM), are necessarily absent.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. FANNIN), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG), the Senator from Florida (Mr. GURNEY), the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS), and the Senator from Idaho (Mr. MCCLURE) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT), are absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT), would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 35, as follows:

So Mr. CLARK's amendment (No. 1152) was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1156

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, for myself and the distinguished Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER) I call up amendment No. 1156, which is at the desk, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be discontinued and that the amendment be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment ordered to be printed in the RECORD is as follows:

On page 86, between lines 2 and 3, insert the following new section:

SEC. 520. Section 6103(a) of title 5, United States Code is amended by inserting between—

"Veterans Day, the fourth Monday in October." and

"Thankgiving Day, the fourth Thursday in November." the following new item:

"Election Day, the first Wednesday next after the first Monday in November in 1976, and every second year thereafter.".

Mr. HUMPHREY. This is an amendment that has been agreed to by the Senate in each of the last 2 years. Unfortunately, for reasons extraneous to the substance of this legislation, it has yet to be enacted. The amendment would make Federal election day the first Wednesday after the first Monday in November, and create a legal holiday on that day.

I will not repeat all of the arguments for this amendment. I am sure that all Senators are familiar with them. The logic of the amendment is just as compelling today as it has been in the past, when this body voted overwhelmingly in its favor.

Mr. President, making election day a national holiday would move us still closer to the ideal of popular democracy that all of us cherish. It would help to bring the mass of the people even more into the mainstream of our national political system.

I would remind Senators of the inadequate level of participation in the 1972 elections. According to a survey by the U.S. Census Bureau, 51.2 million eligible Americans did not vote in the general elections in November 1972. That number represented a full 37 percent of the voting-age population in this country at that time. Many of these people have been denied this basic right of citizenship because of hard-to-find registration offices and a full day's work.

The amendment before us would eliminate one of the major obstacles to fuller voter participation in elections. It would assure that millions of American working families are not deterred from exercising their franchise in Presidential and congressional elections.

Several other nations find that workers participate freely, openly, and in larger numbers when there is an election holiday. In Denmark, Italy, France, Germany, and Austria, where election day is a holiday, voter turnout of 85 and 95 percent is normal. I believe it would substantially increase participation in our elections as well.

Workers who commute long distances to work often leave home before polls open and return after they have closed. People working irregular shifts in a shop or factory are also discouraged from voting. In some areas, rush hours at the polls mean a long wait in line causing many who must get to work, and many others who are tried from a full day's labor, to give up their franchise in despair.

Mr. President, it is time we put an end to this obstacle to democracy.

In the 19th century we eliminated property ownership requirements for voting in this country. As we enter the last quarter of the 20th century, it is time for us to act to prevent a job from keeping the 80 million Americans who work in factories, on farms, and in the businesses of this Nation from the voting booths.

Mr. President, I believe this amendment, which provides a legal election holiday every 2 years begining in 1976, would increase voter participation for the most important office in the land: the Presidency of the United States. It would be an open day, so that every citizen will have all the time in that day available to consider the candidates and to exercise his franchise. And the same time, of course, would apply to the offices of U.S. Senator and Member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from Arizona.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I am happy to join the distinguished Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY) in offering the amendment. I think it is a sad commentary on the electorate of this country when we find that in Presidential elections we have been electing Presidents by a very bare majority. While the last several Presidential elections have been won by large pluralities, we discover that the total vote has not been much in excess of 50 percent of the voting population. Then when we look at other countries that have patterned themselves upon pretty much the same concept of government and see that their turnout is 90 or 95 percent, it makes those of us who stand for election wonder what has happened in America.

The concept of maLing election day a national holiday is not new. Such a proposal has been passed twice by the Senate. I believe the United States is one of the few countries that does not recognize the importance of election day by making it a national holiday.

I ahve thought about this proposal at great length. I think it would be desirable. In fact, anything we can do to get more Americans to be interested in our political system would be desirable. I am aware that what we have been going through during the past year is not the most pleasant thing in the world and makes many Americans wonder what is wrong with the system. But I have always told people that bad politicians are elected by good people who cannot vote.

If we can make election day a holiday, and then ask the assistance of both parties in really trying to get out the vote, perhaps we will see an informed electorate by creating in this country a turnout of voters which will be in excess of 75 percent.

I think this would be very healthy for America. It would be very good for everything that now ails the body politic in America. I am very happy that the Senator from Minnesota has offered this amendment. He and I happen to be members of a very exclusive club. We have gone through this, and we have some understanding of what it is to address millions of Americans, only to find that on election day only a relative handful will turn out.

I suggest that while it could be a problem of the candidate in my case, it certainly would not be in his case; so we sort of stand each other off there.

I hope very much that the manager of the bill will accept this amendment. I have not spoken to him about it, but this body has twice, as the Senator stated, passed this approach. I do not care to ask for a rollcall vote, and I am sure my colleague does not.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I agree with what the distinguished Senator from Arizona has said. I think this is a very important proposal, and I think we ought to have the yeas and nays to assure that when the bill goes over there, the other side will know how we feel about it.

So, Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, before the Senator does that, may I say I have no objection to it. This was in the bill that we passed last year, largely because of the actions of the Senator from Minnesota, and at that time he and I had quite a colloquy about it, and if I am not mistaken we had a rollcall vote on that occasion.

Mr. HUMPHREY. We did.

Mr. COOK. I have no objection to having it again, but I did want to get into the RECORD that we had quite an extensive debate on the floor on that bill last year. That is in the RECORD over on the House side, and this will be the second time. I merely wanted the Senator from Wisconsin to know that.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, having listened to the impressive argument of the Senator from Kentucky, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I have no further comment. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, the yeas and nays were ordered; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, as the Senator stated, the Senate has voted on this issue before. We are prepared to accept it.

I am not convinced, in my own mind, that one can force people to vote by simply making election day a holiday. I think the indications of our experience have been that whenever a holiday comes along—even though, as provided in this bill, it may be in the middle of the week, which may eliminate the situation of a long weekend holiday—it probably will result in a fishing day.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARTLETT). All remaining time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY) and the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER). On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH), the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. ERVIN), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM) are necessarily absent.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. FANNIN), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG), the Senator from Florida (Mr. GURNEY), the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. MCCLURE), and the Senator from New York (Mr. BUCKLEY) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BELLMON), the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT), and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT) are absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 55, nays 21, as follows:

So the Humphrey-Goldwater amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

THE FUTURE OF NASA

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, in September of last year, I introduced for myself, Mr. Moss, and Mr. TUNNEY, S. 2495, a bill to apply the scientific and technological resources of the country to the solution of domestic problems and to create a survey of science and technology resources and applications. Since that time in joint hearings between the Committees on Aeronautical and Space Sciences and Commerce, the objectives of S. 2495 have been almost unanimously endorsed by expert witnesses.

When the bill was introduced, I commented that—

> The progress that has been made in space is indeed tremendous, but the promise it holds for progress here on earth is far more incredible and far more important. It is to that promise of solutions to the challenges of life right here on our own planet in our own country that the Technology Resources Survey and Applications Act is addressed.

My colleagues and cosponsor of S. 2495, Senator Moss of Utah, delivered a very outstanding and prophetic speech in the State of Washington before the Boeing Co. Management Association on March 22 entitled "The Future of NASA." Senator Moss expressed great optimism for the future prospects of NASA and the aerospace industry. His optimism lay in the increased role for NASA and the aerospace industry in utilizing its technological capability to solve pressing domestic problems.

Senator Moss clearly showed the importance of S. 2495 in leading us to the outstanding benefits which NASA holds for the American people. The significance of Senator Moss' March 22 speech is such that I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE FUTURE OF NASA

(By Senator FRANK E. MOSS)

I greatly appreciate this chance to meet with members and friends of the Boeing Management Association.

The name Boeing is always associated with the State of Washington. Over a period of years, however, I have come to associate Boeing as well with Utah and the fine people you employ there headed by the competent, hard-working and public-spirited, Mr. Jim Cummings.

Boeing assembles and checks out the Minuteman at Hill Air Force Base. For years this efficient operation has furnished the backbone ICBM deterrent force for our Nation.

And I believe that Boeing is happy with the caliber of people which it employs in Utah. I know that the Governor and all of our State and Local officials and our citizens generally appreciate Boeing. Utah welcomes your contribution to her thriving and impressive aerospace and electronic industry complex!

Boeing people everywhere should be proud of the key role they have played in achieving and maintaining American technological leadership. I have often quoted a statement that Wernher von Braun made in testimony before my Aeronautics and Space Sciences Committee last fall. He said, "World leadership and technological leadership are inseparable. A third-rate technological nation is a third-rate power politically, economically and socially. Whether we like it or not ours is a technological civilization. If we lose our national resolve to keep our position on the pinnacle of technology, the historical role of the United States can only go downhill." It is in this context that I want to discuss with you tonight the future of NASA as I see it.

Predicting the future with any degree of certainty is never easy. Trying to make predictions in the wake of the amazing and unpredicted events of the last few months may be particularly foolhardy, but I'll take a stab at it.

The other day I saw a bumper sticker that was new to me. It said, "Chicken Little Was Right!"

I am sure that many have felt the sky was falling. I'd be hard-pressed to convince you that a fairly good-sized chunk of it didn't land right here in Seattle about four years ago. But in looking ahead with you tonight, I'm going to use some admittedly rose-colored glasses, and say that the future of NASA and its aerospace partners looks brighter than it has for some time.

First let me cite some of the uncertainties.

Right now the most apparent threats to the future of NASA seem to be: (1) pending legislation to change the role of NASA; (2) the attitudes of the American people toward technology; and (3) the crisis orientation of Federal R & D funding. I'll discuss each of these interrelated factors briefly.

The first and most obvious factor affecting the future of NASA is the fact that there are currently before Congress nearly 100 bills which would modify the charter of NASA in one way or another. The American people have tended to focus more and more on the domestic social troubles besetting this nation. They are growing more insistent that Federal money help resolve these troubles. Their insistence is reflected in much of the proposed legislation. But, although there may be some minor mid-course corrections, I predict there will be no major redirections of NASA in the foreseeable future.

The future of NASA is, however, closely tied to the future attitudes of the American public. As a result, I firmly believe that the success of the technological community in selling the importance of maintaining an adequate level of advanced technology in this country is a second factor which will pro-

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I direct a question to the Senator from Kansas. Is he prepared to proceed with an amendment.

Mr. DOLE. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOLE. I yield.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that John Szabo and Guy McMichael III have the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I call up my unprinted amendment which is at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 39, between lines 20 and 21 insert the following new subsection:

"(c) Any published political advertisement of a candidate electing to receive payments under Title I of this Act shall contain on the face or front page thereof. the following notice:

" 'Paid for by Federal tax funds.' "

On page 39, line 21 strike out "(c)" and insert in lieu thereof "(d)."

On page 40, line 3, strike out "(d)" and insert in lieu thereof "(e)."

On page 40, line 11, strike out "(e)" and insert in lieu thereof "(f)."

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOLE. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. May we consider the possibility of a time agreement?

Mr. DOLE. Five minutes?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a time limitation on the amendment of 10 minutes, to be equally divided between the sponsor of the amendment, the distinguished Senator from Kansas, and the manager of the bill, the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, if the Senator from Kansas will allow me, I should like to call up a bill, with the time not being charged to either side. I ask unanimous consent that the pending business be laid aside temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

VETERANS' INSURANCE ACT OF 1974

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 700, S. 1835.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. (BARTLETT). The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1835) to amend title 38, United States Code, to increase the maximum amount of Servicemen's Group Life Insurance to $20,000, to provide full-time coverage thereunder for certain members of the Reserves and National Guard, to authorize the conversion of such insurance to Veterans' Group Life Insurance, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, with amendments on page 1, line 4, after the word "of", strike out "1973" and insert "1974"; on page 4, line 20, after the world "Reserve", strike out "or" and insert "of"; on page 1, line 14, after the word "the", where it appears the first time, strike out "Armed Forces" and insert "uniformed services"; in line 18, after the word "Servicemen's" strike out "Group." and insert "Group Life Insurance to an individual policy under the provisions of law in effect prior to such effective date."; on page 11, line 2, after "(4)", insert "of subsection (a)"; in line 19, after the word "follows", strike out "all" and insert "All"; in line 23 after the word "revolving", strike out "fund"." and insert "fund."."; on page 13, line 2, after the word "actuarial", strike out "principles."." and insert "principles." "."; in line 5, after the word "first", strike out "paragraph" and insert "clause"; after line 15, insert:

(2) Subsection (e) is amended by deleting therefrom the words "this amendatory Act" and inserting in lieu thereof "the Veterans' Insurance Act of 1974".

At the beginning of line 19, strike out "(2)" and insert "(3)"; on page 14, line 8, after the word "new", strike out "section" and insert "sections"; on page 15, line 13, after the word "premiums", strike out "of" and insert "for"; on page 18, line 25, after the word "than", strike out "five" and insert "four"; on page 19, line 1, after the word "eligible", insert "within one year from the effective date of the Veterans' Group Life Insurance program"; on page 20, line 2, after the word "including", strike out "the cost of administration and"; in line 4, after the word "disabilities", insert "The Administrator may establish, as he may determine to be necessary according to sound actuarial principles, a separate premium, age groupings for premiums purposes, accounting, and reserves, for persons granted insurance under this subsection different from those established for other persons granted insurance under this section"; after line 11, insert:

"§ 778. Reinstatement

"Reinstatement of insurance coverage granted under this subchapter but lapsed for nonpayment of premiums shall be under terms and conditions prescribed by the Administrator.

After line 15, insert:

"§ 779. Incontestability

"Subject to the provision of section 773 of this title, insurance coverage granted under this subchapter shall be incontestable from the date of issue, reinstatement, or conversion except for fraud or nonpayment of premium."

In the matter after line 23, after "777. Veterans' Group Life Insurance,", insert:

"773. Reinstatement.

"779. Incontestability.".

At the top of page 21, insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 10. Chapter 19 of title 38, United States Code, is amended as follows:

(1) By striking out "Environmental Science Services Administration" wherever it appears in section 765 and inserting in lieu thereof "National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration".

(2) By striking out "General operating expenses, Veterans' Administration" in clause 3 of subsection (d) of section 769 and inserting in lieu thereof "General Operating Expenses, Veterans' Administration".

(3) By striking out "Bureau of the Budget" in section 774 and inserting in lieu thereof "Office of Management and Budget".

At the beginning of line 14, change the section number from "10" to "11"; and, on page 22, line 1, after the word "amendments"; insert "made by sections 5 (a) (4) and (5) of this Act, and those"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Veterans' Insurance Act of 1974".

SEC. 2. (a) That section 723 of title 38, United States Code, is amended as follows:

(1) The catchline is amended to read as follows:

"Veterans' Special Life Insurance".

(2) Clause (4) of subsection (a) is amended to read as follows: "(4) all premiums and other collections on such insurance and any total disability provisions added thereto shall be credited to a revolving fund in the Treasury of the United States, which, together with interest earned thereon, shall be available for the payment of liabilities under such insurance and any total disability provisions added thereto, including payments of dividends and refunds of unearned premiums".

(3) Clause (5) of subsection (b) is amended to read as follows: "(5) all premiums and other collections on insurance issued under this subsection and any total disability income provisions added thereto shall be credited directly to the revolving fund referred to in subsection (a) of this section, which, together with interest earned thereon, shall be available for the payment of liabilities under such insurance and any total disability provisions added thereto, including payments of dividends and refunds of unearned premiums".

(4) Subsections (d) and (e) are hereby repealed.

(b) The analysis of chapter 19 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by deleting "723. Veterans' special term insurance." and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "723. Veterans' Special Life Insurance.".

SEC. 3. Clause (5) of section 765 of title 38, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(5) The term 'member' means—

"(A) a person on active duty, active duty for training, or inactive duty training in the uniformed services in a commissioned, warrant, or enlisted rank or grade, or as a cadet or midshipman of the United States Military Academy, United States Naval Academy,

United States Air Force Academy, or the United States Coast Guard Academy;

"(B) a person who volunteers for assignment to the Ready Reserve of a uniformed service and is assigned to a unit or position in which he may be required to perform active duty, or active duty for training, and each year will be scheduled to perform at least twelve periods of inactive duty training that is creditable for retirement purposes under chapter 67 of title 10;

"(C) a person assigned to, or who upon application would be eligible for assignment to, the Retired Reserve of a uniformed service who has not received the first increment of retirement pay or has not yet reached sixty-one years of age and has completed at least twenty years of satisfactory service creditable for retirement purposes under chapter 67 of title 10; and

"(D) a member, cadet, or midshipman of the Reserve Officers Training Corps while attending field training or practice cruises."

SEC. 4. Section 767 of title 38, United States Code, is amended as follows:

(1) Subsection (a) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Any policy insurance purchased by the Administrator under section 766 of this title shall automatically insure against death—

"(1) any member of a uniformed service on active duty, active duty for training, or inactive duty for training scheduled in advance by competent authority;

"(2) any member of the Ready Reserve of a uniformed service who meets the qualifications set forth in section 765(5)(B) of this title; and

"(3) any member assigned to, or who upon application would be eligible for assignment to, the Retired Reserve or of a uniformed service who meets the qualifications set forth in section 765(5)(C) of this title; in the amount of $20,000 unless such member elects in writing (A) not to be insured under this subchapter, or (B) to be insured in the amount of $15,000, $10,000, or $5,000. The insurance shall be effective the first day of active duty or active duty for training, or the beginning of a period of inactive duty training schedule in advance by competent authority, or the first day a member of the Ready Reserve meets the qualifications set forth in section 765(5)(B) of this title, or the first day a member of the Reserves, whether or not assigned to the Retired Reserve of a uniformed service, meets the qualifications of section 765(5)(C) of this title, or the date certified by the Administrator to the Secretary concerned as the date Servicemen's Group Life Insurance under this subchapter for the class or group concerned takes effect, whichever is the later date."

(2) Subsection (b) is amended by deleting "ninety days" wherever it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof "one hundred and twenty days".

(3) Subsection (c) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) If any member elects not to be insured under this subchapter or to be insured in the amount of $15,000, $10,000, or $5,000, he may thereafter be insured under this subchapter or insured in the amount of $20,000, $15,000, or $10,000 under this subchapter, as the case may be, upon written application, proof of good health, and compliance with such other terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Administrator. Any former member insured under Veterans' Group Life Insurance who again becomes eligible for Servicemen's Group Life Insurance and declines such coverage solely for the purpose of maintaining his Veterans' Group Life Insuraance in effect shall upon termination of coverage under Veterans' Group Life Insurance be automatically insured under Servicemen's Group Life Insurance, if otherwise eligible therefor."

SEC. 5. (a) Section 768 of title 38, United States Code, is amended as follows:

(1) Subsection (a) is amended by inserting "or while the member meets the qualifications set forth in section 765(5)(B) or (C) of this title" immediately before "and such insurance shall cease".

(2) Clauses (2) and (3) of subsection (a) are each amended by deleting "ninety days" wherever it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof "one hundred and twenty days".

(3) Subsection (a) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(4) with respect to a member of the Ready Reserve of a uniformed service who meets the qualifications set forth in section 765(5)(B) of this title, one hundred and twenty days after separation or release from such assignment—

"(A) unless on the date of such separation or release the member is totally disabled, under criteria established by the Administrator, in which event the insurance shall cease one year after the date of separation or release from such assignment, or on the date the insured ceases to be totally disabled, whichever is the earlier date, but in no event prior to the expiration of one hundred and twenty days after separation or release from such assignment; or

"(B) unless on the date of such separation or release the member has completed at least twenty years of satisfactory service creditable for retirement purposes under chapter 67 of title 10 and would upon application be eligible for assignment to or is assigned to the Retired Reserve, in which event the insurance, unless converted to an individual policy under terms and conditions set forth in section 777(e) of this title, shall, upon timely payment of premiums under terms prescribed by the Administrator directly to the administrative office established under section 766(b) of this title, continue in force until receipt of the first increment of retirement pay by the member or the member's sixty-first birthday, whichever occurs earlier.

"(5) with respect to a member of the Retired Reserve who meets the qualifications of section 765(5)(C) of this title, and who was assigned to the Retired Reserve prior to the date insurance under this amendment is placed in effect for members of the Retired Reserve, at such time as the member receives the first increment of retirement pay, or the member's sixty-first birthday, whichever occurs earlier, subject to the timely payment of the initial and subsequent premiums, under terms prescribed by the Administrator, directly to the administrative office established under section 766(b) of this title."

(4) Subsection (b) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) Each policy purchased under this subchapter shall contain a provision, in terms approved by the Administrator, that, except as hereinafter provided, Servicemen's Group Life Insurance which is continued in force after expiration of the period of duty or travel under section 767(b) or 768(a) of this title, effective the day after the date such insurance would cease, shall be automatically converted to Veterans' Group Life Insurance subject to (1) the timely payment of the initial premium under terms prescribed by the Administrator, and (2) the terms and conditions set forth in section 777 of this title. Such automatic conversion shall be effective only in the case of an otherwise eligible member or former member who is separated or released from a period of active duty or active duty for training or inactive duty training on or after the date on which the Veterans' Group Life Insurance program (provided for under section 777 of this title) becomes effective. Servicemen's Group Life Insurance continued in force under section 768(a)(4)(B) or (5) of this title shall not be converted to Veteran's Group Life Insurance. However, a member whose insurance could be continued in force under section 768(a)(4)(B) of this title, but is not so continued, may, effective the day after his insurance otherwise would cease, convert such insurance to an individual policy under the terms and conditions set forth in section 777(e) of this title."

(5) Section 768(c) is hereby repealed.

(b) The amendments made by this Act shall not be construed to deprive any person discharged or released from the uniformed services of the United States prior to the date on which the Veterans' Group Life Insurance program (provided for under section 777 of title 38, United States Code) becomes effective of the right to convert Servicemen's Group Life Insurance to an individual policy under the provisions of law in effect prior to such effective date.

SEC. 6. Section 769 of title 38, United States Code, is amended as follows:

(1) By deleting from paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (a) "is insured under a policy of insurance purchased by the Administrator, under section 766 of this title" and inserting in lieu thereof "is insured under Servicemen's Group Life Insurance".

(2) By redesignating paragraphs (2) and (3) of subsection (a) as paragraphs (3) and (4), respectively, and by adding after paragraph (1) a new paragraph (2) as follows:

"(2) During any month in which a member is assigned to the Ready Reserve of a uniformed service under conditions which meet the qualifications of section 765(5)(B) of this title, or is assigned to the Reserve (other than the Retired Reserve) and meets the qualifications of section 765(5)(C) of this title, and is insured under a policy of insurance purchased by the Administrator, under section 766 of this title, there shall be contributed from the appropriation made for active duty pay of the uniformed service concerned an amount determined by the Administrator (which shall be the same for all such members) as the share of the cost attributable to insuring such member under this policy, less any costs traceable to the extra hazards of such duty in the uniformed services. Any amounts so contributed on behalf of any individual shall be collected by the Secretary concerned from such individual (by deduction from pay or otherwise) and shall be credited to the appropriation from which such contribution was made."

(3) By deleting from the second sentence of paragraph (4) of subsection (a) "subsection (1) hereof, or fiscal year amount under subsection (2) hereof" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraph (1) or (2) hereof, or fiscal year amount under paragraph (3) hereof", and by deleting in such paragraph (4) "this subchapter" each time it appears and "insurance under this subchapter" and inserting in lieu thereof "Servicemen's Group Life Insurance".

(4) The first sentence of subsection (b) is amended by deleting "such insurance" and inserting in lieu thereof "Servicemen's Group Life Insurance"; and the second sentence of such subsection is amended by deleting "this subchapter" and inserting in lieu thereof "Servicemen's Group Life Insurance".

(5) Subsection (c) is amended by deleting "any such insurance" and inserting in lieu thereof "Servicemen's Group Life Insurance".

(6) The last sentence of subsection (d)(1) is amended to read as follows: "All premium payments and extra hazard costs on Servicemen's Group Life Insurance and the administrative cost to the Veterans' Administration of insurance issued under this subchapter shall be paid from the revolving fund.".

(7) By adding at the end of such section a new subsection as follows:

sored life insurance or to use this allotment provision.

In view of the action of the Armed Services Committee and in view of the amendments made by them, the Veterans' Affairs Committee is prepared at this time to accept S. 383 as reported as an amendment to the Veterans' Insurance Act of 1974.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Veterans' Affairs be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 6574, that H.R. 6574 be made the pending business, and that the text of S. 1835, as amended, be substituted for the text of H.R. 6574.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

H.R. 6574 will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 6574) to amend title 38, United State Code, to encourage persons to join and remain in the Reserves and National Guard by providing full-time coverage under Servicemen's Group Life Insurance for such members and certain members of the Retired Reserve, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that all after the enacting clause in H.R. 6574 be stricken, and that the text of S. 1835, as amended, be substituted in lieu thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on the engrossment of the amendment.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that S. 1835 and S. 383 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFELD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, H.R. 6574, as amended, is now the pending business and we have proceeded to the point where we have had third reading. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the provisions of S. 383 were added to S. 1835, and then the House bill was brought up.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is correct.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not recall hearing the provisions of S. 1835, as amended, added as a substitute for H.R. 6574.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was a part of the unanimous consent request.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well, I thank the Chair.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

IDENTIFICATION OF TAX-SUPPORTED POLITICAL ADVERTISEMENTS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, if campaigns for Federal office are to become federally financed projects like housing developments, highways, and flood control levees then they deserve to be accorded the same treatment. Therefore, I am introducing an amendment to the so-called public financing bill that will require tax-supported political materials to be clearly identified and called to the attention of the American people.

My amendment requires that any candidate for Congress, the Senate, President or Vice President who accepts Federal tax funds for his campaign shall print on all of his campaign literature, advertisements, bumper stickers, billboards, or matchbooks a clear notice that they are paid for with tax money.

The Federal Government has developed a very useful policy of identifying tax-supported projects, usually by means of a billboard or sign erected on the project site. Frequently, these notices give the total cost of the project, the Federal share, the local or State share, and a brief description of the project. Perhaps such great detail would not be practical in the case of tax-supported political campaigns, but the principle is valid. So if the Congress is going to turn itself and the entire electoral system into a massive Federal grant-in-aid program, it is entirely fitting and proper that the American people be shown how their tax dollars are being spent.

If candidate X is going to be given so many hundreds of thousands of dollars from the U.S. Treasury, then I believe the American people are entitled to see the fruits of their tax dollars clearly identified. It would be no great inconvenience to tax-supported candidates to include such a notice on their bumper stickers, their buttons, their newspaper ads, and so forth. And I believe the public has a right to be advised of such expenditures.

My amendment requiring this identification is simple and straightforward and it would certainly provide more immediate and valuable information on campaign expenditures to the average taxpayer than some obscure bookkeeping entry in one of the many reports required of political candidates.

When Mr. and Mrs. Taxpayer see their tax dollars being spent on candidate X's billboards, candidate Y's newspaper advertisements and candidate Z's yard signs, it will give them a much clearer idea about the flow of their taxes and the uses to which they are put.

So I would hope the Senate will adopt this amendment and urge my colleagues to do so. The American people should see where their taxes go, and Federal projects—whether dams or bridges or foreign aid or political campaigns—should be identified.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question for the purpose of legislative history?

Mr. DOLE. I yield.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Of course, I wish there would be some indication that this notice had to be in large readable print, and I think the intention would be it could not be in small print.

Mr. DOLE. No, it could not be larger than your name, of course, but the public should be able to read it.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Would it be acceptable to have a rubber stamp, so they could stamp across the literature, "Paid for with Governments funds."

Mr. DOLE. That would be appropriate.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I thank the Senator. That clarifies the question.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute simply to point out that the statement itself calls for a false statement. A person elected under title I in the primary campaign would be entitled only to 50-percent matching funds. Therefore, the statement on the billboard or in television advertising or in newspaper advertising or in the brochures he puts out that it is paid for by public financing only would be in error. It would be paid for only in part by public funds if he elected to take advantage of title I.

I think what we are seeing here is a filibuster by amendment, and this is just another one.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I am not part of a filibuster. I voted for cloture, as the Senator knows. I had in my original amendment "paid for in whole or in part by Federal tax funds." I think that is the intent. If only 50 percent was paid for in tax funds, the statement would contain "only 50 percent," but I did not know how to draft that or how much each of us would take. At least, for legislative history, that would be the intent and the hope.

I could perhaps modify my amendment to show the percentage of the tax funds.

I ask consent to have the modification made to the effect that, if it is not paid for wholly by tax funds, the part that is be shown.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Who yields time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Kansas have his amendment sent to the desk?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I would also point out that the percentage could be different in every instance, because one person may take advantage of it to the extent of 50 percent, and another person may take advantage of it to the extent of 20 percent. It relates to the amount of funds he is able to raise for the purpose of matching, so it could be different in every instance. It is a very bad amendment.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada is entitled to his opinion, but I believe my amendment is entirely appropriate. I might say, as a matter of clarification, to avoid that possibility, I have gone back to the original language of the amendment, which I think would clarify it.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, may I ask that the clerk read the modified amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment as modified.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment, as modified.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment, as modified, is as follows:

On page 39, between lines 20 and 21 insert the following new subsection:

"(c) Any published political advertisement of a candidate electing to receive payments under Title I of this Act shall contain on the face or front page thereof the following notice:

"'Paid for in whole or in part by Federal tax funds.'"

On page 39, line 21 strike out "(c)" and insert in lieu thereof "(d)".

On page 40, line 3, strike out "(d)" and insert in lieu thereof "(e)."

On page 40, line 3, strike out "(d)" and insert in lieu thereof "(e)."

On page 40, line 11, strike out "(e)" and insert in lieu thereof "(f)."

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, before I yield back the remainder of mytime, let me say that, as the Senator pointed out correctly, he voted for cloture the other day. I hope he does so tomorrow.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE), as modified. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH), the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM) are necessarily absent.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG), the Senator from Florida (Mr. GURNEY), the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. MCCLURE), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK), and the Senator from New York (Mr. BUCKLEY) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BELLMON), the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT), and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT) are absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 48, as follows:

[No. 123 Leg.]

YEAS—30

Allen	Ervin	Packwood
Baker	Fannin	Percy
Bartlett	Goldwater	Randolph
Biden	Griffin	Ribicoff
Byrd, Harry F., Jr.	Hansen	Talmadge

Eastland	Kennedy

So Mr. DOLE's amendment, as modified, was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that on the vote which will follow immediately, there be a time limitation of 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That will be the last vote tonight. I understand that the distinguished Senator from Alabama will call up an amendment which will be the pending business tomorrow. At this time, I ask unanimous consent that there be a time limitation of 1 hour on the Allen amendment to be called up, the time to be equally divided between and controlled by the sponsor of the amendment, the distinguished Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN), and the manager of the bill, the distinguished Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the amendment is No. 1141, and it would reduce the overall amount that can be expended very greatly.

The printed amendment by that number has certain figures in it; I ask unanimous consent that I may modify those figures slightly, even though the time limitation has been agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment, as modified, is as follows:

On page 13, line 23, strike out "10 cents" and insert in lieu thereof "8 cents".

On page 15, line 9, strike out "15 cents" and insert in lieu thereof "12 cents".

Mr. MANSFIELD. Does the Senator request the yeas and nays?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order at this time to order the yeas and nays on the Allen amendment which will be called up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HARTKE. Will there be a rollcall vote now on the insurance bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

VETERANS INSURANCE ACT OF 1974

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill H.R. 6574 to amend title 38, United States Code, to increase the maximum amount of Servicemen's Group Life Insurance to $20,000, to provide full-time coverage thereunder for certain members of the Reserves and National Guard, to authorize the conversion of such insurance to Veterans' Group Life Insurance, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Is H.R. 6574 the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business now is H.R. 6574 as amended.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. As amended by what?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As amended by the substantive language of S. 383 and S. 1835.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. A further parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Am I correct in my understanding, then, that S. 1835 and S. 383 have been added to the House bill, or do they take the place of the House bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have replaced the language in the House bill.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Insofar as the substance of S. 383 is concerned, it has not changed and there is no cost to the Government involved in that amendment?

it was never really there," he said. "When Jack Kennedy was killed—I looked forward to running against Jack. And we used to talk about it. We had a hell of a good idea that I think would have helped American politics. We wouldn't necessarily live together but we would travel together as much as possible and appear on the same platform and express our views."

After Mr. Kennedy's assassination, he said, he decided not to run. Then it appeared that the Rockefeller people and the Easterners would take over the party so he got back in the race. "But it never was life or death for me."

He says the idea of his running for President again is usually raised by young people. He spends as much time as any conservative spokesman on the college lecture circuit. Of 10 speaking engagements he had in November, seven were on campuses. He is no longer invited exclusively by conservative campus groups. Many of his appearances now are open to all students, and his staff says he draws large numbers of all political persuasions. He gets several invitations to speak at commencements each year. The Senator reports increasing agreement with his views among students.

"I have a group or two every week in this office," he said. "I will answer their questions and I won't have answered but three or four and one of them will say, 'Now, wait a minute. You're a conservative, and I don't classify myself but I'm agreeing with you." The young especially like his criticisms of big government, he said. "This, I think, is the central theme of the young people."

He has also found a revival of courtesy on campuses. Our first interview took place a few days before he was to speak at Western Kentucky University. "I remember the last time I was there, it was a little rough," he said. "And so was the University of Kentucky. This has all changed. I never get any bad treatment any place. Man, I used to have kids get up and shout 'Bull!' and walk up and down with dirty signs. But the campus has changed completely. These kids, they know what they're there for now."

Nonetheless, enthusiasm for Goldwater among the young is still a little puzzling. I suspect that the explanation for it goes beyond new standards of courtesy on campus or deep beliefs in limited government. There have been numerous indications that students are no longer much interested in government of any kind, limited or otherwise. Back in 1964, James Reston may have revealed the secret of Goldwater's appeal, not only to the young but also to many others afflicted with yearning and hope, but like some other good comment and analysis of that year, it got lost in the national panic as people ran over each other to get out of the way of the Goldwater menace: "Mr. Goldwater may attract all the ultras, and the antis—the forces that are anti-Negro, antilabor, antiforeigner, anti-intellectual—but he also attracts something else that is precisely the opposite of these vicious and negative forces. Mr. Goldwater touches the deep feeling of regret in American life: regret over the loss of religious faith; regret over the loss of simplicity and fidelity; regret over the loss of the frontier spirit of pugnacious individuality; regret, in short, over the loss of America's innocent and idealistic youth."

We now seem to be in another of our periodic spasms of regret over lost innocence. And who in our battered and depleted cadre of political leaders is better equipped to symbolize that loss and regret than square-shouldered, all-American Barry Goldwater? The man is easy to like. Remember how he behaved after he lost the 1964 election—43 million votes to 27 million. Unlike Richard Nixon, the grudge fighter and wound licker who found defeat almost intolerable, Barry Goldwater simply said to hell with it. If the country did not want him, he would go back to his ham radio and his flying. He would rather occupy his mind with inventing an electronic flag-raising machine than with scratching his way back into power in Washington.

And how perceptions change! If he was the Bela Lugosi of American politics in 1964, he has now become the Henry Higgins. Since he has begun to prosper politically again, he is almost cranky about it. He showed me a huge stack of fan mail and said it had come from every state in the union. "My biggest trouble is keeping up with the damned stuff," he said. His voice had the same good-natured but put-upon tone when he talked of having to run all over the country making speeches, trouble-shooting for the party, educating the young, straightening out the President. He was trying to tell me that he was an ordinary man *who desires nothing more than just the ordinary chance to live exactly as he likes and do precisely what he wants.

What, after all, is his politics? It never has been one of engagement, of getting this country moving again. It is a politics of indignation. He looks up from his work table where he is minding his own business and here comes the goddamned Government, meddling with him. It is a politics of defense, of outraged sensitivity, of the violated citizen who just wants to live exactly as he likes.

But wasn't he a threat to the country in 1964? That San Francisco convention hall full of yahoos, haters and nuts was no joke. And he was there with them, taking their cheers and by his mere presence and station egging them on. By God, there was a smell of fascism in the air. It was no less real that it came from the Indians and not from the chief, and the chief stood by and did nothing to stop it.

And yet, there is still unfairness in the judgment if it stops there. Because as scary as that convention was, it was not scary in the same way a George Wallace rally is when the fevers are running high in Birmingham or Meridian or Flint. The difference is in the build of the men at the top. Wallace is a born and bred demagogue. When he finds passion in a crowd he makes blood contact with it, riding it, prodding it, lashing it to his own and thus giving both passions for a moment more power than any two passions singly and separately could ever achieve. George Wallace is a creature of political lust, and if it is hard to distinguish his politics from his sexuality, that is no accident. He is in the great tradition of hungry men who make no distinctions among their appetities.

Goldwater is different. Words like lust and passion do not fit him. His listeners like him but they do not yearn to go to bed with him or he with them. While Wallace is a demagogue, Goldwater is merely a crowd pleaser.

There is no doubt that Barry Goldwater wanted to be President, but I think he is truthful when he says he never lusted for it. Perhaps the voters sensed that. And perhaps that is why they rejected him so decisively, as some women instinctly reject a man when they sense that he is not blood-bonded in his determination.

The instinct is probably sound. It eliminates the frivolous, both in love and politics. Nevertheless, I am still fretful over the way we treated Barry Goldwater that year. It troubles me that we all stood by and let a man who was merely wrongheaded be portrayed to the world as monstrous. When I went to mark my ballot in 1964, I was not asked to vote rationally; I was asked to believe only that Barry Goldwater was a dangerous man. I bought it and thereby let myself be cheated.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

AMENDMENT NO. 1141

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1141 and ask it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 13, line 23, strike out "10 cents" and insert in lieu thereof "5 cents".

On page 15, line 9, strike out "15 cents" and insert in lieu thereof "10 cents".

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, according to the unanimous consent agreement heretofore made, I offer a modification to the amendment, and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 13, line 23, strike out "10 cents" and insert in lieu thereof "8 cents".

On page 15, line 9, strike out "15 cents" and insert in lieu thereof "12 cents".

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, does the distinguished Senator from Alabama wish to speak on his amendment this evening?

Mr. ALLEN. No. I understand that the time limitation will be stated on it tomorrow.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Very well. I thank the Senator.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATOR AIKEN TOMORROW

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that after the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. PROXMIRE) has been recognized under the order previously entered on tomorrow, the distinguished Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN) be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, it is my understanding that there is a time limitation on the Allen amendment as modified of 1 hour?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. It is my understanding also that the order for the resumption of the consideration of the unfinished business at the conclusion of routine morning business tomorrow has already been entered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. It is also my understanding that the pending question at that time will be on adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN. May I state in brief just what the amendment and the modification will do. The amendment would have changed the permissible amount of money to be spent in a primary from 10 cents per person of voting age to 5 cents, and to change the amount that could be spent in a general election from 15 cents down to 10 cents.

The distinguished Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON) stated in colloquy on the floor that he felt these reductions were too large, but if the amendment was submitted at 8 cents per person of voting age in the primary and 12 cents per person of voting age in the general election, he personally—but not speaking for the committee—would support such an amendment.

The overall amount that can be spent would control the amount of the Federal subsidy in the primary because the Federal Treasury potentially would be called upon to pay half that amount and it would of course reduce the amount that the Public Treasury would pay for the general election. Overall, it would accomplish about a 20 percent reduction in overall expenditures. It would be a possible saving of as much as $100 million every 4 years. So the modification has been made. It would accomplish a 20 percent reduction in the permissible amount of overall expenditures. I hope that on tomorrow the Senate will accept the amendment.

PROGRAM

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, the program for tomorrow is as follows:

The Senate will convene at 12 noon.

After the 2 leaders or their designees have been recognized under the standing order, Mr. PROXMIRE will be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes. Mr. AIKEN will then be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes, after which there will be a period for the transaction of routine morning business, of not to exceed 15 minutes, with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

At the conclusion of the transaction of routine morning business, the Senate will resume consideration of the unfinished business, S. 3044, the public campaign financing bill.

The pending question at that time will be on the adoption of the amendment, as modified, by Mr. ALLEN. There will be a yea and nay vote on that amendment. The vote will occur at approximately 1:45 p.m.

Other votes on amendments may occur subsequent to the vote on that amendment and prior to 3 p.m.

At 3 p.m., the debate on the motion to invoke cloture will begin, and there will be 1 hour under the rule. The hour will expire at 4 p.m. At that time, the mandatory quorum call will be issued; and upon the establishment of a quorum, the vote, which will be a rollcall vote, will occur at approximately 4:15 p.m.

Subsequent to the vote on cloture, votes on amendments to the bill will be in order, and yea-and-nay votes will occur.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, if there be no further business to come before the Senate, I move, in accordance with the previous order, that the Senate stand in adjournment until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and at 5:12 p.m. the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, April 9, 1974, at 12 noon.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 8, 1974:

(The above nomination was approved subject to the nominee's commitment to respond to requests to appear and testify before any duly constituted committee of the Senate.)

SENATE FLOOR DEBATES
S.3044
APRIL 9, 1974

It represents a position that is supported not only by the League of Cities and the Conference of Mayors but by the Governors Conference, as well as the AF–CIO.

Before concluding, I would like to add a brief commentary on the measure we are proposing in the context of the Supplemental Bill and the Administration requests.

As much as in any overall budgetary evaluation, the Supplemental Appropriations Bill represents a decision on priorities. It involves a determination based on the competing demands for federal dollars.

In that determination, I believe that our request can be funded without in any way breaking the budget.

Let me note that the Administration has put forward a $6.2 billion supplemental budget request for the Department of Defense alone. Their request includes permission to spend $474 million more in military aid for South Vietnam.

When I look at the lines stretching through the employment offices throughout my states, where 220,000 persons are unemployed where the unemployment rate is now at 7.7 percent, even under the new Labor Department rules, then I think our request is even conservative. We are requesting only $350 million. The Administration is requesting $474 million for guns for Saigon.

I cannot help but believe that the national interest would be better served if the $350 million we requested were subtracted from the $474 million in the military aid request for South Vietnam. I might add that I doubt the necessity or desirability of approving even the remainder.

We believe the additional funds which would be added under our proposal for this fiscal year can be found within the existing budgetary spending levels. Expenditures for public service employment will result in savings in welfare payments and unemployment insurance and increase tax revenues of 40 cents for every dollar spent. In addition, based upon Bureau of Labor Statistics data, it has been estimated that for every 10 public service jobs created, four private sector jobs will be created immediately and that eventually, over the next 18 to 24 months, another six will be generated from the Gross National Product increase resulting from those 14 jobs. In terms of job creation and economic stimulus, it is a bigger bang for the buck than virtually any other program.

The second concluding point I would urge on my colleagues represents my own view of the direction this nation must move if it is to fulfill a wide range of aspirations awakened in part by our own rhetoric and by the rhetoric of those who have gone before us.

In America today, the 4.7 million unemployed and the more than 25 million poor are being denied the promise of justice. When FDR called forth a vision of this country in which there would be full freedom, his vision included freedom from the chains of economic despotism. He looked out upon a nation in which a third of the people were ill-housed, ill-fed and ill-cared for. And he laid out the challenge to end those conditions.

The goals he set forth still appear in the distance, still all too real for millions of Americans. There must be a major expansion in public services, an expansion in which the federal government plays a continuing role, if we are to achieve those goals.

Enlarging the public services made available to the citizens of this country—in combating a host of public ills, from inadequate housing to inadequate medical care—represents the direction we should be marking out for the future. That direction can be tied through public service employment to helping set a course toward full employment, where those able to work and wanting to work have decent, well-paying and important job opportunities available to them.

The measure we are suggesting today will not miraculously carry us to that goal, or to achieving the liberation Franklin Roosevelt desired; but it will be a step closer to those objectives.

I hope that the Committee will accept our suggested amendment.

WASHINGTON, D.C., March 26, 1974.

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.:

The AFL–CIO strongly supports the emergency public service employment amendment sponsored by a bi-partisan group of Senators. The $350 million provided by this amendment is vitally necessary during the current fiscal year. The growing unemployment crisis makes adoption of this amendment a necessity.

ANDREW J. BIEMILLER,
Director, Department of Legislation, AFL–CIO.

NATIONAL LEAGUE OF CITIES,
U.S. CONFERENCE OF MAYORS,
March 28, 1974.

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: We strongly support your efforts, and those of your colleagues, to increase the supplemental appropriations for public service jobs. As Mayor Uhlman of Seattle, Washington, said in testimony before the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor and Health, Education and Welfare, "There is little question that the energy crisis is . . . resulting in massive unemployment throughout the country." As the Mayor indicated in that testimony, in Seattle alone some 50,000 persons are unemployed, and this does not even take into account the impact of the energy crisis. St. Louis has reported energy-related unemployment of almost 7,000 persons in the last few months. Flint, Michigan, reports a 14 percent unemployment rate in February, or some 22,000 persons. Los Angeles projects energy-related unemployment will reach 25,000 by this summer.

The Administration's supplemental appropriation request for public service employment is an inadequate response to such increases in unemployment. The jobs, approximately 35,000, created wil not even replace the employment opportunities being abolished under the phase out of the Public Employment Program (PEP).

Local and state government demonstrate, in the conduct of PEP, the ability to place over 150,000 unemployed in productive public service jobs—jobs which not only provided needed unemployment but also met critical public service needs of our communities. Every evaluation and study of PEP has documented the constructive results of the program.

In our support of your efforts, we would, however, urge you to consider the fact that an increase in FY 1974 supplemental appropriation in the manner proposed will not be possible in FY 1975. The problem of unemployment will, however, remain. Consequently, we believe the consideration must be given, on a priority basis, to legislation for FY 1975 and the future which would authorize funds to create public service jobs. Such legislation should be independent of Title II of CETA since that Act and Title were not designed to meet unemployment problems such as those created by the energy crisis.

Sincerely,

ALLEN E. PRITCHARD, JR.,
Executive Vice Presodent,
National League of Cities.
JOHN J. GUNTHER,
Executive Director,
U.S. Conference of Mayors.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUDDLESTON). Morning business is now closed.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will resume consideration of the unfinished business, S. 3044, which the clerk will state.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment (No. 1141, as modified) of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN), on which there will be 1 hour of debate.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to yield 10 minutes to the distinguished senior Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH) with the time to be charged equally between the two sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Alabama for his courtesy.

Mr. President, I had intended to call up an amendment, but have determined not to do so. However, I do wish to discuss the reasons why I do not intend to call up further amendments from my campaign reform package.

Mr. President, the amendment I had intended to call up is an important element of my package of campaign reform proposals. The amendment would require the Federal Communications Commission to develop regulations requiring each television station to make available, without charge, a limited amount of television time to candidates for Federal office. My amendment would permit each candidate to gain exposure through the television medium and it will prohibit most candidates from purchasing any other television time in addition to that provided by the stations without charge.

Although I believe that the adoption of my amendment is crucial to the passage of true campaign reform legislation, I will refrain from calling it up and asking for a vote because, apparently, the Senate will not have the opportunity to seriously consider any campaign reform proposals which are alternatives to "public financing."

This fact is evident because of the results of two Senate votes conducted last week on amendments to the Federal Election Campaign Act. On one vote, my amendment to allow all congressional candidates to send—without postage—two mass mailings to each of their constituents was tabled without a vote being taken on its merits. On the second vote, the Senate defeated the Baker amendment—No. 1134—after objections were made that, as a tax-related amendment, it should not be considered by the Senate, for it would be subject to a point of order in the House of Representtives.

This latter vote—in which the Senate defeated Senator BAKER's amendment to substitute the public financing provisions of the pending bill with a plan to finance future campaigns with a 100-percent tax credit for a contribution up to $50 on a single, or $100 on a joint return—has indicated that supporters of campaign reform who favor the tax credit approach to campaign financing are placed on the horns of a dilemma. Since many constitutional authorities are convinced that any tax-related measure must originate in the House, those of us who support the tax credit approach are barred from presenting the Senate with a viable alternative to public financing until the House has considered this proposal or it can be attached by the Committee on Finance to an appropriate revenue bill from the House.

For this reason, I would prefer that a final vote on the pending bill be deferred until the parliamentary situation is such that the alternative approach can be considered, unless the tax credit approach can receive a serious debate, it will be evident that the Senate is faced with but one alternative. The public financing concept will have been steamrolled through the Senate.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that such a delay would allow the Senate to consider the pros and cons of both approaches to reform in campaign financing. Since the radical changes envisioned by the supporters of public financing bill will not take effect until the 1976 general election, I see no reason why a vote must be taken on this bill before alternative avenues of approach to campaign reform have been fully explored. The Senate has already passed several bills to reduce the influence of big money in political campaigns.

One bill would shorten the campaign period to approximately 8 weeks, thus reducing campaign costs. Another proposal, S. 372, places limits on campaign contributions and expenditures, establishes a Federal Election Commission, and strengthens the disclosure requirements for all candidates and their campaign committees.

I have supported each of these measures and I have urged the Senate to strengthen their provisions by adopting my "package" of reform proposals. Rather than go from one extreme—in which campaigns are financed by unrestricted private contributions—to another extreme—in which the Federal Government becomes directly involved in campaign financing—I would favor the implementation and enforcement of laws designed to shorten campaigns, restrict contributions and expenditures, and force all candidates to disclose the source of their campaign funds. Enforcement of these measures—together with the enactment of my package of reform proposals—should end many of the abuses of our political campaign process without creating any additional problems.

As I have stated on previous occasions, I am opposed to public financing at this time because I am convinced that it tends to emphasize, rather than deemphasize, the use of money in political campaigns. In addition, public financing may separate the candidate from his constituency. For, once a candidate learns that he can tap the Federal Treasury for his campaign funds, he may be encouraged to allow campaign consultants to manage his campaign through use of the latest Madison Avenue techniques, instead of carrying his campaign to the people directly through personal contact with prospective voters.

As an alternative to "public financing" I have sponsored legislation to allow each taxpayer to take a 50 percent tax credit for a political contribution of $150 by a single taxpayer or $300 or a joint return. I am convinced that the "tax credit" approach to campaign financing reform is a better alternative to "public financing" because it encourages every taxpayer to voluntarily contribute to the candidate of his or her choice. An expanded use of the present tax credit for political contributions should broaden the base of campaign contributors and relieve candidates for Federal office from the necessity of soliciting large donations from a few wealthy individuals or organizations.

Mr. President, my proposal (S. 3131) to finance political campaigns through an increase in the maximum tax credit allowed for political contributions is the key element in my "package" of campaign reform proposals. Since this proposal cannot be adequately considered until it has been attached to a House-passed bill, it is obvious that the Senate cannot engage in a serious debate of its provisions at this time. Moreover, the Senate has already tabled the second element of my campaign reform "package" which would have reduced campaign costs by permitting congressional candidates to make two mass mailings at Government expense.

Mr. President, I am committed to the passage of meaningful campaign reform legislation. I am also unwilling to further delay the work of the Senate. For, in addition to campaign reform many other important issues are demanding our attention. I intend, therefore, to vote in favor of closing the debate on S. 3044 in the hope that the Senate can move to a vote on the "public financing" bill.

I remain convinced, however, that my proposals—taken as a whole—would regulate the conduct of future campaigns without injecting an unwarranted infusion of Federal funds into the political campaign process. Until "public financing" becomes the "law of the land," I will continue to fight for enactment of my alternative proposals.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask unanimous consent that the time not be charged to either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATHAWAY). Without objection, it is so ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CELEBRATION OF 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF HERBERT HOOVER

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, on April 1, I submitted a concurrent resolution calling for the celebration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of Herbert Hoover on August 10 of this year in the town of West Branch, Iowa. I know that many Members of this body, regardless of party affiliation, hold the memory of this great man in high regard; and in testimony of this fact, I am delighted to announce that 25 Senators already have contacted me wishing to cosponsor the resolution. I will ask that a list of these sponsors appear at the end of my remarks.

Mr. President, Herbert Hoover is known for his many careers, as mining engineer, humanitarian, President, statesman, and author. In his lifetime, he has done some very important things for his country and the world. His relief activities are unparalleled.

His humanitarian career began in 1900 when he directed the food relief for victims of the Boxer Rebellion; then in 1914 he organized the American Relief Committee; and, as chairman, expedited the return of 120,000 U.S. citizens who were stranded in Europe at the outbreak of World War I. Later that year, with Belgium and northern France occupied by the Germans, he directed the relief of 10 million persons in the area who had faced starvation. In 4 years of war he got a billion dollars worth of food to those people. Once we entered the war, Hoover was appointed U.S. food administrator by President Wilson and pioneered methods of mobilizing food resources in wartime. After the Armistice he was appointed Director General of Relief and Reconstruction of Europe and supervised the distribution of $3.3 billion of food and clothing to millions of cold and hungry persons in 30 countries.

In 1921, Hoover helped obtain relief to the starving masses in Russia; and in 1927, when the Mississippi Valley had its worst flood in the memory of man, Hoover successfully undertook the job of moving a million and a half Americans to safety.

His humane activities continued in 1946 when he was appointed coordinator of Food Supply for World Famine by President Truman. In that capacity, Hoover traveled 35,000 miles to 22 countries threatened with famine and as a result of his recommendations, the United States shipped more than 6 million tons of bread grains to the people of the hungry nations.

His Government career, after 7 years of service as Secretary of Commerce and 4 years as President of the United States, was capped by distinguished service, while in his seventies, as head of the two Hoover Commissions for organizing the executive branch of government. The two "Hoover Plans" made objective and nonpartisan recommendations, more than half of which were adopted, for economy and efficiency of Government operations.

Mr. President, this brief résumé of events in the life of Herbert Hoover conveys some of the reasons why I feel so deeply that we should honor his memory by providing for appropriate ceremonies commemorating the 100th anniversary of his birth.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a list of the sponsors of Senate Concurrent Resolution 79 be printed in the RECORD:

There being no objection, the list of sponsors was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SPONSORS OF S. CON. RES. 79

Mr. Goldwater, Mr. Bennett, Mr. Buckley, Mr. Dole, Mr. Domenici, Mr. Dominick, Mr. Eastland, Mr. Fannin, Mr. Griffin, Mr. Gurney, Mr. Hansen, Mr. Hatfield, and Mr. Hughes.

Mr. Case, Mr. Clark, Mr. Cotton, Mr. Javits, Mr. McClellan, Mr. Randolph, Mr. Scott, Mr. Stafford, Mr. Stevenson, Mr. Taft, Mr. Tower, Mr. Tunney, and Mr. Walker.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield myself 6 minutes.

Mr. President, this amendment is in truth a campaign reform amendment—certainly, insofar as the pending measure is concerned—because it would accomplish a 20-percent overall cut in the permissible amounts that could be spent by a candidate for the House or the Senate or the presidential nomination or the general election—an overall cut of 20 percent in the permissible amounts that could be expended.

The one exception is where a minimum is provided for a small State. There would be no change in that.

This would be accomplished by changing two figures in the bill, one being a provision that in general elections, there may be spent 15 cents per person of voting age in the political subdivision from which the candidate is running, and 10 cents in primary elections.

This little amendment would save the Federal Treasury, save the taxpayers of the country, upwards of $60 million every 4 years. We talk about campaign reform, cutting down on the amount of expenditures. Public financing does not accomplish that. This amendment is an effort to reduce the overall cost of elections.

The Senator from Alabama has already tried to add amendments cutting the amount of individual contributions. The first amendment was to cut the amount that could be contributed in a Presidential election to $250, and in House and Senate races to $100, the theory meing that that is all the Treasury would match and that, therefore, there should not be any contribution over that. That amendment was turned down.

Then the Senator from Alabama offered another amendment which would raise those figures a great deal, to provide a $2,000 contribution permitted in Presidential races, a $1,000 contribution in the House and the Senate. That amendment was voted down by the Senate.

That leads the Senator from Alabama to the inescapable conclusion that the proponents of this bill, this public financing measure, are not interested in campaign reform. What they are interested in, particularly in the primaries, is providing campaign expenses for themselves. They want the best of two worlds. They want contributions permitted up to $3,000 per person, $6,000 per couple. They want those contributions, and then they want a matching system, too. So they do not want reform. They want public subsidy added to the amount garnered from the private sector.

The Senator from Alabama has tried to knock out the campaign subsidy provision, but a majority in the Senate, possibly even a two-thirds majority, wants to see their primary campaigns financed up to one-half, wants to see their general election campaigns financed 100 percent.

This little amendment is just a drop in the bucket. It would save approximately $50 million or $60 million every 4 years. But it would be a step in the right direction. It would cut down on the amount of Federal subsidy to the candidates for Federal offices. In the compaigns for the Presidential nomination, it would accomplish a considerable reduction.

Whereas now, Mr. President, the bill would permit subsidies of up to $7.5 million to the various candidates for the Presidential nomination of the two parties, this amendment would cut those subsidies to approximately $5.7 million. That is a pretty good little subsidy—$5.7 million to subsidize 15 or 20 candidates for the Presidential nomination. I believe they could skimp along on that. I believe that the Senators and the Members of the House who are going to run for the Presidential nomination could get by on a subsidy of $5.7 million.

I see the distinguished Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON) entering the Chamber. This would not cut the subsidy of the Senator from California, because it does not apply to the upcoming election, but it would cut down on the subsidy allowed a candidate of a major party for the Senate in California from $2,121,000 to a mere $1,697,000. As soon as he got nominated by one of the two major parties, he would go to the Treasury and pick up a check for $1,697,000 to run his senatorial race.

Mr. President, it seems to the Senator from Alabama that this is not hitting the politicians of the country too heavily, to cut down on the overall expenditures on which the subsidy is based—to cut down on overall expenditures.

I am hopeful that the Senate will agree to this amendment. I might say that the amendment was originally reduced to cut the 15 cents per person of voting age to 10 cents, which would have been a one-third reduction from what is provided in the bill; and in the primaries, from 10 cents per person of voting age to 5 cents.

When the Senator from Alabama explained his amendment on the floor, the distinguished manager of the bill stated that if the change was made to 12 cents per person of voting age in general elections and to 8 cents per person of voting age in primaries, he would support the amendment. So I am hopeful that the Senate will follow the lead of the distinguished manager of the bill and accept the amendment.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CANNON. I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) certainly has the appearance of being an easy answer to the campaign funding abuses of the past 2 years; but in my judgment, it is an answer in appearance only, not in substance.

We all agree on the need to eliminate the influence of "big money" in the political process. So, the argument goes, we simply should drastically curtail campaign expenditures, or at least curtail them beyond the present bill. It is a remedy that everybody can understand, and I think it has great appeal: Just cut the amount a candidate can spend, and everything will be all right.

But while this amendment may be an easy answer to one problem, it only opens up another series of problems. By reducing the spending limits, this amendment would erode what little competition still exists in the political process. As we have seen, incumbent Congressmen and Senators are reelected—95 percent of the time in the past few years—largely because they have been able to outspend their challengers on the average of 2 to 1. S. 3044 with its public financing provisions, will diminish the fund-raising advantage incumbents now enjoy.

But the amendment now before the Senate would make it even more difficult to beat incumbent office holders, despite public financing. With all the advantages inherent in incumbency—the frank, media access, for example—challengers must be able to spend enough money to become known. Senator ALLEN's proposal—8 cents a voter in the primary and 12 cents in the general election—would be totally insufficient.

I think the Committee on Rules and Administration gave careful consideration to this matter and arrived at as equitable a figure as could be found.

Mr. President, I spent $251,000 in my general election campaign against an incumbent Senator. Only two other challengers, my good friend from Colorado (Mr. HASKELL), and the Presiding Officer (Mr. HATHAWAY) spent less money in a successful race against an incumbent.

But my opponent in 1978 would be able to spend even less than that should this amendment be accepted. With only 12 cents a voter, it would be nearly impossible for any challenger to present his case to the people.

The American political system desperately needs more competition for public office, not less. I urge my colleagues to join me in defeating this amendment.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I have mixed emotions about the amendment. As the Senator from Alabama pointed out earlier, I did say if he changed his figures from 10 cents in the general election to 12 cents and from 5 cents in the primary to 8 cents, I would vote for that and I intend to vote for it. I am not sure where the correct balance is as to the formula. I do know that in some of the larger States under the formula we used it mounts up to a lot of money.

For example, in California, under the 15-cent provision in the general election, $2,122,154 could be spent. In the primary election in California the figure could be $1,414,300 under the bill as we reported it. Under the Senator's amendment those figures would become $1,697,160 in the general election and $1,131,440 in the primary. That still is a substantial amount of money and I am not prepared to say what is needed in the larger States. I know in some elections, as pointed out on the floor the other day, in the ten largest spending States in the last election, all would be reduced somewhat by the limits we had in the bill.

We have in the bill two provisions that would not be affected by the amendment. One of those provisions is that in the primary election a person could use his formula times the voting age population or the sum of $125,000, whichever was greater; and in the general election, the formula times the voting age population or the sum of $175,000, whichever was greater. So he arbitrarily arrives at a figure that the smaller States, that are small in population, but many of them small in area, such as my State, would be able to spend in both elections a sum of $300,000. If this formula that is proposed by the Senator from Alabama were adopted there would be more States that could be affected by that base level. In other words, most of the States would be cut below that base level and more than would qualify under that base level formula than now qualify under the present formula that the Committee on Rules and Administration wrote into the bill.

As I say, I have sort of mixed emotions because I am not technically able to speak on this subject for those people who represent the larger States, States which require a lot more money from the standpoint of campaign financing. My distinguished colleague on the committee, the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. COOK) would be able to speak for his State.

The figure for Kentucky under the formula we had in the Senate bill would be $335,250 in the general election and $223,500 in the primary election. Those figures would be changed under the formula of the distinguished Senator from Alabama to $268,200 in the general election and $178,800 in the primary election. So I would have to look to my distinguished colleague from Kentucky on what should be done in his State. As far as I am concerned the floor we have put in for the small States is ample. I believe it perhaps could be cut somewhat. That has been suggested by a number of Senators; that we should go below that amount. I am willing to abide by that and I would support the floor.

So while I intend to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, I look to my colleagues who would be directly affected on this on what could be done in their particular States.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Nevada that this is a situation that really applies itself to the large States in the Union and I am sorry Senators from those States are not here to speak to it.

I can say with all honesty to the Senator from Alabama that in my primary I did not spend $223,500 and did not spend $335,250 in my general election. I know that we probably spent more than $268,200, which is the 12-cent figure, and that was 5½ years ago.

I am not really sure until we get into a campaign whether we are going to get caught in inflation like everyone else.

I know I can speak without any hesitation at all that I was amazed to learn that when the next election came in my State, the cost for each candidate almost doubled the amount I had spent.

I think what does bother me is this: Let us take the 8 cents in the primary. Even if a candidate gets the bulk rate, I am not sure he could make mailings to all of his constituents under an 8-cent figure. We know that it now costs 10 cents for stamps. If one got the bulk rate, could he get envelopes, stamps, and enclosures and make up the difference in the apparent bulk rate of 7 or 7½ cents, with all printing costs or information costs, and make one mailing to constituents?

The answer is that it probably would be next to impossible to do.

I think we also have to be fair and honest and say it is probably impossible that we could make a mailing to all of our eligible voters as it is. I only hope that, if we are not successful with cloture this afternoon, what we are really not seeing is that the Senator from Alabama has decided to change the 15 and 10 to 8 and 12, if cloture is not available, we are going to have a whole series of amendments so that, instead of 8 and 12, it will be 7 and 11, and then 6 and 10, and then 5 and 9, and so on and so forth, in an effort, somehow or other, to keep the debate on this bill going longer and longer and longer, because I think that is really what we are discussing here.

We went over these figures in the Committee on Rules and Administration. We went over them quite extensively. If one believes this is the course to take and believes that we should take a try on this kind of financing, with which I have all kinds of problems in my own mind, I must say to my colleagues that, if in fact we are going to do it, and if it is successful, then I do not think its very import should destroy the system, because the funds expected and the figure allocated to the individual voter will result in an effective campaign not even being able to be waged, and we would find, as a result of our attempts to keep cutting the figures down and down and down, that we would have to repeal a law because, even though it was a good law, it could not accomplish the purpose of it.

Every Senator has to vote based on the population of his State and based on whether he can or cannot agree with respect to the figures as between 10 and 15 and 8 and 12 cents.

I might say for the Senator's benefit that I have just found out, and I think in fairness I should only say, that the bulk rate could be accomplished at 6.1 cents. For those who believe that between 6.1- and the 8-cent rate their entire campaign expenditures can be made in one mailing to all their constituents and nothing more—no radio, no television, no other campaign of any kind that costs funds—that his entire expenditure, all gasoline, all travel, and everything else, can be represented in the difference between 6.1 and 8 cents, if they want to make a mailing to all the constituents that are available in their States, then that is the decision each individual has to make. I do not think, within the framework of the bill, it is possible.

What we are, in effect, saying, is that "We are going to save you money," but in the effort to save them money, we are going to make it impossible to have a campaign which can be financed. In effect, we are going to give the people a campaign financing bill under which the candidates are going to cheat right from the beginning. I think the American people have sounded loud and clear that that is the very thing they want to get rid of.

It would be the Senator from Kentucky's hope that he could conduct a campaign with $335,000, but I think it is going to be very difficult, and one of the reasons it is going to be very difficult is the present status we have in the eyes of the American people. But I do not think we ought to do it in the course of saying, "Here, we are going to save you $60 million in 4 years," because we might find a pet project in Alabama in the form of public works which might be worth over $60 million, and nobody in the United States would know about it except the people of Alabama. Somehow or other, we have a habit of spending all the money the American people contribute in taxes. Unfortunately, we spend more.

The Senator from Kentucky is opposed to deficit spending, and has always voted against deficit spending. But if we put it in the 8 and 12 as opposed to 10 and 15 cents, in the light of the 8-cent cost, if this program is adopted could a candidate make even one general mailing to all of the eligible voters in his State? I think the answer would have to be "No." I do not think he could run a campaign.

So this Senator will vote against the amendment of the Senator from Alabama only with the understanding that it does not change the money on this list for the Commonwealth of Kentucky, and probably it would be difficult for the Senator from Kentucky to raise amounts of this kind, because I think it is going to be very difficult to raise campaign funds.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, how much time remains to the Senator from Alabama?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has 16 minutes remaining.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield myself 6 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for 6 minutes.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I have been somewhat mystified by the thrust of the argument of Senators supporting public financing. It does not seem to be part of their theory of what reform is to reduce the overall cost of campaigning. The word "restraint" on the part of candidates does not seem to be part of their vocabulary.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one slight suggestion?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. COOK. If the Senator takes campaign expenditures for the two Senators running for the last campaign in my State and the maximum on the list, it is about half or a little more than half that each candidate spent in that election.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the Senator for his interruption and his comment.

Mr. COOK. I apologize.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope that the next time he will use his own time for making a comment.

The idea of restraint on the part of candidates has not seemed to enter into the thinking of those who are supposed to be for campaign reform. I submit that paying bills for campaigns out of the Public Treasury is not the Senator from Alabama's idea of campaign reform. Reducing the overall cost of elections, reducing the amount of individual contributions, and keeping them in the private sector is the idea of the Senator from Alabama as to what campaign reform is.

I want to commend the distinguished Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS), who is not here at this time. He has limited his contributions to $100. The Representative from Ohio, Mr. VANIK, states that he is not accepting contributions or making any expenditures.

So one ingredient that has not been mixed into this so-called campaign reform bill is the idea of restraint on the part of candidates.

Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama would mix a little restraint—restraint in spending taxpayers' money—into the idea of campaign reform. But every time the Senator from Alabama tries to cut down on campaign expenditures, tries to cut down on the amount of individual contributions, he does not get any support from those who cry out for the need of campaign reform. They are opposed to it. They want what they can get out of the private sector in the primaries plus what they can get out of the Government. That is not campaign reform—that is just escalating the cost of campaigns.

Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky is worried about inflationary costs of campaigns. Well, the drafters of this bill thought of that, too, and they wrote a little provision in here on page 17 of the bill that provides an escalator in the bill. It is reform. It is campaign reform. They wrote a little escalator clause that says that while the cost of campaigning goes up, in effect, the cost of the Government subsidy, the amount of the Government subsidy goes up. There it is in black and white. So the Senator from Kentucky need not worry about that.

Mr. President, apparently the so-called reformers—that is, the spenders of the funds from the Federal Treasury—are not willing to cut down on the amount of the Government contributions. The amount of the campaign contributions.

We passed a bill in July limiting the contributions to $3,000. That is too high. That is a big contribution, in the view of the Senator from Alabama. It permits two contributions, one by the man and one by the wife. That would be $6,000. That is a pretty big contribution. That is all this bill would do. We have already passed a bill such as that.

But it is not campaign reform to say that the American taxpayer has to pay the cost of the general election campaign of every Senator and every Member of the House of Representatives.

Nor is it reform to provide that the American taxpayer has got to pay up to $7.5 million—and this is something that the American public does not realize—for each candidate for the Presidential nomination of the two major parties. Fifteen or 20 or 25 people are going to be running for the Presidential nomination. This will match the contributions of the various candidates provided that they first get a campaign fund of $250,000 in small contributions. That would then match the contributions of all of them, including the $250,000, up to the point where the Government had paid the $7.5 million to each of the various candidates.

Mr. President, there are some 10 or 15 Senators who would not turn down a draft for the presidential nomination; and there are some Senators who would wage an active campaign.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Alabama has expired.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized for an additional 2 minutes.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, this subsidy program, this welfare program for the benefit of politicians, is not campaign reform. The Senator from Alabama is taking a bad bill and is trying to make the bill 20 percent less bad by reducing the overall campaign expenditures permitted under the law. That is what the amendment does. So we are going to see whether the reformers want reform or whether they want a Federal subsidy. It is as simple as that.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time. However, before doing so, I ask unanimous consent that a tabulation showing the amounts to the various States under the various formulae be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the tabulation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[1] Presidential primary candidates may spend in any State twice the amount a candidate for Senate nomination may spend, subject to a national limit of 10¢ times total VAP in connection with campaign for presidential nomination.

[2] VAP for the primary election includes all geographical area populations because the outlying areas could participate in the presidential nominating process to the extent that they are permitted to send delegates to the national nominating conventions.

[3] VAP for the general election includes all geographical area populations except Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands because their residents are not permitted to vote in the presidential general election.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, may I say that I apologize to the Senator from Alabama for taking any of his time.

Mr. President, how much time have we remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has 7 minutes remaining.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I would be perfectly willing to yield the entire 7 minutes to the Senator from Alabama, if he wishes to use that time along with his time, so that he will not feel that he was interrupted.

Other than that, we would be willing to yield back the time on this side. However, I would be willing to make it available to the Senator from Alabama, if he would wish to use it.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I would much prefer that the Senator from Kentucky use his time because I feel that the argument he is making on behalf of not reducing this subsidy is certainly having an adverse effect on his position. I hope that he will use the remainder of his 7 minutes.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I think we have made our point. I yield back the remainder of our time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, how much time have I remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has 8 minutes remaining.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendments, en bloc, of the Senator from Alabama. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BIDEN), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), and the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), are necessarily absent.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT), and the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG), are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT), is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 43, as follows:

So Mr. ALLEN's amendment (No. 1141, as modified) was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HELMS). Pursuant to the previous order, the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON) is now recognized to call up an amendment.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield to me briefly?

Mr. STEVENSON. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Alabama, reserving my right to the floor.

VISIT TO THE SENATE BY MEMBERS OF THE GERMAN BUNDESTAG

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, we are honored today to have visiting us eight members of the German Bundestag, headed by the President of the German Bundestag, Mrs. Annemarie Renger.

I understand that Mrs. Annemarie Renger is the only woman head of a parliament anywhere in the world, so I suppose we can all agree that women's lib has come to Germany first of all.

Will our distinguished guests who are now seated in the rear of the Chamber please rise when I call their names.

Mrs. Annemarie Renger, President of the German Bundestag. Hans Katzer, Hermann Hoecherl, Dr. Herbert Ehrenberg, Uwe Ronneburger, Hans-Jurgen

Wischnewski, Hermann Schmidt, Dr. Richard von Weizsacker. May I also present His Excellency Berndt von Staden, the Ambassador from the Federal Republic of Germany to the United States.

RECESS FOR 2 MINUTES

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a 2-minute recess for the purpose of greeting our distinguished visitors, and that the distinguished Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON) retain his right to the floor.

There being no objection, at 2:06 p.m., the Senate took a recess until 2:08 p.m., whereupon the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. HELMS).

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD short biographies of each one of our distinguished guests.

There being no objection, the biographies were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RENGER, ANNEMARIE (SPD)

President of the German Bundestag.
Social Democratic Party.
Born October 7, 1919.
Widow.
Employed in publishing business.
From 1945 to 1952, private secretary of Dr. Kurt Schumacher.
Member of Bundestag since 1953.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during further consideration of the pending bill, Burton Wides of my office, be permitted the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I send an unprinted amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

On page 10, beginning with line 17, strike out through line 6 on page 11, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(b)(1) Every eligible candidate who is nominated by a major party is entitled to payments for use in his general election campaign in an amount equal to the sum of—

"(A)(i) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of President, 40 percent of the amount of expenditures the candidate may make in connection with that campaign under section 504, and

"(ii) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Senator or Representative, 25 percent of the amount of expenditures the candidate may make in connection with that campaign under section 504, and

"(B) the amount of contributions he and his authorized committees received for that campaign.

"(2) Every eligible candidate who is nominated by a minor party is entitled to payments for use in his general election campaign in an amount equal to the sum of—

"(A) an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount to which a major party candidate for election to the same office is entitled under paragraph (1)(A) as the total number of popular votes received by the candidate of that minor party for that office in the preceding general election bears to the average number of popular votes received by the candidates of major parties for that office in the preceding election, and

"(B) the amount of contributions he and his authorized committees received for that campaign.

On page 11, beginning with line 19, strike out through line 23 on page 12 and insert in lieu thereof the following: to the sum of—

"(i) an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount to which a major party candidate for election to the same office is entitled under paragraph (1)(A) as the number of popular votes received by that candidate (other than as the candidate of a major or minor party) in the preceding general election for that office bears to the average number of votes cast in the preceding general election for all major party candidates for that office, and

"(ii) the amount of contributions he and his authorized committee received for that campaign.

"(4) An eligible candidate who is the nominee of a minor party or whose eligibility is determined under section 502(d)(2) and who receives 5 percent or more of the total number of votes cast in an election, is entitled to receive payments under section 506 after the election for expenditures made or incurred in connection with his general election campaign in an amount equal to the sum of—

"(A) an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount to which a major party candidate for election to the same office is entitled under parargaph (1)(A) as the number of popular votes received by that candidate in the election bears to the average number of votes cast for all major party candidates for that office in that election, and

"(B) the amount of contributions he and his authorized committees received for that campaign.

"(5) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of President, no contribution from any person shall be taken into account to the extent that it exceeds $250 when added to the amount of all other contributions made by that person to or for the benefit of that candidate for his general election campaign; and

"(B) in the case of any other candidate for election to Federal office, no contribution from any person shall be taken into account to the extent that it exceeds $100 when added to the amount of all other contributions made by that person to or for the benefit of that candidate for his general election campaign.

"(6) No candidate may receive payments under paragraph (2)(B), 3(B)(ii), or (4)(B) in excess of an amount which bears the same ratio to one-half of the difference between the amount to which the candidate is entitled under paragraph (2)(A), (3)(B)(i), or (4)(A) (whichever is applicable) and the amount of expenditures the candidate may make in connection with his general election campaign under section 504 as the amount to which he is entitled under paragraph (2)(A), (3)(B)(i), or (4)(A) (whichever is applicable) bears to the amount to which a candidate for election to the same office is entitled under paragraph (1)(A).

On page 12, line 24, strike out "(5)" and insert in lieu thereof "(7)".

EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS

SEC. 305. Effective on the day after the date of enactment of this act, section 615(a) of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(a)(1) No individual may make a contribution to or for the benefit of a candidate for use in his primary election campaign, or for use in his general election campaign which, when added to the sum of all other contributions made by that individual for use in that primary or general election campaign, exceeds $3,000.

"(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (c)(3), no person (not an individual) may make a contribution to or for the benefit of a candidate for use in his campaigns for nomination and for election to Federal office which, when added to the sum of all other contributions made by that person for use in either or both of those campaigns, exceeds $6,000.".

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I offer this amendment on behalf of myself and Senators TAFT, DOMENICI, MONDALE, CRANSTON, HUMPHREY, and BEALL.

The purpose of public financing is to eliminate the large and potentially corrupting contributions of big money from our politics. This amendment would accomplish that purpose but it would not eliminate the innocent, small contributions which are a healthy form of participation in our political system.

This amendment would limit the campaign contributions of individuals to Federal campaigns to $3,000 in primaries and $3,000 in general election campaigns. In that respect, it does not alter the provisions of the bill reported by the Rules Committee.

It would also limit the contributions of committees to $6,000, which could be allocated between a general election campaign and a primary election campaign as the committee sees fit.

This amendment then establishes a system of partial public financing as opposed to the 100 percent public financing which is established in the bill reported by the Rules Committee. Instead of 100 percent public financing, congressional candidates would receive a front-end subsidy 25 percent of the expenditure limit applicable to congressional campaigns. In addition, private contributions of $100 or less would be matched with public funds on a dollar-for-dollar basis.

Presidential candidates would receive a 40-percent entitlement and matching funds for private contributions of $250 or less, again on a dollar-for-dollar basis. That means that congressional candidates could receive up to 62.5 percent and presidential candidates up to 75 percent of the respective expenditure limits from public sources, instead of 100 percent.

This amendment strikes a fair balance between those who want 100 percent and those who want nothing. It decreases the cost to the Treasury of the financing of campaigns for Federal office. If this amendment prevails, the amounts from the checkoff would be more likely to cover the total cost of public financing. It does not in any way affect the committee bill's treatment financing of primary election campaigns. It preserves the healthy and innocent participation of small contributors. It eliminates the dangerous participation that comes as a result of large contributions to campaigns for Federal office. It would more clearly be constitutional than any measure which effectively prohibited all public funds, no matter how small.

The prospect of waiting for the Treasury to send $950,000 to a candidate for the U.S. Senate in Illinois is offensive. It is offensive to me. It would be offensive, I daresay, to many members of the public, and it is dangerous. A candidate could then literally buy a campaign. Candidates ought to be under some compulsion to seek small contributions from the people, and the people ought to be permitted that form of political participation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that William Staszak of my staff be permitted the privilege of the floor during the consideration of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT) and the distinguished Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI) have worked long and hard on this proposal. It is a compromise. It is intended not only to eliminate the corrupt influence of large money in our politics but also is intended to end the debate which has swirled around this bill. It will not make everybody satisfied, but it does give us an opportunity to get an important job done and to get on with the rest of our business in the Senate. Senator DOMENICI and Senator TAFT have been my partners in this endeavor. They have worked at great length on it, and have done so very resourcefully.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield to the Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT).

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Illinois for his initiative in this matter as well as the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI) and others who have agreed to cosponsor this amendment to the pending campaign reform bill. We hope it will serve as a basis for compromise on public financing and thus move the debate forward considerably.

The pending bill, without our proposed amendment, provides Federal matching payments for all contributions of $100 or less for primary election congressional candidates—$250 or less in the case of Presidential candidates—who collect certain minimum amounts of private funding on their own, and 100 percent public financing for the general election campaigns of major party candidates, up to overall spending limits. Limitations on private contributions would be $3,000 for individuals and $6,000 for any organization such as COPE or BIPAC.

By contrast, our amendment would restructure public financing for general elections, so that major party congressional candidates could receive 25 percent of the campaign spending limit in Federal funds upon their nomination with no matching required, and $1 of additional funding for each dollar collected in private contributions of $100 or less for congressional races. A similar arrangement, with a 40 percent downpayment and matching contributions up to $250, would be applied to Presidential general elections. As under the present bill, minor party candidates would operate under the same system but be eligible for proportionately less Federal funding in general elections, based upon their performance. Limitations on contributions for organizations would be lowered from $6,000 in primary and general elections separately to $6,000 total.

I believe that basic reforms in campaigns financing are essential so that our citizens will be certain that their Government is not being operated to satisfy the interests of the few large contributors, rather than the Nation as a whole. The most important step we can take in this direction is to place strict limitations on the amounts which any single individual or organization can contribute to a candidate. The bill before the Senate attempts to do this, but has been loopholed with an amendment allowing contributions of up to $6,000 form organizations.

The bill before us also provides public financing, in recognition that these limits in themselves will exacerbate the task of raising enough campaign funds for both incumbent and challenger to make their views known to the public. However, I am concerned that the bill will allow private contributions too high to eliminate the abuses it seeks to correct; allow more public financing than necessary for general elections; foster a mushrooming of wasteful campaign expenditures at taxpayers' expense and the proliferation of campaign expert firms which have grown up already to an alarming extent; and unnecessarily eliminate a meaningful role for small private contributions.

The system we are proposing would clamp down on the size of private contributions; provide full public financing for the crucial initial portion of campaign expenses but force heavy reliance upon small private contributions for remaining expenses; continue and increase the importance of the role of grass roots activities, and the small contributors involved, in campaign finance; and reduce Federal costs over the present bill by thousands of dollars for each campaign—in fact, so far as the Presidential and possibly even senatorial races are concerned, by millions of dollars.

I am hopeful that the merits of this particular public financing approach will appeal to both supporters and opponents of full public financing.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I do wish to commend the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Ohio for the work they have done on this amendment. I have just a few thoughts to add to theirs.

First of all, I have supported the idea of public financing of Federal elections from the very beginning. But I have looked very carefully at what we were trying to do when we moved in the direction of public financing and found at first we were trying to get of the very large contributions that really or to the American people were having an inordinate effect on the political system. I think public financing would do that, and our amendment would do that, but no one who was a proponent of public financing, to my knowledge, has said there was anything wrong with a candidate for public office taking contrbiutions from small contributors, indeed, in large number. In fact, many of those who have been proponents of public financing have been equally strong proponents for the involvement of the average citizen.

What concerns me about the bill without the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, the Senator from Ohio, me, and others, is that basically it is saying, "We do not want participation by the average citizen: $100, $200, $300, $500." It has been said here with regard to other bills before us that we frequently throw the baby out with the bathwater. In this instance, unless we not only permit small contributions but also encourage and entice them, we will, indeed, be doing that.

In campaigns across the country the average citizen has said, "I like that candidate. I want to give him a small contribution." Instead of that kind of contribution, which is basically at the heart of participation, and putting small money where the mouth is, and letting a citizen's personal endeavors in behalf of the candidate follow, we would eliminate that in the bill before the Senate, where candidates could, if they choose, get private contributions. But as a matter of fact there is no incentive or encouragement because if the candidate does not he will get a check from the Federal Government for 100 percent.

I believe there is nothing wrong with the $100 matching all the way up, with encouragement to get a $1,000 contribution, or up to $3,000. This would narrow and cut back on the effect that Federal tax dollars would have on the total amount to be used.

The same reasoning can be used with respect to Presidential campaigns. There is nothing miraculous about 25 and 40. To encourage the $100 and the $250 for Presidential races, minimizing the $6,000 contributions groups can give, leaving it at $6,000, but not permitting it in primary and general elections, and upping the individual to $3,000 is a significant stroke in the direction of individual citizen participation. But it eliminates the thing we started out to eliminate.

With reference to my campaign for the Senate, indeed, I had large contributors, but I believe my campaign stands in the State of New Mexico as a record for the number of small contributors that contributed to my campaign. For a small State like mine, it would approach 5,000 individual donors. We went out and asked them, and they, in turn, asked others, and from them came the nucleus of those who had a genuine interest, with small amounts of $100 to $150.

I truly do not want to be a part of eliminating that kind of participation which I think is salutory and has a good effect. I hope those who are genuinely interested in public financing will understand this is a genuine effort to start in a new direction where we have not had one, and start in a reasonable way for a reasonable amount of public money, and leave the ingredient of participation that comes from the contribution of many small Americans who still take politics and candidates seriously, and who would prefer to give their money, $100 or whatever, to their candidate and still make them feel it is important, and not say, "You do not have to contribute if you do not want to; we will get it all from the Treasury."

That is the answer we will get from other than those who do not want any public financing. That is what we will be saying to the smaller contributor. We will be saying, "You are not important because if you do not give, we will get it from the Treasury."

Those who favor this approach will understand it is possible to move from zero to 100 percent. The amendment of the Senator from Illinois, the Senator from Ohio, and the Senator from New Mexico would be a good and salutary start toward preservation of that which is good in the present system.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I wish to commend the Senator from New Mexico for recognizing that it is possible to eliminate the large contributors from politics without eliminating small contributions. Far from being a source of corruption, the small contribution is a source of involvement by people in their politics.

The purpose of the amendment is to drive the big money, but not the people, out of our politics.

I wish to ask the Senator from New Mexico if he does not agree that to eliminate the $1 or $2 or $3 contributions from campaigns might very well be unconstitutional. It is not only that, but it seems to me there is a constitutional right of people to contribute in small amounts to the candidates of their choice. Without some basis for saying, "No, it is wrong; it is unreasonable to make small contributions."—and—I see no basis for such an assertion—it is possible it could be held to be unconstitution to take that approach.

Mr. DOMENICI. My answer is in the affirmative. I think there are serious constitutional objections to a provision which would prohibit it. I think from a legal and practical point of view, if a citizen cannot contribute, regardless of whether he wants to contribute, small or large, it is both practical and unconstitutional.

There is evidence which would justify drawing the line somewhere, I think $3,000 and $6,000. Those are a matter of proper legislative judgment on the facts that have been developed in the history of this Nation, but to say, "One cannot give; we will take it all from the tax coffers" would place this matter in serious jeopardy.

Mr. STEVENSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield to the distinguished senior Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Junior now.

Mr. STEVENSON. Junior.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I have over the past few days been visiting from time to time with the distinguished Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON) about this amendment. Earlier today I talked with the Senator from New Mexico about it. I have been a strong proponent of what we call public financing of election campaigns, but I have been in this Body long enough to know when we are really trying to get results or whether we are just going to have an issue. I think the question before the Senate is, Do you want an issue or do you want an accomplishment? Do you want to make some progress or do you want to spin your wheels?

I would prefer to have 100-percent financing of Presidential elections particularly. While some say large contributions are a source of corruption, the fact is they are always a source of suspicion, and in the times in which we live, that sense of suspicion has been intensified.

Therefore, it is necessary for the Congress of the United States to reform the campaign election laws, to limit the size of contributions, to establish machinery that will supervise our elections fearlessly and honestly, and at the same time try to make use of our checkoff system, which we have already legislated, a checkoff fund or trust fund to which hundreds of thousands of taxpayers have already made payments, and to use that checkoff fund sensibly and honestly in the election campaign or in the campaign process.

So, Mr. President, I came to the conclusion that if you just want to talk campaign financing, then go the whole way and make Ivory soap seem to be contaminated and float right out of the stream of public life and private sensibility; but if you want to get some reform that will do the job that we need to do, namely, to limit the size of contributions, to have an accounting of every dollar that comes in as well as every dollar that is expended, to set limits on how much we can spend on a campaign per voter, and at the same time assure some private interest on the part of individuals in the campaign and election process, then we have to make some changes along the line of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois and other Senators. I am very proud to be a cosponsor of the amendment.

I have talked with the Senator, as I said, a number of times, and last week indicated my desire to be associated with that amendment. I want to say great pressure has been brought on some of us not to be associated with it. Some people that are associated with what we call good government or clean government do not want me to go along with this proposal, but as I had to tell one of them, "I have to do the voting in the Chamber, and you are the very people who have told me we should not be influenced on the outside." So I am not going to be influenced. The only influence is going to come from the inside—what I know to be right. What I know to be right is what we are attempting to do here. We have to close this debate and get to voting some responsible, sensible campaign reforms that the American people want of us. We have the duty to accomplish it in this session of Congress.

Everyone knows the other body is not going to go along with some of the things we have voted for here, but I have said privately to some colleagues in this body that what we have been doing will not sell. It will not wash. It makes good headlines. It pleases people who say, "You are doing 100 percent. Perfect. You are good and pure." But it will not pass. Do we want to get results that will remedy the infection in our body politic, or do we just want to talk, talk, and talk, and have an issue to try to go out and prove that we were purer than the other fellow?

I think the proposal before us does the job that needs to be done. It will give us some results. It will permit both the sensible use of public financing on the one hand and include private small contributions on the other. If the American political process is going to be corrupted by $100 contributions, then we have already gone down the drain. It is not going to corrupt the American political process.

Further, I think we should know that public financing in other countries has not been on an individual basis. We ought to make the record quite clear on that. Public financing of campaigns in countries like Great Britain, the Federal Republic of Germany, and others, goes to political parties that are highly organized, disciplined party units under the parliamentary system. There are not many Senators who want public financing just coming to the political party. Many of us hope to run independently and hope that people from both parties will join in putting us in office.

So what we have before us, I think, is a reasonable adjustment and compromise. In this day and age anybody who says "compromise" may be condemned, but the whole system of this Government is based on intelligent compromise. That is the way we got our Constitution, and I am not going to be driven to the wall by somebody who says that if one compromises or if he trims down a little bit, somehow or other he has sold out. We are not selling out, but we are not going to permit people to buy in, either.

What we are doing is trying to do a job that needs to be done. We have been up this hill and down this hill a half a dozen times, and we have as yet very little to show for it. The chance is now before us to have something to deliver to the American people.

I would have hoped, as I said to the Senator from Illinois and to the Senator from New Mexico, that we might have had in the Presidential fund 50 percent public financing. I do not think there is anything particularly magical about 40 or 50 percent, but I would have thought it might have been a better figure. Be that as it may, the issue before the U.S. Senate is simply, Do you want to have a continuing issue on which there are no results, or do you want to have results and be able to build on that from practice and experieence? I think we have the chance now to get results and to cleanse the stables of American politics and to get away from the demeaning and disgusting business of going out and raising millions of dollars of campaign funds from huge contributions and then having somebody point the finger at you and saying, "You are a crook or can't be trusted."

I think the Senate of the United States ought to face up to the fact that, whether big money is the source of corruption, it is the source of growing suspicion, and a big country like ours cannot live on suspicion and distrust. We have to implant into the system trust and confidence, and remove distrust and cynicism.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois—and I compliment him for his practicality—will remove doubt and suspicion and cynicism and it will put us on the high road to a cleaner system of politics that will involve both private and public financing and public participation.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. CRANSTON. I want to say that the Senator from Minnesota has stated very, very eloquently the reasons for my supporting this bill and why it should be enacted.

In relation to the pending amendment, I would like to compliment the Senator from Illinois, the Senator from New Mexico, and the Senator from Ohio for coming up with a formula that I think deals with two very important aspects of the measure now before us in ways which I think had not been handled in the most appropriate way in the measure in its present form.

First, I am very concerned about the first amendment's right to express oneself not only by what one says, but by what one does. I fear 100 percent mandatory public financing would deny that right to individuals who wish to speak out by making contributions—hopefully small contributions—which we will be moving to under this measure.

Second, I think it is very important to reduce the overall cost of public financing so that the measure cannot be subject to attacks that it is costing too much or that it is a raid on the Treasury. I do not believe that it is either of those two things, but I do believe that this amendment, by reducing the total cost of public financing, serves a valuable purpose in that respect, as well as contributing in other respects. For these reasons I am glad to join the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON).

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. ABOUREZK. By way of information, does the existing legislation require mandatory public financing? Is there not a provision that allows for small contributions to be raised?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes; in the congressional.

Mr. ABOUREZK. How about the Presidential?

Mr. HUMPHREY. One hundred percent.

Mr. ABOUREZK. It is optional, as I understand it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes, optional. But this is mandatory. The subject matter of the Stevenson amendment is a mandatory provision. That is the difference.

Mr. ABOUREZK. But existing legislation does not prevent small contributions from being made?

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator is right in this instance. But in congressional elections, it is optional.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I wonder what all the fuss is about concerning small contributions being made under existing legislation. It seems to me that this amendment is being sold on the basis that people cannot contribute small amounts, and thereby take part in the public process. If what I read is correct—I wish the Senator from Illinois were in the Chamber—25 percent for congressional elections will be publicly financed and raised, and also be raised with small contributions.

Mr. HUMPHREY. For matching, 25 percent is the immediate amount one is entitled to, and the rest is under a matching formula.

Mr. ABOUREZK. What is it in the Presidential race?

Mr. HUMPHREY. The same thing. Forty percent is immediately public financing under the formula in the bill, and the balance, as I think the Senator from Ohio would tell the Senator, up to $250,000 is matching. In other words, if one gets $250,000 in contributions, he gets $250,000 in matching.

Mr. ABOUREZK. If one is a challenger in a race against an incumbent, he does not have access to the sources of contributions that many incumbents have, such as the various committees around the country—the labor committees, and so on. He has to have a very large mailing list in order to keep up with what the incumbent has already raised. Is that a correct statement?

Mr. HUMPHREY. The formula for the primaries remains the same as it is in the bill.

Mr. ABOUREZK. But it would be very tough for a challenger to raise the money under this provision.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I do not think it would be any tougher than it is now.

Mr. ABOUREZK. It would be a great deal easier if he had a mailing list, because the limit placed on contributions is much stricter than it is now.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I appreciate that the limit is $3,000 for an individual and $6,000 for a group contribution, whether one is an incumbent or a nonincumbent. Matching funds are exactly the same. If one is a challenger in a Senate race, it is $100 matching funds to $100—up to $100—but he gets 25 percent right off the top of the table, so to speak.

Mr. ABOUREZK. But an individual could count on only $200 in a congressional race.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator is correct; whether he is an incumbent or a challenger.

Mr. ABOUREZK. If he is a challenger, he would not have access to those sources of money I have referred to. He would be out of luck, so to speak. If I might just say if I might offer an observation, that this is not an incumbent's amendment. But a challenger would have a difficult time raising money to challenge an incumbent.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Not one bit more.

An incumbent has some advantages, but he also has some disadvantages. There are the yea and nay votes. There are no "maybe" votes. If he is out in the countryside, he can say, "Yes, that is a reasonable position. I am sympathetic to that position." "But I do feel you have merit in your position."

But if one is an incumbent, they say "Thank you very much but you voted 'nay' or you voted 'yea'." There is not a great deal of advantage when in riding off on a white horse with a great big spear. When one is a challenger, he can always say "maybe." Gee, I have always wished that we had a vote, not "yea," or not "nay," but "maybe." Would I not be the happiest Senator?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Minnesota a question. It looks as though, with the 25-percent financing, even in congressional races, and the matching thereafter to be a maximum there would be a matching of 62.5 percent in Federal funding.

Mr. HUMPHREY. That would be the maximum only.

Mr. ALLEN. Actually, that would be the maximum only, so what the minimum would be would be a sort of bargain basement 37.5 percent discount amendment to the American taxpayer. Is that about the size of the amendment?

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is good. I might say that in this time of inflation, that is a welcome discount.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator is giving the American taxpayer a 30-percent discount in the bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY. He gets something else. The Senator has a way of capsulizing some of these issues. We are giving the taxpayer something else. We are giving him good, clean politics. We are removing the element of doubt and suspicion.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator feel that candidates would be subject to improper influences during their campaigns?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I have never believed; but I will tell the Senator that a great many folks I know do believe that. I do not happen to believe it, but I believe the Senator from Alabama makes a valid point. But I wish I could convince everybody who writes to me.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator said that in being for this amendment he had to resist certain entreaties and demands certain pressure groups that were demanding all or nothing, I believe the Senator said. I want to commend the distinguished Senator for not being completely in the pockets of those pressure groups.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. Some Senators are not quite as brave as the distinguished Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Sometimes bravery is only rewarding this body by blows, injuries, and defeats. I have suffered a little of that in my life. One more will not hurt, so long as it is not final.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I think I have the floor.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I have the floor, but I shall yield the floor so that the Senator from South Dakota may continue with his argument in support of the amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Has any time been set to vote on this amendment?

Mr. MANSFIELD. There is no time limitation on this amendment. I assume there will be plenty of time.

Mr. DOLE. Before the vote on cloture?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Before and after the vote on cloture.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I should like to take a few moments to explore and to inquire about what the aspects are and whether the Senator from Alabama's 62.5 percent is indeed what would really happen.

First of all, there is an incentive to give some small contributions in the congressional races—$100 for small contributions. However, in congressional races one is entitled to receive contributions up to $3,000. However, of this amount, only $100 is matched, unless someone were to receive his entire campaign contributions in amounts of $100 or less. Then he would have less than 62.5 percent Federal tax dollars involved. If one went out and got $10, $15, or $20 thousand raised in small contributions of $100, only $100 of each would be credited to matching; $900 each would go in the campaign fund would be part of the total in arriving at that which he could spend. But to the extent it was in excess of $100, it would not be matching. So the idea is that 62.5 percent is the absolute maximum. So there will be contributions in addition to the 62.5 percent.

The same reasoning applies to the Presidential campaign, $250 is matched. You can receive $3,000 contributions, but to the extent that you are successful in garnering contributions over $250 from private sources, all of that extra money is charged to your total allowable, but is not matched with Federal dollars.

I would also say to the Senator, who is wondering about incumbents and challengers, that in each of these cases the incumbent and the challenger would start with a 25-percent entitlement. The challenger today would have no certainty—I am speaking of today, without any public money—he would have no money to start his campaign, to do the things the Senator was speaking of, to get ready to go out and solicit contributions from the small contributor; but under this bill, he would start with one-fourth of that which he was entitled to, both to gear up for the campaign and to solicit large and small contributions looking toward his total amount, which is exactly the same for challenger and incumbent.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield?

Mr. ABOUREZK. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I would like to elaborate a little bit on a point made by the Senator from New Mexico. The Senator from South Dakota has expressed concern that the incumbent would automatically have access to more privaate financial support than challengers would have.

I point out that the matching factor of the $100 limitation would probably eliminate that. Any challenger who is to have a reasonable chance is going to be able to go out and get those contributions up to $100. That is the kind of contributions he can get. He might not have as much background and resources in getting larger contributions over that amount, and I think the Senator from South Dakota would be more properly concerned if we were matching gifts over $100. But with the $100 limitation or matching, it seems to me that there is not a very serious threat that any challenger with a reasonable chance of success is going to be put at practical disadvantage in relation to the incumbent insofar as that size of contribution is concerned.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I do not think in my State of South Dakota, for example, that there would be any difficulty for a challenger to raise the small amount necessary, but I wonder if the same is true for New York, Ohio, or any of the larger States. It seems to me that it would be extremely difficult to get that many small contributions in such States.

Mr. TAFT. We have all been challengers at times——

Mr. ABOUREZK. I was born an incumbent; I was never a challenger.

Mr. TAFT. I would think that, with the limitations introduced by the Senate, the amounts necessary for a reasonably financed campaign could be provided. In fact, that is about the kind of amount they could come up with.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ABOUREZK. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I rise to oppose this amendment because I think it could mean the total destruction of what we have accomplished in public financing here in the last 10 days.

An amendment such as this ought not be taken lightly. It ought to be discussed at considerable length, because it flies in the face of the Rules Committee bill and the compromise worked out there.

We have heard about the necessity to compromise. That is exactly what this bill is—it is a compromise. No one is totally happy with it. But to compromise it further and further, and above all, not even to allow the option of public financing, really destroys the intent of the Rules Committee bill.

The committee spent a great deal of time considering the need for public financing and the best method to achieve it. The result, S. 3044, is an excellent bill which represents a balanced view and a considered view. This amendment would clearly undo the Rules Committee effort.

By passing this amendment, the Senate would be reversing many of the gains that it has made over these last 10 days. We cannot now suddenly now change our minds about the alternative to total public financing—not on a few hours notice with a few minutes debate. The majority of the Members of the Senate clearly support public financing, and they have expressed that sentiment time after time.

Let us adopt cloture. Let us show the people we represent that we are committed to reforming a tired and treacherous system of private financing.

By agreeing to this amendment, we would be going back after we have accomplished so much, and saying, "We want more private money." That is particularly true in the Presidential race. Right now, the law says that the 1976 Presidential election will be totally financed by public funds. If we agree to this amendment, we will go back to a system——

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I would like to call to the attention of the Senator from Iowa what I think is a misunderstanding on the Senator's part.

The language of this amendment is not such that a candidate for Congress or the Presidency would be foresworn from deciding to take any public funds if he decides to do so. It just sets up a formula if he wishes to take up the public financing. If he desires, he would receive the public funds; there is no difference from the Rules Committee bill in that respect.

Mr. CLARK. No; I do not think there is no misunderstanding. The amendment would forbid any candidate from taking total public financing in any general election.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator is correct if that is his impression. I was afraid that the Senator was under the impression that there was not an alternative, because such an option does exist under the amendment.

Mr. CLARK. No; I understand that, and that a candidate, if he could raise the money on his own, could get up to 62.5 percent in the case of congressional elections or 75 percent in Presidential elections.

But the law already says that in the 1976 election there will be total public financing of the Presidential election. If we pass this amendment, we are going back and saying, "You must have private money, at least to the tune of 30 percent, in Presidential elections."

To insist on having greater private financing in elections is not a step in the right direction, especially not after what has happened in the last 18 months.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, on behalf of the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE), that Jim Verdier, of his staff, may have the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. COOK. My problem is the same as that of the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from South Dakota. I cannot figure out whether this amendment is fish or fowl.

I think we are debating whether we should have public financing. If so, let us vote that issue up or down, and let the country appreciate what we are doing. If Senators will pardon the use of an old country expression, this is like being a little bit pregnant; I cannot figure it out. This seems to be a method of trying to get cloture so that we could consider something like this, and after cloture is obtained, to almost emasculate the bill we have all worked on.

I have many problems about public financing, and the Senator from California says he has some problems with first amendment rights. But, Mr. President, the bill we debated, modified, adopted overwhelmingly, and sent over to the House last year took the first amendment and wrapped it around every tree and every telephone pole from precinct to precinct.

I must say that I agree wholeheartedly with the Senator from Iowa that what we are really saying now is, "Let us give ourselves some kind of mixed bag," and we are holding that mixed bag until after 4 o'clock to see what the result is. The beginning is rather frightening.

We are saying that somehow or other we are putting on a limitation, and a man can only get matching funds on $100 or less, and the President on $250 or less, after he has got so much money. All he has to say to people is, "Don't write me a check of over $250 or over $100; get all the kids and grandchildren to write me checks for $100 each, so that we can get it matched," and the Federal Government can do it.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. COOK. I yield to the Senator from Iowa, because we are going to quit at 3 o'clock. But I think when we take this up after the cloture vote at 4, regardless of the outcome of the cloture vote, we ought to decide whether we are going to join the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) and say there shall not be any public financing in the United States, or say with the House of Repersentatives, "Let us try public financing and see whether it works." If it does not work, certainly Congress can change it. But let us not take some crazy amalgamation that no one of us can understand or comprehend and I doubt very seriously whether any American voter will comprehend.

I thank the Senator from Iowa.

CLOTURE

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HELMS). Under the previous order, the hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, the Senate will now proceed to debate the question on invoking cloture on S. 3044, with the time to be equally divided and controlled between the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) and the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON).

Who yields time?

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute from the time of the Senator from Nevada to ask, what is the parliamentary situation after the vote on cloture is concluded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It depends on the vote, but we return to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON).

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of that vote, the distinguished Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON), the author of the amendment, be recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts will state it.

Mr. KENNEDY. Is it in order for me to send an amendment to the desk to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON)?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; if someone will yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENNEDY. Further, Mr. President, would the amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois then be the pending business?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry——

Mr. KENNEDY. I send an amendment to the desk——

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, not calling for a vote at this time, I would suggest that the action of the Senator from Massachusetts is not in order without a unanimous-consent request being granted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no order for a vote at this time, but for 1 hour of debate on the cloture motion, to be equally divided between the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) and the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON).

The clerk will state the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

In the amendment proposed by Mr. Stevenson;

Amend subsection (b)(1), proposed to be inserted on page 10, beginning with line 17, to read as follows:

"(b)(1) Every eligible candidate who is nominated by a major party is entitled to payments for use in his general election campaign in an amount equal to—

"(A) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of President, 100 percent of the amount of expenditures the candidate may make in connection with that campaign under section 504, and

"(B) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Senator or Representative, the sum of—(i) 25 perecnt of the amount of expenditures the candidate may make in connection with that campaign under section 504, and

"(ii) the amount of contributions he and his authorized committees received for that campaign."

At the end of paragraph (6) in such subsection, insert "or (B)" before the period.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 6 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized for 6 minutes.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, it is quite obvious that cloture should not be invoked on this bill. The very pendency of the amendment of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON), joined in by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY), shows clearly that there is no strong unanimity of opinion as to the bill the Senate should agree upon. For the first time, this monolithic bloc of Senators who are determined to get public financing has shown some signs of breaking up, so that the issues can be determined on their merits.

Earlier today, the Senate reduced the amount of permissible contributions in a Federal election—that is, House and Senate, Presidential nomination, or Presidential general election, by 20 percent.

Now, Mr. President, this amendment of the distinguished Senator from Illinois and the distinguished Senator from Minnesota would give a further potential 37.5-percent reduction in the Federal subsidy in congressional races, and a 30-percent potential reduction of the Federal subsidy in Presidential races.

So, Mr. President, for the first time, amendments are coming in that are being considered on their merits and not in the rush pell mell to ram this public subsidy, this taxpayers' subsidy bill, through the Senate.

Well, Mr. President, if the Senate will vote to allow this debate to continue, it may well be that we will end up with a fairly decent campaign reform measure.

The pending bill, S. 3044, is not campaign reform, that is, that aspect of it having to do with the Federal subsidy is not. Is it campaign reform merely to say that we will turn this bill for the campaigns of Members of the House and Senate and the Presidential nomination and the general election campaign over to the American taxpayers?

That is changing the system, Mr. President, but it is hardly reform.

Reform would be to cut down on the amount of the overall expenditures, to cut down on the amount of individual contributions.

Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama has been trying day by day to get the overall permissible expenses reduced. That was accomplished today. The Senator from Alabama has an amendment that he will put in—already filed at the desk—seeking to reduce the amount of individual contributions in the various races.

So, Mr. President, with the discount bill of the distinguished Senators, giving this further reduction in the amount of the Federal subsidy pending, the Senator from Alabama believes that it would be a great mistake to cut off debate when we are now having an exchange of ideas and not just voting by bloc.

One of my distinguished friends in the Senate, in voting for the amendment cutting the permissible expenditures by 20 percent, indicated that possibly that was the first time in 5 years he had voted for an amendment which had been proposed by the Senator from Alabama. But it is indicative of the fact that Senators are beginning, for the first time, to determine these amendments and these measures on their merits.

If we will fail to vote cloture—if we will vote against cloture this time—it is hoped that the distinguished majority leader will set the bill aside.

It would be the better part of wisdom, since dire predictions have been made on the floor of the Senate as to what the House will do, to wait until the House acts on S. 372, which is pending in the House now and does not provide for a single penny of Federal subsidy. The House may want to go along with that.

Why does the Senate want to change its position? It was against a Federal subsidy by a record vote in the Senate back in July when we passed S. 372.

So, let us see what action the House takes on S. 372. Let us see what action they take, if any, on public financing. But financing by the taxpayers of this Nation and paying up to $7.5 million for each candidate for the Presidential nomination of the two major parties—and that is what the bill would permit—that is not campaign reform, in the view of the Senator from Alabama.

So, Mr. President, I hope that upwards of 33, 34, or 35 Senators will vote against invoking cloture so that we can get down to debating some of the issues on their merits, which apparently Senators are more willing to do, at this time, than ever before during this debate.

Mr. President, I feel that this statement of mine may not do the amendment a great deal of good, but the amendment offered by the distinguished Senators from Illinois and Minnesota is a good amendment and moves in the right direction of eliminating Federal subsidies. It does not eliminate enough. It eliminates 37.5 percent in congressional races in general elections and 30 percent in Presidential elections, which is a step in the right direction.

If we stay here a few more days and debate this issue we may eliminate public financing altogether.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, having been on the floor a good deal in the course of these debates, I would hope that the Senator from Alabama would not take offense if I said that when he says we are now voting on the merits, I think maybe in some instances we are not voting on the merits, but voting on exhaustion.

I stand here, on this side of the aisle, as a member of the Republican Party, and I hear the Senator from Alabama say that it is going to cost the taxpayers of the United States $7.5 million to help finance Presidential campaigns.

We should remind the Senator—and we have all been reminded of it very much—that we in the U.S. Senate have already appropriated almost $6 or $7 million of the taxpayers' funds to the Watergate Special Investigating Committee. The House has given itself a million dollars or more and will give itself more. I suppose the Federal court system will spend a few million dollars in impaneling grand juries and bringing in indictments. That will all be spent, and it will all be taxpayers' money, and it will be done to seek a remedy for what occurred as a result of the Committee to Reelect the President.

Some other cases have been brought up of some gentleman on the other side of the aisle who received funds in that campaign during 1972 who either failed to report them or took some other action—perhaps some paid them back or something or other.

But I have to say to the Senator from Alabama that when we speak of how much money we are going to save the taxpayer, the best analysis we have to make is the analysis of the system as we look at it today. We have seen some remarkable people in the United States, very fine businessmen, who, by reason of some degree of sweet persuasion on the part of some people in the political system, made corporate contributions. They have been fined; their corporations have been fined. Yet, we have not stopped that. Probably, in the long run we have an opportunity to save the American taxpayers much money.

As I say, I am a strange person to stand here and talk this way, because I have very serious reservations about this. But I believe that we can try it; and if it does not work, we can get rid of it. That is the legisaltive process; that is the way we function in this country.

When a few problems occurred with daylight saving time, it did not take very long for enthusiastic supporters of daylight saving time to come to the floor with support for getting rid of daylight saving time. I expect that we will do that in short fashion, and we will realize that we have made mistakes.

So I say to my colleagues that we see here an opportunity to try something different. We see an opportunity that some people in the Nation like and that some dislike. Some people are violently opposed to it.

With all due respect to the Senator from Illinois, the amendment that will be pending at 4:10 or 4:15 is another effort to mollify a proposal that I know some of the supporters do not really enthusiastically feel ought to be a part of the law; but they feel it is a way to compromise. I doubt seriously that those amendments have all the meritorious effect to which the Senator from Alabama alluded.

The Senator from Alabama just said that he was delighted, for example, that the amendment was before the Senate, because it was a way to save money and it was a way to change the basic formula of the bill, which he does not like. But I have a notion that even if the amendment by the distinguished Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON) and Senator HUMPHREY, Senator DOMENICI, Senator TAFT, Senator CRANSTON, Senator BEALL, and Senator MONDALE is adopted, the Senator from Alabama will not vote for this bill on final passage. So it is slight praise for the amendment, in all fairness.

I am going to vote to end debate, because I think we ought to get on with the legislative schedule. What really bothers me, may I say to the Senator from Alabama, is that we have already sent one bill over to the House of Representatives, and the bill is lifeless; and I am afraid that if we send this bill over, it also will be lifeless. To that extent, I think that the pressure by the people of the United States should not particularly be on us but should be on the Members of the House of Representatives to do something in regard to campaign reform.

We have talked here on many occasions about these elections, and it has been my contention that the first thing we should do and the first thing the House should do is to pass the bill we sent them to reduce the time for campaigning. If, in fact, we established our primaries in August, established our national conventions in the first week in September, we would not bore the American people totally and completely to death by campaigning for a year or two.

When we talk about how much money it costs to run for office in California and New York, I am of the opinion that if we are talking about a million dollars in a primary, there is no way that one could spend a million dollars if his campaign for the primary were 8 weeks long. It would be the last week of August, the 4 weeks of September, and the 4 weeks in October. That would be 9 weeks, basically. I do not see how tremendous sums of money could be spent. I do not see how candidates in my State, for example, could spend $900,000 or more, as they did the last time they ran, if they were campaigning for 9 weeks. It is easy to spend that much when you have a primary in May and all of a sudden you are off and running. Some States have primaries in January.

Part of reform really is to eliminate the necessity for long campaigns. We have that proposal in the House, and we cannot get anywhere with it.

I voted to end debate before. I will vote to end debate again today, because I am afraid that what ultimately will be a result of this continuation, what we will really wind up with, is an emasculation of the matter, something no candidate in the United States will be able to live with, whether incumbent or challenger. We will wind up with an abomination. If a challenger really wants to be a sound challenger, the first thing he will have to do will be to get an office full of lawyers and CPA's and have them on duty at all times. He will have to have somebody who does absolutely nothing but live with a timetable as to when and how much he has to report and to whom he has to report. All this will be mixed in at the same time with whether this is entitled to a Federal matching fund or whether this is not entitled to a Federal matching fund; whether he made his last report so that he can get his next report; so he can get his contribution based on what he has collected in the last month.

In that whole conglomeration, I think the American people will not be able to view a campaign but will be able to view candidates who are spending all their time seeing whether or not they are abiding by the law.

Therefore, I believe we ought to end debate and send some kind of bill to the House, so that the American people can have an understanding that we can bring things to a conclusion; that we do not act on exhaustion but in fact on merit; and I have a notion that exhaustion prevails at this time.

Mr. President, I yield such time to the Senator from Kansas as he may desire.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Kentucky and share his view that it is time the Senate went on to something else. When we consider that we spent a number of days on whether we should have a pay raise and have spent more than 2 weeks on whether the Treasury should finance our campaigns—both of which measures I opposed—I think that it is time we went on to something else.

I am against public financing. But I am also against spending the rest of this month on this legislation, so I intend to vote for cloture as I did previously.

Also I would suggest with reference to the timing of this bill and the proper procedure for considering legislation in the Senate that this bill is before the Senate at the wrong time. I recall the opening statement of the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. ERVIN) and the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER) on the first day of the Watergate hearings on May 17, 1973. The distinguished Senator from North Carolina said:

> Of necessity the committee's report will reflect the considered judgment of the committee on whatever new legislation is needed to help safeguard the electoral process.

The distinguished Senator from Tennessee said:

> This committee was created by the Senate to—find as many of the facts, the circumstances and the relationships as we could, to assemble those facts into a coherent and intelligible presentation and to make recommendations to the Congress for any changes in statute law or the basic charter document of the United States that may seem indicated.

The Watergate Committee was charged with the job of advising the Senate on campaign reform legislation. The committee's report is not due until May 28, and the deadline may be extended if there are other areas to investigate. But the thrust of Senate Resolution 60, at least as the Senator from Kansas viewed it, was to delve into the election of 1972, let the chips fall where they may, and then come forward with a report and recommendations for legislation to be passed by Congress based on that report.

It seems to me that the legislation before us is premature. The amendment just offered by a group of distinguished Senators seems to indicate a lack of any strong feeling for public financing. But as much as I oppose the concept I believe it should be disposed of, because there is much more to do in this session. I believe the people in my State would like me to come home during the Easter recess and talk about something other than how much tax money the Senate has been able to get of the public Treasury for its campaign, or if we have been able to procure a pay raise, and things of that kind. They are more concerned about taxes, gasoline, inflation, and the possibility of impeachment than the financing of our campaigns.

Having said that, I shall vote to shut off debate and thereafter offer a substitute to the pending legislation. The junior Senator from Kansas believes that if we give the legislation passed in 1971 a little time, if we make full disclosure of our contributions and expenditures and strengthen other features of the present law there will be great and constructive change in the American political system.

I have great faith in Members of Congress in both parties, in their integrity, honesty, and character, and I do not believe we purify politics by placing it in the public Treasury.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 16 minutes remaining.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, on February 1 of this year the distinguished majority leader (Mr. MANSFIELD) said:

> We shall not finally come to grips with the problem except as we are prepared to pay for the public business of elections with public funds.

Mr. President, it has been 18 months, now, since a small group of men broke into the Democratic Party's national headquarters setting in motion what has become the most serious and devastating episode of political scandal and corruption in this country's history. Since that day in June, the revelations and criminal charges have not stopped—bribery, perjury, illegal wiretapping, burglary, and a score of illegal campaign contributions.

Through the efforts of the Special Prosecutors' Office, the Senate Select Committee, Judge Sirica, and the grand juries and now the House Judiciary Committee, everyone knows just how widespread the disease has been. The evidence is not all in, of course, and the investigations and trials will continue. But the people of this country have heard enough and seen enough to expect that something be done to change the political practices that allowed this to flourish. They expect a significant change and they expect the Congress to make it, if only because the administration certainly is not going to lead the reform effort.

A few weeks ago, we listened to the President's reflections on the state of the Union. It was ironic that he would ignore one of this country's most critical problems: the public's widespread, growing distrust for public officials and Government. It is not enough to proclaim: "One year of Watergate is enough," and then to say that we should end the investigations before they are complete; and to "get on with the business of the country" is to say that trying to prevent political corruption is not the country's business. Unfortunately, it is very much a part of it.

Like political corruption, the liabilities of a political system like ours—based on private financing—are not limited to the executive branch. The impact of the private dollar on the legislative process has been pervasive, and there probably is not a single Member of the U.S. Congress who has not felt it or wished that it might be changed.

Many people across this country, feel disillusioned, frustrated, and angry. They are upset about the energy situation and the high profits of the oil companies, but they become even angrier when they learn that oil companies financed a significant part of the President's reelection campaign. As a result, people do not trust the administration—or Congress, for that matter—and they do not believe that the Federal Government can even deal with the energy emergency, the inflationary economy, and any number of problems that face the Nation today.

They strongly suspect that Government's principal interest is not their interest. And that suspicion is gradually becoming disdain and apathy. Already this country has the lowest voter participation of any country. The events of the last year have had their strongest impact upon young people, and I am terribly afraid that unless we move decisively to improve the political process, to make it more responsive, more and more young people are going to stay away from Government and public service. If they do stay, if they do decide that the political process is simuly not worth the effort, what is this country going to be like 20 years from now?

At the heart of that public distrust is a fundamental suspicion of the political process that provides for the election of public officials heavily dependent on private contributions. "You don't get something for nothing," as the saying goes, and too many people have applied to Government.

Mr. President, late in December, the Senate recognized the problems of the present system and came very close to passing a limited public financing proposal, one advanced by Senator KENNEDY and Senator HUGH SCOTT of Pennsylvania, with the support of a number of Senators who have introduced their own public financing legislation.

If the need for public financing was well-established then, it is even more so now. This is a new year, and it presents new opportunities for improving the political process that has been so crippled over the last 18 months. If we do not take advantage of the opportunity, the result may be even more tragic than the legacy of Watergate. In just a few minutes, Mr. President, the Senate will have yet another opportunity to change and improve the political process.

We have been debating S. 3044 and the concept of public financing for Presidential and congressional elections for more than a week now. A majority of the Senate supports the bill and the concept. It is time to end the debate, adopt cloture, and pass this historic legislation.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am extremely hopeful that the Senate will end this debate and permit the Members of this body to act on the committee bill and the amendments at the desk. A thoughtful, constructive, and imaginative proposal for clean and honest government has come from the Committee on Rules and Administration. It has the substantial support of Members on both sides of the aisle, Democrat and Republican alike, and it deserves to go forward to a final vote.

This issue has been amply debated. The fundamental issue goes back to the discussions and debates which took place here in 1966 and 1967, again in 1970 and 1971, and once again last year as an amendment to the Debt Ceiling Act.

There are no new issues to be discussed. There may be some variations in the formulas or changes in the percentages, and so forth, but there are no new issues to be further debated or discussed. The Committee on Rules and Administration acted in a responsible way in considering all the various alternatives. They provided remarkable flexibility in the construction of this legislation. Those seeking public office may take advantage of the public financing provisions, or they may reject them, rely on private financing for their campaigns.

The bill provides this flexibility. It provides an element of voluntarism for Members of the Senate or the House, and for challengers. The public will understand if candidates choose one form or the other. It does not force anyone to adopt any particular method of financing his campaign.

Above all, the bill provides a significant legislative answer that we in Congress can make to the Watergate tragedy. It has been said of our political system that it is the best system that money can buy. That is a tragic indictment of a system that has served this country well for 200 years. I think any of us who have run for public office understand the sinister forces at work in the field of campaign contributions.

So, Mr. President, I am hopeful that the Senate will act this afternoon. As I mentioned, this issue has been debated. I think it is to the credit of the members of the Committee on Rules and Administration that there is strong support for it by Democrat and Republican alike. It is really the best opportunity we have to try to restore some degree of confidence on the part of the American people in the election system.

The proposal has been criticized on the ground that it is going to cost millions of dollars, $90 million a year and $360 million over a 4-year period. That price tag is a bargain. It is the equivalent of only one-tenth of 1 cent a gallon of gas. That is all the American public pays.

The committee bill makes sense. I believe it would be the soundest investment of taxpayers' funds that Government can make. I think we have the responsibility to act on this proposal this afternoon. The debate has really been completed. It is high time to move ahead and end the debate.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COOK. How much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 6 minutes.

Mr. COOK. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky, in starting his remarks a moment ago, said that the Senator from Alabama had said this measure would cost the Treasury $7.5 million in the Presidential race. Well, either the Senator has not listened to what the Senator from Alabama has said, or he is not familiar with the contents of the bill, but what the bill will do is provide up to $7.5 million for each person who seeks the Presidential nomination of either of the major parties and who is able to get a starting fund of $250,000 in contributions of $250 or less. Actually, there are some 8 or 10 potential candidates for the Presidency here in the Halls of Congress. So really, to get the figures of what the Presidential nomination contest would run, it could run up to $75 million or $100 million, because Senators can rest assured that there will be a whole lot of special interest groups espousing the candidacies of various people, because it would take just a campaign fund of $250,000 to start getting one's hand in the Public Treasury.

The Senator from Kentucky also talked about a lot of people being in court, convicted, one thing and another, in connection with Watergate, and that this bill is necessary to cure the evils of Watergate. Well, the way to do that is not to put one's hand in the public Treasury, but the way to do that is to cut down on the amount of authorized expenditures and cut down on the amount of permissible contributions. The Senator from Alabama has been trying to do that all along, but without the help of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, who has been voting against these amendments.

The Senator from Alabama tried to get an amendment adopted that would have cut contributions down to $250 in Presidential races and $100 in House and Senate races, but with little help from those who say they are for reform. I submit it is not reform just to turn the bill for political campaigns over to the American taxpayers. What would constitute reform would be to cut down on the amount of overall contributions, to cut down drastically on the amount of individual contributions, provide for strict disclosure and reporting of all contributions and expenditures, and set up an independent election committee.

We passed such a bill and sent it over to the House last year, without the benefit of any public funds. I would feel that if we would stand firm on that theory of campaign reform, we would eventually get a bill.

I want to appeal now to the distinguished sponsors of the pending Stevenson amendment, Senators STEVENSON, HUMPHREY, DOMENICI, TAFT, CRANSTON, MONDALE, and BEALL. If these Senators expect to get the amendment that they have at the desk given any consideration with any chance of adopting it, then it would serve them in good stead to vote against applying cloture, because once cloture is agreed to, the great steamroller will bowl over this amendment, and they would end up with no amendment whatsoever. If the Senator from Illinois would vote against cloture, he would be in a commanding position to insist on the adoption of his amendment, and I submit that suggestion to the distinguished Senator from Illinois and his colleagues.

I was interested, too, Mr. President, in the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY), who talked about all this pressure from pressure groups that he was receiving by reason of being for this 37 5 percent discount amendment that he and Mr. STEVENSON have put in, because it would reduce potentially the Federal subsidy in congressional races, House and Senate, by 37.5 percent, and 30 percent in Presidential elections.

So apparenlty there are great pressure groups at work in behalf of public financing, and I think we know who those groups are. I see them in consultation with Members of the Senate from time to time. They have not consulted with the Senator from Alabama. However, there are great pressure groups involved here, as indicated by the statement of the distinguished Senator from Minnesota.

I would like to see the Stevenson-Humphrey-et al. amendment adopted, but we are not going to get it adopted if cloture is invoked. If cloture is not invoked, I think they can be sure that those who are for Federal subsidies would agree to adding the amendment. I think if the Senator is serious and is not just making a play on this amendment, but wants to get it adopted, he will vote against applying cloture, because before the debate was over, he would be able to get his amendment agreed to.

The distinguished Senator from Kansas says he is against a public subsidy bill, but is for cloture. Well, if there ever was a non sequitur uttered on the floor here, that is it, because if a person is really against public financing, he would vote against cloture, because I have a feeling that the majority leader, if we were able to defeat cloture today, would not bring it up more than one more time. So the way to defeat it, I would say to the distinguished Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE), would be to vote against cloture. Then we will get on to something else earlier than if cloture were invoked.

The distinguished Senator from Kansas said—and this is what I really planned to say—that the Senate had spent quite a lot of time in considering pay raises for Senators.

The Senator from Alabama voted against the pay raises for the Senate 5 years ago and also voted against a pay raise for the Senate this year. However, the strong force of public opinion is what caused the Senate to vote against that pay raise. It was a modest pay raise—something like $2,500 a year. It was the first pay raise in more than 5 years. However, the Senate, sensing the wishes and views of their constituents, voted against that pay raise and turned thumbs down on it.

If the people disapprove of a raise of $2,500 for the Senators, what will they think about the provision of the distinguished Senator from California which provides for subsidizing the Senate race in his State, subsidizing each candidate for the Senate in a general election by $2,121,000?

So if the people disapprove of a $2,500 pay raise for the Senate, the distinguished Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON) would not be covered by that law since it was passed during the term in which he was serving office.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Alabama ought to recognize that his amendment was adopted. So the figure for California would not be $2,121,000. It would be $1,697,000 for the general election, in light of the Senator's own amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the Senator. The Senator from Alabama was so surprised that his amendment was adopted that he did not charge his memory with the figures.

So the Senator from California under the amendment of the Senator from Alabama would have to struggle along with a subsidy and a check for $1,697,000 just as soon as he became a nominee. That is what he would have to struggle along with under the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

If the public does not approve of a $2,500 pay raise for the Senate, what is the public going to think of subsidizing a public campaign for the Senate in the amount of $1.697 million. I do not think that they will approve of it.

So if we are going to shake together a bill—and it looks as though there is some chance of getting a better bill, because we have lopped 25 percent off the public expenses earlier, and the distinguished Senator from Illinois has an amendment that would chop off up to 37.5 percent of the Federal subsidy in congressional races, and up to 30 percent in Presidential races—maybe if the debate is allowed to continue a few more days we might be able to get an amendment through to withdraw 100 percent of the Federal subsidy.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, first let me say that I was aware of the $1.7 million for one candidate. In fact, I used it in terms of one candidate.

The Senator asks about the cost to the public. But what amazes me, when we talk about this, is that the public does not understand what is in the bill. It gives the public the impression that the minute one becomes a candidate they will write a check for $1,700,000, and they will write it automatically.

If the Senator reads the bill, there is quite a procedure that one has to go through. There is quite an accounting to go through. He is not immediately able to put $1,697,000 in his pocket and say, "All right. Now I am a candidate for the general election."

I must say in all fairness that we should at least equate the bill with reality. We did not work in the Rules Committee on the bill and, as a matter of fact, the Senator from Alabama worked hard along with us hard and arduously along with us. He has worked hard all along.

There is no question about how the Senator feels. And I must say that I respect him for how he does feel. I must say that we have been on the bill now for 2 weeks. And I am rather chagrinned that the Senate of the United States must spend that much time on a bill that deals with the electoral process in the United States with regard to presidential candidacies and Senate and House candidacies. However, I do know one thing.

The Senator says that we could chop at this thing, that we are getting closer to it, and that we are getting smaller contributions and trying to get the candidates to get smaller contributions.

May I remind the Senator how we tried to get away from the tremendous subsidies to the great big farms in the United States and said that there would be a limit on the amount of subsidies that a man could get. However, a man could divide up a great big farm, and instead of getting $100,000, for one big farm, he could get subsidies for a lot of little farms.

How many times have we done that in the past? Now, we say that we are trying to help the American taxpayer and see to it that no one can get over $100.

How do we resolve that problem?

Somebody told me one time that he did not have trouble about getting the money for a campaign.

Somebody told me one time that he was never able to find out how many campaign checks he had given. He would say, "How much do you want," and he went through checkbook after checkbook after checkbook writing check after check after check.

The ability to control this is the honesty of the man himself. Is the man going to be an honest candidate for public office, or is he not. That is the determination the individual makes.

Are the people that contribute to him going to be honest about the contributions they give?

I think that is a determination each individual must make for himself. I do not think it can be made in any other way. We have tried. There is over-reaction in this bill but over-reaction is better than no bill at all.

The reason that we have a bill considered in one branch and then in the other branch is so that the over-reactions can be ironed out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, has all time expired?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If no time is yielded, time will run equally against each side.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, how much time remains to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, on July 30 of last year, the Senate passed by a vote of 82 to 8 S. 372. That bill provided a $3,000 limitation on contributions. It provided that no contributions in cash could exceed $50. It provided the same limitations that this bill formerly provided on the amount that could be expended; namely, 15 cents per person of voting age in the general election and 10 cents in the primary election.

During the course of the passage of that bill here in the Senate, an amendment was offered providing for public financing, and that amendment was defeated by, I believe, a vote of 52 to 40.

That bill is still pending in the House of Representatives, and before it is even acted on by the House, we have before us now S. 3044, which changes the entire thrust of the so-called campaign reform legislation. Whereas the bill that we passed last year, that is now pending in the House of Representatives, provided for financing in the private sector, the bill before us provides for public financing.

Mr. President public financing, letting the taxpayers pay the bill, requires a taxpayer to support a candidate with whose views and with whose philosophy he disagrees. Mr. President, we already have public financing in a sense. We have the checkoff. That is available for Presidential elections right now, and they say there is enough in the fund, or will be by 1976, to finance the campaigns of the major parties and of the minor parties.

Mr. President, the committee bill does not apply to Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate in the 1974 elections. It does not go into effect until the 1976 elections. So what is the hurry about the bill? Why ram it through the Senate now? Why not lay it aside and get on to other measures?

Mr. President, we have the checkoff. We have a system—and all the taxpayers, I am sure, are familiar with this, having been working on their tax returns in recent days and weeks—of credits or deductions available for campaign contributions, I believe a $12.50 credit for a single person or $25 for a couple, an absolute credit, and this bill originally provided for doubling that amount. That bill will be coming back from the House of Representatives before long. And on the matter of deductions, it provides $50 for a political contribution made by a single person or a $100 deduction for a couple.

So we already have public financing of elections, one big difference being that the taxpayer can make his contribution under those systems, either the credit or the deduction, to a candidate of his choice. But that is not provided for in the 100 percent public financing as provided by the pending bill.

Mr. President, we do not need any more public financing than we already have. I believe it would be the better part of wisdom for us to wait until the House of Representatives passes something, because we have heard time and time again that the House may not approve this measure, or may not take it, that it may get tied up over there.

What is the hurry? It does not apply until the 1976 elections. Let us see what the House does with S. 372. Let us see what the House initiates on its own, and then possibly we will be in less of a legislative jam when such a bill comes to the Senate.

Mr. President, there is no grand rush about passing this legislation. I am hopeful that cloture will not be invoked, so that we can give serious consideration to the Stevenson-Humphrey-Cranston et al. amendment, which does provide for a possible reduction of 37.5 percent in House and Senate races, a reduction in the public subsidy of up to 37.5 percent, or up to 30 percent in Presidential elections.

If we do not invoke cloture, we will have an opportunity to consider that amendment. If cloture is invoked, the amendment will be steamrollered, with no chance of passage whatsoever, and in my judgment some of the sponsors of the amendment possibly might not even vote for it when the pressures that the Senator from Minnesota was talking about are applied to them. Mark the word of the Senator from Alabama that some of the sponsors may well vote against their own amendment.

Mr. President, the fallacy of this bill is that here is a bill providing for paying for elections out of the taxpayers' pockets, and it is posing as reform legislation when in fact it is not. It is just taxpayer-financed elections, pure and simple. It is not campaign reform. It is campaign reform in that it changes the law, but it is not campaign reform, and there is quite a distinction.

Mr. President, those who have sponsored this raid on the taxpayers' pocketbooks have not been interested in cutting down the overall campaign expenditures, save the distinguished Senator from Nevada, who did support that amendment. They have not been interested in reducing the individual contributions, because they had opportunity after opportunity to cut down those figures, and the Senator from Alabama has another amendment pending that will be considered whether cloture is invoked or not, which would cut contributions in Presidential races from a maximum of $3,000 down to $2,500, and in House and Senate races from $3,000 down to $1,250. Perhaps that would suit the tastes of a majority of the Members of the Senate. We have tried cutting them down to $250 in Presidential races and $100 in congressional races, and that failed. We then tried——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. Who yields time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CANNON. If the remaining time is yielded back now, does the quorum call commence immediately?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The quorum call is supposed to begin at the hour set.

Mr. CANNON. At the hour set?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. With 1 minute to go.

Mr. CANNON. A further parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CANNON. If time is yielded back, what happens in the interim of 1 minute before the hour stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rules prescribe that at the set hour, the Chair must instruct the clerk to call the roll.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I hope the cloture motion will be sustained, and that cloture will be invoked. We have been on this bill for a considerable period of time. We have had a test vote on almost every conceivable issue that I can think of in connection with the matter. We certainly have had every opportunity to debate every conceivable issue in connection with this matter.

OTHER PEOPLE'S MONEY

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, in my more than 20 years in politics I have learned a thing or two about campaign financing. My knowledge has been acquired in several capacities—as a candidate, a fund raiser, and most recently, a member of an investigating panel looking to campaign finance practices. My knowledge leads to an inescapable conclusion—our present system of financing our elections is unfair, undemocratic and unacceptable.

As a candidate I have run for elective office seven times. By the grace of God and the good graces of the voters of Hawaii, I have been successful in each election. Because I am not a man of independent wealth, in each election I have had to rely on other people's money to finance my campaign efforts. As the chairman of the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee in 1970, I learned the importance of other people's money in all senatorial and congressional campaigns. And during the Watergate hearings we all learned that other people's money fueled the campaigns of the various Democratic candidates for the Presidential nomination. It provided the Committee to Re-Elect the President the wherewithal to present Richard Nixon to the American electorate in the manner he wished to be presented. CREEP also used other people's money to create a string of scandals unprecedented in American political history.

The high cost of campaigning has escalated in the last two decades at a more rapid rate than the cost of living. Today a competitive campaign for a House seat can cost each side well over $100,000, while a Senate contest can cost each campaigner a minimum of $250,000 even in a relatively small State. And as the Senate Watergate panel discovered over $100 million was spent in the Presidential campaign of 1972.

Television, radio, direct mail, telephoning, printed pamphlets, newspaper advertising, transportation, and other essential means of modern communication used to present a candidate to the voting public are very expensive. Somebody must pay these campaign bills. The trend throughout the 20th century has been toward other people's money, that is small numbers of large contributors paying these bills. The damage to our democracy that the reliance on large contributors in elections has caused is plain for all to see.

The American people have never been more alienated from their political system than they are today. A smaller percentage of our people go to the polls than in any other industrial democracy. The decline of people willing to identify themselves with either of our major parties has been striking. The majority of American men and women hold politics and politicians in low esteem. Politics is very much a dirty word in today's lexicon and the belief that all politicians are corrupt is dangerously widespread.

We politicians did not need Watergate and the Agnew tragedy to learn that something was rotten in Washington. We have been aware of that for some time, but most of us have preferred to close our eyes to the campaign financing practices which have shamed our once honorable profession and—yes, let us face it—corrupted our system.

Let us look at how the reliance on other people's money to finance our campaigns has—and by its nature must—corrupt our present political process.

Since the Tillman Act of 1907, there have been limitations on the sources of campaign contributions. The Corrupt Practices Act of 1910 first required candidates for Federal office to report on campaign income and expenditures. Yet, in every election year candidates for Federal office have avoided, circumvented, and occasionally evaded just about every State and national law that regulates the political fund-raising process. The techniques of avoidance may be complex, but they are well known. Secret conduits, spurious committees, and other forms of deceit and subterfuge come into existence to assure candidates the money needed to reach the voters. Honest men, with the best intentions, unwittingly take money from sources that are proscribed against giving it. It comes in prohibited quantities and much, if not most, of it goes unreported and even unrecorded.

A recent New York Times editorial succinctly stated the dilemma of our present system.

> Try as they may to conduct these political fund-raising activities at arm's length and to develop multiple sources of support to lessen their dependence on a single interest group, politicians of necessity are constantly enchaining themselves in dependent financial relationships and potential conflicts of interest.

Senator RUSSELL LONG put it more bluntly when he said:

> The distinction between a campaign contribution and a bribe is almost a hairline's difference. You can hardly tell one from the other.

Every elected official should understand the truth in that statement.

In a democracy, the illusion of corruption is as damaging to the fabric of freedom as actual corruption. During the Watergate hearings, I heard witness upon witness testify that donations were made to President Nixon's campaign because the contributor feared governmental reprisals or desired governmental favors. Even if these expectations were unfounded, a system which leads contributors to act in response to such expectations must also lead the public to believe that the relationship between campaign cash and governmental decisions is real.

Before my participation on the Watergate Committee, I was not fully convinced that a shift from reliance on private money to public money was the proper direction for our electoral system. I have spent many long hours reading thousands of pages of committee documents, executive session transcripts, academic treatises on this subject. I sat through days of public hearings listening to the tragic details of the campaign practices of 1972. During these past several months I have become convinced of the wisdom of the call for public financing of elections.

The Select Committee as a whole has not yet considered or expressed itself on legislative recommendations. But full Senate consideration of the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1973 and 1974 has forced each member of the committee to take a public stand on the questions of election reform. As my votes on these bills have shown, when the full committee writes its report, I will strongly recommend public financing of elections as a necessary element of any new system of campaign regulations. The facts of Watergate as I interpret them and the facts of political life in America today lead to that conclusion.

I cannot accept the argument that public financing will discourage, if not prohibit, the individual exercise of the first amendment right of freedom of political expression. A system of matching small private contributions with public money will, in fact, encourage political expression from the millions of Americans who do not now participate. A tax checkoff system, as proposed in the legislation now before the Senate, will not force any taxpayer to contribute to campaigns. It will, however, encourage the taxpayer to choose to participate in this essential part of the political process.

Further, I do not believe that public financing creates additional advantages for incumbents. The advantages we incumbents have are already overwhelming. We have paid staffs and offices, free use of the mails, frequent access to our constituents through the news media, and entree to the campaign coffers of special-interest groups. The ability of incumbents to retain their seats indicates strongly that challengers often cannot get enough money to finance effective campaigns. Over the past 30 years incumbent Representatives have won reelection in over 90 percent of their campaigns, while incumbent Senators have over an 85-percent reelection rate. In 1972 congressional incumbents were on the average able to raise twice as much campaign money as challengers. Public financing may help to redress that balance by making access to large contributors less of a controlling factor in elections.

The argument that public financing will place an additional burden on the already heavily burdened taxayer does not sway me. The taxpayer is now paying for our system of campaign financing every time he goes to the station, the supermarket, the drugstore, and every year as he fills out his tax form. Tax loopholes were not written into our laws by accident. The special interests have not underwritten campaign costs out of any sense of charity. And each time a change of legislative language, or a preferential amendment, or a pork barrel bill or a "Christmas Tree Act" passes through the Congress, the taxpayer unknowingly and unwillingly contributes to our present system of campaign finance. Public financing will let the taxpayer know what he is paying. With that knowledge he can decide if he is getting his money's worth.

The ideal democratic electoral system is easy to envision. It should be fair, open, competitive, clean, and above board. It should build support for our political institutions and respect for the political process. But the design of laws which will make the ideal into a reality is complex, if not impossible.

Watergate has opened our eyes to the cancer that is growing on our political system. We need drastic surgery to stem that cancer. Watergate has given us the impetus and the opportunity to try a drastic cure. In 1907 President Theodore Roosevelt first called for public financing of campaigns. It is time to heed that call. We may not create a panacea, but we can begin to restore our political health.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, the revelations of Watergate and similar political abuses of the recent past have both shocked and angered the American people. They demand reform, and indeed, reform we must have.

In times such as these, however, history has shown that our Nation must avoid making the remedy worse than the disease. I fear that a lasting tragedy of the Watergate era could be the well intentioned but misconceived concept of public financing of Federal elections as contained in S. 3044. It would be a sad irony indeed to see a national disgrace serve as the catalyst for establishing an ill-conceived election process.

I oppose the so-called public financing provisions in the pending bill. This concept, while perhaps having a superficial appeal to some, would be unacceptable to the American taxpayer. It should be noted that public financing will not necessarily end campaign abuses. Funding is only one aspect to the campaign process. Money raised from private sources should not be necessarily suspect. Even under the public financing proposal, private funds will continue to be utilized.

Mr. President, I wish to commend the distinguished Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) for his wisdom and tenacity in opposing the public financing provisions as contained in S. 3044. His careful analysis of these provisions has been of great benefit to me and other Members in considering this legislation.

What is needed to help correct the abuses of the Watergate era is reform and strengthening of the laws that govern the procedural conduct of campaigns. What is needed is the imposition of reasonable limitations on individual contributions, and greater incentives for voters to voluntarily make such contributions. I cosponsored the amendment offered by Senators ERVIN and BAKER to provide such an incentive through a $100 tax credit on an individual return, or $200 on a joint return. Unfortunately, the Senate rejected this amendment.

The most acceptable form of financing is that which consists of funding campaigns by small voluntary individual contributions from a broad cross section of the public. This, I submit, is what Congress should be working toward. It is public financing in the true and finest sense of the term. The income tax checkoff system for financing Presidential elections is one approach to such grassroots support. Only 3.1 percent of the taxpayers submitting returns in 1972 chose to exercise this procedure. Thus, only $3.9 million was designated for election financing. However, early returns for 1973 indicate that a much higher percentage of tax returns are utilizing the checkoff. If this trend continues, the system will go far to financing Presidential elections in 1976.

Positive reform, together with strict enforcement and full public disclosure can do much to end the past abuses of fundraising through big contributors and special interests. We have not yet tried such tough regulation.

It should be noted that 1972 was the first year we required public disclosure at the Federal level. Many persons also overlook the fact that most of the campaign abuses in the 1972 election took place prior to the April 7, 1972, effective date for public disclosure.

Furthermore, many of the improprieties such as corporate contributions, were in violation of existing law.

However, last July the Senate passed S. 372 which provides strict limits on campaign expenditures and contributions, while leaving the financing of Federal elections in the private sector.

An individual could give no more than $3,000 to a congressional or Presidential candidate in an election, or more than $25,000 to all candidates and committees in 1 year.

Senate candidates would be limited to 10 cents per eligible voter up to a ceiling of $125,000 in primary elections and 15 cents and a $175,000 ceiling in the general election. House candidates would be subject to similar limitations with a ceiling of $90,000 during primary and general elections.

That measure contained other restrictions such as prohibiting cash contributions over $50 and restricting the use of the frank in mass campaign mailings.

I believe that it would be wise to wait until the House acts on S. 372 before rushing ahead with public financing. If that measure is enacted into law, it will provide meaningful reform. After we have experience under its provisions, then we might find it prudent to tighten the election laws still further. I deem it inappropriate to make such a drastic change in our electorial process as that entailed in public financing without first attempting to correct past abuses through the reasonable procedures contained in S. 372.

Mr. President, it is most enlightening to note that of the seven members of the Watergate Committee, five, including my distinguished colleague from the State of Georgia (Mr. TALMADGE) are opposed to this bill's public financing provisions. This committee has labored long and hard over many months to investigate campaign abuses and to determine how to reform our electoral process to prevent future improprieties. The Watergate report is scheduled to be filed in the near future. However, the proponents of public financing refuse to defer action until after this body has had an opportunity to study the report's recommendations. All too well do they realize that the report will not favor their view; all to glibly do they dismiss the wise counsel of the committee's majority; and all too readily do they seek to expend the taxpayer's dollars.

I want to point out that not one abuse would be prevented in the upcoming 1974 election by the pending bill since its provisions are not effective until the 1976 election.

We have all of 1974 and 1975 to draft additional campaign reform legislation if it is needed. Yet, the proponents of S. 3044 urge that we rush through this proposal. Why? Because they wish to take advantage of the emotional tide that has arisen over Watergate.

Mr. President, meaningful campaign reform should stand or fall on its own merits detached from the emotional sway of Watergate.

I oppose the unnecessary and unwise public financing provisions in this legislation.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, as we continue to debate the merits of public financing and other proposals to reform our electoral system, I think it is appropriate to note that the General Assembly of Maryland, which just this week completed its 1974 session, enacted a State election reform measure. Although different in its final version than the various individual bills that were introduced, the Maryland legislation does include the concept of public financing for general elections, in addition to a number of other features, many of them similar to the proposals we are considering here. Needless to say, there was extensive debate in the legislature, as well as general public discussion, about election reform. Full hearings were held, at which all shades of opinion were expressed. One of the most succinct statements against public financing of elections was submitted to the Judicial Proceedings Committee of the Maryland Senate by Ray Gill, a columnist for a number of Maryland weekly newspapers, and a long-time observer of government and politics in our State. I disagree with Mr. Gill on the subject of public financing of elections.

But his statement is a clear expression of a point of view that must be taken into account here, as it was in Maryland. Because it is vitally important that all sides of the issue be fully explored, I ask, Mr. President, that Mr. Gill's statement be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY RAY GILL

Common Cause and other reform organizations have made a great issue of how special interests influence the course of government by contributing to the election campaigns of candidates for public offices.

And God knows, we have seen enough evidence of abuses of the system within the past year.

The problem is that everybody has become so obsessed with the liabilities of our free political and economic system that nobody seems to remember the assets.

I am convinced that the greatest danger we face arises from the hysterical mania for reform, agitated by many well-meaning people and some whose motives are only dimly perceived.

At the congressional level and here in Annapolis, the craze to perfect the system threatens to strangle political liberty. The worst lunge in that direction would be public financing of election compaigns.

The citizen's right to contribute or not to contribute would be abolished. The cash for electoral candidates would be forcibly taken from him by taxation.

The citizen would also lose any choice in the matter of which candidates get his money. The funds would go to a pool for distribution to condidates according to some formula that would ignore the preferences of the taxpayer.

The dollars would be distributed to candidates hostile to the taxpayer's own political beliefs, as well as those he might favor.

I am convinced that would be unconstitutional and, if it is not, then it surely ought to be.

The courts of our land have repeatedly held that it is unconstitutional to prohibit the expression of any idea.

I daresay it is just as unconstitutional to compel a citizen to support candidates whose ideology is contrary to his own, but that's what would happen under this pernicious legislation.

If public financing of presidential elections ever comes to pass, for example, imagine the chagrin of a black taxpayer when he realizes that some of his tax dollars have been pumped into the campaign of George Wallace.

At the congressional level, I would surely be pained to have even one dime of my hard-earned cash going to Bella Abzug or Parren Mitchell.

And I can think of quite a few state legislators whom I would hate to support, including those who would vote for a bill such as this.

Instead of being obsessed with the scandals that have erupted lately, having been exposed and prosecuted by due process of law, I urge you to consider the cause of individual liberty.

Perhaps we all need reminding that government is the historic enemy of freedom, and its growing power in this nation is something we should not ignore.

Within the past 40 years, laws, rules, regulations, guidelines, plans and bureaucratic decisions of government have increasingly invaded every aspect of life

The economic power of government has grown to the point at which it consumes nearly 30 percent of the gross national product of the nation.

There are strong political forces that want government to assume more and more power over our lives, to tax more and spend more, to satisfy every human want and need, to plan your neighborhood, to practice sociology on your children, to regulate us all toward some concept of what society ought to be.

Thees organizations are well-organized and well-financed nationality. Their members relentlessly campaign for more and larger government programs and for candidates who will support their goals. And they are quick to denounce their opposition as "special interests."

But I would hate to think of a government in which those special interests were not represented.

I believe it is fortunate that business and labor contribute money to the election campaigns of candidates of their choice. So do countless individual citizens who perceive certain candidates to be representatives of their interests.

The economic power in elections is currently dispersed, as it ought to be, among a multitude of interests. A government elected thusly will try to balance and accommodate the interests at work in a free society.

The balance of interests checks the power of government, restrains it from committing excesses in any direction, and preserves freedom.

But public financing of election campaigns would eliminate important restraints on government and erode freedom.

I would also ask you to remember that the people are already taxed more than enough to support the galaxy of public services and attendant bureaucracies that have grown so vastly in recent times.

We might argue about the cost and necessity of some of those services, but at least the goal is service.

I wonder how you're going to convince the taxpayer that your election campaigns are public services for which he must be forced to pay.

CLOTURE MOTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HELMS). All time for debate having expired and the hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, the clerk will report the cloture motion.

The assistant legislative clerk read the cloture motion, as follows:

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of Rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close the debate upon the pending bill S. 3044, a bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

The question before the Senate is: Is it the sense of the Senate that debate on S. 3044, a bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns, shall be brought to a close?

The yeas and nays are mandatory under the rule.

The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate, so that Senators who are following the count may hear all the responses?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's suggestion is in order. The Senate will be in order. The Chair solicits the cooperation of all Senators.

The clerk will proceed.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, we do not have the kind of order that will allow Senators to hear the responses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All Senators will take their seats. The clerk will not proceed until the Senators are in their seats or in the cloakroom.

The clerk will proceed.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. BIBLE (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. McGEE) and the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH). If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay." If they were present, they would vote "yea." I withhold my vote.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), and the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. McGEE) are necessarily absent.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG) is necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG) would vote "nay."

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 64, nays 30, as follows:

NOT VOTING—5

Church	Long	Scott,
Fong	McGee	William L.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote there are 64 yeas and 30 nays. Two-thirds of the Senators present and voting having voted in the affirmative, the cloture motion is agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate and in the galleries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, I rise to ask the distinguished majority leader if he will give us the schedule for the remainder of the day and perhaps he can give us the prognosis from now until the scheduled Easter hiatus.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I am very happy to respond to the distinguished Republican leader, and state that we will go as long today as there are amendments available.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 10 A.M.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today it stand in adjournment until the hour of 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, it is anticipated that the tornado disaster relief bill, which I understand was reported by the Committee on Public Works, will be taken up tomorrow after the conclusion of the pending business. There will be one or two other items which will be relatively noncontroversial. It is expected that the Senate, in line with the House action, will recess at the end of business Thursday rather than at the end of business Friday, as in the original schedule.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I understand a couple of the energy bills are on the way out or are out of committee. If so, I assume they will be brought up as soon as possible after the Easter recess.

Mr. MANSFIELD. After the no-fault insurance bill, which will be the next major item of business, has been disposed of—and it will be very controversial and debate well may be extended—generally speaking, that bill will be followed by the education bill, which likewise will be subject to extended debate.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. We all hope that debate on the no-fault insurance bill will leave each of us with no fault personally.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Does the majority leader suggest that we lay down the no-fault bill before we quit?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes, and that it be the pending business.

Mr. MAGNUSON. And that it be the pending business when we return. Obviously, we could not have votes on it between now and Thursday.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is correct; and may I say, following the suggestions made by the distinguished Senator from Washington, who is the chairman of the Committee on Commerce and who will be the manager of the bill.

Mr. MAGNUSON. And that would mean that after the recess, no-fualt would be the pending order of business?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. It might be superseded by two or three matters, but it would be the pending order of business.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes; and as far as the military authorization bill is concerned, that will not be taken up until sometime after the recess.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued withe the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair inquiries as to who yields time.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. STEVENSON. What is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. KENNEDY obtained the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. The Senate will be in order. The Senator cannot be heard.

The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, as I understand the parliamentary situation, I do have an amendment at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I would like to withdraw that amendment and reintroduce another amendment which is at the desk and which has some technical changes in it to conform more accurately with the legislation before us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be withdrawn. The clerk will read the amendment now proposed.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read Mr. KENNEDY's amendment to Mr. STEVENSON's amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, what was the objection to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts requested unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with. Objection was heard.

The clerk will read the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read the amendment to the amendment, as follows:

Strike the language proposed by Mr. STEVENSON by striking out subsection (b) (1) (A) (1) proposed to be inserted on page 10, beginning with line 17, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(b) (1) Every eligible candidate who is nominated by a major party is entitled to payments for use in his general election campaign in an amount equal to—

"(A) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of President, 100 percent of the amount of expenditures the candidate may make in connection with that campaign under section 504, and

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President. I will say, for the benefit of Members of the Senate, that this was an amendment which was introduced by myself, the minority leader (Mr. HUGH SCOTT), and Senators HART, SCHWEIKER, MATHIAS of California, and JAVITS. I do not intend to take very much time, but as a point of information for the membership, this amendment is to——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend. The Senate is not in order.

The Senator may proceed.

Mr. KENNEDY. This amendment would modify the Stevenson amendment to restore the provision in the bill reported out of the Committee on Rules and Administration for 100 percent public financing of general elections for the office of the President. The Stevenson amendment would cut this back to 40 percent public financing. This is an issue which has been debated and discussed since 1966. On many occasions over the past 8 years, the membership has voted on whether we want full public financing of Presidential elections. It is part of present law, the dollar checkoff we created in 1971. The Stevenson amendment would weaken the existing law and change significantly the bill which is before the Senate dealing with Presidential elections.

The issue on the Stevenson amendment is an issue which we have voted on before. We rejected the concept of partial public financing a week ago, and it was also defeated as an amendment that was proposed last fall.

The purpose and the thrust of my amendment is to preserve the features of existing law and the committee bill as they relate to Presidential elections. If this amendment is accepted to the Stevenson amendment, and if the Stevenson amendment is later accepted as amended, the Senate would preserve the provisions of current law which deal with the public funding of Presidential elections.

Financing of Presidential elections has really not been one of the principal issues debated or discussed on the committee bill. There has been general agreement in the Senate that the current is adequate. It is one of the most essential parts of the whole campaign reform proposal, and I would hope that my amendment, which has the strong bipartisan support of many of those who have been working in this area, will be accepted. Certainly, we should not retreat from existing law.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, the subject of this amendment has been fully debated, and I certainly do not intend to prolong the debate. This amendment raises a question which I think can be simply put. It is simply, why pay more when, for less, we can do a better job?

Whatever the formula, Presidential candidates are going to opt for public financing. This amendment would drive out every last nickel and dime of private money for those Presidential campaigns in which the candidate has opted for public financing. No individual could contribute any money to the candidate of his choice. He could not contribute $5. He could not contribute $500.

Many people feel seriously about their politics——

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend until the Senate is in order. Staff members are solicited to cooperate.

The Senator may proceed.

Mr. STEVENSON. They feel very seriously about their election campaigns and feel seriously about their politics. They want to help. They want to be a part of their Government. They want to help candidates of their choice. They want to do so by giving small contributions. The Kennedy amendment says, "No." It says whether one wants to contribute $5 or $10, he cannot do it. It says by implication that the citizen might corrupt a candidate for the Presidency of the United States with a $5 or $10 contribution.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on my time?

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. There is nothing in this amendment that would prohibit any individual who wanted to spend money on behalf of a candidate from taking out an advertisement or buying time on television or radio or sponsoring a program that would permit people to watch a candidate. He would be able to spend up to $1,000 for such purposes, regardless of the candidate's own spending limit.

My amendment does not eliminate this provision. What it does do is make full public financing available to a candidate. But an individual would be able to spend up to $1,000 of his own money on behalf of a candidate, independent of the candidate's own limit. That provision is preserved, and I think wisely so.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Did the Senator from Illinois say in his remarks that the bill as it is now written would remove every last nickel of private financing?

Mr. STEVENSON. In the case of every candidate who accepted the public funds made available by the bill, there could be no more private contributions.

As the Senator from Massachusetts has pointed out, a person acting independently of a candidate could spend up to $1,000 of his own money to express his views, he could not contribute $5 to a candidate of his own choice.

Mr. ABOUREZK. But the Presidential candidate could raise private financing for a candidate.

Mr. STEVENSON. That is true. The purpose of public financing is to prevent big, essentially corrupting contributions, not $5 contributions. It is the small contributions which are innocent, and that is a healthy form of political participation.

The amendment I have offered, unamended by the Senator from Massachusetts, would accomplish both objectives. It would eliminate from our politics the large contributions and would preserve the innocent, small contributions. It would decrease the cost to the Treasury of financing campaigns for the Presidency.

If the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts had been in effect in 1972, President Nixon and the Committee to Re-Elect the President would have received $16 million from the U.S. Treasury. There is no necessity for that. It is offensive to the American public. It could be offensive to the Constitution.

Large contributions could be eliminated and small contributions preserved without the amendment of the Senator from Masaschusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the genius of the committee bill we are considering this afternoon is its complete flexibility. A candidate is not required to accept any public financing. If he wants to raise his funds from small, private contributions, he can do that. We do not have to change the existing legislation to accomplish the goal of the Senator from Illinois.

Many of the things that the Senator from Illinois advocates in terms of preserving small contributions are true. If an individual wants to go out and raise the money by $5 contributions, nothing in the committee bill would prevent that. But there is also nothing in it that would require him to raise private funds, if he preferred to finance his campaign from public funds.

Let me also point out that under the Senator's amendment, a candidate could still accept large contributions of $3,000 or $6,000. How many candidates relying on private funds will seek out the $250 donor for matching grants, when they can get funds at $6,000 a clip from an individual or a special interest group?

So, on the one hand, the Senator is putting a limit on what can be provided through public financing. On the other hand, he is not requiring a candidate to raise the money by small contributions.

It would still be possible for him to finance his campaign in $3,000 or $6,000 contributions. That is a large loophole. The lower we set the limit on public funds, the higher we make the incentive to rely on unduly large private contributions.

The bill before the Senate has been thought out in a responsible way. It seeks to provide flexibility for a candidate who wants partial public financing. He can say that he will take some public funds or all public funds, or no public funds. He has that flexibility. If he wants to raise his funds in small contributions, he can do that under the committee bill.

So I hope that at least the provision in current law which deals with Presidential elections will be retained and that we would not weaken it in the way suggested by the pending amendment.

Mr. President, I am ready for a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM) are necessarily absent.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), and the Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 45, as follows:

So Mr. KENNEDY'S amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON), as amended.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, on behalf of Senators HUGH SCOTT, HART, SCHWEIKER, MATHIAS, and JAVITS, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HASKELL). The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

In the matter proposed to be inserted on page 10, strike out proposed subsection (b) (1) (A) (ii) and (b) (1) (B) and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(B) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Senator or Repsesentatve, the sum of ——

"(i) 50 percent of the amount of expenditures the candidate may make in connection with that campaign under section 504, and

"(ii) the amount of contribution he and his authorized committees received for that campaign."

At the end of paragraph (6) proposed on page 3, strike out "(1) (A)" and insert "(1) (A) or (B)".

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may need.

The committee bill provides for full public financing for congressional elections. There is a feeling, and rightly so, that what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. If we have full public financing for Presidential elections, as we already do, then we should have full public financing of congressional elections as well.

There has been extensive debate on public financing for congressional elections, both during the past few days as well as last fall, when a similar proposal was before the Senate.

Instead of full public funding for congressional elections, the Stevenson amendment allows only a 25-percent front end subsidy, plus matching grants of public funds for the remainder of a candidate's spending limit. If matching grants are fully used by a candidate, he would receive matching public funds equal to half of the remaining 75 percent of his expenses, or 37.5 percent. Thus, his total public funds would equal the initial 25 percent plus the matching 37.5 percent, or a total of 62.5 percent public funds.

My amendment would raise the initial front end subsidy to 50 percent, and allow matching for the remainder. Thus, my amendment put a substantial limit on public funds. It is a significant retreat compared to the committee, but it is offered in a spirit of compromise to try to reach a middle ground with the Senator from Illinois and others who prefer a mixed system of public funds and matching grants in general elections.

The amendment we are offering would allow a candidate to obtain 75 percent public financing for his campaign—50 percent from the front end subsidy, and 25 percent through matching.

Now, that may not sound very different from the amendment of the Senator from Illinois—75 percent versus 62.5 percent—but there is an important additional point. Those amounts of public funds will be reached, only by candidates who raise all their private money in contributions of $100 or less. Far more likely, many candidates will choose to go to the big contributors for private money, where funds can be raised at $6,000 a clip. So we may wind up with a situation where a candidate under the Stevenson amendment raises only 25 percent public funds, and gets all the rest from wealthy contributors or special interest groups. My amendment would at least raise this level to 50 percent, and that is an important difference.

This is a reasonable adjustment and compromise in this area. The sponsors are reluctant to make this adjustment, but we also recognize that this approach is likely to be more acceptable to the House.

Our amendment is offered as a reasonable compromise to those who believe we should put a limitation on what is available in public funds.

I would hope that the amendment would be accepted by the Senate.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, as a Senator who is very likely to be a candidate this year, I support and, indeed, I am one of the cosponsors of Senator KENNEDY'S amendment, which I think is a fair compromise between the kind of informal vote of those who will support us financially, and Government financing. I was hostile to Government financing for years, as I saw many dangers in it. But in all the problems of legislation, we always have to trade off. We have to accept something we do not agree with in order to get the greater good.

The seamy record we have seen under the general heading of raising campaign funds, with all the very, very shocking immorality which it has engendered, I believe should have convinced us that the public financing route is the right one. I realize that we do not want to go at it all at once but, at the same time, to be practical about it, we have got to give the candidate the opportunity to use public financing effectively and not put him in the position where it does not amount to using it effectively and being able to rely on it.

The virtue of the Kennedy amendment is that it is realistic. The 50-percent figure entitles a candidate to go with it and rely on it, whereas the 25-percent figure is too little and does not give the public financing concept a fair trial.

For all those reasons, Mr. President, I hope very much that the Senate will approve the amendment.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I understood, during the debate we began here several weeks ago, that we were not going to be corrupted by accepting private funds. The prevailing view then was that we could not be trusted with private funds, that we, somehow, might be corrupted.

But now we are saying that if we accept 50 percent private and 50 percent public funds, there will be no problem.

I agree with the distinguished Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN), even though I voted for cloture, that here we are either going to be financed publicly, or we should be financed privately 100 percent.

I do not know what merit there is in saying on the one hand that we are all subject to being corrupted because we accept private funds but, somehow that is all cured if half of it comes from the Public Treasury and half of it comes from someone else.

For the life of me, I cannot understand how this amendment makes anything better. It indicates that what we really want is public money. Fifty percent of public money will be all right if we can only get 50 percent out of the Public Treasury, that we are not concerned about being corrupted any more, that we are not concerned about where the contributions come from. We say, take 50 percent but do not take it all. I cannot understand that if we want to purify our political system we want to let the Federal Government pay for the campaigns.

Well, I hope it never happens. But, if we are going to purify our political system, let us go on as we have been going. Most of the men and women in this country in public office are men and women of integrity. They are not corrupted by private donations. With the law passed in 1971, there will be full disclosure of our contributions and expenditures.

I see no reason for this amendment, or any modification of it, or for any more discussion of the pending bill.

It seems to me that the American people would like us to give a little attention to their problems. We wasted 7 days trying to raise our own pay. Now we waste 3 weeks trying to get back into the public Treasury. We have not concerned ourselves with the American people for 30 days—and we are going to take a recess come this Thursday.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, there is very little difference between this amendment and the amendment I have proposed. It is a question of degree. The amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts would increase the maximum public share to 75 percent, while the amendment which I offered has a 62.5-percent maximum. If candidates can raise 100 percent of their funds privately—as they now do—they should be able to raise 37.5 percent from small contributions.

The amendment which I offered with the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from New Mexico and others would simply increase the degree of participation by citizens in the political process and decrease the burden on the public Treasury.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the point remains that under the existing legislation, if an individual candidate finds the public financing sufficiently repugnant, he can go out and say, when he announces for public office, "I am not going to accept anything more than a dollar or more than $5" and run his campaign that way. Nothing requires him to take the public financing.

What we have done with this proposal is to say, with respect to those who feel that some limitation ought to be provided, that we set a 50-percent ceiling on the initial subsidy, and then allow matching up to the amount he is able to spend. I think that is a reasonable compromise.

I remind the Members of the Senate that this bill is going to go through many changes in the House and in the conference. The action by the Senate is going to be the high water mark in terms of the position Congress will take in this area. So I hope that when the bill goes to conference, our conferees will be given the strongest possible position to defend. I am hopeful that we will have a strong bill.

Under the limitation that has been suggested by the Senator from Illinois, you can get only 25 percent front end funding. True, you will be able to match up to 62 percent, if you raise private money in contributions of $100 or less. But you can also go out and raise the rest of your money in $5,000 campaign contributions. There is no requirement in the Stevenson amendment that you get it from the $100 contributor. The 25 percent front end money will become a drop on the bucket, the shadow of reform without the substances. After getting the front end money, you can take $6,000 contributing from special interest committees. You can take $3,000 contributions from wealthy individuals.

How much reform is that? A Senator or Congressman will represent the people 25 percent of the time, and the special interest groups the other 75 percent.

I think we are already achieving what the Senator from Illinois wants to achieve under the committee bill. There is no need for an arbitrary limitation as suggested by his amendment. I know that a number of Members feel strongly about it, however, and I think the 50-percent compromise we have offered is a constructive alternative.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield.

Mr. STEVENSON. A candidate, in both cases, has the option of taking private financing, as opposed to public financing. The only difference is whether it is going to be 62 percent from public sources or 75 percent.

Mr. KENNEDY. That is true only if matching public funds are fully used. If they are not used at all, the difference is 50 percent versus 25 percent. I say to the Senator that I have offered an amendment which I think is a compromise between the committee bill and the position which has been proposed by the Senator from Illinois.

Let me point out that if the Senator from Ilinois or any other Member of Congress or any challenger wants to say, "I am going to run my campaign on $1 contributions or $5 contributions," he can do so. Yet, the Senator says that this is the goal of the Senator from Illinois. Also, if he says, "I will take 25 percent public and raise the rest on $5 campaign contributions," he can do that at the present time, under the committee bill.

The Senator is putting an arbitrary and a mandatory limitation on how much can be used in public funds. Under the goal of the Senator from Illinois, a candidate can say, "I want to take 25 percent public financing, and then I am going to take every bit of money I can get in $1 contributions." He would be able to do that under the Cannon proposal. Why does he want to make that mandatory for all candidates? Why does he want to drive candidates back into the arms of his contrbiutors?

It seems to me that the alternatives in the committee bill achieve the thrust of the Stevenson amendment. The proposal I have offered as a substitute conforms the Stevenson amendment more closely to the committee bill. It does not do it completely, but it does recognize that there are Members who want to put some limitation on public funds. I think it is a constructive middle ground between the Stevenson amendment and the committee bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, so that we might simplify it, the real argument here is over one thing, and that is whether or not it will be 25 percent maximum that you can get from the public Treasury or 50 percent. There is nothing under the Kennedy amendment that would preclude somebody from taking 25 percent as the maximum amount of the public contribution, but it does leave what I say is a good deal of ambivalence as to what is going to happen. I think there ought to be standard rules.

Candidates ought to run on the basic issues of public policy. What you are going to find is that you are going to have your campaign on whether or not you are the dollar man or the public finance man, or whether or not you take 25 percent from the public Treasury or 50 percent from the public Treasury. In the meantime, the public will have no one talking about inflation or health or education. It will all be on whether or not you can be bought for 25 percent or 50 percent or not bought. All of that is just painting ourselves into a corner.

The real truth is that the problem of private financing is no accusation of corruption, which has been said here. Just because somebody contributes does not prove you are corrupt. But it does lend itself to suspicion, doubt, and skepticism. It is my judgment that we ought to try to remove as much of that doubt as possible. We do that by putting severe limitations on the amount of a contribution. Anyone who can be bought for $3, ought to get out of here and not stand up and call himself a man or herself a woman—at least, at prices these days. [Laughter]

Mr. President, if anybody thinks that a $6,000 group contribution from a national committee or the labor movement or a Senate committee or the doctors, or whoever else it is, is something that will buy you, you ought to be ashamed even at the thought. I do not think that simply because somebody gets a contribution for $3,000 maximum, that proves ipso facto that you ought to spend several years in Sing Sing. We are just fooling around telling the public that is what happens.

What we have here on matching with Federal funds is that if one gets $100 in private money, he can get $100 matched. That is what is in this formula of either the proposal by the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from Illinois. The only argument is whether or not one ought to have 50-percent frontline financing. In other words, when one declares his candidacy, he walks over and says, "Give me 50 percent of everything I am entitled to under the formula in the bill." Or he can say, "I don't think I'll take 50 percent, because I hear that my opponent is going to take 50 percent. I'll take 45 percent. That makes me a 5-percent better guy than the other fellow."

The advantage of the Stevenson amendment is that it is 25 percent.

I hope that we will stop kicking the gong around, because that is what is bothering me. I joined in the Stevenson amendment for one reason. I want a bill, and I think we can get a good bill. I believe we ought to approach public financing.

I had very serious doubts about any limitations upon the Presidential campaigns. I felt that was one office where we might have full public financing, and I voted accordingly, except when I came here to try to find out how we can get a bill. The American people have a right to expect results of us and not just an issue—going around here trying to prove some of us are more pure than Ivory soap. There is not a saint in this audience; there has not been before and there will not be one. We have our fallibilities and our weaknesses. We are trying to find an antibiotic to do something about the political infection that has gripped this country. I happen to think Dr. Stevenson has a pretty good pill, a pretty good antibiotic. Now, we have other prescriptions coming to us. Either would suffice and I grant that. The difference is the amount in the public Treasury.

I do think the issue before the Senate is: Do we want performance or do we want rhetoric; do we want an issue or do we want a bill? I think I want a bill. I think it is time for the Congress of the United States to tell the American people we are capable of legislating something around here that will be passed, signed, and become law.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Minnesota. I think he has put his finger on the matter precisely when he said the important thing is disclosure and a limitation on contributions. We can have both without public financing.

The Senator from Minnesota underscored another point. Every Senator will be trotting around saying, "I did not take as much as he did from the Public Treasury. I raised my money." As I stated there will be T-shirts that will have printed on them, "Your tax dollar at work," and on the back there will be printed, "Total public financing."

I offered an amendment yesterday that should have been agreed to and that was that on every bumper sticker, emery board, political advertisement, there would be printed, "Paid for with public funds." We are always happy to say, "Printed at private expense" when we send out a newsletter. If we are going to take it out of the Treasury, why not take all of it out, and why just half? I am waiting for the Watergate Committee to make its recommendations. Those recommendations are due on May 28, and we are trying to find a way to get into the Treasury before the report. I recall what the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. ERVIN) and the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER) said when those hearings commenced last May.

One thing that both Senators underscored was the fact that legislative recommendations would be forthcoming. But we are too impatient. I do not believe we would lose much time waiting for the recommendations of that committee. They have heard hundreds of witnesses. They may have many good suggestions. But I think we should decide whether we want to be 100 percent Federal candidates, 50 percent, or 62½ percent, or disclose our contributions and limit expenditures, and let our campaigns be financed as they have been in the past.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, all I am trying to say in this amendment is that we must do something with respect to big contributions and corrupt contributions, but let us not pay a higher price than necessary.

I am a candidate for reelection in Illinois. Under my proposal I could, if my amendment were in effect, receive up to $550,000 from the U.S. Treasury. Under the Kennedy proposal I could receive up to $675,000. It is a difference of degree. I would not feel very good about accepting any money from the Treasury, but that is the price that has to be paid to get rid of the big contributions.

We do not have to go this high to get rid of the big contributions; certainly, we would not in Illinois. Mr. President, you would not have to pay that high a price at the risk of driving out a healthy form of political participation.

The issue is narrow in the case of this amendment. The issue was wider in the earlier amendment. It is a question of degree. The question has been debated. I think under the Kennedy amendment we would be paying more than is necessary. With all the resentment abroad in this country toward politics and politicians, far from eliminating suspicions and fears, we will increase them if we spend any more than necessary to eliminate the corrupting influence in our politics.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I have been impressed with the bipartisanship that has come out of the committee and with the way the Senator from Nevada has handled the bill. I have just arrived in the Chamber. Can the chairman of the committee tell us his point of view concerning the Kennedy amendment and the Stevenson amendment and what they would do to the bill that the committee brought to the floor?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, first, I am sure the distinguished Senator from Illinois inadvertently used the figures as to what he would be entitled to, but he overlooked the fact that the Senator from Alabama had an earlier amendment adopted that reduces the earlier figure, so the Senator from Illinois may want to reduce his figure.

Mr. STEVENSON. I was assuming an expenditure unit of 12 cents per person of voting age.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, basically this boils down to the question of whether you desire or do not want private financing involved. I long felt we should go the private financing route. It was only recently that I changed my initial view after seeing the Watergate situation. I thought S. 372 with the amendment in the 1971 act would have been restrictive had they been complied with and we would not have found ourselves in this situation if the House had acted on S. 372.

We were faced with the problem of reporting a bill on the public financing issue. This we did attempt to do. We did leave the matching provision in the primary and if private financing is paid then this system is a little bit bad, because we permitted it in the primary races.

But on the other hand we have been accused of writing provisions here that make this an incumbent's bill. Frankly, I believe the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) in this instance, if we are to go some other route, is more to the advantage of a challenger than an incumbent because a challenger is relatively unknown, and certainly less known than the incumbent, and in a primary he can go in and say, "I am entitled to up to 50 percent of the authorized limit," which would give him a leg up on the opportunity to start his campaign. Certainly, if a person can raise $1 they will get a matching dollar under the Kennedy amendment and the Stevenson amendment. So I think it is more or less an individual view as to whether one thinks the person who wins in the primary should be able to go and say, "I would like to get 25 percent," or on the other hand, "I would like to get 50 percent." If he is going to get 50 percent, it favors the challenger rather than an incumbent.

My personal view, I think, is that I have a vote for the Kennedy amendment, although the committee has not taken a formal position on this situation.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, back in 1971, well before Watergate, we enacted 100 percent public financing for Presidential elections.

Then we had Watergate, and now we are being asked to move backward. We have enacted 100 percent public financing for the Executive, and now we are going to enact only 25 percent for Members of the House and the Senate. That is the effect of what the Stevenson amendment will do. How can we accept such a timid reform for Congress, when we already have such a strong reform for the Executive?

What my proposal would do would be to make it 50 percent for the Senate and House. I think we have a responsibility, now that we have taken a position on how we are going to handle national elections, to apply the same system as nearly as we can to Members of the Senate and the House. With the amendment I have offered, it would provide only 50 percent. That is a very significant step back from the committee bill. But I think it is a sound compromise and one which I hope will be accepted.

If we are going to go the route of compromise, I would hope we would be willing to go halfway as far as we have gone for the Presidency. One quarter of the way is too little.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts what the substitute does with regard to financing congressional campaigns in the primary. I have not seen the amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY. It has absolutely no effect whatsoever.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON), as amended. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), and the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL) are necessarily absent.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), and the Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 46, as follows:

So Mr. KENNEDY's amendment to Mr. STEVENSON's amendment, as amended, was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I wish to point out briefly to the Senate what we have done. Then I shall move to lay the Stevenson amendment on the table.

The first Kennedy amendment amended the Stevenson amendment so that it went back to exactly the way the provision exists in the bill at present.

The second Kennedy amendment, which was just defeated, is a matter of quibbling over 25 or 50 percent, but would change the bill in that respect with respect to general elections.

In addition, the Stevenson amendment has in it, on the last page, page 4, subparagraph (2), a provision which would again change action that the Senate took the other day by a vote of 46 to 42. This would change the language back to what it was prior to that vote.

With that explanation, I think we have discussed the whole issue completely.

Mr. President, I move to lay the Stevenson amendment on the table, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON) to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON) as amended by the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY). The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM) are necessarily absent.

CORRECTION OF A VOTE

Mr. MCINTYRE. Mr. President, on April 3, 1974, I was present and voted "yea" on the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Colorado (Mr. DOMINICK). The RECORD indicates that I was necessarily absent and not voting. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the RECORD be corrected to reflect my presence and vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURDICK). Without objection, the correction will be made.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

AMENDMENT NO. 1127

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1127 and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974".

TABLE OF CONTENTS

TITLE I—CHANGES IN COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934

CAMPAIGN COMMUNICATIONS

SEC. 101. (a) Section 315(a) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 315(a)) is amended by inserting after "public office" in the first sentence thereof the following: ", other than Federal elective office (including the office of Vice President)".

(b) Section 315(b) of such Act (47 U.S.C. 315(b)) is amended by striking out "by any person" and inserting "by or on behalf of any person".

(c) Section 315(d) of such Act (47 U.S.C. 315(d)) is amended to read as follows:

"(d) If a State by law imposes a limitation upon the amount which a legally qualified candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to public office (other than Federal elective office) within that State may spend in connection with his campaign for such nomination or his campaign for election, then no station licensee may make any charge for the use of such station by or on behalf of such candidate unless such candidate (or a person specifically authorized in writing by him to do so) certifies to such licensee in writing that the payment of such charge will not violate that limitation.".

(d) Section 317 of such Act (47 U.S.C. 317), is amended by—

(1) striking out in paragraph (1) of subsection (a) "person: Provided, That" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "person. If such matter is a political advertisement soliciting funds for a candidate or a political committee, there shall be announced at the time of such broadcast a statement that a copy of reports filed by that person with the Federal Election Commission is available from the Federal Election Commission, Washington, D.C., and the licensee shall not make any charge for any part of the costs of making the announcement. The term"; and

(2) by redesignating subsection (e) as (f), and by inserting after subsection (d) the following new subsection:

"(e) Each station licensee shall maintain a record of any political advertisement broadcast, together with the identification of the person who caused it to be broadcast, for a period of two years. The record shall be available for public inspection at reasonable hours.".

TITLE II—CRIMES RELATING TO ELECTIONS AND POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

CHANGES IN DEFINITIONS

SEC. 201. (a) Paragraph (a) of section 591 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) inserting "or" before "(4)"; and

(2) striking out "and (5) the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States".

(b) Such section 591 is amended by striking out paragraph (d) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(d) 'political committee' means—

"(1) any committee, club, association, or other group of persons which receives contributions or makes expenditures during a calendar year in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000;

"(2) any national committee, association, or organization of a political party, any State affiliate or subsidiary of a national political party, and any State central committee of a political party; and

"(3) any committee, association, or organization engaged in the administration of a separate segregated fund described in section 610;".

(c) Such section 591 is amended by—

(1) inserting in paragraph (c)(1) after "subscription" the following: "(including any assessment, fee, or membership dues)";

(2) striking out in such paragraph "or for the purpose of influencing the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "or for the purpose of financing any operations of a political committee, or for the purpose of paying, at any time, any debt or obligation incurred by a candidate or a political committee in connection with any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office"; and

(3) striking out subparagraph (2) of paragraph (e), and amending subparagraph (3) of such paragraph to read as follows:

"(2) funds received by a political committee which are transferred to that committee from another political committee;";

(4) redesignating subparagraphs (4) and (5) of paragraph (e) as paragraphs (3) and (4), respectively;

(d) Such section 591 is mended by striking out paragraph (f) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(f) 'expenditure' means—

"(1) a purchase, payment, distribution, loan (except a loan of money by a National or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations, and in the ordinary course of business), advance, deposit, or gift of money or anything of value, made for the purpose of—

"(A) influencing the nomination for election, or the election, of any person to Federal office, or to the office of Presidential and Vice-Presidential elector;

"(B) influencing the result of a primary election held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President;

"(C) financing any operations of a political committee; or

"(D) paying, at any time, any debt or obligation incurred by a candidate or a political committee in connection with any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office; and

"(2) the transfer of funds by a political committee to another political committee; but

"(3) does not include the value of service rendered by individuals who volunteer to work without compensation on behalf of a candidate;".

(e) Such section 591 is amended by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (g), striking out the "States." in paragraph (h) and inserting in lieu thereof "States;", and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(i) 'political party' means any association, committee, or organization which nominates a candidate for election to any Federal office whose name appears on the election ballot as the candidate of that association, committee, or organization; and

"(j) 'national committee' means the organization which, by virtue of the bylaws of the political party, is responsible for the day-to-day operation of that political party at the national level as determined by the Federal Election Commission under section 301(k) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.".

EXPENDITURE OF PERSONAL AND FAMILY FUNDS FOR FEDERAL CAMPAIGNS

SEC. 202. (a)(1) Subsection (a)(1) of section 608 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(a)(1) No candidate may make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with his campaigns for nomination for election, and for election, to Federal office in excess, in the aggregate during any calendar year, of—

"(A) $50,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of President or Vice President;

"(B) $35,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of Senator; or

"(C) $25,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of Representative, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to the Congress.".

(2) Subsection (a) of such section is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(3) No candidate or his immediate family may make loans or advances from their personal funds in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or election, to Federal office unless such loan or advance is evidenced by a written instrument fully disclosing the terms and conditions of such loan or advance.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection, any such loan or advance shall be included in computing the total amount of such expenditures only to the extent of the balance of such loan or advance outstanding and unpaid."

(b) Subsection (c) of such section is amended by striking out "$1,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$25,000", and by striking out "one year" and inserting in lieu thereof "five years".

(c)(1) The caption of such section 608 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "out of candidates' personal and family funds".

(2) The table of sections for chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out the item relating to section 608 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"608. Limitations on contributions and expenditures out of candidates' personal and family funds.".

(d) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 608 of title 18, United States Code, it shall not be unlawful for any individual who, as of the date of enactment of this Act, has outstanding any debt or obligation incurred on his behalf by any political committee in connection with his campaigns prior to January 1, 1973, for nomination for election, and for election, to Federal office, to satisfy or discharge any such debt or obligation out of his own personal funds or the personal funds of his immediate family (as such term is defined in such section 608).

CONTRIBUTION TO COMMITTEES

SEC. 203. Chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 608 the following new section:

"§ 609. Identification of donee

"No political committee, other than an authorized committee, may accept contributions from individual contributors unless such contributors designate in writing the name of the candidate or authorized committee to which the contribution shall be given.".

PROHIBITION OF CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES BY FOREIGN INDIVIDUALS

SEC. 204. Section 613 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(a) by adding to the section caption the following: "or drawn on foreign banks";

(b) by inserting immediately before "Whoever" at the beginning of the first paragraph the following: "(a)"; and

(c) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) No person may make a contribution in the form of a written instrument drawn on a foreign bank. Violation of the provisions of this subsection is punishable by a fine not to exceed $5,000, imprisonment not to exceed five years, or both."

LIMITATIONS ON POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS; EMBEZZLEMENT OR CONVERSION OF CAMPAIGN FUNDS

SEC. 205. (a) Chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"§ 614. Limitations on contributions

"(a) During any calendar year—

"(1) no person may make a contribution to, or for the benefit of, a candidate for that candidate's campaign for nomination for election, or election, which, when added to the sum of all other contributions made by that person for that campaign, exceeds $3,000, or

"(2) no candidate may knowingly accept a contribution for his campaign from any person which, when added to the sum of all other contributions received from that person for that campaign, exceeded $3,000.

"(b) No candidate may knowingly accept a contribution for his campaign—

"(A) from any person who—

"(i) is not a citizen of the United States, and

"(ii) is not lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as defined in section 101(a)(20) of the Immigration and Nationality Act; or

"(B) which is made in violation of section 613 of this title.

"(c) No officer or employee of a political committee or of a political party may knowingly accept any contribution made for the benefit or use of a candidate which that candidate could not accept under subsection (a) or (b).

"(d)(1) For purposes of the limitations contained in this section all contributions made by any person directly or indirectly to or for the benefit of a particular candidate, including contributions which are in any way earmarked, encumbered, or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to that candidate, shall be treated as contributions from that person to that candidate.

"(2) Contributions made to, or for the benefit of, a candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President shall be considered, for purposes of this section, to be made to, or for the benefit of, a candidate nominated by that party for election to the office of President.

"(e)(1) No individual may make a contribution during any calendar year which, when added to the sum of all other contributions made by that individual during that year, exceeds $25,000.

"(f) Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine of not to exceed $25,000, imprisonment for not to exceed five years, or both.

"§ 615. Form of contributions

"No person may make a contribution to, or for the benefit of, any candidate or political committee in excess, in the aggregate during any calendar year, of $50 unless such contribution is made by a written instrument identifying the person making the contribution. Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine of not to exceed $1,000, imprisonment for not to exceed one year, or both.

"§ 616. Embezzlement or conversion of political contributions

"(a) No candidate, officer, employee, or agent of a political committee, or person acting on behalf of any candidate or political committee, shall embezzle, knowingly convert to his own use or the use of another, or deposit in any place or in any manner except as authorized by law, any contributions or campaign funds entrusted to him or under his possession, custody, or control, or use any campaign funds to pay or defray the costs of attorney fees for the defense of any person or persons charged with the commission of a crime; or receive, conceal, or retain the same with intent to convert it to his personal use or gain, knowing it to have been embezzled or converted.

"(b) Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine of not more than $25,000, imprisonment for not more than ten years, or both; but if the value of such property does not exceed the sum of $100, the fine shall not exceed $1,000 and the imprisonment shall not exceed one year. Notwithstanding the provisions of this section, any surplus or unexpended campaign funds may be contributed to a National or State political party for political purposes, or to educational or charitable organizations, or may be preserved for use in future campaigns for elective office, or for any other lawful purpose.

"§ 617. Voting fraud.

"(a) No person shall in a Federal election—

"(1) cast, or attempt to cast, a ballot in the name of another person,

"(2) cast, or attempt to cast, a ballot if he is not qualified to vote,

"(3) forge or alter a ballot,

"(4) miscount votes,

"(5) tamper with a voting machine, or

"(6) commit any act (or fail to do anything required of him by law), with the intent of causing an inaccurate count of lawfully cast votes in any election.

"(b) A violation of the provisions of subsection (a) is punishable by a fine of not to exceed $100,000, imprisonment for not more than ten years, or both.

"§ 618. Prohibited campaign practices

"Whoever, knowingly, with intent to mislead voters in any primary, special, or general election or disrupt the campaign of a candidate for any political office—

"(1) conveys or causes to be conveyed false instructions to a campaign worker;

"(2) places false advertisements in communications media, as defined in section 102 of the Campaign Communications Reform Act (Public Law 92-225, 86 Stat. 3);

"(3) impedes or substructs the entry of any person lawfully entitled to attend a campaign gathering or event;

"(4) utters any false oral or written statement concerning any material fact about a candidate; or

"(5) orders goods or services on behalf of a candidate; shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.".

(b) Section 591 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out "and 611" and inserting in lieu thereof "611, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, and 618.".

(c) The table of sections for chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out the item relating to section 613 and inserting in lieu thereof the following new items:

"613. Contributions by agents of foreign principals or drawn on foreign banks.
"614. Limitation on contributions.
"615. Form of contributions.
"616. Embezzlement or conversion of political contributions.
"617. Voting fraud.
"618. Prohibited campaign practices.".

TITLE III—CHANGES IN FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

CHANGES IN DEFINITIONS FOR REPORTING AND DISCLOSURE

SEC. 301. (a) Section 301 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to definitions) is amended by—

(1) striking out ", and (5) the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States" in paragraph (a), and by inserting "and" before "(4)" in such paragraph;

(2) striking out paragraph (d) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(d) 'political committee' means—

"(1) any committee, club, association, or other group of persons which receives contributions or makes expenditures during a calendar year in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000;

"(2) any national committee, association, or organization of a political party, any State affiliate or subsidiary of a national political party, and any State central committee of a political party; and

"(3) any committee, association, or organization engaged in the administration of a separate segregated fund described in section 610 of title 18, United States Code;";

(3) inserting in paragraph (e)(1) after "subscription" the following: "(including any assessment, fee, or membership dues)";

(4) striking out in paragraph (e)(1) "or for the purpose of influencing the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "or for the purpose of financing any operations of a political committee (other than a payment made or an obligation incurred by a corporation or labor organization which, under the provisions of the last paragraph of section 610 of title 18, United States Code, does not constitute a contribution by that corporation or labor organization), or for the purpose of paying, at any time, any debt or obligation incurred by a candidate or a political committee in connection with any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office";

(5) striking out subparagraph (2) or paragraph (e), and amending subparagraph (3) of such paragraph to read as follows:

"(3) funds received by a political committee which are transferred to that committee from another political committee;";

(6) redesignating subparagraphs (4) and (5) of paragraph (e) as paragraphs (3) and (4), respectively;

(7) striking out paragraph (f) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(f) 'expenditure'—

"(1) means a purchase, payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money or anything of value, made for the purpose of—

"(A) influencing the nomination for election, or the election, of any person to Federal office, or to the office of Presidential and Vice-Presidential elector;

"(B) influencing the result of a primary election held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President;

"(C) financing any operations of a political committee; or

"(D) paying, at any time, any debt or obligation incurred by a candidate or a political committee in connection with any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office; and

"(2) means the transfer of funds by a political committee to another political committee; but

"(3) does not include the value of services rendered by individuals who volunteer to work without compensation on behalf of a candidate."

(8) striking "and" at the end of paragraph (h);

(9) striking the period at the end of paragraph (i) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and

(10) adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(j) 'identification' means—

"(1) in the case of an individual, his full name and the full address of his principal place of residence; and

"(2) in the case of any other person, the full name and address of that person;

"(k) 'national committee' means the organization which, by virtue of the bylaws of a political party, is responsible for the day-to-day operation of that political party at the national level, as determined by the Commission; and

"(l) 'political party' means an association, committee, or organization which nominates a candidate for election to any Federal office, whose name appears on the election ballot as the candidate of that association, committee, or organization.".

(b)(1) Section 302(b) of such Act (relating to reports of contributions in excess of $10) is amended by striking ", the name and address (occupation and principal place of business, if any)" and inserting "of the contribution and the identification".

(2) Section 302(c) of such Act (relating to detailed accounts) is amended by striking "full name and mailing address (occupation and the principal place of business, if any)" in paragraphs (2) and (4) and inserting in each such paragraph "identification".

(3) Section 302(c) of such Act is further amended by striking the semicolon at the end of paragraph (2) and inserting "and, if a person's contributions aggregate more than $100, the account shall include occupation, and the principal place of business (if any);".

REGISTRATION OF CANDIDATES AND POLITICAL COMMITTEES

SEC. 302. (a) Section 303 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to registration of political committees; statements) is amended by redesignating subsections (a) through (d) as (b) through (e), respectively, and by inserting after "SEC. 303." the following new subsection (a):

"(a) Each candidate shall, within ten days after the date on which he has qualified under State law as a candidate, or on which he, or any person authorized by him to do so, has received a contribution or made an expenditure in connection with his campaign or for the purpose of preparing to undertake his campaign, file with the Commission a registration statement in such form as the Commission may prescribe. The statement shall include—

"(1) the identification of the candidate, and any individual, political committee, or other person he has authorized to receive contributions or make expenditures on his behalf in connection with his campaign;

"(2) the identification of his campaign depositories, together with the title and number of each account at each such depository which is to be used in connection with his campaign; any safety deposit box to be used in connection therewith, and the identification of each individual authorized by him to make any expenditure or withdrawal from such account or box; and

"(3) such additional relevant information as the Commission may require.".

(b) The first sentence of subsection (b) of such section (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) is amended to read as follows: "The treasurer of each political committee shall file with the Commission a statement of organization within ten days after the date on which the committee is organized.".

(c) The second sentence of such subsection (b) is amended by striking out "this Act" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "The Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974".

(d) Subsection (c) of such section (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) is amended by—

(1) inserting "be in such form as the Commission shall prescribe, and shall" after "The statement of organization shall";

(2) striking out paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(3) the geographic area or political jurisdiction within which the committee will operate, and a general description of the committee's authority and activities;"; and

(3) striking out paragraph (9) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(9) the name and address of the campaign depositories used by that committee, together with the title and number of each account and safety deposit box used by that committee at each depository, and the identification of each individual authorized to make withdrawals or payments out of such account or box;".

(e) The caption of such section 303 is amended by inserting "CANDIDATES AND" after "REGISTRATION OF".

CHANGES IN REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 303. (a) Section 304 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to reports by political committees and candidates) is amended by—

(1) inserting "(1)" after "(a)" in subsection (a);

(2) striking out "for election" each place it appears in the first sentence of subsection (a) and inserting in lieu in each such place "for nomination for election, or for election,";

(3) striking out the second sentence of subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Such reports shall be filed on the tenth day of April, July, and October of each year, on the tenth day preceding an election, and on the last day of January of each year. Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, the reports required by that sentence to be filed during April, July, and October by or relating to a candidate during a year in which no Federal election is held in which he is a candidate, may be filed on the twentieth day of each month.";

(4) striking out everything after "filing" in the third sentence of subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof a period and the following: "If the person making any anonymous contribution is subsequently identified, the identification of the contributor shall be reported to the Commission within the reporting period within which he is identified."; and

(5) adding at the end of subsection (a) the following new paragraph:

"(2) Upon a request made by Presidential candidate or a political committee which operates in more than one State, or upon its own motion, the Commission may waive the reporting dates (other than January 31) set forth in paragraph (1), and require instead that such candidates or political committees file reports not less frequently than monthly. The Commission may not require a Presidential candidate or a political committee operating in more than one State to file more than eleven reports (not counting any report to be filed on January 31) during any calendar year. If the Commission acts on its own motion under this paragraph with respect to a candidate or a political committee, that candidate or committee may obtain judicial review in accordance with the provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code.".

(b)(1) Section 304(b) of such Act (relating to reports by political committees and candidates) is amended by striking "full name and mailing address (occupation and the principal place of business, if any)" in paragraphs (9) and (10) and inserting in lieu thereof in each such paragraph "identification".

(2) Subsection (b)(5) of such section 304 is amended by striking out "lender and endorsers" and inserting in lieu thereof "lender, endorsers, and guarantors".

(c) Subsection (b)(12) of such section is amended by inserting before the semicolon the following: ", together with a statement as to the circumstances and conditions under which any such debt or obligation is extinguished and the consideration therefor".

(d) Subsection (b) of such section is amended by—

(1) striking the "and" at the end of paragraph (12); and

(2) redesignating paragraph (13), as (14), and by inserting after paragraph (12) the following new paragraph:

"(13) such information as the Commission may require for the disclosure of the nature, amount, source, and designated recipient of any earmarked, encumbered, or restricted contribution or other special fund; and".

(e) The first sentence of subsection (c) of such section is amended to read as follows: "The reports required to be filed by subsection (a) shall be cumulative during the calendar year to which they relate, and during such additional periods of time as the Commission may require.".

(f) Such section 304 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(d) This section does not require a Member of Congress to report, as contributions received or as expenditures made, the value of photographic, matting, or recording services furnished to him before the first day of January of the year preceding the year in which his term of office expires if those services were furnished to him by the Senate Recording Studio, the House Recording Studio, or by any individual whose pay is disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of Representatives and who furnishes such services as his primary duty as an employee of the Senate or House of Representatives, or if such services were paid for by the Republican or Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, the Democratic National Congressional Committee, or the National Republican Congressional Committee.

"(e) Every person (other than a political committee or candidate) who makes contributions or expenditures, other than by contribution to a political committee or candidate, in an aggregate amount in excess of $100 within a calendar year shall file with the Commission a statement containing the information required by this section. Statements required by this subsection shall be filed on the dates on which reports by political committees are filed but need not be cumulative.".

(g) The caption of such section 304 is amended to read as follows:

"REPORTS".

CAMPAIGN ADVERTISEMENTS

SEC. 304. Section 305 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to reports by others than political committees) is amended to read as follows:

"REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO CAMPAIGN ADVERTISING

"SEC. 305. (a) No person shall cause any political advertisement to be published unless he furnishes to the publisher of the advertisement his identification in writing, together with the identification of any person authorizing him to cause such publication.

"(b) Any published political advertisement shall contain a statement, in such form as the Commission may prescribe, of the identification of the person authorizing the publication of that advertisement.

"(c) Any published who publishes any political advertisement shall maintain such records as the Commission may prescribe for a period of two years after the date of publication setting forth such advertisement and any material relating to identification furnished to him in connection therewith, and shall permit the public to inspect and copy those records at reasonable hours.

"(d) To the extent that any person sells space in any newspaper or magazine to a candidate or his agent for Federal office, or nomination thereto, in connection with such candidate's campaign for nomination for, or election to, such office, the charges made for the use of such space in connection with his campaign shall not exceed the charges made for comparable use of such space for other purposes.

"(e) Any political committee shall include on the face or front page of all literature and advertisements soliciting contributions the following notice:

"'A copy of our report filed with the Federal Election Commission is available for purchase from the Federal Election Commission, Washington, D.C.'

"(f) As used in this section, the term—

"(1) 'political advertisement' means any matter advocating the election or defeat of any candidate but does not include any bona fide news story (including interviews, commentaries, or other words prepared for and published by any newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication the publication of which work is not paid for by any candidate, political committee, or agent thereof); and

"(2) 'published' means publication in a newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication, distribution of printed leaflets, pamphlets, or other documents, or display through the use of any outdoor advertising facility, and such other use of printed media as the Commission shall prescribe.".

WAIVER OF REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 305. Section 306(c) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to formal requirements respecting reports and statements) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) The Commission may, by published regulation of general applicability, relieve—

"(1) any category of candidates of the obligation to comply personally with the requirements of subsections (a) through (e) of section 304, if it determines that such action will not have any adverse effect on the purposes of this title, and

"(2) any category of political committees of the obligation to comply with such section if such committees—

"(A) primarily support persons seeking State or local office, and

"(B) do not operate in more than one State or do not operate on a statewide basis.".

CONTRIBUTIONS IN THE NAME OF ANOTHER PERSON

SEC. 306. Section 310 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to prohibition of contributions in name of another) is redesignated as section 315 of such Act and amended by inserting after "another person", the first time it appears, the following: "or knowingly permit his name to be used to effect such a contribution".

ROLE OF POLITICAL PARTY ORGANIZATION IN PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGNS; USE OF EXCESS CAMPAIGN FUNDS; PENALTIES

SEC. 307. Title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by striking out section 311 and by adding at the end of such title the following new sections:

"APPROVAL OF PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES BY NATIONAL COMMITTEE

"SEC. 316. (a) No expenditure in excess of $1,000 shall be made by or on behalf of any candidate who has received the nomination of his party for President or Vice President unless such expenditure has been specifically approved by the chairman or treasurer of that political party's national committee or the designated representative of that national committee in the State where the funds are to be expended.

"(b) Each national committee approving expenditures under subsection (a) shall register under section 303 as a political committee and report each expenditure it approves as if it had made that expenditure, together with the identification of the person seeking approval and making the expenditure.

"(c) No political party shall have more than one national committee.

"USE OF CONTRIBUTED AMOUNTS FOR CERTAIN PURPOSES

"SEC. 317. Amounts received by a candidate as contributions that are in excess of any amount necessary to defray his campaign expenses (after the application of section 507(b)(1) of this Act), and any other amounts contributed to an individual for the purpose of supporting his activities as a holder of Federal office, may be used by that candidate or individual, as the case may be, to defray any ordinary and necessary expenses incurred by him in connection with his duties as a holder of Federal office, or may be contributed by him to any organization described in section 170(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. To the extent any such contribution, amount contributed, or expenditure thereof is not otherwise required to be disclosed under the provisions of this title, such contribution, amount contributed, or expenditure shall be fully disclosed in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Commission. The Commission is authorized to promulgate such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

"PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS

"SEC. 318. (a) Violation of any provision of this title is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of not more than $10,000, imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

"(b) Violation of any provision of this title with knowledge or reason to know that the action committed or omitted is a violation of this title is punishable by a fine of not more than $10,000, imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.".

APPLICABLE STATE LAWS

SEC. 308. Section 403 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended to read as follows:

"EFFECT ON STATE LAW

"SEC. 403. The provisions of this Act, and of regulations promulgated under this Act, preempt any provision of State law with respect to campaigns for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office (as such term is defined in section 301(c)).".

TITLE IV—FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION

ESTABLISHMENT OF FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION; CENTRAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEES; CAMPAIGN DEPOSITORIES

SEC. 401. (a) Title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to disclosure of Federal campaign funds) is amended by redesignating section 308 as section 312, and by inserting after section 307 the following new sections:

"FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION

"SEC. 308. (a)(1) There is established, as an independent establishment of the executive branch of the Government of the United States, a commission to be known as the Federal Election Commission.

"(2) The Commission shall be composed of the Comptroller General, who shall serve without the right to vote, and seven members who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Of the seven members—

"(A) two shall be chosen from among individuals recommended by the President pro tempore of the Senate, upon the recommendations of the majority leader of the Senate and the minority leader of the Senate; and

"(B) two shall be chosen from among individuals recommended by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, upon the recommendations of the majority leader of the House and the minority leader of the House.

The two members appointed under subparagraph (A) shall not be affiliated with the same political party; nor shall the two members appointed under subparagraph (B). Of the members not appointed under such subparagraphs, not more than two shall be affiliated with the same political party.

"(3) Members of the Commission, other than the Comptroller General, shall serve for terms of seven years, except that, of the members first appointed—

"(A) one of the members not appointed under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for a term ending on the April thirtieth first occurring more than six months after the date on which he is appointed;

"(B) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2)(A) shall be appointed for a term ending one year after the April thirtieth on which the term of the member referred to in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph ends;

"(C) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2)(B) shall be appointed for a term ending two years thereafter;

"(D) one of the members not appointed under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for a term ending six years thereafter.

"(E) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2)(A) shall be appointed for a term ending four years thereafter;

"(F) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2)(B) shall be appointed for a term ending five years thereafter; and

"(G) one of the members not appointed under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for a term ending six years thereafter.

"(4) Members shall be chosen on the basis of their maturity, experience, integrity, impartiality, and good judgment. A member may be reappointed to the Commission only once.

"(5) An individual appointed to fill a vacancy occurring other than by the expiration of a term of office shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member he succeeds. Any vacancy occurring in the office of member of the Commission shall be filled in the manner in which that office was originally filled.

"(6) The Commisson shall elect a Chairman and a Vice Chairman from among its members for a term of two years. The Chairman and the Vice Chairman shall not be affiliated with the same political party. The Vice Chairman shall act as Chairman in the absence or disability of the Chairman, or in the event of a vacancy in that office.

"(b) A vacancy in the Commission shall not impair the right of the remaining members to exercise all the powers of the Commission. Four members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum.

"(c) The Commission shall have an official seal which shall be judicially noticed.

"(d) The Commission shall at the close of each fiscal year report to the Congress and to the President concerning the action it has taken; the names, salaries, and duties of all individuals in its employ and the money it has disbursed; and shall make such further reports on the matters within its jurisdiction and such recommendations for further legislation as may appear desirable.

"(e) The principal office of the Commission shall be in or near the District of Columbia, but it may meet or exercise any or all its powers in any State.

"(f) The Commission shall appoint a General Counsel and an Executive Director to serve at the pleasure of the Commission. The General Counsel shall be the chief legal officer of the Commission. The Executive Director shall be responsible for the administrative operations of the Commission and shall perform such other duties as may be delegated or assigned to him from time to time by regulations or orders of the Commission. However, the Commission shall not delegate the making of regulations regarding elections to the Executive Director.

"(g) The Chairman of the Commission shall appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel as are necessary to fulfill the duties of the Commission in accordance with the provisions of title 5, United States Code.

"(h) The Commission may obtain the services of experts and consultants in accordance with section 3109 of title 5, United States Code.

"(i) In carrying out its responsibilities under this title, the Commission shall, to the fullest extent practicable, avail itself of the assistance, including personnel and facilities, of the General Accounting Office and the Department of Justice. The Comptroller General and the Attorney General may make available to the Commission such personnel, facilities, and other assistance, with or without reimbursement, as the Commission may request.

"(j) The provisions of section 7324 of title 5, United States Code, shall apply to members of the Commission notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (d)(3) of such section.

"(k)(1) Whenever the Commission submits any budget estimate or request to the President or the Office of Management and Budget, it shall concurrently transmit a copy of that estimate or request to the Congress.

"(2) Whenever the Commission submits any legislative recommendations, or testimony, or comments on legislation requested by the Congress or by any Member of Congress to the President or the Office of Management and Budget, it shall concurrently transmit a copy thereof to the Congress or to the Member requesting the same. No officer or agency of the United States shall have any authority to require the Commission to submit its legislative recommendations, or testimony, or comments on legislation, to any office or agency of the United States for approval, comments, or review, prior to the submission of such recommendations, testimony, or comments to the Congress.

"POWERS OF COMMISSION

"SEC. 309. (a) The Commission has the power—

"(1) to require, by special or general orders, any person to submit in writing such reports and answers to questions as the Commission may prescribe; and such submission shall be made within such reasonable period and under oath or otherwise as the Commission may determine;

"(2) to administer oaths;

"(3) to require by subpena, signed by the Chairman or the Vice Chairman, the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all documentary evidence relating to the execution of its duties;

"(4) in any proceeding or investigation to order testimony to be taken by deposition before any person who is designated by the Commission and has the power to administer oaths and, in such instances, to compel testimony and the production of evidence in the same manner as authorized under paragraph (3) of this subsection;

"(5) to pay witnesses the same fees and mileage as are paid in like circumstances in the courts of the United States;

"(6) to initiate (through civil proceedings for injunctive relief and through presentations to Federal grand juries), prosecute, defend, or appeal any civil or criminal action in the name of the Commission for the purpose of enforcing the provisons of this Act and of sections 602, 608, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, and 617 of title 18, United States Code, through its General Counsel;

"(7) to delegate any of its functions or powers, other than the power to issue subpenas under paragraph (3), to any officer or employee of the Commission; and

"(8) to make, amend, and repeal such rules, pursuant to the provisions of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code, as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

"(b) Any United States district court within the jurisdiction of which any inquiry is carried on, may, upon petition by the Commission, in case of refusal to obey a subpena or order of the Commission issued under subsection (a) of this section, issue an order requiring compliance therewith. Any failure to obey the order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof.

"(c) No person shall be subject to civil liability to any person (other than the Commission or the United States) for disclosing information at the request of the Commission.

"(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commission shall be the primary civil and criminal enforcement agency for violations of the provisions of this Act, and of sections 602, 608, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, and 617 of title 18, United States Code. Any violation of any such provision shall be prosecuted by the Attorney General or Department of Justice personnel only after consultation with, and with the consent of, the Commission.

"(e)(1) Any person who violates any provision of this Act or of section 602, 608, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, or 617 of title 18, United States Code, may be assessed a civil penalty by the Commission under paragraph (2) of this subsection of not more than $10,000 for each such violation. Each occurrence of a violation of this Act and each day of noncompliance with a disclosure requirement of this title or an order of the Commission issued under this section shall constitute a separate offense. In determining the amount of the penalty the Commission shall consider the person's history of previous violations, the appropriateness of such penalty to the financial resources of the person charged, the gravity of the violation, and the demonstrated good faith of the person charged in attempting to achieve rapid compliance after notification of a violation.

"(2) A civil penalty shall be assessed by the Commission by order only after the person charged with a violation has been given an opportunity for a hearing and the Commission has determined, by decision incorporating its findings of fact therein, that a violation did occur, and the amount of the penalty. Any hearing under this section shall be of record and shall be held in accordance with chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code.

"(3) If the person against whom a civil penalty is assessed fails to pay the penalty, the Commission shall file a petition for enforcement of its order assessing the penalty in any appropriate district court of the United States. The petition shall designate the person against whom the order is sought to be enforced as the respondent. A copy of the petition shall forthwith be sent by registered or certified mail to the respondent and his attorney of record, and thereupon the Commission shall certify and file in such court the record upon which such order sought to be enforced was issued. The court shall have jurisdiction to enter a judgment enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside in whole or in part the order and decision of the Commission or it may remand the proceedings to the Commission for such further action as it may direct. The court may determine de novo all issues of law but the Commission's findings of fact, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive.

"(f) Upon application made by any individual holding Federal office, any candidate, or any political committee, the Commission, through its General Counsel, shall provide within a reasonable period of time an advisory opinion, with respect to any specific transaction or activity inquired of, as to whether such transaction or activity would constitute a violation of any provision of this Act or of any provision of title 18, United States Code, over which the Commission has primary jurisdiction under subsection (d).

"CENTRAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEES

"SEC. 310. (a) Each candidate shall designate one political committee as his central campaign committee. A candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to the office of President, may also designate one political committee in each State in which he is a candidate as his State campaign committee for that State. The designation shall be made in writing, and a copy of the designation, together with such information as the Commission may require, shall be furnished to the Commission upon the designation of any such committee.

"(b) No political committee may be designated as the central campaign committee of more than one candidate. The central campaign committee, and each State campaign committee, designated by a candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of President shall be the central campaign committee and the State campaign committee of the candidate nominated by that party for election to the office of Vice President.

"(c)(1) Any political committee authorized by a candidate to accept contributions or make expenditures in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or for election, which is not a central campaign committee or a State campaign committee, shall furnish each report required of it under section 304 (other than reports required under section 311(b)) to that candidate's central campaign committee at the time it would, but for this subsection be required to furnish that report to the Commission. Any report properly furnished to a central campaign committee under this subsection shall be, for purposes of this title, held and considered to have been furnished to the Commission at the time at which it was furnished to such central campaign committee.

"(2) The Commission may, by regulation, require any political committee receiving contributions or making expenditures in a State on behalf of a candidate who, under subsection (a), has designated a State campaign committee for that State to furnish its reports to that State campaign committee instead of furnishing such reports to the central campaign committee of that candidate.

"(3) The Commission may require any political committee to furnish any report directly to the Commission.

"(d) Each political committee which is a central campaign committee or a State campaign committee shall receive all reports filed with or furnished to it by other political committees, and consolidate and furnish the reports to the Commission, together with its own reports and statements, in accordance with the provisions of this title and regulations prescribed by the Commission.

"CAMPAIGN DEPOSITORIES

"SEC. 311. (a)(1) Each candidate shall designate one or more National or State banks as his campaign depositories. The central campaign committee of that candidate, and any other political committee authorized by him to receive contributions or to make expenditures on his behalf, shall maintain a checking account at a depository so designated by the candidate and shall deposit any contributions received by that committee into that account. A candidate shall deposit any payment received by him under section 506 of this Act in the account maintained by his central campaign committee. No expenditure may be made by any such committee on behalf of a candidate or to influence his election except by check drawn on that account, other than petty cash expenditures as provided in subsection (b).

"(2) The treasurer of each political committee (other than a political committee authorized by a candidate to receive contributions or to make expenditures on his behalf) shall designate one or more National or State banks as campaign depositories of that committee, and shall maintain a checking account for that committee at each such depository. All contributions received by that committee shall be deposited in such an account. No expenditure may be made by that committee except by check drawn on that account, other than petty cash expenditures as provided in subsection (b).

"(b) A political committee may maintain a petty cash fund out of which it may make expenditures not in excess of $100 to any person in connection with a single purchase or transaction. A record of petty cash disbursements shall be kept in accordance with requirements established by the Commission, and such statements and reports thereof shall be furnished to the Commission as it may require.

"(c) A candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to the office of President may establish one such depository in each such State, which shall be considered by his State campaign committee for that State and any other political committee authorized by him to receive contributions or to make expenditures on his behalf in that State, under regulations prescribed by the Commission, as his single campaign depository. The campaign depository of the candidate of a political party for election to the office of Vice President shall be the campaign depository designated by the candidate of that party for election to the office of President.".

(b)(1) Section 5314 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(60) Members (other than the Comptroller General), Federal Election Commission (7)."

(2) Section 5315 of such title is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(98) General Counsel, Federal Election Commission.

"(99) Exectuive Director, Federal Election Commission."

(c) Until the appointment and qualification of all the members of the Federal Election Commission and its General Counsel and until the transfer provided for in this subsection, the Comptroller General, the Secretary of the Senate, and the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall continue to carry out their responsibilities under title I and title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 as such titles existed on the day before the date of enactment of this Act. Upon the appointment of all members of the Commission and its General Counsel, the Comptroller General, the Secretary of the Senate, and the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall meet with the Commission and arrange for the transfer, within thirty days after the date on which all such members and the General Counsel are appointed, of all records, documents, memorandums, and other papers associated with carrying out their responsibilities under title I and title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

(d) Title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by—

(1) amending section 301(g) (relating to definitions) to read as follows:

"(g) 'Commission' means the Federal Election Commission;";

(2) striking out "supervisory officer" in section 302(d) and inserting "Commission";

(3) striking out section 302(f) (relating to organization of political committees);

(4) amending section 303 (relating to registration of political committees; statements) by—

(A) striking out "supervisory officer" each time it appears therein and inserting "Commission"; and

(B) striking out "he" in the second sentence of subsection (b) of such section (as redesignated by section 203(a) of this Act) and inserting "it";

(5) amending section 304 (relating to reports by political committees and candidates) by—

(A) striking out "appropriate supervisory officer" and "him" in the first sentence thereof and inserting "Commission" and "it", respectively; and

(B) striking out "supervisory officer" where it appears in the third sentence of subsection (a) and in paragraphs (12) and (14) (as redesignated by section 204(d)(2) of this Act) of subsection (b), and inserting "Commission";

(6) striking out "supervisory officer" each place it appears in section 306 (relating to formal requirements respecting reports and statements) and inserting "Commission";

(7) striking out "Comptroller General of the United States" and "he" in section 307 (relating to reports on convention financing) and inserting "Federal Election Commission" and "it", respectively;

(8) striking out "SUPERVISORY OFFICER" in the caption of section 312 (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) (relating to duties of the supervisory officer) and inserting "COMMISSION";

(9) striking out "supervisory officer" in section 312(a) (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) the first time it appears and inserting "Commission";

(10) amending section 312(a) (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) by—

(A) striking out "him" in paragraph (1) and inserting "it";

(B) striking out "him" in paragraph (4) and inserting "it"; and

(C) striking out "he" each place it appears in paragraphs (7) and (9) and inserting "it";

(11) striking out "supervisory officer" in section 312(b) (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this subsection) and inserting "Commission";

(12) amending subsection (c) of section 312 (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) by—

(A) striking out "Comptroller General" each place it appears therein and inserting "Commission", and striking out "his" in the second sentence of such subsection and inserting "its"; and

(B) striking out the last sentence thereof; and

(13) amending subsection (d)(1) of section 312 (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) by—

(A) striking out "supervisory officer" each place it appears therein and inserting "Commission";

(B) striking out "he" the first place it appears in the second sentence of such section and inserting "it"; and

(C) striking out "the Attorney General on behalf of the United States" and inserting "the Commission".

INDEXING AND PUBLICATION OF REPORTS

SEC. 402. Section 312(a)(6) (as redesignated by this Act) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to duties of the supervisory officer) is amended to read as follows:

"(6) to compile and maintain a cumulative index listing all statements and reports filed with the Commission during each calendar year by political committees and candidates, which the Commission shall cause to be published in the Federal Register no less frequently than monthly during even-numbered years and quarterly in odd-numbered years and which shall be in such form and shall include such information as may be prescribed by the Commission to permit easy identification of each statement, report, candidate, and committee listed, at least as to their names, the dates of the statements and reports, and the number of pages in each, and the Commission shall make copies of statements and reports listed in the index available for sale, direct or by mail, at a price determined by the Commission to be reasonable to the purchaser;".

JUDICIAL REVIEW

SEC. 403. Title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by inserting after section 312 (as redesignated by this Act) the following new section:

"JUDICIAL REVIEW

"SEC. 313. (a) Any agency action by the Commission made under the provisions of this Act shall be subject to review by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit upon petition filed in such court by any interested person. Any petition filed pursuant to this section shall be filed within thirty days after the agency action by the Commission for which review is sought.

"(b) The Commisison, the national committee of any political party, and individuals eligible to vote in an election for Federal office, are authorized to institute such actions, including actions for declaratory judgment or injunctive relief, as may be appropriate to implement any provisions of this Act.

"(c) The provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, apply to judicial review of any agency action, as defined in section 551 of title 5, United States Code, by the Commission.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO STATES TO PROMOTE COMPLIANCE

SEC. 404. Section 309 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to statements filed with State officers) is redesignated as section 314 of such Act and amended by—

(1) striking out "a supervisory officer" in subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof "the Commission";

(2) striking out "in which an expenditure is made by him or on his behalf" in subsection (a)(1) and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "in which he is a candidate or in which substantial expenditures are made by him or on his behalf"; and

(3) adding the following new subsection:

"(c) There is authorized to be appropriated to the Commission in each fiscal year the sum of $500,000, to be made available in such amounts as the Commission deems appropriate to the States for the purpose of assisting them in complying with their duties as set forth in this section.".

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 405. Title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by adding at the end of such title the following new section:

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 319. There are authorized to be appropriated to the Commisison, for the purpose of carrying out its functions under this title and under chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, not to exceed $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1974, and not to exceed $5,000,000 for each fiscal year thereafter.

TITLE V—DISCLOSURE OF FINANCIAL INTERESTS BY CERTAIN FEDERAL OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

FEDERAL EMPLOYEE FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 501. (a) Any candidate of a political party in a general election for the office of a Member of Congress who, at the time he becomes a candidate, does not occupy any such office, shall file within one month after he becomes a candidate for such office, and each Member of Congress, each officer and employee of the United States (including any member of a uniformed service) who is compensated at a rate in excess of $25,000 per annum, any individual occupying the position of an officer or employee of the United States who performs duties of the type generally performed by an individual occupying grade GS-16 of the General Schedule or any higher grade or position (as determined by the Federal Election Commission regardless of the rate of compensation of such individual), the President, and the Vice President shall file annually, with the Commission a report containing a full and complete statement of—

(1) the amount and source of each item of income, each item of reimbursement for any expenditure, and each gift or aggregate of gifts from one source (other than gifts received from his spouse or any member of his immediate family) received by him or by him and his spouse jointly during the preceding calendar year which exceeds $100 in amount or value, including any fee or other honorarium received by him for or in connection with the preparation or delivery of any speech or address, attendance at any convention or other assembly of individuals, or the preparation of any article or other composition for publication, and the monetary value of subsistence, entertainment, travel, and other facilities received by him in kind;

(2) the identity of each asset held by him, or by him and his spouse jointly which has a value in excess of $1,000, and the amount of each liability owed by him or by him and his spouse jointly, which is in excess of $1,000 as of the close of the preceding calendar year;

(3) any transactions in securities of any business entity by him or by him and his spouse jointly, or by any person acting on his behalf or pursuant to his direction during the preceding calendar year if the aggregate amount involved in transactions in the securities of such business entity exceeds $1,000 during such year;

(4) all transactions in commodities by him, or by him and his spouse jointly, or by any person acting on his behalf or pursuant to his direction during the preceding calendar year if the aggregate amount involved in such transactions exceeds $1,000; and

(5) any purchase or sale, other than the purchase or sale of his personal residence, of real property or any interest therein by him, or by him and his spouse jointly, or by any person acting on his behalf or pursuant to his direction, during the preceding calendar year if the value of property involved in such purchase or sale exceeds $1,000.

(b) Reports required by this section (other than reports so required by candidates of political parties) shall be filed not later than May 15 of each year. In the case of any person who ceases, prior to such date in any year, to occupy the office or position the occupancy of which imposes upon him the reporting requirements contained in subsection (a) shall file such report on the last day he occupies such office or position, or on such later date, not more than three months after such last day, as the Commission may prescribe.

(c) Reports required by this section shall be in such form and detail as the Commission may prescribe. The Commission may provide for the grouping of item of income, sources of income, assets, liabilites, dealings in securities or commodities, and purchases and sales of real property, when separate itemization is not feasible or is not necessary for an accurate disclosure of the income, net worth, dealing in securities and commodities, or purchases and sales of real property of any individual.

(d) Any person who willfully fails to file a report required by this section or who knowingly and willfully files a false report under this section, shall be fined $2,000, or imprisoned for not more than five years, or both.

(e) All reports filed under this section shall be maintained by the Commission as public records, which, under such reasonable regulations as it shall prescribe, shall be available for inspection by members of the public.

(f) For the purposes of any report required by this section, an individual shall be considered to have been President, Vice President, a Member of Congress, an officer or employee of the United States, or a member of a uniformed service, during any calendar year if he served in any such position for more than six months during such calendar year.

(g) As used in this section—

(1) The term "income" means gross income as defined in section 61 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

(2) The term "security" means security as defined in section 2 of the Securities Act of 1933, as amended (15 U.S.C. 77b).

(3) The term "commodity" means commodity as defined in section 2 of the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended (7 U.S.C. 2).

(4) The term "transactions in securities or commodities" means any acquisition, holding, withholding, use, transfer, or other disposition involving any security or commodity.

(5) The term "Member of Congress" means a Senator, a Representative, a Resident Commissioner, or a Delegate.

(6) The term "officer" has the same meaning as in section 2104 of title 5, United States Code.

(7) The term "employee" has the same meaning as in section 2105 of such title.

(8) The term "uniformed service" means any of the Armed Forces, the commissioned corps of the Public Health Service, or the commissioned corps of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

(9) The term "immediate family" means the child, parent, grandparent, brother, or sister of an individual, and the spouses of such person.

(h) Section 554 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) All written communications and memorandums stating the circumstances, source, and substance of all oral communications made to the agency, or any officer or employee thereof, with respect to any case which is subject to the provisions of this section by any person who is not an officer or employee of the agency shall be made a part of the public record of such case. This subsection shall not apply to communications to any officer, employee, or agent of the agency engaged in the performance of investigative or prosecuting functions for the agency with respect to such case."

(i) The first report required under this section shall be due on the fifteenth day of May occurring at least thirty days after the date of enactment.

TITLE VI—RELATED INTERNAL REVENUE CODE AMENDMENTS

INCREASE IN POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS CREDIT AND DEDUCTION

SEC. 601. (a) Section 41(b)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to maximum credit for contributions to candidates for public office) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) MAXIMUM CREDIT.—The credit allowed by subsection (a) for a taxable year shall not exceed $25 ($50 in the case of a joint return under section 6013)."

(b) Section 218(b)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to amount of deduction for contributions to candidates for public office) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) AMOUNT.—The deduction under subsection (a) shall not exceed $100 ($200 in the case of a joint return under section 6013)."

(c) The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) shall apply with respect to any political contribution the payment of which is made after December 31, 1973.

REPEAL OF EXISTING PROVISIONS RELATING TO PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN FINANCING

SEC. 502. (a) Part VIII of subchapter A of chapter 61 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to designation of income tax payments to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund) is repealed. Subtitle II of such Code (relating to financing of Presidential election campaigns) is repealed.

(b) The table of parts for subchapter A of chapter 61 of such Code is amended to strike out the last item (relating to part VIII).

(c) The amendments made by this section take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

GIFT TAX TREATMENT OF POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS

SEC. 603. (a) Section 2503(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to exclusions from gifts) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Gifts made to different political committees which make expenditures (including transfers of funds and contributions by a committee) for the purpose of influencing the nomination or election of any candidate for elective office shall for purposes of this subsection be deemed to have been made to that candidate unless the donor establishes to the satisfaction of the Secretary or his delegate that—

(1) at the time he made the gift he could not have been reasonably expected to know which candidate would benefit from his gift, and

(2) at no time did he direct, request, or suggest to the committee, or to any person associated with that committee, that a particular candidate should receive any benefit from his gift.

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to gifts made on or after the date of enactment.

TITLE VII—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

PRESIDENTIAL PREFERENCE PRIMARY ELECTIONS

SEC. 701. (a) Each State which conducts a Presidential preference primary election shall conduct that election only on a date occurring after the first day in May during any year in which the electors of the President and Vice President are appointed.

(b) For the purposes of this section, the term—

(1) "Presidential preference primary election" means an election conducted by a State, in whole or in part, for the purpose of—

(A) permitting the voters of that State to express their preferences for the nomination of candidates by political parties for election to the office of President, or

(B) choosing delegates to the national nominating conventions held by political parties for the purpose of nominating such candidates; and

(2) "State" means each of the several States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

CONGRESSIONAL PRIMARIES

SEC. 702. (a) If, under the law of any State, the candidate of a political party for election to the Senate or to the House of Representatives is determined by a primary election or by a convention conducted by that party, the primary election or convention shall not be held before the first Tuesday in August. If a subsequent, additional primary election is necessary to determine the nominee of any political party in a State, that additional election shall be held within thirty days after the date of the first such primary election.

(b) For purposes of this section—

(1) the term "State" means each of the several States of the United States, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the territory of Guam, and the territory of the Virgin Islands; and

(2) a candidate for election as Resident Commissioner to the United States, in the case of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, or as Delegate to the House of Representatives, in the case of the territory of Guam or the territory of the Virgin Islands, is considered to be a candidate for election to the House of Representatives.

(c) Section 10(a)(3) of the District of Columbia Election Act (D.C. Code, sec. 1110 (a)(3)) is amended by striking out "the first Tuesday in May" and inserting in lieu thereof "the first Tuesday in August".

SUSPENSION OF FRANK FOR MASS MAILINGS IMMEDIATELY BEFORE ELECTIONS

SEC. 703. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no Senator, Representative, Resident Commissioner, or Delegate shall make any mass mailing of a newsletter or mailing with a simplified form of address under the frank under section 3210 of title 39, United States Code, during the sixty days immediately preceding the date on which any election is held in which he is a candidate.

PROHIBITION OF FRANKED SOLICITATIONS

SEC. 704. No Senator, Representative, Resident Commissioner, or Delegate shall make any solicitation of funds by a mailing under the frank under section 3210 of title 39, United States Code.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr President, my understanding is that this amendment is in the nature of a substitute to the pending bill; is that correct?

Mr. DOLE. That is correct.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, after discussing this matter with the managers of the bill and the sponsor of the amendment, I ask unanimous consent that there be a 5-minute limitation, with time to begin running tomorrow at the hour of 11 a.m., the time to be equally divided between the manager of the bill and the sponsor of the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I inquire if this is a complete substitute for the bill?

Mr. DOLE. The Senator from Alabama is correct.

Mr. ALLEN. 5 minutes would be sufficient——

Mr. MANSFIELD. Would the Senator make a suggestion?

Mr. ALLEN. We already have a limitation provided by rule XXII. I should like to make inquiry, does the Senator leave out the public financing in his substitute?

Mr. DOLE. There is no public financing. The limitation is $3,000—cash contributions above $50—no public financing. That is a departure from the pending legislation. I can discuss it tomorrow in 10 minutes to a side.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I will withdraw my request.

Mr. ALLEN. I would not object to 10 minutes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Fine.

Mr. ALLEN. But we should discuss it for more than 5 minutes.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire has not taken 1 minute's time on this whole debate yet. I wish that the time on the substitute amendment could be extended long enough so that I could have 5 minutes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Well, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a one-half hour time limitation on the substitute amendment of the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE), the time to be equally divided and controlled between the manager and the sponsor of the bill, with 5 minutes to be allocated specifically to the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. COTTON).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COTTON. I thank the Senator from Montana very much.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order to call for the yeas and nays on the substitute amendment of the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President. I ask unanimous consent that time begin running at the conclusion of morning business tomorrow. My understanding is that we have two special orders and that there will be a period for not to exceed 15 minutes for the conduct of morning business. I make that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following the disposal of the amendment in the nature of a substitute by the distinguished Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE), the distinguished Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK) be recognized—because it had been his intention to call up one of his amendments tonight—so that it would be the pending business on tomorrow.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, perhaps I should say that there was the understanding on the part of several of us that after morning business tomorrow, the disaster relief bill would be taken up, and that there would be a time limitation on it.

I wonder whether the distinguished majority leader would modify his request to provide that, following the disposition of the Dole amendment, the Senate proceed to the consideration of the disaster relief bill, and upon disposition of the bill, that the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK) then be recognized.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That would be perfectly acceptable. I should have remembered that because I was told about it; but, in any event, it will be the next amendment after the Dole amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent—and this request has been cleared with the leadership on the Republican side, and with Senators BAKER and DOMENICI, the two ranking members on the committee and the subcommittee respectively, and the distinguished chairman of the Public Works Committee, and the distinguished Senator from North Dakota (Mr. BURDICK), who is the chairman of the subcommittee on the majority side—that there be a time limitation on the disaster relief bill of not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided between and controlled by Senators BURDICK and DOMENICI; and that time on any amendments thereto be limited to 30 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled in the usual form; and that the agreement be in the usual form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I want to take one moment of my time this evening to commend our Senate leadership, the distinguished Senator from Montana (Mr. MANSFIELD) and the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania

(Mr. HUGH SCOTT), as well as the distinguished manager of the pending bill, Senator CANNON, for their efforts over the period of the past few days in bringing the importance of this proposal to the attention of the Senate. Their conversations and assistance developed the votes for cloture and demonstrated that two-thirds of the Senate wants campaign reform legislation.

Many thought the battle for cloture could not be won. We know how far we had to come since the vote last week. And Senators MANSFIELD and HUGH SCOTT deserve great credit for so effectively turning the tide.

The issues had been debated and discussed extensively. The time had come for decisive action, and thanks to the extraordinary efforts of the leadership, decisive action was taken by the Senate this afternoon. All of us interested in this issue should recognize the strong position our leaders took. Because of their efforts and initiatives, this legislation is now moving toward final passage, and all of us are in their debt. It is a tribute to the Senate's bipartisan leadership that we are about to see final Senate action on a bill that may well become the high water mark in the legislative record of the 93d Congress, and a landmark reform that can bring honest elections to the people and integrity back to Government.

H.R. 13542—AN ACT TO ABOLISH THE POSITION OF COMMISSIONER OF FISH AND WILDLIFE

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on H.R. 13542.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate H.R. 13542, which was read twice by its title, as follows:

H.R. 13542, an act to abolish the position of Commissioner of Fish and Wildlife and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time and passed.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS TOMORROW

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that after the orders for the recognition of Senators on tomorrow, there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business of not to exceed 15 minutes, with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATOR ROTH ON THURSDAY

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday, after the remarks of Mr. BIDEN, the distinguished senior Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH) be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senate will convene at 10 a.m. tomorrow.

After the two leaders or their designees have been recognized under the standing order, the following Senators will be recognized, each for not to exceed 15 minutes, and in the order stated: Mr. METZENBAUM, Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, Mr. BIDEN.

At the conclusion of the orders aforementioned, there will be a period for the transaction of routine morning business of not to exceed 15 minutes, with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

At the conclusion of the transaction of routine morning business, the Senate will resume consideration of the unfinished business, S. 3044. The question at that time will be on the adoption of the amendment by Mr. DOLE, amendment No. 1127, on which there is a time limitation of 30 minutes, with the yeas and nays already having been ordered thereon. Therefore, there will be a yea-and-nay vote on amendment No. 1127 at about 11:30 a.m.

Upon the disposition of the Dole amendment, the unfinished business will be laid aside temporarily, and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the disaster relief bill, S. 3062, on which there is a time limitation of 2 hours, with a time limitation on any amendment thereto of 30 minutes, and with a time limitation on any debatable motion or appeal of 10 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled in accordance with the usual form. Yea-and-nay votes may occur on amendments to that bill, and undoubtedly there will be a yea-and-nay vote on the final passage thereof.

Upon the disposition of the disaster relief bill, the Senate will resume consideration of the unfinished business, S. 3044, and the pending question at that time will be on the adoption of the amendment by Mr. CLARK. Yea-and-nay votes will occur on amendments to S. 3044, beginning with and subsequent to the disposition of the Clark amendment, and hopefully the Senate will complete action on that bill tomorrow.

Mr. President, included in my statement of the program was the statement with regard to debatable motions and appeals, and I ask unanimous consent that the time related thereto as stated in the program be effectuated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT TO 10 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, if there be no further business to come before the Senate, I move, in accordance with the previous order, that the Senate stand in adjournment until 10 a.m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and, at 6:15 p.m., the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, April 10, 1974, at 10 a.m.

Executive nominations received by the Senate March 9, 1974.

TRIBUTE TO BOB ALLISON, SPORTS WRITER

Mr. FANNIN. Mr. President, it was with great sorrow that I learned of the death of one of America's finest sports writers, Bob Allison of the Phoenix Gazette.

He died last Friday, April 5, after a year-long fight against leukemia.

Bob Allison joined the Gazette in 1937, and he had been sports editor for the past quarter century. Tens of thousands of Arizonans followed his columns as our area was transformed from a State in which high school football was the biggest sports event into a center of major sports activity comparable with almost any place in this Nation.

His skill was recognized nationally in 1964 when he was named "Sportswriter of the Year" by the National Association of Sportswriters and Sportcasters.

Mr. President, I know that Bob Allison had many fans and admirers all over America. I ask unanimous consent that articles from the Gazette and The Arizona Republic paying tribute to the great newsman be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Phoenix Gazette, Apr. 6, 1974]

BOB ALLISON, GAZETTE SPORTS EDITOR, DIES

Robert B. "Bob" Allison, who joined The Phoenix Gazette in 1937 as a combination news and sports writer, and served the newspaper more than 25 years as sports editor, died yesterday at Good Samaritan Hospital.

Allison, a Mesa native, had been suffering from leukemia since last spring. He was 57.

He was perhaps best known through his column, "Along The Way," the last edition of which appeared in Tuesday's Gazette.

He was named sports editor of The Gazette in 1947, and earned a reputation for fairness and clarity of expression which made "Along The Way" one of the most respected columns in the state.

The direct cause of death was listed as a cerebral hemorrhage.

Eugene C. Pulliam, publisher of The Gazette and The Arizona Republic, said of Allison: "Bob was one of the most beloved men in the Gazette and Republic family.

"Almost any good thing that could be said about a man could be said about Bob Allison.

"He was a sweet man whose companionship always was enjoyed by his fellow employes. He knew sports as few writers did and loved to write about them. And the readers of The Gazette loved and appreciated what he wrote.

"Bob Allison was a man of great courage. He battled his fatal illness with the same great spirit he showed as a combat soldier in World War II, and a strongly competitive sports editor.

"It is a heart breaking experience to have to say good-bye to such a great friend and loyal associate."

Allison was named "Sportswriter of the Year" in 1964 by the National Association of Sportswriters and Sportscasters.

His Gazette assignments, wide-ranging and varied, included such major sports assignments as the Indianapolis 500, the U.S. Open and U.S. Amateur Gold Championships, the World Series, heavyweight championship boxing, and major baseball, backetball and football events.

Allison was graduated from Mesa High School in 1933 and attended Arizona State Teachers College (now Arizona State University) where he became editor of the college newspaper, the predecessor of the State Press.

In 1938, Allison became editor of the Flagstaff Journal. The following year, he returned to the Phoenix area, and joined The Gazette as a combination all-purpose newswriter and sportswriter under sports editor Larry Grill.

World War II interrupted his sports career. Allison joined the U.S. Army in January 1944 and served in combat with the 86th Infantry Division in Europe until the Germans surrendered. His unit was then reassigned as occupational troops in the Philippines. He was discharged honorably as a staff sergeant in 1946.

He returned to The Gazette and was named sports editor the following year.

He was also a charter member and past president of the Phoenix Press Box Association, a member of the journalism fraternity, Sigma Delta Chi; a charter member of the Phoenix Press Club, a director of Golf Writers of America, a member of the Football Writers Association and a charter member of the Arizona Golf Hall of Fame.

He resided with his family at 2341 W. Kein Drive. Survivors include his wife, Mary; a daughter, Judy Samuels; stepchildren, John Wilson and Mary Ann Emmons; a brother, Lewis, and three grandchildren.

ON SECOND THOUGHT

Everybody always said Bob Allison was such a nice guy.

If I heard it once, I heard it a thousand times.

And every time, it seemed to irritate me a little bit more, until finally I almost wanted to scream.

"He's not a nice man, dammit! He's a great man. One of the greatest newspapermen I ever met."

But I never did.

Of course, I meant to tell him. In fact, as he fought the unfightable fight the last few months, I even picked out the exact day I was going to tell him what I thought. It was called tomorrow.

WHERE ELSE?

Friday evening when managing editor Alan Moyer called to tell me tomorrow has been canceled, I cried. I cried hard.

I can't ever remember a time when I've felt sorrier for myself.

Today, as I sit here in what has to be the emptiest roomfull of desks, typewriters, telephones, file cabinets, waste baskets, and junk that ever there was, I'm still feeling sorry for myself.

Where else am I going to find someone with his ability to judge news and people . . . his knowledge of writing . . . his patience with my peculiarities . . . his willingness to do the office drudgery so that I and others would be free to concentrate on the "glamor". . . .

Where else?

A SLOW STUDY

Technically, Bob was the boss, but in truth, he wasn't terribly good at bossing.

Yet, in a field where unselfishness and loyalty often are smothered by instincts of self preservation, he built the most loyal and unselfish sports staff I've ever seen.

In the 13 years I've been here, nobody ever went away mad. All this he did not by being boss, but by being Bob.

He didn't use his knowledge and expertise like a club. Rather than hit you over the head with it, he just kept it handy for whenever you needed it.

And he had the patience to wait until you got smart enough to realize you did need it.

We had perhaps four or five major disagreements in 13 years, and, in each case, he was right and I was wrong.

In each case, he gave me all the time I needed to find it out. (And in one case, it took me almost two years.)

AN EPITAPH

For a piece about Bob, this column seems to have an awful lot about me, but I'm just hoping that in sharing some of the things he meant to me, I can make you understand that he was so much more than just a nice man.

Bob left so much of himself with each member of the staff that the casual reader may not realize he's gone.

But we will.

If I could have one day of my own life back, it would be the tomorrow that Moyer's call canceled.

If I could give one piece of advice, it would be: If you have something important you've been meaning to tell somebody important, don't wait.

And if I were asked to write an epitaph for Bob Allison, it would be:

He Gave At The Office.

And gave, and gave, and gave . . .

[From the Arizona Republic, Apr. 7, 1974]

BOB ALLISON'S LEGACY

It was no secret to Bob Allison, his colleagues, friends and most of the sports community that death was near every precious day.

But to read his column, to see him at the Phoenix Gazette's sports desk dashing off headlines and bantering with his young staff, Bob Allison's terrible personal burden never showed.

Death came Friday, ending a year-long fight against leukemia.

If Bob Allison could have dictated a eulogy, he would have asked to be remembered for the personal and professional pride he instilled in young craftsmen who learned their journalistic trade from him.

When other men might have given up, Bob Allison found the strength and courage to be at his typewriter producing breezy, newsy sports columns which made him a reading favorite for over 25 years in Phoenix.

Colleagues and readers in Arizona were only part of a large legion of admirers. Sports editors around the country voted him "Sportswriter of the Year" in 1964.

Those who worked around Bob in a business made more grueling by deadlines knew him as a gentle leader who pitched in to handle his share of the drudgery of a copy desk. A spanking new private office away from the hurried pace was not where Bob Allison hung his hat. He chose to be at a typewriter near his team.

Bob Allison the man, the friend, the craftsman—will be grievously missed. But the mark of excellence he gave to a generation of sportswriters will endure in the memories and skills of journalists for years to come.

SPECIAL CONFERENCE ON THE EFFECTS OF THE ENERGY CRISIS ON TOURISM

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I would like to report to the Congress concerning final arrangements for the Special Conference on the Effects of the Energy Crisis on Tourism which has been arranged in conjunction with the tourism hearings held by the Senate Commerce Committee Subcommittee on Foreign Commerce and Tourism on March 29 and April 1.

Tourism is as important to the American economy and the American people as any other industry. Because of this, as I announced at the Tourism Subcommittee hearings, this major Conference on Tourism was called to take place on May 3, 1974, in Orlando, Fla. Tourist-oriented industries throughout Florida and other interested States, as well as representatives of the executive and legislative branches of Government, will participate in the Conference.

The purpose of this special conference is to delineate actions which can be taken by Government at the national level to diminish the critical effects of the energy crisis on the tourism industry, with special emphasis given to States such as Florida, which have highly developed tourist industries.

The conference will be composed of seven tourist-related industry groups which will be charged with the responsibility of developing specific recommendations and suggestions to be delivered to Federal and State officials for subsequent implementation

The urgent need for this conference can be readily underscored by taking a brief look at the tourism industry:

In 1972 the tourism industry contributed approximately $61 billion to the U.S. economy and provided direct employment to approximately 1.6 million Americans.

In Florida, tourism is one of the largest single industries, accounting for 15 percent of the State's total gross State product—GSP—in 1973. The energy crisis has hit this industry harder than any other. The tourism decline directly attributable to the energy crisis was 15 percent for Florida during the month of March alone.

The lifting of the Middle East oil embargo does not represent a solution to this crisis. We should indeed take advantage of the qualified relief due to the lifting of the embargo to plan now for future emergencies.

Anyone desiring to participate in the Special Conference on the Effects of the Energy Crisis on Tourism should contact my office, 5107 Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20510.

Without objection, I ask that the program for the Conference be printed in the RECORD following this statement.

There being no objection, the program was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROGRAM: SPECIAL CONFERENCE ON THE EFFECTS OF THE ENERGY CRISIS ON TOURISM

4:30 p.m. Remarks, United States Senator Ed Gurney.

5:00 p.m. End of Conference.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ABOUREZK). The period for the transaction of routine morning business is now concluded.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of the unfinished business, S. 3044, which the clerk will state.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

S. 3044, to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE) No. 1127 which the clerk will state.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 1127, proposed by the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE), in the nature of a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Time on this amendment is limited to 30 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE) and the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON), with the Senator from New Hampshire

(Mr. COTTON) being guaranteed 5 minutes of that time.

Who yields time?

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I yield such time as I may require.

As I indicated yesterday afternoon, we have gone full circle with public financing. At the outset, the promotors and the sponsors of public financing were, in effect, suggesting that we had to go to public financing to purify the poltical process, that those of us in politics must accept public funds in order to purify the political process, that for some reason, private contributions—even though they would require disclosure, even though we might set a spending ceiling, even though we would have strict reporting requirements—would lead to the suspicion that those who accepted private contributions, from whatever sources, were suspect, perhaps corruptible, or corrupt.

However, in the course of debate, we have seen a transformation. We now are asked to vote on the measure, unless there is significant change, to provide a mix—that is, some public financing and some private financing.

As I stated yesterday, it does appear that the original intent of the sponsors has been forgotten. We now hear speeches and statements from the sponsors of public financing suggesting that perhaps partly private and partly public money is all right, for some reason.

Mr. President, if, in fact, there is this great concern about the need for purifying the political process for those of us in politics, those who contribute, those who work in campaigns, or those who make contributions in kind, then in my opinion it should be one way or the other. There should be either total public financing, or there should be total private financing with adequate safeguards to make certain—as certain as we can—that there will not be these abuses which have been referred to over and over and over again, based on Watergate and based on elections before 1972.

My substitute campaign reform proposal would omit public financing, but it does provide reform. It does provide, in essence, what the Senate provided last year in passing S. 372 which is still awaiting action on the House side.

In addition, it has new provisions. It has an annual limitation on contributions of $3,000 for individuals and organizations. It has a limit on cash contributions of $50.

It addresses itself to the problem of so-called campaign "dirty tricks." There is a prohibition and penalty for violating the provisions of that section. It does, as the other bills do, provide for certain changes in the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 with reference to reporting, disclosure, and registration of candidates and committees. It establishes a nonpartisan Federal Election Commission and provides assistance to the States to promote compliance with the work of that commission.

It deals with disclosure of financial interests—disclosure by Federal employees, and it covers the President, the Vice President, Members of Congress, candidates for Federal office, and anyone in GS–16 or above, or anyone paid over $25,000 a year.

It provides additional incentives for small contributors by doubling the tax credit for contributions to $25 and the deduction to $100; and of course that would be doubled to $50 and $200 for a joint return. It deals with gift tax treatment of political contributions. It deals with the length of Presidential and congressional campaigns by requiring that Presidential primaries should not be held before May 1 and that congressional primaries not take place before the first Tuesday in August. In essence it provides the reform we have been discussing since last year.

It seems to the Senator from Kansas that since we have created the Watergate Committee and the taxpayers have poured out millions and millions of dollars in expenditures for the Watergate Committee that we are acting prematurely in the case of the bill before us. The hearings started on May 12, 1972, as I recall; and we were told at that time by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina (Mr. ERVIN) and the distinguished Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER) that after the hearings were conducted, certain legislative recommendations would be made, if necessary to clean up the political process. That report is not due to be filed until late May of this year. There have been no recommendations at all from the Watergate Committee.

Now, there appears to be some rush toward a judgment in the Senate of the United States. We all voted to create this committee, to look into political excesses and abuses and to recommend what we might do to correct those excesses and abuses. Now we find ourselves, perhaps based on the emotion of the moment, trying to pass legislation which permits the Mmebers of Congrss to dip into the Federal Treasury for the total cost or partial cost of their campaigns.

It is my belief that the American people have yet to fully understand the implications of "public financing." I suggest that this is just a foot in the door. I suggest that the last minute efforts yesterday by sponsors of total public financing to water it down, to reduce the size of public financing, really demonstrated their lack of commitment to public financing—or perhaps their awareness that the American people are beginning to understand the impact of public financing because of publicity it may have received during the past 2 or 3 weeks. It occurs to the junior Senator from Kansas that the American people are concerned about a great many things and the financial concerns of politicians are not high on their list. We addressed ourselves for about 7 days this year to whether or not we should have a pay raise. Now we are in the third week of addressing ourselves—and taking almost every minute of every day—to whether or not the Senator from Kansas and others should have their campaigns paid for out of the Public Treasury. I do not believe this is of any great interest to the American people. They want to purify the political process; but in doing that, I do not believe they ever expected the Federal Government to give every candidate for public office, for the House of Representatives or for the Senate, a blank check on the Federal Treasury.

Mr. President, an historian of America's legislative process might have foreseen a fairly sizable reaction to the spectacular political revelations of the past year or so. After all, the Sherman Act, the National Labor Relations Act, the Social Security Act, and a number of other important laws were sparked by major events or trends in our Nation's 200 years of development.

But I question whether anyone could have predicted the direction that has been taken by many in Congress and numerous other observers in reaction to the bizarre and disturbing scandals which have recently swept Washington.

WATERGATE COMMITTEE CREATED

As the Senate will remember, its first response—and I believe an appropriate one—to the initial revelations of Watergate was the passage of Senate Resolution 60 establishing the Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities. This committee was clearly and specifically charged "to conduct an investigation" and "to determine whether in its judgment any occurrences which may be revealed by the investigation and study indicate the necessity or desirability of the enactment of new congressional legislation to safeguard the electoral process."

As every Senator knows this committee has devoted hundreds, perhaps thousands, of hours and several million dollars to fulfilling its mandate, and as every Senator should know the leadership of the select committee has been mindful of this legislative aspect of its responsibilities from the outset.

The opening statements of Senators ERVIN and BAKER on the committee's first day of hearings on May 17, 1973, are explicit in this regard.

Senator ERVIN. Of necessity the committee's report will reflect the considered judgment of the committee on whatever new legislation is needed to help safeguard the electoral process . . .

Senator BAKER. This committee was created by the Senate to . . . find as many of the facts, the circumstances and the relationships as we could, to assemble those facts into a coherent and intelligible presentation and to make recommendations to the Congress for any changes in statute law or the basic charter document of the United States that may seem indicated.

When Senate Resolution 60 was considered, there were many strong and ringing statements in the Senate to the effect that a deliberate, thorough and unemotional investigation of Watergate was the appropriate and proper response for Congress to make in the face of the apparent abuses and illegalities which had been revealed to that point. The resolution was passed, the committee was created, and substantial sums have been provided for its work.

Of course, the date for submission of the committee's report has been extended beyond the original February 28, 1974, date. But the reason for this extension is the massive job of the committee, not procrastination or unreasonably delay on its part. And the Senator from Kansas has heard no suggestion that delay in submission of this report would in any way detract from the value of its legislative recommendations.

ACTION WITHOUT EXPERTS' RECOMMENDATIONS

So why should the Senate—after chartering a new committee and expending millions of the taxpayers' dollars to make its legislative recommendations as thorough and complete as possible—now pass a bill to deal with these matters before the select committee even has an opportunity to file its report? This is clearly illogical, it makes no sense as a matter of sound legislative procedure, and increases the danger that we will take mistaken or ineffective action.

If we are going to pass legislation without the benefit of our committees' recommendations, why bother having committees at all? Why not just save a lot of money and have the Senate sit as a committee of the whole and hold hearings and mark up bills and perform all the other jobs of our committee system?

URGE TO "DO SOMETHING"

Of course, the immediate American reaction to any spectacular development is to "do something." Whether that development is Sputnik, a missile gap, an energy crisis or whatever, the American people and especially Congress seem to consider immediate action, the necessary and essential response.

That such action is not always required is a secondary consideration. And this point was clearly illustrated by the fact that the energy crisis came and went without any help from Congress a month or two back.

But that is another whole story that we do not want to become tied down to today. I cite it, though, as evidence that pure "action" is not always necessary to solve a crisis.

Sometimes, however, events do point to clear requirements for consented efforts. The abuses engaged in by monopolies cried out for the responses of the Sherman Act. Violence, disruption, and death in disputes between labor and industry were unavoidable signals for enactment of the NRLA. There are countless examples of this uniquely American propensity and capability for responding to situations with sound, sensible, and highly beneficial legislation being placed on the statute books. And these political scandals may eventually prove to be such a case.

WHERE ARE WE GOING AFTER WATERGATE?

But a look at the current trend of events in the Senate today gives rise to a real concern as to whether we will see such a result in the wake of what has become known by the shorthand term "Watergate."

If this mass of unfortunate and deplorable happenings is held up against the "action" that is being generated in response to it, the American people must begin to wonder what is going on.

Of course, "Watergate" has come to mean many things to many people. But looking beyond the emotions, rhetoric, and other trappings that have been hung on it, it boils down to basic elements that can be described primarily in terms of the substantive criminal law. This is what the indictments, trials, and grand jury proceedings are all about. And as far as I can tell, the prosecutors have had no trouble in matching title 18's provisions to the conduct that has come under their scrutiny.

MILLIONS IN TAXES FOR BUMPER STICKERS

But what has been done? Without waiting for the recommendations of its own expert committee and in the face of criminal conduct which had no real relation to campaign finances, an apparent majority in the Senate is proposing to spend millions upon millions of the American people's tax dollars on campaign bumper stickers, buttons, television spots, newspaper ads, and billboards.

These expenditures of tax dollars would be made on behalf of candidates who seek 435 seats in Congress, 100 seats in the Senate and the offices of President and Vice President.

Multiply that by two or more parties in every race, primaries, runoffs and general elections, and you are talking about a lot of bumper stickers. And it mounts up to a sizable sum of those tax dollars that are so important to every citizen as April 15 approaches each year.

For example, in Kansas alone a Senate race with Democratic and Republican primaries could have a taxpayers' price-tag of more than $1 million. And adding the cost of five congressional races, you quickly reach a cost of more than $2 million for a non-Presidential election year.

PUBLIC FINANCING IS NOT REFORM

The pending legislation is the so-called Public Financing bill.

A better name might be the Politicians Subsidy Act. It has been the subject of long and heated debate both in and out of the Senate, on and off of the "Today" show. And the end is not yet in sight, since a motion to close debate failed on Thursday.

I supported enactment of the landmark 1971 Federal Election Campaign Act and the amendments to it which passed the Senate last year, so I feel that I speak as one who is committed to campaign reform. But I cannot give my support to a proposal merely because some would label it as "reform." And this is my position on public financing.

Basically, my objections fall into two general areas: Concerns as to public policy and the requirements of the Constitution.

In the area of public policy, I am forced to the conclusion that public financing is unnecessary, ineffective, and fundamentally dangerous.

UNNECESSARY STEPS

Public financing is unnecessary because, regardless of all the crocodile tears on Capitol Hill, there is money to support the political system—cleanly, honestly and sufficiently—without milking the Federal Treasury. The campaigns of BARRY GOLDWATER in 1968 and GEORGE MCGOVERN in 1972 are the best evidence available that small contributors can be tapped—even against hopeless odds—to support major campaigns.

As far as I know we still subscribe to the free enterprise system in this country. And a basic element of this system is the old saying that if you build a better mousetrap the world will beat a path to your door. I do not recall anything in the free enterprise ethic that mentions Government beating a path to your door with handouts merely if you want to build a better mousetrap. So why should there be any difference between mousetrap makers, shoe salesmen, lawyers—or politicians?

With a few notable exceptions, we have gotten along pretty well with this philosophy in America. Newcomers have entered their chosen fields and found success or failure on the strength or weakness of what they had to offer. I see no reason for changing now. So far, no one has made even a convincing case to me that giving away Federal tax dollars to help politicians buy bumper stickers will accomplish anything for the general good.

It might make it easier for lazy people to get into politics. After all, if you did not have to seek out financial support, it would make campaigning a lot less strenuous. And it would save a lot of political stomachs from fundraiser overdoses of cold roast chicken and creamed peas.

But politics does not need lazy people. It needs men and women who will go to the public, sell their ideas and programs and who will work to attract public support of all kinds for their campaigns. And politics needs commitment and participation by the people—with their time, with their efforts and with their finances given to the candidates who earn their support.

There is much that can be done to encourage more people to give to the candidates and parties of their choice. Tax deductions and credits for small contributions are particularly appropriate and a sensible means of accomplishing this most desirable goal.

INEFFECTIVE REMEDY

Public financing is also objectionable, because it is an ineffective remedy for the ills of Watergate. In fact every public financing feature that is before the Senate today could have been in force for 5 years, and still the Democrats' headquarters would have been bugged, Ellsburg's psychiatrist's office would have been burglarized, coverups would have been attempted, lies would have been told—and GERALD FORD would still be Vice President of the United States.

Public financing is simply not a solution for human stupidity, individual criminality, or personal greed. Perhaps some might have felt better about the Watergate mess if the hundred dollar bills that were floating around had come from the U.S. Treasury instead of a Mexican bank. But I do not see how it would have made much difference to the overall outcome of the affair or to the criminal charges in question.

Other proposals have been made with regard to specific criminal code changes, and I support many of them and believe they are responsive to some of the problems which do exist in politics.

DANGEROUS IMPLICATIONS

A third point of objection I have to the policy of public financing is the danger it poses to the political system.

Admittedly, there are inequities in the present state of affairs. Incumbents may have excessive advantages—both official and unofficial. Wealthy individuals and their families may be able to unfairly outspend an opponent in a campaign. Big business, labor and any number of special interest groups may be able to pump too much cash into the campaigns of their friends, and television, news magazines, and syndicated columnists may have too much influence over the information conveyed about candidates and their activities.

But is an artificial one-candidate, one-dollar formula of equality among candidates really an improvement over what we have today? I do not believe so.

When everybody gets the same amount of money, when everybody can only spend the same—what stresses will be put on the system as people jockey for new advantages?

Will it mean that the wealthy individual will quit his job 2 or 3 years ahead of the election, so an elaborate "non-political" publicity campaign can gain the exposure required for a successful race? If so, where does this leave an equally or better qualified man, say a young lawyer with a wife and family to support, who also might want to throw his hat in the ring? How could he hope to compete against such an opponent on an equal dollar basis after a headstart like that?

As financial equality was imposed would we see more newscasters, astronauts, football players, and TV stars suddenly cashing in on their fame to become politicians?

And what about incumbents under such a system? How are you possibly going to give some unknown first-time candidate equality with an incumbent Senator or Congressman—or an incumbent President. I suppose you could lock every Member of the Senate and House in his office from June to November every election year, but then what would prevent NBC from broadcasting the sounds they made trying to get out?

I do not mean to be facetious, but this whole concept of forced equality in the political arena is a source of grave concern to me.

FORCED POLITICAL ACTIVITY

Looking at the constitutional side, is public financing not a form of forced political activity which treads upon the first amendment's rights?

It is one thing to require a person to pay—through his taxes—for anything, the paraphernalia and frivolities of politics, which many men and women believe are wasteful and stupid.

But what of using a Catholic's tax dollars to support a candidate who calls for unlimited abortion? What of taking a black man's taxes to support an advocate of racial persecution? How many wheat farmers want their taxes spent to elect a proponent of export quotas? How many parents would like to see their tax dollars put a probusing candidate in the Senate?

I do not believe these questions can be ignored as public financing is viewed in a constitutional perspective.

Of course, the entire area of campaign reform treads on some very thin ice in regard to the Bill of Rights. Contribution limits, spending restrictions, even disclosure requirements, call in to play some basic principles of our Constitution which should be examined closely. But foremost among all of these concerns I would rank public financing, for how can the Government force a person to support the advocacy of views in the political arena which may be contrary to his economic and social interests or totally abhorrent to his most basic religious, ethical, or personal beliefs?

REFORM SHOULD BE PRESSED

Let me say, however, that, as I have indicated, there are areas of campaign reform that should be pressed.

Tax incentives for small contributors is one point. Stiffer criminal sanctions for voting fraud and so-called dirty tricks is another.

Overall, though, I believe the basic premises of the 1971 Campaign Act are still valid and should be maintained. Full and detailed financial disclosure is the cornerstone of this approach. And coupled with effective contribution limits—which you will recall we have not really had yet—and with incentives for shorter and less costly campaigns, I believe the American people can be provided with a much stronger and better political system. And this can be accomplished without adding millions of dollars to the tax-load of the American people of tampering with our basic rights as free citizens.

In this regard, I invite the Senate's attention to a recent Reader's Digest article by one of our most distinguished and respected former colleagues, Senator John Williams of Delaware. In a few brief pages Senator Williams, in the manner which characterized his great service to the Senate, sets forth the basic requirements for constructive and effective campaign reform.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of his article be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AFTER WATERGATE A PLAN TO CONTROL CAMPAIGN BANKROLLING

(By John J. Williams)

It will probably be a long time before we can fully assess the impact of Watergate and related scandals on American life. Indeed, at this point we cannot foresee what more may yet emerge from continuing investigations. But from the squalid evidence already visible, it is clear that political corruption in this country is not just a moral problem. It is one that imperils the very survival of our democracy.

There is, of course, no magic solution to the problem of corruption, and we should be wary of any political nostrum that purports to offer one. But the recent scandals do illuminate one area where reforms are both essential and possible. For the reprehensible, clandestine political acts connected with Watergate were financed and made possible by an excess of campaign donations, many of them secretly and illicitly obtained. Equally important, the flow of massive contributions into both parties has created the impression among millions of Americans that the government of the United States can be bought.

To restore public confidence in the integrity of government, we need to end the dependency of our candidates on special-interest contributions. This we can do to a significant extent by reducing the costs and changing the methods of campaign financing. I believe there are a number of reasonable steps that can be taken toward this goal.

1. Shorten the campaign. Political campaigns cost so much, in part, because they last so long. The custom of prolonged campaigning originated at a time when much of the country was sparsely populated and a candidate had to travel by train or even on horseback for many months to communicate with the electorate. This tradition has been made obsolete by the jet airplane, television and other mass media. Yet our campaigns still drag on needlessly, consuming vast amounts of money and providing endless repetition.

I recall that after President Eisenhower once spoke in my state of Delaware, I complimented him on his speech. "Well, Senator," he replied, "the first time I made that speech. I thought it was pretty good. The next ten times I made it, I thought it was okay. Now I've made it so many times I think it's terrible."

I doubt that there is a politician alive who has not felt that way or who could not tell the people all he knows and thinks in two or three months. Thus, I believe that Congress should fix a uniform, nationwide date for the primaries and nominating conventions affecting all federal offices. By commencing the primary campaigns in early August, and the general-election campaigns in early October, we would at once sharply lower the cost of politics. At the same time, we would improve the quality of political discourse and heighten public interest in it.

2. Grant free television time and mailing rights. Candidates in the seven Congressional districts in and around Detroit usually pay about $2000 for one minute of prime network television time. With costs in other metropolitan areas—New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, Philadelphia—even higher, it is not surprising that candidates for federal posts had to spend $32 million for TV and $28 million for radio in 1972.

In urging free time for legitimate candidates, it is important to recognize that television and radio stations exist and make handsome profits because they have been given public property—namely, transmission channels, of which there are a limited number. So it seems to me only fair that the stations partially repay the public at election time by providing bona-fide candidates with the means of free communication of their political views. At the same time, the present law, which requires stations to give equal time to anyone claiming to be a candidate, whether he has any serious credentials or not, should be repealed.

Congress should then promulgate criteria by which state-election officials can certify bona-fide candidates for national office. It should also stipulate how much time stations must allot to them. This free access to broadcast media would greatly diminish what is often the largest item in a campaign budget.

The dependency of candidates on outside contributions could be further lessened by allowing them to mail one or two political statements to all voters free of charge. Presently prevailing printing and mailing costs make such mailings prohibitive. A Senate candidate running in California would most likely need to spend at least $1.1 million to reach every registered voter in the state. In Ohio, the total would be more than $500,000; in New Jersey, $400,000; in Georgia, $250,000.

Incumbent Congressmen and Senators are already permitted to make mass mailings of "non-political" material that promotes their re-election efforts. By giving challengers limited mailing privileges, we would level the political scales now tipped in favor of those in office. In Great Britain, the practice of awarding candidates mailing privileges—and free television time—has proved both workable and effective.

3. Get Big Business and Big Labor out of political bankrolling. The law has long recognized, in theory at least, that it is wrong to allow corporations and unions to try to buy votes through political donations. As far back as 1907, Congress prohibited business contributions and unsecured loans by banks for political purposes, a ban that was reaffirmed by laws enacted in 1925 and 1971. Congress applied the same prohibition to unions in 1943 and 1947. But corporations and unions—as well as both major political parties—have flouted the intent of these prohibitions with virtual impunity.

As of last December, for example, at least eight executives had publicly admitted that their corporations made illegal contributions to the 1972 Nixon campaign. But Democrats as well as Republicans have shared in such political largess. Dairy lobbyists who gave $100,000 to the Republicans in 1969 also passed out hefty contributions to prominent Democrats in a position to influence Congressional legislation affecting dairy interests.

As for the unions, many, by a variety of measures, extract "voluntary contributions" from their members. These fixed "contributions," regularly deducted from each member's paycheck along with his dues, go into political funds controlled by union bosses. In the 1968 and 1972 elections, millions of rank-and-filers disagreed with the political candidates subsidized by their dollars. But they had no voice in the matter. Unions further aid favored candidates by financing "political education" and "voter registration" drives. Although nonpartisan in name, such campaigns are actually ultra-partisan because they are conducted only in those areas and among those voters known to favor the union leaders' candidates. Author Theodore H. White notes that in 1968 unions registered 4.6 million voters, distributed 115 million political leaflets, supplied 72,225 house-to-house canvassers, and on Election Day deployed 94,500 volunteers for political purposes.

To be sure, political activity—including genuinely voluntary contributions—should be encouraged among all citizens. But Congress should enact stringent new laws which effectively bar corporate and union contributions in any form.

4. Make small contributors the backbone of political financing. While reducing the costs of campaigns, we should endeavor to spread the legitimate costs that do remain among as many citizens as possible. Technically, present law makes it illegal for anyone to give a candidate more than $5000. However, a donor may contribute to unlimited numbers of local committees established solely to funnel money to a candidate. Thus, big contributors continue to supply a disproportionate share of campaign funds.

Recognizing that candidates should not become beholden to a comparatively few large donors, Congress is currently considering a proposal to have the federal government finance campaigns for national office. Worthy as the aims of this proposal are, I think such a plan is both undesirable and impractical. For one thing, federal financing would make political parties unresponsive to the people. Guaranteed millions of dollars from the public treasury, a party could pursue extremist or outworn aims year after year simply because it would not have to go to the people for financial support. In areas that are predominantly Democratic or Republican, candidates of the less-favored party would receive tax funds vastly disproportionate to their popular support.

The federal-financing proposal also seeks to impose a ceiling on overall campaign expenditures by limiting the amount a candidate may spend and by restricting individual donations to $100. In reality, this subsidy scheme could easily lead to even costlier campaigns, with the federal treasury simply adding on another layer of money. While candidates themselves could not exceed specified limits, nothing would prevent so-called "public interest" organizations from using their own money to promote politicians of their choice. Nor could a wealthy office-seeker be kept from promoting himself before he officially became a candidate.

As an alternative to straight federal financing, I think we should adopt an idea first advocated by President Kennedy. Its objective is to stimulate myriad small contributions, which would leave candidates unobligated to a few big donors. Such stimulus could be provided by allowing taxpayers a 50-percent tax credit on donations up to, say, $300. Thus, if a man earning $10,000 and a man earning $100,000 a year each contributed $300, the two of them would be treated equally—each would receive a tax rebate of $150.

Simultaneously, to discourage large contributions, Congress should bar a candidate from receiving money through more than one committee and prohibit anyone from giving a candidate more than $3000—with stiff tax penalties and jail terms for those caught cheating. Candidacies founded upon the spontaneous, truly voluntary support of many small contributors would be the most likely to produce the best political representation for all the people.

5. Enforce the campaign-funding laws. If properly enforced, existing statutes are, by and large, adequate to deal with the individual instances of dishonesty that will always be with us. Thus, no new laws were necessary during the past two years to successfully prosecute former Vice President Spiro T. Agnew; Sen. Daniel Brewster of Maryland; Representatives Cornelius Gallagher of New Jersey and John Dowdy of Texas; and former Illinois Governor Otto Kerner. However, too often existing laws have not been enforced.

To provide for enforcement of the reforms that inevitably will be enacted, Congress should establish a federal-election commission composed equally of Democrats and Republicans. The assurance that future scandals will not be covered up, no matter who is involved, will of itself help revive public confidence.

Watergate has damaged the country, and it would be foolish to pretend otherwise. And beyond Watergate we see flaws, inadequacies and multiplying problems in many sectors of our society. But, for all its defects, our democracy is still worth preserving and improving. Thus, it is vital that the Congress begin now to cleanse our politics and thereby to revitalize our faith in the democratic process. If the men presently in Congress do not act convincingly and effectively in the coming months, then at the polls next November all of us can exercise the old-fashioned American recourse of replacing them with men who will.

DOLE SUBSTITUTE PROPOSAL

Mr. DOLE. The substitute campaign reform measure which I have authored and which has been cosponsored by the Senator from Colorado (Mr. DOMINICK) embodies my views on the proper direction for the work started in 1971 to be continued. And in most respects it accords with Senator Williams' recommendations.

It would in part:

Allow broadcast of debates between major party candidates for all Federal offices;

Place a $3,000 annual limit on all individual and organization contributions;

Restrict the amounts a wealthy candidate or his family could spend on a campaign;

Forbid cash contributions above $50;

Establish a Federal election commission to supervise all congressional and Presidential campaigns;

Require full disclosure of every candidate's, officeholder's and high Federal official's finances;

Expand tax credits and deductions for small contributions;

Shorten the campaigns for Congress and the Presidency;

Limit the use of the congressional franking privilege; and Establish strict penalties for voting fraud and campaign "dirty tricks."

This gives a broad outline of the features of amendment No. 1127; but for a more detailed picture, I ask unanimous consent that its table of contents be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the table of contents was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I believe my amendment embodies a responsible and constructive approach to the job of campaign reform. Personally, I would prefer that the Senate consider the Watergate Committee's report before acting in this area at all. However, if we must have action at this time, I feel we should build upon the basis of full disclosure and campaign costs limitations that was established in the 1971 act.

My amendment is consistent with that act. It responds to the abuses and problems which were disclosed in the 1972 campaign and it avoids the pitfalls, uncertainties and dangers of such a radical experiment as tax-supported political campaigns.

I am not putting it forward as a complete answer or the only possible answer to the problems we are facing. The comments, criticisms, and suggestions for improvement from any Senator would be welcome. There may be oversights in its provisions and other Senators may feel it goes too far in some areas. But I believe my proposal would provide a basis for discussion and hopefully for agreement on the proper approach to be taken. It is offered in that spirit, and I would urge its favorable consideration by my colleagues.

Mr. President, my proposal, the substitute, contains the repeal of the existing tax return checkoff with respect to presidential campaigns. However, during the debate and discussion, it occurred to the Senator from Kansas that there is widespread acceptance for this idea of providing voluntary, national support for a truly national office. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment No. 1127 be modified by striking section 602, or 502 as it was erroneously printed, on page 60, and renumbering the present section 603 as 602.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. This does retain the voluntary checkoff system, and I believe it is appropriate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator send the modification to the desk?

Mr. DOLE. Yes.

The modification is as follows:

Strike section 602 on page 60 and renumber the present section 603 as "602."

Mr. DOLE. This substitute eliminates public financing and is campaign reform. We have a clear choice, when the vote comes on this substitute, as to which way we wish to proceed.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

I ask unanimous consent that the name of the distinguished Senator from Colorado (Mr. DOMINICK) be added as a cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOLE. The Senator from New Hampshire is allotted 5 minutes.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas to add my name as a cosponsor of the amendment.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the name of the Senator from New Hampshire be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, I will try to crowd into 5 minutes a few comments on this bill. I felt it appropriate to do so when the substitute measure of the Senator from Kansas was before the Senate.

During the time I served in the State legislature of my State, we worked long and hard to devise a corrupt practices act that would be as effective and as airtight as we could bring about in the matter of keeping campaigns clean and above board and in protecting the rights of those who are not heavily endowed with this world's goods to have an opportunity to run for office. During those years, I learned some practical lessons I have never forgotten.

There is no question whatever that we want to do anything that is practical and reasonable and effective and in our power to satisfy the people of this country and to keep our elective process as clean as possible. But the matter of public financing of political campaigns, in the opinion of this Senator, who has completed 50 years of service—in the State legislature and various State offices, including 28 years of service in Congress—is a very impractical and ineffective approach; and it is a wasteful and dangerous approach. Despite the very obvious sincerity of others—and I respect the opinions of every Senator on this matter—I am steadfastly against it.

I commend the Rules Committee, under the leadership of the distinguished Senator from Nevada and the distinguished Senator from Kentucky and others, for a job well done, considering what they had to work with and what many Members of the Senate seem to be demanding. They have come up with as reasonable a bill as possible. However, in the last analysis, the only way to effectively purify and keep elections clean is exposure. It cannot be done effectively any other way, in the opinion of this Senator.

We are hearing on every side—and we are justly hearing on every side—about opening up so that the people may know. Everybody wants to televise the proceedings on the floor of the Senate and in the various committees, and they want the people to know.

The way to achieve pure elections is to have the people know. That is provided in this substitute and I shall support the substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 5 minutes have expired.

Mr. COTTON. The 5 minutes I had went by quickly. May I have a little more time?

Mr. DOLE. I have a minute and a half. The Senator may have 1 minute of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rules, once cloture has been voted a Senator cannot yield his time to some other Senator.

Mr. COTTON. I have an hour of my own. I ask that it be taken out of that time. I do not want to crowd anyone else in the debate.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to use 5 minutes out of my hour, beyond the time that was ordered by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I would permit that 5 minutes to be charged against my time on this particular amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The ruling of the Chair is, if there is no objection to the use of 5 minutes of the Senator's own hour on this amendment, that will be ordered. However, it cannot be charged against any other Senator's time, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CANNON. What I am trying to do is this. We have a time limitation. I have so much time under the time limitation and the Senator from Kansas has the other half of the time. I do not care if the time is charged to me or not, but I do have control of one-half of the time in opposition to the amendment and I desire to let the Senator have 5 minutes out of that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would advise the Senator that the parliamentary situation is that although the Senator from Nevada has charge of 12.5 minutes on this amendment, that comes out of the Senator's 1 hour under the cloture rule. Five minutes of that 12.5 minutes could be transferred by unanimous consent to the Senator from New Hampshire and that additional 5 minutes would then be charged to the Senator from New Hampshire's 1 hour under cloture.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, is it not proper for me to ask unanimous consent for 5 minutes or even 10 minutes from my own hour, and that it not be charged to the time allotted to this measure?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, it can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. COTTON. Then I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COTTON. Not more than 10 minutes to be taken out of my hour and not charged to either the Senator from Nevada or the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would ask: Does that mean an additional 10 minutes beyond the 5 minutes?

Mr. COTTON. Yes, 10 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, this is all I intend to say on this bill and I would like to have this time.

Now, as I was saying when we got into this time situation, the only effective way to control elections is exposure. It is useless to put limits on contributions and limits on expenditures. Those limits are not needed if periodically during the campaign, not after the campaign is over, after someone has been nominated or elected, but periodically during the campaign, twice a month or once a month over the preceding period, and certainly 10 days before the primary or election, there shall be reported by the candidates every expenditure made by him on his behalf, every cent that has been contributed and its source, every cent that has been promised and the source, every cent that has been spent and how it was spent, and every promise or contract made to expend money in the future. This would make public what we all know—that is, for instance, that if someone has a million dollars and I have only $50,000, and we sit down at the poker table, it does not make any difference what stakes we play for, he has the advantage because he can spare whatever he needs to use.

There is no way on earth campaign expenditures really can be limited because expenditures are simply driven under ground. But if we could have the kind of law that provides for rigid, complete disclosure, periodically during the campaign of every candidate, then contributions could not be passed around among various people, divided up, or driven under ground.

I would set a penalty for falsifying in any way the receipts and expenditures of the candidate, and provided for an immediate appeal to the court of highest jurisdiction in the State. If he were found guilty, his name would be removed from the ballot and he would be held to be ineligible to hold public office for 5 years. That would put teeth in it. From the experience of this Senator, in all the years he has been here, that is the way to do it.

This matter of digging into the public Treasury and taking the taxpayers' money to finance campaigns makes me very sad. For many years I have served, as Senators know, as the ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Health, Education, and Welfare of the Committee on Appropriations in the Senate. When I think of the needs we have, when I think of the taxpayers' money we could use in our campaign against cancer, when I think of the people who are dying in remote areas of this country because they cannot get a kidney dialysis, when I think of the need, whether it is called the Kennedy bill, the administration bill, or something in between for taxpayers' dollars to bring down the cost of hospitalization and health in this country, and when I think of the needs in education, it just grates on my nerves to be talking about digging into taxpayers' money to finance political campaigns, because if we have strong laws that permit people to finance their own campaigns, maintaining the bar against labor unions contributing and various other safeguards, there is no need to use one single precious taxpayers' dollar in politics when there are so many crying human needs we must satisfy.

We will soon be working on the situation of people facing the tremendous cost of catastrophic illness, of people who desperately need medical care, and every dollar we take is taken from places where dollars are desperately needed. We can place limits from now to kingdom come, we can say that there shall not be a multiplicity of committees, and we can put all these restrictions in, but there is always a way around every one of them. It just drives campaigns underground. The keynote today is exposure—let the public know. If they know—not after the elections, but periodically—then they can know what is going on and they can take precautions to prevent certain happenings.

Those are the reasons why I shall support the substitute, even though I would like to go further than it goes. Those are the reasons why I shall be compelled to vote against the bill, although I am as anxious as any Senator to restore the confidence of the American public in our elective process and in our public servants.

I should mention, Mr. President, that in discussing my own feelings about this bill, one Senator here objected on the ground that periodic accountings all through the campaign by a candidate for the Senate or the House of Representatives would force the candidate to have a full-time or almost full-time accountant to handle the work. My answer is that the events of recent years have been such that any man running as a candidate on a statewide basis or from any congressional district, with the population we now have, should have the constant assistance of an expert in accounting, and I would not want to run for office myself without such an accountant.

Another reason in favor of frequent accountings rather than limits on expenditures is that the accountings are the fairest and most effective method, since in some States television is an important and effective way of campaigning while in other States it is entirely impractical—sometimes because no station reaches the entire State—and consequently direct mailings or some other methods have to be resorted to by the candidate.

All measures that have been advocated over the last few years have tended to present various new difficulties for some candidates in certain sections. But any way you slice it, artificial limitations encourage evasion of the law, while rigid requirements of disclosure to the people under penalty of being declared ineligible for office would, although not perfect, in my opinion be the best way, and I think the only way, to accomplish our purpose.

Mr. President, I hope the substitute will be adopted, although I again commend the Rules Committee and the leadership of the Senator from Nevada for a constructive job well done; but I cannot vote for the bill and I cannot vote to waste taxpayers' money in politics when it cannot be done effectively. That, in a nutshell, is what I wanted to say on the whole bill. I thank both Senators for their cooperation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada has 12½ minutes on this amendment; the Senator from Kansas has 1½ minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back my time.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, as modified. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Maine (Mr. HATHAWAY), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), and the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. STENNIS) are necessarily absent.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I annonuce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN), and the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 55, as follows:

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM—UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of inquiring of our distinguished majority leader as to what is the pending business, and what he expects will be the business for the remainder of today and the remainder of the session before the recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ABOUREZK). Will the majority leader refrain from responding until order is restored? The Senate will come to order. Senators are entitled to hear the majority leader announce the program for the remainder of the week. Senators having conversations will please remove themselves from the Chamber.

The majority leader may proceed.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, in response to the question raised, first, I would appreciate it if there would be a show of hands of those Senators who still intend to offer amendments to the campaign practices proposal. (Counting) 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7—it looks like 10 or 12. Not more than 15, anyway, and maybe not that many.

Mr. President, if the Senate will agree that it be in order at this time, I ask unanimous consent that there be a time limitation of 30 minutes on all amendments to be offered from now on, the time to be equally divided between the sponsor of the amendment and the manager of the bill.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. And amendments thereto.

Mr. MANSFIELD. And amendments thereto.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I have no objection, except as to the——

Mr. MANSFIELD. This would be all amendments excepting that of the Senator from New York (Mr. BUCKLEY), who may or may not agree, but if he does not agree, he still has the hour which is allocated to each Senator.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. As long as he is protected, that is fine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, reserving the right to object——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. First, the Chair would advise the majority leader as to the parliamentary situation with regard to the 1-hour time limit. There is a time limit of 1 hour for each Senator under cloture. That also includes any time on amendments. If there is a separate time limit placed on an amendment, and it is used, the time any Senator speaks on that amendment, irrespective of what the time limit on the amendment is, is taken from his hour of total debate, and time is not transferrable.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is the intention of the joint leadership, that it be taken out of the 1 hour allotted to each Senator. If any Senator wishes to object, I will be glad to withdraw the request.

Mr. TAFT. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. MANSFIELD. If the Senator will withhold that, may I say the purpose is——

Mr. PASTORE. May we have order, please, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, the point is well taken. The Senate will come to order. Senators are entitled to hear this colloquy. Senators and staff members conversing will remove themselves from the Chamber.

The Senator from Montana may proceed.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The purpose in making this request at this time is that now we will proceed to the tornado disaster relief bill. There will be a number of amendments applied to that measure, and we will stay with it until it is concluded, even though there happens to be a time limitation. Then we will go back on the pending business.

Under the recess resolution, the Senate goes out at the conclusion of business Friday. I am not offering a carrot or a stick, but if it would be possible to get the Senate out on Thursday, I would appreciate it just as much as any other Member.

With that explanation, the Senator from Ohio may reserve his right to object.

Mr. TAFT. I thank the majority leader for his explanation. Do I understand correctly that, should this unanimous consent request be agreed to, each Senator would be limited to 15 minutes in discussing any amendment?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is correct, but he would have the rest of his time under the cloture rule to discuss the amendment, and the amendment would not be voted upon until he has completed his time under the cloture rule. He may apply it to just the amendment.

Mr. TAFT. Well, when would the vote on the amendment occur? If the amendment is called up, and the Senator talks for 15 minutes, and then desires to take his additional 45 minutes, would he be able to take his additional 45 minutes before the vote occurs?

Mr. MANSFIELD. No, because in accordance with the agreement the time on the amendment would be limited.

Mr. TAFT. That is my understanding. I have an amendment pending on which I would like to have an hour reserved.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I would be willing to make an exception on the same basis as in the case of the Senator from New York, who is unavoidably absent.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, I think that could be taken care of by the Senator discussing generally what he intends to do for the 45 minutes, and then going into the half-hour on the amendment. He does not need to call it up, in other words, until the end of the 45 minutes.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator from Ohio does not believe that would be appropriate with regard to the procedures that might arise.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Then I would be willing to make an exception on behalf of the Senator from Ohio as well as the Senator from New York (Mr. BUCKLEY).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, the Senator from Montana is not saying that an exception is made to the 1 hour under the cloture rule?

Mr. MANSFIELD. No.

Mr. BROCK. If the Senator from Ohio wants to spend his entire 1 hour on one amendment, that would be his privilege, but that would be all.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is right. In his case that is true, yes.

Mr. BROCK. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered, that there be a 30 minutes time limitation on each amendment except for the amendments of the Senator from New York and the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PASTORE. I would assume that the votes on these amendments would occur with some rapidity. I wonder if we could have a unanimous-consent agreement to confine the voting period to 10 minutes on each of these amendments. I think sometimes we just sit here for 5 minutes waiting for the 15-minute time to run out for the call of the roll.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, if the Senator will defer that request until we can get the Senator from Oregon (Mr. PACKWOOD) to the floor, who has asked that he be present when such a request is made, I would have no objection.

I would like, if the majority leader will yield, to clarify something else. Am I correct that the time taken for the votes on amendments is not taken from the time of any Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. And upon any Senator noting the absence of a quorum, the time for the quorum call would come from the time of the Senator who makes the point of order, is that correct?

Mr. MANSFIELD. No, a quorum call under this circumstance, or a vote, would not be charged to any Senator.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Then it is understood that the quorum calls in no event are charged to any Senator; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no unanimous consent request pending at this time.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. STEVENSON. Does the order limit the time on a motion to recommit?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, the request was as to amendments only, and not as to motions to recommit.

Mr. MANSFIELD. But if there is a motion to recommit, I would ask that there be a time limitation on the same basis.

Mr. STEVENSON. I would have to object to that limitation, and would hope an exception would be made if such a motion is made.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I said I would agree to a time limitation on a motion to recommit, and I ask unanimous consent that that be done, a time limitation of one-half hour, with the time to be equally divided between the mover and the sponsor of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SENATE RESOLUTION 308—RESOLUTION TO PERMIT SENATOR BELLMON TO APPEAR AS A WITNESS IN U.S. DISTRICT COURT IN OKLAHOMA

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, I sent to the desk a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration, notwithstanding the previous order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the resolution.

The assistant legislative clerk read the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 308) was considered and agreed to.

With its preamble, the resolution reads as follows:

Whereas, Honorable Henry L. Bellmon, a member of this body, has been served with a Subpoena to appear as a witness before the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Oklahoma, to testify at 9:30 o'clock a.m. on the Sixteenth day of April, 1974, in the Case of United States v. Leo Winters, et al; and

Whereas, under the Standing Rules of the Senate, no Senator may absent himself from the service of the Senate without leave of the Senate: Therefore be it

Resolved, that Honorable Henry L. Bellmon is granted leave to appear as a witness before the District Court of the United States in the Case of the United States v. Leo Winters, et al at a time when the Senate is not sitting in Session; and be it further

Resolved, that a copy of this Resolution be submitted to the said Court.

CORRECTION OF A VOTE

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, on April 9, 1974, I was present and voted "Yea" on an amendment offered by Senator KENNEDY to an amendment of Senator STEVENSON. It is vote No. 129. The RECORD indicates that I was necessarily absent.

I therefore ask unanimous consent that the RECORD be corrected to reflect my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, informed the Senate that, pursuant to the provisions of section 804 (b), Public Law 90-351, as amended, the Speaker had appointed Mr. KASTENMEIER, Mr. EDWARDS of California, Mr. RAILSBACK, and Mr. STEIGER of Arizona as members of the National Commission for the Review of Federal and States Laws Relating to Wiretapping and Electronic Surveillance, on the part of the House.

The message announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 421. An act to amend the Tariff Schedules of the United States to permit the importation of upholstery regulators, upholsterer's regulating needles, and upholsterer's pins free of duty; and

H.R. 14012. An act making appropriations for the Legislative Branch for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred, as indicated:

H.R. 421. An act to amend the Tariff Schedules of the United States to permit the importation of upholstery regulators, upholsterer's regulating needles, and upholsterer's pins free of duty. Referred to the Committee on Finance.

H.R. 14012. An act making appropriations for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, and for other purposes. Referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills:

S. 1866. An act to provide increases in certain annuities payable under chapter 83 of title 5, United States Code, and for other purposes; and

H.R. 13542. An act to abolish the position of Commissioner of Fish and Wildlife, and for other purposes.

The enrolled bills were subsequently signed by the Acting President pro tempore (Mr. ALLEN).

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session for not to exceed 2 minutes, to consider a nomination now at the desk, and which was reported earlier today.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BIDEN). The nomination will be stated.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

The second assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of John M. Maury, of Virginia, to be an Assistant Secretary of Defense.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I might say that the action of the Senate is now taking has been cleared with the majority and minority leaders, the chairman of the Armed Services Committee, and the ranking minority member of the Armed Services Committee. It was reported unanimously this morning by the Armed Services Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is considered and confirmed.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of this nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate resume consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

DISASTER RELIEF ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ABOUREZK). Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 751, S. 3062, which the clerk will state.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

S. 3062, a bill entitled the "Disaster Relief Act Amendments of 1974"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate on the pending bill is limited to 2 hours to be equally divided and controlled between the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. BURDICK) and the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI), with 30 minutes on any amendment in the first and second degree, and 10 minutes on any debatable motion or appeal.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent during consideration of and voting on S. 3062 the following staff members of the Committee on Public Works be granted privilege of access to the Senate floor:

Clark Norton, John Yago, Philip T. Cummings, M. Barry Meyer, Bailey Guard, Judy Parente, Steve Swain, Paul Ebeltoft of my staff, Grady Smith of Senator DOMENICI's staff, and George Shanks of the staff of Senator HARRY F. BYRD, JR.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, the Disaster Relief Act Amendments of 1974 come before the Senate in the tragic shadow cast by the tornadoes that afflicted five states in mid-United States last week. The destruction and hardship that followed in the wake of these storms has aroused the sympathy of the Nation and I know that the hearts of each one of us go out to the people who have been so sorely tried. Indeed, the realization that the bill before us is of profound significance not simply in legal terms, but in human terms, must weigh

(c)(1) Subtitle C of title I of the State and Local Fiscal Assistance Act of 1972 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 145. ENTITLEMENT FACTORS AFFECTED BY MAJOR DISASTERS.

"In the administration of this title the Secretary shall disregard any change in data used in determining the entitlement of a State government or a unit of local government for a period of 60 months if that change—

"(1) results from a major disaster determined by the President under section 301 of the Disaster Relief Act Amendments of 1974, and

"(2) reduces the amount of the entitlement of that State government or unit of local government.".

(2) The amendment made by this section takes effect on April 1, 1974.

EMERGENCY COMMUNICATIONS

SEC. 415. The President is authorized during, or in anticipation of, an emergency or major disaster to establish temporary communications systems and to make such communications available to State and local government officials and other persons as he deems appropriate.

EMERGENCY PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION

SEC. 416. The President is authorized to provide temporary public transportation service in a major disaster area to meet emergency needs and to provide transportation to governmental offices, supply centers, stores, post offices, schools, major employment centers, and such other places as may be necessary in order to enable the community to resume its normal pattern of life as soon as possible.

FIRE SUPPRESSION GRANTS

SEC. 417. The President is authorized to provide assistance, including grants, equipment, supplies, and personnel, to any State for the suppression of any fire on publicly or privately owned forest or grassland which threatens such destruction as would constitute a major disaster.

TIMBER SALE CONTRACTS

SEC. 418. (a) Where an existing timber sale contract between the Secretary of Agriculture or the Secretary of the Interior and a timber purchaser does not provide relief from major physical change not due to negligence of the purchaser prior to approval of construction of any section of specified road or of any other specified development facility and, as a result of a major disaster, a major physical change results in additional construction work in connection with such road or facility by such purchaser with an estimated cost, as determined by the appropriate Secretary, (1) of more than $1,000 for sales under one million board feet, (2) of more than $1 per thousand board feet for sales of one to three million board feet, or (3) of more than $3,000 for sales over three million board feet, such increased construction cost shall be borne by the United States.

(b) If the appropriate Secretary determines that damages are so great that restoration, reconstruction, or construction is not practical under the cost-sharing arrangement authorized by subsection (a) of this section, he may allow cancellation of a contract entered into by his Department notwithstanding contrary provisions therein.

(c) The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to reduce to seven days the minimum period of advance public notice required by the first section of the Act of June 4, 1897 (16 U.S.C. 476), in connection with the sale of timber from national forests, whenever the Secretary determines that (1) the sale of such timber will assist in the construction of any area of a State damaged by a major disaster, (2) the sale of such timber will assist in sustaining the economy of such area, or (3) the sale of such timber is necessary to salvage the value of timber damaged in such major disaster or to protect undamaged timber.

(d) The President, when he determines it to be in the public interest, is authorized to make grants to any State or local government for the purpose of removing from privately owned lands timber damaged as a result of a major disaster, and such State or local government is authorized upon application, to make payments out of such grants to any person for reimbursement of expenses actually incurred by such person in the removal of damaged timber, not to exceed the amount that such expenses exceed the salvage value of such timber.

TITLE V—ECONOMIC RECOVERY FOR DISASTER AREAS

SEC. 501. The Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new title:

"TITLE VIII—ECONOMIC RECOVERY FOR DISASTER AREAS

"PURPOSES OF TITLE

"SEC. 801. It is the purpose of this title to provide assistance for the economic recovery, after the period of emergency aid and replacement of essential facilities and services, of any major disaster area which has suffered a dislocation of its economy of sufficient severity to require (a) assistance in planning for development to replace that lost in the disaster; (b) continued coordination of assistance available under Federal-aid programs; and (c) continued assistance toward the restoration of the employment base.

"DISASTER RECOVERY PLANNING

"SEC. 802. (a)(1) In the case of any major disaster area which the Governor has determined requires assistance under this title and for which he has requested such assistance, the Governor, within thirty days after authorization of such assistance by the President, shall designate a Recovery Planning Council for such area or for each part thereof.

"(2) Such Council shall be composed of not less than five members, a majority of whom shall be local elected officials of political subdivisions within the affected areas, at least one representative of the State, and a representative of the Federal Government. During the period for which the major disaster is declared, the Federal coordinating officer shall also serve on the Council.

"(3) The Federal representative on such Council may be the Chairman of the Federal Regional Council for the affected area, or a member of the Federal Regional Council designated by the Chairman. The Federal representative on such Council may be the Federal Cochairman of the Regional Commission established pursuant to title V of the Public Works and Economic Development Act, or the Appalachian Regional Development Act, or his designee, where all of the affected area is within the boundaries of such Commission.

"(4) The Governor may designate an existing multijurisdictional organization as the Recovery Planning Council where such organization complies with paragraph (2) of this subsection with the addition of State and Federal representatives. Where possible, the organization designated as the Recovery Planning Council shall be or shall be subsequently designated as the clearinghouse required by the Office of Management and Budget circular A-95.

"(5) The Recovery Planning Council shall include private citizens as members to the extent feasible, and shall provide for and encourage public participation in its deliberations and decisions.

"(b) The Recovery Planning Council (1) shall review existing development, land use and other plans for the affected area; (2) may make such revisions as it determines necessary for the economic recovery of the area, including the development of new plans and the preparation of a recovery investment plan for the five-year period following the declaration of the disaster; and (3) may make recommendations for such revisions and the implementation of such plans to the Governor and responsible local governments. The Council shall accept as one element of the recovery investment plan determinations made under section 402(f) of the Disaster Relief Act Amendments of 1974.

"(c)(1) A recovery investment plan prepared by a Recovery Planning Council may recommend the revision, deletion, reprograming, or additional approval of Federal-aid projects and programs within the area—

"(A) for which application has been made but approval not yet granted;

"(B) for which funds have been obligated or approval granted but construction not yet begun;

"(C) for which funds have been or are scheduled to be apportioned within the five years after the declaration of the disaster;

"(D) which may otherwise be available to the area under any State schedule or revised State schedule of priorities; or

"(E) which may reasonably be anticipated as becoming available under existing programs.

"(2) Upon the recommendation of the Recovery Planning Council and the request of the Governor, any funds for projects or programs identified pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection may be placed in reserve by the responsible Federal agency for use in accordance with such recommendations. Upon the request of the Governor and with the concurrence of affected local governments, such funds may be transferred to the Recovery Planning Council to be expended in the implementation of the recovery investment plan.

"PUBLIC WORKS AND DEVELOPMENT FACILITIES GRANTS AND LOANS

"SEC. 803. (a) The President is authorized to provide funds to any Recovery Planning Council for the implementation of a recovery investment plan by public bodies. Such funds may be used—

"(1) to make loans for the acquisition or development of land and improvements for public works, public service, or development facility usage, including the acquisition or development of parks or open spaces, and the acquisition, construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of such facilities, including related machinery and equipment, and

"(2) to make supplementary grants to increase the Federal share for projects for which funds are reserved pursuant to subsection (c) of section 802 of this Act, or other Federal-aid projects in the affected area.

"(b) Grants and loans under this section may be made to any State, local government, or private or public non-profit organization representing any major disaster area or part thereof.

"(c) No supplementary grant shall increase the Federal share of the cost of any project to greater than 90 per centum, except in the case of a grant for the benefit of Indians or Alaska Natives, or in the case of any State or local government which the President determines has exhausted its effective taxing and borrowing capacity.

"(d) Loans under this section shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury taking into consideration the current average market yield on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States with remaining periods to maturity comparable to the average maturities of such loans, adjusted to the nearest one-eighth of 1 per centum, less 1 per centum per annum.

"(e) Financial assistance under this title shall not be extended to assist establishments relocating from one area to another or to assist subcontractors whose purpose is to divest, or whose economic success is dependent upon divesting, other contractors or subcontractors of contracts therefore customarily performed by them: Provided, however, That such limitations shall not be construed to prohibit assistance for the expansion of an existing business entity through the establishment of a new branch, affiliate, or subsidiary of such entity if the Secretary of Commerce finds that the establishment of such branch, affiliate, or subsidiary will not result in an increase in unemployment of the area of original location or in any other area where such entity conducts business operations, unless the Secretary has reason to believe that such branch, affiliate, or subsidiary is being established with the intention of closing down the operations of the existing business entity in the area of its original location or in any other area where it conducts such operations.

"LOAN GUARANTEES

"SEC. 804. The President is authorized to provide funds to Recovery Planning Councils to guarantee loans made to private borrowers by private lending institutions (1) to aid in financing any project within a major disaster area for the purchase or development of land and facilities (including machinery and equipment) for industrial or commercial usage including the construction of new buildings, and rehabilitation of abandoned or unoccupied buildings, and the alteration, conversion, or enlargement of existing buildings; and (2) for working capital in connection with projects in major disaster areas assisted under paragraph (1) hereof, upon application of such institution and upon such terms and conditions as the President may prescribe: Provided, however, That no such guarantee shall at any time exceed 90 per centum of the amount of the outstanding unpaid balance of such loan.

"TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

"SEC. 805. (a) In carrying out the purposes of this title the President is authorized to provide technical assistance which would be useful in facilitating economic recovery in major disaster areas. Such assistance shall include project planning and feasibility studies, management and operational assistance, and studies evaluating the needs of, and developing potentialities for, economic recovery of such areas. Such assistance may be provided by the President through members of the staff, through the payment of funds authorized for this title to other departments or agencies of the Federal Government, through the employment of private individuals, partnerships, firms, corporations, or suitable institutions, under contracts entered into for such purposes, or through grants-in-aid to appropriate public or private nonprofit State, area, district, or local organizations.

"(b) The President is authorized to make grants to defray not to exceed 75 per centum of the administrative expenses of Recovery Planning Councils established pursuant to section 802 of this Act. In determining the amount of the non-Federal share of such costs or expenses, the President shall give due consideration to all contributions both in cash and in kind, fairly evaluated, including but not limited to space, equipment, and services. Where practicable, grants-in-aid authorized under this subsection shall be used in conjunction with other available planning grants, authorized under the Housing Act of 1954, as amended, and highway planning and research grants authorized under the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1962, to assure adequate and effective planning and economical use of funds.

"DISASTER RECOVERY REVOLVING FUND

"SEC. 806. Funds obtained by the President to carry out this title and collections and repayments received under this title shall be deposited in a disaster recovery revolving fund (hereunder referred to as the 'fund'), which is hereby established in the Treasury of the United States, and which shall be available to the President for the purpose of extending financial assistance under this title, and for the payment of all obligations and expenditures arising in connection herewith. There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this title not to exceed with. There are authorized to be appropri- $200,000,000 to establish such revolving fund and such sums as may be necessary to replenish it on an annual basis. The fund shall pay into miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury, following the close of each fiscal year, interest on the amount of loans outstanding under this title computed in such manner and at such rate as may be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average market yield on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States with remaining periods to maturity comparable to the average maturities of such loans, adjusted to the nearest one-eighth of 1 per centum, during the month of June preceding the fiscal year in which the loans were made."

TITLE VI—MISCELLANEOUS

AUTHORITY TO PRESCRIBE RULES

SEC. 601. The President may prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper to carry out any of the provisions of this Act, and he may exercise any power or authority conferred on him by any section of this Act either directly or through such Federal agency or agencies as he may designate.

TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS

REPEAL OF EXISTING LAW

SEC. 603. The Disaster Relief Act of 1970, as amended (84 Stat. 1744), is hereby repealed, except sections 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 301, 302, 303, and 304. Notwithstanding such repeal the provisions of the Disaster Relief Act of 1970 shall continue in effect with respect to any major disaster declared prior to the enactment of this Act.

PRIOR ALLOCATION OF FUNDS

SEC. 604. Funds heretofore appropriated and available under Public Laws 91-606, as amended, and 92-385 shall continue to be available for the purpose of completing commitments made under those Acts as well as for the purposes of this Act. Commitments for disaster assistance and relief made prior to the enactment of this Act shall be fulfilled.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 605. This Act shall take effect as of April 1, 1974.

AUTHORIZATION

SEC. 606. Such funds as may be necessary are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the President to carry out the purposes of this Act.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Alabama (Mr. SPARKMAN) may be made a cosponsor of S. 3062.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK) is recognized to call up an amendment.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for 1 minute?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

MEDIA POLLS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I have been informed that at least one Senator—and perhaps others—has been contacted by a media organization as to what his position would be if an event of an extraordinary nature occurred in the Senate. That Senator raised some question about such a procedure. I want to join that Senator and to express the hope that, although under the first amendment of the Constitution the media has that right, there would be no polls taken of Senators so that we could be as open-minded as possible and as free from pressures of this kind as necessary.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, will the distinguished majority leader yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I think it was nearly a year ago that I expressed much the same sentiment at a conference of members of my party. I would join in what the distinguished majority leader has said—that it is the request of the leadership, subject to a Senator's own right to say what he thinks on any subject. I request that they would defer expressing an opinion as to what they may or may not have in mind when, as, and if we might be confronted by those situations, and I would hope that they would resist poll seeking information, in their own interest as well as in the interest of the dignity of the Senate, because this is not a ball game; as the Senator has said, it is not a circus; it is not a contest; it is not something on which ideas should be wagered. It is an extremely serious matter, and it is of a nature on which it would be well to avoid any challenge or question in the future based on what some Senator has said. Having said that, I realize that Senators may say what they wish, but I feel obliged to say what I said a year ago.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Senator is correct. The media can do what they wish under the first amendment, but the Senate has an obligation if and when certain extraordinary situations arise. So far, I am very proud of the way the Senate has conducted itself, and that includes each and every single Member of the Senate.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I am, too.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 9:30 A.M.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in adjournment until the hour of 9:30 a.m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATORS TOMORROW

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the two leaders or their designees have been recognized under the standing order tomorrow, the following Senators be recognized, each for not to exceed 15 minutes and in the order stated: Senators BIDEN, ROTH, MUSKIE, HATHAWAY, CLARK, BIDEN again, STEVENS, NELSON, JAVITS, HARTKE, ERVIN, MONDALE, MATHIAS, STENNIS, and ROBERT C. BYRD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. FANNIN. Mr. President, the Senate apparently is on the brink of passing a campaign financing bill designed to fool the American people into thinking that it solves the major problems in our political system. Nothing could be further from the truth.

In addition to its many other shortcomings, this bill fails completely to advance any remedy for the illegal and undesirable activities of unions in the campaign process.

Unions make their greatest impact by providing services for their chosen candidates for office. These services are provided by union staff, union supplies, and union equipment paid for out of union dues.

The great concern we have heard in the debate over campaign reform involves the amount of money donated to candidates, and the money these candidates spend on their campaign.

This money simply is used to purchase campaign services on behalf of the candidate.

If we are going to prevent people or organizations from donating money to candidates, then it follows that we also must prevent the donation of services which are the equivalent of money.

Unions simply short circuit the system by providing campaign workers who are on union payrolls, union computers, union presses, union vehicles, union phones, and other such services. These services are the same as money to the candidate.

If it is illegal for someone to donate money to candidates to purchase these services, why then is it not illegal for anyone or any organization to donate equivalent services. We are talking about services that are worth tens and hundreds of thousands of dollars—even millions in some national campaigns.

Mr. President, I am deeply concerned about what is happening here. Union leaders are seeking a "veto-proof" Congress, and they are going to great lengths to accomplish this goal.

As a Republican, I have a vested interest and you would expect me to be concerned. What worries me is that most Democrats apparently fail to see the great danger here. We face the situation where neither the Democrats nor the Republicans will be in charge of the Congress—it will be a few union leaders who will be able to call all the shots if they are successful in winning the strong control of Congress which they seek.

Our Government has functioned well over the decades and centuries because we have sought to provide a balance of all the interests in our society. Today we are in great danger of providing the unions—which represent only about 10 percent of the American people—a stranglehold on our Government. This legislation would aid them in gaining this stranglehold.

Mr. President, the union leaders have bragged that they have the most powerful political machine in the Nation, and I for one believe them. They are very powerful because Congress has not only failed to restrain them, but seems to encourage them to exercise an influence far in excess what is good for the country. An article in today's Wall Street Journal demonstrates very clearly how far the unions are going.

We have heard arguments that when a candidate accepts $1,000 or $5,000 from a contributor there is a danger that he becomes indebted to that contributor and thus loses independence and objectivity once in office.

What then, happens when a candidate gets $27,000 or about 44 percent of his funds from a union, plus union services that probably are worth double or triple the cash? How objective can he be, if elected, when it comes to considering legislation which has the stamp of approval of COPE, AFL–CIO, or the like.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article from the Wall Street Journal be reprinted in the RECORD:

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

POLITICS AND LABOR—UNIONS MAKE BIG BID TO ELECT A CONGRESS THAT IS VETO-PROOF

(By James C. Hyatt)

SAGINAW, MICH.—Bob Traxler had only five minutes to make his pitch when he appeared before AFL–CIO political leaders early this year to promote his race for Congress. So he kept his message short.

"I told them I had come with a tin cup, a white cane and dark glasses," he recalls. I said. "'Send money.'"

They have. Unions have provided over $27,000 so far. And lots of help besides.

For scores of pro-labor candidates such as Mr. Traxler, labor's goal of electing a "veto-proof Congress" this year means getting generous amounts of money, manpower, organizational talent and the other aid that can make the difference in a close race.

Mr. Traxler does have to wrestle with many worries as he strives for victory in a special House election next Tuesday. For one thing, he is seeking to become the first Democrat elected from Michigan's Eighth Congressional District since the Depression. For another, he is running in a district that gave the last Congressman, Republican James Harvey, a 59% victory in 1972. But winning labor's active help isn't something he must worry about.

The list of unions whose political arms are supporting his campaign reads like a labor Who's Who: the United Auto Workers, the Machinists, the United Transportation Union, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, the Retail Clerks, the National Education Association, the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, the Firefighters, the Meatcutters and the Communication Workers.

THE MEMBERS PITCH IN

Individual union members are pitching in hard for the Democrat. Wallace "Butch" Warner, a cable splicer who is president of a Communications Workers local, has taken leave from his job in Saginaw to help coordinate labor's efforts in the Traxler campaign; a telephone hot line from the political to the union headquarters speeds appeals for campaign manpower.

Jim Chalou, a tool and die maker, is assigned full-time by the Allied Industrial Workers to drum up Traxler support; he figures he has "probably been in at least 25 or 26 plants" making his pitch. Several hundred UAW members have helped out, putting up yard signs, licking envelopes and distributing literature.

Of the $61,000 contributed to the Traxler cause through last Thursday, about 44% came from labor groups. The largest single donation, $12,000, was made by the UAW, and one high official of that union says it might cough up another $10,000 or so if necessary.

Labor's activity here, however effective in this campaign, is certainly a springtime warm-up for the heavy politicking that unions are planning for next fall. Union strategists figure that more than 70 House elections will be close enough for labor to influence the results. Already, labor's war chests are bulging, and union men are intent on electing a "veto-proof" Democratic Congress.

REAPING DIVIDENDS

The unions' intensive participation in three other special House elections this year has reaped dividends. Winning Democrats in Johnstown, Pa., Cincinnati and Grand Rapids all benefited from heavy union aid.

Labor's efforts have Republicans worried, and they are trying to turn union politicking into an issue. Thus, Vice President Gerald Ford has attacked union "outsiders" for taking over Democrats' campaigns and injecting "massive out-of-state money" into the special House campaigns. James Sparling, the GOP candidate here, charges: "The AFL–CIO and the UAW bosses want this Eighth District seat. Cost is no object; money is no object."

Without question, labor's involvement is crucial if Mr. Traxler is to win the election. And for all concerned, this is no ordinary political event.

President Nixon will appear in the Saginaw district today, a development that dismays some Republicans and delights many Democrats. Certainly the contest here will be widely interpreted as a referendum on the Nixon presidency, and the result will be seen as a harbinger of autumn election sentiment.

THE WATERGATE WEAKNESS

Labor analysts believe that Mr. Nixon's Watergate weakness gives them a real chance of electing enough Democrats to make the next Congress "veto-proof." Such a Congress, union men say, would override the President and enact bills closing many tax "loopholes" and imposing tighter controls on multinational corporations and energy-producing companies. Enactment of a liberal program of national health insurance also is a top labor goal.

While Democrats would need to elect nine more Senators and 44 more House members to gain a two-thirds edge in Congress, labor isn't setting its goal quite that high; it can usually count on some Republican support for overriding vetos. "We need to elect 23 more friends in the House and seven in the Senate," an AFL–CIO spokesman says. He adds that George Meany, the federation president says that "it is a tough job but one we think we can do." (Most politicians believe that labor's goal is achievable in the House; in the Senate, however, the consensus guess is that Democrats probably will make a net gain of only three seats or so.)

Electing a "veto-proof Congress," of course, doesn't mean supporting Democrats only. Republican Sens. Richard Schweiker and Jacob Javits have labor's backing, and so do several GOP House members. In a speech last week to a building-trades rally, AFL–CIO lobbyist Andrew Biemiller warned against "knocking off good friends of ours on the Republican side of the aisle."

But Democrats are the big beneficiaries of labor's aid, and the unions have a lot to spread around. By Feb. 28, union political-action groups had $5,032,584 on hand, reports Common Cause, the self-styled people's lobbying group, which monitors campaign contributions. The sum is about equal to unions' reported political spending in the presidential year 1972.

This year's early war chest includes $1 million amassed by several maritime unions ("We're going to reward our friends and punish our enemies," vows Jesse Calhoun, president of the Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association) and $717,000 gathered by the UAW.

And the push is on for more political cash. COPE, the AFL–CIO's Committee on Political Education, the political action arm of the federation, has renewed its usual request for a $2 voluntary contribution from each union member. While the federation usually hits about 25% of that goal, "there are indications that COPE fund raising is more successful this year," one AFL–CIO official says.

The Machinists Union, which raised $246,209.47 last year, is planning a "special $2-per-member drive" to aid the objective of a "veto-proof Congress." The Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, proposing to seek $10 a member for this year's congressional races, finds contributions so far running about twice as high as usual.

Union political money has already shown up impressively in the earlier special elections this year. The Democratic winners in the first three races spent $75,000 to $90,000 each; labor contributions ranged from $18,000 to $25,000.

Most political forecasters figure that the total outlay here will top the sum spent in any of the earlier special elections and will set a high for the district as well. But money alone won't win. The key must be voter turnout, and that's where labor's activity could be crucial.

Indeed, the union-backed campaigns organization in this congressional district provides an example of how labor will operate in many campaigns next fall. The full-time and part-time manpower that unions are pumping into the Traxler campaign is giving the Democrat much higher visibility among union members than he otherwise could achieve.

To help rouse potential supporters, Mr. Traxler has laid out $9,238 for a campaign film and film-showing equipment. In the hands of his labor backers, that may turn out to be his most valuable investment.

The film, carried by campaigners to union halls and other rallies, is a 14-minute account of "Bob Traxler's Journey for Change," a piece larded with references to a childhood "Tom Sawyer existence" and shots of a pipe-smoking candidate looking thoughtfully at Michigan farmland. His 11 years in the Michigan Legislature are recalled, including his sponsorship of a law letting charitable organizations run bingo games. The working people in the audience are told of employes "losing their jobs because of wrong decisions by the administration" and by the auto companies. (Of 24,400 workers normally employed by General Motors in Saginaw and nearby Bay City, about 2,480 were laid off at last count. The local jobless rate is about 10%.)

Mr. Chalou, who is president of an Allied Industrial Workers local, finds the film effective as he campaigns for Mr. Traxler. "When the candidate can't be there," he says, "the film does the job." It was probably shown 200 times before the primary, which was held March 19.

Mr. Chalou has also distributed 22-by-28-inch lawn signs to union members—"the ones that live on main roads"—and on primary day, he called other union leaders and reminded them to turn out voters. He personally handed out 800 sample ballots in the town of Bad Axe, placing them on car windshields. Of the 309 members in his local, Mr. Chalou figures that a dozen or so have worked in the campaign up to now.

(Why is he involved? "A fellow can only take so much," he says. "I've seen enough of my fellow workers get batted around by high prices, by inflation, and by Presidents paying $750 in taxes on a $250,000 income.")

To enlist additional union manpower, his fellow coordinator, Mr. Warner, can not only call on his own Communications Workers local but also can tap some of the 240 other union locals in this congressional district.

And he can always call Frank Garrison, a third local union man who started early and full-time on the Traxler campaign. Mr. Garrison is permanently assigned to the UAW's Saginaw Community Action Program—its political- and social-action arm. His union has perhaps the biggest single union interest in the Traxler race; the UAW has 43,000 active members in the district, plus 5,0000 to 6,000 retirees.

"Our members have been calling and asking, 'Can we help?'" Mr. Garrison says. "They've put up yard signs, licked envelopes, distributed literature door to door." Night workers have volunteered to help during the day, and others promise to "lose a day of work on election day to help." Laid off auto workers provide other help. "Richard Nixon made it possible for them to volunteer in our campaign," says Jim Goff, Mr. Traxler's campaign organizer.

Some labor groups that haven't been particularly active politically in other years are fired up for Mr. Traxler. The Michigan Education Association's Eighth District teacher members have campaigned actively for him. Some helped arrange voter-registration drives in high schools to line up 18-year-old voters. The drive registered perhaps 2,000 young voters in the district, potentially 3% or 4% of the expected Traxler turnout and certainly enough to win a close election.

Despite this congregation of labor help for Democrat Traxler, not all Republicans are alarmed. State GOP Chairman William McLaughlin says, "You take labor's involvement for granted in Michigan. I don't get ulcers over it."

Moreover, Mr. Sparling, the GOP candidate, isn't exactly campaigning by himself. Five or six staff members from the Republican National Committee have been to Saginaw to help map his election strategy. A big-name Republican, Sen. Charles Percy, has appeared on Mr. Sparling's behalf. Last weekend, Sparling campaigners put on a "door-to-door blitz"; several hundred volunteers came from outside the district to help.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, now that the Senate has invoked cloture on the campaign reform bill, S. 3044, and turned back repeated efforts to weaken its provisions, I am hopeful we can send a strong bill to the House of Representatives and provide the country with at least one constructive effort to remedy the disastrous effect of Watergate on our body politics.

In these brief remarks, I wish not only to urge support for the committee bill, but also to respond to several disturbing themes which I have heard during the past few weeks of debate.

For several months the American people and the Congress have been told to "stop wallowing in Watergate" and to get on with "the Nation's business"—as if the problems of inflation, the energy crisis and our other dilemmas were unrelated to the preoccupations of the White House, or were unrelated to the corrosion of public confidence in their elected leaders.

Now, during debate on this bill, a companion theme has emerged: "Lets stop wallowing in campaign reform" we are told, "and lets get on with the Nation's business."

Mr. President, I am confident that tactic will meet with as singular a lack of success in diverting the American people as has its predecessor. For the public understands full well that the election of a representative Government—free from both the actual danger and the appearance of undue influence—is very much their business.

It is not necessarily true that he who pays the political piper will always call the tune. Nevertheless, it is hardly reassuring to the average citizen to know that big donors at least have access to go backstage before the performance and request a few favorite melodies.

Sure, I can go to bed at night with a fair degree of confidence that my votes have not been improperly influenced by a contribution. But try to tell that to some of my constituents who disagree strongly with my views. And particularly after the revelations of the past 18 months, who can really blame them.

It is surprising, however, that after all the scandals which have emerged—and the obvious repercussions this has had on public trust of elected leaders—some still seek to portray this bill as a greedy grab by those in office, as a private raid on the Public Treasury.

Yet the President and Congress act on an annual budget in the hundreds of billions of dollars. What wiser investment could a democracy make than a few dollars per voter each year—the best estimate of what this proposal would cost—to restore confidence that public spending decisions are made with the public interest in mind, and not the private interests of those who underwrite our campaigns. We are willing to pay for clean air, clean lakes and clean streets—at least I hope we are. We should also be willing to pay for clean elections.

Moreover, a moment's reflection also reminds us that perpetuation of the present system of campaign financing is far more advantageous to we who are incumbents, than would be a fair system of adequate funding insured for both incumbent and challenger alike.

We need not worry about the cry that the only reason for the low rating of politicians in the polls is a cynicism generated by our debate on this measure, itself. Clearly that claim presumes an exaggerated view of the impact our debate here has on millions of citizens who already have formed strong opinions about the trust their Government deserves. And it most seriously underestimates the devastating effect the past 2 years' revelations have had on the public's view of honesty and responsiveness in Washington.

Of course, campaign finance reform is not a panacea for all the ills of Watergate. No one has suggested that. It will not provide a safeguard against perversion of the processes of justice to cover up scandal, or curb the potential for invoking "national security" to cloak constitutional abuses.

But it is the single most constructive step we can take right now to minimize the pressures for illegal actions, to reduce the potential for financial manipulations which generate their own corruptive momentum, and to help restore the essential public confidence in Government.

As Senator MANSFIELD observed in his state of the Congress address:

> We shall not finally come to grips with the problems except as we are prepared to pay for the public business of elections with public funds.

Now let us look at the bill before us. Under the leadership of the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee (Mr. CANNON) and the chairman of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections (Mr. PELL) the committee has provided a comprehensive, fair yet far-reaching bill. The committee report indicates great sensitivity to the issues of policy such as the impact of its proposal on our party system, the constitutionality of schemes to screen candidates and distinguish between major and minor parties, the problem of Federal control of campaigns, and other important questions. The report, and the hearings of the committee, belie the claim that the bill is based on hasty, ill-considered action, without adequate attention to the underlying issues involved in campaign finance.

S. 3044 incorporates the provisions for spending and contribution limits and a strong independent commission to enforce the Federal elections laws, all of which the Senate passed last summer as part of S. 372 which now awaits action in the House.

It provides for Federal assistance to qualified candidates in primary elections for nomination in congressional and Presidential races. After raising a threshold fund to demonstrate some significant base of support, primary candidates would be eligible to receive Federal assistance on a matching basis for every $100 per contributor.

In the general elections, once having received their party's nomination, all major party House, Senate, and Presidential candidates are entitled to Federal payments equal to their overall spending limit. However, they may take as much or little of this available fund as they wish, and raise the rest of their campaign funds in allowable private contributions.

Minor party candidates would receive a proportionate share of the assistance available to major party candidates in general elections.

Without discussing all of the bill's provisions, I do wish to comment on four major criticisms which have been leveled against the committee bill. First, the question of why any public financing is necessary; second, the argument that private financing should play the dominant role; third, the opposition to including primaries in any financing scheme; and finally, questions about the proposal's constitutionality.

WHY IS THE PUBLIC FINANCING NECESSARY?

The most fundamental objection to S. 3044 is the claim that low contribution limits will take care of the "corruption image." If you eliminate the potential influence of large gifts that takes care of Watergate, the argument goes, so why get bogged down in the tricky problems of devising a fair, workable public funding scheme?

This is a myopic view of meaningful campaign reform. We should not deal with the Watergate horrors in a way which will perpetuate and intensify the pervasive advantage enjoyed by incumbents in their bid for reelection.

In large states such as my own, California or New York, Senate campaigns are costly. The funds for an adequately informative, competitive race will be difficult to raise, even for a well-known incumbent, in the small amounts we seek to impose as contribution limits for any one donor.

Without substantial public financing, the great danger is that nonincumbent challengers will have even more difficulty raising adequate resources.

This crucial point has been obscured by repeated reference to the wonderful involvement of thousands of citizens contributing a few dollars from their cookie jar for the candidate of their choice. That is indeed an appealing image and of course I encourage and endorse the desirability of full citizen involvement in politics. But that does not mean that truly small contributions will be an adequate source of funds for large, expensive campaigns.

The committee report focused this issue sharply, at page 5:

> The only way in which Congress can eliminate reliance on large private contributions and still ensure adequate presentation to the electorate of opposing viewpoints of competing candidates is through comprehensive public financing.
> Modern campaigns are increasingly expensive and the necessary fundraising is a great drain on the time and energies of the candidate. Low contribution limits alone will compound the problem. . . . Drastically reducing the amounts which may be expended by the candidate would ease this burden, but at the cost of increasing the present disadvantage for non-incumbent challengers and endangering the whole process of political competition.

That, Mr. President, is why we must pass a bill with both contribution limits and comprehensive public financing for Federal elections.

PRIMARY RELIANCE ON PUBLIC FINANCING

Some of my colleagues who favor a modest amount of public assistance, oppose the availability of full public funding. They argue that the availability of substantial public funds should turn on the candidate's ability to raise first an equally large amount of private donations.

At bottom, this reflects the view that if a candidate has less support at the outset of a campaign—perhaps because he is not as well known as his incumbent opponent—it is appropriate that he has less resources with which to campaign. I would prefer a fairer approach to competitive elections.

The danger of primary reliance on a matching fund approach is the self-perpetuating advantage for the candidate who is initially better known. He would usually be able to raise more private contributions of small denomination than could his opponent. This would bring larger sums of Federal matching funds, and he could then mount a more elaborate campaign than his challenger to raise even more private funds, which would then be matched with more Federal money, and so on.

The use of matching funds to provide an ongoing test of support may be a valid screening technique in the primaries. But once a major party has chosen a candidate, we are no longer concerned with screening frivolous candidacies. Both candidates in the general election should have adequate resources to seek support from the voters during the campaign, including the support of those initially inclined to favor their opponent.

With primary reliance on matching small contributions, a less well-known challenger must bootstrap his campaign by winning additional support before he can get enough Federal assistance to mount a fully competitive campaign. The Federal Government would be interposing a pre-election popularity contest before the voters have had an opportunity to hear a full debate of the issues. Instead, the voters choice should be tested in November at the end of the campaign, and not at its outset.

SHOULD PRIMARY ELECTIONS BE INCLUDED

Unfortunately, I am sure that the same intense pressure to eliminate primary elections from the public financing feature of S. 3044 exerted during the Senate's deliberation will also be felt in the House.

The logic in favor of including all elections is simple, but compelling. It is impossible to justify the expenditure of substantial public funds in order to help purify the political process, if the candidates receiving that assistance must still raise the full costs of expensive primary campaigns from private contributors in order to win their party's nomination in the first place. Meaningful reform of campaign financing practices requires inclusion of primary as well as general election.

CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUES RAISED REGARDING S. 3044

Finally, Mr. President a few words are in order in response to the continued suggestions, although often vague, that this bill would be found unconstitutional.

First, some suggest it is unconstitutional to limit the amount which a person can contribute to my campaign, or to limit the total amount I can spend.

However, the Senate has already faced that issue twice, in 1971 and again last summer. Each time, we decisively found that the power to preserve the integrity of the electoral process, as well as the underlying purpose of the first amendment to prevent oligopoly in the political marketplace by a powerful few, provides ample basis for reasonable regulation.

Next it was suggested that the threshold fund used to screen out frivolous candidates in primary elections imposes an unconstitutional burden on some political aspirants. But as the committee report notes, the Supreme Court has upheld the use of filing fees and other charges as a means of preventing a proliferation of candidates. Similarly, the Court has approved differential treatment of major and minor parties, based on past performance at the polls, if the difference is reasonably related to a state interest such as the desire to avoid splintering a coherent party system. See Bullock v. Carter 405 U.S. 134 (1971); Jeness v. Fortson 403 U.S. 431 (1971).

The committee bill would not freeze the status quo; it does not prevent any political party from getting its candidate on the ballot, nor from organizing resources to support them.

As the Supreme Court recognized in the Jeness case:

> Sometimes the grossest discrimination can lie in treating things that are different as though they were exactly alike. 403 U.S. at 442.

Only a few weeks ago, the Supreme Court reaffirmed these principles in two decisions, Storer against Brown—March 26, 1974—and American Party against White—March 26, 1974.

On the basis of these decisions and other cases dealing with the regulation of elections and the treatment of major, minor, and independent candidates, I am convinced the measure would be upheld as a reasoinable, fair and workable scheme to promote the integrity of elections, to insure the influence of many diverse points of view in the political marketplace, and to balance these goals against the other first amendment and equally protection interests which are involved.

To end where I began, Mr. President, this proposal for public financing would not guarantee the election of wise and honest men and women. But it would remove the major cause of cynicism and distrust in our system. Now is the time to act to remove the distorting effect of reliance on private fundraising both from the campaign and from the operation of Government.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, with the consent of the distinguished Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK), that his pending amendment, No. 1013, be temporarily laid aside in order that I may call up my amendment No. 988, and I do this with the understanding that the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK) not lose his right to the floor following disposition of my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOMENICI). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, this is a very minor amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read amendment No. 988.

The legislative clerk read the amendment offered by Mr. HUGH SCOTT for himself and Mr. KENNEDY (No. 988) as follows:

> On page 19, after the period in line 19, insert the following: "The Secretary of the Treasury may accept and credit to the fund money received in the form of a donation, gift, legacy, or bequest, or otherwise contributed to the fund.".

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, this is a very minor matter which is proposed on behalf of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) and myself. It has to do with the fact that under present law individuals may make tax-deductible contributions to candidates.

The Presidential election campaign fund at the Treasury Department is financed solely from dollars checked off on income tax returns, and therefore the Treasury Department advises us it will not accept small contributions earmarked for this fund.

Amendment No. 988 simply authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to receive private contributions and earmark them for the fund is so requested. These contributions would be tax deductible, as is the case under present law, with respect to direct contributions to candidates.

This has to do with a contribution of the Senator from Massachusetts and myself of $75 each, representing payment for two newspaper articles, which was accepted by the Treasury as a gift to the Treasury but which could not be earmarked. Therefore, the purpose of the amendment is to permit earmarking. It is not ex post facto at all.

Mr. President, I understand the amendment has been cleared with the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. COOK) and with the manager of the bill on the majority side of the aisle, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute.

I would like to ask a question. The Senator said this amendment would permit earmarking for tax credit purposes. I do not think it would permit earmarking other than insofar as its being deposited to go to this special account.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. That is right.

Mr. CANNON. So it could not be earmarked for any other purpose.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Oh, no, not for any purpose except being channeled to this fund instead of being channeled to the general Treasury, as it is now.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator also mentioned that a tax deduction could be taken. I do not think it could be taken without another change elsewhere in the law.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I am advised by the Treasury that a tax deduction can be taken, but only as a charitable contribution.

This may be a surprise to the Senator, but the U.S. Treasury is considered a charity in this regard.

Mr. CANNON. I did not think it was a charity, but a tax credit could be taken as a charitable contribution.

With that explanation, I am willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join the distinguished minority leader, Senator HUGH SCOTT, in proposing the pending amendment. By authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to accept tax-deductible gifts earmarked for the Federal election campaign fund, the amendment will establish a constructive supplement to the dollar checkoff under existing law.

As we know, the preliminary results under the dollar checkoff for the 1973 tax year are highly encouraging. Approximately 15 percent of the returns being filed are using the checkoff. At the present rate, the campaign fund in the Treasury will contain upwards of $50 million by 1976, or more than enough to make the 1976 Presidential election a historic first—paid for entirely out of public funds.

But more is necessary, especially if the dollar checkoff is to be adequate for financing other Federal elections out of public funds. My hope is that, as the checkoff becomes more familiar to taxpayers, its use will continue to increase, so that the Federal election campaign fund will be sufficient to pay for all Federal elections.

In the interim, the pending amendment is a useful method to supplement the dollar checkoff fund. Under current law, taxpayers are entitled to a charitable deduction for gifts made to the Treasury. However, unless there is a specific authorization in the law allowing gifts to be made for a specified program, the gifts simply go into the general fund of the Treasury. The pending amendment would enable taxpayers to earmark their gifts for the Federal election campaign fund, and I am pleased that the managers are willing to accept it.

Mr. CANNON. I yield back my time.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania for himself and the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), No. 988.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and Senators BELLMON, CRANSTON, HART, GRAVEL, MATHIAS, and SCHWEIKER, I call up my amendment No. 1013. I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment to make technical corrections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, what was the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator restate the request?

Mr. CLARK. I ask unanimous consent to make a technical correction in amendment No. 1013.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I ask the Senator to state the nature of the technical correct? I would like to know whether it is going to change in essence some important provision of the amendment.

Mr. CLARK. It would not change any important provision of the amendment. It is my understanding it would not be in order if it did. We had talked with the Parliamentarian previously to make sure it was not a substantial change.

I send a copy of the technical correction to the manager to look at. It simply clarifies a definition somewhat, we felt.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is so modified.

The amendments, as modified, are as follows:

On page 75, line 21, strike out "nomination for election, or".

On page 76, strike out line 19 through line 22 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(3) For purposes of this section, the term 'campaign' includes all primary, primary runoff, and general election campaigns related to a specific general election, and all primary, primary runoff, and special election campaigns related to a specific special election.".

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following the disposal of this amendment my Amendment No. 1118 be the next order of business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, as it now stands, S. 3044 sets a contribution limitation of $3,000 for individuals and $6,000 for organizations, applied separately to primary, primary run-off, and general elections.

Our amendment has one simple effect: it would eliminate the bill's distinction between primaries, primary run-offs, and general elections, setting a true contribution limit of $3,000 for individuals and $6,000 for organizations, applied to a candidate's entire campaign for public office.

Throughout the debate on S. 3044, many Senators have referred to the $3,000 contribution limitation in the bill. But, in fact, the limitation now in effect in S. 3044 sets a much higher limit. In any given campaign, an individual might actually be able to contribute $6,000 altogether—$3,000 in the primary and $3,000 in the general election—or even $9,000 if there were a primary runoff. For organizations, the limit could be as much as $18,000.

The Rules Committee has incorporated the contribution limits set in S. 372 in the present bill. But S. 372 had no provisions for public financing—it was merely an attempt to limit campaign expenditures and private contributions.

However, with the comprehensive public financing system in the bill now, there is no need to allow such excessive contributions—up to $9,000 for individuals and $18,000 for organizations. This amendment would put those limits at $3,000 and $6,000 respectively.

Three thousand dollars is a large chunk of money in any campaign. No individual contributed more than $3,000 to my campaign, and I am sure that many of my colleagues had the same experience. Clearly, a $3,000 limitation, with $6,000 for groups, is not going to cause any hardship for anyone, whether or not they decide to use public financing.

Even the $3,000 and $6,000 limitations this amendment proposes are excessive—a person or organization contributing this much would obviously enjoy more access than the average voter, and I think everyone is aware of that.

But more important than the actual effect of these large donations is the question of how they will be viewed by the public. To the average American, $9,000 or $18,000 is an incredibly large amount for a candidate for public office to accept from any single individual or group. But the present legislation would permit just such contributions.

The limits proposed in this amendment still represent big money, but a contribution limit of this kind would at least be a step in the right direction. And the American people would know it.

The Rules Committee bill represents a truly significant reform of the American political process. I think all of us have been continually impressed by Chairman CANNON's skillful handling of the legislation, and by the commitment to meaningful campaign reform demonstrated by a majority of the Senate. I believe this amendment is fully consistent with the scope and intent of S. 3044, and I urge its adoption.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

We have gone up the hill and down again on this particular issue. We have seen before, in the course of debate on the bill, amendments to change the limits on contributions. The Senator from Iowa has pointed out that the amounts ought to be cut in half from what we have in the bill now, because of the matching portion of public financing. But we do not authorize a candidate to go to public financing. If we were to adopt this amendment, it is quite likely we would force every candidate to go to public financing, whereas some of them if they were given reasonable enough limits, might desire to go the private financing route. But if they did, they would then be still more unduly restricted, as under S. 372, and much more unduly restricted than we have desired to restrict them.

I urge that the Senate stand fast on the position it has already taken by voting to reject this amendment.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, in answer to the distinguished Senator from Nevada on his particular point, I think it is still possible and very practical for a candidate to run a campaign on private financing and keep within the $3,000 or $6,000 limitation. I say that out of personal experience, because, as the RECORD will show, in the 1972 campaign I accepted no contributions in excess of $3,000. There are many Senators who have committed themelves to accept no more than that in the coming campaign of 1974. Some have a limitation as strict as $1,000; some $2,000; others, $3,000. They will not receive any public financing in the 1974 campaign. So although some restrictions are imposed, a candidate cannot take $18,000, in the case of groups, and he cannot take in excess of $3,000, in the case of individuals. He can take only $3,000. That is the intent of the amendment. It seems to me that when we talk about taking amounts such as $7,000, $8,000, $9,000, or $10,000, from individuals, we are talking about a very, very heavy influence on the person who receives such a large contribution.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CLARK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the Clark amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I move to lay the amendment on the table, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON) to lay the amendment of the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK) on the table. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), and the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE) are necessarily absent.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), and the Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 54, as follows:

So the motion to lay on the table was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK).

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes to explain to my colleagues what this amendment will do, because I think many of them do not understand what the amendment would do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Time on the amendment has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, this Senator has not used all of his time on the amendment. He used only 2 minutes on the amendment. No one else has used the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, under the——

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, would a motion to table be in order after the time has been yielded back?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Nevada may proceed for 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the Senator from Nevada is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, the bill's provisions with relation to private contributions is such that a person can receive a contribution of not to exceed $3,000 from another person for any one election—a primary, a runoff, or a general election.

If this amendment is adopted, it would limit the $3,000 in contributions to a one-time contribution for any election—for the total election. So that in a year, if a person had a primary election, a runoff election, and a general election, the maximum private contribution that could be received from one person would be $3,000 rather than $3,000 per election as it is under the bill.

This would automatically have the effect of driving a candidate toward public financing, because of his inability to raise adequate amounts.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I would simply like to add to the statement of the distinguished Senator from Nevada by saying that he states the amendment very accurately and very exactly. That is the intent of the amendment, to prevent any individual from contributing more than $3,000 in that campaign—in other words, in the primary, in the runoff, and in the general. Otherwise, we do not have a $3,000 limitation but a $9,000 limitation from any individual, and $9,000 from that individual's spouse if they so desire; or an $18,000 limitation in the case of organizations.

That is the purpose of this amendment, to restrict it to $3,000 for individuals and $6,000 for groups.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back on this amendment, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK).

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), and the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

So Mr. CLARK's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHILES. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of amendment No. 1118 proposed by the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK).

The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 7, line 9, strike out "$10,000;" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000;".

On page 7, line 14, strike out "20 percent" and insert in lieu thereof "10 percent".

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I offer this amendment on behalf of myself and Senators BEALL and MATHIAS.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I would like to know the nature of the perfecting amendment first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

After line 4, insert the following:

On page 7, line 17, strike out "$125,000;" and insert in lieu thereof "$75,000;"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the modification? Without objection, the amendment is so modified.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, this amendment would reduce the threshold amounts required under the bill to qualify for matching public payments in congressional and senatorial primary elections. It cuts in half the levels set in the committee bill.

Although these limits are intended to prevent frivolous candidates from receiving public financing, the threshold amounts set by the committee are so high that they will almost certainly preclude public financing for many serious candidates as well.

Some of the opponents of S. 3044 have called the bill an "incumbency protection bill," charging that public financing will inevitably favor incumbent office holders. Chairman CANNON and the Rules Committee have very scrupulously maintained the rights of challengers in this legislation, and it should be done here as well.

But the primary threshold amounts—set as high as they are—represent an exception. Incumbents could reach the threshold easily—a single hundred-dollar-a-plate dinner might be enough. But for challengers, it would be an overwhelming task. As Senator BEALL said during debate on March 27:

Sometimes there is a difference between demonstrating public support and collecting money. Sometimes one can get the votes but not the dollars to back up the votes.

It seems to me that by using this formula, a terrible burden is placed upon those people who might want to challenge an incumbent in a primary, and I do not think that is in keeping with the purpose of the legislation.

I started out by saying that I am not opposed to public financing combined with private financing. But I am opposed to public financing that discriminates against people who want to challenge the incumbents.

The best example I can offer of the dangers inherent in this section of the committee bill is the Democratic races for the House and Senate in Iowa in 1972. Altogether, there were nine Democrats competing for the nominations for six House seats and one Senate seat. Mr. President, not a single one of us would have qualified for public financing under the committee formula.

And I am not talking about frivolous candidates. Of the seven who were nominated, not one candidate received less than 45 percent of the vote in the general election. Four of us were elected to the Congress, and three of us defeated incumbents in the process. But again, not a single one of us would have been able to get public financing in the primary under the committee bill.

It is also very interesting to examine the 1972 campaigns of the 13 freshman Senators.

According to reports filed 5 days before the primary, at least 7 of the 13 would not have qualified for public financing in the primary under the present formula. Of the six others, of course, there were three incumbent Congressmen, an incumbent Governor, and an incumbent mayor of the State's largest city. The seven of us were not frivolous candidates—after all, we won. But under the committee's requirements we would not have been able to demonstrate enough public support to qualify for matching public funds.

Mr. President, we are not dealing with a threshold which must be raised to receive a flat subsidy. We are only talking about a level which must be met before the Government will match small contributions on a dollar for dollar basis. The Rules Committee correctly states in its report that one of our primary goals must be to—

Ensure adequate presentation to the electorate of opposing viewpoints of competing candidates through comprehensive public financing.

We can take a step toward achieving that goal by passing this amendment and cutting the threshold amount for public financing in the primaries.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I do not have any strong feelings one way or the other about the amendment. For people who oppose public financing this means it is easier to get public financing. It lowers the threshold amount in the case of Representatives from $10,000 to $5,000 and in the case of a candidate for the Senate from $25,000 to $12,500.

Now it was the feeling of the committee we should have some reasonable threshold amount to demonstrate that a man had some sort of public appeal before he could go the public financing route.

As far as I am concerned, if the Senate wants to, it can take away all the threshold and just say everybody is eligible. We did not think it was a good idea.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Maryland (Mr. BEALL).

Mr. BEALL. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa. As he pointed out, both Senator MATHIAS and I are cosponsors of the amendment. He also alluded to the colloquy I had, on the first day of the debate, with the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee on this subject matter. I used the Republican Party of Maryland as an example of an unfair advantage that would be given to an incumbent if we allowed the 20 percent threshold to remain in the bill before a candidate would become eligible for his share of public financing.

In the State of Maryland, unfortunately, there are only 480,000 Republicans, but 1.5 million Democrats. We would be allowed under the bill, because we have a voting-age population of 2.7 million, at the rate of 10 cents per voting age population, $270,000 in primary elections. If we take 20 percent of that, it comes to $54,000.

I think it is absurd to expect that someone can raise $54,000 in a primary when only 480,000 voters are registered in his party. This is excessive. I think that it is impossible for any challenger to raise $54,000 when he is running against an incumbent, especially when he has only 480,000 voters registered in his party, because we have a limit on contributions, and it would be very, very difficult for anybody to challenge an incumbent.

I think if we are going to move in the direction of public financing, then we had better make sure that we are not making the Congress of the United States a self-perpetuating body. It seems to me that is just what we are doing if we are creating the high thresholds where challengers will not be able to get the kind of money they need to participate in public funds.

I think it should go further, but I think it is extremely reasonable to lower the threshold from 20 to 10 percent. Therefore, I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment in order to make it fair to those who are going to be involved in future primaries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Do Senators yield back their time?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I yield back my remaining time on the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back on the amendment, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK), as modified. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), and the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. STENNIS) are necessarily absent.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN), and the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY), are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 54, as follows:

So the Clark amendment, as modified, was rejected.

Mr. CRANSTON obtained the floor.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I shall use my own time, of course, but I intend to limit my remarks on the amendment to 5 minutes.

I call up my amendment No. 1185 and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 15, line 11, after the word "held" insert the following: "(except that if the office sought is President or Senator the amount shall be 14 cents)".

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, this amendment proposes to restore, for the offices of President and Senator, the amount of 14 cents per voter instead of 12 cents which resulted from the Allen amendment, which was successful here by a vote of 46 to 43.

The reason for limiting it to President and Senator is twofold. First, not to reargue the Allen amendment, which would not be fair to Senator Allen nor to the Senate, I omit the Members of the House of Representatives; and second, because it really is not necessary to include the Members of the House of Representatives, as they have a limit of $90,000, which, considering the general population of congressional districts, which is under one-half million, is not out of line with either the 12-cent figure or the 14-cent figure.

The amendment applies only to elections, not to primaries. I am not seeking to change that at all. But the fact is that this is a qualified amendment; and the reason I give the Senate this opportunity is the fact that really the amounts are getting down to the point where, with any kind of big State, and small States are even more affected, where a Senator like myself or any other Senator who has had considerable time in the Senate has to go to the people with so many issues—it is simple, after all, to take a Senator apart when we vote here 400 or 500 times a year, and when votes are connected in philosophy or have a historical relationship, or you have strategic or tactical situations that face you—and you try to run around in a State with 15 million people, even 15 cents speedily fails.

I do not mind telling the Senate I ran, with the aid of my State committee, a campaign in 1968 that cost me, aside from the help they might give, about $1,250,000. That same campaign would cost about $2 million today, and if you subtract the State—and many State organizations now do not want to get involved with Federal law—you run into a campaign that may cost $2,500,000 to $3,000,000.

I cannot raise that. I cannot afford it. But if the committee thought 15 cents was a reasonable figure, I think we ought to have an opportunity to vote on a figure larger than that now set, which I consider too low.

All you have to do is deduct one-fifteenth from the column 15 cents for the Presidency; that results in roughly $19 million for the Presidency, rather than the figures which are set up here, $21 million-something for the 15-cent fund, and similarly down that column.

I simply lay this question before the Senate: Under these conditions, the only chance we have to somewhat raise the figures, for purposes of negotiation with the other body, is in an amendment that is qualified. This is qualified.

I ask unanimous consent that the names of Senators MONDALE and DOLE be added as cosponsors of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. Who yields time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

I would hope that the Senate would not change the position it has already taken on this particular issue. It is true that the committee reported the 15 cents in the general election and the 10 cents in the primary, but that issue has been debated on the Senate floor, and we did reduce it by a vote to 12 cents and 8 cents. I voted for that amendment; I think it was a good amendment.

I will say to my colleague that while he indicates that in a State such as his he may be limited, the limit applies both ways; it also applies on whoever the opponent or challenger may be.

One of the purposes of the overall bill is to try to contain or restrain the cost of campaigns. We are not going to restrain them if we fix the limit that can be spent at higher than is normally spent.

With the exception of a few races in the last election—I do not recall the exact number, but there were not many races that did exceed, though some of them exceeded very materially, the limit we have set in the bill.

I would point out that under the limited bill now, for the State of New York, a candidate there could spend, in the primary, $1,213,000 and could again spend $1,508,000 in the general election under the bill as it now stands. If the Senate should adopt this amendment, it would increase that amount for the general election by roughly $126,000, it would appear.

So I say to my colleague that I believe we have settled this matter in a reasonable fashion. I think if we are going to try to contain the cost of the campaign, we have got to fix limits, not just fix a figure far above that which we have expended.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. I will yield myself 1 more minute to reply, and that is all. We have very completely argued these questions before.

All that I say is this: It is as tough for the challenger as for the challenged, in view of the enormous increase in costs, and I do not see any disposition on the part of the American people not to want a campaign which reveals the positions of both sides. That costs money, unfortunately, in this particular society.

When you realize that there are city campaigns which cost $2 and $3 million for a candidate for mayor, I do not think these sums, at a 14-cent level, are at all out of line. I have given the Senate my own figures. These I know. I sweated blood raising them, so I know them only too well.

I am not anxious to make them more, but it is simply, in my judgment, the necessities of the situation.

Finally, we always talk a lot about committee deliberations, with the committee hearing evidence, thinking it over, and debating it in committee, so that they come to the right conclusion. Here we have a committee, and the manager of the bill says they did not come to the right conclusion, that he voted against it. So, since he voted against it, he has got to vote against it again.

I hope very much that will not be the logic of the Senate. The committee came up with 15 cents. The Senate, by a majority of 46 to 43, reduced it to 12 cents. Here is an opportunity to again come closer to the amount the committee, which deliberated, provided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I think I have an hour, if I wanted to talk that long.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOMINICK. I yield myself 2 minutes, in order to back up my distinguished friend from New York. I am sure everyone will say that if he and I are on the same side on this issue, one of us is obviously wrong, but we will find out pretty quickly.

I will say to the Senate as a whole that I think, to begin with, this whole bill is unconstitutional. I do not think you can put a limit on the right of any individual to support in any legal way that he wants to the candidate of his choice. I think that is what we have attempted to do. One three-judge Federal court has already so ruled, in connection with the bill that is now part of the law. The ruling has not been appealed. They ruled on that ground, that this is a violation of the first amendment, and I think that is exactly what it is.

Second. I think we have sought to do indirectly, by what my distinguished friend from Alabama did and as a matter of fact what this bill does, what we cannot do directly; namely, limit the amount you can expend; and you have to include whatever anyone expends, no matter whether they have any connection with you or not, as an overall limitation; thus we are denying them the right to support the candidates of their choice.

Third. As I think everyone has known from the beginning, I am and always have been totally opposed to public financing. I think it is a real rip-off of the taxpayer. That is not a part of this amendment, which would seem to me only sensible, that if we are going to have an unconstitutional bill, which I think is a disaster from beginning to end, and I think we are all acting as masochists, if I may say so, to the detriment of the taxpayer, then we ought to have a limit which is high enough. So I am happy to support it and will support the amendment but I am going to vote against the whole bill no matter what happens.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 4 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. ALLEN. What this amendment seeks to do is to go over ground that the Senate went over yesterday. It seeks, in effect, to reconsider the vote which was taken on yesterday, and one motion to reconsider has already been made and tabled. So actually this is a method of doing indirectly what the Senator is prevented from doing under the rules directly; that is, reconsidering that vote and offering his own amendment. The distinguished Senator had the opportunity yesterday. If he thought there was some magic to the 14-cent figure, he could have offered that as an amendment when the Senator from Alabama put in the amendment calling for a 12-cent per person of voting age limitation on the general election. He saw fit not to do that.

After the Senate has acted and a motion to reconsider has been made and tabled, the distinguished Senator from New York comes in and says that a subsidy of $1,519,000 in a Senate race in New York is insufficient unless they recapture two-thirds of the reduction that was made on yesterday in order that the 100-percent Government subsidy for general election campaigns in New York and other States can be increased.

The 2-cent increase does not sound like a great deal, but it amounts to millions of dollars throughout the entire Nation and, of course, the amount is several hundred thousand dollars in New York.

As the distinguished chairman of the committee stated, this would provide for primary and general elections expenditures for the Senate seat. The 12 cents and the 8-cent figures would provide for a campaign fund in the primary and in the general election.

If there were to be a run-off, it would be another million dollars, but just the primary and general election is $2½ million. So I believe a candidate could struggle along on $2½ million in a campaign. If the Senate thinks it should be increased, of course, it can do so; but I want to stress that what the Senator seeks to do is to reconsider the action of the Senate, which has already been sought to be reconsidered, and the Senate refused to do so. The Senator limits it to President and Senator. As he stated, the House is already 14 cents above, anyhow. So actually there is a full reconsideration of the action of the Senate yesterday and a substitution of another figure which the Senator was at liberty to offer yesterday, had he seen fit so to do.

So I hope that the amendment will be rejected and that we will be able to go on to other matters that the Senate has not yet considered about this bill.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute to make a point which I think, is pretty interesting. I thought my friend from Alabama was a real expert on the rules of the Senate although he has served here a lot less than others have. I regret to say I must call this to his attention, that I could not move to reconsider yesterday because I was on the losing side. I thought that 15 cents was right, so I could not move to reconsider. I am not going to reconsider today. I am just saying that we have another chance, before we lock up the bill, to take another look at this, because of the expertise of the committee, and get closer to their figure.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I did not say that the Senator should have moved to reconsider, because the Senator from Alabama made that motion yesterday. I said that the effect of what the Senator is doing here is to seek to reconsider. That action was sought to be taken yesterday and the Senate refused to reconsider it because it favored it. What the Senator is trying to do now is to do indirectly what the rules forbid him from doing directly, since the motion to reconsider has already been tabled and another motion is not in order.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I should like to support the amendment offered by the Senator from New York. To begin with, to place an arbitrary limit on campaign expenditures based on a per capita figure is foolish, because campaign costs vary from State to State.

The Senator of New York can reach a great many of his constituents, perhaps half of them, via the subway. But in my State, to get to the various major population centers, because of population dispersal, I have to lease an aircraft because many cities in Texas are not served by the commercial airlines. Of course, no one is served by trains any more and the bus service is not all that good. So campaign costs vary from State to State.

To place an arbitrary limit on this is stupid and foolish, in my opinion, in the first place, because it takes none of these things into consideration.

The reason we have 50 sovereign States and different ways of exercising the police power in those States, is that situations, people, geography, and everything else, differ from various regions of the country to others.

But if we are going to place an arbitrary limit, let us err on the side of giving too much rather than too little, because it is unfair to many people who are campaigning to be expected to get by with 12 cents a voter. We cannot do it. The figure of 12 cents is unrealistic, as has been pointed out eloquently and ably and precisely by my friend from New York.

So I hope the Senate will follow his urgings, that we raise the limit to 14 cents.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute to ask a question of the distinguished chairman. I think I understand it, but do these limitations—I am addressing my question to the distinguished Senator from Nevada—if one is unopposed or at least one is certain he is unopposed, he does not know it until filing deadline. What happens to the limitation so far as the primary is concerned?

Mr. CANNON. The provisions in the bill limit the amount spent to not more than 10 cents. If a person has no opponent in the primary, that is in addition to the amount permitted in the general.

Mr. DOLE. That is the primary reason I am supporting the Senator from New York. Perhaps some of the one-party States, where we do not have any opponent, we are not worried about it. Perhaps the Senator from Alabama may be unopposed—he probably is—but it does not make much difference at this point whether it is 10 cents, 12 cents, 30 cents, or whatever. But in a two-party State, where we have a primary and a general election, it makes a great deal of difference.

It makes a great deal of difference whether the opponent may have a primary and you have no primary. He can spend up to the limit in the primary and the general, even though the primary opponent may be a token opponent. Some are getting resourceful and they are talking about setting up a token opponent in a primary in order to bypass certain provisions of the law, which indicates the foolishness of this. So, to set up a strawman in the primary he can spend more money in the primary and get ready for the general election.

As the Senator from Texas has stated, perhaps on this question, where the committee initially recommended 15 cents per voter, the compromise should be at 14 cents because those States are there and everything depends on our own situation from time to time. For instance, in Kansas, which is a small State bordered by the State of Missouri, where television costs are high, we start our campaign early and try to play it straight and we have already spent 4 or 5 cents per voter and we are still far from the general election. We find many other things like that entering into the situation, so that we have been hiring people with contributions that have been coming in to our campaign, and every expense has been registered and every expenditure has been disclosed, but when we do that you soon learn, if you have an opponent, that 14 cents is not unrealistic.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NUNN). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM), and the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. STENNIS) are necessarily absent.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN), and the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 51, as follows:

So Mr. JAVITS' amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CRANSTON. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT REQUEST

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I take the floor at this time, through the courtesy of the distinguished Senator from California, to inquire as to how many amendments remain to be called up at this time. One, three, five, seven, nine—

Mr. ALLEN. I have two amendments that will require only 5 minutes each.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Very well. We have 11 amendments remaining.

Mr. President, I have not discussed this request with the leadership on the other side of the aisle nor have I discussed it with anyone on this side of the aisle.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time on any remaining amendment be limited to 15 minutes, with 5 minutes to the manager of the bill and 10 minutes to the mover of the amendment.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Does the Senator have an amendment?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Yes.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Would the Senator object if an exception were made for his amendment?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Yes, I would.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, would the Senator object if the request were modified to limit the time to 20 minutes on any amendment, to be equally divided?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Let me ask the Senator's intention in terms of attempting to finish tonight or going over until tomorrow.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Well, it would suit me either way, frankly. I will stay here as long as Senators want to stay or go over until tomorrow. But my thought was that if time could be cut down on amendments, then it might be that we could go until 7 or 7:30 this evening; or we could go over until tomorrow and finish tomorrow—or later tonight—whatever Senators prefer.

Mr. PACKWOOD. If we could reach a unanimous-consent agreement to adjourn tonight at 7:30 and come back tomorrow I would have no objection to the limitation proposed.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I came to my office this morning at 8 o'clock. I have been busy today with a half dozen conferences, I have gone to every meeting it was my responsibility to attend, and I have been on the floor. Here it is 5:30 and it looks as if these amendments are still coming forth. We have had cloture imposed.

I say there should be a sense of fairness in the Senate. When we get to the hour of 6 o'clock we should quit and come back tomorrow. We have not had notice that we were going to stay tonight. Most of us have family obligations. I think that should be taken into consideration. I think this matter has gotten completely out of hand and the time should come to put a stop to it.

If it becomes necessary to stay late tomorrow night we should have notice so that we can advise our families that we will not be home for dinner tomorrow evening.

We have been considering this bill since the latter part of March. I wonder what will happen to the bill anyway when it goes to the House, and here we are straining ourselves and keeping ourselves from our families, which I think is a great injustice. I hope we can reach an agreement. Now there has been a request for a yea and nay vote.

It takes 20 minutes. I have heard about 11 amendments, and then some other Senator came along and put up his fingers. I do not think it was the "V" sign—it was two more amendments. That makes 13. That is 4 hours and 20 minutes alone on rollcalls.

Now, when are we going to go home and when are we going to finish the bill? I say the time has come when we ought to have an agreement to quit at 6:30 tonight and come in tomorrow morning, at 9 o'clock, 8 o'clock, 5 o'clock——

SEVERAL SENATORS. Five o'clock.

Mr. PASTORE. Five o'clock, and finish the bill, but please do not let that dinner get cold tonight.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an interjection?

Mr. PASTORE. I will yield for anything.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for an interjection, I would like to note, for the Senator's scheduling table, that I believe there are about 15 Senators who are scheduled to speak for 15 minutes each tomorrow, and that will chew into the Senators' travel schedule like crazy if we cannot figure out some way to get out of here by 3 o'clock tomorrow. We have about 25 Senators who want to get out of here.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I would ask unanimous consent at this time that those 15 Senators who have 15-minute speeches begin to talk after passage of this bill and let them stay here until midnight tomorrow night.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There will be order in the Senate.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I will revise my unanimous-consent request in this fashion: That time on any amendment be limited to 20 minutes; that time on any debatable motion or appeal, with the exception of a motion to recommit, which Senator STEVENSON was interested in earlier today, be limited to 10 minutes, to be equally divided; that the time on any motion to recommit be limited to 30 minutes; and that the vote on final passage occur at no later than 3 p.m. tomorrow.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object——

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. With this further proviso: that time on any rollcall, with the exception of the first rollcall tomorrow, be limited to 10 minutes, the warning bells to be sounded after the first 2½ minutes.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I do have an important constitutional point that I intend to raise, and although I do not believe I would use my full hour, I do not want to give up my full hour.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Would the Senator wish to speak tonight? I will be happy to remain, and he can make his speech tonight.

Mr. PASTORE. It will be in the RECORD. We will read it.

Mr. BUCKLEY. I would hope to get the ears of more than one or two Senators on that important constitutional question.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I hope the Senator will make his speech this evening, because Senators are on notice that he is going to make the speech, and before the final vote they would look at the RECORD tomorrow and read it.

Mr. BUCKLEY. With all due respect, I doubt that they will.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I am afraid that they would not stay to listen at this hour of the day, or even tomorrow, may I say to the Senator. I have been here 16 years and I have not seen anyone capture their attention in that way.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. TOWER. If the consent agreement is not agreed to, that would mean we could stay here tonight and Senators could bring up their amendments, and have votes on them, unless there were a motion to adjourn, which would be debatable.

Mr. PASTORE. No, there is no debate on such a motion.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. A motion to adjourn is not debatable.

Mr. President, I repeat my request that there be a limitation of 20 minutes——

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, if we are including in that proposed agreement a vote at 3 o'clock tomorrow, can we have assurances of leaving here at 7 o'clock this evening instead of 10 o'clock?

Mr. PASTORE. I will buy 6:30.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Six-thirty—fine.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, perhaps this is inappropriate, and I seldom find myself on the opposite of an issue with my distinguished friend from Rhole Island, but, you know, Mr. President, we have been kicking this bill around for a long, long time. Some people have expressed strong reservations about it. I do not deny that every Senator has his parliamentary right to prolong the debate, but I will tell you, Mr. President, the people of Indiana would be glad to let Senators remain here so their suppers will get cold. It would be a pretty good precedent if we stayed here until we finished this bill for campaign reform. We have debated it at length. Two-thirds of the Senate have exercised their will to limit debate on it, and now we ought to be willing to give up our conveniences and work until we finish action on the bill.

Mr. PASTORE. Come, come, come, Mr. BAYH. This is getting to be a little ridiculous. This Senator can sustain any inconvenience that is necessary to do his job. All I am saying is that it has been the custom and the habit of this body that when we are going to stay here beyond 7 o'clock, we receive notice of it the day before.

I do not know the obligations of the Senator from Indiana for his own family, but I have my family waiting for me tonight. When he talks about inconvenience, all I am saying is that we have been here for a month, and we are not going to finish this bill tonight. All I am saying is, let us come in early tomorrow morning and let us get started early and do our job.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President——

Mr. PASTORE. I do not want to be a tinhorn hero, but I am a little surprised at my colleague from Indiana. He is not more conscious of his responsibility than the Senator from Rhode Island, and when he says we are going to give up our conveniences because this is important, whom are we kidding? [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will please take their seats.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. How did the Senator from Indiana get the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Because he addressed the Chair for the last 5 minutes while the Senator from Rhode Island was speaking.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Very well.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I hope my friend from Rhode Island will read what I said, and if he can point to anything which, either by direction or indirection, implied or suggested that my friend from Rhode Island was not one of the most dedicated Members of this body, willing to sacrifice his own conveniences, then I will stand corrected. I think he knows of my great respect for him. My statement goes not to any degree of piosity, but it seems to be clear to me that a lot of people are looking for us to stand up and get this thing behind us. I think we have a great opportunity to do so. I am not asking for any merit badges, but I am telling you, Mr. President, a lot of people think this is important. This might give us an opportunity to do something a little exceptional and get it behind us, and what it does to my family is not going to be different from what it does to anybody else's.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, we could argue this point ad infinitum. I would hope we would try to reach an agreement. Let me try again.

I ask unanimous consent that time on any amendment be limited to 15 minutes, with 10 minutes to the mover of such amendment and 5 minutes to the manager of the bill; that time on any debatable motion or appeal be limited to 10 minutes, to be equally divided in accordance with the usual form, with the exception of a motion to recommit, on which the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON) wanted 30 minutes today and was assured of that by the majority leader; and that time on any rollcall vote be limited to 10 minutes, with the warning bells to be sounded after the first 2½ minutes; with the time allotted under the cloture rule to be vitiated; with a waiver of paragraph 3 of rule XII; and that the vote on final passage occur at no later than 3 tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator accept an amendment to his request—that the Senator from New York (Mr. BUCKLEY) be recognized first tomorrow at the end of the special orders and be allowed to use not more than 30 minutes of his time at that time and may then proceed on his amendment in the time limited?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. With that modification.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to say that for more than a week I have had six amendments to improve this bill very much. But in the interest of bringing consideration of this bill to an early conclusion, I have refrained from offering the amendments. However, if we come in tomorrow, I should like to offer the six amendments. I assume that they will be permitted if we come in tomorrow. If we can finish tonight, I shall be glad to bring this unhealthy situation to an earlier close.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the purpose of my rising at this time is to ask the Senator from West Virginia, if I fully understand his remarks. Is the time on these amendments from this point forward to be limited to 15 minutes, 10 minutes for the proponents and 5 minutes for the manager of the bill?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. The time allotted under the cloture rule would be vitiated.

Mr. BAKER. That is what I wanted to bring up. Is the Senator asking that the cloture vote be vitiated?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. No. I would ask only that the time limitation under the cloture rule be vitiated, because otherwise the 15 minute agreement on any amendment would be worthless.

Mr. BAKER. Do I understand that we are going to run for any very great length of time tonight?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. No, I did not say that. I would have to leave that up to the Senate.

Mr. BAKER. I am perfectly agreeable to any time limitation. I was wondering what the leadership had in mind.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. With the number of amendments that have been adopted, and with the number of Senators who want to speak tomorrow morning, it would be necessary to go for a while yet tonight.

Mr. BAKER. Well, would the Senator say 7 or 7:30?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Yes, in order to finish tomorrow at 3 o'clock, but even then, Senators may be shut off from debate on their amendments at 3 p.m.

Mr. BAKER. My final concern is with reference to the statement by my friend from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE), that we would receive notice the day before if we were going to run beyond 7 o'clock. If that is so, I should like to be put on that list.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I know of no such list.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that time on any amendment be limited, to instead of 30 minutes, to 20 minutes, the time to be equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and this is a point I wanted to make before—the Senator from West Virginia indicated to the Senator from Tennessee that this vitiated the 1-hour cloture rule.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Only if we were able to get unanimous consent to the package agreement earlier proposed.

Mr. DOMINICK. I happen to be one of those who do not have amendments, but I may want to talk on an amendment or talk on the bill, and I would hate to give up my hour without any agreement.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Without an agreement, the Senator will not lose his right.

Mr. DOMINICK. That is correct. Without an agreement, I would not be losing my right. But if we got a unanimous-consent agreement, I would, as I understand.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. But the request I now propose is only with respect to time on amendments.

Mr. DOMINICK. But objection has already been made to that.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. But I am now proposing a different consent request.

Mr. AIKEN. If the Senator believes that we can postpone completing this work tonight and come in tomorrow, would it be possible to complete the bill and get a final vote on it before the adjournment for Easter?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Yes, I think so. The idea, in trying to get a definite time limitation, is to accommodate Senators who wish to make plane reservations to go afar. Some of them want to get away by 3 o'clock p.m. tomorrow.

Mr. AIKEN. I would be willing to agree to a time limitation for tonight. If we are to come in tomorrow, we might just as well strike this proposal.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I will be glad to try again.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that time on any amendment be limited to 15 minutes, 10 minutes to the proposer of the amendment and 5 minutes to the manager of the bill, with time on any amendment to an amendment, motion, or appeal limited to 10 minutes, to be divided in accordance with the usual form, with section 3 of rule XII being waived, with time under the cloture rule being vitiated, and that the vote on final passage of the bill occur at no later than 10 o'clock tonight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. PACKWOOD and several other Senators objected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I will make a final effort. I renew my request that time on any amendment be limited to 15 minutes, to be divided 10 minutes to the mover of the amendment and 5 minutes to the manager of the bill, with 10 minutes on any rollcall votes for the remainder of the bill; and that the warning bells be sounded after 2½ minutes. I shall make no further request.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, how long will we be going tonight?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I am not going to attempt to answer that question. When Senators are ready to quit, I shall be glad to move to adjourn. As long as Senators want to stay, I will stay.

Mr. PASTORE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask that the time that has been utilized be charged to me under the rule and that no time be charged to the able Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON).

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, under section 3 of rule XII, to whom is the debate that is taking place being charged?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been assigned to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute. I have used only 1 minute, so the parliamentarian has advised me; and I certainly do not intend to use the whole hour.

I believe there is only one way out of the situation, and that is to move to table the bill. I move that the bill be laid on the table, and I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senator from California had the floor before yielding to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield for the purpose of allowing the Senator from Alabama to make his motion?

Mr. CRANSTON. No, I do not.

Mr. ALLEN. I thought the Chair had recognized the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California has the floor. The Senator from California yielded to the Senator from West Virginia for a unanimous-consent request.

AMENDMENT NO. 1177

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1177 and ask that it be stated.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, my congratulations to the Senator from California.

Mr. CRANSTON. I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. President, this is mainly a technical amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CRANSTON. I yield.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, as I understand, there is no time limitation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an existing agreement of a half-hour on each amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is superimposed on the 1 hour that each Senator has under the cloture rule.

The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

S. 3044

On page 5, line 19, following the word "office", insert the words ", and if, in a State which registers voters by party, that said party's registration in such State or district is equal to 15 per centum or more of the total voter registration in said State or district".

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, this is largely a technical amendment which will, I believe, improve on the committee's intent in section 501(8) of S. 3044. As written, the bill provides that if only one political party qualifies as a major party entitled to full funding, a political party whose candidate received in the last election less than 25 percent of the total votes cast in that election but more than 15 percent would qualify as a major party. I believe that that provision was included because of concern expressed by several Senators, including myself, that occasionally in a two-party State an incumbent may be sufficiently popular as to receive more than 75 percent of the vote in a given election.

I support section 501(8) of the bill, but I wish to suggest that it be modified to take into account the following situation which has arisen this year in California.

There are five incumbent Democratic Congressmen who are facing no Republican opponents this fall. However, in two of these districts there are candidates seeking the nomination of the Peace and Freedom Party and of the American Independent Party. It therefore appears likely that on the November ballot these two Democratic Congressmen will find themselves opposed by nominees of these minor parties. It is entirely possible that Republicans or Democrats wishing to vote against the Democratic incumbent for whatever reason would vote for a minor party candidate. Thus, a minor party candidate will become the recipient of such protest votes and could conceivably receive 15 percent of the total vote cast. As a result in the 1976 election, under the provision of the bill as it is before us, either of the minor parties might be entitled to receive full funding as a major party. The fact is that in neither district does either party have as much as 1 percent of the total voter registration in the district.

Therefore, Mr. President, I would like to suggest that in addition to receiving 15 percent of the votes cast in the previous election, a party, in order to qualify as a major party, should also have voters in the district equal to at least 15 percent of the total registered voters.

That is what my amendment would do. It adds the language:

and if, in a State which registers voters by party, that said party's registration in such State or district is equal to 15 percent or more of the total voter registration in said State or district.

This would prevent the unjust enrichment of the political coffers of minor parties who have no basis for being treated as major parties.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 20 seconds. The eloquence of the Senator from California has convinced me of the merits of his amendment, and I am prepared to accept it. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CRANSTON. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All remaining time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment (No. 1177) of the Senator from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRANSTON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1125

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I call up my Amendment No. 1125, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. CRANSTON's amendment (No. 1125) is as follows:

On page 15, line 18, strike the words "primary or".

On page 15, line 20, strike the words "primary or".

On page 15, line 21, strike the words "(a) or".

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, this amendment, incidentally, is cosponsored by the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE).

As presently written, S. 3044 provides that a candidate unopposed in a primary or general election can spend only 10 percent of what he would be able to spend if he had opposition. I have no objection to this restricted spending limit for a candidate unopposed in a general election. The primary, however, is a totally different matter.

Let me give two examples of what might happen if the bill is enacted in its present form:

The most likely situation would involve an incumbent unopposed in his own primary, while two—or more—individuals seek the nomination of the other party. The two challengers might well decide that the best way to win their party's nomination is to campaign against the incumbent—with each challenger ignoring the other. Thus the incumbent would be subject for a period of several weeks or months to a campaign against him by two opponents, both of whom would be permitted to outspend him 10 to 1.

A second example involves a primary election where the incumbent has nominal opposition and the person seeking the nomination of the other major party is unopposed. The incumbent would ignore the opponent within his own party and campaign on his record for a period of weeks or months during which time he would be able to outspend his real challenger in the other party by 10 to 1.

Both situations are obviously inequitable and unfair.

Let me point out the situation which I face this year, and what might happen under a public financing system with this limitation on primary spending.

As it happens, I have two virtually unknown opponents in my own Democratic primary in June. Neither man is conducting a visible campaign, to the best of my knowledge. It is for all practical purposes, then, that I am unopposed, and it could well have been that neither man filed and thus I would have been actually unopposed.

There are four highly visible, active candidates seeking the Republican nomination for the U.S. Senate. All four are raising money and all four have to be classed as serious candidates for the Republican nomination.

As the bill is written, these four candidates would be entitled to spend $4½ million campaigning against me during a period of at least 4 months, while I would be able to spend only a hundred thousand dollars defending myself against their attacks. Now it is true, under the bill the situation would be equalized under the general, with each candidate able to spend the same amount. But the huge disadvantage of being outspent better than 40 to 1 in the primary might well create an insurmountable disadvantage from which a candidate could not recover.

There has been some suggestion that the 10-percent figure might be changed, allowing an unopposed candidate in a primary to spend 20 percent. At 20 percent, I would be able to spend only 5 percent of what my opponents could spend. At 50 percent I would be able to spend only 12½ percent of what my opponents could spend.

Even if my amendment is accepted, with four opponents all of whom may be conducting their primary campaigns by running against me, I would be outspent 4 to 1. But at least no one candidate would be able to spend more than I would be permitted to spend.

There is an additional disadvantage for an unopposed candidate of such a limitation in the primary. Much of the groundwork for the general election must be laid in the primary. The candidate's campaign organization must be put together, for if the candidate waits until the general election, he will find that both staff and workers have been preempted by other candidates and campaigns. He must travel, he must speak, he must make public appearances—even though he may decide not to put on a substantial media campaign. All of these activities cost money.

Finally, he may wish to begin his direct mailing solicitation of small contributions during the primary—the cost of which, in a State like California, could quickly eat up the total amount a candidate would be allowed to spend.

I suspect—and this is another very serious objection, I believe, to the present language of the bill—that it the bill is enacted in its present form, no candidate of either party would ever allow himself to be unchallenged. This could lead to nonserious candidates put up by serious candidates of either party—or by the parties themselves—to assure that the serious candidate receives full funding. Such a situation would be unhealthy, unwise, and might well lead to a greater need for Federal funding than would be the case if an unopposed primary candidate were allowed to spend as much as an opposed primary candidate—and if he chose to. Under a matching system, I doubt that an unopposed primary candidate would, under normal circumstances, raise or spend as much as a candidate with opposition.

My amendment, No. 1125, would simply strike any reference to the primary from section 504(c) of the bill. I urge Senators to support the amendment.

I am delighted to yield to my distinguished cosponsor of the amendment, the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE), on his time.

Mr. DOLE. I will use my time, but I would like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COOK. What does the Senator mean, on his time?

Mr. DOLE. I have 48 minutes left, or 43.

Mr. COOK. Well, there are 30 minutes on an amendment. Is the Senator utilizing time on the amendment, or on his hour?

Mr. DOLE. Both.

Mr. COOK. All right. That makes sense.

Mr. DOLE. As I understand it, the Senator from California would strike section 504(c)?

Mr. CRANSTON. We would strike the provision that makes it impossible to spend more than 10 per cent in a primary.

Mr. DOLE. All right. As a cosponsor of the amendment, I should know what it does, but I wanted to make certain.

I agree with the Senator from California. As discussed with him earlier, I believe the present provisions will lead to the serious primary candidate having a non-serious primary opponent, if he is faced with a tough general election to permit him to spend a greater total amount.

We are going to see more and more efforts to evade or avoid the law if this restriction remains. I support the amendment and am pleased to cosponsor it with the Senator from California.

I also raise the question, How do we know when we are going to be opposed in a primary? In Kansas, the filing deadline is June 20. I started campaigning a year ago. In the process, I have spent a great deal of money—for a small State like Kansas—making preparations for a primary, if I have one, and if not, then for the general election.

I may yet have a primary because we have several months before June 20. Seems to me this is one of the restrictions in the bill which makes the entire proposition at least appear to be unworkable. I have made expenditures based on the supposition that I could have a primary. If unopposed then I can only spend 10 percent and the rest must be charged, I guess, against what I might have spent in the general election. This is not fair so I believe the amendment would be helpful.

Mr. CRANSTON. I think the Senator from Kansas very much.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Kansas has made a very good point about the fact that a person may be campaigning long before he finds out that they are not going to have a primary and he might well have spent more than the 10-percent limit we have in the bill. It is a valid point and I am willing to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, during the course of the past 2 weeks we have examined and debated many facets of S. 3044. Many of us have questioned specific provisions of the legislation on conceptual and practical grounds. We have questioned the effect such legislation might have on our two-party system, on challengers seeking to unseat incumbent officeholders and on the faith of the American people in their elected leaders.

In addition, several Senators have questioned the wisdom of spending millions of tax dollars to pay for political campaigns. Others have introduced amendments designed to tamper with the mechanics of the legislation; to raise this limit or lower that spending ceiling.

I have supported many of these amendments and I have joined in raising practical and theoretical questions concerning the wisdom of this approach to campaign reform. The voting on the various amendments we have considered convinces me that there is a majority in this body willing to go along with S. 3044 regardless of the consequences.

It is clear that the pressure for reform is enough to force many Senators to go along with a proposal that might easily create more problems than it will ever solve. The argument has been cast in a way that allows those in favor of S. 3044 to appear as heroes in the press while those of us who oppose it are made to look like the villians of the piece.

In fact, however, the legislation under discussion is far too important and far too complicated to be decided on the basis of slogan and lobbyist pressure. We have an obligation to look at the facts, to analyze the specifics of the legislation before us and at least to guess at the consequences that might follow its passage.

That, in my view, is what those who question the wisdom of the bill have been trying to do for some time now.

It would be unfortunate if we were to move to a vote on this legislation without a thorough discussion of the constitutional implications of some of its provisions. As I indicated when I introduced my amendment No. 1140, I hoped thereby to stimulate a discussion of these implications.

Briefly, my amendment would eliminate the expenditure ceilings imposed by section 504 of S. 3044 on Federal candidates, retaining them only as ceilings on the maximum amount of Federal money a candidate might receive. Thus while every major candidate would be assured of adequate funds to wage a campaign, there would be no overall ceiling on campaign expenditures on behalf of a given candidate.

I have introduced the amendment in this form because most constitutional experts who have analyzed campaign reform proposals of the kind we are debating today have concluded that limits on total expenditures raise the most serious constitutional questions. It is their belief that such limits are necessarily violative of the first amendment and would be found unconstitutional if a proper case were brought before the Supreme Court.[1]

In a moment, I will analyze the reasoning that leads so many scholars to this conclusion. At this point, however, I would simply like to note that some who are supporting overall limits today were not at all sure of their constitutionality when we were debating the 1971 Federal Election Campaign Act.

The senior Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), for example, who now seems so certain that S. 3044 deserves our support, evidently felt at the time of our earlier debate of this issue that a limit on total expenditures would raise grave constitutional questions.

He said at that time that a ceiling on total expenditures "is a step that cannot be justified except under the most stringent circumstances, in accord with the standard of 'clear and present danger', established long ago by the Supreme Court as the test by which denials of free speech under the first amendment must be measured. To me, no ceiling on total campaign spending in present circumstances can meet this test." [2]

As we get into the discussion on this question I hope the Senator from Massachusetts and others who like to consider themselves civil libertarians will try to square their views on the first amendment with their support of this legislation. It is my feeling that try as they might they will not be able to do so because I am convinced that S. 3044 directly infringes on the freedom of speech and association guaranteed to all Americans by that amendment.

I realize that there has been popular pressure for reform in the wake of Watergate and believe that most of those who are supporting S. 3044 are doing so because they want to respond to the perceived need for some sort of reform, and because they have not really though about the constitutional questions that troubled the Senator from Massachusetts only 3 years ago.

But good intentions are not enough; good intentions alone will neither guarantee good laws nor protect the laws we do pass from a stringent, critical examination by the courts. This is especially true when we pass legislation that limits freedom of speech—and that is exactly what we are going to be doing if we pass S. 3044 as presently written.

Thus, as Prof. Martin Redish pointed out in a New York University Law Review article:

> To argue that campaign spending limitations . . . may violate the First Amendments is in no way to contend that the problems with which these measures deal are not serious difficulties, nor, for that matter, that they would be ineffective in solving them. But the courts have felt compelled to invalidate laws intended to foster legitimate societal interests because of their conflict with the First Amendment in many situations.[3]

Redish's point is, of course, precisely the point that I have made: The fact that S. 3044 was drawn up by well-meaning men to solve a problem they perceived as important will not get it past a court interested in defending the right of free speech as defined by the first amendment.

Thus in 1971, with the best of intentions, we passed the Federal Election Campaign Act, portions of which have already been struck down as unconstitutional by a three-judge panel here in the District of Columbia.

Just last fall, Judge Bazelon ruled for the panel that title I of that act is unconstitutional. In the case of ACLU against Jennings, the Court avoided a general decision on spending limits per se, but did conclude that our attempt to close spending loopholes violated free speech guarantees.

And in an amicus brief, filed in that case, the New York Times described our work as "shot through with constitutional deficiencies" and "patently inconsistent with basic first amendment freedoms." If we do not examine the constitutional problems inherent in the legislation now before us we are liable to have our handiwork described in even harsher terms by higher courts in the future.

It is at least possible that the limited discussion of the constitutional problems inherent in this bill is a direct result of Common Cause's attempts to assure would-be supporters of the legislation that it does not present a constitutional problem. To this end, Common Cause's lobbyists have circulated a legal memorandum that discounts the constitutional questions. I have referred this memorandum to Prof. Ralph Winter of the Yale Law School, for his analysis.

Based on what Professor Winter tells me, the Common Cause memorandum may be charitably described as slovenly, professionally incompetent, and in its use or misuse of citations, grossly misleading. I ask unanimous consent to have printed at the conclusion of my remarks his analysis of some of the more obvious flaws in this memorandum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McINTYRE). Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, we should realize that in spite of Mr. Gardner's assurances to the contrary, constitutional experts feel spending limits do raise serious and probably fatal constitutional questions. Thus, a number of constitutional scholars have argued that the first amendment has as a primary objective the encouraging of the dissemination of information to voters so as to aid them in the performance of their electoral functions.[4]

The Supreme Court gave voice to this aspect of the first amendment in New York Times against Sullivan.[5] In that decision the Court gave firm support to the view that self-government requires that the public be able to be exposed to a full range of opinion about matters of public concern. The case itself did not involve an election, but it did involve an elected official about whom allegedly libelous statements had been published. The Court held that the first amendment precluded an award of damages in the absence of a showing of "actual malice."

The Court's reluctance to countenance actions that might limit the public's right of access to political information was also a deciding factor in Mills against Alabama,[6] a case involving a law passed for admirable purposes by well-meaning men.

The Mills case impresses me as interesting in that it dealt with an Alabama law prohibiting the solicitation of votes on election day. The legislature enacted the law as a campaign reform measure to prevent emotional or slanted last-minute appeals to which an opposition candidate could not reply. The case arose when the publisher of the Birmingham Post-Herald was convicted of running an editorial on election day that urged voters to vote in a certain way.

In overturning the publisher's conviction, Mr. Justice Black wrote:

> Whatever differences may exist about interpretations of the First Amendment, there is practically universal agreement that a major purpose of that Amendment was to protect the discussion of governmental affairs. This, of course, includes discussions of candidates, structures and forms of government, the manner in which government is operated or should be operated, and all such matters relating to the political processes.[7]

In commenting on the Mills decision, Professor Redish observes that:

> Once it is recognized that a significant purpose of the First Amednment is to insure that the public will be provided with information necessary to the performance of its self-governing function, it follows that information disseminated in the course of an election campaign must rank high in terms of First Amendment values.[8]

A thorough reading of these cases demonstrates rather clearly that the Court views with suspicion any regulations or laws having the effect of reducing the total amount of discourse or discussion on public questions. If this is so, it is difficult to see how the Court could uphold spending limitations of the kind included in S. 3044.

Still, those who support spending limits and have considered the constitutional problems seem to believe that the power and, indeed, the duty of the Congress to regulate Federal elections must be balanced against first amendment considerations and that in such a balance considerations of free speech must give way to the perceived need for such limits to guarantee a "clean" electoral system.

No one denies that Congress has the right to regulate Federal elections, but this does not automatically mean that laws designed to accomplish this will not be struck down if in conflict with the first amendment.

The problem has been summarized clearly in a 1972 article by the editors of the Columbia Journal of Law and Social Problems:

> Any limit on a candidate's right to purchase the use of communications media limits his ability to speak effectively to his fellow citizens, and may limit their right to be informed of his identity and positions on political issues.[9]

It goes without saying that the same reasoning applies with equal or even greater force to any citizen not a candidate who is prevented from publishing his views of a candidate by virtue of limitations on spending.

The question then is whether the restrictions on free speech contemplated by the authors of this legislation can be justified constitutionally. Though the majority of the Court has generally rejected what might be termed the absolutist view of the first amendment championed by the late Justice Black, it has nevertheless been extremely reluctant to allow laws that limit freedom of speech to stand.

Thus, as the Court stated in Konigsberg against State Bar in 1961, valid restrictions on freedom of speech must fall within one of two categories:

> On the one hand, certain forms of speech, or speech in certain contexts, have been considered outside the scope of constitutional protection . . . On the other hand, general regulatory statutes, not intended to control the content of speech, but incidentally limiting its unfettered exercise, have not been regarded as the type of law the First . . . Amendment forbade Congress . . . to pass, when they have been found justified by subordinating valid government interests, a prerequisite to constitutionality which has necessarily involved a weighing of the government interest involved.[10]

The first category here includes cases involving advocacy of overthrow of the government, obscenity, and other cases where the speech itself is offensive to the public safety or to morals. I do not know of anyone who seriously contends that campaign rhetoric resulting from present spending levels falls within this category.

The second category includes a number of cases involving situations in which the government while in pursuit of some legitimate goal, restricts or curtails freedom of speech as a means of achieving that goal. To validate a law in this category the Court conducts a sort of "balancing test" of the kind alluded to in the Konigsberg language I quoted a moment ago.

Some experts, such as Profs. Ralph Winter and Alexander Bickel, also of the Yale Law School, take the position that the balancing test would be inapplicable in a case involving expenditure limitations. As Winter has testified before the Senate Commerce Committee:

> There is no countervailing interest . . . to "balance" against a campaign restriction on speech inasmuch as the restriction is imposed not to preserve some other legitimate interest of society but solely for the sake of restricting the speech itself . . .[11]

Thus, Professor Winter would find himself in agreement with Mr. Justice Black's opinion in Barenblatt against United States:

> There are, of course, cases suggesting that a law which primarily regulates conduct but which might also indirectly affect speech can be upheld if the effect on speech is minor in relation to the need for control of the conduct. With these cases I agree . . . But (they did not) even remotely suggest that a law directly aimed at curtailing speech and political persuasion could be saved through a balancing process.[12]

The question then is whether a limit on political spending is, in fact, a law "directly aimed at curtailing speech."

Winter's position on the question seems most in line with recent constitutional thought, though I recognize that some would disagree. The Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK) quoted Prof. Archibald Cox on the floor of the Senate a few days ago to the effect that limitations on spending are not really limitations on speech because they are limitations "once removed."[13]

I have great respect for Professor Cox and for his opinions, but I am afraid this contention strikes me as a bit far-fetched.

Prof. Joel Fleishman of Duke University considered this question in a 1971 study of campaign reform legislation that is worth reading and quoting:

> It is exceedingly unlikely that the Court would create a new category of unprotected speech particularly for political speech and association, since it has been continually shrinking the vitality of the pre-existing categories of obscenity, libel, "fighting words" and "speech plus". With the possible exception of the last, those categories would See footnotes at end of speech.

indeed be strange bedfellows for an activity that the Court has called "the essence of self-government" and to argue that the presence of money converts political speech into "speech plus" would . . . deny protection entirely to most forms of political campaigning.[14]

Mr. Justice Douglas would no doubt agree with Professor Winter and have trouble with Professor Cox's reasoning if he still stands by what he wrote in United States against United Auto Workers some years ago:

The making of a political speech up to now has always been one of the preferred rights protected by the First Amendment. It usually costs money to communicate an idea to a large audience. But no one would seriously contend that the expenditure of money to print a newspaper deprives the publisher of freedom of the press. Nor can the fact that it costs money to make a speech—whether it be hiring a hall or purchasing time on the air—make the speech any the less an exercise of First Amendment rights.[15]

Thus, Mr. Justice Douglas, like Professor Fleishman and Professor Winter, would be forced to class a limit on expenditures with a limit on speech. By so classifying it, he would also be forced to rule it an unconstitutional infringement of a vital freedom.

To sum up this point, let me return again to Professor Winter:

A limit on what a candidate may spend is a limit on his political speech as well as on the political speech of those who can no longer effectively contribute money to his campaign. In all the debate surrounding the First Amendment, one point is agreed upon by everyone: no matter what else the rights of free speech and association do, they protect explicit political activity. But limitations on campaign spending and contributing expressly set a maximum on the political activity in which persons may engage . . . The First Amendment prohibits the setting of a legal maximum on the political activity in which an individual may engage. This is the case whether or not the maximum is imposed in the name of equalizing or whether an actual discriminatory effect can be shown. Even under a "balancing" test, such regulation is invalid because there is no countervailing interest (for example, preserving public peace) to "balance" against the restriction on speech.[16]

But even if we assume for the sake of argument that Professor Cox and his friends at Common Cause could convince a court that spending limits are indirect or incidental as opposed to direct limits on political speech, it is still not at all clear that a court would find them constitutional.

Mr. Justice Rutledge described the burden supporters of laws incidentally affecting the publicizing of citizens' views must bear in the 1948 Supreme Court case of United States against Congress of Industrial Organizations:

The loss inherent in restrictions upon expenditures for publicizing views . . . forces upon its authors the burden of justifying the contraction by demonstrating in dubitable public advantage arising from the restriction outweighing all disadvantages, thus reversing the direction of presumptive weight in other cases.[17]

This is a difficult test and a heavy burden; a test and a burden, I submit, that the limits in this bill cannot pass and its authors are not able to bear.

The supporters of limits of the kind included in S. 3044 evidently believe they can meet this test by arguing that only by imposing such limits can we purify our electoral process. By turning the concept of free speech on its head, they are forced to argue that the imposition of restrictions will have the effect of expanding rather than contracting First Amendment rights.

Mr. President, I find this second argument novel and worthy of examination. But first I must point out that many experts disagree with the first argument.

Indeed, after an examination of the evidence, the majority of those who have written on campaign reform in general have rejected spending limitations as unwise, unneeded and probably unconstitutional. Given this fact, the authors and supporters of S. 3044 will undoubtedly have an extremely difficult time demonstrating the "indubitable public advantage" the courts would be looking for as evidence that such a law should be sustained.

But let me return now to the argument that by limiting speech we would be expanding it. This argument was summarized in the 1972 issue of Harvard Civil Rights—Civil Liberties Law Review which argued that a limitation would prevent "either side from flooding the media with a single point of view . . . (and) prevent one candidate from destroying, by sheer volume rather than by reason, the effectiveness of informational advertising presented by opposing candidates." [18]

This is an interesting view, but one that Professor Flieshman notes—

Assumes that someone—presumably Congress—knows how much information is the right amount and reflects a basic distrust in the capacity of individual citizens to discount the greater volume of political advertising in reaching their decisions.[19]

Professor Redish also rejects this rather novel argument saying that while:

It is generally argued that a wealthy candidate should not be permitted to "buy an election" with his finances and that legislated limits on campaign spending are therefore necessary. The reasoning implicit in this argument seems to be that when one candidate's financial resources are limited, the only equitable solution is to require the wealthier candidate to reduce his spending to a level approximating that of his opponent. In other words, if a portion of the voting public is to be generally unfamiliar with one candidate's view and records because of his financial inability to become well known, it is only fair that the public be almost as uninformed about the other candidate. Such reasoning presents at the very least a prima facie conflict with the first amendment policy of encouraging as much communication in the political realm as possible.[20]

I state that if my amendment is adopted we will retain Federal financing at the stipulated levels, thereby assuring all candidates of adequate money with which to bring their own platforms into the view of the public without venturing into the unconstitutional realm of stating that no more than legislative limits may be spent

I have to agree with Redish, Winter, and Fleishman on these points. It seems to me beyond question that spending limitations of the kind under consideration are in violation of the first amendment.

I recognize that the Supreme Court has never faced a case involving these limitations, but in analagous cases a majority has always followed a line of reasoning that if applied to expenditures limitations would force a finding of unconstitutionality.

Let us not forget that portions of the 1971 act have already been declared unconstitutional and that we have an affirmative obligation to square our actions with the dictates of the Founding Fathers. There is no way we can do that and still support S. 3044 as written.

Before I conclude, I would like to return to the statement by the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) 3 years ago. I have read the memorandum Common Cause has prepared supporting the constitutionality of spending limits and I have read as much of the literature on the subject as time has permitted.

The fact that strikes me is that to argue in support of the constitutionality of these limits requires one to accept a theory of the first amendment that civil libertarians have uniformly rejected as antithetical to the concept of free speech in a democratic society.[21]

I only hope that those who, like the Senator from Massachusetts, have reversed field and have either accepted the argument that such limits on political discourse can be justified or are ignoring the question, realize that they are promoting a view of the Constitution that might prove dangerous to the very concept of a free society.

It is a view that I, for one, cannot accept and I, therefore, urge the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the footnotes referred to in my prepared text.

There being no objection, the footnotes were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXHIBIT 1

MEMORANDUM ON THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF S. 3044 AND DEFECTS IN THE COMMON CAUSE MEMORANDUM ON THE SUBJECT

This memorandum is in response to your inquiry concerning the legal memorandum submitted by Mr. John Gardner of Common Cause during Senate hearings on campaign reform last fall. I am familiar with that memorandum, and in my judgment it misrepresents the state of present case law by misstating the important of revelant Supreme Court decisions and by relying on precedents which most scholars agree have lost their vitality. This analysis is not as detailed and specific as I would like because such an analysis will require more time to prepare, but I do herein attempt to point out some weaknesses in the Common Cause argument.

Ironically the Common Cause memorandum relies on a number of decisions that have long been the target of much criticism from many of those who now vigorously support S. 3044. Common Cause's position incorporates what can only be described as a horse and buggy view of the first Amendment.

The Common Cause memorandum makes several arguments to which I shall respond seriatem.

I. CAMPAIGN SPENDING IS AN ASPECT OF FREEDOM OF SPEECH AND RESTRICTIONS THEREON RAISE CONSTITUTIONAL PROBLEMS

Common Cause argues that Campaign Financing is more action than speech and thus more regulatable by Congress. According to the memorandum, private Campaign Financing should be viewed as essentially analogous to picketing and demonstrations. Even if this is the case, however, the power of Congress to impose restrictions must be very, very limited, for it is quite clear from relevant Supreme Court decisions that peaceful picketing and demonstrations which merely advocate certain ideas of public interest are not subject to governmental restriction. If Common Cause is in fact right in the argument it makes, then presumably Congress could pass a law restricting the number of demonstrators that could come to Washington on behalf of a cause. If the law, as the quotation from Professor Freund suggests, restricts the protection to acts of verbal communication, only then Congress might declare that being a part of a large peaceful demonstration is not protected by the First Amendment.

Common Cause also argues that private Campaign Financing is "all too often only an attenuated form of bribery: the donation of money is likely to communicate to the candidate the information that the donor seeks either a direct quid pro quo . . . or, more usually, an indirect form of influence, such as access or consultation". This sweeping charge alleges too much; for all kinds of political activity create an indistinguishably analagous situation. For example, Common Cause's willingness to spend large amounts of money to purchase advertising attacking Congressmen who disagree with the group's views creates precisely the same indirect form of "influence" and also guarantee Mr. Gardner's lobbyists access to those Congressmen who fear Common Cause's well-financed wrath.

One may also question whether Common Cause is willing to make such a sweeping statement when directed at Congressmen and Senators with whom it is in sympathy rather than with whom it disagrees. The logic of Common Cause's statement strongly suggests, for example, that Chairman Rodino is unable to exercise independent judgment during the present impeachment inquiry because of the large contributions he receives from organized labor which strongly and vigorously supports impeachment of the President. Such implications should be rejected.

In the event that the Common Cause assertions are true, it is truly a case of overkill to call for a widespread attack on private financing rather than more precise legislation aimed at bribery.

Private campaign financing does, contrary to Common Cause assertions, perform valuable functions in the political process and must be viewed as an aspect of political freedom.

"All political activities make claims on society's resources. Speeches, advertisements, broadcasts, canvassing, volunteer work—all consume resources. Money is the medium of exchange by which individuals employ resources owned by others. If political activities are left to private financing, individuals are free to choose which activities to engage in, on behalf of which causes, or whether to do so at all. When the individual is deprived of this choice, either because government limits or prohibits his using money for political purposes or takes his money in taxes and subsidizes the political activities it chooses, his freedom is impaired.

Money is fungible with other resources suitable for political use and, distributional questions apart, the individual who contributes a resource directly, for example, time and labor, is in many ways indistinguishable from the individual who contributes money which in turn purchases time and labor. Money, it must be conceded, though, is the most "fungible" resource.

Campaign contributions, therefore, perform honorable and important functions. The contribution of money allows citizens to participate in the political process. Persons without much free time have few alternatives to monetary contributions other than inaction.

Campaign contributions are also vehicles of expression for donors seeking to persuade other citizens on public issues. Contributing to a candidate permits individuals to pool resources and voice their message far more effectively than if each spoke singly. This is critically important because it permits citizens to join a potent organization and propagate their views beyond their voting districts. Persons who feel strongly about appointments to the Supreme Court, for example, can demonstrate their convictions by contributing to the campaigns of sympathetic senators.

Nor is there anything inherently wrong with contributing to candidates who agree with one's views on social an economic policies, even where those policies may benefit the donor. Obviously, groups pursue their self-interests and seek support from others. This is a salient characteristic of a free political system. Those who seek to regulate that kind of contribution can stand with those who would deny the vote to welfare recipients to prevent that vote from being "bought" by promises of higher benefits. So long as we accept the bestowal of economic favor as a proper function of government, potential recipients will tend to exchange this support for such favors.

Contributions of this sort may represent broad interests that might otherwise be underrepresented. Suppose land developers mount a campaign against proposals to restrict the use of large undeveloped areas. Certainly they represent their own economic interests, but they also functionally represent potential purchasers, an "interested" group that would otherwise go unnoticed since few persons would consider themselves future purchasers at the critical moment.

These functions of campaign contributions are often ignored because critics of the present system mistake cause and effect. A senator may support union causes because he receives large union contributions but in fact it may be more likely that he receives contributions because he supports the causes.

Contributions also serve as a barometer of the intensity of voter feeling. In a majoritarian system, voters who feel exceptionally strongly about particular issues may be unable to reflect their feelings adequately in periodic votes. As members of the anti-war movement often pointed out, the strength of their feelings as well as their numbers should have been taken into account. If a substantial group feels intensely about an issue, a system which does not allow that feeling to be heard effectively may well be endangered. Campaign contributions are perhaps the most important, and least offensive, means by which the intensity of feeling can be expressed. People who feel strongly about United States support for Israel, for example, are able to voice that conviction with greater effect through carefully directed campaign donations than in periodic elections in which the stance of the available candidates does not permit a clear signal to be given.

This function might be discounted if large contributions reflected only intense but idiosyncratic views. For the most part, however, intense feelings will not generate substantial funds unless large numbers of citizens without great wealth also share those convictions. Campaign contributors in these circumstances serve as representatives or surrogates for the entire group. That Mr. X, who favors free trade, can make larger contributions than Mr. Y, who does not, really matters little, if Mr. Z agrees with Mr. Y and gives heavily.

Candidates seeking change, moreover, may have far greater need for, and make better use of, campaign money than those with established images or those defending the existing system. Money is, after all, subject to the law of diminishing returns and thus generally of less use to the well-known politician than to the newcomer. The existence of "seed money" may be an important agent of change.

The challenge to the arguments that private campaign financing enlarges political freedom and contributes stability to the system is essentially distributional: because money is maldistributed throughout the society, its use in political campaigns undesirably skews the political process by allowing wealthy individuals too much power. As noted present evidence does not demonstrate that monetary support is available only for certain ideas. Quite the contrary, it strongly suggests that a wide array of causes and movements on the right and left can attract money. Still, individuals can increase their personal political power through contributions, and even if they functionally represent like-thinking but poorer people, it might be argued that wealth nevertheless is skewing the process.

This argument rests on the assumption that by reducing the personal political power of the large contributor, political influence will be spread more evenly through the society. Such an assumption seems almost surely wrong, for limitations on the use of money may aggravate rather than diminish any distortion. Direct access to the resources most useful for political purposes may be even more unevenly distributed than wealth.

For example, restrictions on private campaign financing may well enhance the power of those who control the media, particularly if public subsidies are modest in size and thus increase candidate dependence on the goodwill of the media. Limitations on the use of money must also increase the relative power of individuals with large amounts of free time and the ability to attract public attention. Finally, groups with the ability to take their money "underground" and operate independent "issue" (rather than "political") campaigns will have their power increased. It has been reported, for example, that unions favor a ban on contributions because their own power would be relatively increased as a result of the host of "indirect contributions" they can provide.

What emerges is the likelihood that restrictions on private campaign financing will not increase the political power of the people generally but will further concentrate it in already powerful segments of the community. Ironically, the increment will largely fall to various sectors of the well-to-do, because direct access to resources useful for political purposes (free time, control of the media, ability to operate "issue" campaigns) is concentrated not in the poor but in the wealthy. Private campaign financing in short may in fact be a means of spreading political power and expanding the range of discourse.

The call for regulation of campaign financing can be extended to other kinds of resources and could easily become a call for substantial limitations on political freedom. The allegations about the influence of money reflect a basic and disturbing mistrust of the people.

If campaign financing really "distorts" legislative or executive behavior, candidates can raise its effect as an issue and the voters can respond at election time. The call for legislation must be based on the belief that the voters cannot be relied upon to perceive their own best interests. If one really believes the people are this easily fooled and in need of this protection, however, there may be no end to the campaign tactics eligible for regulation and no end to calls for increases in the power of those "protecting" the public.

II. LIMITATIONS ON PURCHASES OF POLITICAL ADVERTISING ARE UNCONSTITUTIONAL

Common Cause argues that it is permissible for Congress to place a limitation of $1,000 on any individual or committee expenditure on behalf of a candidate. It is ironic that the limit supported is a fraction of what Common Cause has spent on newspaper advertising attacking Congressman Hays for opposing this very kind of legislation under S. 3044. No one individual or committee would be able even to purchase a full page ad in the New York Times stating its views on the election of a particular candidate under the terms of S. 3044. That calls for such legislation come from organizations which have been wielding such financial power in purchasing advertising is both ironic and instructive.

The Supreme Court has held explicitly that paid advertising which comments on matters of public interest is protected by the First Amendment. This was the explicit holding in the New York Times v. Sullivan. Two other decisions of the Court made clear that such advertising doesn't lose constitutional protection because the advertisers are seeking "action on laws in the hope that they may bring about an advantage to themselves and a disadvantage to their competitors . . . to disqualify people from seeking a public position in matters which they are financially interested would itself deprive the government of a valuable source of information and . . . deprive the people of their right to petition in the very instances in which that right might be of the most important to them". Eastern Rail Road Presidents conference V. Noerr Motor Freight, 365 U.S. 126, 127 (1961).

Common Cause attempts to escape the conclusions in these cases by distinguishing between organizations which address themselves to public issues and do not endorse or support candidates and organizations which do endorse candidates. The distinction, however, is totally irrational. Consider Common Cause's own advertisements referring to representative Hays. The legal distinction Common Cause would make discriminates between that kind of advertisement and the very same advertisement which concludes by advising Hays' constituents to vote against him.

Common Cause would add to the advertisements now prohibited by statute communications by an organization to its members. But why should one's statements to members be covered, while one's statements to one's neighbors are not, simply because they appear in the form of a newspaper advertisement.

Beyond that, what Common Cause suggests creates a huge loophole in the act. All special interest organizations need do now is use their money to purchase advertising supporting candidates on the issues but stopping short of explicit endorsement. Indeed, the statute for that reason probably increases the power of special interests over the electoral process and thereby further limits the influence of the individual citizen.

Finally, the distinction Common Cause makes is not explicitly set out in S. 3044. Indeed, it is not at all clear from the language of that statute whether Common Cause's advertisement about Representative Hays would not in fact be prohibited if made during an election campaign.

III. S. 3044 IS NOT SAVED FROM CONSTITUTIONAL CHALLENGE ON THE GROUNDS THAT IT PRESERVES THE INTEGRITY OF THE ELECTORAL PROCESS

Common Cause argues in its memorandum that ceilings on campaign contributions and expenditures are constitutional because they are designed to preserve the integrity of the electoral process. This claim is an example of the group's gross misrepresentation of the effect this legislation might have. Limitations on expenditures necessarily assist incumbent officeholders. This is particularly true when the incumbent is setting the level. The incumbent has the advantage of being well-known as well as the in kind benefits the Government provides such as offices, a staff, access to mailing privileges, access to media facilities, etc. All of these can be turned to political advantage and give incumbents an advantage that can be overcome only if a challenger can raise and spend an amount of money sufficient to off-set it. S. 3044 includes extremely low limits and is therefore essentially an incumbent's bill. For example, the average spent by challengers who unseated incumbents in House races in 1972 amounted to $125,000. No limit even suggested in the Congress approaches that figure. If the legislation passes no challenger will be able to spend close to that amount.

The idea proposed by Common Cause that "this is an area in which the Court should properly refer to the expertise of Congress . . . might be considered ludicrous were it not so seriously made. The expertise of incumbents is in maintaining their incumbency. Any legislation and particularly legislation which can be turned to the advantage of incumbency so easily should be scrutinized with the greatest of care.

IV. S. 3044 CANNOT BE JUSTIFIED ON THE GROUNDS THAT IT EFFECTUATES FIRST AMENDMENT RIGHTS OF LESS AFFLUENT CITIZENS

Common Cause has argued that legislation such as S. 3044 is justified on the grounds that it protects first amendment rights of less affluent citizens by:

(1) "protecting the ability of even poor candidates to run for office,

(2) by preventing the drowning out of other political viewpoints by the best financed voices,

(3) by assuring the equality of the voting rights of the less affluent citizens by limiting the influence on candidates of affluent contributions."

Even if these goals might justify the severe restrictions included in S. 3044, there is no basis to believe the legislation will effectuate them. Quite the contrary, it is likely to be counter-productive in that respect.

Candidates and causes which begin without substantial sums have traditionally relied on large contributors or patrons. What they need has been called by some "seed money"—and is likely to come only from a small number of large contributors. S. 3044 does not give money to candidates that do not already have substantial support.

There is no reason, moreover, to anticipate that less affluent persons would be better off under S. 3044. As I have already indicated above, the greater advantage of the wealthy is the free time they can devote to politics as well as their ability to get into the public eye through "non-political" activities. S. 3044 maximizes rather than minimizing many of the advantages of the relatively more affluent.

For many of the same reasons S. 3044 will not prevent the "drowning out of contrary viewpoints or insure the equality of voting rights of less affluent citizens." S. 3044 will not spread political power throughout the society. What it will do is give an advantage to those with direct access to resources which are easily put to political purposes. Those with free time (students and the wealthy), those who control the media (the wealthy), and those organizations which can run "issue" campaigns (wealthy organizations) will all have their power increased. The poor and the powerless will be helped not at all.

The whole point of the exercise now going on in Congress is not the cleansing of the political process but the skewing of it. Those in power are seeking to maximize that power instead a number of special interest groups which attempt to wield influence to the use of money in forms of money other than campaign contributions are seeking to increase their power.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1140.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 6, beginning with "that—" on line 20, strike out through "contributions" on line 24, and insert in lieu thereof "that no contributions".

On page 7, line 15, strike out "spend" and insert in lieu thereof "receive".

On page 48, lines 18 and 19, strike out "616, and 617" and insert in lieu thereof "and 616".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. President, are we under a time limitation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 15 minutes on each side. The Senator has 15 minutes plus the time remaining from his 1 hour.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I call up the amendment and ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with. It reads like gobbledygook, but its effect is to remove the ceiling on overall expenditures. In other words, all those portions of the bill that would place a total limit on campaign expenditures would be excised. As I explained earlier, however, it would preserve the Federal financing aspects of the bill.

Mr. President, I would also like to send to the desk a modification of my amendment and ask unanimous consent that it be accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the modification is made.

The modification is as follows:

On page 4 of the amendment, after line 20, insert the following:

On page 65, between lines 6 and 7, insert the following:

EXPEDITIOUS REVIEW OF CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS

SEC. 214. Title IV of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

JUDICIAL REVIEW

"SEC. 407. (a) The Federal Election Commission, the national committee of any political party, and individuals eligible to vote for President are authorized to institute such actions, including actions for declaratory judgment or injunctive relief, as may be appropriate to implement or construe any provision of this Act or of Chapter 29 of title 18, Unite dStates Code. The district court shall immediately certify all questions of constitutionality of this Act to the United States court of appeals for that circuit, which shall hear the matter sititng en banc.

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law or rule any decision on a matter certified under subsection (a) shall be reviewable by appeal directly to the Supreme Court of the United States. Such appeal must be brought within 20 days of the court of appeals decision.

"(c) It shall be the duty of the court of appeals and of the Supreme Court of the United States to advance on the docket and to expedite to the greatest possible extent the disposition of any question certified under subsection (a)."

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, it is a modification that I am sure will prove acceptable to the managers of the bill. It merely provides for the expeditious review of the constitutional questions I have raised. I am sure we will all agree that if, in fact, there is a serious question as to the constitutionality of this legislation, it is in the interest of everyone to have the question determined by the Supreme Court at the earliest possible time.

Mr. President, I ask for a division and that the various provisions of my original amendment be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? There is none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that request and yield to me?

Mr. BUCKLEY. I yield.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I want to congratulate the Senator on what was a very forceful, thoughtful, and erudite speech. I was not so erudite, but I got on my feet and said, first, that we were being masochistic and we were being unconstitutional and we were dealing with public funds that I thought was a travesty on the taxpayers; but the Senator brought up a number of cases, over and beyond the three-judge-court case that I referred to, which has already ruled, in effect, that a limitation on expenditures is unconstitutional. This is in connection with S. 372.

So I congratulate the distinguished Senator. I suspect he is not going to win on a vote, but I think this may be very good history for the country and for the courts in determining what we are voting for when this bill finally goes down.

Mr. BUCKLEY. I thank the Senator from Colorado. I think that the constitutional aspects of the legislation before us have been almost totally ignored by the press, the Congress, and in most of the discussions we have seen in columns and editorials. Yet, the importance of protecting the first amendment in all its aspects, especially in its political aspects, is so essential to a free society that I urge this body not to be swept into enacting legislation that we will all live to regret; legislation that will most assuredly be found to be unconstitutional once its key provisions are tested.

It is for these reasons that I have offered my amendment. I understand it may be an exercise in futility; yet I think the effort must be made.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BUCKLEY. I yield.

Mr. NUNN. I understand the Senator's constitutional question, and I think he has performed a real service in bringing it out in clear fashion. I would like to ask, however, what his amendment does.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Its effect is to eliminate limitations on total expenditures by or on behalf of a candidate. It does not affect the public financing aspects of this bill. It assures that, within the limitations set, all candidates for Federal office will be provided with public campaign funds. My intent is as I indicated in my formal remarks to raise the important constitutional questions that I feel should be answered before we vote on final passage.

Mr. NUNN. But it would eliminate the overall limitation on what a candidate could spend in a campaign?

Mr. BUCKLEY. Yes, and on what may be contributed, though not on the limits on what an individual could legally contribute.

Mr. NUNN. It simply affects what a candidate could spend.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Yes.

Mr. NUNN. Does it affect the subceilings on advertising and media expenses?

Mr. BUCKLEY. No, my concern is with the problems raised by a ceiling on total spending.

Mr. NUNN. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute.

I certainly would like to support the amendment of the distinguished Senator from New York, but without taking a position on that or having a vote on it, I would like to direct a motion to the bill as a whole, and if that fails, then the Senator's amendment would still be in order.

Mr. President, I move that the bill and pending amendment be now laid on the table, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM), and the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. STENNIS), are necessarily absent.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY), and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. YOUNG), are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT), is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 57, as follows:

So the motion to table the bill (S. 3044) was rejected.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield briefly to me?

Mr. BUCKLEY. I yield to the majority leader.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on the pending amendment, which I understand is divided into two parts—and I understand that if need be he intends to ask for a rollcall vote on both—there be a limitation of 10 minutes. This meets with the distinguished Senator's approval and that of the leadership and the managers of the bill on each of the two parts, if there is a rollcall, the time to be equally divided between the Senator from New York (Mr. BUCKLEY) and the manager of the bill, the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON), and that the votes on each, if any, be limited to 10 minutes. That would include, may I say, before the final judgment is made, a motion to table as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, as the distinguished majority leader has stated, my amendment is divided into two parts. I shall ask for the yeas and nays on the first part.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. The Senator will suspend until order is restored.

The Senator may proceed.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me on my time?

Mr. BUCKLEY. Gladly.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, the second part of the division of the amendment of the Senator from New York relating to judicial review is acceptable to me, and I would like to propose, if he wishes me to, that I would accept that part of the division. That is, as I understand, agreeable to the Senator.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I am delighted. I had hoped that the managers would accept it.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator will, then, ask for the yeas and nays on the first part?

Mr. BUCKLEY. Therefore, I ask for the yeas and nays only on the first part.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCINTYRE). The question is on agreeing to the second part of the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York may proceed.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

The Senator from Nevada may proceed.

Mr. CANNON. For the benefit of my colleagues who were not here during the discussion, the distinguished Senator from New York raised the constitutional question as to a limitation on contributions and expenditures. Basically, that is what this amendment does: It just removes all limitations on contributions and expenditures. Accordingly, I am opposed to the amendment, and I hope it will be defeated.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I just want to clarify one point. My amendment does not affect limits on individual contributions. The limitations written in the bill remain. What my amendment does do is lift the ceilings on total expenditures.

In other words, as I understand it, at a certain time the total contributions received by a candidate reach the statutory limit now written into this bill, and then no one can come along and choose to express his support of that candidate by contributing additional money to him.

In my remarks, I cited the opinion of any number of constitutional lawyers to the effect that such a limitation is clearly violative of first amendment freedom of speech and association.

Mr. President, if the distinguished Senator from Nevada has yielded back his time, I yield back the remainder of mine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All remaining time has been yielded back.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. COOK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCINTYRE). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) to lay on the table part 1 of the amendment of the Senator from New York (Mr. BUCKLEY). On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), and the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. STENNIS), are necessarily absent.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY), and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. YOUNG), are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT), is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 64, nays 21, as follows:

So Mr. PASTORE's motion to lay the first part of Mr. BUCKLEY's amendment on the table was agreed to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, the Senate is quite tired. It has been a long day. It has been a hard day. We will have another long day tomorrow, I am afraid.

It is my understanding that the distinguished assistant majority leader, the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD), has already gotten permission for the Senate to come in at 9:30 a.m. tomorrow.

It is my further understanding that a number of Senators have special orders for the purpose of conducting two colloquies.

It is anticipated that sometime around 12 o'clock or shortly thereafter, the next amendment, whichever it may be, will be pending. I would hope that some Member of the Senate who is going to offer an amendment will lay it before the Senate so that it will be the pending business at the conclusion of morning business.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I would be delighted to call up my amendment now.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Offer it right now.

AMENDMENT NO. 1153

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1153 and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

TITLE VI—REVIEW OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS INCOME TAX RETURNS

On or before July 1 of each and every year year hereafter, the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation shall obtain from the Internal Revenue Service all returns of income filed by each Member of Congress for the five previous years. Upon receipt of such returns, the committee staff shall submit such income returns to an intensive inspection and audit for the purpose of determining the correctness with respect to the Member's tax liability.

Upon completion of its inspection and audit, the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation shall prepare and file a report of the results of its inspection and audit with the committee chairman who shall thereupon forward a copy to the Member concerned and to the appropriate officer of the Internal Revenue Service for such further action with respect to such return as the Internal Revenue Service shall deem proper.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas be here sometime shortly after 12 o'clock tomorrow to begin debate on his amendment?

Mr. TOWER. I will be glad to come in, as the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) has already suggested, at 5 o'clock in the morning. (Laughter.)

Mr. MANSFIELD. We have special orders.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas consider a reduction of the time on his amendment from 30 to 20 minutes?

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, perhaps it could be dispensed within 15 minutes, if I may have 10 minutes and the manager of the bill 5. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. The manager of the bill says that will be fine with him. So, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a time limitation on the Tower amendment now pending of 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, there will be no further votes tonight. This will conclude the consideration of the pending business at the moment.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, is there something which precludes me from speaking for 5 minutes tonight?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Well, we wanted to start it tomorrow. Too many Senators are tired right now.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Calendar No. 744, S. 3231, a bill to provide indemnity payments to poultry and egg producers and processors be limited to not to exceed 1 hour when it is called up tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inquire, does that time include the bill and the amendments?

Mr. MANSFIELD. There are no amendments, I understand. Not to exceed 1 hour on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that there are three amendments at the desk.

Mr. MANSFIELD. All right. Within that, I ask unanimous consent that there be 10 minutes on each amendment, to be equally divided and controlled between the manager of the bill and the sponsor of the amendment.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—assuming that the amendments are germane to the bill?

Mr. MANSFIELD. They have to be germane to the bill.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I am a cosponsor of one of the amendments. How much time was allocated to the amendment, 10 minutes?

Mr. MANSFIELD. 10 minutes.

Mr. JAVITS. That is only 5 minutes to a side. Will you give us 10 minutes on the amendment we are interested in?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Not to exceed—well, the one that Senator JAVITS is interested in, let that time limitation be 20 minutes, with 10 minutes to a side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, now there are some nominations which were reported from the Foreign Relations Committee today unanimously, relative to appointments in the United Nations.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session to consider those nominations, which were reported earlier today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNITED NATIONS

The second assistant legislative clerk read the names of the following persons to be Representatives of the United States of America to the Sixth Special Session of the General Assembly of the United Nations:

John A. Scali, of the District of Columbia.

William E. Schaufele, Jr., of Ohio.

John H. Buchanan, Jr., U.S. Representative from the State of Alabama.

Robert N. C. Nix, U.S. Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Clarence Clyde Ferguson, Jr., of New Jersey.

Barbara M. White, of Massachusetts, to be the Alternate Representative of the United States of America to the Sixth Special Session of the General Assembly of the United Nations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are considered and confirmed.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, may I ask the clerk whether there are any further nominations reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations today?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are no other nominations.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

CALENDAR CALL

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 750, Senate Concurrent Resolution 81, and Calendar No. 752, S. 3304.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMERICANS MISSING IN SOUTHEAST ASIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 81) relating to unaccounted-for personnel captured, killed, or missing during the Indochina conflict, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order at this time that the technical amendments be considered en bloc and approved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 81), as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution, as amended, with its preamble, reads as follows:

Whereas the Agreement on Ending the War and Restoring Peace in Vietnam, signed in Paris on January 27, 1973, and the joint communique of the parties signatory to such agreement, signed in Paris on June 13, 1973, provide that such parties shall—

(1) repatriate all captured military and civilian personnel,

(2) assist each other in obtaining information regarding missing personnel and the location of the burial sites of deceased personnel,

(3) facilitate the exhumation and repatriation of the remains of deceased personnel,

(4) take such other steps as may be necessary to determine the fate of personnel still considered to be missing in action; and

Whereas the Government of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam and the Provisional Revolutionary Government of Vietnam have failed to comply with the obligations and objectives of the agreement and joint communique, especially the provisions concerning an accounting of the missing in action; and

Whereas the Lao Patriotic Front has failed to supply information regarding captured and missing personnel or the burial sites of personnel killed in action, as provided in the Laos agreement of February 21, 1973, and the protocol of September 14, 1973; and

Whereas it has not been possible to obtain information from the various Cambodian authorities opposed to the Government of the Khmer Republic concerning Americans and international journalists missing in that country: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that new efforts should be made by the Government of the United States through appropriate diplomatic and international channels to persuade the Government of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam, the Provisional Revolutionary Government of Vietnam, and the Lao Patriotic Front to comply with their obligations with respect to personnel captured or killed during the Vietnam conflict and with respect to personnel still in a missing status; that every effort should be made to obtain the cooperation of the various parties to the conflict in Cambodia in providing information with respect to personnel missing in Cambodia; and that further efforts should be made to obtain necessary cooperation for search teams to inspect crash sites and other locations where personnel may have been lost.

SEC. 2. The Government of the United States should use every effort to bring about such reciprocal actions by the parties to the peace agreements, including the Government of the Republic of Vietnam and the Royal Lao Government, as will be most likely to bring an end to the abhorrent conduct of the Government of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam, the Provisional Revolutionary Government of Vietnam, and the Lao Patriotic Front regarding the missing in action.

SEC. 3. The Congress declares its support and sympathy for the families and loved ones of the Americans missing in action, who have suffered such deep human anguish for so long due to the undisclosed fate of the missing in action.

SEC. 4. Upon agreement to this resolution by both Houses of the Congress, the Secretary of the Senate shall transmit a copy of such resolution to the President of the United States.

INDEMNIFICATION FOR LOSS OR DAMAGE TO ARCHEOLOGICAL FINDS OF PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

The bill (S. 3304) to authorize the Secretary of State or such officer as he may designate to conclude an agreement with the People's Republic of China for indemnification for any loss or damage to objects in the "Exhibition of the Archeological Finds of the People's Republic of China" while in the possession of the Government of the United States was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of State or such officer as he may designate is authorized to conclude an agreement with the Government of the People's Republic of China for indemnification of such Government, in accordance with the terms of the agreement, for any loss or damage suffered by objects in the exhibition of the archeological finds of the People's Republic of China from the time such objects are handed over in Toronto, Canada, to a representative of the Government of the United States to the time they are handed over in Peking, China, to a representative of the Government of the People's Republic of China.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PERMISSION FOR SENATOR BARTLETT TO APPEAR AS A WITNESS

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, on behalf of the minority leader, the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HUGH SCOTT), I send a resolution to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the resolution.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Whereas Senator Dewey F. Bartlett, a Member of this body, has been served with a subpoena to appear as a witness before the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Oklahoma, to testify at 9:30 o'clock A.M. on the sixteenth day of April, 1974, in the case of United States v. Leo Winters et al; and

Whereas it is the sense of the Senate that by virtue of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States said court has no authority to compel the attendance of any Member of the Senate as a witness before said court during his attendance at any session of the Senate; and

Whereas, under the Standing Rules of the Senate, no Senator may absent himself from the service of the Senate without leave of the Senate: Therefore be it

Resolved, That Senator Dewey F. Bartlett is granted leave to appear as a witness before the district court of the United States in the case of the United States v. Leo Winters et al, at a time when the Senate is not in session or at a time when Senator Bartlett determines that such appearance will not interfere with his duties in the Senate.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be submitted to the said court.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF THE UNFINISHED BUSINESS, S. 3044, TOMORROW

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the orders for the recognition of Senators tomorrow are concluded, the Senate resume consideration of the unfinished business, S. 3044.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT FROM TOMORROW UNTIL 10 A.M. FRIDAY

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business tomorrow, it stand in adjournment until 10 a.m. Friday. I ask this merely for insurance purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, the program for tomorrow is as follows:

The Senate will convene at 9:30 a.m.

After the two leaders or their designees have been recognized under the standing order, the following Senators will be recognized, each for not to exceed 15 minutes, and in the order stated: Messrs. BIDEN, ROTH, MUSKIE, HATHAWAY, CLARK, BIDEN again, STEVENS, NELSON, JAVITS, HARTKE, ERVIN, MONDALE, MATHIAS, STENNIS, and ROBERT C. BYRD.

SENATE FLOOR DEBATES ON
S.3044
APRIL 11, 1974

Organized labor has much money to pursue its political goals. In the 1972 presidential campaign, it spent an estimated $50 million. Neil McBride, labor writer for the Associated Press, estimates that backing by COPE is worth $10 million to a presidential candidate.

Moreover, while much is said about the contributions by business to various political candidates, little has been said about labor's assistance which, for instance, totalled $191,295 to members of the House Judiciary Committee alone. Of that total $30,293 went to Chairman Peter Rodino, and all but $2,100 went to Democrats. Indeed, some 98 per cent of labor's political muscle is exerted in behalf of Democrats.

The AFL–CIO already has some scalps hanging on its belt in the 1974 elections. More than a dozen labor groups were active in the 12th district in Pennsylvania to support the winner, Rep. John Murtha. Labor forces also claim credit for the election of Rep. Richard Vander Veen in the 5th district in Michigan.

Finally, not the least source of confidence among labor leaders that they are on their way to having a veto-proof Congress is the determined pressure in Washington for public financing of campaigns and strict limitations on campaign spending. If the contributions to those whom labor opposes are reduced, then the unions' non-financial contributions will be all the more effective.

If Congress has a goal of assuring fair elections it can do no less than place a dollar value on indirect assistance by such groups as COPE so that all candidates at least have equal campaign handicaps.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, is there any further morning business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATHAWAY). Is there any further morning business? If not, morning business is concluded.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATHAWAY). Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume the consideration of the unfinished business, S. 3044, which the clerk will state.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

S. 3044, to amend the Fedreal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER), No. 1153, with the time thereon to be divided 10 minutes to the Senator from Texas and 5 minutes to the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON).

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. President, this amendment provides that on or before July 1 of each year, the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation shall obtain from the Internal Revenue Service all returns of income filed by each Member of Congress for the previous 5 years. After receipt, the committee shall submit these returns to an intensive inspection and audit for the purpose of determining the correctness with respect to the Member's tax liability. The report of the committee shall be forwarded to each Member and to the Internal Revenue Service.

It does not take long to realize that this is the procedure which was followed on the income tax returns of President and Mrs. Nixon.

The question posed in this amendment is simple: will Congress vote to bring upon its Members the same, intensive audit that President Nixon underwent? Today's vote will provide the answer.

When certain facts about the president's income tax were leaked to the media some months ago, President Nixon stepped forward and offered the joint committee the opportunity to review his return. The committee did so and found the President owing. But, much to his credit, the President said he would pay every last cent he owed— and he even denied himself the appeals recourse available to every other American citizen.

I believe it is only right that the Congress take the same steps to insure that our quest for fiscal integrity not only extends to the executive branch, but to the legislative as well. If some members of Congress who were so eager to see the President's tax returns gone over with a fine-tooth comb would vote "yea" today, we would have passage with very few dissenters.

In this day of distrust for public office holders. I think it is imperative that members of Congress—as well as the President—open their tax returns for public inspection. The legislation which I propose is an important and essential part of any campaign reform. It, in my opinion, would do much to improve the attitude of the American people toward their elected representatives.

I strongly urge adoption of this amendment.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Montana (Mr. MANSFIELD).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, this morning, the distinguished Senator from Vermont asked for, through the leadership, and was granted, the privilege of consideration.

It is my intention to make that same request at the conclusion of my brief comments.

What I intend to do, if the Senate will allow me to do so, is to offer an amendment to the Tower amendment so that on page 1, line 6, after the word "Congress," to insert the following:

Each employee or official of the executive, judicial, and legislative branches whose gross income for the most recent year exceeds $20,000,

Mr. President, this is a proposal which I have been trying to have accepted by the Senate for more than a decade, because I feel that as long as we have three equal branches of Government, all three should be treated the same.

First, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent at this time that the amendment which I have just proposed be considered in order as an amendment to the Tower amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, if the amendment is considered, does that bar me from the use of my remaining time?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Not at all, because it comes within the 15 minutes, as I interpret it.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I will not object, but I intend to speak against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I offer my amendment at this time and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Amendment to amend No. 1153, on page one, line six, after "Congress" insert ", each employee or official of the Executive, Judicial, Legislative Branch whose gross income for the most recent year exceeds $20,000,.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, my intention is to ask for the yeas and nays on this, but first I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished assistant majority leader, the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD) be added as a cosponsor of the amendment, as well as the distinguished Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I would assume that as the sponsor of the original amendment, I have additional time to argue against the amendment of the Senator from Montana (Mr. MANSFIELD)?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me briefly, on my time, I would ask that the name of the distinguished Senator from Florida (Mr. CHILES) also be added as a cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I think that the amendment of the Senator from Montana would impose too great a burden on the joint committee and its staff because it would involve thousands of people. They are not elected public officials. My purpose with my amendment was to have the elected Members of Congress, the coordinate branch with the executive branch, submit to the same kind of scrutiny that the President of the United States has been subjected to. He and the Vice President are the only two elected members of the executive branch

Therefore I think that the scope of the amendment should be confined at this time to elected Members of Congress.

I do not argue against the merits of what my distinguished friend from Montana seeks to do. It would seem to me that some other mechanism might be used for that purpose, such as the Comptroller General of the United States.

For that reason, I would not want to accept nor will I vote for the amendment of the Senator from Montana in its present form.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas will state it.

Mr. McCLELLAN.This amendment, if adopted, will it be subject to further amendment after adoption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator asking whether or not he can offer an amendment to this amendment?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes. After this amendment has been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator cannot do so without unanimous consent, unless this is an amendment that has been printed and is at the desk, and has been offered before cloture has been invoked.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I would have to have unanimous consent. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may offer an amendment after this amendment has been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, what is the time situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is now on the amendment of the Senator from Montana. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Senator from Nevada has 2 minutes remaining. The Senator from Texas has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I would simply like to ask the distinguished Senator from Montana if he would not alter his amendment to give this responsibility to the General Accounting Office rather than the joint committee, because I think the joint committee should focus on the returns of the Members of Congress and that that attention should not be diluted by their having also to pay attention to all these other matters.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Senator is proposing that the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana, which applies to the executive branch and the judicial branch, be under the supervision of the Comptroller General rather than the joint committee.,

Mr. TOWER. That is my suggestion, because I think the joint committee staff would have to be beefed up just to handle the returns of Members of Congress. If we go into all the myriad of bureaucarcy, it will be a formidable task.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I would be delighted to agree to that, because I want to assert the principle that many of us have been trying for more than a decade to assert, and that is to treat the three equal branches of government on an equal basis. If we are going to ask Senators to lay out their tax returns, then I think that members of the judicial branch and members of the executive branch earning $20,000 a year or more should accept the same responsibility. I am prepared to do it. I would be willing to.

I have been trying to do so for more than 10 years. So I would be glad to modify the amendment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment be modified along the lines of the suggestion made by the distinguished Senator from Texas.

Mr. CANNON. What is it?

Mr. MANSFIELD. It places it in the Comptroller General.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I had an amendment for that purpose.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the Senator join me in that change?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes.

I do not think the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue and Taxation should see our returns if we are not going to see theirs. I believe that this agency of Congress, the Comptroller General's Office, is the proper one to do it.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I think I can clear up this matter.

If the Senator from Montana would temporarily withdraw his amendment, I will ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment to bring the entire matter under the jurisdiction of the Comptroller General, and then I think that would make it a little more simple for the Senate.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I must respectfully decline to do so. I am interested in a principle I have been trying to achieve for more than a decade. I would not object to the distinguished Senator from Texas changing it from the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue and Taxation, which would have supervision, to the Comptroller General. But the principle I am trying to achieve has to stay in, so far as I am concerned; and it is the principle that the Senator from Arkansas, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, is likewise trying to achieve, insofar as the supervisory factor is concerned.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. If we are going to do this, then the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue and Taxation is not the body to examine the Senator's returns and mine. They are Members of this body. Who would audit their returns? It ought to go to the Comptroller General.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, in one way or another, instead of the joint committee having the supervisory responsibility, that function be transferred in the amendment now pending to the Comptroller General of the United States.

Mr. TOWER. I think the Senator from Montana misunderstood me. I was going to modify my amendment, which would make it easier for his amendment to be attached. That, then, would not require any modification on the part of his amendment.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That would be fine. If the Senator will ask unanimous consent to make that substitution as to what and who the supervisory agency would be, I have no objection. I am trying to retain in there the principle I have been trying to achieve.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order that I propound the unanimous-consent agreement to amend my amendment as follows——.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is so modified.

The clerk will read the modification.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment as modified.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the modification be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment as modified will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment as modified is as follows:

On page 1, line 4, strike "Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation" and insert "Comptroller General of the United States".

On page 1, line 7, strike "committee staff" and insert "Comptroller General of the United States".

On page 2, line 3, strike "its" and insert "such".

On page 2, lines 3 and 4 strike "Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation" and insert "Comptroller General of the United States".

On page 2, strike line 6 through "and to" on line 7.

On page 2, line 10, after "proper." insert "The Comptroller General of the United States shall deliver a copy of such report and results of such audit and inspection to the Members or candidate concerned.

"Section 2. The Internal Revenue Service shall assist the Comptroller General of the United States as necessary in administering the provisions of this title."

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. What is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. TOWER. Provided the unanimous-consent agreement I propounded is not objected to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unanimous-consent agreement has not been objected to, and it is so ordered.

Mr. TOWER. So that now the amendment of the Senator from Montana is in order. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Do Senators yield back their time on the amendment of the Senator from Montana?

Mr. TOWER. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. President, I would simply point out that this is exactly what we have required, in subtsance, elsewhere in the bill.

On page 79, we adopted heretofore, in S. 372—and it is in this bill—a provision, the Cannon amendment, in section 401.

The ony difference is between the amount of $20,000 and $25,000. In the bill as it now stands, it reads:

Who is compensated at a rate in excess of $25,000 per annum.

So the amendment of the Senator from Montana is $5,000 per annum more restrictive. But this requires a full and complete disclosure by every member of the executive, the legislative, and the judicial branches who is compensated in excess of that amount, and candidates for congressional seats, and the President and the Vice President, to make a full disclosure in accordance with the terms and provisions hereof; and it requires everything in there that is required on an income tax return.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I submit that disclosure and audit are not the same thing; that the Senator from Montana with his amendment and I with my amendment require an audit; whereas, all that the current provision of the bill provides is for disclosure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Montana. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), the Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM), the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH), are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH), would vote "yea."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. COOK), are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT), is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 71, nays 16, as follows:

So Mr. MANSFIELD's amendment to Mr. TOWER's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I voted against the Mansfield amendment to the Tower amendment earlier today but voted for the Tower amendment as amended as I wanted to make it clear I have not the slightest objection to having my own tax returns audited. Even though I am sympathetic with Senator MANSFIELD's concern for equality of treatment for Members of Congress, I voted against the Mansfield amendment as I feel it is wrong to simply single out the tax returns for the past 5 years of all legislative, executive and judicial branch employees making over $20,000 a year to be audited.

What is the manpower required by GAO to do this? No one knows. How many employees would this involve? No one could tell me before the vote, but it was assumed the number probably is in the hundreds of thousands.

How many millions of dollars a year will this cost? No one can tell me.

On a cost-effective basis, this could be an unnecessary waste of Federal Government funds. I am hopeful this amendment will never be implemented into law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas (Mr. MCCLELLAN) is recognized.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, due to the very strong possibility of a number of votes on amendments following one another, there be a time limitation of 10 minutes on rollcalls from here on out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I believe I have unanimous consent to offer an amendment at this time. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. President, the amendment which I intended to offer, and which I will now not offer, is the same modification that the distinguished Senator from Texas made to his original amendment. That modification corrects one of the flaws I observed in the original amendment. I did not want it; I did not think it was wise to have the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation auditing the Senator's return or my return. I did not know who was going to audit their's. I thought it was better to have the Comptroller General audit them. I am satisfied with the amendment.

Mr. GRIFFIN and Mr. TOWER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Texas. The yeas and nays have been ordered. All time has expired.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I am supposed to have some more time, because was not time assigned to the Senator from Montana?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No.

Mr. TOWER. That came out of my time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from Montana, was it not his intent that the results of such an extensive audit be made public information?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. TOWER. That is the intent of the Senator from Texas, so I want that understood as a part of the legislative history.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, when I voted for the Mansfield amendment to the Tower amendment, it was not my understanding that the opinions of the Comptroller General would be published. I had assumed that the purpose of the Senator from Montana was to make sure that the tax returns of everyone in the Federal Government receiving $20,000 or more would be given the closest scrutiny, so that any question or irregularities would be called to the attention of the proper authorities, and any questions resolved in accordance with normal procedures and subject to normal safeguards.

However, in light or the colloquy between the Senators from Montana and Texas, I will have to reverse my position, and vote against the Tower amendment as amended. I simply see no legitimate purpose, in fact, to be served through this gratuitous invasion of privacy.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. GRIFFIN. The question then is on the amendment of the Senator from Texas as amended by the amendment of the Senator from Montana. Is that not correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas, as modified, and as amended by the amendment of the Senator from Montana. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM), and the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH) are necessarily absent.

I further announced that, if present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH) would vote "yea."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG) and the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 69, nays 20, as follows:

So Mr. TOWER's amendment (No. 1153), as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1131 and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 76, between lines 18 and 19, insert the following:

"(3) For purposes of this section, with respect to a political committee which establishes, administers, and solicits contributions to a separate segregated fund supported by payments from a corporation or labor organization, as permitted under section 610, the term 'contribution' includes the fair market value of services which an individual who is an employee or member of such corporation or labor organization, respectively, provides to such a committee for, or for the benefit of, a candidate, or which such an individual provides to, or for the benefit of, a candidate at the direction of such a committee.".

On page 76, line 19, strike out "(3)" and insert in lieu thereof "(4)".

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a limitation of 15 minutes on this amendment, 10 minutes for the distinguished Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER), sponsor of the amendment; and 5 minutes for the distinguished Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON), who is in charge of the bill.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I wonder if we could have a little more time on this amendment. It is a very important amendment, and there are other Senators, including the junior Senator from Michigan, who are very much interested in making certain that the Senate knows and understands what the amendment is all about and how important it is.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I will certainly be agreeable to the granting of more time. May we make it 15 minutes to a side?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is agreeable to me.

Mr. President, I withdraw my request.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may require.

This is a very simple amendment. Nevertheless, without it this bill cannot be objectively considered to be the "comprehensive" proposal that the proponents of it maintain it is.

This proposal amends title III of the bill, specifically section 615, dealing with limitations on contributions. As the bill now stands, an individual contribution is limited to $3,000 per candidate for each election and $6,000 for a political committee. The amendment specifically addresses the nature of a contribution by such a political committee by stating that "for purposes of this section with respect to a political committee which establishes, administers, and solicits contributions to a separate segregated fund supported by payments from a corporation or labor organization, as permitted under section 610, the term "contribution" includes the fair market value of services which an individual who is an employee or member of such corporation or labor organization, respectively, provides to such a committee for, or for the benefit of, a candidate, or which such an individual provides to, or for the benefit of, a candidate at the direction of such a committee."

This amendment would, therefore, have the fair market value of services provided at the direction of a political committee established by a labor organization or a corporation to a particular candidate counted toward the political committee's contribution limitation.

Mr. President, unless this amendment or an amendment similar in scope is approved, this so-called campaign reform bill will be nothing more than a sham. I, myself, have some philosophical reservations about imposing a contribution limitation on individual expenditures. Nevertheless, such a limitation seems inevitable. Therefore, if this legislation is to achieve the goal of controlling the aggregate impact which special interests have on our electoral process, then the limitation must apply to all contributions and not just direct cash contributions.

As far as the impact of special interests are concerned, what difference does it make whether that influence is obtained by direct cash contributions or services rendered. The influence obtained, and the danger to the political process that this bill is said to address, is not retarded or controlled when organizations are allowed to contribute thousands upon thousands of dollars in noncash services to candidates.

Under the bill as currently before us, the individual American who wishes to contribute a small sum to the candidate of his or her choice is given a subservient status when placed alongside the types and levels of contributions this amendment seeks to control and limit. The integrity of the small contributor and his or her contribution remains in doubt.

This amendment treats corporations and organized labor equally. Admittedly it has been labor unions which have impacted upon our political system by making their members available to engage in political activity by working on a candidate's campaign, doing direct mail solicitations and other traditional forms of activity. Nevertheless, I wonder whether, if this bill is passed without this amendment, corporations also will shift their emphasis to providing services to a candidate rather than direct contributions. The end effect will be that the political process will be subject to the same abuses that were apparent long before this bill was drafted.

Mr. President, a recent article in the Wall Street Journal highlighted the extent to which noncash contributions have been utilized by one particular union—the International Association of Machinists.

I want to emphasize that the vast amount of contributions in the nature of services were only obtained through a discovery proceeding as part of a legal case brought by a number of union members who successfully alleged that their dues money was being used illegally. If it were not for this discovery proceeding, the information would never have been made public. I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNIONS AND POLITICS: MONEY'S JUST ONE TOOL MACHINISTS USE TO HELP FAVORED OFFICE SEEKERS—INDIRECT AID IS A BIG ITEM, COURT RECORDS INDICATE; HOW DEMOCRATS BENEFITED

(By Byron E. Calame)

LOS ANGELES.—Like the President himself, some of Richard Nixon's foes in organized labor have been surrending sensitive political records.

The International Association of Machinists, in a case initiated by a group of dissident members of the union, was forced by a federal court here to release thousands of documents. They reveal in unusual detail how the IAM goes about electing its friends to federal office.

This rare glimpse into the inner workings of one of the AFL-CIO's largest (800,000 members) and most politically active unions shows that there is a lot more to a union's political clout than the direct financial contributions reported to government watchdogs—and labor's political experts say the machinists probably adhere to the campaign spending laws as closely as any union.

The documents indicate that direct gifts are often overshadowed by various services provided free of charge to favored candidates under the guise of "political education" for union members. The indirect aid includes some of labor's most potent political weapons; assignment of paid staff members to candidates' campaigns, use of union computers, mobilization of get-out-the-vote drives.

TRIPS AND DINNERS

Dues have also been used, the documents indicate, to supply IAM-backed candidates with polls and printing services and to finance "nonpartisan" registration drives, trips by congressional incumbents back home during campaigns, and dinners benefiting office seekers endorsed by the machinists. Machinist-backed candidates are almost invariably Democrats.

An important question is whether these dues-financed activities violate federal laws that for decades have barred unions and corporations from using their treasury funds to contribute "anything of value" to candidates for federal office. Money for such direct contributions by unions must come from voluntary donations coaxed out of the members. The federal statutes do permit unions to spend dues for partisan politicking directed at the union's members and their families, on the theory that this sort of thing is internal union business, and the money used for this activity is called "education money," or "soft money."

The political activities of the machinists' union are, indeed, aimed at the union's members and are therefore proper, says William Holayter, director of the union's political arm, the Machinists Non-Partisan Political League.

DRAWING THE LINE

Even labor's critics concede that it is sometimes hard to draw the line between activities designed to sell a candidate to a union's members and those intended to sway voters in general. A member of the machinists assigned to promote a candidate among other machinists may inevitably find himself wooing other voters as well.

Still, the machinists' documents suggest that the union has often sought to provide maximum assistance to a candidate by use of soft money. "The problem," says one labor political strategist, "is that the machinists put too much in writing." The late Don Ellinger, the widely respected head of the Machinists Non-Partisan Political League who died in 1972, evidently had a penchant for memos.

Spending reports filed with the Senate for the 1970 campaign show that the Machinists Non-Partisan Political League openly gave Sen. Gale McGee $5,000; the internal records now disclose that the Wyoming Democrat also received at least $9,300 in noncash assistance. Direct donations to Texas Democrat Ralph Yarborough's unsuccessful Senate reelection bid in 1970 were listed at $8,950; one document indicates he got other help worth at least $10,680. While the league poured $15,200 directly into Democrat John Gilligan's unsuccessful 1968 bid for an Ohio Senate seat, the documents show it indirectly provided more, $15,500.

RECEIPT UNREPORTED

Available records indicate that few, if any, campaign committees for machinist-backed candidates listed indirect aid from dues money as contributions. Prior to a 1972 toughening of disclosure requirements, candidates evidently found it easy to spot loopholes that were used to avoid reporting such indirect assistance.

The dissident machinists who forced disclosure of their union's files had brought their suit with the backing of the National Right to Work Legal Defense Foundation. The dissidents wanted the court to bar the union from using dues money for any political activity—including such clearly legal endeavors as politicking directed at its own members and traditional union lobbying efforts. The real goal of the right-to-work foundation is to eliminate the forced payment of dues. A federal judge dismissed the suit Dec. 19, largely because the union offered to start rebating the dues of any member who disagrees with the union's stand on political or legislative issues. The dissident group appealed the decision Jan. 10.

One questionable arrangement of the machinists helped reelect Sen. McGee in 1970. Alexander Barkan, director of the AFL–CIO Committee on Political Education, asked the machinists early that year to put the names of 65,000 "Democrats in Wyoming" on the machinists' computer for the Senator's use in "mailings, registration, etc." The minutes of the Machinists Non-Partisan Political League executive committee show that Mr. Ellinger recommended handling the chore but warned that it would have to be financed with "general-fund money" (the league's separate kitty composed of voluntary donations) and would be considered "a contribution toward the Gale McGee campaign."

Despite the warning, internal records show that bills totaling $9,302.74 for the operation were paid out of the league's political-education fund, built from dues money. Computing & Software Inc. was paid $4,696.84, Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing Co. received $414, and $4,191.90 went to reimburse the IAM treasury for cards it provided.

Doubts about such arrangements may be raised in the coming report by the Senate Watergate committee. Though Republican hopes for public hearings on union campaign contributions will probably be disappointed, the committee staff has asked unions broad and potentially explosive questions about the services provided to candidates.

Watergate revelations, some union politicians believe, have demonstrated that labor can never collect enough rank-and-file donations to rival campaign contributions by business bigwigs. "There is no way we can match them," says Mr. Holayter of the machinists. "It's silly to try." Hence the importance of the indirect contributions.

This is one reason why the AFL–CIO is pressing for public financing of federal campaigns: its strategists obviously figure that a ban on direct contributions would leave labor in a better position relative to business than it is in now.

If past performance is any guide, the machinists' union would still be a valuable supporter for its political favorites if public financing were adopted. Its indirect assistance in staffers' time alone has totaled in the tens of thousands of dollars, the court documents show.

Printing is another campaign expense that the IAM often helps its friends meet. With the 1970 elections coming up, an aide to Rep. Lloyd Meeds passed to the machinists a bill for the printing of the Washington Democrat's quarterly newsletter. "The newsletter went to every home in the Second District," the aide rejoiced in one of the released documents. "We had a tremendous, positive response to it." Although the newsletter had been distributed far beyond the IAM's ranks in an election year, a soft-money check for $695.17 to the printer was quickly dispatched to a local union official.

Early in the 1972 reelection drive of Sen. Thomas McIntyre, the Machinists Non-Partisan Political League agreed to spend $1,000 "for assistance in newsletters" put out by the New Hampshire Democrat. And earlier, during Rep. John Tunney's successful 1970 bid for a California Senate seat, the league picked up a $1,740 tab for printing of a brochure that compared the Democrat's voting record with that of the GOP incumbent, George Murphy. Some of the brochures were passed out at a county fair.

The amount of union staff time devoted to candidates' campaigns is difficult to pin down. Irving Ross, a certified public accountant retained by the suing dissident machinists to analyze the IAM documents, filed an affidavit giving "incomplete" tabulations. Mr. Ross says the time that IAM "grand lodge representatives" and "special representatives" spent on campaigns in 1972 was worth $39,175. The amounts were $58,241 in 1970 and $42,921 in 1968, he says. The IAM says the figures are too high, but it didn't challenge them in court.

A status report prepared by the machinists political unit in late August 1970 shows that at least one field representative was working full time on each of over 20 congressional campaigns. IAM agents often become almost part of the candidate's campaign staff. When Robert Brown was assigned full time to Indiana Sen. Vance Hartke's reelection campaign in May 1970, he set up an office right in the Democrat's headquarters and had the title of chairman of the Indiana Labor Committee for Hartke. Another IAM representative, William Wolfe, was assigned to Yarborough campaigns in Texas in 1970 and 1972—and was being paid out of the union treasury in May 1972 even though a new law effective in April 1972 specifically barred a union from using dues money to pay for services rendered to a candidate, thus spelling out more clearly an old prohibition.

The union also takes machinists out of the shop for campaign duty, giving them "lost time" compensation out of dues money to make up for the loss of regular pay. Thus, the files show, two Baltimore machinists got $282.40 a week while working for the Humphrey presidential campaign for five weeks in 1968. A Maryland IAM official said later that the two "did a first-rate job, especially in smoking out the local Democratic politicians who were inclined to cut the top of the ticket" and persuading them not to do so.

Rep. Richard Hanna of California got $500 from the machinists to help finance a $6,000 "nonpartisan" registration effort to help get him reelected in 1970. In a letter requesting the union's aid, the Democrat predicted that the drive would "raise the district to at least 53.5% Democratic . . . because most of the unregistered voters are Democrats." He said the registrars would be preceded by "bird dogs," meaning that Democratic workers would roam out ahead of the registrar to identify residence of unregistered Hanna supporters.

The machinists' union's airline credit cards come in handy when incumbents are eager to get home in election years. Early in 1969, the executive committee of the machinist political unit authorized the expenditure of $3,600 to buy plane tickets home for unnamed "western Senators" during the following year's campaign. The league's "education fund" provided Sen. Yarborough and his aides with $705.60 worth of tickets during his 1970 reelection campaign. The files show that $500 went to Sen. Albert Gore, Democrat of Tennessee, during his losing reelection effort in 1970.

Machinist officials contend the organization pays for such travel because the candidate speaks to a union group or "consults with union leadership" in his district. But correspondence in the files indicates that this is more of a rationalization than a reason. Take a 1969 Ellinger memo to Sen. Yarborough outlining procedures "for all transportation matters." It states:

"We would like our files to contain a letter . . . indicating that you intend to be in Texas on a particular date to consult with the leadership of our union. If a trip includes a member of your staff, the letter should also name the staff member as being included in the consultation."

"Appreciation dinners" for Senators and Representatives often serve as a conduit for "soft money." Consider the ten $100 tickets the IAM bought to a 1969 testimonial gathering for Sen. Frank Moss, Democrat of Utah, who faced an election in 1970. "Since Moss is not yet an announced candidate, we can use educational money for this event and later consider this as part of our overall contribution," the minutes of the league's executive committee explain.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I want to emphasize that this amendment is drafted with the intent of controlling these kinds of noncash contributions without restricting voluntary services which an individual renders to a candidate solely at his own initiative independent from the political committee. The amendment is aimed at work done by employees of the corporation or members of the union which is under the control or direction of the political committee. The services could easily be contributed in the form of cash contributions but are not.

Mr. President, I say to all of my colleagues that if we are sincere about limiting individual contributions and consequently the aggregate impact which special interests have had on our electoral process, then we all must bite the bullet. It would be far worse to approve half-baked reforms than no reforms at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOWER. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. Would the Senator's amendment inhibit the granting of the use of a WATS line of a corporation, labor union, or Member of Congress?

Mr. TOWER. It does not prohibit it, but it must be charged against the limit, as far as its fair market value is concerned, that that organization can contribute.

Mr. AIKEN. If a corporation or a union feels that it would like to lend a fleet of cars for political purposes, would the amendment prohibit that?

Mr. TOWER. It would not prohibit it, but it would require that it be considered as a contribution within the limits imposed on the organization.

Mr. AIKEN. It would be charged to their allowable expense?

Mr. TOWER. It would be charged to their allowable, that is correct.

Mr. AIKEN. I thank the Senator. I have an amendment similar to this which I shall probably put in the RECORD later, but as long as the Senator from Texas has proposed his, it is so nearly like the one I have in mind that I probably will not offer mine.

Mr. TOWER. I thank my friend from Vermont.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOWER. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Suppose a person wanted to spend 10 days working on my or the Senator's campaign who happened to be a member of a union. How would the Senator handle that?

Mr. TOWER. This is a matter that I dealt with in my remarks. That would be legal, provided he was not doing so under the direction of his union or as an officer of a corporation, and it was not being done for or under the direction of the corporation or organization.

Mr. MAGNUSON. He could not be directed by the union?

Mr. TOWER. That is correct. In other words, if an official of BIPAC, let us say, which is a business and industrial political action committee, if an officer of that of that organization was working in a campaign at the direction of that committee, then his services would have to be counted.

Mr. MAGNUSON. But it in no way acts to prohibit an individual——

Mr. TOWER. No, I made that very clear, that this impacts not at all against the activities of individuals not under any control or direction.

Mr. MAGNUSON. They might take time out to do it on their own?

Mr. TOWER. That is right. I have individual volunteers working in my campaigns.

Mr. MAGNUSON. What would happen if a group of individuals got together on their own?

Mr. TOWER. That would be legal if they were not working under the direction of a political action committee.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOWER. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. THURMOND. In the event that an individual of that group was or several were inspired by a union, then what would be the effect?

Mr. TOWER. I think this would have to be a matter of adjudication, probably, to determine it. If there was a complaint that someone was working at the direction of the organization, it could, of course, be a matter for adjudication.

Mr. THURMOND. In other words, if the individual or the group, of their own free will and accord, without any direction, suggestion, or inspiration from the union, goes out and works, that is all right?

Mr. TOWER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. THURMOND. But if they do so under direction, suggestion, or inspiration from them, that would violate this section, is that correct?

Mr. TOWER. That is right.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOWER. I yield.

Mr. BIDEN. If the union endorses a candidate, and it so happens that an employee who is a member of a union ends up working for that candidate on his own, is it assumed that he is working for that union?

Mr. TOWER. No, it is not, and this would not be charged against any legal contribution that was made to the candidate by the organization endorsing him, as long as he is a self-starter, working on his own initiative and not under the direction of the contributing organization.

Mr. BIDEN. How is the direction determined?

Mr. TOWER. Well, if, for example, the union says, "All right, tomorrow morning you and you and you report to somebody's campaign headquarters and get to work and work 4 hours during the day," then you have to figure the fair market value of that 4 hours of labor as a part of the contribution. But if the individual union member, regardless of the fact that his union has endorsed a candidate, walks in and volunteers to work, that is his own business.

Mr. BIDEN. It sounds like a fairly equitable thing, but will it not turn out to be a sham? Will it not be understood that we are pulling another fraud on the American people?

Mr. TOWER. I think it depends on how the law is enforced. The whole act could be a sham, for all I know.

Mr. BIDEN. How could anyone legitimately enforce it, when there is no tighter determination as to what constitutes whether or not someone is working at the behest of a union leader? Suppose the union leader just says, "I think, TOWER, I like that guy BIDEN. Were I you, I would be out supporting the amendment and that ends it." Then you show up at my headquarters.

Mr. TOWER. If I had been coerced against my will——

Mr. BIDEN. You would not do that, would you?

Mr. TOWER. I would file a complaint.

Mr. BIDEN. I am not worried about coercion. I am worried about who determines whether you are chargeable to me.

Mr. TOWER. The court would make a determination of that, in a situation like that. The election commission—the organism set up in the bill

The point I am trying to make is if someone were directing a person to work in a campaign on the organization's time, someone who is an employee of that organization——

Mr. CANNON. That would be a direct violation of section 610 right now. That would be a violation of existing law.

Mr. TOWER. No, no—in a political committee.

Mr. CANNON. It is a violation for a union or a corporation to direct someone——

Mr. TOWER. That is not my understanding.

Mr. CANNON. To work in a campaign.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I was not intending to comment on the question of the distinguished chairman. If it is really a violation, then there would be no objection——

Mr. TOWER. That is right.

Mr. GRIFFIN. To accept the Senator's amendment. But I should like to ask a question on a different point, for purposes of trying to determine what the amendment does and would mean.

In 1970, in the election in Michigan for Governor, as I recall, there were allegations that the UAW gave members who were striking against General Motors at that time—in order to draw their strike benefits, they had to march in a picket line—the option, as I understand it, of going to work in the Democratic campaign. If they did work in the Democratic campaign then they were given credit as though they had walked the picket line and drew their strike benefits.

Would the Senator from Texas have some comment on what impact his amendment would have on that?

Mr. TOWER. It would be prohibited under the provisions of the amendment.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I thank the Senator from Texas.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STAFFORD). Who yields time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I simply point out that under section 610 of the Corrupt Practices Act at the present time, it is unlawful for any corporation whatever, or any labor organization, to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election, and so forth. Certainly, if a corporation or a labor union pays the salary of an individual and puts that person out to work for a candidate, that is unlawful. It is unlawful under existing law. I should like to know whether the Senator intends to go beyond that.

In section 610 as modified—we have amended 610 to clarify the definitions, and it says, as used in the section, the phrase "contributions or expenditures"—then it goes on to define them as follows:

But shall not include communications by a corporation to its stockholders and their families or by a labor organization to its members and their families on any subject; nonpartisan registration and get-out-the-vote campaigns by a corporation aimed at its stockholders and their families, or by a labor organization aimed at its members and their families; the establishment, administration, and solicitation of contributions to a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes by a corporation or labor organization: . . .

Is it the Senator's intention to change any part of that existing law that I have just referred to?

Mr. TOWER. It is the intention of the Senator from Texas. The language of the amendment reads this way:

For purposes of this section, with respect to a political committee which establishes, administers, and solicits contributions to a separate segregated fund supported by payments from a corporation or labor organization, as permitted under section 610, . . .

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Nevada has expired. Does the Senator yield himself additional time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I am not yielding to him on my time. He is using his own time. I cannot yield my time, so I am not using up my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator yielded to the Senator from Texas for a question on his 2 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Well, Mr. President, under the rule on cloture, a Senator cannot yield his own time. I would ask the Parliamentarian if that is correct. I yielded for a question but the answer has to come on the time of the person who is answering.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would state that the time does not come out of the other side.

Mr. CANNON. For answering a question? I am not answering a question. I am still listening. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWER. And I have already provided the answer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, most of this talk has been about labor organizations but the same kind of abuse can be practiced by a corporation as well. As I pointed out in my remarks, if this amendment is not passed, then corporations might be encouraged to contribute time and effort which is not measured in monetary terms.

The unions are solidly against this amendment, which is true, so in all probability it will not pass. Nonetheless, it should be understood it cuts both ways, against labor organizations as well as business organizations.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. CANNON. It would appear that what the Senator is attempting to do is to prohibit any volunteers who are in a separate organization, on a voluntary basis, from working, without charging that time. I presume that would apply to the young Republicans, to the young Democrats, or to any other organization.

Mr. TOWER. No. It applies only to section 610. The specific reference is made to section 610.

Mr. CANNON. It certainly reaches into the "separate segregated funds" in which we have already determined——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 1 minute of the Senator has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself another minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized for 1 additional minute.

Mr. CANNON. We have already tried to encourage the use of voluntary organizations and to encourage the establishment of "separate segregated funds" both in union organizations and in management organizations so that they can participate on a voluntary basis in the election process.

Mr. President, I submit that this is just an attempt to reverse the position that Congress has already taken and is well established.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time on this amendment has now been yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas (No. 1131).

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM), and the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH) would vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), and the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 48, as follows:

So Mr. TOWER's amendment (No. 1131) was rejected.

Mr. TUNNEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me briefly?

Mr. TUNNEY. I yield.

OUTER CONTINENTAL SHELF LEASES

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, yesterday I was notified that the Department of the Interior had accepted 91 bids for their Outer Continental Shelf oil and gas drilling rights off the coast of Louisiana. At the same time, I was informed that 23 bids were rejected on the basis of insufficient returns to the Government.

The total bonus payments to the United States from acceptable bids were $2,092,510,853.50 for the rights to drill on 421,218 acres off the Gulf of Mexico. As the amount offered for the 23 bids rejected totalled $82,584,660, I requested that I be informed as to the value that the Government placed on these leases per barrel of recoverable oil or M ft³ of recoverable gas. I was informed today by the Bureau of Land Management that a value of $5.50, $6.50, and $7.50 per barrell of oil had been used and a value of 45 cents, 55 cents, and 65 cents per M ft³ placed on the gas.

Mr. President, this is very interesting in that at the present time the Federal Government requires that this natural gas be sold in interstate market and further sets the rate at which this gas be sold. Since this average rate in the interstate market is now some 27 cents per M ft³ and much lower than the price established by the Federal Government on the value of the gas, it would seem to me that we are placing the industry itself at a great disadvantage. Accordingly, I intend to bring this matter to the attention of the Federal Power Commission and the Department of the Interior to determine if some reconciliation can be made concerning these valuable natural resources.

On several occasions on the floor of the Senate, I have raised my voice in opposition to the programs which have forced this Nation to become dependent on foreign powers for its energy fuels. I am convinced that we have not solved our problems, and while this Congress has passed a few pieces of emergency energy legislation, nothing has been done to address the long-range problems.

I submit to my colleagues that we must increase—not decrease—our efforts to find new energy sources and to develop those which we know to be available.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

AMENDMENT NO. 1136

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1136.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 9, line 24, strike out all through page 10, line 2, and substitute in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 503. (a) (1) Every eligible candidate is entitled to payments in connection with his primary election campaign in an amount which is equal to the amount of contributions received by that candidate or his authorized committees, except that no contribution received as a subscription, loan, advance, or deposit, or as a contribution of products or services, shall be taken into account.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TUNNEY. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a time limitation of 15 minutes on the pending amendment, 5 minutes to be allotted to the manager of the bill, the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON) and 10 minutes to the sponsor of the amendment, the Senator from California (Mr. TUNNEY).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, this amendment relates only to primary campaigns and it specifies that only monetary contributions will be eligible for reimbursement from Federal funds. The contribution of services and products and loans would not be eligible for matching once the threshold has been reached that will then trigger the contribution of Federal funds. The way the bill now reads there is a loophole as it relates to the contribution of services, products and loans. These products, services, and loans cannot be used for the purpose of reaching the threshold of contributions which will then trigger the use of Federal funds.

Once the threshold is met, the language of the bill is silent as it relates to loans and contributions of products and services.

What could happen is that a person after he reached the threshold and is eligible for Federal contributions, would have a fund-raising dinner at a hundred dollars a plate, but the notice sent out would read that the money contributed would only be a loan. Then, when the candidate received from the Federal Government on a matching basis the contribution as specified by the legislation, that $100 loan would be returned to the invitee. I think it would start a new rage in political dinners. I can foresee situations where many people would turn out to the dinner with the idea that their $100 was only going to be used on a loan basis and that they were going to get the money back. This would provide a greater contribution by the Federal Government to the primary campaigns than is envisioned in the law as written, because it is supposed to be on a 50–50 basis once the threshold is reached.

This amendment would close that loophole and make the donations conform to the language prior to the time the threshold is reached.

I hope the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

I do not share any skepticism of the reliability of people who are candidates for public office, nor do I assume a person would have time to go out for a $100-a-plate fundraising dinner to pledge the people that their money would be returned after the candidate received matching funds from the Federal Government. It would be completely illegal under the present act.

However, I see no difficulty in providing that language and I would be happy to accept the language if it made the Senator feel better. It does not add anything to the legal portions of the bill.

Mr. President, I am willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. I yield back my time on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 1176, AS MODIFIED

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1176 and I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be modified as indicated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment was read as follows:

On page 77, between lines 5 and 6, insert the following:

"(g) This section does not apply to contributions made by the Democratic or Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, the Democratic National Congressional Committee, or the National Republican Congressional Committee,".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the modification. Without objection, the amendment is so modified.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I raise this matter again because of the confusion we had in previous debate with regard to the effect of my exempting amendment of House and Senate campaign committees and the amendment of the junior Senator from Iowa which repealed, effectively, that first amendment.

This amendment is far more limited in impact and would achieve my original intent.

I have discussed this matter with the Chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration and described what it does specifically. It removes only the committees from the law insofar as contributions are concerned. But it specifically does not affect their limitation of the $1,000 ceiling or the ceiling on contributions they can receive from an individual or group.

I hope the amendment will now prove satisfactory to this body.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I supported the principle of this amendment when the Senator first presented it. I have no objection to the amendment and I am prepared to accept it.

Mr. CLARK addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the Senator from Iowa on his time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized on his time.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, this amendment, of course, already has been debated and voted on. With respect to exempting the congressional and senatorial campaign committees from any contribution limitations, it is exactly the same amendment that was repealed in this body on Monday by a vote of 44 to 35.

The only thing that is changed about the amendment is one letter, which was just agreed to. Indeed, if there had been an objection to that change, the amendment would not have been in order.

It seems to me we are simply wasting a lot of the Senate's time by voting on substantially the same amendment we have already repealed. The Senate has expressed its will very clearly on this issue, and I, therefore, move to lay the amendment on the table, and ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to table. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM), and the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH) would vote "yea."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG) and the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 40, as follows:

So Mr. CLARK's motion to lay on the table Mr. BROCK's amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I have another amendment; but before I address it, I should like to express my regret at the way the previous vote was brought upon us. I think that the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK), as a matter of honest conviction, thought that the amendment I had offered was the same amendment as had been debated previously. He was in error. I have to assume that he did not know that. But the fact is that when we get into that kind of situation, when time is left on an amendment and a statement is made that could be rebutted, a motion to table precludes the opportunity for rebuttal. I regret very much that we did not have a chance to explain the amendment to the Senate.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROCK. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from Iowa consulted the Parliamentarian yesterday after the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee had been offered, and got an opinion from the Parliamentarian that the amendment was not in order as it was written. That was the basis for my statement. Obviously, having been given consent to amend the amendment by one letter, the amendment was in order.

As the amendment was printed, it was not in order, according to the advice of the Parliamentarian, Dr. Riddick. That was the basis of my statement.

Mr. BROCK. The statement is to the effect that the amendment was not changed by one word, not one phrase, not one fact.

I would say to the Senator from Iowa that perhaps he did not read the amendment, or perhaps he saw the wrong version, because the amendment, even as originally submitted at the desk, was not altered in a substantial way from that which was originally offered, from which we eliminated the section which resulted in the thousand dollar ceiling. We eliminated the first paragraph in its entirety. That paragraph related to section 614, on page 75.

We changed the language in the second paragraph to be specific in terms of the removal of exemption in terms of money.

But I would hope that Senators did not vote out of an erroneous impression. I am perfectly willing and prepared to lose a vote on the merits. I understand that. I hope that is the case in this particular instance. I wish we had had plenty of time to explain it. I would feel more comfortable if I had lost after I had had a chance to present a point of view different from that of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROCK. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. There is a very easy way to test the validity of that argument, because the Senator from Tennessee offered two amendments, Nos. 1176 and 1181, both of which are identical in every respect. Amendment No. 1181 is still available. If that amendment is in order, it could be called up at this time, and the Parliamentarian could rule on its validity.

Mr. BROCK. I think that even I would object to that, because it is identical to the original language in every jot and tittle. Perhaps that is how the Senator became confused in saying that they were the same, verbatim. They were not. But I shall not pursue that particular matter. I do not think that enough Senators are in the Chamber to change the outcome. I am not certain that the outcome is not pretty well predictable. We have set our course upon legislation that simply cannot be enacted. We have decided to exercise our privilege to amend the bill to the point where it is a disaster. It cannot be effectuated by any stretch of the imagination.

So perhaps we had better proceed with the charade. I cannot obviously support the bill as it is written. I consider it an insult to the American people and to their intelligence. I consider it an abridgement of their freedom and rights. But that is something they will have to decide when they face the issue.

Before I terminate my rather brief part in these proceedings, I should like to say one thing more. The members of the Committee on Rules and Admnistration have labored long and hard on the bill. The chairman, the distinguished Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON), and the ranking minority member, the distinguished Senator from Kentucky (Mr. COOK), have endured graciously and with a great deal of self-restraint. They have done an exquisite job, and to them I wish to pay my respects.

I should also like to pay my respects to the committee's chief counsel, Jim Duffy; to Jim Medill, the minority counsel of the subcommittee; and to Joe O'Leary, of the Committee on Rules and Administraton.

I wish also to thank Lloyd Ator and Bob Cassidy, of the legislative counsel's office.

These men have done outstanding work on this bill. They have assisted me with candor, ability, and integrity. I am very grateful to them, and I desire to have the RECORD show my appreciation.

Mr. President, I thank my colleagues for their attention.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I advised the Senate last night that I had six amendments which I thought would strengthen the bill now before us and make it more acceptable and more workable.

However, I find that two of those amendments have already been discussed by this Senate. A third one was partially covered by the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER), which was defeated earlier today; and I realize that no amendment is now going to improve the fortunes of this bill or of any other bill which proposes to strengthen our election laws at this time.

I am very much in favor of stronger election laws. I realized when we virtually insisted that the committee report out a bill by a certain date this spring that we were not giving them time enough to write a really good bill.

As the bill now stands, it is quite obvious that no bill at all will become law which resembles this one as it now stands.

I appreciate the fact that the Senate has given me the right to offer these amendments, the four which I have left, even though they were not printed. But at this time I feel that I would like to simply offer them, with a short description of each, for printing in the RECORD.

They are four good amendments, which would have made a better bill of this measure, but with the way the bill has been handled and treated up to now, with the amendments which have been defeated and the amendments which have been approved, it is worse than no bill at all, and it is my firm belief that if this bill is accepted by the Senate it will mean no strengthening of the election laws this year at all.

It could be possible to strengthen these laws if the bill were recommitted and the committee were to have a chance to profit by the examples of the past 2 weeks. But I am not going to make the motion to recommit. If it is to be recommitted, that will have to be moved by those who have been strongly in favor of the bill. As it is now, I ask unanimous consent that my four proposed amendments and a résumé of each be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the résumés and amendments were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RÉSUMÉ No. 1

Mr. President, one way to cut down campaign expenses is to cut down campaign costs, and one way to do this is to shorten the time for campaigning.

It will cut down the time for spending.

There is no sense why we spend so much time campaigning.

The British and the Canadians accomplish the same end result in a far shorter time and for a fraction of our costs.

My amendment follows the intent, although not the language, of S. 343 which is pending before the House Elections Subcommittee.

This should be part of S. 3044.

This amendment requires that primary elections for Federal office be held during a period that extends from the Tuesday after the first Monday in June until general election date.

This will change our present situation which has primaries among the States scattered throughout the calendar year from Winter to Fall, but it still gives the States wide latitude in picking or choosing a time for their primaries to suit their specific requirements.

Presidential preference primaries would also be held anytime after the first Tuesday after the first Monday in June until convention time. Party conventions would be held beginning the 3rd Monday in August.

This amendment falls in line with the objectives of S. 3044 which seeks to reform our election laws.

This amendment is a step towards cutting down our election costs and expenditures.

On page 86, line 17, insert the following:

AMENDMENT

TITLE VI—TIMES OF CONDUCTING FEDERAL OFFICE PRIMARY ELECTIONS AND NATIONAL NOMINATING CONVENTIONS

CONGRESSIONAL PRIMARIES

SEC. 601. (a) If, under the law of any State, the candidate of a political party for election to the Senate or to the House of Representatives is determined by a primary election or by a convention conducted by that party, the primary election or convention shall be held on or after the Tuesday after the first Monday in June. If a subsequent, additional primary election is necessary to determine the nominee of any political party in a State, that additional election shall be held within thirty days after the date of the first such primary election.

(b) For purposes of this section—

(1) the term "State" means each of the several States of the United States, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Territory of Guam, and the Territory of the Virgin Islands; and the District of Columbia.

(2) a candidate, for election as Resident Commissioner to the United States, in the case of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, or as Delegate to the House of Representatives, in the case of the Territory of Guam or the Territory of the Virgin Islands, shall be considered to be a candidate for election to the House of Representatives.

PRESIDENTIAL PREFERENCE PRIMARY ELECTIONS

SEC. 602. (a) No State which conducts a presidential preference primary election shall conduct that election before the first Tuesday after the first Monday in June during any year in which the electors of the President and Vice President are appointed.

(b) For purposes of this section, the term—

(1) "presidential preference primary election" means an election conducted by a State, in whole or in part, for the purpose of—

(A) permitting the voters of that State to express their preferences for the nomination of candidates by political parties for election to the office of President, or

(B) choosing delegates to the national nominating conventions held by political parties for the purpose of nominating such candidates; and

(2) "State" means each of the several States of the United States, and the District of Columbia.

NATIONAL NOMINATING CONVENTIONS

SEC. 603. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) the Presidential preference primary election (as defined in section 602(b)(1)) and the conventions held by national political parties for the purpose of nominating candidates for the office of President and Vice President constitute an integral part of the process by which such officers are chosen by the people of the United States;

(2) by limiting the length of time during which the general election campaign for election to such offices occurs, the integrity of the electoral process is better secured; and

(3) in order to protect the integrity of the Presidential election process and to provide for the general welfare of the Nation, it is necessary and proper for the Congress to regulate the part of that process relating to the nomination of candidates for election to the Office of President by prescribing the time during which such elections and conventions shall be held.

(b) Any political party which nominates its candidate for election to the Office of President by national nominating convention shall hold that convention beginning on the third Monday of August of the year in which the electors of the President and Vice President are appointed.

(c) The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction, upon application made by the Attorney General, to enjoin the members of a political party from conducting a national nominating convention for the purpose of nominating the candidate of that party for election to the Office of President in violation of the provisions of subsection (b).

RÉSUMÉ No. 2

Mr. President, the amendment I am offering would prohibit the short campaign advertising spot of ten, fifteen, twenty, or thirty seconds or up to five minutes unless it is a live or videotaped presentation by the candidate, speaking on his own behalf and without any props, backdrops or sound effects.

In other words, a candidate under this amendment can purchase short television advertising spots for his campaign only if it is of his speaking directly to the electorate.

He can be photographed seated at a table or perhaps standing at a lecturn, whatever his preference.

The focus is directly on the candidate and the purpose is to communicate stands and issues.

That is really what a campaign is about—to get one's positions and ideas to the voter to to persuade the voter that these positions and ideas would best serve him.

Our campaigns have become too much of a Madison Avenue image and candidates are packaged as a commodity to be bought and sold.

And they are sold like many of our products on the market today—by the short spot which develops an image, but tells us substantially little about the product itself or the ingredients which make up this product.

A candidate can speak for himself.

Madison Avenue isn't needed.

Our campaigns are expensive and costs are increasing rather than being cut down.

And television advertising is a prime expense.

If adopted, this amendment will encourage discussion of specific issues.

It will also cut down costs because it can't be expensive to produce the short spot in which the candidate stands in a television studio in front of a television camera.

This is also an easy restriction to enforce.

If we are seriously interested in cutting down our campaign costs, tihs is an ideal amendment to support and include in this legislation.

AMENDMENT

On page 26, between lines 17 and 18, insert the following:

(d) Section 315 of such Act (47 U.S.C. 315) is amended by redesignating subsections (d), (e), (f), and (g) as (e), (f), (g), and (h), respectively, and by inserting after subsection (c) the following new subsection:

"(d) No television broadcasting station may sell or otherwise make available broadcast time in segments of less than five minutes duration for use by or on behalf of a legally qualified candidate in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or election, to Federal elective office. The preceding sentence does not apply in the case of a personal appearance by a candidate photographed in a broadcasting studio without photographic, musical, or other embellishment, whether for simultaneous transmission or through the use of videotape, during which the candidate speaks for the duration of the broadcast."

On page 26, line 18, strike out "(d)" and insert in lieu thereof "(e)".

On page 27, line 14, strike out "(e)" and insert in lieu thereof "(f)".

RÉSUMÉ No. 3

Mr. President, this amendment would prohibit corporations or labor unions from setting up a special, segregated fund for the purpose of collecting funds for contribution to a candidate or to a campaign committee or other activities to exert influence in an election.

This does not deny an individual his constitutional rights.

This amendment still permits individual corporate employees, the president, clerk or line assemblyman—or a union member—local president, shop steward or journeyman—to participate in a campaign. They all can contribute the dollar amounts allowed by law and try to persuade their neighbors to vote their way.

It would eliminate the potential political mischief and abuse.

This amendment returns to the situation prior to 1971 Federal Election Campaign Act when Congressional sanction was given for corporations and labor unions to establish and administer separate, segregated funds for political purposes.

It would lessen to some extent the influence of these organizations in our campaigns and give the individual citizen a greater role in our elections, which election reformers say is needed.

That is what they are arguing: eliminate the force of the vested interests and give the man-in-the-street a more dominant influence in our elections.

One start in that direction is to eliminate the source of influence that can be exerted by an organization—business or otherwise—and by the political money pots these organizations can muster up.

AMENDMENT

On page 28, line 7, after the semicolon insert "or".

On page 28, line 11, strike out the semicolon and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon, closing quotation marks, and another semicolon.

On page 28, strike out lines 12 through 16.

On page 29, beginning with line 1 strike out through "organization" in line 5.

On page 30, beginning with line 19, strike out through line 2 on page 31 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(3) does not include the value of services rendered by individuals who volunteer to work without compensation on behalf of a candidate;";

On page 65, line 22, after the semicolon insert "and".

On page 66, line 2, strike out "party; and" and insert in lieu thereof "party.".

On page 66, strike out lines 3 through 5.

On page 71, strike lines 1 through 12 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

PROHIBITION OF THE ESTABLISHMENT OF SEPARATE SEGREGATED POLITICAL FUNDS BY CORPORATIONS AND LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

SEC. 303. Section 610 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out the last paragraph and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"It is unlawful for any national bank, corporation organized by authority of any Law of Congress, other corporation, or labor organization to establish, administer, or solicit contributions to a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes or to encourage any person to make a contribution or expenditure by physical force, job discrimination, financial reprisals, or the threat thereof, or by requiring any person to make a contribution or expenditure as a condition of employment or as a condition of membership in a labor organization.".

On page 74, line 21, after the semicolon insert "and". On page 74, line 23, strike "party; and" and insert in lieu thereof "party.".

On page 74, beginning with line 24, strike out through line 4 on page 75.

RÉSUMÉ No. 4

Mr. President, if we want to control campaign contributions and expenditures. This amendment aims to cover one area pretty much left untouched by S. 3044.

When it comes to monetary contributions, the Committee is specific.

An individual can contribute no more than $3,000 to any single Federal candiate and no more than $25,000 in total political contributions during a calendar year.

Contributions of $100 or more must be by written instrument.

There is nothing to prevent my offering the use of my office in Town X, its desks, telephones water lines, Xerox machine for campaign workers to use for one day, one weekend or more for the purpose of contacting voters or getting out the vote, or mass produced articles.

This is as important in a close contest as the television broadcast or the mailing, but there is a difference.

There is no way that this "in-kind" contribution is required to be on the reports of the candidates.

This amendment allows the monetary contribution; it allows the services of a campaign volunteer.

This amendment would require, however, that a candidate purchase and make a monetary expenditure for this campaign service.

Such an expenditure would have to be realistic and in accordance wtih going rates and expenses in the area for office space and equipment expenditures.

A dollar would not cover the cost of using, for instance, a mid-city office or even the basement of a home for a fund-raising cocktail party.

These are all extras that benefit a candidate and should very much be counted as part of his campaign.

To omit would be to misrepresent the actual campaign cost and violate the spirit and intent of S. 3044, which is to have complete disclosure and accounting for campaign activities.

AMENDMENT

On page 77, line 10, strike out "No" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "No person may make a contribution of goods or services to, or for the benefit of, any candidate or political committee other than a contribution of that person's personal services. "No".

Mr. AIKEN. I am sorry that the situation has turned out as it has. I very much wanted to strengthen our election laws, but I think any prospect of strengthening them has gone down the drain. I cannot even vote for the bill itself as it is now.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield to the majority leader.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, could we have a show of hands as to how many amendments there might still be to be considered?

It looks like three or four. Would the Senator from Ohio, who is to be recognized next, consider a further time limitation?

Mr. TAFT. Yes, I would be agreeable.

Mr. MANSFIELD. 15 minutes to be equally divided, or 10 minutes?

Mr. TAFT. 15 minutes would be adequate.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I make that unanimous consent request, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1151

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1151, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment, which is as follows:

On page 52, line 8, change the period to a comma and insert thereafter the following: "except that a political committee described in section 301(d)(2) may be designated as the central campaign committee of more than one candidate for purposes of the general election campaign.".

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to substitute a perfecting amendment changing the language of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified.

Mr. TAFT's amendment (No. 1151, as modified) is as follows:

On page 52, line 8, change the period to a comma and insert thereafter the following: "except that a political committee described in section 301(d)(2) may be designated as the central campaign committee of more than one candidate for purposes of the general election campaign. And if so designated, it shall comply with all reporting and other requirements of law as to each condidate for whom it is so designated as if it were the central campaign committee for that candidate alone.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, this amendment would exempt national and State political party organizations from the restriction that a "political committee" can serve as the "central campaign committee," or financial administrator, for only one political candidate's general election campaign. Its purpose and effect would be to allow the national and State party organizations to perform this bookkeeping function for as many candidates as desired. The amendment does not change the accounting and disclosure requirements which the bill imposes on each candidate's campaign operations, nor does it change the amount of contributions and expenditures allowable either for any single candidate or for the political parties acting as independent entities.

I believe that this amendment is necessary so that the political parties will be able to administer financial operations for any candidate who agrees that this approach is desirable, as the parties do now in some cases. As the Vice President emphasized in Chicago last Saturday, if the Republican National Committee had been responsible directly for financial administration of the 1972 Presidential campaign, the chances of a Watergate occurring might have been eliminated. By permitting total party financial operation of general election campaigns at the State and national levels, my amendment should provide an alternative that in some cases would foster better supervised and more professional campaign operations.

Specifically, it would eliminate the problem that has been pointed out so vividly with regard to CREEP. With this bill, as now amended, for all practical purposes we have institutionalized

CREEP. We make it absolutely necessary and required by law that the national, and in the case of State elections the State, campaign committees could not act as the central campaign committee for financial or other purposes of the candidates who are nominated.

This, to me, is sheer foolishness. I have tried to get this amendment in previously. It is not in any way an attempt to change the reporting requirements. I think the language of the amendment as modified makes that abundantly clear; I thought it was clear previously.

For the purpose of the record, I would also say that a number of candidates in my own State in recent campaigns have used the State committee for this purpose, and it has been, I think, a very economical way to handle the campaigns. The present Attorney General of the United States, William Saxbe, as I recall, in his Senate campaign in 1968 used the Ohio State Committee as his campaign committee to do all the reporting required federally, statewide, or otherwise.

I think this is a change that makes sense. The bill still has a great many problems in it, but I think we at least ought to get this on record as expressing the desire of the Senate.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the majority leader.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, after discussing the matter with the interested parties, that on the Packwood-Baker amendment there be a 15-minute limitation, 10 minutes to the sponsors of the amendment and 5 minutes to the chairman of the committee, and that on the Allen amendments there be a 10-minute time limitation, 5 minutes to each, the time to be equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute.

In S. 372, passed just last year, we had a precise prohibition against a central campaign committee acting as such for more than one candidate. I think that is probably the reason it was carried over here in this bill.

The Senator from Ohio has now modified his amendment to make it absolutely clear that the campaign committee, if it were designated the political committee or the senatorial campaign committee for more than one candidate, would have to comply with precisely the same reporting provisions as if that were the sole candidate they were acting for.

With that restriction, as he has now modified his amendment, I am willing to accept that. I have discussed it with the minority representative, and we are willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. TAFT. I thank the chairman. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HELMS). All remaining time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment (No. 1151) of the Senator from Ohio, as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1058

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1058 and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HELMS). The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 8, line 7, strike the period, insert in lieu thereof a comma and add the following: "with not less than $2,500 in matchable contributions having been received from legal residents of each of at least forty States.".

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. ALLEN. This amendment has to do with the threshold amount required for a candidate for the Presidential nomination of one of the major parties. The threshold amount, before participation by the Federal Government is required, is set at $250,000. That could all be obtained in one city, one county, or one State. It would encourage the proliferation of minor candidates for the Presidency, with more Federal subsidies, and would not limit the race to the real contenders.

The purpose of the amendment is to say, in effect, that a person must have a national following before he is able to obtain Federal subsidies. It would require not less than $2,500 matchable contributions—these contributions up to $250,000—not less than that would have to be received from legal residents of 40 States, at least; in other words, $100,000 or $250 would have to be scattered out equally among the 40 States, assuring that we would have men of national caliber and reputation participating in the Federal subsidy and it would discourage entry of one-issue candidates, candidates of localized pressure groups.

I am hopeful that the chairman and the ranking minority leader would accept the amendment. It would strengthen the bill, if we already have public financing, which I hope we will not have.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. There is a great deal of merit to what the distinguished Senator from Alabama has said, that we should not permit a single State candidate to be in a position to qualify under the bill, although I believe his provision of 40 States would be rather burdensome, which would require a potential candidate to campaign quite broadly throughout the country. That certainly might be burdensome because of the fact that many of the States are rather sparsely populated.

I have discussed this with the ranking minority member, and if the Senator were to change his amendment from a 40-State requirement to perhaps 15 or 20 States, we would be inclined to accept it, because it does seem to be rather burdensome to have the 40-State requirement.

Mr. ALLEN. In changing it to 20 States, say, if I should be agreeable to that suggestion, would the distinguished chairman and the distinguished ranking minority member agree that the $2,500 should be raised to $5,000, which would still require $100,000 equally divided among the 20 States?

Mr. COOK. That would be okay.

Mr. CANNON. That would be reasonable. If we could reduce it to 20 States, with $5,000, we would accept the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may modify my amendment in that fashion in order that it can receive the backing of the chairman and the ranking minority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOMENICI). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. Will the Senator please send his modification to the desk?

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield me some time?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, unless there is a prerequisite under the rules, I wonder whether the President of the Senate could request that the modification be made by the clerk in the amendment now at the desk, changing it from $2,500 to $5,000 and from 40 States to 20 States.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I have made the change and send the modification to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is so modified. The clerk has already made the changes.

The text of the amendment, as modified, reads as follows:

On page 8, line 7, strike the period, insert in lieu thereof a comma and add the following: "with not less than $5,000 in matchable contributions having been received from legal residents of each of at least twenty States.".

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time on this amendment has now been yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) (No. 1058).

The amendment as modified (No. 1058), was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1078

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, is it in order to call up my amendment No. 1078 at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is in order.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1078 and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 25, strike out lines 15, 16, and 17 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(b)(1) Section 315(b) of such Act (47 U.S.C. 315 (b)) is repealed.

(2) Subsections (c), (d), (e), (f), and (g) of such section are redesignated as sub-sections (b), (c), (d), (e), and (f), respectively.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, this amendment is offered on behalf of myself and the Senator from Oregon (Mr. PACKWOOD) and the Senator from Colorado (Mr. DOMINICK).

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, this amendment would repeal the lowest unit cost provisions of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended. It is entirely consistent with the pending legislation which repeals broadcast advertising spending limits in favor of overall expenditure limitations.

Three years ago when the Senate considered the question of lowering the cost of broadcast advertising, there was little expectation that we would later consider such comprehensive public financing of both Presidential and congressional campaigns. In fact, we probably would not have considered such an unprecedented approach to campaign financing had it not been for the events of the past 2 years. Nevertheless, as we debate this measure, it is important to remember the circumstances surrounding the enactment of the lowest unit cost requirement 3 years ago.

At that time, we were trying to grapple with the problem of limiting expenditures on broadcast advertising while making the cost for that advertising reasonable from the vantage of the least known challenger. However, we were not considering that question in the context of providing Government subsidies for up to 80 percent of the candidate's total campaign expenses. Thus, it would now seem reasonable to reconsider the question of whether the lowest unit cost provisions of the Communications Act are necessary. I firmly believe they are not.

Under the pending legislation, there is no limit on the amount of money that can be spent on broadcast advertising. There is, of course, the overall expenditure limitation, but there is no specific limit within that ceiling which affects that aspect of a particular campaign. That is consistent with the committee's objective of allowing the candidate the maximum degree of flexibility with regard to how his or her campaign funds are spent. At the same time, however, we are encouraging the excessive use of broadcast advertising by not only subsidizing a substantial portion of the candidate's campaign, but also by requiring that radio and TV time be offered at as much as 50 percent below the prevailing advertising rates. Moreover, we are perpetuating what I consider to be an essentially unfair practice as it relates to both the individual broadcaster and the commercial advertiser.

That practice consists of affording political candidates a commercial discount which it takes other advertisers 13 weeks to earn. Obviously, candidates for public office are different from other advertisers in a number of ways, including their purpose for advertising and their ability to pay. However, substantial public financing of campaigns would clearly diminish the latter consideration and make qualified candidates more than able to afford the required amount of radio and TV advertising time. Thus, why require the stations to offer the time at a substantially reduced rate?

We do not require it of newspapers, so why should we continue to require it of broadcasters? Studies of 1972 campaigns for Federal office indicate that many radio and TV stations chose to refuse to sell political advertising time to any candidate rather than be forced to sell time to all candidates at the lowest unit cost. They did so because they still had the right to refuse a particular type of advertising as long as they refused it across the board. That does not necessarily mean that they neglected their responsibility to cover campaigns for public office, but rather that they would rather not accept any payment for political advertisements than to have to accept the lowest unit cost and the concomitant dislocation among their regular advertisers.

Granted there is ample precedent for the Federal Government regulating radio and TV broadcasters, but we do not impose similar limitations on the printed media for very good reasons; and I submit that there is no longer any reason to impose the lowest unit cost requirement on the broadcast media.

Title 47, section 312, subsection (a) (7) states that the Federal Communications Commission may revoke any station license or construction permit—

> . . . for willful or repeated failure to allow reasonable access to or to permit purchase of reasonable amounts of time for the use of a broadcasting station by a legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office on behalf of his candidacy.

What that means is that every station has a statutory obligation to give reasonable coverage, either through advertising, or by other means to each legally qualified candidate for Federal office. However, if we continue to require stations to charge the lowest unit cost, an increasing number will decide against permitting political advertising in favor of providing a reasonable amount of another form of coverage, thereby reducing the flexibility of the candidate to choose how to run his own campaign.

This is not the intent of S. 3044, as I understand it, and I would urge that as long as candidates are financially able to afford broadcast advertising at the prevailing rates, that we no longer discriminate against stations by requiring them to charge the lowest unit cost.

Now, Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Oregon (Mr. PACKWOOD) has a statement he wishes to make at this time, and I now yield to him such time as he may require.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, in 1971 when this body considered the lowest unit rate provision of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, I was highly skeptical that enactment of this provision would indeed end in an equitable situation for all parties concerned—the candidate, the broadcaster, and the voter. If anything, inequities have been underscored in the intervening period. A bad situation has developed which undercuts more than one-half of our candidates for Federal elective office, it has created a serious financial dilemma for broadcasters, and the resultant confusion has ill-served the voters of our Nation.

I supported in 1971 an amendment which would have struck the lowest unit rate provision from the measure we were debating. The amendment failed, and today, 3 years later, my past skepticism has been more than substantiated. I am cosponsoring the senior Senator from Tennessee's (Mr. BAKER) amendment which would repeal this unfair provision.

Three years ago, arguments heard in this Chamber professed that everyone would benefit from enactment of the lowest unit rate billing. More time, because advertising would be at its cheapest, would be available to the candidates. More candidate time on radio and television could only bode well for an informed vote in the primary or general election. And the broadcasters, well, their revenues would increase because of the new surge in political advertising during the designated period.

However well-intentioned this amendment might have been, it has not created a fair and equal access to the public for all candidates. Some broadcasters have taken the option of refusing broadcast time to political candidates altogether.

I do not blame them, Mr. President, when they, in order to respect business contracts of many years, refuse political advertising. But the consequences or our inane rule are regrettable and I do place blame on our decision of 3 years ago that forced some broadcasters into this position. The serious ramification we must face is that we, as incumbents, along with our public recognition, place nonincumbents at a terrific disadvantage without the availability of radio and television time to publicize their positions and beliefs. Time and time again, it has been proven the nonincumbent's greatest weapon is an effective media campaign. Thus, and perhaps we do not recognize it, selfishly we are the winners of the continuance of the lowest unit rate. But we are a small minority, for the challenger loses however right or wrong, the broadcaster loses, and in the end the public loses.

I believe we can do better. I believe the lowest unit rate should be repealed. Although it may increase advertising costs per unit, it will open up access to the public by all the candidates on an even basis. If one purpose of this bill, S. 3044, is to prevent campaign abuse, then surely we have a great opportunity, now, to eliminate an unfair advantage of incumbency by insuring access to all broadcast media.

I urge my colleagues' support for this amendment, and ask unanimous consent that a letter I received from Mr. Alan H. Davidson, sales manager for KNND Radio in Cottage Grove, Oreg., illustrating many of these very concerns, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KNND RADIO,
Cottage Grove, Oreg., April 5, 1974.

Senator BOB PACKWOOD,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR PACKWOOD: Today we received your press release concerning your call for repeal of the lowest unit rate requirements for political advertising on broadcast media. We as KNND wholeheartedly support this effort, not only from the monetary viewpoint, but generally for the reasons you listed.

As you are obviously aware, each election year radio and television stations are deluged with candidates who are interested in buying broadcast time. Selling this time at our lowest published rate imposes an undue burden upon the station since we are regulated by the Federal Government as to how much time we are allowed to sell.

We believe that a broadcast station should not be required to sell out its time at less than its worth. When this happens it also poses a hardship on the local advertiser who may want to advertise and pay the earned rate, but can not because of the lack of availabilities.

This is the reason of course that many stations are now limiting political availabilities or refusing political advertising, which in turn denies the candidate an opportunity to reach the people.

I sincerely hope that all of the broadcasters in the state of Oregon will support your efforts in this direction.

Respectfully,

ALAN H. DAVIDSON,
Sales Manager, KNND Radio.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, let me explain what our experience has been in Oregon. It has not been a problem to me personally, but it has been to a number of other candidates seeking nomination for Federal office. Two Congressmen—one of them a Congresswoman, retired this year, and there are numerous candidates in each district seeking the Republican nomination and the Democratic nomination. There are also numerous candidates seeking the Democratic nomination for the Senate.

The problem they find is that they are having a very difficult time buying any time on television or radio. It is almost impossible to buy any prime time at all. It is perfectly understandable why they are not. We are asking radio and television stations to bear the burdensome cost of the campaign by selling time at the lowest unit rate, instead of selling it at the highest unit rate. This means the rate they charge their most frequent advertisers, those who advertise 25 or 100 times a month, Bear in mind that if they sell to one candidate, they have to offer to every other candidate in that race at the same time spot that they are selling to all. That is fine for the incumbents. Nothing could be better for us than if neither we nor the challenger, who might be unknown, could buy any television or radio time on prime time.

It is very unfair.

I believe that we made a mistake when we passed this lowest unit rate bill 3 years ago. I voted against it at the time. It has worked out as I feared that it would. It is not giving the candidates more access to the public but is denying the candidates any access to the public.

Therefore, I believe that we would be wise to repeal the amendment so that all candidates will have equal access to the public through the broadcast media.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield, on my time?

Mr. PACKWOOD. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to ask the Senator a question about his amendment. Is there anything to prevent TV and radio stations from charging the highest unit rate? It seems to me, in the past, that was the practice. At least it was in the campaign in which I was involved. I did not pay the average rate but the very, very high rate. Is there anything to prevent that from happening in the Senator's amendment?

Mr. PACKWOOD. There is nothing to prevent that from happening in the amendment. It would simply repeal the lowest unit rate.

Mr. CLARK. In view of the fact that in existing law there is a limitation as to how much a candidate must spend in the electronic media, would this amendment, if passed, have any real effect in lowering that limitation? In other words, if the costs go up, the Senator is not providing in his amendment for an additional limitation, as I read the amendment?

Mr. PACKWOOD. If you cannot purchase advertising at the lowest unit rate, or limit it to $50,000 in advertising, you cannot buy as much, so you have to pay more. To that extent, it would lower it.

Mr. CLARK. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, on my time, in opposition——

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I asked that the Senator from Rhode Island be notified that this amendment was pending. The manager of the bill, the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON), is not now in the Chamber. I wonder whether it might not be in order to give the Senator from Rhode Island the manager's time?

Mr. COOK. I have 5 minutes, and I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, at the proper time, when the time has expired, I will move to table the amendment. I think the amendment comes up at a very unfortunate time.

This matter was discussed thoroughly before the Communications Committee, and we took a position that is absolutely contrary to the spirit and letter of this amendment.

Why do we give this rate to candidates? No. 1, a license is granted to perform a public service. All of us know that in this day and age, the most expensive item a candidate has to meet is the charges for radio and television, so much so that these charges have skyrocketed to the point where you have to go out and hold hundred-dollar dinners just to get radio time, especially if you run in a statewide election.

Mr. President, all we are trying to do is to say to the licensee, "If you have given a preferential rate to anybody—to anybody—at any time, you cannot charge during a campaign period, whether it be for President, whether it be for Senator, whether it be for Representative, whether it be for dogcatcher, one penny more than you charged the lowest rate." What is wrong about that? This is limited to a specific period of time.

The argument is made that the reason why these preferential rates are given is that some advertising concern has a regular program every week or every month. A candidate cannot have a program every week or every month. If you run for the Senate, you run every 6 years. If you run for the House, you run every 2 years. If you run for the Presidency, you run every 4 years. So how could you ever come under the terms and the standards of this preferential rate? That is precisely what the story is.

A suggestion was made not too long ago by Adlai Stevenson, Sr., and I think it has tremendous merit today, that within a certain period of time before the election; namely, about 8 weeks before the election—the national networks give free time to the prominent candidates running for the Presidency; and that is about the best public service they could afford to the people of this country. Unfortunately, the networks came in and opposed it. They said, "Don't make it mandatory. Just relieve us from section 315 and we'll give the proper time to the candidates."

I took their word for that, and they lived up to it. I submitted a resolution, and as a result, in 1960, we had the Kennedy-Nixon debates. That is how that all came about.

What this is intended to do is to take away from the candidates the same privilege of the lowest rate—instituted by whom? By the licensee, himself. He does not have to give anybody a preferential rate; but once he does, he cannot take it away from the candidate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. PASTORE. Can I take time out of my own time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can do so by unanimous consent.

Mr. PASTORE. I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator have such time as he may need out of his hour.

Mr. PASTORE. Out of my hour, because I am hitting high gear. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PASTORE. I yield.

Mr. STEVENS. I worked with the Senator from Rhode Island on this matter, he will recall.

It is the lowest unit charge for the same class and for the amount of time, for the same period. With those protections, the same class and the amount of time for the same period, we are not getting any benefit from any other rate.

My little station survived under one of the heaviest onslaughts they ever had from candidates, in the last election.

This is a fair provision as it stands, and if we took it off, the rates for television and radio time would go sky high.

I am grateful to the Senator from Rhode Island for having accepted the limitation, but I cannot understand the comments of the Senator from Oregon in view of the limitations of section 315 (b) with regard to the same class of time, the same time frame—that is, whether or not it is prime time—and for the same period of time, which is for the 45 days preceding the election.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I reserve the right to object. There has not yet been a ruling on the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Rhode Island.

If we are going to extend the time for debate into the Senator's hour under rule XXII, it seems only fair that in the same unanimous request we extend the time on the other side.

I now ask unanimous consent that I be given the same time out of my hour that he has out of his hour.

Mr. PASTORE. That is all right. I will take only 2 minutes.

Mr. BAKER. So long as we have equal time.

Mr. PASTORE. I make this point very strongly——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has ruled that the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Rhode Island is granted. It is granted for 2 minutes.

The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BAKER. Do I correctly understand that I have similar treatment on this side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Chair.

Mr. PASTORE. The point I am making, and I hope I can make it as emphatically as possible, is that this is not the time, this is not the place, this is not the bill in which to repeal something that has been thoroughly investigated, thoroughly studied, and passed almost unanimously by committee of Congress. I hope that at this junctive we will not disturb something that is as fundamental as the principle that is involved in the discussion we are having today.

When the time has expired, I am going to move to table the amendment.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have the distinction of serving as the senior Republican on the Subcommittee on Communications, on which the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island is the chairman. He and I jost a good bit and this and a few other issues from time to time. We are familiar with each other's arguments. There is no point in my trying to belabor those issues with him, because he has heard them before. He heard my opposition to this provision when it was considered by the subcommittee, when it was considered by the full committee, and when it was considered by the Senate, and he has heard my opposition to this provision at every opportunity I have had to express it for the last 3 years.

I was opposed to it at the time we first took it up, I am still opposed to it, and I am trying to repeal it. I think it is wrong, because by this section, we politicians have legislated to ourselves a subsidy out of the hides of everybody else who advertises on radio and television. We say that, because Procter & Gamble or General Motors, or whoever it is, earns a unit rate that is lower than a one-time or a five-time rate, we have to get the same unit rate. We do not do that to newspapers. We do not do it to magazines. We do it, because we have the authority to regulate radio and television stations and we have the right to lift their licenses. We pass a law that says, "Give us the lowest cost you give to everybody else at the same time on the networks, with the same quality of service, because we regulate you and we have the life-and-death power to give you a license or take it away." That is not fair play, in my book.

If we are going to do it for radio and television stations, we ought to do it for newspapers, magazines, billboards, the people who manufacture bumper stickers and fingernail files with campaign slogans on them, and for whatever other paraphernalia we use. We say, "Give us the low rate you charge your regular customers despite the fact that we order one-hundredth the amount of time that they order."

It seems to me that we single out the industry that we regulate and make them give us a rate we have not earned, when they would normally charge according to the quality and frequency of service acquired.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, let me elaborate further on the situation.

Take the city of Portland, Oreg., with a number of television stations. Six Democratic candidates, as I recall, vied for the nomination for Congress. Each of them is entitled, if they can get the time, to buy time on television at the lowest rate, at the same price paid by the Chevrolet dealer who advertises night after night. There are many other advertisements during prime time that are not at the lowest unit rate.

If a broadcaster sells an ad to one candidate at 6:30, he must make time available during prime time for every other candidate at the lowest unit rate.

We are asking them to bump off other ads from which they can collect more money in order to put us on. The upshot, at least in Oregon, is that many of them are saying, "To heck with it; we are not going to take any political ads; nobody is going to get on television."

That is fine for incumbents, but incumbents start out with a name advantage and a news advantage.

Now, they are justifiably going to say, "We are not going to bump off any of our advertisers who pay a higher rate in order to put on candidates for Federal office." That has been the effect of the amendment. If that is what the Senator from Rhode Island wants to protect incumbents, that is what he is getting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROCK). All time of the proponents has expired. The opponents have 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to my colleague from Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, I have a brief comment from the perspective of one who has operated under this law as a broadcaster and one who has operated under this law as a candidate. The bill as written is essential and we can talk about the problems it presents for broadcasters and certainly they would like the full rate. We can mention all of the other media that are not covered, but they do not utilize a public facility and they do not operate in the public interest as broadcasting stations.

This is little enough to require of an industry that gets to enjoy free the airways of this country. One big danger we have when we talk about election reform and the limitation on candidates and the money they spend and who can support them is that we deny the citizens of this country the opportunity to hear the candidates and to know their views. This is one way we can help facilitate that opportunity so that candidates can get on the air and let citizens know what they stand for.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I take the last minute to congratulate my colleague from Kentucky and to say if, in effect, stations are saying, "We are not going to take any of them, because we cannot get the higher rate in that time frame," if they want to help incumbents and as a matter of fact they are saying they want to help incumbents and are bumping everyone off of television, we better take a close look at it in committee, because the fact is that the law now provides that we pay them for the time we are using at the lowest cost at that time and not on the overall lowest cost of the station.

As bad as political speeches may be some nights, they cannot be any worse than some of the things we have to watch on television during the course of the week in prime time.

Mr. President, I shall support the Senator from Rhode Island in his motion to table the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired on the amendment.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I move to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask for yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays are ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me briefly?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

ADJOURNMENT OF THE TWO HOUSES OF CONGRESS FOR THE EASTER HOLIDAY

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the message from the House of Representatives on House Concurrent Resolution 475.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROCK). The Chair lays before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution 475, which will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

H. CON. RES. 475

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the House adjourns on Thursday, April 11, 1974, it stand adjourned until 12 o'clock noon on Monday, April 22, 1974, or until 12 o'clock noon on the second day after its Members are notified to reassemble in accordance with section 2 of this resolution, whichever event first occurs.

SEC. 2. The Speaker of the House of Representatives shall notify the Members of the House to reassemble whenever in his opinion the public interest shall warrant it or whenever the majority leader of the House and the minority leader of the House, acting jointly, file a written request with the Clerk of the House that the House reassemble for the consideration of legislation.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Strike out line 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "when the two Houses adjourn on Thursday, April 11, 1974, they stand"

On line 4, strike out "its Members" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "their respective Members"

Strike out section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. The Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President pro tempore of the Senate shall notify the Members of the House and Senate, respectively, to reassemble whenever, in their opinion, the public interest shall warrant it, or whenever the majority leader of the Senate and the majority leader of the House, acting jointly, or the minority leader of the Senate and the minority leader of the House, acting jointly, file a written request with the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House that the Congress reassemble for the consideration of legislation."

Amend title by adding after the word "House," "and Senate."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 475), as amended, was agreed to, as follows:

H. CON. RES. 475

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Thursday, April 11, 1974, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock noon on the second day after their respective Members are notified to reassemble in accordance with section 2 of this resolution, whichever event first occurs.

SEC. 2. The Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President pro tempore of the Senate shall notify the Members of the House and Senate, respectively, to reassemble whenever, in their opinions, the public interest shall warrant it, or whenever the majority leader of the Senate and the majority leader of the House, acting jointly or the minority leader of the Senate and the minority leader of the House, acting jointly, file a written request with the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House that the Congress reassemble for the consideration of legislation.

Amend the title so as to read "Concurrent resolution providing for a conditional adjournment of the House and Senate from April 11 until April 22, 1974."

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, the resolution will stay at the desk until it is certain we will finish this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, on this vote I vote "present."

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM), the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH), the Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), and the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH) would vote "yea."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG), and the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

The Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT) voted "present."

The result was announced—yeas 67, nays 19, as follows:

So the motion to lay on the table Mr. BAKER'S amendment (No. 1078) was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE— ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H.R. 12109) to amend the District of Columbia Self-Government and Governmental Reorganization Act to clarify the provision relating to the referendum on the issue of the advisory neighborhood councils.

The enrolled bill was subsequently signed by the President pro tempore.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

AMENDMENT NO. 1186

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1186 and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 35, line 15, after the word "election" insert the following: "on the tenth day of December in the year of an election,".

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the only purpose of the amendment is to provide that in any election, instead of filing the final contributions to a campaign which come in after the 28th of the following January, or have been paid in the following January, that the filing be on the 10th of December immediately following the election.

The reason is that any disciplinary action to be taken by anybody with respect to contributions ought to be taken seasonably before the Representative or Senator is sworn in. Thereafter, it is a very hard row to hoe. That is the reason for the amendment.

I understand that the manager of the bill may be interested in accepting it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 30 seconds.

The Senator from New York has correctly described the amendment. It does create some added burdens, but it does, I think, provide a better, more timely disclosure date after a general election, when it is too late to do anything about the election. The amendment provides a more timely reporting provision than we have in the bill. I am willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. JAVITS. I thank the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from New York. I think he has submitted a worthwhile, important amendment. I am delighted that the manager of the bill has accepted it.

Senators may remember that I offered an amendment which required reporting before an election, but that amendment was defeated. I think this is a material improvement over the provision that requires reporting in January. I wish to congratulate the Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, may the record show that the idea of the amendment is that of Charles Warren, my legislative aide. He is typical of the brilliant young men who work in all our offices. I am delighted to make this statement.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, for the record, my amendment met with the very violent objection of my staff.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes on the bill. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1113

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I send to the desk a printed amendment, No. 1113. It has been slightly modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the modification? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is so modified. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

This is an amendment that I have discussed with the distinguished floor manager of the bill. I understand that he agrees that the amendment is acceptable.

On reflection, after having stopped the clerk from a further reading of it, I think, with advance warning to the Senate, that if I read it and then sit down, there would be adequate explanation. So I shall read it.

At the appropriate place insert the following new section:

SEC. . Whoever, being a candidate for Federal office, as defined herein, or an employee or agent of such a candidate—

(a) fraudulently misrepresents himself or any committee or organization under his control as speaking or writing or otherwise acting for or on behalf of any other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof on a matter which is damaging to such other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof; or

(b) willfully and knowingly participates in or conspires to participate in any plan, scheme, or design to violate paragraph (a) hereof, shall, for each such offense, be fined not more than $50,000 or imprisoned not more than five years or both.

Mr. BAYH. The purpose of the amendment, Mr. President, is to direct the Senate's attention in the context of the pending bill, which is to be our principal legislative response to the past 18 months of Watergate revelations, to a particular and specific problem which would appear to require a statutory remedy. This is the problem of "dirty tricks." My amendment is intended to make the existing law somewhat more precise in this area and to increase the penalties for its violation.

It has come to the Senate's attention through the hearings conducted by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina (Mr. ERVIN) and his select committee that during the 1972 campaign there occurred at least two incidents in which an employee or agent of the Committee To Re-Elect the President distributed documents bearing the letterhead of Senator MUSKIE's campaign which falsely accused Senators HUMPHREY and JACKSON of the most bizarre type of personal conduct. It is this type of activity with which my amendment is designed to deal.

Under current law, as found in section 612 of title 18, United States Code, is a misdemeanor offense for anyone who is a candidate or agent thereof to distribute, through the mails or in interstate commerce, materials which fail to identify the candidate involved or a committee acting on his behalf. This is the statute to which Donald Segretti pleaded guilty for his activities in the Florida primary to which I have referred.

My amendment would modify section 612 in two respects. First, it would remove the jurisdictional restrictions of the old statute which limited its application to use of the U.S. mails or transportation in interstate commerce. Many of our older statutes have such limitations which were thought at the time to be constitutionally required, but which are clearly not necessary today as applied to candidates for office on the Federal level.

Second, my amendment would make such campaign offenses felonies rather than misdemeanors in those few cases where not only does the candidate or his agent know that statements about another candidate are false but that they are, in fact, damaging to him.

In short, Mr. President, I believe that the amendment will effectively deal with the specific campaign abuses which have been brought to our attention because of the 1972 campaign, without posing the difficult problems that a broader criminal libel statute presents in terms of first amendment guarantees.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I have discussed the amendment with the distinguished Senator from Indiana, the sponsor, and also with the minority representative. We are willing to accept the amendment.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. BAYH. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask for its immediate consideration. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the amendment. It is the usual technical, perfecting amendment to correct minor defects in various provisions, in conformity with the usual practice. I ask for the approval of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 2, beginning with "TABLE OF CONTENTS", strike out through the item relating to section 502 on page 3.

On page 3, line 11, immediately before "'political committee'", insert the following: "'national committee',".

On page 6, line 16, strike out "campaign."

On page 6, line 17, strike out "campaign expenses" and insert in lieu thereof "expenditures".

On page 7, between lines 17 and 18, insert the following:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO 1180

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1180 and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 75, line 23, strike out "exceeds $3,000." and insert in lieu thereof "exceeds—".

On page 75, between lines 23 and 24, insert the following:

"(1) in the case of a candidate for the office of President or Vice President, $2,000; and

"(2) in the case of any other candidate, $1,500.".

On page 76, line 2, strike out "exceeds $3,000." and insert in lieu thereof "exceeds—".

On page 76 between lines 2 and 3, insert the following:

"(A) in the case of a candidate for the office of President or Vice President, $2,000; and

"(B) in the case of any other candidate, $1,500.".

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Throughout the debate on the bill, it has been the effort of the Senator from Alabama not only to kill all portions of the bill having to do with the public subsidy of candidates for Federal election, but also to reduce the overall amount that candidates for Federal offices may spend in elections—that is, candidates for the House and for the Senate in primaries and in general elections, and candidates for the Presidency in primaries before the conventions and in the general election.

Already there have been turned back by the Senate amendments that would cut the amounts individual contributions to $250 in Presidential races and $100 in House and Senate races; and another amendment that would have limited contributions to $2,000 in Presidential races and to $1,000 in House and Senate races. Those amendments have been turned back. That has caused the Senator from Alabama to feel that many of those who advocate Federal subsidies in elections want the best of two words. They want, in the primary elections everything that they can get from providing contributions at the $3,000 level, which is a very high level in the view of the Senator from Alabama, and at the same time having Federal matching.

So I would hope that the Senate would go along with a reduction in the amount of the overall contributions in Presidential races to $2,000 and for the House and Senate to $1,500. I call attention to the fact that the Senate has voted—voted twice, as a matter of fact—to cut the amount of overall expenses of candidates by 20 percent, by cutting the amount that could be spent in general elections from 15 cents to 12 cents, and from 10 cents to 8 cents in primary elections. There should be no reason why we could not reduce the amount of individual contributions.

So I am hopeful that the Senate in its desire to have campaign reform, and not simply use campaign reform as a shibboleth to cover raiding the Federal Treasury and turn the bill over to the taxpayers, will be in favor of cutting the amount of individual contributions as suggested in the amendment to $2,000 in Presidential races in primary and general elections, and to $1,500 for House and Senate races in primary and general elections.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

I wish only to say that the distinguished Senator from Alabama really would like to have it both ways. He opposes the provision on public financing because he does not want to see public financing. On the other hand, he wants to cut private financing down to the point where it would drive the individual to public financing.

I suggest, Mr. President, that we have been up the hill and down the hill on this. We have considered limitations in almost every conceivable amount except this particular one, and I would hope that the Senator would be willing to abide by the votes we have already had on this matter, and let us dispose of the amendment by voice vote.

Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROCK). All remaining time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN).

In the opinion of the Chair, the nays have it. The amendment is rejected.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senate, I believe the senior Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) has one or maybe two amendments. As far as I know, those will be the final amendments. So I ask at this time if the distinguished Senator would consider a reduction of the half-hour limitation.

Mr. KENNEDY. Five minutes will be sufficient.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a time limitation of 10 minutes on each of the two amendments, the time to be equally divided between the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) and the manager of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts indicate whether he plans to have rollcall votes?

Mr. KENNEDY. I do not.

Mr. BAKER. Good.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on passage.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1092

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1092, in behalf of myself and the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HUGH SCOTT), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY's amendment (No. 1092) is as follows:

On page 58, line 16, strike out "and".

On page 68, between lines 16 and 17, insert the following:

"(j) 'State committee' means the organization which, by virtue of the bylaws of a political party, is responsible for the day-to-day operation of that political party at the State level, as determined by the Federal Election Commission; and".

On page 68, line 17, strike out "(j)" and insert in lieu thereof "(k)".

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I have had an opportunity to talk with the floor manager of the bill, and also the minority manager of the bill, and I believe that the amendment may be acceptable to them.

The purpose of the amendment is to add a definition of "State committee" parallel to the definition of "national committee" already contained in the bill.

The amendment is useful because it identifies the State committees that will be entitled to take advantage of the special "2 cents a voter" spending authority in the bill. Under this authority, a State committee of a political party is entitled to receive private contributions and make expenditures in a general election, above and beyond the expenditure ceiling of the party's candidate himself. In this way, S. 3044 provides a substantial additional role for the political parties at both the State and National level.

Mr. President, the amendment is a minor addition to the bill, and I hope that it may be accepted.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 30 seconds.

I have discussed this proposal with the Senator and with the ranking minority Member. The definition is acceptable. It parallels the definition of a State committee with that of the national committee.

I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROCK). All remaining time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment (No. 1092) of the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1093

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1093 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY's amendment (No. 1093) is as follows:

On page 10, strike out line 24 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "election campaign in an amount equal to the greater of—

"(A) an amount which bears the same ratio".

On page 11, line 6, strike out "election." and insert in lieu thereof "election; or".

On page 11, between lines 6 and 7, insert the following:

"(B) an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of payments to which a candidate of a major party for the same office is entitled under this subsection as the total number of popular votes received by that eligible candidate as a candidate for that office (other than votes he received as the candidate of a major party for that office) in the preceding general election bears to the average number of popular votes received by the candidates of major parties for that office in the preceding general election.".

Mr. KENNEDY. This amendment is introduced in behalf of myself and the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HUGH SCOTT). I have had a chance, again, to discuss it with the floor manager of the bill and also the minority manager, and I understand that it is acceptable to them.

The purpose of the ammendment is to allow a minor party candidate to qualify for public funds on the basis of the total number of votes he received in the proceeding election, whether as the candidate of a single minor party or as the candidate of more than one minor party.

Under the present bill, a minor party candidate's proportion of public funds is based only on the showing in the preceding election of the minor party that nominated him. In certain cases, this provision might work unfairly to the disadvantage of a minor party candidate who was on the ballot in the previous election under more than one party label.

For example, in the 1968 Presidential election, George Wallace ran under nine separate minor party labels. Although he won a total of 13.5 percent of the votes cast in the election, the most he won under a single party label was 5.08 percent, as the candidate of the American Party.

Under the pending bill, if its provisions had been in effect for the 1972 election, Governor Wallace would have qualified for proportional public funds based on his 1968 track record as a minor party candidate based on his 5.08 percent showing as the candidate of the American party, rather than his 13.5 percent overall showing. Clearly, he should be entitled to use the higher figure, and the pending amendment would accomplish that goal.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that two tables prepared by the Library of Congress, illustrating the votes received by Governor Wallace in 1968, may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. President, I would note that the effect of the pending amendment is to restore the operation of the formula in the existing dollar checkoff law, enacted in 1971, which now allows minor party candidates to accumulate their votes in the preceding election. I believe that this is the intent of the formula in S. 3044, and I hope the Senate will accept the amendment Senator HUGH SCOTT and I are offering.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 30 seconds.

I have discussed the amendment with the sponsor of the amendment and the ranking minority member of the committee, and we are prepared to accept the amendment.

I yield back the remainder of my time

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROCK.) All remaining time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment (No. 1093) of the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I have often expressed my deep concern about the crisis of confidence in our leadership and the deep sense of frustration and distrust toward our entire Government which has pervaded the mail I have received from Coloradans over the past year.

No government can survive without the confidence and support of the people. Ours has survived because each American has believed elections presented an opportunity for all citizens, candidates and parties to present their ideas fairly and honestly, and to have their views judged by the public.

Recent events have raised serious doubts in the minds of many Americans that this principle is being respected. The resulting crisis of confidence, therefore, goes to the core—the very survival—of our system of government. Out of this concern that we must take whatever action is necessary to restore the confidence of the American people in its leadership and government, last July the Senate passed—and I voted for—the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1973, which provided for numerous needed reforms of election campaigns.

This act of 1973 represented a comprehensive campaign reform bill which required full identification of contributions, annual financial disclosure reports by Members of Congress and candidates. It also limits total expenditures in primary and general elections for Federal offices, individual contributions to candidates, and cash contributions and expenditures.

During consideration of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1973, proponents of Federal subsidization of campaigns—so-called public financing—failed in their efforts to insert Federal subsidization provisions in the act. In December they failed to attach such provisions to the bill raising the debt limit, but did extract a promise from the Senate Rules Committee that it would report a bill on Federal subsidization. This bill is before us now. Title I contains provisions for Federal campaign subsidies in primary and general election campaigns for Federal offices. The other sections of this bill are similar to the provisions of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1973 as it passed the Senate.

I support reform and have consistently voted for it. I am against—irrevocably against—efforts to establish a Federal financing system as proposed in title I of this bill.

I believe Federal subsidization represents a step backward in our efforts to restore the confidence of the American people in their system.

Giving taxpayers' money to politicians to run for election can only reduce further whatever confidence Americans retain in their political leadership and institutions. Taking away from the individual the decision as to whom their money will go excludes the individual from a vital part of the political process and reduces the voters' involvement, participation and commitment to candidates and parties. Reducing the dependence of candidates and elected officials upon the rank and file of their party and upon the individual citizen voter will insulate representatives further from individual taxpayers who will be, nonetheless, paying their campaign bills.

Federal subsidies would not only limit an individual's right to spend money to express his preferences and views, but they would also require that the individual's tax money go to someone whose views he opposes, as well as restricting the freedom of those who wouldn't want to support any candidate.

With one Senator elected as an independent and another as a third-party candidate currently sitting with us in the Senate, and a growing bloc of voters who regard themselves as "independents," legislation must treat independent candidates and minor or third parties fairly. Yet assuring independent voices and movements a fair hearing runs the risk of subsidizing frivolous and publicity-seeking campaigns. There would be no quicker way to discredit subsidization and the whole political process. Any legislation setting standards would inevitably discriminate against some individuals and movements and abridge the freedom of individuals to speak out and run for office.

It is equally difficult, if not impossible, to design regulations which apply to primaries, which in many States are more important than general elections. The bill before us does not even attempt to wrestle with other than Presidential primaries. In legislating how money will be distributed, the law can either strengthen a party organization's hold over candidates by channeling money through the parties, or increase the independence of candidates from parties. This is an inappropriate area to legislate, especially given the traditional flexibility and variety of this relationship and the growing numbers of independent voters.

The role of volunteer workers and of nonpartisan groups who work in the political arena is a Pandora's box of legal and constitutional issues whose lid has already been tilted ajar by existing legislation and which would be thrown wide open by Federal subsidization.

We are not going to encourage public participation and confidence in politics by reaching into taxpayers pockets to finance election campaigns. The experience of the past decade should have taught that the solution of pouring Federal money—the tax money of the individual—on a problem and adding complex Federal regulations and a government bureaucracy, has never resolved any problem and in alleviating some symptoms has usually created more ills.

At a minimum we should give the 1971 and 1973 reforms a full trial. We should not be swept up by the hysteria of the current Watergate environment that we enact unnecessary and dangerous legislation on socalled "public financing." The resultant loss of individual freedom and rights, and the extension of the dead hand of Federal bureaucracy and regulation would serve only to throttle further confidence of American citizens in the responsiveness and integrity of our system of government. To adopt "public financing" would be the ultimate evil legacy of the Watergate era.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, apparently there are no further amendments to be offered. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. MANSFIELD. As far as we know. Until third reading is achieved, we do not know.

Mr. ALLEN. Since all the amendments have been offered that Senators plan to offer, and since this matter has been under serious discussion under efforts to amend the bill—some of which have been very helpful, some not so helpful; since there is considerable confusion about just what the bill does provide; since there is a body of opinion in the Senate that a big mistake is being made, though I do not subscribe to that view, in not opening the general elections up to matching as well—there was an amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON), the distinguished Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY), the distinguished Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI), the distinguished Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT), the distinguished Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON), the distinguished Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE), and the distinguished Senator from Maryland (Mr. BEALL) that would have set up a formula that would have permitted and, in fact, to get the full amount available could very well have required matching in general elections; I believe they had a formula of 25-percent advance Federal matching in House and Senate races, and then 50–50 the rest of the way, and in Presidential elections a 40-percent advance Federal subsidy, and then 50–50 the rest of the way—and since there are a number of other items in the bill that can be improved upon if this bill were to have further consideration by the Rules Committee; and in view of the fact that there are already bills over in the House that they have not yet digested, I am just wondering if we would serve the part of wisdom to send them another bill which, by the way, is 180 degrees different from the bill we sent them in July, that being S. 372, which does not provide for any Federal subsidies whatsoever.

So I wonder if it might not be well to send this bill back to committee for a little more of the baking process.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for an inquiry?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. GRIFFIN. In the light of the explanation made by the distinguished Senator from Alabama that one of these amendments that would have required matching in the general election has been adopted, then, of course, the bill as it now is about to be voted on provides for full Federal taxpayer financing in the general election; is that the Senator's understanding?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, that is true, except that there is available the option to participate in the Federal subsidy or not. If the candidate wants 100 percent Federal subsidy, he can get it. If he wants to get a little bit from the private sector, that comes off his public subsidy and, obviously, would not be resorted to.

Mr. GRIFFIN. In view of the rejection of that effort by Senator STEVENSON and others, and in view of the rejection of the amendment offered by Senator DOLE the other day, I wonder whether the Senator would agree with me that it is going to be a rather strange situation, if this bill should become law, because the requirements we now have under present law say that when a TV advertisement goes on the air promoting the candidacy of a particular campaign, there must be, in prominent letters and sound, what they call a disclaimer, "Paid for by the Committee on So-and-So."

Would it not be false and fraudulent advertising if all of that money was actually coming out of the U.S. Treasury? Would there be some kind of action that citizen consumer groups, and so forth, or someone else could take to the FCC, because here, on the one hand, they would be saying the cost was paid for by the committee of candidate Jones, but really it is all being paid for by the taxpayers. Is that the situation we would have?

Mr. ALLEN. I see the point of the distinguished Senator from Michigan and I agree with it. I would assume, however, that the public subsidy would go to the candidate or his committee and, in a sense, would be laundered by the committee.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Laundered?

Mr. ALLEN. So it probably would be a correct statement that the money, which is public money, having been laundered by the committee and used by the committee, it might be, then, that it would be an accurate statement to say it was paid for by the committee.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Does the Senator suppose that the laundering will then be described in some segment of the media as being campaign reform?

Mr. ALLEN. This is campaign reform.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I thank the Senator. I will certainly join him in supporting his motion to recommit the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, it is the intention of the Senator from Alabama to make a motion to recommit. Since that motion is debatable, the Senator from Alabama will, at this time, move that the bill be now recommitted to the Committee on Rules and Administration for further study.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, may I just ask a question. In the laundering of this money by the committee, does the Senator from Alabama believe that a lot of soap would be used?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, soft soap. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield back whatever time I have.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROCK). All time has now been yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) to recommit the bill, S. 3044, to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM), and the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Alabama (Mr. SPARKMAN) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH) would vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG) and the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 53, as follows:

So the motion of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) to recommit the bill (S. 3044) to the Committee on Rules and Administration was rejected.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I think it would be outrageous to saddle the taxpayers of this country with the price tag of financing the campaigns of Members of Congress. The public campaign financing bill now before the Senate would provide up to $90,000 out of the public treasury for any candidate for the House of Representatives in the general election and as high as $2 million for some candidates for the U.S. Senate in the general election.

At a time when so much money is needed to wage the war on cancer, at a time when many persons in this country cannot afford the high cost of medical care, and when I think of people who are dying in this country because they cannot get a kidney dialysis, it is obvious to me that we should not dig into the taxpayers' money to finance the elections of those of us who run for the House and Senate. I do not think the taxpayers ought to have to pay this price tag, and I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, as chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections and as the sponsor of the bill which formed the basis of our deliberations on public financing; I am delighted with its passage by the Senate.

The bill's basic and significant provisions have survived over strong opposition. We have expressed the will of our people weary at election abuses and frustrated by the scandalous influence of special interests. We have given back to the individual voter his rightful authority, and we have strengthened our democracy.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, for more than a decade, in and out of public office, I have worked for campaign finance reform. It is, therefore, with reluctance that I express my reasons for voting against this bill.

Most of the provisions in the bill have already been approved by the Senate and sent, in one form or another, to the House. They include limits on individual and committee contributions to campaigns for Federal office, a $25,000-limit on contributions of an individual to all Federal campaigns, ceilings on amounts which can be expended in Federal campaigns, a limit on cash contributions and independent enforcement of campaign finance laws. Among the provisions of the bill as passed by the Senate were many that I either coauthored in bills or brought up on the Senate floor as amendments.

The bill before us adds little, except provisions for public financing of Federal campaigns.

I believe in partial public financing of general election campaigns, and in fact introduced a bill for public financing. The bill before us provides for public financing of primaries, as well as general elections, and upon the easiest and most generous terms. The result of public financing in primaries will be to encourage the favorite son, regional and dark horse candidates, the insincere and the adventurers in our politics, too. What we must do is drive from our politics the large contributions, but not fragment our parties any further. The moneys made available from the public treasury by this bill for the financing of primaries will invite a proliferation of candidacies and with little regard to the legitimacy of the candidates' claim upon the public attention. It will invite high pressured advertising, voter confusion, and will make it even more difficult for a serious candidate of the majority to win the nomination of a major party.

It would be wiser to act with less zeal and more prudence and defer this dangerous experiment until such time as public financing has enjoyed some experience in general election campaigns. We could, in an excess of recent enthusiasm, "reform" our two-party system out of existence by financing the candidacies of virtually all comers in primary campaigns for Presidency and the Congress.

From the beginning I have supported partial public financing of general elections campaigns.

When 100-percent public financing was proposed last fall in the Kennedy-Scott amendment to the debt limit bill, I testified in the Finance Committee in support of partial public financing. When the Kennedy-Scott amendment was considered on the floor in late November, I offered an amendment reducing the lump sum subsidy from 100 percent to 50 percent. My amendment was narrowly defeated. Tuesday, with Senators TAFT, DOMENICI, CRANSTON, HUMPHREY, and MONDALE, I offered another partial public financing amendment. That amendment provided for a maximum of 70-percent public financing in Presidential elections and 62.5-percent public financing in congressional elections. Senator KENNEDY offered an amendment to mine which restored 100-percent public financing in Presidential general election campaigns. His amendment was adopted by a margin of 1 vote. Then he offered an amendment to increase public financing in congressional campaigns to 75 percent, and it failed by a margin of 3 votes. Obviously the Senate is closely divided on the issue of partial versus total public financing. But the Senate voted to table the remains of my amendment. The effect of that lopsided vote was to restore 100-percent public financing for both Presidential and congressional general election campaigns.

It has been said that my amendment improved the bill too much and that the vote then for total public financing sounded the death knell for any public financing. Whether or not that is true, the votes on the two Kennedy amendments provide a good measure of the Senate's true position on the question of partial versus total public financing. The Senate has grave reservations about 100-percent public financing. Those reservations are not reflected in this bill.

This bill provides for 100-percent financing from the Treasury. It permits the candidate to opt for private financing, but few would do so except for the doubtful purpose of waging a demogogic battle against those who dip into the public through for their campaign funds. It would be tempting for some to wage that kind of campaign and with the public distrust of politics running strong, some might succeed against the publicly financed candidate. Making private financing optional thus weakens this bill. At best, it invites private money back in. At worst, it invites private money back in for demagogic purposes.

Most candidates, given a chance to collect $16 million from the Treasury as a Presidential candidate, or $800,000 as a Senate candidate in Illinois, would opt for public financing. Our debate has overlooked the enormous savings in fundraising expenses made possible by public financing. A $1 million grant from the Treasury may save the candidate another $100,000 or more in fundraising expense. And that is all to the good—but it means that few legitimate candidates would opt on these terms for private financing, especially with individual contributions limited to $1,500. Once a candidate opts for public financing, no one can give so much as a nickel to his support.

And that, Mr. President, is what causes me—reluctantly—to vote against this bill. No member of the Senate is more determined to rid our politics of the corrupting influence of large contributions. The amendment I offered would have done so and at the same time permitted small contributions by individuals to the candidates of their choice. It provided for partial public financing of presidential and congressional general election campaigns and partial private financing from contributions of $3,000 or less in the case of individuals and $6,000 or less in the case of committees. The purpose of public financing is to eliminate the large, potential corrupting contributions, not the innocent small contributions.

Because most, if not all, candidates will be unable to resist the lure of 100 percent public financing, this bill would effectively eliminate small contributions. It will place a premium on the arts and artifices of Madison Avenue. The electorate could be misled by the high priced hucksters as never before. Minority candidates will have a chance to succeed as never before. The fragmentation of the parties will follow. I fear for the continued existence of our two-party system should this bill, in its present form, become law.

I fear the consequences of such public largess. Candidates ought to be compelled, day in and day out, to listen to their constituents and solicit their favor. They ought to be forced to go out and seek—from housewives, teachers, businessmen and farmers—small contributions. The Government is too far removed already from the people, the arts of the advertisers are too seductive already. We ought to sanitize our politics—not, with some belated enthusiasm for "reform," sterilize it.

This bill implicitly distrusts the people and their good sense. I think most people take their government seriously. They want to be a part of it, and with rising levels of education and dissatisfaction with politics as usual, they will increasingly demand a voice in the electoral process. They want to feel that they can make a difference. They want, and rightly so, to contribute to the candidates of their choice. This bill would cut the money out—and that is to the good—but it would also cut the people out—and that is terrible. There is nothing inherently corrupting about a 3 cents, $3, $300, or, for that matter, a $3,000 contribution. This bill says the citizen can contribute nothing to the candidate of his choice—work for him, yes, spend up to $1,000 in advertising of his own buying, yes—but to give him $5 or $1,000, no—because to do so, this bill implies, might corrupt a candidate for President of the United States or the Congress.

On the face of it that makes no sense. It is downright wrong.

This bill not only eliminates a meaningful form of participation by people in their government, it also drives up the costs to the Treasury and the taxpayer.

It is more than most people will tolerate. They are willing to pay the necessary price for the elimination of the big contributions—but no more. This bill will be perceived as yet another transgression by the politician. After all, what reason is there for 100-percent public financing when 60 or 70 percent would eliminate the large contributions by the rich and the powerful and preserve the innocent contributions of the small and the weak—those who only want to serve their party and their country and have a voice.

Some "reform" groups opposed my amendment strenuously. And now they resent the obstinacy of myself, Senator HUMPHREY and others who stood by their convictions and refused to knuckle under. If more of these well-intentioned individuals had ever sought election to public office, they might be more understanding of the decencies of the people and the innocence of participation by small contributors. They might understand the revulsion I feel as a candidate at the prospect of waiting to receive a check from the U.S. Treasury for $900,000. I do not need anywhere near that much public money to wage a successful campaign if I can continue to accept small private contributions.

The goal of reform, as I see it, is the removal of influences which cause public officials to lose their impartiality. The goal goes beyond that to seek the elimination of any appearance of impropriety. The appearance of impropriety can erode public confidence as effectively as its actuality.

The most corrupting influence in our politics is a system of campaign financing which permits wealthy groups and individuals to acquire undue influence by making large campaign contributions. I think this Congress is quite prepared to eliminate that influence—and any appearance of it—but not by itself appearing to wallow in the public trough. This bill could do more to undermine public confidence in the integrity of our political institutions than an unreconstructed system of private financing. The people will not take kindly to a law which effectively compels taxpayer financing of all the costs of political campaigns when for a lesser sum the evils of large contributions could be eliminated.

The Congress will be a more perfect instrument of popular self-government if Members of Congress are free to represent all their constituents, contributors and noncontributors alike, as best they can. There is only one institution which represents the people, and that is the Congress of the United States. It follows that the goal of reform will not be achieved unless we and only we do the legislating.

I say this with sadness because I have sought for a long time to eliminate the evils of money from politics. But I cannot be true to political reform and vote for the public financing provisions of this bill. In its other major particulars it has already been approved by the Senate and awaits action by the House. That being the case, there is no reason to vote for it. I must vote against it and urge my colleagues to do likewise. It would be wiser to start anew with another bill, one that can deserve and attract public support, win passage in the Congress and approval by the President and the courts.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I am firmly committed to effective election reform. To be effective in reforming our election procedures, we must follow a comprehensive approach since it does no good to simply plug up some existing loopholes and leave or create others. In other words, we should not be satisfied with replacing an obviously deficient system with one which may be as weak.

My commitment to comprehensive improvement leads me to conclude that public financing is required to achieve the fundamental objectives of limited contributions and limited spending, both of which must be strictly enforced and completely disclosed. I therefore support the principle of helping to finance certain federal elections through the use of public funds and committed myself to support S. 3044 if it had that effect.

After these long weeks of debate and seemingly endless manuvering, I have decided that I can support the bill on final passage despite what I view as glaring deficiencies.

There is no question that the bill contains many improvements over existing procedures. Spending and contribution limitations and full disclosure, although contained in other pending legislation, are significant improvements which must be supported.

Feeling as I do that public financing is a means to an end—election reform—rather than an end in itself, I am afraid that we have put more emphasis on public financing than its actual contribution to election reform would justify.

It appears to me that by this bill we have embraced public financing as a possible cure-all by providing that any candidate in congressional or Presidential general elections can receive 100 percent of the specified spending limit from public funds. To me there is nothing magic in money which has its source with the public rather than individuals or groups. Yet there is, Mr. President, something detrimental in discouraging people to put their financial support behind a candidate in the form of small contributions just as there is in relieving candidates of any inducement to present the merits of his candidacy to try to get those small contributions.

During the hours of debate I pointed these deficiencies as did many of my colleagues. Senators STEVENSON and TAFT and I introduced and brought to the floor amendments designed to put public financing in its true perspective as a tool of election reform. We were, unfortunately narrowly unsuccessful.

The end result of these inflexible attitudes is 100 percent public financing at the option of candidates in general elections which has the deficiencies I have previously mentioned.

Regarding primaries, Mr. President, I am not yet convinced that the public interest is actually served by allowing public financing with such a low-threshold requirement. In addition, abuse of public funding for both primary and general elections when neither has received public financing previously is not only possible but, in my opinion, highly probable. We should have been satisfied to test public financing in general elections before extending it to primary elections. Alternatively we could have limited our first venture into this complicated field to either congressional or Presidential elections instead of flying headlong into large-scale public financing of all primaries and total public financing of all general elections.

So, Mr .President, I am convinced that we are attempting to fly before we have even learned to walk and I am afraid the results will be at best, disappointing, and as the worst, disastrous. In spite of these misgiving I have concluded we would be better off trying to fly than mired down with our present system which has come to be so distrusted by so many concerned Americans. I cannot in good conscience vote for the status quo. Consequently, Mr. President, I will vote in support of final passage of S. 3044 and hope the remainder of the legislative process will correct some of the deficiences I have outlined.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, earlier in the debate on S . 3044, title V was deleted from the bill as it dealt with amendments to the tax code which must come from the Finance Committee.

One of the provisions thus deleted was to double the currently allowable tax credits and tax deductions for political contributions—from $12.50 to $25 in the case of tax credits and from $50 to $100 in the case of tax deductions.

Mr. President, I understand why these provisions had to be deleted from the bill, but I feel strongly that such provisions should be enacted into law.

I have a bill pending before the Finance Committee to double tax credits and tax deductions for political contributions, and I have the intention to offer this bill as an amendment to the next appropriate bill reported from the Finance Committee.

I feel that we should take steps to encourage political contributions from a larger number of people, and doubling tax credits and tax deductions for political contributions should accomplish this end.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, during the debate on S. 3044, there were several votes I missed upon which I would like my constituents and others to know my position.

I would have voted yea on Baker amendment No. 1075, to forbid contributions within 10 days of an election and require contribution reports 5 days before the election; yea on the Allen unprinted amendment of April 4 to lower the maximum permissible private contribution to $1,000 for congressional races and $2,000 for Presidential races; yea on the Humphrey amendment No. 1150 to make election day a natitonal holiday; and nay on the Dole April 8 unprinted amendment to require identification of political advertisements partially or fully supported by public funds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask for third reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on final passage.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass? On this question, the yeas any nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. STENNIS (after having voted in the negative). On this vote, I have a pair with the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH). If he were present and voting, he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay." I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM), the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH), and the Senator from Missouri (Mr. SYMINGTON) are necessarily abent.

I further announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR.) and the Senator from Alabama (Mr. SPARKMAN) are absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), and the Senator from Missouri (Mr. SYMINGTON) would each vote "yea."

On this vote, the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM) is paired with the Senator from Virginia (Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR.).

If present and voting, the Senator from Ohio would vote "yea" and the Senator from Virginia would vote "nay."

On this vote, the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH) is paired with the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS).

If present and voting, the Senator from Idaho would vote "yea" and the Senator from South Carolina would vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG) and the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER) would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 53, nays 32, as follows:

So the bill (S. 3044) was passed, as follows:

S. 3044

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974".

TITLE I—FINANCING OF FEDERAL CAMPAIGNS

PUBLIC FINANCING PROVISIONS

SEC. 101. The Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new title:

"TITLE V—PUBLIC FINANCING OF FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGNS

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 501. For purposes of this title, the term—

"(1) 'candidate', 'Commission', 'contribution', 'expenditure', 'national committee', 'political committee', 'political party', or 'State' has the meaning given it in section 301 of this Act;

"(2) 'authorized committee' means the central campaign committee of a candidate (under section 310 of this Act) or any political committee authorized in writing by that candidate to make or receive contributions or to make expenditures on his behalf;

"(3) 'Federal office' means the office of President, Senator, or Representative;

"(4) 'Representative' means a Member of the House of Representatives, the Resident Commissioner from the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the Delegates from the District of Columbia, Guam, and the Virgin Islands;

"(5) 'general election' means any regularly scheduled or special election held for the purpose of electing a candidate to Federal office or for the purpose of electing presidential and vice presidential electors;

"(6) 'primary election' means (A) an election, including a runoff election, held for the nomination by a political party of a candidate for election to Federal office, (B) a convention or caucus of a political party held for the nomination of such candidate, (C) a convention, caucus, or election held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party, and (D) an election held for the expression of a preference for the nomination by a political party of persons for election to the office of President;

"(7) 'eligible candidate' means a candidate who is eligible, under section 502, for payments under this title;

"(8) 'major party' means, with respect to an election for any Federal office—

"(A) a political party whose candidate for election to that office in the preceding general election for that office received, as the candidate of that party, 25 percent or more of the total number of votes cast in that election for all candidates for that office, or

"(B) if only one political party qualifies as a major party under the provisions of subparagraph (A), the political party whose candidate for election to that office in that election received, as the candidate of that party, the second greatest number of votes cast in that election for all candidates for that office (if such number is equal to 15 percent or more of the total number of votes cast in that election for all candidates for that office, and if, in a State which registers voters by party, that said party's registration in such State or district is equal to 15 per centum or more of the total voter registration in said State or district);

"(9) 'minor party' means, with respect to an election for a Federal office, a political party whose candidate for election to that office in the preceding general election for that office received, as the candidate of that party, at least 5 percent but less than 25 percent of the total number of votes cast in that election for all candidates for that office; and

"(10) 'fund' means the Federal Election Campaign Fund established under section 506(a).

"ELIGIBILITY FOR PAYMENTS

"SEC. 502. (a) To be eligible to receive payments under this title, a candidate shall agree—

"(1) to obtain and to furnish to the Commission any evidence it may request about his campaign expenditures and contributions;

"(2) to keep and to furnish to the Commission any records, books, and other information it may request;

"(3) to an audit and examination by the Commission under section 507 and to pay any amounts required under section 507; and

"(4) to furnish statements of expenditures and proposed expenditures required under section 508.

"(b) Every such candidate shall certify to the Commission that—

"(1) the candidate and his authorized committees will not make campaign expenditures greater than the limitations in section 504; and

"(2) no contributions will be accepted by the candidate or his authorized committees in violation of section 615(b) of title 18, United States Code.

"(c)(1) To be eligible to receive any payments under section 506 for use in connection with his primary election campaign, a candidate shall certify to the Commission that—

"(A) he is seeking nomination by a political party for election as a Representative and he and his authorized committees have received contributions for that campaign of more than $10,000;

"(B) he is seeking nomination by a political party for election to the Senate and he and his authorized committees have received contributions for that campaign equal in amount to the lesser of—

"(i) 20 percent of the maximum amount he may spend in connection with his primary election campaign under section 504 (a)(1); or

"(ii) $125,000; or

"(C) he is seeking nomination by a political party for election to the office of President and he and his authorized committees have received contributions for his campaign throughout the United States in a total amount of more than $250,000, with not less than $5,000 in matchable contributions having been received from legal residents of each of at least twenty States.

"(2) To be eligible to receive any payments under section 506 for use in connection with a primary runoff election campaign, a candidate shall certify to the Commission that he is seeking nomination by a political party for election as a Representative or as a Senator, and that he is a candidate for such nomination in a runoff primary election. Such a candidate is not required to receive any minimum amount of contributions before receiving payments under this title.

"(d) To be eligible to receive any payments under section 506 in connection with his general election campaign, a candidate must certify to the Commission that—

"(1) he is the nominee of a major or minor party for election to Federal office; or

"(2) in the case of any other candidate, he is seeking election to Federal office and he and his authorized committees have received contributions for that campaign in a total amount of not less than the campaign fund required under subsection (c) of a candidate for nomination for election to that office, determined in accordance with the provisions of subsection (e) (disregarding the words 'for nomination' in paragraph (2) of such subsection and substituting the words 'general election' for 'primary election' in paragraphs (2) and (3) of such subsection).

"(e) In determining the amount of contributions received by a candidate and his authorized committees for purposes of subsection (c) and for purposes of subsection (d)(2)—

"(1) no contribution received by the candidate or any of his authorized committees as a subscription, loan, advance, or deposit, or as a contribution of products or services, shall be taken into account;

"(2) in the case of a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President, no contribution from any person shall be taken into account to the extent that it exceeds $250 when added to the amount of all other contributions made by that person to or for the benefit of that candidate in connection with his primary election campaign; and

"(3) in the case of any other candidate, no contribution from any person shall be taken into account to the extent that it exceeds $100 when added to the amount of all other contributions made by that person to or for the benefit of that candidate in connection with his primary election campaign.

"(f) Agreements and certifications under this section shall be filed with the Commission at the time required by the Commission.

"ENTITLEMENT TO PAYMENTS

"SEC. 503. (a)(1) Every eligible candidate is entitled to payments in connection with his primary election campaign in an amount which is equal to the amount of contributions received by that candidate or his authorized committees, except that no contribution received as a subscription, loan, advance, or deposit, or as a contribution of products or services, shall be taken into account.

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) in the case of a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President, no contribution from any person shall be taken into account to the extent that it exceeds $250 when added to the amount of all other contributions made by that person to or for the benefit of that candidate for his primary election campaign; and

"(B) in the case of any other candidate for nomination for election to Federal office, no contribution from any person shall be taken into account to the extent that it exceeds $100 when added to the amount of all other contributions made by that person to or for the benefit of that candidate for his primary election campaign.

"(b)(1) Every eligible candidate who is nominated by a major party is entitled to payments for use in his general election campaign in an amount which is equal to the amount of expenditures the candidate may make in connection with that campaign under section 504.

"(2) Every eligible candidate who is nominated by a minor party is entitled to payments for use in his general election campaign in an amount equal to the greater of—

"(A) an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of payments to which a candidate of a major party for the same office is entitled under this subsection as the total number of popular votes received by the candidate of that minor party for that office in the preceding general election bears to the average number of popular votes received by the candidates of major parties for that office in the preceding general election; or

"(B) an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of payments to which a candidate of a major party for the same office is entitled under this subsection as the total number of popular votes received by that eligible candidate as a candidate for that office (other than votes he received as the candidate of a major party for that office) in the preceding general election bears to the average number of popular votes received by the candidates of major parties for that office in the preceding general election.

"(3)(A) A candidate who is eligible under section 502(d)(2) to receive payments under section 506 is entitled to payments for use in his general election campaign in an amount equal to the amount determined under subparagraph (B).

"(B) If a candidate whose entitlement is determined under this paragraph received, in the preceding general election held for the office to which he seeks election, 5 percent or more of the total number of votes cast for all candidates for that office, he is entitled to receive payments for use in his general election campaign in an amount (not in excess of the applicable limitation under section 504) equal to an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of the payment under section 506 to which the nominee of a major party is entitled for use in his general election campaign for that office as the number of votes received by that candidate in the preceding general election for that office bears to the average number of votes cast in the preceding general election for all major party candidates for that office. The entitlement of a candidate for election to any Federal office who, in the preceding general election held for that office, was the candidate or a major or minor party shall not be determined under this paragraph.

"(4) An eligible candidate who is the nominee of a minor party or whose entitlement is determined under section 502(d)(2) and who receives 5 percent or more of the total number of votes cast in the current election, is entitled to payments under section 506 after the election for expenditures made or incurred in connection with his general election campaign in an amount (not in excess of the applicable limitation under section 504) equal to—

"(A) an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of the payment under section 506 to which the nominee of a major party was or would have been entitled for use in his campaign for election to that office as the number of votes received by the candidate in that election bears to the average number of votes cast for all major party candidates for that office in that election, reduced by

"(B) any amount paid to the candidate under section 506 before the election.

"(5) In applying the provisions of this section to a candidate for election to the office of President—

"(A) votes cast for electors affiliated with a political party shall be considered to be cast for the Presidential candidate of that party, and

"(B) votes cast for electors publicly pledged to cast their electoral votes for a candidate shall be considered to be cast for that candidate.

"(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsections (a) and (b), no candidate is entitled to the payment of any amount under this section which, when added to the total amount of contributions received by him and his authorized committees and any other payments made to him under this title for his primary or general election campaign, exceeds the amount of the expenditure limitation applicable to him for that campaign under section 504.

"EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS

"SEC. 504. (a)(1) Except to the extent that such amounts are changed under subsection (f)(2), no candidate (other than a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President) who receives payments under this title for use in his primary election campaign may make expenditures in connection with that campaign in excess of the greater of—

"(A) 8 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (g)) of the geographical area in which the election for such nomination is held, or

"(B)(i) $125,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Senator, or Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, or

"(ii) $90,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Representative from a State which is entitled to more than one Representative.

"(2)(A) No candidate for nomination for election to the office of President may make expenditures in any State in which he is a candidate in a primary election in excess of two times the amount which a candidate for nomination for election to the office of Senator from that State (or for nomination for election to the office of Delegate in the case of the District of Columbia, the Virgin Islands, or Guam, or to the office of Resident Commissioner in the case of Puerto Rico) may expend in that State in connection with his primary election campaign.

"(B) Notwithstanding the provisions of subparagraph (A), no such candidate may make expenditures throughout the United States in connection with his campaign for that nomination in excess of an amount equal to ten cents multiplied by the voting age population of the Unted States. For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'United States' means the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands and any area from which a delegate to the national nominating convention of a political party is selected.

"(b) Except to the extent that such amounts are changed under subsection (f)(2), no candidate who receives payments under this title for use in his general election campaign may make expenditures in connection with that campaign in excess of the greater of—

"(1) 12 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (g)) of the geographical area in which the election is held, or

"(2)(A) $175,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Senator, or Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, or

"(B) $90,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Representative from a State which is entitled to more than one Representative.

"(c) No candidate who is unopposed in a general election may make expenditures in connection with his general election campaign in excess of 10 percent of the limitation in subsection (b).

"(d) The Commissioner shall prescribe regulations under which any expenditure by a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President for use in two or more States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State under subsection (a)(2)(A) of this section, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

"(e)(1) Expenditures made on behalf of any candidate are, for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by such candidate.

"(2) Expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate for the office of Vice President of the United States are, for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by the candidate for the office of President of the United States with whom he is running.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a Vice Presidential candidate, if it is made by—

"(A) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for the purposes of making any expenditure;

"(B) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, or an agent of the candidate to make the expenditure; or

"(C) a national or State committee of a political party in connection with a primary or general election campaign of that candidate, if such expenditure is in excess of the limitations of section 614(b) of title 18, United States Code.

"(4) For purposes of this section an expenditure made by the national committee of a political party, or by the State committee of a political party, in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate affiliated with that party which is not in excess of the limitations contained in section 614(b) of title 18, United States Code, is not considered to be an expenditure made on behalf of that candidate.

"(f)(1) For purposes of paragraph (2)—

"(A) 'price index' means the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and

"(B) 'base period' means the calendar year 1973.

"(2) At the begininng of each calendar year (commencing in 1975), as necessary data become available from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register the percentage difference between the price index for the twelve months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each amount determined under subsections (a) and (b) shall be changed by such percentage difference. Each amount so changed shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

"(g) During the first week of January, 1975, and every subsequent year, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, of each State, and of each congressional district as of the first day of July next preceding the date of certification. The term 'voting age population' means resident population, eighteen years of age or older.

"(h) Upon receiving the certification of the Secretary of Commerce and of the Secretary of Labor, the Commission shall publish in the Federal Register the applicable expenditure limitations in effect for the calendar year for the United States, and for each State and congressional district under this section.

"(i) In the case of a candidate who is campaigning for election to the House of Representatives from a district which has been established, or the boundaries of which have been altered, since the preceding general election for such office, the determination of the amount and the determination of whether the candidate is a major party candidate or a minor party candidate or is otherwise entitled to payments under this title shall be made by the Commission based upon the number of votes cast in the preceding general election for such office by voters residing within the area encompassed in the new or altered district.

"CERTIFICATIONS BY COMMISSION

"SEC. 505. (a) On the basis of the evidence, books, records, and information furnished by each candidate eligible to receive payments under section 506, and prior to examination and audit under section 507, the Commission shall certify from time to time to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment to each candidate the amount to which that candidate is entitled.

"(b) Initial certifications by the Commission under subsection (a), and all determinations made by it under this title, shall be final and conclusive, except to the extent that they are subject to examination and audit by the Commission under section 507 and judicial review under section 313.

"PAYMENTS TO ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES

"SEC. 506. (a) There is established within the Treasury a fund to be known as the Federal Election Campaign Fund. There are authorized to be appropriated to the fund amounts equal to the sum of the amounts designated by taxpayers under section 6096 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 not previously taken into account for purposes of this subsection, and such additional amounts as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title without any reduction under subsection (c). The moneys in the fund shall remain available without fiscal year limitation.

The Secretary of the Treasury may accept and credit to the fund money received in the form of a donation, gift, legacy, or bequest, or otherwise contributed to the fund.

"(b) Upon receipt of a certification from the Commission under section 505, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the amount certified by the Commission to the candidate to whom the certification relates.

"(c)(1) If the Secretary of the Treasury determines that the monies in the fund are not, or may not be, sufficient to pay the full amount of entitlement to all candidates eligible to receive payments, he shall reduce the amount to which each candidate is entitled under section 503 by a percentage equal to the percentage obtained by dividing (1) the amount of money remaining in the fund at the time of such determination by (2) the total amount which all candidates eligible to receive payments are entitled to receive under section 503. If additional candidates become eligible under section 502 after the Secretary determines there are insufficient monies in the fund, he shall make any further reductions in the amounts payable to all eligible candidates necessary to carry out the purposes of this subsection. The Secretary shall notify the Commission and each eligible candidate by registered mail of the reduction in the amount to which that candidate is entitled under section 503.

"(2) If, as a result of a reduction under this subsection in the amount to which an eligible candidate is entitled under section 503, payments have been made under this section in excess of the amount to which such candidate is entitled, that candidate is liable for repayment to the fund of the excess under procedures the Commission shall prescribe by regulation.

"(d) No payment shall be made under this title to any candidate for any campaign in connection with any election occurring before January 1, 1976.

"EXAMINATIONS AND AUDITS; REPAYMENTS

"SEC. 507. (a) After each Federal election, the Commission shall conduct a thorough examination and audit of the campaign expenditures of all candidates for Federal office who received payments under this title for use in campaigns relating to that election.

"(b)(1) If the Commission determines that any portion of the payments made to an eligible candidate under section 506 was in excess of the aggregate amount of the payments to which the candidate was entitled, it shall so notify that candidate, and he shall pay to the Secretary of the Treasury an amount equal to the excess amount. If the Commission determines that any portion of the payments made to a candidate under section 506 for use in his primary election campaign or his general election campaign was not used to make expenditures in connection with that campaign, the Commission shall so notify the candidate and he shall pay an amount equal to the amount of the unexpended portion to the Secretary. In making its determination under the preceding sentence, the Commission shall consider all amounts received as contributions to have been expended before any amounts received under this title are expended.

"(2) If the Commission determines that any amount of any payment made to a candidate under section 506 was used for any purpose other than—

"(A) to defray campaign expenditures, or

"(B) to repay loans the proceeds of which were used, or otherwise to restore funds (other than contributions to defray campaign expenditures which were received and expended) which were used, to defray campaign expenditures, it shall notify the candidate of the amount so used, and the candidate shall pay to the Secretary of the Treasury an amount equal to such amount.

"(3) No payment shall be required from a candidate under this subsection in excess of the total amount of all payments received by the candidate under section 506 in connection with the camapign with respect to which the event occurred which caused the candidate to have to make a payment under this subsection.

"(c) No notification shall be made by the Commission under subsection (b) with respect to a campaign more than eighteen months after the day of the election to which the campaign related.

"(d) All payments received by the Secretary under subsection (b) shall be deposited by him in the fund.

"INFORMATION ON EXPENDITURES AND PROPOSED EXPENDITURES

"SEC. 508. (a) Every candidate shall, from time to time as the Commission requires, furnish to the Commission a detailed statement, in the form the Commission prescribes, of—

"(1) the campaign expenditures incurred by him and his authorized committees prior to the date of the statement (whether or not evidence of campaign expenditures has been furnished for purposes of section 505), and

"(2) the campaign expenditures which he and his authorized committees propose to incur on or after the date of the statement.

"(b) The Commission shall, as soon as possible after it receives a statement under subsection (a), prepare and make available for public inspection and copying a summary of the statement, together with any other data or information which it deems advisable.

"REPORTS TO CONGRESS

"SEC. 509. (a) The Commission shall, as soon as practicable after the close of each calendar year, submit a full report to the Senate and House of Representatives setting forth—

"(1) the expenditures incurred by each candidate, and his authorized committees, who received any payment under section 506 in connection with an election;

"(2) the amounts certified by it under section 505 for payment to that candidate; and

"(3) the amount of payments, if any, required from that candidate under section 507, and the reasons for each payment required.

Each report submitted pursuant to this section shall be printed as a Senate document.

"(b) The Commission is authorized to conduct examinations and audits (in addition to the examinations and audits under sections 505 and 507), to conduct investigations, and to require the keeping and submission of any books, records, or other information necessary to carry out the functions and duties imposed on it by this title.

"PARTICIPATION BY COMMISSION IN JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS

"SEC. 510. The Commission may initiate civil proceedings in any district court of the United States to seek recovery of any amounts determined to be payable to the Secretary of the Treasury by a candidate under this title.

"PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS

"SEC. 511. Violation of any provision of this title is punishable by a fine of not more than $50,000, or imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

"RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER FEDERAL ELECTION LAWS

"SEC. 512. The Commission shall consult from time to time with the Secretary of the Senate, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, the Federal Communications Commission, and with other Federal officers charged with the administration of laws relating to Federal elections, in order to develop as much consistency and coordination with the administration of those other laws as the provisions of this title permit. The Commission shall use the same or comparable data as that used in the administration of such other election laws whenever possible.".

TITLE II—CHANGES IN CAMPAIGN COMMUNICATIONS LAW AND IN REPORTING AND DISCLOSURE PROVISIONS OF FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

CAMPAIGN COMMUNICATIONS

SEC. 201. (a) Section 315(a) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 315(a)) is amended—

(A) by inserting "(1)" immediately after "(a)";

(B) by redesignating paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (4) as subparagraphs (A), (B), (C), and (D), respectively; and

(C) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(2) The obligation imposed by the first sentence of paragraph (1) upon a licensee with respect to a legally qualified candidate for any elective office (other than the offices of President and Vice President) shall be met by such licensee with respect to such candidate if—

"(A) the licensee makes available to such candidate not less than five minutes of broadcast time without charge;

"(B) the licensee notifies such candidate by certified mail at least fifteen days prior to the election of the availability of such time; and

"(C) such broadcast will cover, in whole or in part, the geographical area in which such election is held.

"(3) No candidate shall be entitled to the use of broadcast facilities pursuant to an offer by a licensee under paragraph (2) unless such candidate notifies the licensee in writing of his acceptance of the offer within forty-eight hours after receipt of the offer."

(b) Section 315(b) of such Act (47 U.S.C. 315(b)) is amended by striking out "by any person" and inserting "by or on behalf of any person".

(c)(1) Section 315(c) of such Act (47 U.S.C. 315(c)) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) No station licensee may make any charge for the use of any such station by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal elective office unless such candidate (or a person specifically authorized by such candidate in writing to do so) certifies to such licensee in writing that the payment of such charge will not exceed the limit on expenditures applicable to that candidate under section 504 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, or under section 614 of title 18, United States Code.".

(2) Section 315(d) of such Act (47 U.S.C. 315(d)) is amended to read as follows:

"(d) If a State by law imposes a limitation upon the amount which a legally qualified candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to public office (other than Federal elective office) within that State may spend in connection with his campaign for such nomination or his campaign for election, then no station licensee may make any charge for the use of such station by or on behalf of such candidate unless such candidate (or a person specifically authorized in writing by him to do so) certifies to such licensee in writing that the payment of such charge will not violate that limitation.".

(d) Section 317 of such Act (47 U.S.C. 317), is amended by—

(1) striking out in paragraph (1) of subsection (a) "person: Provided, That" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "person. If such matter is a political advertisement soliciting funds for a candidate or a political committee, there shall be announced at the time of such broadcast a statement that a copy of reports filed by that person with the Federal Election Commission is available from the Federal Election Commission, Washington, D.C., and the licensee shall not make any charge for any part of the costs of making the announcement. The term"; and

(2) by redesignating subsection (e) as (f), and by inserting after subsection (d) the following new subsection:

"(e) Each station licensee shall maintain a record of any political advertisement broadcast, together with the identification of the person who caused it to be broadcast, for a period of two years. The record shall be available for public inspection at reasonable hours.".

(e) The Campaign Communications Reform Act is repealed.

CHANGES IN DEFINITIONS FOR REPORTING AND DISCLOSURE

SEC. 202. (a) Section 301 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to definitions) is amended by—

(1) striking out ", and (5) the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States" in paragraph (a), and by inserting "and" before "(4)" in such paragraph;

(2) striking out paragraph (d) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(d) 'political committee' means—

"(1) any committee, club, association, or other group of persons which receives contributions or makes expenditures during a calendar year in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000;

"(2) any national committee, association, or organization of a political party, any State affiliate or subsidiary of a national political party, and any State central committee of a political party; and

"(3) any committee, association, or organization engaged in the administration of a separate segregated fund described in section 610 of title 18, United States Code;";

(3) inserting in paragraph (e)(1) after "subscription" the following: "(including any assessment, fee, or membership dues)";

(4) striking out in paragraph (e)(1) "or for the purpose of influencing the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "or for the purpose of financing any operations of a political committee (other than a payment made or an obligation incurred by a corporation or labor organization which, under the provisions of the last paragraph of section 610 of title 18, United States Code, does not constitute a contribution by that corporation or labor organization), or for the purpose of paying, at any time, any debt or obligation incurred by a candidate or a political committee in connection with any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office";

(5) striking out subparagraph (2) of paragraph (e), and amending subparagraph (3) of such paragraph to read as follows:

SEC. 203. (a) Section 303 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to registration of political committees; statements) is amended by redesignating subsections (a) through (d) as (b) through (e), respectively, and by inserting after "SEC. 303." the following new subsection (a):

"(a) Each candidate shall, within ten days after the date on which he has qualified under State law as a candidate, or on which he, or any person authorized by him to do so, has received a contribution or made an expenditure in connection with his campaign or for the purpose of preparing to undertake his campaign, file with the Commission a registration statement in such form as the Commission may prescribe. The statement shall include—

"(1) the identification of the candidate, and any individual, political committee, or other person he has authorized to receive contributions or make expenditures on his behalf in connection with his campaign;

"(2) the identification of his campaign depositories, together with the title and number of each account at each such depository which is to be used in connection with his campaign, any safety deposit box to be used in connection therewith, and the identification of each individual authorized by him to make any expenditure or withdrawal from such account or box; and

"(3) such additional relevant information as the Commission may require.".

(b) The first sentence of subsection (b) of such section (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) is amended to read as follows: "The treasurer of each political committee shall file with the Commission a statement of organization within ten days after the date on which the committee is organized.".

(c) The second sentence of such subsection (b) is amended by striking out "this Act" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974".

(d) Subsection (c) of such section (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) is amended by—

(1) inserting "be in such form as the Commission shall prescribe, and shall" after "The statement of organization shall";

(2) striking out paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

(3) striking out paragraph (9) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(9) the name and address of the campaign depositories used by that committee, together with the title and number of each account and safety deposit box used by that committee at each depository, and the identification of each individual authorized to make withdrawals or payments out of such account or box;".

(e) The caption of such section 303 is amended by inserting "CANDIDATES AND" after "REGISTRATION OF".

CHANGES IN REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 204. (a) Section 304 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to reports by political committees and candidates) is amended by—

(1) inserting "(1)" after "(a)" in subsection (a);

(2) striking out "for election" each place it appears in the first sentence of subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof in each such place "for nomination for election, or for election,";

(3) striking out the second sentence of subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Such reports shall be filed on the tenth day of April, July, and October of each year, on the tenth day preceding an election, on the tenth day of December in the year of an election, and on the last day of January of each year. Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, the reports required by that sentence to be filed during April, July, and October by or relating to a candidate during a year in which no Federal election is held in which he is a candidate, may be filed on the twentieth day of each month.";

(4) striking out everything after "filing" in the third sentence of subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof a period and the following: "If the person making any anonymous contribution is subsequently identified, the identification of the contributor shall be reported to the Commission within the reporting period within which he is identified."; and

(5) adding at the end of subsection (a) the following new paragraph:

"(2) Upon a request made by a presidential candidate or a political committee which operates in more than one State, or upon its own motion, the Commission may waive the reporting dates (other than January 31) set forth in paragraph (1), and require instead that such candidates or political committees file reports not less frequently than monthly. The Commission may not require a presidential candidate or a political committee operating in more than one State to file more than eleven reports (not counting any report to be filed on January 31) during any calendar year. If the Commission acts on its own motion under this paragraph with respect to a candidate or a political committee, that candidate or committee may obtain judicial review in accordance with the provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code.".

(b)(1) Section 304(b) of such Act (relating to reports by political committees and candidates) is amended by striking "full name and mailing address (occupation and the principal place of business, if any)" in paragraphs (9) and (10) and inserting in lieu thereof in each such paragraph "identification".

(2) Subsection (b)(5) of such section 304 is amended by striking out "lender and endorsers" and inserting in lieu thereof "lender, endorsers, and guarantors".

(c) Subsection (b)(12) of such section is amended by inserting immediately before the semicolon a comma and the following: ", together with a statement as to the circumstances and conditions under which any such debt or obligation is extinguished and the consideration therefor".

(d) Subsection (b) of such section is amended by—

(1) striking the "and" at the end of paragraph (12); and

(2) redesignating paragraph (13) as (14), and by inserting after paragraph (12) the following new paragraph:

"(13) such information as the Commission may require for the disclosure of the nature, amount, source, and designated recipient of any earmarked, encumbered, or restricted contribution or other special fund; and".

(e) The first sentence of subsection (c) of such section is amended to read as follows: "The reports required to be filed by subsection (a) shall be cumulative during the calendar year to which they relate, and during such additional periods of time as the Commission may require.".

(f) Such section 304 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(d) This section does not require a Member of Congress to report, as contributions received or as expenditures made, the value of photographic, matting, or recording services furnished to him before the first day of January of the year preceding the year in which his term of office expires if those services were furnished to him by the Senate Recording Studio, the House Recording Studio, or by any individual whose pay is disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of Representatives and who furnishes such services as his primary duty as an employee of the Senate or House of Representatives, or if such services were paid for by the Republican or Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, the Democratic National Congressional Committee, or the National Republican Congressional Committee.

"(e) Every person (other than a political committee or candidate) who makes contributions or expenditures, other than by contribution to a political committee or candidate, in an aggregate amount in excess of $100 within a calendar year shall file with the Commission a statement containing the information required by this section. Statements required by this subsection shall be filed on the dates on which reports by political committees are filed but need not be cumulative.".

(g) The caption of such section 304 is amended to read as follows:

"REPORTS".

CAMPAIGN ADVERTISEMENTS

SEC. 205. Section 305 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to reports by others than political committees) is amended to read as follows:

"REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO CAMPAIGN ADVERTISING

"SEC. 305. (a) No person shall cause any political advertisement to be published unless he furnishes to the publisher of the advertisement his identification in writing, together with the identification of any person authorizing him to cause such publication.

"(b) Each published political advertisement shall contain a statement, in such form as the Commission may prescribe, of the identification of the person authorizing the publication of that advertisement.

"(c) A publisher who publishes any political advertisement shall maintain such records as the Commission may prescribe for a period of two years after the date of publication setting forth such advertisement and any material relating to identification furnished to him in connection therewith, and shall permit the public to inspect and copy those records at reasonable hours.

"(d) No person who sells space in a newspaper or magazine to a candidate, or to the agent of a candidate, for use in connection with that candidate's campaign, may change any amount for such space which exceeds the amount charged for comparable use of such space for other purposes.

"(e) Each political committee shall include on the face or front page of all literature and advertisements soliciting contributions the following notice:

"'A copy of our report is filed with the Federal Election Commission and is available for purchase from the Federal Election Commission, Washington, D.C.'

"(f) As used in this section, the term—

"(1) 'political advertisement' means any matter advocating the election or defeat of any candidate but does not include any bona fide news story (including interviews, commentaries, or other works prepared for and published by any newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication the publication of which work is not paid for by any candidate, political committee, or agent thereof); and

"(2) 'published' means publication in a newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication, distribution of printed leaflets, pamphlets, or other documents, or display through the use of any outdoor advertising facility, and such other use of printed media as the Commission shall prescribe.".

WAIVER OF REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 206. Section 306(c) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to formal requirements respecting reports and statements) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) The Commission may, by a rule of general applicability which is published in the Federal Register not less than thirty day before its effective date, relieve—

"(1) any category of candidates of the obligation to comply personally with the requirements of subsections (a) through (e) of section 304, if it determines that such action is consistent with the purposes of this Act, and

"(2) any category of political committees of the obligation to comply with such section if such committees—

"(A) primarily support persons seeking State or local office, and

"(B) do not operate in more than one State or do not operate on a statewide basis.".

ESTABLISHMENT OF FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION; CENTRAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEES; CAMPAIGN DEPOSITORIES

SEC. 207. (a) Title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to disclosure of Federal campaign funds) is amended by redesignating section 308 as section 312, and by inserting after section 307 the following new sections:

"FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION

"SEC. 308. (a)(1) There is established, as an independent establishment of the executive branch of the Government of the United States, a commission to be known as the Federal Election Commission.

"(2) The Commission shall be composed of the Comptroller General, who shall serve without the right to vote, and seven members who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Of the seven members—

"(A) two shall be chosen from among individuals recommended by the President pro tempore of the Senate, upon the recommendations of the majority leader of the Senate and the minority leader of the Senate; and

"(B) two shall be chosen from among individuals recommended by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, upon the recommendations of the majority leader of the House and the minority leader of the House.

The two members appointed under subparagraph (A) shall not be affiliated with the same political party; nor shall the two members appointed under subparagraph (B). Of the members not appointed under such subparagraphs, not more than two shall be affiliated with the same political party.

"(3) Members of the Commission, other than the Comptroller General, shall serve for terms of seven years, except that, of the members first appointed—

"(A) one of the members not appointed under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for a term ending on the April thirtieth first occurring more than six months after the date on which he is appointed;

"(B) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2)(A) shall be appointed for a term ending one year after the April thirtieth on which the term of the member referred to in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph ends;

"(C) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2)(B) shall be appointed for a term ending two years thereafter;

"(D) one of the members not appointed under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for a term ending three years therafter;

"(E) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2)(A) shall be appointed for a term ending four years thereafter;

"(F) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2)(B) shall be appointed for a term ending five years thereafter; and

"(G) one of the members not appointed under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for a term ending six years thereafter.

"(4) Members shall be chosen on the basis of their maturity, experience, integrity, impartiality, and good judgment. A member may be reappointed to the Commission only once.

"(5) An individual appointed to fill a vacancy occurring other than by the expiration of a term of office shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member he succeeds. Any vacancy occurring in the office of member of the Commission shall be filled in the manner in which that office was originally filled.

"(6) The Commission shall elect a Chairman and a Vice Chairman from among its members for a term of two years. The Chairman and the Vice Chairman shall not be affiliated with the same political party. The Vice Chairman shall act as Chairman in the absence or disability of the Chairman, or in the event of a vacancy in that office.

"(b) A vacancy in the Commission shall not impair the right of the remaining members to exercise all the powers of the Commission. Four members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum.

"(c) The Commission shall have an official seal which shall be judicially noticed.

"(d) The Commission shall at the close of each fiscal year report to the Congress and to the President concerning the action it has taken; the names, salaries, and duties of all individuals in its employ and the money it has disbursed; and shall make such further reports on the matters within its jurisdiction and such recommendations for further leigslation as may appear desirable.

"(e) The principal office of the Commission shall be in or near the District of Columbia, but it may meet or exercise any or all its powers in any State.

"(f) The Commission shall appoint a General Counsel and an Executive Director to serve at the pleasure of the Commission. The General Counsel shall be the chief legal officer of the Commission. The Executive Director shall be responsible for the administrative operations of the Commission and shall perform such other duties as may be delegated or assigned to him from time to time by rules or orders of the Commission. However, the Commission shall not delegate the making of rules regarding elections to the Executive Director.

"(g) The Chairman of the Commission shall appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel as are necessary to fulfill the duties of the Commission in accordance with the provisions of title 5, United States Code.

"(h) The Commission may obtain the services of experts and consultants in accordance with section 3109 of title 5, United States Code.

"(i) In carrying out its responsibilities under this title, the Commission shall, to the fullest extent practicable, avail itself of the assistance, including personnel and facilities, of the General Accounting Office and the Department of Justice. The Comptroller General and the Attorney General may make available to the Commission such personnel, facilities, and other assistance, with or without reimbursement, as the Commission may request.

"(j) The provisions of section 7324 of title 5, United States Code, shall apply to members of the Commission notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (d)(3) of such section.

"(k)(1) Whenever the Commission submits any budget estimate or request to the President or the Office of Management and Budget, it shall concurrently transmit a copy of that estimate or request to the Congress.

"(2) Whenever the Commission submits any legislative recommendations, or testimony, or comments on legislation requested by the Congress or by any Member of Congress to the President or the Office of Management and Budget, it shall concurrently transmit a copy thereof to the Congress or to the Member requesting the same. No officer or agency of the United States shall have any authority to require the Commission to submit its legislative recommendations, testimony, or comments on legislation, to any office or agency of the United States for approval, comments, or review, prior to the submission of such recommendations, testimony, or comments to the Congress.

"POWERS OF COMMISSION

"SEC. 309. (a) The Commission has the power—

"(1) to require, by special or general orders, any person to submit in writing such reports and answers to questions as the Commission may prescribe; and such submission shall be made within such a reasonable period of time and under oath or otherwise as the Commission may determine;

"(2) to administer oaths;

"(3) to require by subpena, signed by the Chairman or the Vice Chairman, the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all documentary evidence relating to the execution of its duties;

"(4) in any proceeding or investigation to order testimony to be taken by deposition before any person who is designated by the Commission and has the power to administer oaths and, in such instances, to compel testimony and the production of evidence in the same manner as authorized under paragraph (3) of this subsection;

"(5) to pay witnesses the same fees and mileage as are paid in like circumstances in the courts of the United States;

"(6) to initiate (through civil proceedings for injunctive relief and through presentations to Federal grand juries), prosecute, defend, or appeal any civil or criminal action in the name of the Commission for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this Act and of sections 602, 608, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, and 618 of title 18, United States Code, through its General Counsel;

"(7) to delegate any of its functions or powers other than the power to issue subpenas under paragraph (3), to any officer or employee of the Commission; and

"(8) to make, amend, and repeal such rules, pursuant to the provisions of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code, as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

"(b) Any United States district court within the jurisdiction of which any inquiry is carried on, may, upon petition by the Commission, in case of refusal to obey a subpena or order of the Commission issued under subsection (a) of this section, issue an order requiring compliance therewith. Any failure to obey the order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof.

"(c) No person shall be subject to civil liability to any person (other than the Commission or the United States) for disclosing information at the request of the Commission.

"(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commission shall be the primary civil and criminal enforcement agency for violations of the provisions of this Act, and of sections 602, 608, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, and 618 of title 18, United States Code. Any violation of any such provision shall be prosecuted by the Attorney General or Department of Justice personnel only after consultation with, and with the consent of, the Commission.

"(e)(1) Any person who violates any provision of this Act or of section 602, 608, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, or 618 of title 18, United States Code, may be assessed a civil penalty by the Commission under paragraph (2) of this subsection of not more than $10,000 for each such violation. Each occurrence of a violation of this Act and each day of noncompliance with a disclosure requirement of this title or an order of the Commission issued under this section shall constitute a separate offense. In determining the amount of the penalty the Commission shall consider the person's history of previous violations, the appropriateness of such penalty to the financial resources of the person charged, the gravity of the violation, and the demonstrated good faith of the person charged in attempting to achieve rapid compliance after notification of a violation.

"(2) A civil penalty shall be assessed by the Commission by order only after the person charged with a violation has been given an opportunity for a hearing and the Commission has determined, by decision incorporating its findings of fact therein, that a violation did occur, and the amount of the penalty. Any hearing under this section shall be of record and shall be held in accordance with chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code.

"(3) If the person against whom a civil penalty is assessed fails to pay the penalty, the Commission shall file a petition for enforcement of its order assessing the penalty in any appropriate district court of the United States. The petition shall designate the person against whom the order is sought to be enforced as the respondent. A copy of the petition shall be sent by registered or certified mail to the respondent and his attorney of record, and thereupon the Commission shall certify and file in such court the record upon which such order sought to be enforced was issued. The court shall have jurisdiction to enter a judgment enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside in whole or in part the order and decision of the Commission or it may remand the proceedings to the Commission for such further action as it may direct. The court may determine de novo all issues of law but the Commission's findings of fact, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive.

"(f) Upon application made by any individual holding Federal office, any candidate, or any political committee, the Commission, through its General Counsel, shall provide within a reasonable period of time an advisory opinion, as to whether a specific transaction or activity may constitute a violation of any provision of this Act or of any provision of title 18, United States Code, over which the Commission has primary jurisdiction under subsection (d).

"CENTRAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEES

"SEC. 310. (a) Each candidate shall designate one political committee as his central campaign committee. A candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to the office of President, may also designate one political committee in each State in which he is a candidate as his State campaign committee for that State. The designation shall be made in writing, and a copy of the designation, together with such information as the Commission may require, shall be furnished to the Commission upon the designation of any such committee.

"(b) No political committee may be designated as the central campaign committee of more than one candidate, except that a political committee described in section 301(d)(2) may be designated as the central campaign committee of more than one candidate for purposes of the general election campaign and if so designated, it shall comply with all reporting and other requirements of law as to each candidate for whom it is so designated as if it were the central campaign committee for that candidate alone. The central campaign committee, and each State campaign committee, designated by a candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of President shall be the central campaign committee and the State campaign committee of the candidate nominated by that party for election to the office of Vice President.

"(c)(1) Any political committee authorized by a candidate to accept contributions or make expenditures in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or for election, which is not a central campaign committee or a State campaign committee, shall furnish each report required of it under section 304 (other than reports required under section 311(b)) to that candidate's central campaign committee at the time it would, but for this subsection, be required to furnish that report to the Commission. Any report properly furnished to a central campaign committee under this subsection shall be, for purposes of this title, considered to have been furnished to the Commission at the time at which it was furnished to such central campaign committee.

"(2) The Commission may, by rule, require any political committee receiving contributions or making expenditures in a State on behalf of a candidate who, under subsection (a), has designated a State campaign committee for that State to furnish its reports to that State campaign committee instead of furnishing such reports to the central campaign committee of that candidate.

"(3) The Commission may require any political committee to furnish any report directly to the Commission.

"(d) Each political committee which is a central campaign committee or a State campaign committee shall receive, consolidate, and furnish all reports filed with or furnished to it by other political committees to the Commission, together with its own reports and statements, in accordance with the provisions of this title and regulations prescribed by the Commission.

"CAMPAIGN DEPOSITORIES

"SEC. 311. (a)(1) Each candidate shall designate one or more National or State banks as his campaign depositories. The central campaign committee of that candidate, and any other political committee authorized by him to receive contributions or to make expenditures on his behalf, shall maintain a checking account at a depository designated by the candidate and shall deposit any contributions received by that committee into that account. A candidate shall deposit any payment received by him under section 506 of this Act in the account maintained by his central campaign committee. No expenditure may be made by any such committee on behalf of a candidate or to influence his election except by check drawn on that account, other than petty cash expenditures as provided in subsection (b).

"(2) The treasurer of each political committee (other than a political committee authorized by a candidate to receive contributions or to make expenditures on his behalf) shall designate one or more National or State banks as campaign depositories of that committee, and shall maintain a checking account for the committee at each such depository. All contributions received by that committee shall be deposited in such an account. No expenditure may be made by that committee except by check drawn on that account, other than petty cash expenditures as provided in subsection (b).

"(b) A political committee may maintain a petty cash fund out of which it may make expenditures not in excess of $100 to any person in connection with a single purchase or transaction. A record of petty cash disbursements shall be kept in accordance with requirements established by the Commission, and such statements and reports thereof shall be furnished to the Commission as it may require.

"(c) A candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to the office of President may establish one such depository in each State, which shall be considered by his State campaign committee for that State and any other political committee authorized by him to receive contributions or to make expenditures on his behalf in that State, under regulations prescribed by the Commission, as his campaign depository. The campaign depository of the candidate of a political party for election to the office of Vice President shall be the campaign depository designated by the candidate of that party for election to the office of President.".

(b)(1) Section 5314 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(60) Members (other than the Comptroller General), Federal Election Commission (7)."

(2) Section 5315 of such title is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(98) General Counsel, Federal Election Commission.

"(99) Executive Director, Federal Election Commission."

(c) Until the appointment and qualification of all the members of the Federal Election Commission and its General Counsel and until the transfer provided for in this subsection, the Comptroller General, the Secretary of the Senate, and the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall continue to carry out their responsibilities under title I and title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 as such titles existed on the day before the date of enactment of this Act. Upon the appointment of all the members of the Commission and its General Counsel, the Comptroller General, the Secretary of the Senate, and the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall meet with the Commission and arrange for the transfer, within thirty days after the date on which all such members and the General Counsel are appointed, of all records, documents, memorandums, and other papers associated with carrying out their responsibilities under title I and title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

(5) amending section 304 (relating to reports by political committees and candidates) by—

(A) striking out "appropriate supervisory officer" and "him" in the first sentence thereof and inserting in lieu thereof "Commission" and "it", respectively; and

(B) striking out "supervisory officer" where it appears in the third sentence of subsection (a)(1) (as redesignated by section 204(a)(1) of this Act) and in paragraphs (12) and (14) (as redesignated by section 204(d)(2) of this Act) of subsection (b) and inserting in lieu thereof "Commission";

(6) striking out "supervisory officer" each place it appears in section 306 (relating to formal requirements respecting reports and statements) and inserting in lieu thereof "Commission";

(7) striking out "Comptroller General of the United States" and "he" in section 307 (relating to reports on convention financing) and inserting in lieu thereof "Federal Election Commission" and "it", respectively;

(8) striking out "SUPERVISORY OFFICER" in the caption of section 312 (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) (relating to duties of the supervisory officer) and inserting in lieu thereof "COMMISSION";

(9) striking out "supervisory officer" in section 312(a) (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) the first time it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Commission";

(10) amending section 312(a) (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) by—

(A) striking out "him" in paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "it";

(B) striking out "him" in paragraph (4) and inserting in lieu thereof "it"; and

(C) striking out "he" each place it appears in paragraphs (7) and (9) and inserting in lieu thereof "it";

(11) striking out "supervisory officer" in section 312(b) (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this subsection) and inserting in lieu thereof "Commission";

(12) amending subsection (c) of section 312 (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) by—

(A) striking out "Comptroller General" each place it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof "Commission" and striking out "his" in the second sentence of such subsection and inserting in lieu thereof "its"; and

(B) striking out the last sentence thereof; and (13) amending subsection (d)(1) of section 312 (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) by—

(A) striking out "supervisory officer" each place it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof "Commission";

(B) striking out "he" the first place it appears in the second sentence of such section and inserting in lieu thereof "it"; and

(C) striking out "the Attorney General on behalf of the United States" and inserting in lieu thereof "the Commission".

INDEXING AND PUBLICATION OF REPORTS

SEC. 208. Section 312(a) (6) (as redesignated by this Act) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to duties of the supervisory officer) is amended to read as follows:

"(6) to compile and maintain a cumulative index listing all statements and reports filed with the Commission during each calendar year by political committees and candidates which the Commission shall cause to be published in the Federal Register no less frequently than monthly during even-numbered years and quarterly in odd-numbered years and which shall be in such form and shall include such information as may be prescribed by the Commission to permit easy identification of each statement, report, candidate, and committee listed, at least as to their names, the dates of the statements and reports, and the number of pages in each, and the Commission shall make copies of statements and reports listed in the index available for sale, direct or by mail, at a price determined by the Commission to be reasonable to the purchaser;".

(2) Subsection (a) of such section is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(3) No candidate or his immediate family may make loans or advances from their personal funds in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or election, to Federal office unless such loan or advance is evidenced by a written instrument fully disclosing the terms and conditions of such loan or advance.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection, any such loan or advance shall be included in computing the total amount of such expenditures only to the extent of the balance of such loan or advance outstanding and unpaid."

(b) Subsection (c) of such section is amended by striking out "$1,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$25,000", and by striking out "one year" and inserting in lieu thereof "five years".

(c)(1) The caption of such section 608 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "out of the candidates' personal and family funds".

(2) The table of sections for chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out the item relating to section 608 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"608. Limitations on contributions and expenditures out of candidates' personal and family funds.".

(d) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 608 of title 18, United States Code, it shall not be unlawful for any individual who, as of the date of enactment of this Act, has outstanding any debt or obligation incurred on his behalf by any political committee in connection with his campaign prior to January 1, 1972, for nomination for election, and for election, to Federal office, to satisfy or discharge any such debt or obligation out of his own personal funds or the personal funds of his immediate family (as such term is defined in such section 608).

SEPARATE SEGREGATED FUND MAINTENANCE BY GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS

SEC. 303. Section 611 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"It is not a violation of the provisions of this section for a corporation or a labor organization to establish, administer, or solicit contributions to a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes by that corporation or labor organization if the establishment and administration of, and solicitation of contributions to, such fund are not a violation of section 610.".

LIMITATIONS ON POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES; EMBEZZLEMENT OR CONVERSION OF CAMPAIGN FUNDS; EARLY DISCLOSURE OF PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION RESULTS

SEC. 304. (a) Chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"§ 614. Limitation on expenditures generally

"(a)(1) No candidate may make expenditures in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office in excess of the amount to which he would be limited under section 504 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 if he were receiving payments under the title V of that Act.

"(2) Expenditures made on behalf of any candidate are, for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by such candidate.

"(3) Expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate for the office of Vice President of the United States are, for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by the candidate for the office of President of the United States with whom he is running.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection, an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a Vice Presidential candidate, if it is made by—

"(A) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for the purposes of making any expenditure, or

"(B) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, or an agent of the candidate to make the expenditure.

"(5) The Federal Election Commission shall prescribe regulations under which any expenditure by a candidate for Presidential nomination for use in two or more States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

"(b)(1) Notwithstanding any other provisions of law with respect to limitations on expenditures or limitations on contributions, the national committee of a political party and a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committees of a State committee, may make expenditures in connection with the general election campaign of candidates for Federal office, subject to the limitations contained in paragraphs (2) and (3) hereof.

"(2) The national committee of a political party may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of any candidate for President who is affiliated with that party which exceeds an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting population of the United States.

"(3) The national committee of a political party, or a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committees of a State committee, may not make expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate for Federal office in a State who is affiliated with that party which exceeds—

"(A) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Senator, or of Representative from a State where a Representative is required to run statewide, the greater of—

"(i) 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of that State, or

"(ii) $20,000; and

"(B) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Representative in any other State, $10,000.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) the term 'voting age population' means voting age population certified for the year under section 504(g) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971; and

"(B) the approval by the national committee of a political party of an expenditure by or one behalf of the presidential candidate of that party as required by section 316 of that Act is not considered an expenditure by that national committee.

"(c)(1) No person may make any expenditure (other than an expenditure made on behalf of a candidate under the provisions of subsection (a)(4) advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate during a calendar year which, when added to all other expenditures made by that person during the year advocating the election or defeat of that candidate, exceeds $1,000.

"(2) For the purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) 'clearly identified' means—

"(i) the candidate's name appears;

"(ii) a photograph or drawing of the candidate appears; or

"(iii) the identity of the candidate is apparent by unambiguous reference;

"(B) 'person' does not include the national or State committee of a political party; and

"(C) 'expenditure' does not include any payment made or incurred by a corporation or a labor organization which, under the provisions of the last paragraph of section 610 would not constitute an expenditure by that corporation or labor organization.

"(3) This subsection does not apply to the Democratic or Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, the Democratic National Congressional Committee, or the National Republican Congressional Committee.

"(d) Any person who knowingly or willfully violates the provisions of this section, other than subsection (a)(5), shall be punishable by a fine of $25,000, imprisonment for a period of not more than five years, or both. If any candidate is convicted of violating the provisions of this section because of any expenditure made on his behalf (as determined under subsection (a)(4)) by a political committee, the treasurer of that committee, or any other person authorizing such expenditure, shall be punishable by a fine of not to exceed $25,000, imprisonment for not to exceed five years, or both, if such person knew, or had reason to know, that such expenditure was in excess of the limitation applicable to such candidate under this section.

"§ 615. Limitations on contributions

"(a)(1) No individual may make a contribution to, or for the benefit of, a candidate for that candidate's campaign for election, which, when added to the sum of all other contributions made by that individual for that campaign, exceeds $3,000.

"(2) No person (other than an individual) may make a contribution to, or for the benefit of, a candidate for nomination for election, or election, which, when added to the sum of all other contributions made by that person for that campaign, exceeds $6,000.

"(b)(1) No candidate may knowingly accept a contribution for his campaign from any individual which, when added to the sum of all other contributions received from that individual for that campaign exceeds $3,000, or from any person (other than an individual) which, when added to the sum of all other contributions received from that person for that campaign, exceeds $6,000.

"(2) (A) No candidate may knowingly solicit or accept a contribution for his campaign—

"(i) from a foreign national, or

"(ii) which is made in violation of section 613 of this title.

"(B) For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'foreign national' means—

"(i) a 'foreign principal' as that term is defined in section 611(b) of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, as amended, other than a person who is a citizen of the United States; or

"(ii) an individual who is not a citizen of the United States and who is not lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as defined in section 101(a)(20) of the Immigration and Nationality Act".

"(3) No officer or employee of a political committee or of a political party may knowingly accept any contribution made for the benefit or use of a candidate which that candidate could not accept under paragraph (1) or (2).

"(c)(1) For purposes of the limitations contained in this section all contributions made by any person directly or indirectly to or for the benefit of a particular candidate, including contributions which are in any way earmarked, encumbered, or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to that candidate, shall be treated as contributions from that person to that candidate.

"(2) Contributions made to, or for the benefit of, a candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President shall be considered, for purposes of this section, to be made to, or for the benefit of, the candidate nominated by that party for election to the office of President.

"(3) For purposes of this section, the term 'campaign' includes all primary, primary runoff, and general election campaigns related to a specific general election, and all primary, primary runoff, and special election campaigns related to a specific special election.

"(d)(1) No individual may make a contribution during any calendar year which, when added to the sum of all other contributions made by that individual during that year, exceeds $25,000.

"(2) Any contribution made for a campaign in a year, other than the calendar year in which the election is held to which that campaign relates, is, for purposes of paragraph (1), considered to be made during the calendar year in which that election is held.

"(e) This section does not apply to contributions made by the Democratic or Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, the Democratic National Congressional Committee, or the National Republican Congressional Committee.

"(f) Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine of not to exceed $25,000, imprisonment for not to exceed five years, or both.

"§ 616. Form of contributions

No person may make a contribution to, or for the benefit of, any candidate or political committee in excess, in the aggregate during any calendar year, of $100 unless such contribution is made by a written instrument identifying the person making the contribution. Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine of not to exceed $1,000, imprisonment for not to exceed one year, or both.

"§ 617. Embezzlement or conversion of political contributions agent of a political

vert to his own use or the use of another, or deposit in any place or in any manner except as authorized by law, any contributions or campaign funds entrusted to him or under his possession, custody, or control, or use any campaign funds to pay or defray the costs of attorney fees for the defense of any person or persons charged with the commission of a crime; or receive, conceal, or retain the same with intent to convert it to his personal use or gain, knowing it to have been embezzled or converted.

"(b) Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine of not more than $25,000, imprisonment for not more than ten years, or both; but if the value of such property does not exceed the sum of $100 fine, the fine shall not exceed $1,000 and the imprisonment shall not exceed one year. Notwithstanding the provisions of this section, any surplus or unexpended campaign funds may be contributed to a national or State political party for political purposes, or to educational or charitable organizations, or may be preserved for use in future campaigns for elective office, or for any other lawful purpose.

"§ 618. Voting fraud

"(a) No person shall in a Federal election—

"(1) cast, or attempt to cast, a ballot in the name of another person,

"(2) cast, or attempt to cast, a ballot if he is not qualified to vote,

"(3) forge or alter a ballot,

"(4) miscount votes,

"(5) tamper with a voting machine, or

"(6) commit any act (or fail to do anything required of him by law), with the intent of causing an inaccurate count of lawfully cast votes in any election.

"(b) A violation of the provisions of subsection (a) is punishable by a fine of not to exceed $100,000, imprisonment for not more than ten years, or both.

"§ 619. Early disclosure of election results in Presidential election years

"Whoever makes public any information with respect to the number of votes cast for any candidate for election to the office of Presidential and Vice-Presidential elector in the general election held for the appointment of Presidential electors, prior to midnight, eastern standard time, on the day on which such election is held shall be fined not more than $5,000, imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

"§ 620. Fraudulent misrepresentation of campaign authority

"Whoever, being a candidate for Federal office, as defined herein, or an employee or agent of such a candidate—

"(1) fraudulently misrepresents himself or any committee or organization under his control as speaking or writing or otherwise acting for or on behalf of any other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof on a matter which is damaging to such other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof; or

"(2) willfully and knowingly participates in or conspires to participate in any plan, scheme, or design to violate paragraph (a) hereof, shall, for each such offense, be fined not more than $50,000 or imprisoned not more than five years or both."

(b) Section 591 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out "and 611" and inserting in lieu thereof "611, 614, 615, 616, 617, 618, and 619".

(c) The table of sections for chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new items:

"614. Limitation on expenditures generally.
"615. Limitation on contributions.
"616. Form of contributions.
"617. Embezzlement or conversion of political contributions.
"618. Voting fraud.
"619. Early disclosure of election results in Presidential election years.
"620. Fraudulent misrepresentation of campaign authority.".

REPEAL OF CERTAIN EXCEPTIONS TO CONTRIBUTION AND EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS

SEC. 305. Section 614(c)(3) of title 18, United States Code (as added by section 304 of this Act), and section 615(e) of such title (as added by section 304 of this Act) (relating to the application of such sections to certain campaign committees) are repealed. Section 615 of title 18, United States Code (as added by section 304 of this Act), is amended by striking out "(f)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(e)".

TITLE IV—DISCLOSURE OF FINANCIAL INTERESTS BY CERTAIN FEDERAL OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

FEDERAL EMPLOYEE FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 401. (a) Any candidate for nomination for or election to Federal office who, at the time he becomes a candidate, does not occupy any such office, shall file within one month after he becomes a candidate for such office, and each Member of Congress, each officer and employee of the United States (including any member of a uniformed service) who is compensated at a rate in excess of $25,000 per annum, any individual occupying the position of an officer or employee of the United States who performs duties of the type generally performed by an individual occupying grade GS-16 of the General Schedule or any higher grade or position (as determined by the Federal Election Commission regardless of the rate of compensation of such individual), the President, and the Vice President shall file annually, with the Commission a report containing a full and complete statement of—

(1) the amount of each tax paid by the individual, or by the individual and the individual's spouse filing jointly, for the preceding calendar year, and for purposes of this paragraph "tax" means any Federal, State, or local income tax and any Federal, State, or local property tax;

(2) the amount and source of each item of income, each item of reimbursement for any expenditure, and each gift or aggregate of gifts from one source (other than gifts received from his spouse or any member of his immediate family) received by him or by him and his spouse jointly during the preceding calendar year which exceeds $100 in amount or value, including any fee or other honorarium received by him for or in connection with the preparation or delivery of any speech or address, attendance at any convention or other assembly of individuals, or the preparation of any article or other composition for publication, and the monetary value of subsistence, entertainment, travel, and other facilities received by him in kind;

(3) the identity of each asset held by him, or by him and his spouse jointly which has a value in excess of $1,000, and the amount of each liability owed by him or by him and his spouse jointly, which is in excess of $1,000 as of the close of the preceding calendar year;

(4) any transactions in securities of any business entity by him or by him and his spouse jointly, or by any person acting on his behalf or pursuant to his direction during the preceding calendar year if the aggregate amount involved in transactions in the securities of such business entity exceeds $1,000 during such year;

(5) all transactions in commodities by him, or by him and his spouse jointly, or by any person acting on his behalf or pursuant to his direction during the preceding calendar year if the aggregate amount involved in such transactions exceeds $1,000; and

(6) any purchase or sale, other than the purchase or sale of his personal residence, of real property or any interest therein by him, or by him and his spouse jointly, or by any person acting on his behalf or pursuant to his direction, during the preceding calendar year if the value of property involved in such purchase or sale exceeds $1,000.

(b) Reports required by this section (other than reports so required by candidates for nomination for or election to Federal office) shall be filed not later than May 15 of each year. A person who ceases, prior to such date in any year, to occupy the office or position the occupancy of which imposes upon him the reporting requirements contained in subsection (a) shall file such report on the last day he occupies such office or position, or on such later date, not more than three months after such last day, as the Commission may prescribe.

(c) Reports required by this section shall be in such form and detail as the Commission may prescribe. The Commission may provide for the grouping of items of income, sources of income, assets, liabilities, dealings in securities or commodities, and purchases and sales of real property, when separate itemization is not feasible or is not necessary for an accurate disclosure of the income, net worth, dealing in securities and commodities, or purchases and sales of real property of any individual.

(d) Any person who willfully fails to file a report required by this section or who knowingly and willfully files a false report under this section, shall be fined not more than $2,000, or imprisoned for not more than five years, or both.

(e) All reports filed under this section shall be maintained by the Commission as public records, which, under such reasonable rules as it shall prescribe, shall be available for inspection by members of the public.

(f) For the purposes of any report required by this section, an individual is considered to be President, Vice President, a Member of Congress, an officer or employee of the United States, or a member of a uniformed service, during any calendar year if he serves in any such position for more than six months during such calendar year.

(g) As used in this section—

(1) The term "income" means gross income as defined in section 61 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

(2) The term "security" means security as defined in section 2 of the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. 77b).

(3) The term "commodity" means commodity as defined in section 2 of the Commodity Exchange Act (7 U.S.C. 2).

(4) The term "transactions in securities or commodities" means any acquisition, holding, withholding, use, transfer, or other disposition involving any security or commodity.

(5) The term "Member of Congress" means a Senator, a Representative, a Resident Commissioner, or a Delegate.

(6) The term "officer" has the same meaning as in section 2104 of title 5, United States Code.

(7) The term "employee" has the same meaning as in section 2105 of such title.

(8) The term "uniformed service" means any of the Armed Forces, the commissioned corps of the Public Health Service, or the commissioned corps of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

(9) The term "immediate family" means the child, parent, grandparent, brother, or sister of an individual, and the spouses of such persons.

(h) Section 554 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) All written communications and memorandums stating the circumstances, source, and substance of all oral communications made to the agency, or any office or employee thereof, with respect to any adjudication which is subject to the provisions of this section by any person who is not an officer or employee of the agency shall be made a part of the public record of such case. This subsection shall not apply to communications to any officer, employee, or agent of the agency engaged in the performance of investigative or prosecuting functions for the agency with respect to such case."

(1) The first report required under this section shall be due thirty days after the date of enactment and shall be filed with the Comptroller General of the United States, who shall, for purposes of this subsection, have the powers and duties conferred upon the Commission by this section.

TITLE V—MISCELLANEOUS

SIMULTANEOUS POLL CLOSING TIME

SEC. 501. On every national election day, commencing on the date of the national elections in 1976, the closing time of the polling places in the several States for the election of electors for President and Vice President of the United States and the election of United States Senators and Representatives shall be as follows: 11 postmeridian standard time in the eastern time zone; 10 postmeridian standard time in the central time zone; 9 postmeridian standard time in the mountain time zone; 8 postmeridian standard time in the Pacific time zone; 7 postmeridian standard time in the Yukon time zone; 6 postmeridian standard time in the Alaska-Hawaii time zone; and 5 postmeridian standard time in the Bering time zone: Provided, That the polling places in each of the States shall be open for at least twelve hours.

FEDERAL ELECTION DAY

SEC. 502. Section 6103(a) of title 5, United States Code is amended by inserting between—

"Veterans Day, the fourth Monday in October." and the following new item:

"Thanksgiving Day, the fourth Thursday in November." the following new item:

"Election Day, the first Wednesday next after the first Monday in November 1976, and every second year thereafter.".

REVIEW OF INCOME TAX RETURNS

SEC. 503. (a) On or before July 1 of each and every year hereafter, the Comptroller General of the United States shall obtain from the Internal Revenue Service all returns of income filed by each Member of Congress, each employee or official of the executive, judicial, and legislative branch whose gross income for the most recent year exceeds $20,000 for the five previous years. Upon receipt of such returns, the Comptroller General of the United States shall submit such income returns to an intensive inspection and audit for the purpose of determining liability.

(b) Upon completion of such inspection and audit, the Comptroller General of the United States shall prepare and file a report of the results of his inspection and audit with the taxpayer concerned and the appropriate officer of the Internal Revenue Service for such further action with respect to such return as the Internal Revenue Service shall deem proper. The Comptroller General of the United States shall deliver a copy of such report and results of such audit and inspection to the taxpayer concerned.

(c) The Internal Revenue Service shall asisst the Comptroller General of the United States as necessary in administering the provisions of this section.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. PASTORE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to make such technical and clerical corrections in the engrossment of the bill, S. 3044, including changes in the designation of titles, sections, and subsections and cross-references thereto, as may be necessary to reflect any changes in the bill made by amendments adopted by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER TO PRINT S. 3044 AS PASSED

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that S. 3044, a bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, be printed as passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, the Senate has demonstrated a genuine interest in true election reform by the adoption of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1974.

Not only has the Senate agreed to set reasonable limitations on contributions by individuals and committees, but also strict limits on expenditures by candidates in primary and general elections.

Further, the Senate has agreed to provide Federal funds in primary elections on a matching grant basis and with full funding in general elections.

Candidates have the option under the bill S. 3044 to raise private funds for each election or to accept public funds in whole or in part.

With a strong and independent Federal Election Commission; with central campaign committees; with campaign depositories and timely and full disclosure of all receipts and expenditures, we have attempted to eliminate all weaknesses in the bill and the citizens of the United States will be encouraged to restore their confidence in the elective process.

Mr. President, I wish to commend my colleagues for their support in gaining passage of this bill.

And I wish to thank all of the staff members who worked with the Committee and the Senate in bringing about final passage:

Jim Duffy, Joe O'Leary, and Jim Medill, of the Committee on Rules and Administration.

Lloyd Ator and Bob Cassidy legislative counsel.

Cary Parker of Senator KENNEDY's staff.

Burt Wides of Senator HART's staff.

Ken Davis, assistant to the minority leader, and many others who gave of their time and efforts.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I voted for final passage of S. 3044, the Federal election campaign financing bill. Although I was not completely satisfied with all of the features of this legislation I felt the time for change from the old way was due.

We must move away from an atmosphere of influencing Government decisions affecting the daily lives of our citizens from the prices they pay to the quality of their lives.

I believe that one of the crucial factors determining whether or not we consider a government democratic is not how much power the public officials have, but rather how public officials secure and retain their offices. Events surrounding the last general election have been and will, no doubt, continue to be examined and investigated in an effort to determine the source of enormous amounts of campaign moneys. Coupled with these investigations are repeated cries for reform, for changes in the law concerning campaign financing. And surely some changes are in order.

Mr. President, I do not think anyone can provide a simple answer to the question, "Does money win elections?" It is undeniable that money does play a major role in winning. It does not guarantee victory, but the amount of money collected and spent can in some cases be decisive. Money cannot totally obliterate the influence of issues and candidates' party orientation on voting decisions, but it can and often does make a difference.

No longer should ambassadorships be given as a basis of huge campaign contributions nor should decisions for milk supports be swayed by political contributions.

Some Americans view public policymaking as a sordid process where the wealthy control elected officials. And while there is some corruption, I believe its reputation for moving the wheels of government is far greater than its performance. But money can twist policy in subtle ways—and any effort we can make to erect a barrier between the direct translation of money into policy decisions must be made.

After weeks of debate on this bill and amendments to it, I felt the Senate has made a close examination of the concept of specific proposals for public financing. While I wish the tax checkoff system would adequately provide funds for this approach, I am convinced that it will not and I am now ready to vote for and approve the spending of other tax dollars to finance Presidential campaigns.

Public financing of congressional elections needs additional consideration, however. It is my understanding that the feeling in the House of Representatives is such that little—if any—public financing of congressional elections will be accepted. For now, this may be just as well, for if I had to draft a public financing bill for congressional elections that would be fair and workable, I am not sure that I could. However, I did support an effort by Senator STEVENSON to allow a partial funding of congressional elections without going the entire way.

The purpose of public financing is to eliminate the large and potentially corrupting contributions of big money from our politics. This amendment would have accomplished that purpose but it would not have eliminated the innocent, small contributions which are a healthy form of participation in our political system.

This amendment would have limited the campaign contributions of individuals to Federal campaigns to $3,000 in primaries and $3,000 in general election campaigns. In that respect, it did not alter the provisions of the bill reported by the Rules Committee.

It would also have limited the contributions of committees to $6,000, which could be allocated between a general election campaign and a primary election campaign as the committee sees fit.

It established a system of partial public financing as opposed to the 100 percent public financing which is established in the bill reported by the Rules Committee. Instead of 100-percent, public financing, congressional candidates would have received a front-end subsidy 25 percent of the expenditure limit applicable to congressional campaigns. In addition, private contributions of $100 or less would have been matched with public funds on a dollar-for-dollar basis.

When I was thinking about running for the Senate, I discovered I was not going to be able to raise a large war chest to finance my campaign. So, I had to run a different kind of campaign that was less expensive than the conventional way. During my walk through Florida, I talked with thousands of people who were encouraged by this kind of campaign; one of the primary reasons was that my campaign was not costing huge sums of money.

In sum, I voted for this bill even though it contained the large funding for congressional elections because I believe the public funding concept is vitally important. Even though I am not satisfied with the congressional funding provisions, I feel this legislation should be sent to the House for their consideration.

To vote against this legislation would be a signal that I am against public funding of Presidential elections. I feel this part of the legislation is absolutely necessary and vital. I hope that the House will favorably consider plans for public funding of Presidential elections and begin some efforts toward public funding on congressional races so at least we may have a plan in this area to move with.

TRIBUTE TO SENATORS ON PASSAGE OF CAMPAIGN REFORM

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I wish to pay well-deserved tribute to the many Senators who were responsible for this magnificent achievement—one of the most significant reform proposals that in my judgment has passed the Senate. What it says fundamentally is that public officials will answer first and last to the public and not to this or that special interest group. It is an essential step that must be taken to restore public faith and confidence in the institutions of Government. I am proud, indeed, of the Senate's great initiative on this issue.

Senator CANNON, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules deserves the highest commendation for his leadership and devotion. So, too, does Senator COOK. They joined in cooperative efforts to handle this most important proposal and they assumed the task with the greatest skill and ability.

The Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON) deserves praise for his many outstanding efforts to assure this success His work in behalf of public election reform indeed was indispensable. The same may be said of the efforts of Senator KENNEDY, Senator PELL, and the many others whose inititiative started this process some time ago.

I was particularly impressed with the leadership of the able Republican leader (Mr. HUGH SCOTT) without whose efforts a measure as effective as this could not have been possible. And to Senator BROCK, Senator CLARK, Senator STEVENSON, Senator BAKER, Senator ALLEN, and the many others who joined with statements, with amendments, and with viewpoints, we are especially indebted for providing a debate and discussion of the highest order.

All in all, the Senate may take great pride in this achievement.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the final passage, achieved today, of the legislation for campaign reform and public financing of elections is one of the finest hours of the Senate in this or any other Congress.

Most, if not all, of the things that are wrong with government today have their roots in the way we finance campaigns for public office. The corrosive influence of private money in public life is the primary cause of the lack of responsiveness of government to the people.

Now, through public financing, we can change all that. Once public financing is signed into law, it will begin to have an immensely salutary effect on every dimension of government, as it sends ripples through every issue with which Congress and the administration have to deal.

At least, the stranglehold of wealthy campaign contributors and special interest groups on the election process will be broken, and democracy will be the winner. Only when all the people pay for elections will all the people be truly represented by their Government.

No one believes that public financing is a panacea for America's every social ill. What we do believe is that it is the nation's preeminent reform, the reform that must lead all the rest if we are serious about bringing integrity back to government and giving fair, honest, and clean elections to the people.

Long before Watergate, we knew about the problem. Now, because of Watergate, we have gained the strength to solve it. By voting for public financing, we are telling the Nation that the day of the dollar in public financing is over, that elective office is no longer for sale to the highest private bidder.

Rarely has the Senate sent so clear a message to every citizen. I praise MIKE MANSFIELD, HUGH SCOTT, ROBERT BYRD, HOWARD CANNON, ALAN CRANSTON, and all the other Senators and public interest groups, especially Common Cause and the Center for Public Financing, who did so much to bring this legislation to the Senate floor, to win the fight for cloture, and to make this victory possible.

Finally, Mr. President, I do not think we should close this particular chapter of the campaign financing effort of the Senate without recognition of the special contributions by many Members of this body who worked so hard in this important area.

As one who has been interested in this issue for some time, I wish to express great admiration for the work done by the manager of the bill, the distinguished Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON) and his able staff. He has been on the floor continuously these past 3 weeks, available for discussion and debate on the extremely complex and difficult issues posed in this legislation. I think he has done a brilliant job. All the members of the Committee on Rules and Administration are to be commended, and the staff is also to be commended for their extraordinary efforts.

I also praise the especially important role played by the Senate leadership. The distinguished majority leader (Mr. MANSFIELD), the distinguished Republican leader (Mr. HUGH SCOTT), and the distinguished Democratic whip (Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD) were the keys to the successful struggle for cloture this week. Without their effort, we could not have won today. We could not have obtained cloture or been successful in passing this legislation if we had not had the very strong leadership that the three of them provided, not only in rounding up the votes, but also in presenting to our colleagues the significance and importance of action by the Senate at the present time. Their contributions were immense, and all of us are in their debt.

Many other Senators also played a key role. The Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL) was chairman of the subcommittee that held extensive hearings on this issue, hearings that laid a solid foundation for our present action, and he should be commended.

When we consider public financing, we have to recognize as well that this legislation really builds on the genius of the distinguished Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), who initially presented the $1 checkoff for Presidential elections in 1966 and who helped to lead the successful effort to cement the checkoff into law in 1971. Many of the most important aspects of this legislation build on the work of Senator LONG, the chairman of the Committee on Finance.

Another very important part of the debate was the distinguished senior Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE), who also helped to lead the effort for the enactment of the $1 checkoff measure in 1971, and who has always been such an eloquent spokesman for campaign reform.

Then when we consider the history of the present movement, I would single out the Senator from Michigan (Mr. HART) for special praise. He was the first Senator to introduce legislation for comprehensive public financing of all Federal elections, primaries as well as general elections. In a very real sense, he started the ball rolling in this Congress, and he never let the momentum fade.

Senator ALAN CRANSTON of California, was tireless in his efforts, not only in preparing the legislation itself, but also in rounding up the votes. Although the latter work is not a role which is generally acclaimed or understood outside the Halls of Congress, no one here is unaware of his effective work on the Senate floor. I doubt that we could have won today without his careful and successful daily attention to the bill.

Senators MONDALE and SCHWEIKER were also real leaders in developing the concept of public financing, especially the concept of matching grants for primaries. Their early efforts led to a strengthening of the proposals for this legislation, and a new awareness that it would be possible to include primary elections in the bill for public financing.

Senator CLARK of Iowa was another pillar of the Senate effort, both in the early stages of the legislation and in the floor debate, and I congratulate him on the leadership he has displayed.

Senator MATHIAS and Senator STAFFORD also worked closely in these early efforts, and were particularly instrumental in giving this bill the broad bipartisan support it had to have if final passage was to be achieved.

Finally, the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON) was very active in the whole debate and discussions. There were points on which we disagreed, but he has been an outstanding pioneer in bringing this issue to the attention of the Senate and the people, and there was no fundamental disagreement on the importance of public financing of political campaigns.

Finally, I would like to commend the public interest groups, led by Common Cause and the Center for Public Financing of Elections. I do not think the public interest has ever been better served than by the joint efforts of those in and out of Congress with whom they worked. These two groups, and others with whom they worked were extremely successful in making these issues plain and clear to the Members of this body and to the country, and I am hopeful that they will be as successful with the House of Representatives.

I think the action that has been taken by the Senate shows the American people that the Senate can act, and that it can act effectively in the important and sensitive area of election reform. I think we have demonstrated quite clearly that the Senate is aroused by the crisis over Watergate, and that we have responded in the most effective legislative way we could in assuring that future elections of Members of the Senate and the House and for the Presidency will be free of the corrosive and corruptive power of large campaign contributions.

I think this is really one of the finest efforts for reform I have ever seen in this body. Public financing of elections will rank with the great reforms of the political process in our history, a milestone of which every Member of this body should be proud.

I think the American people can be reassured that the Senate is alive and well in Washington, and that in what we achieved today, we acted in the best interests of all the people of this Nation. Public financing can be one of democracy's finest hours, and I hope that the issue will do as well as it navigates its difficult course through the House of Representatives and to the President for his signature.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield.

Mr. CRANSTON. I want to echo and endorse the praise the Senator from Massachusetts has given to Senator Cannon, the leadership, and many others who have worked so hard on this measure, which is fully as important as the Senator from Massachusetts has stated. I thank the Senator for his kind words on my behalf.

I want to add that if we had not had the imaginative and successful and bold efforts of the Senator from Massachusetts, we would not have achieved the result that has been achieved in recent days and on the floor of the Senate today. The Senator from Massachusetts initially, in joining with the Senator from Pennsylvania, provided the impetus which gave great strength to this effort. At every point when his strength was required, the Senator from Massachusetts moved into it swiftly, wherever it was necessary and effectively, and with great imagination, and we all owe him a great debt of gratitude.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS TO THE ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar Order No. 745, S. 3292, a bill to authorize appropriations to the Atomic Energy Commission. It is my understanding that this measure will not take long, that there is agreement, and it is not anticipated there will be a rollcall vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The second assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3292) to authorize appropriations to the Atomic Energy Commission in accordance with section 261 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, and for other purposes.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, the bill now under consideration, S. 3292, would authorize appropriations totaling $3,676,833,000 for both "operating expenses" and "plant and capital equipment" for the coming year. That amount is approximately 2 percent more than the amount requested by the Commission. Approximately 42 percent of the Commission's fiscal year 1975 estimated program costs will be for military applications and the balance for civilian applications. Last year the portion for the military program was about 46 percent. This indicates a continued shift of the fraction of work away from military programs. The proposed authorization also emphasizes energy R. & D. programs. The energy R. & D. programs in this authorization bill are 32 percent greater than last year. The civilian applications portion includes $132.2 million in operating costs for the high energy physics program for which the AEC acts as principal funding agent for the entire Federal Government.

OPERATING FUNDS

Turning to the bill itself, the individual sections are explained in the section-by-section analysis beginning at page 46 of the committee report. Very briefly, section 101(a) would authorize $2,551,533,000 for operating expenses and this total figure consists of the programs listed in the table on page 3 of the committee report with a detailed discussion of each portion thereof beginning at page 7 of the committee report. You will note from the table on page 3 that the committee has recommended several adjustments to the AEC's requested authorization, the net total of which is an increase of $82,110,000.

I would like to highlight some of the significant areas affected by the committee's recommendations. Recognizing the Nation's need for increasing amounts of clean energy, the committee recommended an increase of $9.2 million for the light water breeder reactors, $8.9 million for nonnuclear energy programs and $9 million for controlled fusion energy research. We have also recommended an increase of $12.7 million in the Commission's licensing and regulatory program to permit a reduction in the licensing time for powerplants.

The committee also is recommending a $15 million increase in the nuclear weapons program. Although the increase is only about 1½ percent above the Commission's request, it is for a very critical area in our nuclear weapons program which is the testing program. We have looked into this matter very carefully and found that if this work is not strengthened, there is a high probability that our nuclear weapons technology would be frozen.

CONSTRUCTION FUNDS

With regard to the plant and capital equipment portion of the budget, contained in section 101(b) of the bill, a total of $1,125,300,000 is recommended which is a reduction of $5,550,000 from the amount requested by the AEC. The bill authorizes $273,300,000 for new construction projects, $208,850,000 for capital equipment not related to construction, and a $643,150,000 increase in authorization for previously authorized projects.

The major changes recommended in this area are a $26.9 million reduction for two reactor development facilities and an increase of $7.1 million for improving our uranium enrichment plants.

Sections 102, 103, and 106 of the bill set forth certain limitations regarding the application of the funds authorized by this bill. These are similar to provisions incorporated in previous authorization acts. Sections 104 and 105 authorize the Commission to retain certain receipts and to transfer operating funds to other Federal agencies for the performance of specific items of work. These sections were previously included in appropriations acts.

Section 107 provides required legislation concerning the Commission's highest priority reactor development program which is the liquid metal fast breeder program. This section concerns indemnification and ownership of the first LMFBR demonstration plant which is being carried out as a cooperative project with industry.

CONCLUSION

These are the highlights of the bill. The Joint Committee believes that the bill provides for a minimum authorization necessary to carry out at a viable level the essential programs and activities of the Commission. It was reported out without dissent by either House or Senate members of the committee.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a section-by-section analysis, which appears on page 46, beginning with section 101, and continuing through pages 47, 48, 49, and 50, and concluding on page 51, ending on the last line of page 51 with the words "Commission rather than the GAC," be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the analysis was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 101

Section 101 of the bill authorizes appropriations to the Atomic Energy Commission, in accordance with the provisions of section 261 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, for "Operating expenses" and "Plant and capital equipment."

Section 101(a) of the bill deals with the authorization of appropriations for "Operating expenses." The Commission's authorization request under this heading was presented to the committee in terms of costs to be incurred during fiscal year 1975, adjusted in total to the obligations to be incurred during the fiscal year.

The Joint Committee is recommending authorization of $2,551,133,000 for "Operating expenses," not to exceed $132,200,000 in operating costs for the high-energy physics program category. It is the Joint Committee's intent that the amount specified for any program or category shall be exceeded only in accordance with specific arrangements which have been developed between the Commission and the committee. These arrangements include provisions for periodic reporting to the committee of changes in estimates of authorized programs. These informal procedures, embodied in an exchange of correspondence between the Atomic Energy Commission and the committee, have operated efficiently. It is the Joint Committee's belief that legislative measures or other formal devices that would impose legal limitations upon the reprograming of Commission funds are not necessary at this time. It is the committee's intent that the procedures specified in this exchange of correspondence shall remain in effect during fiscal year 1975.

It is intended that costs incurred pursuant to the authorization contained in this act shall be generally in accordance with the analysis of the proposed bills submitted by the AEC and other background and explanatory materials furnished by the Commission in justification of the AEC's fiscal year 1975 authorization bill.

Plant and capital equipment obligations are provided in two sections of the bill. Under section 101(b), authorization is provided for new construction projects and capital equipment not related to construction. This authorization, together with the changes in prior-year project authorizations provided for in section 107, comprise the total authorization for plant and capital equipment provided in this bill. The AEC's request for authorization for these purposes was presented on the basis of new obligational authority required. New construction projects authorized under subsections (1) through (13) of section 101(b) of the bill total $273,300,000.

It is intended that the projects under this authorization be related, as in previous years, to the analysis of the proposed bills submitted by the AEC and other background and explanatory materials furnished by the Commission in justification of the AEC authorization bill. It is not intended to prevent technical and engineering changes which are considered necessary or desirable by the Commission consistent with the scope and purpose of the project concerned.

Pursuant to section 101(b)(11), appropriations are authorized for capital equipment not related to construction in the amount of $208,850,000. This equipment is necessary to replace obsolete or worn-out equipment at AEC installations. Additional equipment is required to meet the needs of expanding programs and changing technology. Examples of typical equipment include machine tools, computers, and office equipment. The Joint Committee expects to receive a report from the Commission at least semiannually on obligations incurred pursuant to this authorization.

Section 102

Section 102 of the bill provides limitations similar to those in prior authorization acts.

Subsection (a) provides that the Commission is authorized to start projects set forth in certain subparts of subsection 101(b) only if the currently estimated cost of the project does not exceed by more than 25 percent the estimated cost for that project set forth in the bill.

Subsection (b) provides similar limitations for projects in other subparts of subsection 101(b), except that the increase may not exceed 10 percent of the estimated cost shown in the bill.

Subsection (c) provides limitations on general plant projects authorized by subsection 101(b)(9), whereby the Commission may start such projects only if the currently estimated cost of such project does not exceed $500,000 and the maximum currently estimated cost of any building included in such project does not exceed $100,000; provided that the building cost limitation may be exceeded if the Commission determines that it is necessary in the interests of efficiency and economy. Additionally, section 102(c) provides that the total cost of all general plant projects shall not exceed the estimated cost set forth in subsection 101(b)(9) by more than 10 percent.

Under arrangements previously agreed to by the Commission and the Joint Committee, the Commission shall report to the Joint Committee and the Appropriations Committee after the close of each fiscal year concerning the use of general plant project funds, and such report shall identify each project for which the proposed new authority has been utilized.

Subsection (d) complements subsection (a) and provides that the Commission is not authorized to incur obligations in excess of 125 percent of the estimated cost set forth for certain projects described in subsection 101(b), unless and until additional appropriations are authorized under section 261 of the Atomic Energy Act. Illustratively, if the estimated cost set forth in the act were $10 million, the Commission would not be able to incur obligations for this project in excess of $12,500,000 without first obtaining an additional authorization for appropriations. This limitation does not apply to any project with an estimated cost less than $5 million.

Subsection (e) complements subsections (b) and (c) and imposes a similar limitation on certain projects described in other subparts of subsection 101(b), except that the increase may not exceed 10 percent of the estimated cost shown in the bill. This subsection likewise, is inapplicable to projects with an estimated cost less than $5 million.

Section 103

Section 103 of the bill authorizes the Commission to undertake engineering design (titles I and II) on construction projects which have been included in a proposed authorization bill transmitted to the Congress by the Commission. It is understood that this work would be undertaken on projects which the Commission deems are of such urgency that physical construction should be initiated as soon as appropriations for the project have been approved.

Section 104

Section 104 of the bill authorizes the Commission to retain and credit to its "Operating expenses" appropriation any moneys received by the Commission (except moneys received from disposal of property under the Atomic Energy Community Act of 1955, as amended), notwithstanding the provisions of section 3617 of the Revised Statutes. This provision has been included in previous appropriations acts for the AEC, but more properly belongs in the authorizing legislation.

Section 105

Section 105 authorizes the Commission to transfer sums from its "Operating expenses" appropriation to other agencies of the Government for performance of the work for which the moneys were appropriated. This provision has also been included in previous appropriation acts.

Section 106

Section 106 of the bill provides authorization for the transfer of amounts between the "Operating expenses" and the "Plant and capital equipment" appropriations as provided in the appropriation acts. The AEC appropriation acts have, in past years, provided that not to exceed 5 percent of the appropriations for "Operating expenses" and "Plant and capital equipment" could be transferred between such appropriations, provided, however, that neither appropriation could be increased by more than 5 percent by any such transfer. It is understood that any such transfer shall be reported promptly to the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

Section 107

Section 107 of the bill amends prior-year authorization acts as follows:

"(a) Section 101 of Public Law 89–428, as amended, is further amended by striking from subsection (b)(3) project 67–3–a, fast flux test facility, the figure '$87,500,000', and substituting therefor the figure '$420,000,000'.

"(b) Section 101 of Public Law 91–273, as amended, is further amended by striking from subsection (b)(1), project 71–1–f, process equipment modifications, gaseous diffusion plants, the figure '$172,100,000' and substituting therefor the figure '$295,100,000'.

"(c) Section 106 of Public Law 91–273, as amended, is further amended by striking from subsection (a) the figure '$2,000,000' and substituting therefor the figure '$3,000,000,' and by adding thereto the following new subsection (c):

"'(c) The Commission is hereby authorized to agree, by modification to the definitive cooperative arrangement reflecting such changes therein as it deems appropriate for such purpose, to the following: (1) to execute and deliver to the other parties to the AEC definitive contract the special undertakings of indemnification specified in said contract, which undertakings shall be subject to availability of appropriations to the Atomic Energy Commission (or any other Federal agency to which the Commission's pertinent functions might be transferred at some future time) and to the provisions of section 3679 of the Revised Statutes, as amended; and (2) to acquire ownership and custody of the property constituting the Liquid Metal Fast Breeder Reactor power-

93D CONGRESS
2D SESSION

H. R. 16090

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

JULY 24, 1974

Mr. HAYS (for himself, Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey, Mr. DENT, Mr. NEDZI, Mr. BRADEMAS, Mr. GRAY, Mr. HAWKINS, Mr. GETTYS, Mr. ANNUNZIO, Mr. GAYDOS, Mr. MOLLOHAN, Mr. KOCH, Mr. CLEVELAND, Mr. WARE, and Mr. FROEHLICH) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on House Administration

A BILL

To impose overall limitations on campaign expenditures and political contributions; to provide that each candidate for Federal office shall designate a principal campaign committee; to provide for a single reporting responsibility with respect to receipts and expenditures by certain political committees; to change the times for the filing of reports regarding campaign expenditures and political contributions; to provide for public financing of Presidential nominating conventions and Presidential primary elections; and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974".

I

TITLE I—CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENTS

LIMITATIONS ON CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

SEC. 101. (a) Section 608 of title 18, United States Code, relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures, is amended by redesignating subsections (b) and (c) as subsections (f) and (g), respectively, and by inserting immediately after subsection (a) the following new subsections:

"(b) (1) Except as otherwise provided by paragraphs (2) and (3), no person shall make contributions to any candidate with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $1,000.

"(2) No political committee (other than a principal campaign committee) shall make contributions to any candidate with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000. Contributions by the national committee of a political party serving as the principal campaign committee of a candidate for the office of President of the United States shall not exceed the limitation imposed by the preceding sentence with respect to any other candidate for Federal office. For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'political committee' means an organization registered as a political committee under section 303 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 for a period of not less than 6 months which has received contributions from more than 50 persons and, except for any State political party organization, has made contributions to 5 or more candidates for Federal office.

"(3) No individual shall make contributions aggregating more than $25,000 in any calendar year.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) contributions to a named candidate made to any political committee authorized by such candidate, in writing, to accept contributions on his behalf shall be considered to be contributions made to such candidate; and

"(B) contributions made to or for the benefit of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be contributions made to or for the benefit of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States.

"(5) The limitations imposed by paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection shall apply separately with respect to each election, except that all elections held in any calendar year for the office of President of the United States (except a general election for such office) shall be considered to be one election.

"(6) For purposes of the limitations imposed by this section, all contributions made by a person, either directly or indirectly, on behalf of a particular candidate, including contributions which are in any way earmarked or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to such candidate, shall be treated as contributions from such person to such candidate. The intermediary or conduit shall report the original source and the intended recipient of such contribution to the appropriate supervisory officer and to the intended recipient.

"(c) (1) No candidate shall make expenditures in excess of—

"(A) $10,000,000, in the case of a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President of the United States;

"(B) $20,000,000, in the case of a candidate for election to the office of President of the United States;

"(C) in the case of any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, by a candidate for the office of Senator, the greater of—

"(i) 5 cents multiplied by the population of the geographical area with respect to which the election is held; or

"(ii) $75,000;

"(D) $75,000, in the case of any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, by a candidate for the office of Representative, Delegate from the District of Columbia, or Resident Commissioner; or

"(E) $15,000, in the case of any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, by a candidate for the office of Delegate from Guam or the Virgin Islands.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be expenditures made by or on behalf of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States;

"(B) expenditures made on behalf of any candidate by a principal campaign committee designated by such candidate under section 302(f)(1) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 shall be deemed to have been made by such candidate; and

"(C) the population of any geographical area shall be the population according to the most recent decennial census of the United States taken under section 141 of title 13, United States Code.

"(3) The limitations imposed by subparagraphs (C), (D), and (E) of paragraph (1) of this subsection shall apply separately with respect to each election.

"(d) (1) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1975), as there becomes available necessary data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Comptroller General and publish in the Federal Register the per centum difference between the price index for the 12 months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each limitation established by subsection (c) shall be increased by such per centum difference. Each amount so increased shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) the term 'price index' means the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics; and

"(B) the term 'base period' means the calendar year 1973.

"(e) (1) No person may make any expenditure (other than an expenditure made by or on behalf of a candidate under the provisions of subsection (c)) relative to a clearly identified candidate during a calendar year which,

when added to all other expenditures made by such person during the year advocating the election or defeat of such candidate, exceeds $1,000

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1), the term 'clearly identified' means—

"(A) the candidate's name appears;

"(B) a photograph or drawing of the candidate appears; or

"(C) the identity of the candidate is apparent by unambiguous reference.".

(b) Section 608(a)(1) of title 18, United States Code, relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures, is amended to read as follows:

"(a)(1) No candidate may make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or election, to Federal office in excess of $25,000.".

(c)(1) Notwithstanding section 608(a)(1) of title 18, United States Code, relating to limitations on expenditures from personal funds, any individual may satisfy or discharge, out of his personal funds or the personal funds of his immediate family, any debt or obligation which is outstanding on the date of the enactment of this Act and which was incurred by him or on his behalf by any political committee in connection with any campaign ending before the close of December 31, 1972, for election to Federal office.

(2) For purposes of this subsection—

(A) the terms "election", "Federal office", and "political committee" have the meanings given them by section 591 of title 18, United States Code; and

(B) the term "immediate family" has the meaning given it by section 608(a)(2) of title 18, United States Code.

(d)(1) The first paragraph of section 613 of title 18, United States Code, relating to contributions by certain foreign agents, is amended—

(A) by striking out "an agent of a foreign principal" and inserting in lieu thereof "a foreign national"; and

(B) by striking out ", either for or on behalf of such foreign principal or otherwise in his capacity as agent of such foreign principal,".

(2) The second paragraph of such section 613 is amended by striking out "agent of a foreign principal or from such foreign principal" and inserting in lieu thereof "foreign national".

(3) The fourth paragraph of such section 613 is amended to read as follows:

"As used in this section, the term 'foreign national' means—

"(1) a foreign principal, as such term is defined by section 1(b) of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938 (22 U.S.C. 611(b)), except that the term 'foreign national' shall not include any individual who is a citizen of the United States; or

"(2) an individual who is not a citizen of the United States and who is not lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as defined by section 101(a)(20) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(20)).".

(4)(A) The heading of such section 613 is amended by striking out "agents of foreign principals" and inserting in lieu thereof "foreign nationals".

(B) The table of sections for chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out the item relating to section 613 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"613. Contributions by foreign nationals.".

(e)(1) Section 608(g) of title 18, United States Code (as so redesignated by subsection (a) of this section), relating to penalty for violating limitations on contributions and expenditures, is amended by striking out "$1,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$25,000".

(2) The second paragraph of section 610 of title 18, United States Code, relating to penalties for violating prohibitions against contributions or expenditures by national banks, corporations, or labor organizations, is amended—

(A) by striking out "$5,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$25,000"; and

(B) by striking out "$10,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$50,000".

(3) Section 611 of title 18, United States Code (as amended by section 103 of this Act), relating to contributions by firms or individuals contracting with the United States, is amended in the first paragraph thereof by striking out "$5,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$25,000".

(4) The third paragraph of section 613 of title 18, United States Code (as amended by subsection (d) of this section), relating to contributions by foreign nationals, is amended by striking out "$5,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$25,000".

(f) (1) Chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, relating to elections and political activities, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"§ 614. Prohibition of contributions in name of another

"(a) No person shall make a contribution in the name of another person, and no person shall knowingly accept a contribution made by one person in the name of another person.

"(b) Any person who violates this section shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

"§ 615. Limitation on contributions of currency

"(a) No person shall make contributions of currency of the United States or currency of any foreign country to or for the benefit of any candidate which, in the aggregate, exceed $100, with respect to any campaign of such candidate for nomination for election, or election, to Federal office.

"(b) Any person who violates this section shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

"§ 616. Acceptance of excessive honorariums

"Whoever, while an elected or appointed officer or employee of any branch of the Federal Government—

"(1) accepts any honorarium of more than $1,000 (excluding amounts accepted for actual travel and subsistence expenses) for any appearance, speech, or article; or

"(2) accepts honorariums (not prohibited by paragraph (1) of this subsection) aggregating more than $10,000 in any calendar year; shall be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000.".

(2) Section 591 of title 18, United States Code, relating to definitions, is amended by striking out the matter preceding paragraph (a) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Except as otherwise specifically provided, when used in this section and in sections 597, 599, 600, 602, 608, 610, 611, 614, and 615 of this title—".

(3) The table of sections for chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new items:

"614. Prohibition of contributions in name of another.
"615. Limitation on contributions of currency.
"616. Acceptance of excessive honorariums.".

(4) Title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by striking out section 310, relating to prohibition of contributions in the name of another.

DEFINITIONS OF POLITICAL COMMITTEE, CONTRIBUTION, EXPENDITURE, AND PRINCIPAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE

SEC. 102. (a) Section 591 (d) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of political committee, is amended by inserting immediately after "$1,000" the following: ", or which commits any act for the purpose of influencing, directly or indirectly, the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, except that any communication referred to in paragraph (f) (4) of this section which is not included within the definition of the term 'expenditure' shall not be considered such an act".

(b) Section 591 (e) (5) of title 18, United States Code, relating to an exception to the definition of contribution, is amended by inserting "(A)" immediately after "include" and by inserting immediately before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", (B) the use of real or personal property by an individual owner or lessee in rendering voluntary personal services to any candidate or political committee, including the cost of invitations and food and beverages provided on the individual's premises for candidate-related activities, (C) the sale of any food or beverage by a vendor for use in a candidate's campaign at a charge less than the normal comparable charge, if such charge for use in a candidate's campaign is at least equal to the cost of such food or beverage to the vendor, (D) any unreimbursed purchase or other payment by any individual for travel expenses with respect to the rendering of voluntary personal services by such individual to any candidate or political committee, or (E) the payment by a State or local committee of a political party of the costs of preparation, display, or mailing or other distribution incurred by such committee with respect to a printed slate card or sample ballot, or other printed listing, of 3 or more candidates for any public office for which an election is held in the State in which such committee is organized, except that this clause shall not apply in the case of costs incurred by such committee with respect to a display of any such listing made on broadcasting stations, or in magazines or other similar types of general public political advertising (other than newspapers): Provided, That the cumulative value of activities by any person on behalf of any candidate under each of clauses (B) or (D) shall not exceed $500 with respect to any election".

(c) Section 591(f) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of expenditure, is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (2) thereof, by striking out "and";

(2) in subparagraph (3) thereof, by inserting "and" immediately after the semicolon; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(4) notwithstanding the foregoing meanings of 'expenditure', such term does not include (A) any news story, commentary, or editorial distributed through the facilities of any broadcasting station, newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication, unless such facilities are owned or controlled by any political party, political committee, or candidate, (B) nonpartisan activity designed to encourage individuals to register to vote or to vote, (C) any communication by any membership organization or corporation to its members or stockholders, if such membership organization or corporation is not organized primarily for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, (D) the use of real or personal property by an individual owner or lessee in rendering voluntary personal services to any candidate or political committee, including the cost of invitations and food and beverages provided on the individual's premises for candidate-related activities, (E) any unreimbursed purchase or other payment by any individual for travel expenses with respect to the rendering of voluntary personal services by such individual to any candidate or political committee, (F) any communication by any person which is not made for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, (G) the payment by a State or local committee of a political party of the costs of preparation, display, or mailing or other distribution incurred by such committee with respect to a printed slate card or sample ballot, or other printed listing, of 3 or more candidates for any public office for which an election is held in the State in which such committee is organized, except that this clause shall not apply in the case of costs incurred by such committee with respect to a display of any such listing made on broadcasting stations, or in magazines or other similar types of general public political advertising (other than newspapers), (H) any costs incurred by a candidate (including his principal campaign committee) in connection with the solicitation of contributions by such candidate, except that this clause shall not apply with respect to costs incurred by a candidate (including his principal campaign committee) in excess of an amount equal to 25 per centum of the expenditure limitation applicable to such candidate under section 608(c) of this title, or (I) any costs incurred by a political committee (as such term is defined by section 608(b)(2) of this title) with respect to the solicitation of contributions to such political committee or to any general political fund controlled by such political committee, except that this clause shall not apply to exempt costs incurred with respect to the solicitation of contributions to any such political committee made through broadcasting stations, newspapers, magazines, outdoor advertising facilities, and other similar types of general public political advertising: Provided, That the cumulative value of activities by any person on behalf of any candidate under each of clauses (D) or (E) shall not exceed $500 with respect to any election;".

(d) Section 591 of title 18, United States Code, relating to definitions, is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (g);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (h) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(i) 'principal campaign committee' means the principal campaign committee designated by a candidate under section 302(f)(1) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.".

POLITICAL FUNDS OF CORPORATIONS OR LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

SEC. 103. Section 611 of title 18, United States Code, relating to contributions by firms or individuals contracting with the United States, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"This section shall not prohibit or make unlawful the establishment or administration of, or the solicitation of contributions to, any separate segregated fund by any corporation or labor organization for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, unless the provisions of section 610 of this title prohibit or make unlawful the establishment or administration of, or the solicitation of contributions to, such fund.

"For purposes of this section, the term 'labor organization' has the meaning given it by section 610 of this title.".

EFFECT ON STATE LAW

SEC. 104. (a) The provisions of chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, relating to elections and political activities, supersede and preempt any provision of State law with respect to election to Federal office.

(b) For purposes of this section, the terms "election", "Federal office", and "State" have the meanings given them by section 591 of title 18, United States Code.

TITLE II—DISCLOSURE OF FEDERAL CAMPAIGN FUNDS

PRINCIPAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE

SEC. 201. Section 302 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, relating to organization of political committees, is amended by striking out subsection (f) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(f) (1) Each individual who is a candidate for Federal office (other than the office of Vice President of the United States) shall designate a political committee to serve as his principal campaign committee. No political committee may be designated as the principal campaign committee of more than one candidate, except that the candidate for the office of President of the United States nominated by a political party may designate the national committee of such political party as his principal campaign committee.

"(2) Except as otherwise provided in section 608(e) of title 18, United States Code, no political committee other than a principal campaign committee designated by a candidate under paragraph (1) may make expenditures on behalf of such candidate.

"(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, each report or statement of contributions received by a political committee (other than a principal campaign committee) which is required to be filed with a supervisory officer under this title shall be filed instead with the principal campaign committee for the candidate on whose behalf such contributions are accepted.

"(4) It shall be the duty of each principal campaign committee to receive all reports and statements required to be filed with it under paragraph (3) of this subsection and to compile and file such reports and statements, together with its own reports and statements, with the appropriate supervisory officer in accordance with the provisions of this title.

"(5) For purposes of paragraphs (1) and (3) of this subsection, the term 'political committee' does not include any political committee which supports more than one candidate, except for the national committee of a political party designated by a candidate for the office of President of the United States under paragraph (1) of this subsection.".

REGISTRATION OF POLITICAL COMMITTEES; STATEMENTS

SEC. 202. Section 303 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, relating to registration of political committees and statements, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) In the case of a political committee which is not a principal campaign committee and which does not support more than one candidate, reports and notifications required under this section to be filed with the supervisory officer shall be filed instead with the appropriate principal campaign committee.".

REPORTS BY POLITICAL COMMITTEES AND CANDIDATES

SEC. 203. (a) Section 304(a) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, relating to reports by political committees and candidates, is amended—

(1) by striking out the second and third sentences and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"The reports referred to in the preceding sentence shall be filed as follows:

"(A) (i) In any calendar year in which an individual is a candidate for Federal office and an election for such Federal office is held in such year, such reports shall be filed not later than the tenth day before the date on which such election is held and shall be complete as of the fifteenth day before the date of such election; except that any such report filed by registered or certified mail must be postmarked not later than the close of the twelfth day before the date of such election.

"(ii) Such reports shall be filed not later than the thirtieth day after the date of such election and shall be complete as of the twentieth day after the date of such election.

"(B) In any other calendar year in which an individual is a candidate for Federal office, such reports shall be filed after December 31 of such calendar year, but not later than January 31 of the following calendar year and shall be complete as of the close of the calendar year with respect to which the report is filed.

"(C) Such reports shall be filed not later than the tenth day following the close of any calendar quarter in which the candidate or political committee concerned received contributions in excess of $1,000, or made expenditures in excess of $1,000, and shall be complete as of the close of such calendar quarter; except that any such report required to be filed after December 31 of any calendar year with respect to which a report is required to be filed under subparagraph (B) shall be filed as provided in such subparagraph.

"(D) When the last day for filing any quarterly report required by subparagraph (C) occurs within 10 days of an election, the filing of such quarterly report shall be waived and superseded by the report required by subparagraph (A) (i).

Any contribution of $1,000 or more received after the fifteenth day, but more than 48 hours, before any election shall be reported within 48 hours after its receipt."; and

(2) by striking out "Each" at the beginning of the first sentence of such section 304(a) and inserting in lieu thereof "(1) Except as provided by paragraph (2), each", and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) Each treasurer of a political committee which is not a principal campaign committee and which does not support more than one candidate shall file the reports required under this section with the appropriate principal campaign committee.".

(b) (1) Section 304(b) (8) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, relating to reports by political committees and candidates, is amended by inserting immediately before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", together with total receipts less transfers between political committees which support the same candidate and which do not support more than one candidate".

(2) Section 304(b) (11) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, relating to reports by political committees and candidates, is amended by inserting immediately before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", together with total expenditures less transfers between political committees which support the same candidate and which do not support more than one candidate".

FORMAL REQUIREMENTS FOR REPORTS AND STATEMENTS

SEC. 204. Section 306 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, relating to formal requirements respecting reports and statements, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) If a report or statement required by section 303, 304(a)(1)(A)(ii), 304(a)(1)(B), or 304(a)(1)(C) of this title to be filed by a treasurer of a political committee or by a candidate, or if a report required by section 305 of this title to be filed by any other person, is delivered by registered or certified mail, to the appropriate supervisory officer or principal campaign committee with whom it is required to be filed, the United States postmark stamped on the cover of the envelope or other container in which such report or statement is so mailed shall be deemed to be the date of filing.".

DUTIES OF THE SUPERVISORY OFFICER

SEC. 205. (a)(1) Section 308(a) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, relating to duties of the supervisory officer, is amended by striking out paragraphs (6), (7), (8), (9), and (10), and by redesignating paragraphs (11), (12), and (13) as paragraphs (8), (9), and (10), respectively, and by inserting immediately after paragraph (5) the following new paragraphs:

"(6) to compile and maintain a cumulative index of reports and statements filed with him, which shall be published in the Federal Register at regular intervals and which shall be available for purchase directly or by mail for a reasonable price;

"(7) to prepare and publish from time to time special reports listing those candidates for whom reports were filed as required by this title and those candidates for whom such reports were not filed as so required;".

(2) Notwithstanding section 308(a)(7) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to an annual report by the supervisory officer), as in effect on the day before the effective date of the amendments made by paragraph (1) of this subsection, no such annual report shall be required with respect to any calendar year beginning after December 31, 1972.

(b)(1) Section 308(a)(10) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (as so redesignated by subsection (a) of this section), relating to the prescription of rules and regulations, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: ", in accordance with the provisions of subsection (b)".

(2) Section 308 of such Act, relating to duties of the supervisory officer, is amended—

(A) by striking out subsections (b) and (c);

(B) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (c); and

(C) by inserting immediately after subsection (a) the following new subsection:

"(b) (1) The supervisory officer, before prescribing any rule or regulation under this section, shall transmit a statement with respect to such rule or regulation to the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate or the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives, as the case may be, in accordance with the provisions of this subsection. Such statement shall set forth the proposed rule or regulation and shall contain a detailed explanation and justification of such rule or regulation.

"(2) If the committee of the Congress which receives a statement from the supervisory officer under this subsection does not, through appropriate action, disapprove the proposed rule or regulation set forth in such statement no later than 30 legislative days after receipt of such statement, then the supervisory officer may prescribe such rule or regulation. In the case of any rule or regulation proposed by the Comptroller General of the United States, both the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate and the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives shall have the power to disapprove such proposed rule or regulation, and the Comptroller General may not prescribe any rule or regulation which has been disapproved by either such committee. No supervisory officer may prescribe any rule or regulation which is disapproved under this paragraph.

"(3) If the supervisory officer proposing to prescribe any rule or regulation under this section is the Secretary of the Senate, he shall transmit such statement to the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate. If the supervisory officer is the Clerk of the House of Representatives, he shall transmit such statement to the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives. If the supervisory officer is the Comptroller General of the United States, he shall transmit such statement to each such committee.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'legislative days' does not include, with respect to statements transmitted to the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate, any calendar day on which the Senate is not in session, with respect to statements transmitted to the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives, any calendar day on which the House of Representatives is not in session, and with respect to statements transmitted to both such committees, any calendar day on which both Houses of the Congress are not in session.".

DEFINITIONS OF POLITICAL COMMITTEE, CONTRIBUTION, EXPENDITURE, AND SUPERVISORY OFFICER

SEC. 206. (a) (1) Section 301 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, relating to definitions, is amended by striking out the matter preceding paragraph (a) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 301. When used in this title and in title IV of this Act—".

(2) Section 401 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, relating to extension of credit by regulated industries, is amended by striking out "(as such term is defined in section 301 (c) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971)".

(3) Section 402 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, relating to prohibition against use of certain Federal funds for election activities, is amended by striking out the last sentence.

(b) Section 301 (d) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, relating to the definition of political committee, is amended by inserting immediately after "$1,000" the following: ", or which commits any act for the purpose of influencing, directly or indirectly, the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, except that any communication referred to in section 301 (f) (4) of this Act which is not included within the definition of the term 'expenditure' shall not be considered such an act".

(c) Section 301(e) (5) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, relating to an exception to the definition of contribution, is amended by inserting "(A)" immediately after "include" and by inserting immediately before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", (B) the use of real or personal property by an individual owner or lessee in rendering voluntary personal services to any candidate or political committee, including the cost of invitations and food and beverages provided on the individual's premises for candidate-related activities, (C) the sale of any food or beverage by a vendor for use in a candidate's campaign at a charge less than the normal comparable charge, if such charge for use in a candidate's campaign is at least equal to the cost of such food or beverage to the vendor, (D) any unreimbursed purchase or other payment by any individual for travel expenses with respect to the rendering of voluntary personal services by such individual to any candidate or political committee, or (E) the payment by a State or local committee of a political party of the costs of preparation, display, or mailing or other distribution incurred by such committee with respect to a printed slate card or sample ballot, or other printed listing, of 3 or more candidates for any public office for which an election is held in the State in which such committee is organized, except that this clause shall not apply in the case of costs incurred by such committee with respect to a display of any such listing made on broadcasting stations, or in magazines or other similar types of general public political advertising (other than newspapers) : Provided, That the cumulative value of activities by any person on behalf of any candidate under each of clauses (B) or (D) shall not exceed $500 with respect to any election".

(d) Section 301 (f) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, relating to the definition of expenditure, is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (2) thereof, by striking out "and";

(2) in subparagraph (3) thereof, by inserting "and" immediately after the semicolon; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(4) notwithstanding the foregoing meanings of 'expenditure', such term does not include (A) any news story, commentary, or editorial distributed through the facilities of any broadcasting station, newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication, unless such facilities are owned or controlled by any political party, political committee, or candidate, (B) nonpartisan activity designed to encourage individuals to register to vote or to vote, (C) any communication by any membership organization or corporation to its members or stockholders, if such membership organization or corporation is not organized primarily for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, (D) the use of real or personal property by an individual owner or lessee in rendering voluntary personal services to any candidate or political committee, including the cost of invitations and food and beverages provided on the individual's premises for candidate-related activities, (E) any unreimbursed purchase or other payment by any individual for travel expenses with respect to the rendering of voluntary services by such individual to any candidate or political committee, (F) any communication by any person which is not made for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, or (G) the payment by a State or local committee of a political party of the costs of preparation, display, or mailing or other distribution incurred by such committee with respect to a printed slate card or sample ballot, or other printed listing, of 3 or more candidates for any public office for which an election is held in the State in which such committee is organized, except that this clause shall not apply in the case of costs incurred by such committee with respect to a display of any such listing made on broadcasting stations, or in magazines or other similar types of general public political advertising (other than newspapers): Provided, That the cumulative value of activities by any person on behalf of any candidate under each of clauses (D) or (E) shall not exceed $500 with respect to any election;".

(e) Section 301 (g) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, relating to the definition of supervisory officer, is amended to read as follows:

"(g) 'supervisory officer' means the Secretary of the Senate with respect to candidates for the Senate, and committees supporting such candidates; the Clerk of the House of Representatives with respect to candidates for Representative, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner, and committees supporting such candidates; and the Comptroller General of the United States with respect to candidates for President and Vice President, and committees supporting such candidates.".

(f) Section 301 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, relating to definitions, is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (h);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (i) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(j) 'principal campaign committee' means the principal campaign committee designated by a candidate under section 302(f)(1); and

"(k) 'Board' means the Board of Supervisory Officers established by section 308(a)(1).".

BOARD OF SUPERVISORY OFFICERS

SEC. 207. (a) Title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, relating to disclosure of Federal campaign funds, is amended by redesignating section 311 as section 314; by redesignating sections 308 and 309 as sections 311 and 312, respectively; and by inserting immediately after section 307 the following new sections:

"BOARD OF SUPERVISORY OFFICERS

"SEC. 308. (a)(1) There is hereby established the Board of Supervisory Officers, which shall be composed of 7 members as follows:

"(A) the Secretary of the Senate;

"(B) the Clerk of the House of Representatives;

"(C) the Comptroller General of the United States;

"(D) two individuals appointed by the President of the Senate, upon the recommendations of the majority leader of the Senate and the minority leader of the Senate; and

"(E) two individuals appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, upon the recommendations of the majority leader of the House and the minority leader of the House.

Of each class of two members appointed under subparagraphs (D) and (E), not more than one shall be appointed from the same political party. An individual appointed to fill a vacancy occurring other than by the expiration of a term of office shall be appointed only for the unexpired term for the member he succeeds. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the Board shall be filled in the same manner as in the case of the original appointment. Members of the Board appointed under subparagraphs (D) and (E)—

"(i) shall be chosen from among individuals who are not officers or employees in the executive, legislative, or judicial branch of the Government of the United States (including elected and appointed officials);

"(ii) shall be chosen on the basis of their maturity, experience, integrity, impartiality, and good judgment;

"(iii) shall serve for terms of 4 years, except that, of the members first appointed under subparagraph (D), one shall be appointed for a term of 1 year and one shall be appointed for a term of 3 years and, of the members first appointed under subparagraph (E), one shall be appointed for a term of 2 years; and

"(iv) shall receive compensation equivalent to the compensation paid at level IV of the Federal Executive Salary Schedule (5 U.S.C. 5315), prorated on a daily basis for each day spent in the work of the Board, shall be paid actual travel expenses, and per diem in lieu of subsistence expenses when away from their usual place of residence, in accordance with section 5703(b) of title 5, United States Code.

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, it shall be the duty of the Board to supervise the administration of, seek to obtain compliance with, and formulate overall policy with respect to, this title, title I of this Act, and sections 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, and 616 of title 18, United States Code.

"(b) Members of the Board shall alternate in serving as Chairman of the Board. The term of each Chairman shall be one year.

"(c) All decisions of the Board with respect to the exercise of its duties and powers under the provisions of this title shall be made by majority vote of the members of the Board. A member of the Board may not delegate to any person his vote or any decisionmaking authority or duty vested in the Board by the provisions of this title.

"(d) The Board shall meet at the call of any member of the Board, except that it shall meet at least once each month.

"(e) The Board shall prepare written rules for the conduct of its activities.

"(f) (1) The Board shall have a Staff Director and a General Counsel who shall be appointed by the Board. The Staff Director shall be paid at a rate not to exceed the rate of basic pay in effect for level IV of the Executive Schedule (5 U.S.C. 5315). The General Counsel shall be paid at a rate not to exceed the rate of basic pay in effect for level V of the Executive Schedule (5 U.S.C. 5316). With the approval of the Board, the Staff Director may appoint and fix the pay of such additional personnel as he considers desirable. Not less than 30 per centum of the additional personnel appointed by the Staff Director shall be selected as follows:

"(A) one-half from among individuals recommended by the minority leader of the Senate; and

"(B) one-half from among individuals recommended by the minority leader of the House of Representatives.

"(2) With the approval of the Board, the Staff Director may procure temporary and intermittent services to the same extent as is authorized by section 3109 (b) of title 5, United States Code, but at rates for individuals not to exceed the daily equivalent of the annual rate of basic pay in effect for grade GS–15 of the General Schedule (5 U.S.C. 5332).

"POWERS OF THE BOARD

"SEC. 309. (a) The Board shall have the power—

"(1) to formulate general policy and to review actions of the supervisory officers with respect to the administration of this title, title I of this Act, and sections 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, and 616 of title 18, United States Code;

"(2) to oversee the development of prescribed forms under section 311 (a) (1);

"(3) to review rules and regulations prescribed under section 104 of this Act or under this title to assure their consistency with the law and to assure that such rules and regulations are uniform, to the extent practicable;

"(4) to render advisory opinions under section 313;

"(5) to expeditiously conduct investigations and hearings, to encourage voluntary compliance, and to report apparent violations to the appropriate law enforcement authorities;

"(6) to administer oaths or affirmations;

"(7) to require by subpena, signed by the Chairman, the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence relevant to any investigation or hearing conducted by the Board under section 311 (c); and

"(8) to pay witnesses the same fees and mileage as are paid in like circumstances in the courts of the United States.

"(b) Any district court of the United States, within the jurisdiction of which any inquiry is carried on, may, upon petition by the Board, in case of refusal to obey a subpena of the Board issued under subsection (a) (7), issue an order requiring compliance with such subpena. Any failure to obey the order of such district court may be punished by such district court as a contempt thereof.

"REPORTS

"SEC. 310. The Board shall transmit reports to the President of the United States and to each House of the Congress no later than March 31 of each year. Each such report shall contain a detailed statement with respect to the activities of the Board in carrying out its duties under this title, together with recommendations for such legislative or other action as the Board considers appropriate.".

(b) (1) Section 311 (a) (9) of the Federal Election

Campaign Act of 1971 (as so redesignated by subsection (a) (1) of this section and by section 205(a) (1) of this Act), relating to duties of the supervisory officer, is amended by striking out "appropriate law enforcement authorities" and inserting in lieu thereof "Board, pursuant to subsection (c) (1) (B)".

(2) Section 311 (c) (1) of such Act (as so redesignated by subsection (a) (1) of this section and by section 205 (b) (2) of this Act), relating to duties of the supervisory officer, is amended to read as follows:

"(c) (1) (A) Any person who believes a violation of this title, title I of this Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code, has occurred may file a complaint with the Board.

"(B) Any supervisory officer who has reason to believe a violation of this title, title I of this Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code, has occurred shall refer such apparent violation to the Board.

"(C) The Board, upon receiving any complaint under subparagraph (A) or referral under subparagraph (B), or if it has reason to believe that any person has committed a violation of any such provision, shall notify the person involved of such apparent violation and shall—

"(i) report such apparent violation to the Attorney General; or

"(ii) make an investigation of such apparent violation.

"(D) Any investigation under subparagraph (C) (ii) shall be conducted expeditiously and shall include an investigation of reports and statements filed by any complainant with respect to the apparent violation involved, if such complainant is a candidate. Any notification or investigation made under subparagraph (C) shall not be made public by the Board or by any other person without the written consent of the person receiving such notification or the person with respect to whom such investigation is made.

"(E) The Board shall, at the request of any person who receives notice of an apparent violation under subparagraph (C), conduct a hearing with respect to such apparent violation.

"(F) If the Board shall determine, after any investigation under subparagraph (C) (ii), that there is reason to believe that there has been an apparent violation of this title, title I of this Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code, the Board shall endeavor to correct any such apparent violation by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion.

"(G) The Board shall refer apparent violations to the appropriate law enforcement authorities if the Board is unable to correct such apparent violations, or if the Board determines that any such referral is appropriate.

"(H) Whenever in the judgment of the Board, after affording due notice and an opportunity for a hearing, any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of this title, title I of this Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code, the Attorney General on behalf of the United States shall institute a civil action for relief, including a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or any other appropriate order in the district court of the United States for the district in which the person is found, resides, or transacts business. Upon a proper showing that such person has engaged or is about to engage in such acts or practices, a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond by such court.".

(3) Section 311 of such Act (as so redesignated by subsection (a) (1) of this section), relating to the duties of the supervisory officer, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) In any case in which the Board refers an apparent violation to the Attorney General, the Attorney General shall respond by report to the Board with respect to any action taken by the Attorney General regarding such apparent violation. Each such report shall be transmitted no later than 60 days after the date the Board refers any apparent violation, and at the close of every 30-day period thereafter until there is final disposition of such apparent violation. The Board may from time to time prepare and publish reports on the status of such referrals.".

(4) The heading for section 311 of such Act (as so redesignated by subsection (a) (1) of this section) is amended to read as follows:

"DUTIES OF THE SUPERVISORY OFFICER; INVESTIGATIONS BY THE BOARD".

(c) Title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, relating to disclosure of Federal campaign funds, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"JUDICIAL REVIEW

"SEC. 315. (a) The Board, the supervisory officers, the national committee of any political party, and any individual eligible to vote in any election for the office of President of the United States are authorized to institute such actions in the appropriate district court of the United States, including actions for declaratory judgment or injunctive relief, as may be appropriate to implement or construe any provision of this title, title I of this Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code. The district court immediately shall certify all questions of constitutionality of this title, title I of this Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code, to the United States court of appeals for the circuit involved, which shall hear the matter sitting en banc.

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any decision on a matter certified under subsection (a) shall be reviewable by appeal directly to the Supreme Court of the United States. Such appeal shall be brought no later than 20 days after the decision of the court of appeals.

"(c) It shall be the duty of the court of appeals and of the Supreme Court of the United States to advance on the docket and to expedite to the greatest possible extent the disposition of any matter certified under subsection (a).

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 316. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, there are authorized to be appropriated to each of the supervisory officers and to the Board such sums as may be necessary to enable each such supervisory officer and the Board to carry out their duties under this Act.".

ADVISORY OPINIONS

SEC. 208. Title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, relating to disclosure of Federal campaign funds, is amended by inserting immediately after section 312 (as so redesignated by section 207(a)(1) of this Act), the following new section:

"ADVISORY OPINIONS

"SEC. 313. (a) Upon written request to the Board by any individual holding Federal office, any candidate for Federal office, or any political committee, the Board shall render an advisory opinion, in writing, within a reasonable time with respect to whether any specific transaction or activity by such individual, candidate, or political committee would constitute a violation of this title, title I of this Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code.

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any person with respect to whom an advisory opinion is rendered under subsection (a) who acts in good faith in accordance with the provisions and findings of such advisory opinion shall be presumed to be in compliance with the provision of this title, title I of this Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code, with respect to which such advisory opinion is rendered.

"(c) Any request made under subsection (a) shall be made public by the Board. The Board shall, before rendering an advisory opinion with respect to such request, provide any interested party with an opportunity to transmit written comments to the Board with respect to such request.".

TITLE III—GENERAL PROVISIONS

EFFECT ON STATE LAW

SEC. 301. Section 403 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, relating to effect on State law, is amended to read as follows:

"EFFECT ON STATE LAW

"SEC. 403. The provisions of this Act, and of rules prescribed under this Act, supersede and preempt any provision of State law with respect to election to Federal office.".

PERIOD OF LIMITATIONS; ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 302. Title IV of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, relating to general provisions, is amended by redesignating section 406 as section 408 and by inserting immediately after section 405 the following new sections:

"PERIOD OF LIMITATIONS

"SEC. 406. (a) No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any violation of title I of this Act, title III of this Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code, unless the indictment is found or the information is instituted within 3 years after the date of the violation.

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law—

"(1) the period of limitation referred to in subsection (a) shall apply with respect to violations referred to in such subsection committed before, on, or after the effective date of this section; and

"(2) no person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any act or omission which was a violation of any provision of title I of this Act, title III of this Act, or section 608, 610, 611, or 613 of title 18, United States Code, as in effect on the day before the effective date of the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974, if such act or omission does not constitute a violation of any such provision, as amended by the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974.

Nothing in this subsection shall affect any proceeding pending in any court of the United States on the effective date of this section.

"ENFORCEMENT

"SEC. 407. (a) In any case in which the Board of Supervisory Officers, after notice and opportunity for a hearing on the record in accordance with section 554 of title 5, United States Code, makes a finding that a person who, while a candidate for Federal office, failed to file a report required by title III of this Act, and such finding is made before the expiration of the time within which the failure to file such report may be prosecuted as a violation of such title III, such person shall be disqualified from becoming a candidate in any future election for Federal office for a period of time beginning on the date of such finding and ending one year after the expiration of the term of the Federal office for which such person was a candidate.

"(b) Any finding by the Board under subsection (a) shall be subject to judicial review in accordance with the provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code.".

FINANCING OF PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATING CONVENTIONS

SEC. 406. (a) Chapter 95 of subtitle H of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to the presidential election campaign fund) is amended by striking out section 9008 (relating to information on proposed expenses) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 9008. PAYMENTS FOR PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATING CONVENTIONS.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF ACCOUNTS.—The Secretary shall maintain in the fund, in addition to any account which he maintains under section 9006(a), a separate account for the national committee of each major party and minor party. The Secretary shall deposit in each such account an amount equal to the amount which each such committee may receive under subsection (b). Such deposits shall be drawn from amounts designated by individuals under section 6096 and shall be made before any transfer is made to any account for any eligible candidate under section 9006(a).

"(b) ENTITLEMENT TO PAYMENTS FROM THE FUND.—

"(1) MAJOR PARTIES.—Subject to the provisions of this section, the national committee of a major party shall be entitled to payments under paragraph (3), with respect to any presidential nominating convention, in amounts which, in the aggregate, shall not exceed $2,000,000.

"(2) MINOR PARTIES.—Subject to the provisions of this section, the national committee of a minor party shall be entitled to payments under paragraph (3), with respect to any presidential nominating convention, in amounts which, in the aggregate, shall not exceed an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount the national committee of a major party is entitled to receive under paragraph (1) as the number of popular votes received by the candidate for President of the minor party, as such candidate, in the preceding presidential election bears to the average number of popular votes received by the candidates for President of the major parties in the preceding presidential election.

"(3) PAYMENTS.—Upon receipt of certification from the Comptroller General under subsection (g), the Secretary shall make payments from the appropriate account maintained under subsection (a) to the national committee of a major party or minor party which elects to receive its entitlement under this subsection. Such payments shall be available for use by such committee in accordance with the provisions of subsection (c).

"(4) LIMITATION.—Payments to the national committee of a major party or minor party under this subsection from the account designated for such committee shall be limited to the amounts in such account at the time of payment.

"(c) USE OF FUNDS.—No part of any payment made under subsection (b) shall be used to defray the expenses of any candidate or delegate who is participating in any presidential nominating convention. Such payments shall be used only—

"(1) to defray expenses incurred with respect to a presidential nominating convention (including the payment of deposits) by or on behalf of the national committee receiving such payments; or

"(2) to repay loans the proceeds of which were used to defray such expenses, or otherwise to restore funds (other than contributions to defray such expenses received by such committee) used to defray such expenses.

"(d) LIMITATION OF EXPENDITURES.—

"(1) MAJOR PARTIES.—Except as provided by paragraph (3), the national committee of a major party may not make expenditures with respect to a presidential nominating convention which, in the aggregate, exceed the amount of payments to which such committee is entitled under subsection (b) (1).

"(2) MINOR PARTIES.—Except as provided by paragraph (3), the national committee of a minor party may not make expenditures with respect to a presidential nominating convention which, in the aggregate, exceed the amount of the entitlement of the national committee of a major party under subsection (b) (1).

"(3) EXCEPTION.—The Presidential Election Campaign Fund Advisory Board may authorize the national committee of a major party or minor party to make expenditures which, in the aggregate, exceed the limitation established by paragraph (1) or paragraph (2) of this subsection. Such authorization shall be based upon a determination by such Board that, due to extraordinary and unforeseen circumstances, such expenditures are necessary to assure the effective operation of the presidential nominating convention by such committee.

"(e) AVAILABILITY OF PAYMENTS.—The national committee of a major party or minor party may receive payments under subsection (b) (3) beginning on July 1 of the calendar year immediately preceding the calendar year in which a presidential nominating convention of the political party involved is held.

"(f) TRANSFER TO THE FUND.—If, after the close of a presidential nominating convention and after the national committee of the political party involved has been paid the amount which it is entitled to receive under this section, there are moneys remaining in the account of such national committee, the Secretary shall transfer the moneys so remaining to the fund.

"(g) CERTIFICATION BY COMPTROLLER GENERAL.—Any major party or minor party may file a statement with the Comptroller General in such form and manner and at such times as he may require, designating the national committee of such party. Such statement shall include the information required by section 303(b) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, together with such additional information as the Comptroller General may require. Upon receipt of a statement filed under the preceding sentences, the Comptroller General promptly shall verify such statement according to such procedures and criteria as he may establish and shall certify to the Secretary for payment in full to any such committee of amounts to which such committee may be entitled under subsection (b). Such certifications shall be subject to an examination and audit which the Comptroller General shall conduct no later than December 31 of the calendar year in which the presidential nominating convention involved is held.

"(h) REPAYMENTS.—The Comptroller General shall have the same authority to require repayments from the national committee of a major party or minor party as he has with respect to repayments from any eligible candidate under section 9007(b). The provisions of section 9007(c) and section 9007(d) shall apply with respect to any repayment required by the Comptroller General under this subsection.".

(b)(1) Section 9009(a) of such Code (relating to reports) is amended by striking out "and" in paragraph (2) thereof; by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (3) thereof and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(4) the expenses incurred by the national committee of a major party or minor party with respect to a presidential nominating convention;

"(5) the amounts certified by him under section 9008(g) for payment to each such committee; and

"(6) the amount of payments, if any, required from such committees under section 9008(h), and the reasons for each such payment.".

(2) The heading for section 9012(a) of such Code (relating to excess campaign expenses) is amended by striking out "CAMPAIGN".

(3) Section 9012(a)(1) of such Code (relating to excess expenses) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "It shall be unlawful for the national committee of a major party or minor party knowingly and willfully to incur expenses with respect to a presidential nominating convention in excess of the expenditure limitation applicable with respect to such committee under section 9008(d), unless the incurring of such expenses is authorized by the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Board under section 9008(d)(3).".

(4) Section 9012(c) of such Code (relating to unlawful use of payments) is amended by redesignating paragraph (2) as paragraph (3) and by inserting immediately after paragraph (1) the following new paragraph:

"(2) It shall be unlawful for the national committee of a major party or minor party which receives any payment under section 9008(b)(3) to use, or authorize the use of, such payment for any purpose other than a purpose authorized by section 9008(c).".

(5) Section 9012(e)(1) of such Code (relating to kickbacks and illegal payments) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "It shall be unlawful for the national committee of a major party or minor party knowingly and willfully to give or accept any kickback or any illegal payment in connection with any expense incurred by such committee with respect to a presidential nominating convention.".

(6) Section 9012(e)(3) of such Code (relating to kickbacks and illegal payments) is amended by inserting immediately after "their authorized committees" the following: ", or in connection with any expense incurred by the national committee of a major party or minor party with respect to a presidential nominating convention,".

(c) The table of sections for chapter 95 of subtitle H of such Code (relating to the presidential election campaign fund) is amended by striking out the item relating to section 9008 and inserting in lieu thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 9008. Payments for presidential nominating conventions.".

(d) Section 276 of such Code (relating to certain indirect contributions to political parties) is amended by striking out subsection (c) and by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (c).

TAX RETURNS BY POLITICAL COMMITTEES

SEC. 407. Section 6012(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to persons required to make returns of income) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The Secretary or his delegate shall, by regulation, exempt from the requirement of making returns under this section any political committee (as defined in section 301(d) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971) having no gross income for the taxable year.".

PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARY MATCHING PAYMENT ACCOUNT

SEC. 408. (a) The analysis of subtitles at the beginning of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"SUBTITLE H. Financing of presidential election campaigns.".

(b) The analysis of chapters at the beginning of subtitle H of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"CHAPTER 97. Presidential Primary Matching Payment Account.".

(c) Subtitle H of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new chapter:

"CHAPTER 97—PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARY MATCHING PAYMENT ACCOUNT

"SEC. 9031. SHORT TITLE.

"This chapter may be cited as the 'Presidential Primary Matching Payment Account Act'.

"SEC. 9032. DEFINITIONS.

"For purposes of this chapter—

"(1) The term 'authorized committee' means, with respect to the candidates of a political party for President and Vice President of the United States, the political committee designated under section 302 (f) (1) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 by the candidate of a political party for President of the United States as his principal campaign committee.

"(2) The term 'candidate' means an individual who seeks nomination for election to be President of the United States. For purposes of this paragraph, an individual shall be considered to seek nomination for election if he (A) takes the action necessary under the law of a State to qualify himself for nomination for election, (B) receives contributions or incurs qualified campaign expenses, or (C) gives his consent for any other person to receive contributions or to incur qualified campaign expenses on his behalf.

"(3) The term 'Comptroller General' means the Comptroller General of the United States.

"(4) Except as provided by section 9034(a), the term 'contribution'—

"(A) means a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, the payment of which was made on or after the beginning of the calendar year immediately preceding the calendar year of the presidential election with respect to which such gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, is made, for the purpose of influencing the result of a primary election,

"(B) means a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution for any such purpose,

"(C) means a transfer of funds between political committees, and

"(D) means the payment by any person other than a candidate, or his authorized committee, of compensation for the personal services of another person which are rendered to the candidate or committee without charge, but

"(E) does not include—

"(i) except as provided in subparagraph (D), the value of personal services rendered to or for the benefit of a candidate by an individual who receives no compensation for rendering such service to or for the benefit of the candidate, or

"(ii) payments under section 9037.

"(5) The term 'matching payment account' means the Presidential Primary Matching Payment Account established under section 9037(a).

"(6) The term 'matching payment period' means the period beginning with the beginning of the calendar year in which a general election for the office of President of the United States will be held and ending on the date on which the national convention of the party whose nomination a candidate seeks nominates its candidate for the office of President of the United States.

"(7) The term 'primary election' means an election, including a runoff election or a nominating convention or caucus held by a political party, for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party, or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President of the United States.

"(8) The term 'political committee' means any individual, committee, association, or organization (whether or not incorporated) which accepts contributions or incurs qualified campaign expenses for the purpose of influencing, or attempting to influence, the nomination of any person for election to the office of President of the United States.

"(9) The term 'qualified campaign expense' means a purchase, payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money or of anything of value—

"(A) incurred by a candidate, or by his authorized committee, in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, and

"(B) neither the incurring nor payment of which constitutes a violation of any law of the United States or of the State in which the expense is incurred or paid.

For purposes of this paragraph, an expense is incurred by a candidate or by an authorized committee if it is incurred by a person specifically authorized in writing by the candidate or committee, as the case may be, to incur such expense on behalf of the candidate or the committee.

"(10) The term 'State' means each State of the United States and the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 9033. ELIGIBILITY FOR PAYMENTS.

"(a) CONDITIONS.—To be eligible to receive payments under section 9037, a candidate shall, in writing—

"(1) agree to obtain and furnish to the Comptroller General any evidence he may request of qualified campaign expenses,

"(2) agree to keep and furnish to the Comptroller General any records, books, and other information he may request, and

"(3) agree to an audit and examination by the Comptroller General under section 9038 and to pay any amounts required to be paid under such section.

"(b) EXPENSE LIMITATION; DECLARATION OF INTENT; MINIMUM CONTRIBUTIONS.—To be eligible to receive payments under section 9037, a candidate shall certify to the Comptroller General that—

"(1) the candidate and his authorized committee will not incur qualified campaign expenses in excess of the limitation on such expenses under section 9035,

"(2) the candidate is seeking nomination by a political party for election to the office of President of the United States,

"(3) the candidate has received contributions which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000 in contributions from residents of each of at least 20 States, and

"(4) the aggregate of contributions received from any person under paragraph (3) does not exceed $250.

"SEC. 9034. ENTITLEMENT OF ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES TO PAYMENTS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Every candidate who is eligible to receive payments under section 9033 is entitled to payments under section 9037 in an amount equal to the amount of each contribution received by such candidate on or after the beginning of the calendar year immediately preceding the calendar year of the presidential election with respect to which such candidate is seeking nomination, or by his authorized committee, disregarding any amount of contributions from any person to the extent that the total of the amounts contributed by such person on or after the beginning of such preceding calendar year exceeds $250. For purposes of this subsection and section 9033(b), the term 'contribution' means a gift of money made by a written instrument which identifies the person making the contribution by full name and mailing address, but does not include a subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything described in subparagraph (B), (C), or (D) of section 9032(4).

"(b) LIMITATIONS.—The total amount of payments to which a candidate is entitled under subsection (a) shall not exceed 50 percent of the expenditure limitation established by section 608(c)(1)(A) of title 18, United States Code.

"SEC. 9035. QUALIFIED CAMPAIGN EXPENSE LIMITATION.

"No candidate shall knowingly incur qualified campaign expenses in excess of the expenditure limitation established by section 608(c)(1)(A) of title 18, United States Code.

"SEC. 9036. CERTIFICATION BY COMPTROLLER GENERAL.

"(a) INITIAL CERTIFICATIONS.—Not later than 10 days after a candidate establishes his eligibility under section 9033 to receive payments under section 9037, the Comptroller General shall certify to the Secretary for payment to such candidate under section 9037 payment in full of amounts to which such candidate is entitled under section 9034.

"(b) FINALITY OF DETERMINATIONS.—Initial certifications by the Comptroller General under subsection (a), and all determinations made by him under this chapter, are final and conclusive, except to the extent that they are subject to examination and audit by the Comptroller General under section 9038 and judicial review under section 9041.

"SEC. 9037. PAYMENTS TO ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF ACCOUNT.—The Secretary shall maintain in the Presidential Election Campaign Fund established by section 9006(a), in addition to any account which he maintains under such section, a separate account to be known as the Presidential Primary Matching Payment Account. The Secretary shall deposit into the matching payment account, for use by the candidate of any political party who is eligible to receive payments under section 9033, the amount available after the Secretary determines that amounts for payments under section 9006(c) and for payments under section 9007(b)(3) are available for such payments.

"(b) PAYMENTS FROM THE MATCHING PAYMENT ACCOUNT.—Upon receipt of a certification from the Comptroller General under section 9036, but not before the beginning of the matching payment period, the Secretary or his delegate shall promptly transfer the amount certified by the Comptroller General from the matching payment account to the candidate. In making such transfers to candidates of the same political party, the Secretary or his delegate shall seek to achieve an equitable distribution of funds available under subsection (a), and the Secretary or his delegate shall take into account, in seeking to achieve an equitable distribution, the sequence in which such certifications are received. Transfers to candidates of the same political party may not exceed an amount which is equal to 45 percent of the total amount available in the matching payment account, and transfers to any candidate may not exceed an amount which is equal to 25 percent of the total amount available in the matching payment account.

"SEC. 9038. EXAMINATIONS AND AUDITS; REPAYMENTS.

"(a) EXAMINATIONS AND AUDITS.—After each matching payment period, the Comptroller General shall conduct a thorough examination and audit of the qualified campaign expenses of every candidate and his authorized committee who received payments under section 9037.

"(b) REPAYMENTS.—

"(1) If the Comptroller General determines that any portion of the payments made to a candidate from the matching payment account was in excess of the aggregate amount of payments to which such candidate was entitled under section 9034, he shall notify the candidate, and the candidate shall pay to the Secretary or his delegate an amount equal to the amount of excess payments.

"(2) If the Comptroller General determines that any amount of any payment made to a candidate from the matching payment account was used for any purpose other than—

"(A) to defray the qualified campaign expenses with respect to which such payment was made, or

"(B) to repay loans the proceeds of which were used, or otherwise to restore funds (other than contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses which were received and expended) which were used, to defray qualified campaign expenses, he shall notify such candidate of the amount so used, and the candidate shall pay to the Secretary or his delegate an amount equal to such amount.

"(3) Amounts received by a candidate from the matching payment account may be retained for the liquidation of all obligations to pay qualified campaign expenses incurred for a period not exceeding 6 months after the end of the matching payment period. After all obligations have been liquidated, that portion of any unexpended balance remaining in the candidate's accounts which bears the same ratio to the total unexpended balance as the total amount received from the matching payment account bears to the total of all deposits made into the candidate's accounts shall be promptly repaid to the matching payment account.

"(c) NOTIFICATION.—No notification shall be made by the Comptroller General under subsection (b) with respect to a matching payment period more than 3 years after the end of such period.

"(d) DEPOSIT OF REPAYMENTS.—All payments received by the Secretary or his delegate under subsection (b) shall be deposited by him in the matching payment account.

"SEC. 9039. REPORTS TO CONGRESS; REGULATIONS.

"(a) REPORTS.—The Comptroller General shall, as soon as practicable after each matching payment period, submit a full report to the Senate and House of Representatives setting forth—

"(1) the qualified campaign expenses (shown in such detail as the Comptroller General determines necessary) incurred by the candidates of each political party and their authorized committees,

"(2) the amounts certified by him under section 9036 for payment to each eligible candidate, and

"(3) the amount of payments, if any, required from candidates under section 9038, and the reasons for each payment required.

Each report submitted pursuant to this section shall be printed as a Senate document.

"(b) REGULATIONS, ETC.— The Comptroller General is authorized to prescribe rules and regulations in accordance with the provisions of subsection (c), to conduct examinations and audits (in addition to the examinations and audits required by section 9038(a)), to conduct investigations, and to require the keeping and submission of any books, records, and information, which he determines to be necessary to carry out his responsibilities under this chapter.

"(c) REVIEW OF REGULATIONS.—

"(1) The Comptroller General, before prescribing any rule or regulation under subsection (b), shall transmit a statement with respect to such rule or regulation to the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate and to the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives, in accordance with the provisions of this subsection. Such statement shall set forth the proposed rule or regulation and shall contain a detailed explanation and justification of such rule or regulation.

"(2) If either such committee does not, through appropriate action, disapprove the proposed rule or regulation set forth in such statement no later than 30 legislative days after receipt of such statement, then the Comptroller General may prescribe such rule or regulation. The Comptroller General may not prescribe any rule or regulation which is disapproved by either such committee under this paragraph.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'legislative days' does not include any calendar day on which both Houses of the Congress are not in session.

"SEC. 9040. PARTICIPATION BY COMPTROLLER GENERAL IN JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.

"(a) APPEARANCE BY COUNSEL.—The Comptroller General is authorized to appear in and defend against any action instituted under this section, either by attorneys employed in his office or by counsel whom he may appoint without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and whose compensation he may fix without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title.

"(b) RECOVERY OF CERTAIN PAYMENTS.—The Comptroller General is authorized, through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a), to institute actions in the district courts of the United States to seek recovery of any amounts determined to be payable to the Secretary or his delegate as a result of an examination and audit made pursuant to section 9038.

"(c) INJUNCTIVE RELIEF.—The Comptroller General is authorized, through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a), to petition the courts of the United States for injunctive relief as is appropriate to implement any provision of this chapter.

"(d) APPEAL.—The Comptroller General is authorized on behalf of the United States to appeal from, and to petition the Supreme Court for certiorari to review, judgments, or decrees entered with respect to actions in which he appears pursuant to the authority provided in this section.

"SEC. 9041. JUDICIAL REVIEW.

"(a) REVIEW OF AGENCY ACTION BY THE COMPTROLLER GENERAL.—Any agency action by the Comptroller General made under the provisions of this chapter shall be subject to review by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit upon petition filed in such court within 30 days after the agency action by the Comptroller General for which review is sought.

"(b) REVIEW PROCEDURES.—The provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, apply to judicial review of any agency action, as defined in section 551(13) of title 5, United States Code, by the Comptroller General.

"SEC. 9042. CRIMINAL PENALTIES.

"(a) EXCESS CAMPAIGN EXPENSES.—Any person who violates the provisions of section 9035 shall be fined not more than $25,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both. Any officer or member of any political committee who knowingly consents to any expenditure in violation of the provisions of section 9035 shall be fined not more than $25,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(b) UNLAWFUL USE OF PAYMENTS.—

"(1) It is unlawful for any person who receives any payment under section 9037, or to whom any portion of any such payment is transferred, knowingly and willfully to use, or authorize the use of, such payment or such portion for any purpose other than—

"(A) to defray qualified campaign expenses, or

"(B) to repay loans the proceeds of which were used, or otherwise to restore funds (other than contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses which were received and expended) which were used, to defray qualified campaign expenses.

"(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(c) FALSE STATEMENTS, ETC.—

"(1) It is unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully—

"(A) to furnish any false, fictitious, or fraudulent evidence, books, or information to the Comptroller General under this chapter, or to include in any evidence, books, or information so furnished any misrepresentation of a material fact, or to falsify or conceal any evidence, books, or information relevant to a certification by the Comptroller General or an examination and audit by the Comptroller General under this chapter, or

"(B) to fail to furnish to the Comptroller General any records, books, or information requested by him for purposes of this chapter.

"(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(d) KICKBACKS AND ILLEGAL PAYMENTS.—

"(1) It is unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully to give or accept any kickback or any illegal payment in connection with any qualified campaign expense of a candidate, or his authorized committee, who receives payments under section 9037.

"(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(3) In addition to the penalty provided by paragraph (2), any person who accepts any kickback or illegal payment in connection with any qualified campaign expense of a candidate or his authorized committee shall pay to the Secretary for deposit in the matching payment account, an amount equal to 125 percent of the kickback or payment received.".

REVIEW OF REGULATIONS

SEC. 409. (a) Section 9009 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to reports to Congress; regulations) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) REVIEW OF REGULATIONS.—

"(1) The Comptroller General, before prescribing any rule or regulation under subsection (b), shall transmit a statement with respect to such rule or regulation to the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate and to the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives, in accordance with the provisions of this subsection. Such statement shall set forth the proposed rule or regulation and shall contain a detailed explanation and justification of such rule or regulation.

"(2) If either such committee does not, through appropriate action, disapprove the proposed rule or regulation set forth in such statement no later than 30 legislative days after receipt of such statement, then the Comptroller General may prescribe such rule or regulation. The Comptroller General may not prescribe any rule or regulation which is disapproved by either such committee under this paragraph.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'legislative days' does not include any calendar day on which both Houses of the Congress are not in session.".

(b) Section 9009(b) of such Code (relating to regulations, etc.) is amended by inserting "in accordance with the provisions of subsection (c)" immediately after "regulations".

EFFECTIVE DATES

SEC. 410. (a) Except as provided by subsection (b), the foregoing provisions of this Act shall become effective 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) The amendments made by sections 403, 404, 405, 406, 407, 408, and 409 shall apply with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1973.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

JULY 30, 1974.—Committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed

Mr. HAYS, from the Committee on House Administration, submitted the following REPORT

Together with minority views, separate views, supplemental views, and additional views

[To accompany H.R. 16090]

The Committee on House Administration, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 16090) to impose overall limitations on campaign expenditures and political contributions; to provide that each candidate for Federal office shall designate a principal campaign committee; to provide for a single reporting responsibility with respect to receipts and expenditures by certain political committees; to change the times for the filing of reports regarding campaign expenditures and political contributions; to provide for public financing of Presidential nominating conventions and Presidential primary elections; and for other purposes, having considered the same, reports favorably thereon without amendment and recommends that the bill do pass.

PURPOSE OF THE BILL

The purpose of the bill is fourfold:

(1) To place limitations on campaign contributions and expenditures;

(2) To facilitate the reporting and disclosure of the sources and disposition of campaign funds by centralizing campaign expenditure and contribution reporting;

(3) To establish a Board of Supervisory Officers to oversee enforcement of and compliance with Federal campaign laws; and

(4) To strengthen the law for public financing of Presidential general elections, and to authorize the use of the dollar checkoff fund for financing Presidential Nominating Conventions and campaigns for nomination to the office of President.

COMMITTEE ACTION

H.R. 16090 was introduced and considered against a background of dissatisfaction with the recently enacted Federal law regulating campaign financing in elections for Federal office.

The Subcommittee on Elections of the Committee on House Administration held public hearings on election amendments on October 2, 10, 16, 25, November 14 and 29, 1973. The full committee marked up the bill in public sessions held on March 26, 27, April 2, 10, 23 25, 30, May 16, 22, June 5, 11, 12, 13, 18, 19, 20, 25, 26, 27, 28 and July 1.

Chairman Hays and Mr. Thompson of New Jersey, Mr. Dent, Mr. Nedzi, Mr. Brademas, Mr. Gray, Mr. Hawkins, Mr. Gettys, Mr. Annunzio, Mr. Gaydos, Mr. Mollohan, Mr. Koch, Mr. Cleveland, Mr. Ware and Mr. Froehlich introduced H.R. 16090 on July 24, 1974.

The full committee on July 24, 1974, by a vote of 21 to 2, ordered the bill reported to the House without amendment.

BACKGROUND

Existing Federal law regulating campaign financing is embodied primarily in the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, chapter 29 of title 18 of the U.S. Code, and the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act. Although most of these campaign finance laws have been recently enacted, some substantive and administrative shortcomings already have become apparent.

Testimony before the Elections Subcommittee generally supported the position that the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 as approved by the 92d Congress, was a good law and a step in the right direction. Since its enactment, most campaign expenditures and contributions have been publicly disclosed and there have been no major scandals or serious violations involving Congressional elections. However, some problems in connection with the administration of the new laws and some problems not dealt with by the new laws remain. The most serious problems involved campaign financing of Presidential elections.

One of the problems with the existing law is that it, in effect, requires a multiplicity of campaign disclosure reports. Since existing law permits the proliferation of political committees which support candidates for Federal office, and since each candidate, as well as each committee supporting each candidate, must file reports, supervisory officers have been overwhelmed by the sheer number of the reports filed. Thus, in order to determine the source and disposition of funds spent in a specific campaign a large number of reports must be examined, especially with respect to Presidential candidates.

Aggravating the problem created by the sheer number of required reports is the schedule of reporting dates which impairs the effectiveness of the disclosure provisions. Under existing law, reports must be filed on the fifteenth day before an election, again on the fifth day before an election, and at various other times during the year. Since the major expenses are contracted well in advance of the election, the second pre-election report serves little purpose. Because the second pre-election report is due so close to the date of the election, there is practically no opportunity for the news media to examine, evaluate, and report the significant items disclosed in these reports.

A further deficiency in the existing law concerns the issuance of regulations interpreting statutory provisions. Under existing law, each of the three supervisory officers issues regulations separately: the Clerk of the House of Representatives for candidates for Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner; the Secretary of the Senate for candidates for Senator; and the Comptroller General for candidates for President or Vice President. The Comptroller General issues all regulations with respect to provisions of the Campaign Communications Reform Act, Title I, of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971. Finally, certain regulations concerning the extension of unsecured credit to candidates for Federal office are issued by the Civil Aeronautics Board, the Federal Communications Commission, and the Interstate Commerce Commission. This absence of centralized authority results in a lack of uniformity in the regulations issued.

Finally, as pointed out by Chairman Hays, some of the regulations already issued have actually changed the substance of the existing statutory requirements. For example, regulations were issued providing that reports due on the fifteenth and fifth days before an election must be completed as of the twenty-second and twelfth days before an election. The original intent behind the requirement for a final preelection report due five days before the election was to require disclosure of last minute contributions and expenditures. Yet, under the existing regulations, any last minute transactions (except contributions over $5,000.00) occurring less than twelve days before the election need not be disclosed prior to the election.

Existing law does limit a candidate's use of personal and family funds in connection with his campaign for Federal office. However, the absence of any limits on contributions means that candidates with wealthy or special interest supporters have a decided advantage in Federal elections.

While existing law limits expenditures for campaign use of the communications media, the absence of any limits on overall expenditures has contributed to the alarming rise in the cost of campaigning for Federal office.

The unchecked rise in campaign expenditures, coupled with the absence of limitations on contributions and expenditures, has increased the dependence of candidates on special interest groups and large contributors. Under the present law the impression persists that a candidate can buy an election by simply spending large sums in a campaign.

In view of the disclosure of serious abuses of each contribution in the last Presidential campaign, the prohibition in the bill against cash contributions over $100 is viewed by the committee as a major advance in campaign finance.

Such a system is not only unfair to candidates, in general, but even more so to the electorate. The electorate is entitled to base its judgment on a straightforward presentation of a candidate's qualifications for public office and his programs for the Nation rather than on a sophisticated advertising program which is encouraged by the infusion of vast amounts of money.

The Committee on House Administration is of the opinion that there is a definite need for effective and comprehensive legislation in this area to restore and strengthen public confidence in the integrity of the political process.

WHAT THE BILL DOES

H.R. 16090 incorporates four main titles covering criminal code amendments, disclosure of Federal compaign funds, general provisions, and amendments to other laws and effective dates.

Definitions

The committee bill amends the definitions of "expenditure" and "contribution" in the criminal code and in the Federal Elections Campaign Act of 1971 (hereinafter referred to as the "Act"). The principal effect of the amendments to the definitions of contributions and expenditure in the criminal code in title I of the bill is to exempt certain limited activities from the contribution and spending limits imposed by that title. The principal effect of the amendment to the Act in title II is to exempt similar activities described in the amendments from the reporting requirements of the Act.

Section 102(c) of the bill amends section 591(f) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of expenditure, by adding a new subparagraph (4) to exempt similar activities from the spending limits. Clauses (A), (B), and (C) of subparagraph (4) underscore and reaffirm the principles stated in the amendment to section 610 of title 18, United States Code, proposed by Representative Orval Hansen, and passed by the Congress as part of the Act. Those clauses make it plain that it is not the intent of the Congress in the present legislation to limit or burden in any way the first amendment freedoms of the press and of association. Thus, clause (A) assures the unfettered right of the newspapers, TV networks, and other media to cover and comment on political campaigns. Clause (B) assures the unfettered right of organizations to engage in non-partisan registration drives. (See 117 Con. Rec. 43380–43381 (Mr. Hansen) for the meaning of "non-partisan" in this context.) And clause (C) assures the unfettered right of certain membership organizations or corporations to communicate with their members or stockholders with regard to political matters.

Sections 102(b) and 102(c) would also exempt from the definition of contribution and expenditure the cost of printed slate cards and sample ballots by State and local political party organizations. The exemption would include the cost of printing such slate cards or sample ballots in newspapers, but would not include costs with respect to expenditures on broadcasting stations, magazines, or other similar types of general public political advertising.

Sections 206(c) and 206(d) of the committee bill include identical amendments to the Act, relating to the definition of contribution and expenditure.

Section 102(c), which amends the definition of expenditure in the criminal code, exempts from the expenditure limits fundraising costs of candidates and their principal campaign committees up to 25% of the candidates' spending limit. It also exempts the fundraising costs of multi-candidate committees, except for fundraising expenditures of these committees for broadcasting stations, newspapers, magazines, outdoor advertising facilities, and other similar types of general public political advertising. Since these amendments affect only the definitions of expenditure in the Criminal Code, existing law would continue to govern the reporting requirements of these fundraising costs.

The remaining clauses relating to the definition of contribution and expenditure in both the Criminal Code and the Act have the effect of exempting certain limited in-kind contributions and expenditures from the spending and contribution limits and from the disclosure requirements.

Title I—Criminal Code Amendments

Contribution limits

The bill places strict limits on contributions to candidates for Federal office. Contributions by individuals to candidates are limited in the aggregate to $1,000 per election. Further, an individual is limited to an aggregate of $25,000 in contributions within any calendar year.

Contributions by State political party organizations and so-called "multi-candidate committees" to candidates are limited in the aggregate to $5,000 per election. These committees include organizations that have been registered under the Federal Elections Campaign Act of 1971 for at least six months, have received contributions from 50 or more persons, and have made contributions to five or more candidates for Federal office.

The bill prohibits contributions in the name of another and provides that, for the purposes of limitations and reporting requirements, any contribution by a person which is earmarked or directed through an intermediary or conduit to a candidate shall be treated as a contribution from such person to that candidate.

The limits apply separately to each campaign for nominations for election, or election to Federal office, except that the various Presidential primary elections shall be considered as one election for purpose of the contribution limits.

Finally, the bill prohibits contributions by foreign nationals and prohibits any contributions in cash in excess of $100.

A question was raised in the committee regarding the possibility of circumventing the limit on contributions by political committees where a national committee of a political organization may contribute the maximum allowable amount to a candidate and a State or local sub-unit or subsidiary of that committee may also contribute to the same candidate. It is the intent of the committee to allow the maximum contribution from each level of the organization if the decision or judgment to make such contributions is independently exercised within the separate levels of the organization. However, if the subsidiary or sub-unit organizations are under the control or direction of the parent organization with respect to their contributions to specific candidates, then the organizations acting in concert would constitute one political committee for the purpose of the contribution limits included in this bill.

Expenditure limits

In response to the problem of spiraling campaign costs and increasing campaign expenditures, the committee has adopted specific limits on the amount a candidate and the committees that support his candidacy may spend for primary, or primary run-off elections, and for special and general elections.

With respect to a Presidential election, candidates would be able to spend $20,000,000 for election to the office of President; candidates for nomination to the office of President would be able to spend $10,000,000.

In the case of campaigns for nomination for election, or for election, to the office of Senator, the limitation is 5 cents times the population of the State, or $75,000, whichever is greater. The expenditure limitation on campaigns for the offices of Representative, Delegate from the District of Columbia, or Resident Commissioner is $75,000, and, in the case of a candidate for the office of Delegate from Guam or the Virgin Islands, the limitation is $15,000.

The limitations on congressional campaigns apply separately to each campaign for nomination for election, or election, to those offices. And for the purpose of these limitations, any expenditures made by a principal campaign committee designated by the candidate under the provisions of the bill shall be deemed to have been made by the candidate.

To assure that expenditure limits will be updated annually to account for increased costs as a result of inflation, the bill provides for yearly adjustment of the limitations based upon comparison of the price index for the preceding calendar year and the price index for the base period of 1973.

Independent expenditures

As noted, the bill places strict limitations on contributions to, and expenditures by, candidates for Federal office and their campaign organizations. The committee recognizes that, if these limitations are to be meaningful, campaign-related spending by individuals and groups independent of a candidate must be limited as well.

Persons acting independently have in the past publicized support of, or opposition to, particular candidates by means of general media exposure, the publication of "honor rolls" relative to legislative issues, and the like. If these costs are incurred without the request or consent of a candidate or his agent, they would not be properly chargeable to that candidate's spending limits. A contrary result would accord a candidate's supporters undue influence over the direction of the campaign or, conversely, invite Constitutional "prior restraint" problems in requiring the candidate's advance approval of independent spending in his behalf. While independent expenditures may occur quite apart from the official campaign effort, they can and often do have a substantial impact on the outcome. Absent a limitation on this activity, well-heeled groups and individuals could spend substantial sums and thus severely compromise the limitations on spending by the supported candidate himself.

The committee is mindful that an absolute proscription of independent campaign-related spending may well offend the guarantees of the First Amendment and would be poor public policy in inhibiting the free expression of views on vital issues. However, it is believed that a reasonable limitation on such spending, in the context of an overall effort to maintain the integrity of the electoral process, is feasible and Constitutionally permissible.

Accordingly, the bill would permit independent expenditures advocating the election or defeat of a "clearly identified candidate" of up to an aggregate of $1,000 in any calendar year. The candidate would be so identified by name, likeness, or other unambiguous reference. In the case of advertisements referring to more than one candidate, costs would be allocated for purposes of the limitation. Of course, expenditures for the communication of views not advocating the election or defeat of a candidate would be counted neither as independent expenditures nor as direct contributions to any candidate. Nor would any communication by a nonpolitical membership organization or corporation to its members or stockholders, and any news story, commentary or editorial distributed through the facilities of all media outlets other than those controlled by a political organization or candidate be counted as an "independent expenditure" or as a political expenditure, generally, since these activities are exempted from the definition of "expenditure" in the bill.

The committee is convinced that this approach makes possible the adequate presentation of candidate-related views by independent groups and at the same time safeguards the integrity of the candidate spending limits. In this way, the bill effectively reconciles the interests of Congress in promoting both free speech and the effective regulation of Federal election campaigns.

Title II—Disclosure of Federal Campaign Funds

The committee bill would revise and centralize the reporting and disclosure requirements of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to facilitate the recording and publicity of the sources and disposition of campaign funds.

Principal campaign committee

First, the bill would require that each candidate designate a principal campaign committee to make expenditures on behalf of the candidate and to file with the appropriate supervisory officer consolidated reports and statements which include the activities of all the committees which support the candidate.

Under the bill, with the exception of the "independent expenditure" limitation of $1,000 discussed above, all committee expenditures on behalf of a candidate must be made by the principal campaign committee. All reports and statements of political committees which are not principal campaign committees but which are established to accept contributions on behalf of a candidate would be required to file their statements and reports with the principal campaign committee rather than the supervisory officer.

Reporting requirements

The bill would facilitate the disclosure of campaign expenditures and contributions by amending existing law with regard to the filing of reports by political committees and candidates, by deleting the requirement of reports 5 or 15 days prior to an election and requiring instead a single report to be filed ten days before an election. However, a report mailed by registered or certified mail postmarked no later than the 12th day before an election would be deemed to meet the filing requirements.

The bill would also require a report to be filed within 30 days after an election. It would continue to require quarterly reports but waive such a quarterly report if it falls within 10 days of any pre- or post-election report. Nor is a committee or candidate required to file a quarterly report, other than a report for the last quarter in a non-election year, if contributions or expenditures by the committee or candidate do not exceed $1,000 during that quarter.

Enforcement entity

The committee bill provides for independent and efficient supervision of election laws by establishing a seven-member Board of Supervisory Officers (hereinafter referred to as the "Board"), composed of the Secretary of the Senate, the Clerk of the House, the Comptroller General, and four public members—two appointed by the President of the Senate from recommendations of the majority and minority leaders of the Senate and two appointed by the Speaker of the House from recommendations of the majority and minority leaders of the House. The Speaker and the President of the Senate shall appoint individuals of different political parties. None of the public appointees may be employees in the executive, legislative, or judicial branch of the government (including elected and appointed officials).

The Board shall be responsible for supervising the actions of the individual supervisory officers, reviewing the development of rules and regulations, and preparing forms to assure they are uniform to the extent practicable.

The individual supervisory officers are required to refer all apparent violations to the Board. The Board is authorized to investigate complaints of possible violations, hold hearings, and subpoena witnesses and evidence. Persons accused of possible violations shall be given a full opportunity to participate in the investigation and may request a hearing. The Board is authorized to encourage voluntary compliance through informal means and refer appropriate apparent violations to the Justice Department for civil or criminal action.

To assure expeditious enforcement by the Justice Department, the bill requires the Attorney General to report regularly to the Board on the status of referrals—60 days after the referral and at the close of every 30 day period thereafter.

Advisory opinions

The bill provides for the rendering of written advisory opinions by the Board of Supervisory Officers relative to the conformity of contemplated actions to title I or III of the bill, or to section 608, 610, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code. Such opinions would be rendered within a reasonable time subsequent to the written request of any Federal officeholder, any candidate for Federal office, or any political committee. Any person to whom such opinion is rendered would be presumed to be in compliance with the appropriate statute if such person acted in good faith in reliance upon such opinion.

All such requests and advisory opinions shall be made public. Before rendering advisory opinions, the Board would be required to provide interested parties with ample opportunity to transmit comments on such requests.

The presumption of compliance for those who rely in good faith on advisory opinions stops short of an outright immunization against civil or criminal penalties. Instead, the bill provides for a presumption of compliance; this presumption would be rebuttable and, therefore, legal action would not be foreclosed.

The overriding purpose of Federal election campaign legislation is to effect full and prompt compliance with its strictures and it is wholly appropriate that all persons affected by that legislation be given every opportunity to so comply. While it may be presumed that all candidates and political committees desire to comply fully with the law, the necessarily complex nature of the legislation may make compliance most difficult even with the most conscientious effort in this regard. Accordingly, it is desirable that those having doubts as to their legal obligations be afforded the means of having these doubts resolved. The public nature of this process will insure that advisory opinions are rendered in an appropriate, even-handed manner.

Congressional review of regulations

To assure that regulations issued by the supervisory officers conform to the campaign finance laws, the bill requires that all regulations be submitted to congressional committees for review.

The committee acknowledges that no legislation purporting to regulate election campaign activities can be drawn to fully anticipate every contingency. Each campaign is in some sense unique and differences may be accentuated by regional and local factors as well. Accordingly, the supervisory officers must be entrusted with the task of promulgating regulations implementing the legislation. It is essential of course that such implementation be fully consistent with the intent of the Congress. In view of allegations that the supervisory officers, in implementing the 1971 Federal Election Campaign Act, have departed in some instances from Congressional intent, it was deemed desirable to provide in the bill a mechanism for improved Congressional monitoring of regulations proposed by the supervisory officers in this area.

The bill provides that, before issuing a regulation, the supervisory officer would transmit the text thereof, together with a detailed explanation, to either the Committee on House Administration (where the supervisory officer is the Clerk of the House of Representatives) or to the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration (where the supervisory officer is the Secretary of the Senate). Where the supervisory officer is the Comptroller General, such regulation would be submitted to both Committees.

Upon submission, the committee involved would have thirty legislative days to disapprove such proposed regulation; "legislative days" would include only those days in which the appropriate House is in session. In the event the Committee (or, in the case of the Comptroller General, either Committee) disapproves a proposed regulation, the supervisory officer would be prohibited from prescribing the regulation in question.

The Committee is of the view that, given the expected large number of non-controversial regulations to be proposed by the supervisory officers, it is unnecessary for the Committees to take affirmative action on each; it is sufficient that the Committees disapprove proposed regulations where the circumstances so warrant. At the same time, the Committee believes that a timely resolution of these matters precludes consideration by the whole House and Senate and that such consideration is unnecessary in view of the significant expertise of both Committees in the area of campaign legislation.

The establishment of the Board of Supervisory Officers is expected to improve the already substantial cooperation and consultation among these individuals. It is therefore felt that differences between House, Senate, and Presidential campaign-related regulations will be at a minimum level.

Title III—General Provisions

PREEMPTION OF STATE LAWS

It is the intent of the Committee to preempt all state and local laws.

The committee bill contains two separate provisions relating to the preemption of State laws. One is contained in title III of the bill and amends section 403 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide that the provisions of that Act, as amended by this legislaiton, supersede and preempt any provision of State law with respect to election to Federal office. It is the intent of the committee to make certain that the Federal law is construed to occupy the field with respect to elections to Federal office and that the Federal law will be the sole authority under which such elections will be regulated. Under the 1971 Act, provision was made for filing Federal reports with State officials and the supervisory officers were required to cooperate with, and to encourage, State officials to accept Federal reports in satisfaction of State reporting requirements. The provision requiring filing of Federal reports with State officials is retained, but the provision relating to encouraging State officials to accept Federal reports to satisfy State reporting requirements is deleted. Under this legislation, Federal reporting requirements will be the only reporting requirements and copies of the Federal reports must be filed with appropriate State officials. The committee also feels that there can be no question with respect to preemption of local laws. Since the committee has provided that the Federal law supersede and preempt any law enacted by a State, the Federal law will also supersede and preempt any law enacted by a political subdivision of a State.

The other preemption provision was added to title I of the bill, relating to amendments to the criminal code. This was done to make it clear that the Federal law is intended to be the sole source of criminal sanctions for offenses involving political activities in connection with Federal elections. The committee wants to avoid even the possibility of an argument that the preemption provision contained in the 1971 Act referring to "provisions of this Act" does not include the provisions of title 18 amended by the 1971 Act and by this legislation. This clarification is most important because all of the actual limitations on contributions and expenditures, together with the sanctions for violation of such limitations, are included in the criminal code provisions of title 18 amended by this legislation.

Title IV—Amendments to Other Laws; Effective Dates

Political activities by State and local officers and employees

Section 401 is intended to repeal those restrictions on the voluntary partisan political activities of state and local employees contained in Chapter 15, Title 5, U.S.C.

The amendments made by section 401 to chapter 15 of title 5, United States Code, relating to political activity by State and local employees, would remove from Federal law the prohibition against voluntary partisan political activity by State and local employees employed in programs funded in whole or in part from Federal loans or grants. Activities such as driving voters to the polls or attending a political convention as a delegate would no longer be prohibited by Federal law. The regulation of political activities of State and local employees would be left largely to the States. Federal law would, however, continue to prohibit a State or local officer or employee from using his official authority or influence to interfere with or affect the result of an election and prohibit him from coercing, commanding, or advising another State or local officer or employee to pay, lend, or contribute anything of value to any person for political purposes. Nothing in existing law or in the amendment made by this section prevents a State or local officer or employee from making a voluntary political contribution.

PUBLIC FINANCING OF PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS

Public financing for general elections to the office of President, beginning with the elections in 1976, was authorized in a law passed by the 92d Congress (P.L. 92–178). This law, as amended in the 93d Congress (P.L. 93–53), allows individuals to designate on their annual tax return that a dollar be paid to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund, or the so-called Dollar Check-off Fund. The total amount available to be transferred to eligible candidates is limited to the amount designated by individual taxpayers and may be transferred only after being appropriated by Congress.

The current law limits the amount of public funds for candidates of major parties to 15¢ times the voting age population and proportionately smaller amounts for minor party candidates.

The committee bill strengthens the Dollar Check-off Law and amend it to authorize the use of the Fund for financing presidential nominating conventions and campaigns for the nomination to the office of President. As with the existing law, public financing would be strictly voluntary and would come from the Dollar Check-off Fund only.

General elections

To conform the amount of public funds a presidential candidate may receive to the spending limit imposed in title I of the bill, the bill amends the Dollar Check-off Law so that candidates may receive up to $20 million in check-off funds for general elections to the office of President. The committee bill strengthens the existing Dollar Check-off Law by making payments from the Presidential Election Campaign Fund automatic to assure that public funds may be used without requiring separate congressional action each year.

Nominating conventions

Since 1968, Section 276(c) of the Internal Revenue Code has permitted tax deductions for amounts paid for advertising in the convention program of a political party distributed in connection with its presidential nominating convention. The majority of the funds raised by the major political parties to defray the costs of their 1968 and 1972 presidential nominating conventions was derived from these sources.

Section 406 of the committee bill repeals Section 276(c) of the Internal Revenue Code and authorizes instead up to $2 million from the Dollar Check-off Fund for each major political party to defray convention expenses. Minor parties are entitled to a proportionately smaller amount, based on the ratio of the average of their popular votes in the previous presidential election to the average popular vote of the major parties at such election.

Funds can be used to defray the expenses of the presidential nominating convention (including the payment of deposits) or to repay loans the proceeds of which were used to defray such expenses. Public funds may not be used, however, to defray expenses of any candidate or delegate participating in the convention.

Payments to political parties shall be subject to examination and audits by the Comptroller General, and funds not expended by any party will be transferred to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund.

Political parties would not be required to use public funds. However, neither major nor minor political parties will, under ordinary circumstances, be allowed to expend more than a total of $2 million for all convention expenses from public and private sources. In case of emergencies arising from extraordinary and unforeseen circumstances, the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Advisory Board may permit a party to expend its own funds in excess of the $2 million limit.

Presidential primary elections

The committee bill provides for limited public financing of primary elections by authorizing matching federal payments for small contributions from the Dollar Check-off Fund.

Matching payments would come from the surplus of the Dollar Check-off Fund only after adequate funds have been set aside to meet the estimated obligations of public financing of presidential nominating conventions and presidential general elections.

Primary candidates would receive matching payments for their first $250 or less received from each individual contributor. Under the bill, matchable contributions would not include loans. The maximum amount of such funds a candidate could receive is one-half the overall expenditure limit for presidential primary candidates. Thus, under the limits provided in the committee bill, no candidate could receive more than $5 million.

Candidates could begin collecting contributions eligible for matching payments as early as January of the year preceding the year in which the primaries are held; however, Federal matching payments could not be made until January of the election year.

Matching payments may be used for legitimate campaign expenses during the pre-nomination period, and stiff criminal penalties are provided for unlawful use of payments, false statements to the Comptroller General, and kickbacks and illegal payments.

To eliminate frivolous candidates, the committee bill requires candidates to accumulate at least $5,000 in matchable contributions in each of 20 states.

The committee believed this modest threshold requirement is the most reasonable and best practicable test to assure that public funds are provided to serious candidates. By matching only small contributions the threshold provides a means of testing public support of a candidate and encourages a candidate to involve large numbers of voters in his fundraising efforts.

The committee does not believe this requirement bars legitimate aspirants for public office for it does not affect the right of an individual to become a candidate, qualify for a position on the ballot, or campaign for office.

The Supreme Court has recognized that "a State has an interest, if not a duty to protect the integrity of its political processes from frivolous or fraudulent candidacies." Bullock v. Carter 405 U.S. 134, 145 (1972). See also Jenness v. Fortson 403 U.S. 431, 442 (1971). It has also recently recognized the legitimacy of ensuring that public funds are spent wisely in the political process. In American Party of Texas v. White, 42 U.S.L.W. 4453 (U.S. March 26, 1974) the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of a law that provided public financing from state revenue for primaries by major political parties but not for conventions or petition drives of minor parties. In ruling on the challenge, the Court concluded:

> [W]e cannot agree that the State, simply because it defrays the expenses of party primary elections, must also finance the efforts of every nascent political group seeking to organize itself and unsuccessfully attempting to win a place on the general election ballot. Id., at 4461.

Requiring candidates to raise a reasonable threshold amount in small contributions is neutral vis-a-vis particular candidates and therefore a legitimate requirement to be imposed on those seeking public funds to finance their campaigns.

Public financing limited to presidential elections

The committee bill limits public financing to all phases of elections to the office of President. The committee believed the greatest potential for abuses by special interest groups and big money is in connection with campaigns to the office of President. The unhappy experiences of the 1972 presidential campaign served to underscore the dangers of spiraling campaign expenditures and the influence of excessive private political contributions.

The committee bill limits expenditures and private contributions and limits the potential abuse of big money in presidential elections by allowing for full public financing of presidential general elections and presidential nominating conventions and for public financing on a matching basis for presidential primaries.

Although many of the campaign finance abuses have occurred in connection with presidential general elections, the influence or potential influence of big money is as great in all phases of presidential elections.

For example, major political parties have come to rely heavily on large corporations and labor unions to pay for advertisements in convention programs to meet the expenses of nominating conventions. Primary elections are a critical stage in the candidate selection process, and the potential for influence and abuse of big money in the primary elections is as great as in the general elections. Further, with public financing of presidential elections big money in all likelihood would be shifted to presidential primary candidates.

The committee was aware that there may be some problems in administering the public finance laws, but because presidential elections are so visible, public financing should be relatively easy to administer.

During consideration of the bill, the committee considered and rejected a proposal to provide full public financing of congressional elections. In addition to the considerations noted above, some concern was expressed that the experience in foreign countries which have adopted public financing of political campaigns suggests that special interest groups representing money have been supplanted by those based on regional, religious, or occupational factors. The proliferation of candidates supported by these groups in such countries has meant that fewer votes are needed to achieve plurality and thus the largest minority faction in a particular constituency becomes firmly entrenched in power. Furthermore, the proliferation of political parties has promoted instability in the affairs of national governments, since a coalition of parties sufficient to support one national program may dissolve when confronted by another program where the interests of the parties are differently aligned. Since the object of the committee is to eliminate the influence of special interests, rather than to substitute one special interest for another, the concept of generalized government financing of political campaigns has not been accepted.

CONCLUSION

It is the opinion of the committee that the bill, H.R. 16090 corrects the deficiencies in the Federal election laws.

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY OF THE BILL

SHORT TITLE

The first section provides that this legislation may be cited as the "Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974".

TITLE I—CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENTS

LIMITATIONS ON CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

Section 101(a) amends section 608 of title 18, United States Code, relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures, by adding a new subsection (b) through subsection (e).

Contribution limitations

The new subsection (b)(1) provides that, except as otherwise provided by the new subsection (b), no person may make contributions exceeding $1,000 to any candidate for Federal office in any election.

The new subsection (b)(2) provides that no political committee (other than the principal campaign committee of a candidate) may make contributions exceeding $5,000 to any candidate for Federal office in any election.

Subsection (b)(2) also defines the term "political committee" to mean, for purposes of subsection (b)(2), an organization registered as a political committee under section 303 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (hereinafter in this summary referred to as the "Act") for at least 6 months which has received contributions from more than 50 persons and has made contributions to at least 5 candidates for Federal office. Subsection (b)(2) also provides that State political party organizations shall not be required to make contributions to at least 5 candidates for Federal office in order to be considered political committees for purposes of subsection (b)(2).

The new subsection (b)(3) provides that no individual may make contributions exceeding $25,000 in any calendar year.

The new subsection (b)(4) provides that, for purposes of subsection (b), the following rules shall apply: (1) if a contribution is made to a political committee authorized in writing by a candidate to accept contributions on his behalf, then such contribution shall be considered to be a contribution to such candidate; and (2) any contribution to the candidate of a political party for the office of Vice President shall be considered to be a contribution to the candidate of such party for the office of President.

The new subsection (b)(5) provides that limitations imposed by subsection (b)(1) and subsection (b)(2) shall apply separately to each election.

The new subsection (b)(6) provides that all contributions from a person to a particular candidate shall be treated as contributions from such person to such candidate, even if such contributions are made indirectly, are earmarked, or are directed through any intermediary or conduit. It should be noted that the provisions of subsection (b)(6) are not intended to apply to contributions from separate segregated funds maintained by corporations or labor organizations, because donors to such funds must relinquish control of their donation to the corporation or labor organization and such donors may not earmark or direct such donations to any specific candidate or political committee.

Subsection (b)(6) requires any person acting as an intermediary or conduit to report to the appropriate supervisory officer the source of the contribution and the intended recipient of the contribution. Such person also shall report such contribution to the intended recipient.

It is the understanding of the committee that the following rule will apply with respect to the application of the contribution limitations established by subsection (b): if a person exercises any direct or indirect control over the making of a contribution, then such contribution shall count toward the limitation imposed with respect to such person under subsection (b), but it will not count toward such a person's contribution limitation when it is demonstrated that such person exercised no direct or indirect control over the making of the contribution involved.

Candidates' expenditure limitations

The new subsection (c) establishes the following expenditure limitations: (1) a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President may not make expenditures exceeding $10,000,000; (2) a candidate for election to the office of President may not make expenditures exceeding $20,000,000; (3) a candidate for the office of Senator may not make expenditures which exceed the greater of (A) 5 cents multiplied by the population of the State involved; or (B) $75,000; (4) a candidate for the office of Representative, Delegate from the District of Columbia, or Resident Commissioner, may not make expenditures exceeding $75,000; and (5) a candidate for the office of Delegate from Guam or the Virgin Islands may not make expenditures exceeding $15,000.

Subsection (c) also provides that, for purposes of such subsection, the following rules shall appply: (1) any expenditure made by the candidate of a political party for the office of Vice President shall be considered to be an expenditure made by the candidate of such party for the office of President; (2) any expenditure made on behalf of a candidate by his principal campaign committee shall be deemed to have been made by such candidate; and (3) the population of a geographical area shall be the population according to the most recent decennial census.

Subsection (c) also provides that the expenditure limitations applied by subsection (c) to candidates for the office of Senator, Representative, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner, shall apply separately to each election. It also provides that, for purposes of the $10 million expenditure limit on candidates for nomination to the office of President, all Presidential primary elections are considered one election.

Cost-of-living adjustments

The new subsection (d) provides that, at the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1975), the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Comptroller General the percentage difference between the price index for the most recent calendar year and the price index for the base period. Subsection (d) provides that the expenditure limitations established by subsection (c) shall be increased by such percentage difference.

Subsection (d) also contains definitions of terms used in such subsection. The term "price index" is defined to mean the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index. The term "base period" is defined to mean the calendar year 1973.

Other expenditure limitations

The new subsection (e) provides that no person may make expenditures (other than expenditures made by or on behalf of a candidate under the new subsection (c)) relative to a clearly identified candidate exceeding $1,000 in any calendar year.

Subsection (e) also defines the term "clearly identified" to mean (1) the appearance of the name of the candidate; (2) the appearance of a photograph or drawing of the candidate; or (3) an unambiguous reference which establishes the identity of the candidate.

Under this provision any person can make such expenditures up to $1,000 in any calendar year. Such expenditures would not count against a candidate's expenditure limitation nor against the contribution limitation applicable to the person making the expenditure, but it would be a reportable expenditure under section 305 of the disclosure provisions if the aggregate of such expenditures exceeded $100 in the calendar year.

Expenditures from personal funds

Section 101(b) amends section 608(a)(1) of title 18, United States Code, relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures, to provide that a candidate may not make expenditures from his personal funds or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with any election for Federal office, exceeding $25,000. Section 608(a)(2) of title 18 defines "immediate family" as the candidate's spouse, and any child, parent, grandparent, brother, or sister of the candidate and the spouses of any of them.

Discharge of certain campaign debts

Section 101(c) provides that, notwithstanding section 608(a)(1) of title 18, United States Code, relating to limitations on expenditures from personal funds, an individual may discharge (from his personal funds or the personal funds of his immediate family) any debt outstanding on the date of the enactment of this legislation which was incurred in connection with any campaign for election to Federal office ending before the close of December 31, 1972.

Section 101(c) also contains definitions of terms used in such subsection. The terms "election", "Federal office", and "political committee" are given the meanings given them by section 591 of title 18, United States Code. The term "immediate family" has the same meaning referred to above under the explanation of section 101(b), relating to expenditures from the personal funds of a candidate.

Contributions by foreign nationals

Section 101(d) amends section 613 of title 18, United States Code, relating to contributions by agents of foreign principals, to make the restrictions established by such section apply directly to foreign nationals.

Section 101(d) also adds a new paragraph at the end of section 613 which defines the term "foreign national" to mean (1) a foreign principal (as such term is defined by section 1(b) of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938), except that the term "foreign national" does not include any individual who is a citizen of the United States; or (2) an individual who is not a citizen of the United States and who is not lawfully admitted into the United States for permanent residence.

Amount of criminal fines

Section 101(e)(1) amends section 608 of title 18, United States Code, relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures, to increase the criminal fine which may be imposed under such section from $1,000 to $25,000.

Section 101(e)(2) amends section 610 of title 18, United States Code, relating to contributions or expenditures by national banks, corporations, or labor organizations, to (1) increase the criminal fine which may be imposed under such section against corporations or labor organizations from $5,000 to $25,000; and (2) increase the criminal fine which may be imposed under such section against officers or directors committing willful violations from $10,000 to $50,000. It should be noted that it is the desire of the committee that the increased penalties of section 610, together with the existing prison penalties of such section, shall be enforced rigorously against officers and directors of corporations and labor organizations to the extent such officers and directors are responsible for violations of such section.

Section 101(e)(3) amends section 611 of title 18, United States Code, relating to contributions by firms or individuals contracting with the United States, to increase the criminal fine which may be imposed under such section from $5,000 to $25,000.

Section 101(e)(4) amends section 613 of title 18, United States Code (as amended by section 101(d)), relating to contributions by foreign nationals, to increase the criminal fine which may be imposed under such section from $5,000 to $25,000.

Contribution restrictions; honorariums

Section 101(f) amends chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, relating to elections and political activities, by adding at the end thereof a new section 614 through section 616.

The new section 614, relating to prohibition of contributions in name of another, is the same as section 310 of the Act (which is deleted by section 101(f)(4)), except that the criminal fine is increased from $1,000 to $25,000. Section 614 provides that no person may make a contribution in the name of another person, and no person may knowingly accept a contribution made by one person in the name of another person.

The new section 615, relating to limitation on contributions of currency, provides that no person may make contributions of currency exceeding $100 to any candidate for Federal office in any election. A violation of section 615 is punishable by a fine of $25,000 or one year of imprisonment, or both.

The new section 616, relating to acceptance of excessive honorariums, provides that any elected or appointed officer or employee of any branch of the Federal Government who accepts any single honorarium exceeding $1,000, or who accepts honorariums exceeding $10,000 in a calendar year, shall be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000.

Applicability of definitions

Section 101(f) also amends section 591 of title 18, United States Code, relating to definitions, to clarify that the manner in which terms are defined in such section applies to the use of such terms in such section, as well as to the use of such terms in sections 597, 599, 600, 602, 608, 610, 611, 614, and 615 of such title.

DEFINITIONS OF POLITICAL COMMITTEE, CONTRIBUTION, EXPENDITURE, AND PRINCIPAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE

Political committee

Section 102(a) amends section 591(d) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of political committee, to provide that such term shall be extended to include any individual, committee, association, or organization which commits act for the purpose of influencing the outcome of any election for Federal office, except that such acts shall not include certain communications which are excluded from the definition of expenditure under section 591(f), discussed below. Such communications include news stories and editorials distributed through the public media facilities (unless such facilities are owned or controlled by a political party or committee, or by a candidate), communications by a membership organization to its members (unless it is organized primarily for the purpose of influencing an election to Federal office), and any other communication which is not made for the purpose of influencing an election to Federal office.

Contribution

Section 102(b) amends section 591(e) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of contribution, to provide that the following activities shall not be considered to be contributions: (1) the use of property by an individual who owns or leases such property with respect to the rendering of voluntary services by such individual to a candidate, including the cost of invitations and food and beverages provided on the individual's premises for candidate-related activities, to the extent that the cumulative value of such use does not exceed $500; (2) the sale of food or beverage by a vendor to a candidate at a reduced charge if such charge is at least equal to the cost of such food or beverage to the vendor; (3) the travel expenses of an individual rendering voluntary services to a candidate, to the extent that the cumulative total of such expenses does not exceed $500; and (4) the payment by a State or local committee of a political party of the costs of preparation or distribution of any printed slate card or other printed listing of three or more candidates for public office who are candidates in the State in which such committee is located, but this exclusion does not apply to payment of costs for the display of any such printed listing through public media facilities (other than newspapers) or on outdoor advertising facilities such as billboards.

Expenditure

Section 102(c) amends section 591(f) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of expenditure, to provide that the following activities shall not be considered to be expenditures: (1) any news story, commentary, or editorial of any broadcasting station, newspaper, or other periodical publication, unless such facilities are owned or controlled by a political party, political committee, or candidate; (2) nonpartisan get-out-the-vote activity; (3) communications by a membership organization or corporation to its members or stockholders, if such membership organization or corporation is not organized primarily to influence the outcome of elections for Federal office; (4) the use of property by an individual who owns or leases such property with respect to the rendering of voluntary services by such individual to a candidate, including the cost of invitations and food and beverages provided on the individual's premises for candidate-related activities, to the extent that the cumulative value of such use does not exceed $500; (5) the travel expenses of an individual rendering voluntary services to a candidate, to the extent that the cumulative total of such expenses does not exceed $500; (6) communications which are not made to influence the outcome of elections for Federal office; (7) the payment by a State or local committee of a political party of the costs of preparation or distribution of any printed slate card or other printed listing of three or more candidates for public office who are candidates in the State in which such committee is located, but this exclusion does not apply to payment of costs for the display of any such printed listing through public media facilities (other than newspapers) or on outdoor advertising facilities such as billboards; (8) the costs of a candidate (including his principal campaign committee) with respect to his solicitation of contributions, except that this exception does not apply to costs which exceed 25 percent of the expenditure limitation applicable to such candidate under section 608(c) of title 18; and (9) any costs incurred by a multicandidate committee which has been registered under ths Act as a political committee for at least 6 months, has received contributions from at least 50 persons, and (except for State political party organizations) has made contributions to at least 5 candidates, in connection with soliciting contributions to itself or to a general political fund controlled by it, but this exclusion does not exempt costs of soliciting contributions through any public media facilities.

Principal campaign committee

Section 102(d) amends section 591 of title 18, United States Code, relating to definitions, by adding a new paragraph (i) which defines the term "principal campaign committee". The term is defined to mean the principal campaign committee designated by a candidate under section 302(f)(1) of the Act.

POLITICAL FUNDS OF CORPORATIONS OR LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

Section 103 amends section 611 of title 18, United States Code, relating to contributions by firms or individuals contracting with the United States, to provide that such section shall not prohibit the establishment or maintenance of a separate segregated campaign fund by a corporation or a labor organization unless such establishment or maintenance is prohibited under section 610 of title 18, relating to contributions or expenditures by national banks, corporations, or labor organizations.

A question was raised in the committee during the consideration of the amendment to section 611 as to whether doctors receiving payments under the so-called Medicare and Medicaid programs are prohibited from making political contributions as Government contractors. The committee is of the opinion that nothing in the existing section 611, nor in the amendment thereto included in the reported bill, would prohibit a doctor from making a political contribution solely because he was receiving payments for medical services rendered to patients under either the Medicare or Medicaid program. Under the Medicare program the basic contractual relationship is between the Federal Government and the individual receiving the medical services. The indivdual receiving the medical services may be reimbursed directly by the Federal Government for amounts paid for such services, or he may assign his claim against the Federal Government to the doctor who rendered the services, but in the latter case the doctor merely stands in the shoes of the claimant for payment. This relationship is not altered by the fact that a Federal agency may retain a right to audit the accounts of a medical practitioner to protect the Federal Government against fradulent claims for medical services.

Under so-called Medicaid programs, it is true that doctors may have specific contractual agreements to render medical services, but such agreements are with State agencies and not with the Federal Government. Medicaid programs are administered by State agencies using Federal funds. The committee does not believe that section 611 prohibiting political contributions by Government contractors has any application to doctors rendering medical services pursuant to a contract with a State agency.

A separate question was raised in the committee concerning the application of section 610 of title 18, relating to prohibitions against political contributions by corporations, banks, and labor organizations, as to whether a professional corporation composed of doctors, lawyers, architects, engineers, etc., would be prohibited from making political contributions. Whether or not a professional association is a corporation is a matter determined under State law. If, under State law, such an association is a corporation, it would be prohibited from making a political contribution as a corporation. However, nothing in existing law, nor in the amendments contained in the reported bill, prohibit an individual member of any corporation from making a political contribution as an individual. Existing law also permits corporations to establish a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes so long as contributions to such fund are voluntary and not secured by force or job discrimination or financial reprisals, or threat thereof, or by money obtained in any commercial transaction.

Effect on State Law

Section 104 provides that chapter 29 of title 18 of the United States Code, relating to criminal sanctions for political activities in connection with Federal elections, supersedes and preempts provisions of State law.

Title II—Disclosure of Federal Campaign Funds

PRINCIPAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE

Section 201 amends section 302 of the Act, relating to organization of political committees, by striking out subsection (f), relating to notices with respect to fund solicitation and annual reports by supervisory officers, and by inserting in lieu thereof a new subsection (f), relating to principal campaign committees.

Designation of principal campaign committee

Subsection (f) (1) requires that candidates for Federal office (other than candidates for the office of Vice President) designate a political committee as their principal campaign committee. Subsection (f) (1) also provides that no political committee may be designated as the principal campaign committee of more than one candidate, except that the Presidential candidate of a political party may, after he is nominated, designate the national committee of his political party as his principal campaign committee.

Expenditures on behalf of candidate

Subsection (f) (2) provides that, except in the case of expenditures which may be made under section 608(e) of title 18, United States Code, relating to expenditures of not more than $1,000 in a calendar year made with respect to a clearly identified candidate, only the principal campaign committee of a candidate may make expenditures on behalf of such candidate.

Reports to principal campaign committee

Subsection (f) (3) provides that political committees receiving contributions on behalf of a candidate shall report such contributions to the principal campaign committee of such candidate, instead of to the appropriate supervisory officer.

Principal campaign committee reports

Subsection (f) (4) provides that the principal campaign committee shall compile and file reports which such committee receives from other political committees supporting the candidate involved, together with its own reports and statements, with the appropriate supervisory officer.

Definition of political committee

Subsection (f) (5) provides that, for purposes of subsection (f) (1) and subsection (f) (3), the term "political committee" does not include political committees supporting more than one candidate, except for the national committee of a political party designated by a Presidential candidate. Therefore, a candidate may not designate a multicandidate political committee as his principal campaign committee and multicandidate political committees shall continue to report directly to the appropriate supervisory officer under applicable provisions of the Act.

REGISTRATION OF POLITICAL COMMITTEES; STATEMENTS

Section 202 amends section 303 of the Act, relating to registration of political committees and statements, by adding at the end thereof a new subsection (e) which provides that reports and notifications of political committees (other than principal campaign committees and multi-candidate political committees) required to be filed under section 303 shall be filed with the appropriate principal campaign committee.

Filing dates

Section 203(a) amends section 304(a) of the Act, relating to filing dates for reports of receipts and expenditures by political committees and candidates, to provide for the following new filing requirements:

1. In a calendar year in which an individual is a candidate for Federal office and an election is held for the particular Federal office which such individual is seeking, reports of receipts and expenditures must be filed 10 days before such election. Such reports shall be complete as of the fifteenth day before such election. Reports filed by registered or certified mail must be postmarked by the twelfth day before such election. In addition, such reports must be filed 30 days after the date of such election and be complete as of the twentieth day after the date of such election.

2. In other calendar years, reports of receipts and expenditures must be filed after the close of the calendar year and no later than January 31 of the following calendar year, and must be complete as of the close of the calendar year for which filed.

3. In addition to reports required to be filed in an election year or in any other calendar year, reports of receipts and expenditures must be filed for any calendar quarter in which the candidate or committee reporting received contributions exceeding $1,000 or made expenditures exceeding $1,000. In any case in which such a quarterly report would coincide with the annual report which is required for nonelection years, the amendment made by section 203 provides that the quarterly report be filed in accordance with provisions governing the filing of annual reports.

The amendment made by section 203(a) also provides that when the last day for filing a quarterly report occurs within 10 days of an election, then the quarterly report requirement shall be waived and superseded by the required election report. Such amendment also provides that any contribution exceeding $1,000 which is received after the fifteenth day before an election but more than 48 hours before an election, shall be reported no later than 48 hours after its receipt.

Such amendment also provides that treasurers of political committees which are not principal campaign committees or multicandidate committees shall file reports required by section 304 of the Act with the appropriate principal campaign committee, instead of with the appropriate supervisory officer.

Additional information required

Section 203(b) amends section 304(b) of the Act, relating to information required to be reported, to provide that, in addition to reporting total receipts and total expenditures, each report must show total receipts less transfers between political committees which support the same candidate and do not support any other candidate and total expenditures less such transfers. In some cases the total receipts and expenditures reported have presented a distorted picture because, under the Act, transfers of funds between committees are counted as contributions and expenditures. This amendment provides that where such transfers occur between single candidate committees supporting the same candidate the report must also show total receipts less such transfers and total expenditures less such transfers.

FORMAL REQUIREMENTS FOR REPORTS AND STATEMENTS

Section 204 amends sections 306 of the Act, relating to formal requirements respecting reports and statements, by adding at the end thereof a new subsection (e) which provides that if a report or statement required to be filed by a candidate or committee relating to contributions or expenditures or registration of a committee is delivered by registered or certified mail, then the United States postmark stamped on the envelope containing such report shall be deemed to be the date of filing.

DUTIES OF THE SUPERVISORY OFFICER

Changes in duties

Section 205(a) amends section 308(a) of the Act in order to eliminate the following duties of the supervisory officer: (1) the duty to compile and maintain a current list of statements relating to each candidate; (2) the duty to prepare and publish an annual report regarding contributions to and expenditures by candidates and political committees; (3) the duty to prepare special reports comparing totals and categories of contributions and expenditures; (4) the duty to prepare such other reports as the supervisory officer may deem appropriate, and (5) the duty to assure wide dissemination of statistics, summaries, and reports prepared under the Act.

Section 205(a) also amends section 308(a) of the Act in order to establish the following new duties of the supervisory officer: (1) the compilation and maintenance of a cumulative index of reports and statements filed with the supervisory officer; and (2) the preparation of special reports listing candidates for whom reports were filed as required by title III of the Act and candidates for whom such reports were not filed as so required.

Section 205(a) also provides that the annual report which the supervisory officer is required to file under section 308(a)(7) of the Act (which is eliminated by the amendment made by section 205(a)) shall not be filed with respect to any calendar year beginning after December 31, 1972.

Review of regulations

Section 205(b) amends section 308 of the Act by striking out subsection (b), which required the supervisory officer to develop procedures in cooperation with State election officials to permit filing of Federal reports to comply with State requirements, and subsection (c), which required the Comptroller General to serve as a national clearinghouse for information regarding the administration of elections.

Section 205(b) also amends section 308 of the Act by adding a new subsection (b), which requires the supervisory officer, before he prescribes any rule or regulation under section 308, to transmit a statement regarding such rule or regulation to the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate or the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives, as the case may be. The new subsection

(b) provides that such statement shall explain and justify the proposed rule or regulation.

Subsection (b) also provides that if the supervisory officer involved is the Clerk of the House of Representatives, he shall transmit such statement to the Committee on House Administration. If the supervisory officer involved is the Secretary of the Senate, he shall transmit such statement to the Committee on Rules and Administration. If the supervisory officer involved is the Comptroller General, he shall transmit such statement to both such committees. If either committee which receives a statement from the supervisory officer involved disapproves the proposed rule or regulation within 30 legislative days after it is received, then the supervisory officer may not prescribe such rule or regulation. In the case of the Comptroller General, if only one of the two committees disapproves the proposed rule or regulation, such disapproval by one committee is sufficient to prevent prescription of the rule or regulation.

Subsection (b) also defines the term "legislative days". With respect to statements transmitted to the Committee on Rules and Administration, such term does not include any calendar day on which the Senate is not in session. With respect to statements transmitted to the Committee on House Administration, such term does not include any calendar day on which the House of Representatives is not in session. With respect to statements transmitted to both committees, such term does not include any calendar day on which both Houses of the Congress are not in session.

It should be noted that it is the intent of the members of the committee that the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate and the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives, in reviewing proposed rules and regulations under section 308(b) of the Act and under sections 9009(c) and 9039(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, shall strive to achieve uniformity in such rules and regulations.

DEFINITIONS OF POLITICAL COMMITTEE, CONTRIBUTION, EXPENDITURE, AND SUPERVISORY OFFICER

Technical amendments

Paragraph (1) of section 206(a) makes a technical amendment to section 301 of the Act, relating to definitions, to provide that the terms defined for purposes of the disclosure provisions of title III of the Act will have the same meanings for purposes of title IV of the Act, relating to general provisions. Under this amendment it will not be necessary to add or retain a specific reference to a definition in section 301 of the Act in order to make clear that terms such as "election", "Federal office", and "State" have the same meaning when used in title IV of the Act as when used in title III.

Paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 206(a) remove from title IV of the Act references to definitions in section 301 of the Act to conform with the amendment discussed above under paragraph (1) of this section.

Political committee

Section 206(b) amends section 301(d) of the Act, relating to the definition of political committee, in the same manner that section 102

(a) amends section 591(d) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of political committee. This amendment extends the definition of political committee to include any individual, committee, association, or organization which commits any act for the purpose of influencing the outcome of any election for Federal office, except that communications which are excluded from the definition of expenditure under section 301(f)(4), discussed below, are excluded. Such communications included news stories and editorials distributed through the public media facilities (unless such facilities are owned or controlled by a political party or committee, or by a candidate), communications by a membership organization to its members (unless it is organized primarily for the purpose of influencing an election to Federal office), and any other communication which is not made for the purpose of influencing an election to Federal office.

Contribution

Section 206(b) amends section 301(e)(5) of the Act, relating to an exception to the definition of contribution, in the same manner that section 102(b) amends section 591(e)(5) of title 18, United States Code, relating to an exception to the definition of contributions. Under this amendment, the following activities are not considered contributions: (1) the use of property by an individual who owns or leases such property with respect to the rendering of voluntary services by such individual to a candidate, including the cost of invitations and food and beverages provided on the individual's premises for candidate-related activities, to the extent that the cumulative value of such use does not exceed $500; (2) the sale of food or beverages by a vendor to a candidate at a reduced charge if such charge is at least equal to the cost of such food or beverage to the vendor; (3) the travel expenses of an individual rendering voluntary services to a candidate, to the extent that the cumulative total of such expenses does not exceed $500; and (4) the payment by a State or local committee of a political party of the costs of preparation or distribution of any printed slate card or other printed listing of three or more candidates for public office who are candidates in the State in which such committee is located, but this exclusion does not apply to payment of costs for the display of any such printed listing through public media facilities (other than newspapers) or on outdoor advertising facilities such as billboards.

Expenditure

Section 206(c) amends section 301(f) of the Act, relating to the definition of expenditure, in the same manner that section 102(c) amends section 591(f) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of expenditure, except that the amendment made by this section does not establish an exception for costs incurred by a candidate or political committee with respect to the solicitation of contributions by the candidate or political committee. Under this amendment, the following activities are not considered expenditures: (1) any news story, commentary, or editorial distributed through the facilities of any broadcasting station, newspaper, or periodical publication (unless such facilities are owned or controlled by a political party or committee, or by a candidate); (2) nonpartisan get-out-the-vote activity; (3) communications by a membership organization to its members (unless it is organized primarily for the purpose of influencing an election to Federal office); (4) the use of property by an individual who owns or leases such property with respect to the rendering of voluntary services by such individual to a candidate, including the cost of invitations and food and beverages provided on the individual's premises for candidate-related activities, to the extent that the cumulative value of such use does not exceed $500; (5) the travle expenses of an individual rendering voluntary services to a candidate, to the extent that the cumulative total of such expenses does not exceed $500; (6) communications which are not made to influence the outcome of elections for Federal office; (7) the payment by a State or local committee of a political party of the costs of preparation or distribution of any printed slate card or other printed listing of 3 or more candidates for public office who are candidates in the State in which such committee is located, but this exclusion does not apply to payment of costs for the display of any such printed listing through public media facilities (other than newspapers) or on outdoor advertising facilities such as billboards; (8) the costs of a candidate (including his principal campaign committee) with respect to his solicitation of contributions, except that this exception does not apply to costs which exceed 25 percent of the expenditure limitation applicable to such candidate under section 608(c) of title 18; and (9) any costs incurred by a multicandidate committee which has been registered under the Act as a political committee for at least 6 months, has received contributions from at least 50 persons, and (except for State political party organizations) has made contributions to at least 5 candidates, in connection with soliciting contributions to itself or to a general political fund controlled by it, but this exclusion does not exempt costs of soliciting contributions through any public media facilities.

Supervisory officer

Section 206(d) amends section 301(g) of the Act, relating to the definition of supervisory officer, in order to make clear that the Comptroller General is the supervisory officer only with respect to candidates for President and Vice President, and committees supporting such candidates.

New definitions

Section 206(f) adds two new definitions to section 301 of the Act. The term "principal campaign committee" is defined to mean the principal campaign committee designated by a candidate as provided in this legislation. The term "Board" is defined to mean the Board of Supervisory Officers established by this legislation.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORY OFFICERS

Section 207(a) amends title III of the Act by adding a new section 308 through section 310, which establishes and defines the duties and powers of the Board of Supervisory Officers (hereinafter in this summary referred to as the "Board").

Establishment of Board; composition

The new section 308 establishes the Board and provides that it shall be composed of seven members as follows: (1) the Secretary of the Senate; (2) the Clerk of the House of Representatives; (3) the Comptroller General; (4) two individuals appointed by the President of the Senate upon recommendations made by the majority and minority leaders of the Senate, one from each of the two major political parties; and (5) two individuals appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives upon recommendations made by the majority and minority leaders of the House, one from each of the two major political parties.

The appointed members are required to be chosen, on the basis of their maturity, experience, integrity, impartiality, and good judgment, from among individuals who are not officers or employees in the executive, legislative, or judicial branch of the Federal Government (incluing elected and appointed officials). They serve for terms of 4 years, except that one of the members first appointed by the President of the Senate will be appointed for a term of 1 year and one will be appointed for a term of 3 years, and one of the members first appointed by the Speaker of the House will be appointed for a term of 2 years. The appointed members will receive compensation equivalent to level IV of the Federal Executive Salary Schedule (currently $38,000), pro rated on a daily basis for each day spent in the work of the Board, and, in addition, will receive actual travel expenses and per diem in lieu of subsistence when away from their usual places of residence.

Section 308 also provides that the Board shall supervise administration of, seek to obtain compliance with, and formulate overall policy concerning title I of the Act, title III of the Act, and sections 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, and 616 of title 18, United States Code. Members of the Board shall alternate in serving as Chairman. Decisions of the Board shall be made by majority vote and no member of the Board may delegate to any person his vote or any decisionmaking authority or duty. Section 308 provides that the Board shall meet once per month and at the call of any member of the Board.

Staff Director; General Counsel

Section 308 also provides that the Board shall appoint a Staff Director (whose rate of pay shall be the rate for level IV of the Executive Schedule, currently $38,000) and a General Counsel (whose rate of pay shall be the rate for level V of the Executive Schedule, currently $36,000). The Staff Director, with the approval of the Board, may appoint and fix the pay of additional personnel. At least 30 percent of such personnel shall be selected as follows: (1) one-half recommended by the minority leader of the Senate; and (2) one-half recommended by the minority leader of the House of Representatives. The Staff Director, with the approval of the Board, also may obtain temporary and intermittent services as provided by section 3109(b) of title 5, United States Code.

Powers of the Board

The new section 309 provides that the Board shall have the power: (1) to formulate general policy and review actions of supervisory officers regarding the administration of title I of the Act, title III of the Act, and sections 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, and 616 of title 18, United States Code; (2) to oversee the development of prescribed forms required under title III of the Act; (3) to review rules and regulations prescribed under title I of the Act or title III of the Act, to assure that such rules and regulations are consistent with the appropriate statutory provisions and that such rules and regulations are sufficiently uniform; (4) to render advisory opinions under the new section 313 of the Act; (5) to carry out investigations and hearings, to encourage voluntary compliance with Federal election law provisions, and to report apparent violations to the appropriate law enforcement authorities; (6) to administer oaths or affirmations; (7) to issue subpenas, signed by the Chairman of the Board, to require the testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence relevant to any investigation or hearing conducted by the Board; and (8) to pay the same witness fees and mileage expenses paid by U.S. courts.

Section 309 also provides that appropriate district courts of the United States shall have the power to issue orders enforcing subpenas issued by the Board.

Reports

The new section 310 provides that the Board shall transmit annual reports to the President and each House of the Congress, which shall describe the activities of the Board and recommend any legislative or other action the Board considers appropriate.

Investigations and hearings

Section 207(b)(1) amends section 311(a)(9) of the Act (as so redesignated by sections 205 and 207(a)(1)) to provide that the Board of Supervisory Officers will have the duty to report apparent violations to the appropriate law enforcement authorities. This duty is transferred from the supervisory officers to the Board to conform with the amendments concerning the powers and duties of the Board.

Section 207(b)(2) amends section 311(c) of the Act (as so redesignated by section 207(a)(1)), relating to duties of the supervisory officer, by striking out paragraph (1) and inserting a new paragraph (1). The new paragraph (1) provides that if any person who believes a violation of title I of the Act, title III of the Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code, has occurred may file a complaint with the Board. If a supervisory officer has reason to believe that any such violation has occurred, then he shall refer such apparent violation to the Board.

The new paragraph (1) also provides that if the Board receives a complaint or referral, or if the Board has reason to believe that any person has committed a violation, then the Board shall notify the person involved and shall either report the apparent violation to the Attorney General of the United States or make an investigation of the apparent violation. If the complainant involved is a candidate for Federal office, then any investigation conducted by the Board shall include an investigation of reports and statements filed by the complainant. The Board may not disclose any notification or investigation unless it receives written permission to do so by the person notified or under investigation. Such person also may request the Board to conduct a hearing regarding the apparent violation.

The new paragraph (1) also provides that the Board seek to correct apparent violations through informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion, and that the Board must refer apparent violations to law enforcement authorities if the Board considers it appropriate or if the Board fails to correct the violations.

The new paragraph (1) also provides that if the Board concludes, after affording notice and opportunity for a hearing, that a person has committed or is about to commit any violation of title I of the Act, title III of the Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code, then the Attorney General shall bring a civil action for relief, including a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or any other appropriate order.

Reports by Attorney General

Section 207(b)(3) amends section 311 of the Act (as so redesignated by section 207(a)(1)), relating to duties of the supervisory officer, by adding a new subsection (d) which requires the Attorney General to report to the Board regarding apparent violations referred to the Attorney General by the Board. The reports are required to be made no later than two months after referral and on a monthly basis thereafter until there is a final disposition of the apparent violation. The new subsection (d) also provides that the Board may publish reports on the status of referrals made by the Board to the Attorney General.

Judicial review; funding

Section 207(c) amends title III of the Act to add a new section 315 and section 316. The new section 315 authorizes the Board, the supervisory officers, the national committee of any political party, and any individual eligible to vote in any election for the office of President of the United States, to bring any appropriate action in the appropriate district court of the United States to implement or construe any provision of title I of the Act, title III of the Act, or sections 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code. The district court is required to certify all questions of constitutionality regarding any such provision to the United States court of appeals for the circuit involved, which is required to hear the matter sitting en banc.

The new section 315 also provides that any decision on a matter certified to a circuit court shall be reviewable by appeal directly to the Supreme Court of the United States. This appeal must be brought within 20 days after the decision of the court of appeals. Section 315 also provides that the court of appeals and the Supreme Court shall advance on the docket and expedite the disposition of any matter certified to the circuit court.

The new section 316 provides that, notwithstanding any other provision of law, such sums as may be necessary may be appropriated to each supervisory officer and to the Board to enable each such supervisory officer and the Board to carry out their duties under title I of the Act and title III of the Act.

ADVISORY OPINIONS

Section 208 amends title III of the Act by inserting a new section 313, which provides for the rendering of advisory opinions by the Board. The new section 313 provides that if an individual holding Federal office, a candidate, or a political committee, makes a written request to the Board, then the Board shall render a written advisory opinion regarding whether any activity of the individual, candidate, or political committee would constitute a violation of title I of the Act, title III of the Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 or title 18, United States Code.

The new section 313 also provides that if a person acts in good faith in compliance with an advisory opinion rendered at his request, then the person shall be presumed to be in compliance with the statutory provision regarding which the advisory opinion is rendered. Section 313 also provides that any request for an advisory opinion shall be made public by the Board. The Board is required to provide interested parties with an opportunity to furnish written comments to the Board concerning any request before the Board renders an advisory opinion regarding the request.

Title III—General Provisions

EFFECT ON STATE LAW

Section 301 amends section 403 of the Act, relating to effect on State law, to provide that the provisions of the Act, and rules prescribed under the Act, supersede and preempt any provision of State law.

PERIOD OF LIMITATIONS; ENFORCEMENT

Section 302 amends title IV of the Act, relating to general provisions, by adding a new section 406 and section 407.

Period of limitations

The new section 406 provides that no criminal action may be brought against a person for violation of title I of the Act, title III of the Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code, unless such action is brought before the expiration of 3 years after the date of such violation. Under existing law the period of limitations is 5 years.

Enforcement

The new section 407 provides that if the Board finds, after notice and opportunity for a hearing on the record, that a candidate failed to file a report required by title III of the Act, then the candidate shall be disqualified from becoming a candidate in any future Federal election for a period beginning on the date of the finding and ending one year after the expiration of the term of the Federal office for which the person was a candidate. Any such finding would be reviewable by the courts under chapter 7 of title 5, United State Code, in the same manner as in the case of any other final agency action under the administrative procedure provisions of title 5 of the United States Code.

It is the intent of the members of the committee that the enforcement mechanism of section 407 shall not be applied in any case in which the candidate involved demonstrates that he did not receive timely notice from the Board advising him of an approaching filing date regarding reports he is required to file under title III of the Act.

TITLE IV—AMENDMENTS TO OTHER LAWS; EFFECTIVE DATES

POLITICAL ACTIVITIES BY STATE AND LOCAL OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

Section 401 amends section 1502 of title 5, United States Code (relating to influencing elections, taking part in political campaigns, prohibitions, exceptions) to provide that State and local officers and employees may take an active part in political management and in political campaigns, except that they may not be candidates for elective office.

REPEAL OF COMMUNICATIONS MEDIA EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS

Section 402 amends title I of the Act, relating to campaign communications, by striking out section 104, relating to limitations of expenditures for use of communications media.

Under the amendment made by this section, a candidate is no longer restricted with respect to expenditures for use of communications media. The committee bill, however, establishes overall limitations on campaign expenditures, but leaves the candidate free to decide the purpose for which such expenditures will be made. The committee also noted that, on November 14, 1973, the United States District Court for the District of Columbia decided, in the case of American Civil Liberties Union v. Jennings (366 F. 2d 1041), that the requirement of section 104(b) of the Act that a candidate certify that certain media advertising (newspapers, magazines, and billboards) did not violate the expenditure limitations repealed by this section was an unconstitutional prior restraint upon publication in violation of First Amendment rights. As noted below, this section also repeals the provisions added to the Communications Act of 1934 by section 104(c) of the Act to eliminate a similar requirement with respect to broadcast media.

Section 402 also amends section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934 (relating to candidates for public office, facilities, rules) by striking out subsections (c), (d), and (e). The effect of the amendment is to eliminate the requirement that licensees of broadcasting stations obtain certification from a candidate that his purchase of air time on the station involved does not exceed his expenditure limitations under title I of the Act or under any provision of State law.

AUTOMATIC TRANSFERS TO CAMPAIGN FUND

Section 403 amends section 9006(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (hereinafter in this summary referred to as the "Code"), relating to establishment of campaign fund, to provide that the Secretary of the Treasury (hereinafter in this summary referred to as the "Secretary") shall automatically transfer to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund, out of amounts in the general fund of the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount equal to amounts designated under section 6096 of the Code, relating to designation of income tax payments to the presidential election campaign fund.

ENTITLEMENTS OF ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES TO PAYMENTS FROM PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN FUND

Section 404 amends section 9004(a)(1) of the Code, relating to entitlement of eligible candidates to payments, to provide that eligible candidates of each major party in a presidential election shall be entitled to equal payments in an amount not to exceed $20,000,000. The amendment eliminates the formula under which candidates of a major party would receive 15 cents multiplied by the number of residents of the United States who are 18 years of age or older.

Section 404(c) amends section 9002(1) of the Code, relating to the definition of "authorized committee", to provide that such term means, with respect to candidates for President or Vice President, the political committee designated under section 302(f)(1) of the Act by the candidate for President as his principal campaign committee. Section 404(c) also contains technical conforming amendments to various sections of the Code made necessary by the change made to the definition of "authorized committee".

CERTIFICATION FOR PAYMENT BY COMPTROLLER GENERAL

Section 405 amends section 9005(a) of the Code, relating to initial certifications for eligibility for payments, to provide that, not later than 10 days after candidates of a political party have established their eligibility to receive payments, the Comptroller General shall certify to the Secretary payment in full of the candidates' entitlement. The amendment, together with the amendment made by section 406(a), eliminates the procedure under which candidates were required to submit records of expenses and proposed expenses in order to obtain certification from the Comptroller General for payments.

FINANCING OF PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATING CONVENTIONS

Section 406(a) amends chapter 95 of subtitle H of the Code, relating to the presidential election campaign fund, by striking out section 9008, relating to information on proposed expenses, and inserting in lieu thereof a new section 9008, relating to payments for presidential nominating conventions.

Establishment of accounts

Section 9008(a) provides that the Secretary shall maintain in the Presidential Election Campaign Fund a separate account for the national committee of a major political party or a minor political party. The Secretary shall deposit in each account each national committee's entitlement under section 9008. These deposits shall be drawn from amounts designated under section 6096 of the Code, relating to designation of income tax payments to the presidential election campaign fund, and the deposits shall be made before any transfer of funds to the account of any eligible candidate under section 9006(a) of the Code, relating to establishment of campaign fund.

Entitlement to payments

Section 9008(b) provides that the national committee of a major party is entitled to payments not to exceed $2,000,000. The national committee of a minor party is entitled to payments not to exceed an amount which bears the same ratio to the entitlement of the national committee of a major party as the number of votes received by the candidate for President of the minor party in the preceding presidential election bears to the average number of votes received by candidates for President of the major parties in the election. The national committee of a minor party could use additional private funds in the operation of a presidential nominating convention, but only to the extent that the total expenditure (counting both public and private funds) does not exceed $2 million. A major party electing to receive its $2 million entitlement could not use any additional private funds. The only exception to the $2 million limitation would be an instance in which the Presidential Election Campaign Advisory Board permitted the expenditure of private funds under section 9008(d).

Use of funds

Section 9008(c) provides that no part of payments made under section 9008 may be used to defray expenses of any candidate or delegate participating in any presidential nominating convention. The payments are to be used only to (1) defray expenses incurred with respect to a presidential nominating convention (including payment of deposits) by the national committee; or (2) repay loans which were used to defray such expenses.

Limitation of expenditures

Section 9008(d) provides that the national committee of a major party or a minor party may not make expenditures which exceed the amount of the entitlement of the national committee of a major party under section 9008. Notwithstanding this limitation, the national committee of a major party or minor party may make expenditures from private sources in excess of this limitation if such expenditures are authorized by the Presidential Election Campaign Advisory Board. Before making any authorization, such Board shall determine that extraordinary and unforeseen circumstances have made necessary such expenditures to assure effective operation of the presidential nominating convention. It is the intent of the committee that such Board shall make authorizations only in cases in which events of a catastrophic nature overwhelmingly imperil the operation of a presidential nominating convention.

Other provisions

1. Payments to the national committee of major parties and minor parties under section 9008 may be made beginning on July 1 of the calendar year before the calendar year in which the presidential nominating convention is held.

2. If, after each national committee has been paid the amount to which it is entitled, there are moneys remaining in national committee accounts, then such moneys shall be transferred to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund.

3. In order to qualify for payments, any major party or minor party may file a statement with the Comptroller General designating the national committee of the party. After the Comptroller General verifies the statement he shall certify to the Secretary payment in full of the entitlement of the national committee. Payments shall be subject to examination and audit, which the Comptroller General shall conduct before the close of the calendar year in which the nominating convention is held.

4. The Comptroller General may require repayments from the national committee of a major party or minor party in the same manner as he may require repayments from candidates under section 9007(b) of the Code, relating to repayments.

Conforming amendments

Section 406(b) amends section 9009(a) of the Code, relating to reports, to require that reports of the Comptroller General include the following information: (1) expenses incurred by the national committee of a major party or minor party with respect to a presidential nominating convention; (2) amounts certified by the Comptroller General for payment to such national committees; and (3) the amount of repayments required from such national committees, and the reason for any repayments.

Section 406(b) also amends section 9012(a)(1) of the Code, relating to excess campaign expenses, to make it unlawful for the national committee of a major party or minor party to incur convention expenses in excess of the applicable expenditure limitation, unless such expenses are authorized by the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Advisory Board.

Section 406(b) also amends section 9012(c) of the Code, relating to unlawful use of payments, to make it unlawful for the national committee of a major party or minor party to use payments for any purpose which is not authorized by section 9008(c), relating to use of funds.

Section 406(b) also amends section 9012(e)(1) of the Code, relating to kickbacks and illegal payments, to make it unlawful for the national committee of a major party or minor party to give or accept any kickback or other illegal payment in connection with any convention expense incurred by such national committee.

Advertising in convention programs

Section 406(d) amends section 276 of the Code, relating to certain indirect contributions to political parties, by striking out subsection (c), relating to advertising in a convention program of a national political convention. The effect of the amendment is to eliminate any income tax deduction for any amount paid for advertising in a convention program.

TAX RETURNS BY POLITICAL COMMITTEES

Section 407 amends section 6012(a) of the Code, relating to persons required to make returns of income, to provide that any political committee which has no gross income for a taxable year shall be exempt from the requirement of making a return for such taxable year.

PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARY MATCHING PAYMENT ACCOUNT

Section 408 amends subtitle H of the Code, relating to financing of presidential election campaigns, by adding at the end thereof a new chapter 97, relating to presidential primary matching payment account.

Short title

Section 9031 of the new chapter 97 provides that the chapter may be cited as the "Presidential Primary Matching Payment Account Act".

Definitions

Section 9032 contains the following definitions:

1. The term "authorized committee" is defined to mean the political committee designated under section 302(f)(1) of the Act by the candidate of a political party for President of the United States as his principal campaign committee.

2. The term "candidate" is defined to mean an individual who seeks nomination for election to the office of President of the United States. An individual shall be considered to be seeking the nomination if he (A) takes actions necessary under State law to qualify for nomination; (B) receives contributions or incurs qualified campaign expenses; or (C) gives his consent for any other person to receive contributions or incur qualified campaign expenses on his behalf.

3. The term "Comptroller General" is defined to mean the Comptroller General of the United States.

4. The term "contribution" is defined to mean (A) a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value made for the purpose of influencing the result of a primary election, if payment is made on or after the beginning of the calendar year preceding the calendar year of the presidential election with respect to which such primary election is held; (B) a contract, promise, or agreement to make a contribution; (C) a transfer of funds between political committees; or (D) payment by any person, other than a candidate or his authorized committee, of compensation for personal services of another person which are rendered to the candidate or committee without charge. Such term does not include the value of personal services rendered on a voluntary basis by persons who receive no compensation for such services, or any payments made under section 9037, relating to payments to eligible candidates.

5. The term "matching payment account" is defined to mean the Presidential Primary Matching Payment Account established under section 9037(a), relating to establishment of account.

6. The term "matching payment period" is defined to mean the period beginning with the beginning of the calendar year in which a general election for the office of President of the United States is held and ending on the date which the party whose nomination a candidate seeks nominates its candidate for such office.

7. The term "primary election" is defined to mean an election, including a runoff election or a nominating convention or caucus held by a political party, for selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party, or for expression of a preference for nomination of persons for election to the office of President of the United States.

8. The term "political committee" is defined to mean any individual, committee, association, or organization which accepts contributions or incurs qualified campaign expenses for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election of one or more individuals to be President of the United States.

9. The term "qualified campaign expense" is defined to mean a purchase, payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money or of anything of value incurred by a candidate or his authorized committee in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, neither the incurring nor payment of which violates any Federal or State law.

10. The term "State" is defined to mean each State of the United States and the District of Columbia.

Eligibility for payments

Section 9033(a) requires that a candidate seeking to become eligible for payments shall in writing (1) furnish to the Comptroller General evidence of qualified campaign expenses; (2) agree to keep and furnish to the Comptroller General records, books, and other information; and (3) agree to an audit and examination by the Comptroller General, and agree to make repayments required under section 9038 (relating to examinations and audits, repayments).

Section 9033(b) requires that a candidate seeking to become eligible for payments shall certify to the Comptroller General that (1) the candidate and his authorized committee will not incur qualified campaign expenses in excess of the limit imposed by section 9035, relating to qualified campaign expense limitation; (2) the candidate is seeking nomination by a political party for election to the office of President of the United States; (3) the candidate and his authorized committee have received contributions which exceed $5,000 from residents of each of at least 20 States; and (4) the aggregate of contributions received from any one such resident does not exceed $250.

Entitlement to payments

Section 9034(a) provides that every eligible candidate is entitled to payments in an amount equal to contributions received by the candidate and his authorized committee on or after the beginning of the calendar year before the calendar year of the presidential election with respect to which the candidate is seeking nomination. Contributions from any one person will qualify for matching only to the extent that such contributions do not aggregate more than $250.

For purposes of section 9033(b) and section 9034(a), the term "contribution" is defined to mean a gift of money made by a written instrument which identifies the person making the contribution. Such term does not include a subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything described in section 9032(4)(B), (C), or (D).

Section 9034(b) provides that payments under section 9034(a) may not exceed 50 percent of the expenditure limitation for presidential primaries established by section 608(c)(1)(A) of title 18, United States Code, relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures.

Qualified campaign expense limitation

Section 9035 prohibits any candidate from incurring qualified campaign expenses in excess of the expenditure limitation for presidential primaries established by section 608(c)(1)(A) of title 18, United States Code, relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures.

Certification by Comptroller General

Section 9036(a) provides that, not later than 10 days after a candidate establishes his eligibility for payments, the Comptroller General shall certify to the Secretary payment in full to the candidate of amounts to which he is entitled.

Section 9036(b) provides that this certification is final and conclusive, except that it is subject to examination and audit by the Comptroller General, and to judicial review.

Payments to eligible candidates

Section 9037(a) requires the Secretary to establish in the Presidential Election Campaign Fund a separate account to be known as the Presidential Primary Matching Payment Account (hereinafter in this summary referred to as the "matching payment account"). The Secretary is required to deposit into the matching payment account, for use by eligible candidates, amounts available after the Secretary determines that amounts for payments to candidates in the general election for the office of President of the United States and amounts for payments to national committees of major parties and minor parties for presidential nominating conventions, are available for such payments.

Section 9037(b) requires the Secretary to transfer certified amounts to candidates during the matching payment period. In making transfers to candidates of the same political party, the Secretary is required to seek an equitable distribution of funds, taking into account the sequence in which certifications are received. Transfers to candidates of the same political party may not exceed 45 percent of the total amount available in the matching payment account, and transfers to any candidate may not exceed 25 percent of the total amount available in the matching payment account.

Examinations and audits; repayments

Section 9038(a) requires the Comptroller General to conduct an examination and audit of the qualified campaign expenses of every candidate and authorized committee after each matching payment period.

Section 9038(b) provides that if the Comptroller General determines that a candidate received payments in excess of his entitlement, then the candidate shall be required to repay the excess amount. Section 9038(b) also provides that if the Comptroller General determines that a candidate has used payments for any purpose other than to defray qualified campaign expenses or to repay loans or restore funds which were used to defray qualified campaign expenses, then the candidate shall be required to repay the amount involved.

Section 9038(b) also provides that payments to a candidate from the matching payment account may be retained to pay qualified campaign expenses for a period not exceeding 6 months after the close of the matching payment period. After a candidate has liquidated all obligations, that portion of any balance remaining in his account which bears the same ratio to the total balance as the total amount received from the matching payment account bears to the total of all deposits made into the candidate's account, shall be repaid by the candidate to the matching payment account.

Section 9038(c) provides that the Comptroller General may not make a notification of a required repayment with respect to any matching payment period more than 3 years after the end of the period.

Section 9038(d) requires the Secretary to deposit repayments received by him under section 9038 in the matching payment account.

Reports to Congress; regulations

Section 9039(a) requires the Comptroller General to transmit a report to each House of the Congress, after each matching payment period, which sets forth (1) qualified campaign expenses of every candidate and authorized committee; (2) the amount of payments certified by the Comptroller General; and (3) the amount of repayments required from every candidate, and the reason for any repayments.

Section 9039(b) authorizes the Comptroller General to (1) prescribe rules and regulations; (2) conduct examinations and audits, in addition to examinations and audits required by section 9038(a); (3) conduct investigations; and (4) require the keeping and submission of books, records, and information.

Section 9039(c) provides that the Comptroller General, before prescribing any rule or regulation, shall transmit the proposed rule or regulation, together with a detailed explanation and justification, to the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate and the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives. If either committee does not disapprove the proposed rule or regulation no later than 30 legislative days after receipt of the proposed rule or regulation, then the Comptroller General is authorized to prescribe such rule or regulation. Section 9039(c) prohibits the prescription of any rule or regulation which is disapproved by either committee.

Section 9039(c) also provides that the term "legislative days" does not include any calendar day on which both Houses of the Congress are not in session.

Judicial proceedings

Section 9040(a) authorizes the Comptroller General to appear in and defend against any action brought under section 9040 of the Code.

Section 9040(b) authorizes the Comptroller General to bring actions in the district courts of the United States for recovery of repayments required as a result of examinations and audits conducted by the Comptroller General.

Section 9040(c) authorizes the Comptroller General to petition the courts of the United States for injunctive relief to implement the provisions of chapter 97 of the Code.

Section 9040(d) authorizes the Comptroller General to appeal any action in which he appears.

Judicial review

Section 9041(a) provides that any agency action of the Comptroller General under chapter 97 of the Code is subject to review by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit upon petition filed no later than 30 days after the agency action involved.

Section 9041(b) provides that chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, relating to judicial review, shall apply to any agency action by the Comptroller General. The term "agency action" is given the same meaning given it by section 551(13) of title 5, United States Code.

Criminal penalties

Section 9042(a) provides that any person who incurs qualified campaign expenses in excess of the expenditure limitation for presidential primaries established by section 608(c)(1) of title 18, United States Code, relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures, shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both. Section 9042(a) also provides that any officer or member of a political committee who knowingly consents to an expenditure which violates such limitation shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

Section 9042(b) makes it unlawful for any person who receives a payment from the matching payment account, or to whom a portion of such payment is transferred, to use such payment for any purpose other than to defray qualified campaign expenses or to repay loans or restore funds which were used to defray qualified campaign expenses. Any person who violates this provision shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

Section 9042(c) makes it unlawful for any person to refuse to furnish information which may be required under chapter 97 of the Code or to furnish false information. Any person who violates this provision shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

Section 9042(d) makes it unlawful for any person to give or accept any kickback or other illegal payment in connection with any qualified campaign expense of a candidate or authorized committee. Any person who violates this provision shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both. Section 9042(d) also provides that any person who accepts any kickback or other illegal payment shall pay to the Secretary for deposit in the matching payment account an amount equal to 125 percent of the kickback or other illegal payment received.

REVIEW OF REGULATIONS

Section 409 amends section 9009 of the Code (relating to reports to Congress, regulations) to establish a procedure for the review of regulations by Congressional committees identical to the procedures established by the new section 9039(c) of the Code, relating to review of regulations (which is added by the amendment made by section 408).

EFFECTIVE DATES

General effective date

Section 410(a) provides that the provisions of this legislation (other than amendments to the Code) shall take effect 30 days after the date of the enactment of this legislation.

Internal Revenue Code amendments

Section 410(b) provides that amendments to the Internal Revenue Code made by sections 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, and 311 shall apply with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1973.

TITLE 18, UNITED STATES CODE

* * * * * * *

Chapter 29.—ELECTIONS AND POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

Sec.

§ 591. Definitions.

[When used in sections 597, 599, 600, 602, 608, 610, and 611 of this title—]

Except as otherwise specifically provided, when used in this section and in sections 597, 599, 600, 602, 608, 610, 611, 614, and 615 of this title—

(a) "election" means (1) a general, special, primary, or runoff election, (2) a convention or caucus of a political party held to nominate a candidate, (3) a primary election held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party, (4) a primary election held for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President, and (5) the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States;

(b) "candidate" means an individual who seeks nomination for election, or election, to Federal office, whether or not such individual is elected, and, for purposes of this paragraph, an individual shall be deemed to seek nomination for election, or election, to Federal office, if he has (1) taken the action necessary under the law of a State to qualify himself for nomination for election, or election, or (2) received contributions or made expenditures, or has given his consent for any other person to receive contributions or make expenditures, with a view to bringing about his nomination for election, or election, to such office;

(c) "Federal office" means the office of President or Vice President of the United States, or Senator or Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress of the United States;

(d) "political committee" means any individual, committee, association, or organization which accepts contributions or makes expenditures during a calendar year in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000, or which commits any act for the purpose of influencing, directly or indirectly, the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, except that any communication referred to in paragraph (f)(4) of this section which is not included within the definition of the term "expenditure" shall not be considered such an act;

(e) "contribution" means—

(1) a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value (except a loan of money by a national or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations and in the ordinary course of business) made for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, for the purpose of influencing the results of a primary held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President, or for the purpose of influencing the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States;

(2) a contract, promise, or agreement, express or implied, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution for such purposes;

(3) a transfer of funds between political committees;

(4) the payment, by any person other than a candidate or political committee, of compensation for the personal services of another person which are rendered to such candidate or political committee without charge for any such purpose; and

(5) notwithstanding the foregoing meanings of "contribution", the word shall not be construed to include (A) services provided without compensation by individuals volunteering a portion or all of their time on behalf of a candidate or political committee, (B) the use of real or personal property by an individual owner or lessee in rendering voluntary personal services to any candidate or political committee, including the cost of invitations and food and beverages provided on the individual's premises for candidate-related activities, (C) the sale of any food or beverage by a vendor for use in a candidate's campaign at a charge less than the normal comparable charge, if such charge for use in a candidate's campaign is at least equal to the cost of such food or beverage to the vendor, (D) any unreimbursed purchase or other payment by any individual for travel expenses with respect to the rendering of voluntary personal services by such individual to any candidate or political committee, or (E) the payment by a State or local committee of a political party of the costs of preparation, display, or mailing or other distribution incurred by such committee with respect to a printed slate card or sample ballot, or other printed listing, of 3 or more candidates for any public office for which an election is held in the State in which such committee is organized, except that this clause shall not apply in the case of costs incurred by such committee with respect to a display of any such listing made on broadcasting stations, or in magazines or other similar types of general public political advertising (other than newspapers): Provided, That the cumulative value of activities by any person on behalf of any candidate under each of clauses (B) or (D) shall not exceed $500 with respect to any election;

(f) "expenditure" means—

(1) a purchase, payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money or anything of value (except a loan of money by a national or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations and in the ordinary course of business), made for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, for the purpose of influencing the result of a primary held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President, or for the purpose of influencing the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States;

(2) a contract, promise, or agreement, express or implied, whether or not legally enforceable, to make any expenditure; [and]

(3) a transfer of funds between political committees; and

(4) notwithstanding the foregoing meanings of "expenditure," such term does not include (A) any news story, commentary, or editorial distributed through the facilities of any broadcasting station, newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication, unless such facilities are owned or controlled by any political party, political committee, or candidate, (B) nonpartisan activity designed to encourage individuals to register to vote or to vote, (C) any communication by any membership organization or corporation to its members or stockholders, if such membership organization or corporation is not organized primarily for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, (D) the use of real or personal property by an individual owner or lessee in rendering voluntary personal services to any candidate or political committee, including the cost of invitations and food and beverages provided on the individual's premises for candidate-related activities, (E) any unreimbursed purchase or other payment by any individual for travel expenses with respect to the rendering of voluntary personal services by such individual to any candidate or political committee, (F) any communication by any person which is not made for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, (G) the payment by a State or local committee of a political party of the costs of preparation, display, or mailing or other distribution incurred by such committee with respect to a printed slate card or sample ballot, or other printed listing, of 3 or more candidates for any public office for which an election is held in the State in which such committee is organized, except that this clause shall not apply in the case of costs incurred by such committee with respect to a display of any such listing made on broadcasting stations, or in magazines or other similar types of general public political advertising (other than newspapers), (H) any costs incurred by a candidate (including his principal campaign committee) in connection with the solicitation of contributions by such candidate, except that this clause shall not apply with respect to costs incurred by a candidate (including his principal campaign committee) in excess of an amount equal to 25 per centum of the expenditure limitation applicable to such candidate under section 608(c) of this title, or (I) any costs incurred by a political committee (as such term is defined by section 608(b)(2) of this title) with respect to the solicitation of contributions to such political committee or to any general political fund controlled by such political committee, except that this clause shall not apply to exempt costs incurred with respect to the solicitation of contributions to any such political committee made through broadcasting stations, newspapers, magazines, outdoor advertising facilities, and other similar types of general public political advertising: Provided, That the cumulative value of activities by any person on behalf of any candidate under each of clauses (D) or (E) shall not exceed $500 with respect to any election;

(g) "person" and "whoever" mean an individual, partnership, committee, association, corporation, or any other organization or group of persons; [and]

(h) "State" means each State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and any territory or possession of the United States[.] ; and

(i) "principal campaign committee" means the principal campaign committee designated by a candidate under section 302(f)(1) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

§ 592. Troops at polls.

Whoever, being an officer of the Army or Navy, or other person in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, orders, brings, keeps, or has under his authority or control any troops or armed men at any place where a general or special election is held, unless such force be necessary to repel armed enemies of the United States, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both; and be disqualified from holding any office of honor, profit, or trust under the United States.

This section shall not prevent any officer or member of the armed forces of the United States from exercising the right of suffrage in any election district to which he may belong, if otherwise qualified according to the laws of the State in which he offers to vote.

§ 593. Interference by armed forces.

Whoever, being an officer or member of the Armed Forces of the United States, prescribes or fixes or attempts to prescribe or fix, whether by proclamation, order or otherwise, the qualifications of voters at any election in any State; or

Whoever, being such officer or member, prevents or attempts to prevent by force, threat, intimidation, advice or otherwise any qualified voter of any State from fully exercising the right of suffrage at any general or special election; or

Whoever, being such officer or member, orders or compels or attempts to compel any election officer in any State to receive a vote from a person not legally qualified to vote; or

Whoever, being such officer or member, imposes or attempts to impose any regulations for conducting any general or special election in a State, different from those prescribed by law; or

Whoever, being such officer or member, interferes in any manner with an election officer's discharge of his duties—

Shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both; and disqualified from holding any office of honor, profit or trust under the United States.

This section shall not prevent any officer or member of the Armed Forces from exercising the right of suffrage in any district to which he may belong, if otherwise qualified according to the laws of the State of such district.

§ 594. Intimidation of voters.

Whoever intimidates, threatens, coerces, or attempts to intimidate, threaten, or coerce, any other person for the purpose of interfering with the right of such other person to vote or to vote as he may choose, or of causing such other person to vote for, or not to vote for, any candidate for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, Member of the House of Representatives, Delegate from the District of Columbia, or Resident Commissioner, at any election held solely or in part for the purpose of electing such candidate, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

§ 595. Interference by administrative employees of Federal, State, or Territorial Governments.

Whoever, being a person employed in any administrative position by the United States, or by any department or agency thereof, or by the District of Columbia or any agency or instrumentality thereof, or by any State, Territory, or Possession of the United States, or any political subdivision, municipality, or agency thereof, or agency of such political subdivision or municipality (including any corporation owned or controlled by any State, Territory, or Possession of the United States or by any such political subdivision, municipality, or agency), in connection with any activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States, or any department or agency thereof, uses his official authority for the purpose of interfering with, or affecting, the nomination or the election of any candidate for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, Member of the House of Representatives, Delegate from the District of Columbia, or Resident Commissioner, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

This section shall not prohibit or make unlawful any act by any officer or employee of any educational or research institution, establishment, agency, or system which is supported in whole or in part by any state or political subdivision thereof, or by the District of Columbia or by any Territory or Possession of the United States; or by any recognized religious, philanthropic or cultural organization.

§ 596. Polling armed forces.

Whoever, within or without the Armed Forces of the United States, polls any member of such forces, either within or without the United States, either before or after he executes any ballot under any Federal or State law, with reference to his choice of or his vote for any candidate, or states, publishes, or releases any result of any purported poll taken from or among the members of the Armed Forces of the United States or including within it the statement of choice for such candidate or of such votes cast by any member of the Armed Forces of the United States, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

The word "poll" means any request for information, verbal or written, which by its language or form of expression requires or implies the necessity of an answer, where the request is made with the intent of compiling the result of the answers obtained, either for the personal use of the person making the request, or for the purpose of reporting the same to any other person, persons, political party, unincorporated association or corporation, or for the purpose of publishing the same orally, by radio, or in written or printed form.

§ 597. Expenditures to influence voting.

Whoever makes or offers to make an expenditure to any person, either to vote or withhold his vote, or to vote for or against any candidate; and

Whoever solicits, accepts, or receives any such expenditure in consideration of his vote or the withholding of his vote—

Shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both; and if the violation was willful, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.

§ 598. Coercion by means of relief appropriations.

Whoever uses any part of any appropriation made by Congress for work relief, relief, or for increasing employment by providing loans and grants for public-works projects, or exercises or administers any authority conferred by any Appropriation Act for the purpose of interfering with, restraining, or coercing any individual in the exercise of his right to vote at any election, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

§ 599. Promise of appointment by candidate.

Whoever, being a candidate, directly or indirectly promises or pledges the appointment, or the use of his influence or support for the appointment of any person to any public or private position or employment, for the purpose of procuring support in his candidacy shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both; and if the violation was willful, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.

§ 600. Promise of employment or other benefit for political activity.

Whoever, directly or indirectly, promises any employment, position, compensation, contract, appointment, or other benefit, provided for or made possible in whole or in part by any Act of Congress, or any special consideration in obtaining any such benefit, to any person as consideration, favor, or reward for any political activity or for the support of or opposition to any candidate or any political party in connection with any general or special election to any political office, or in connection with any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any political office, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

§ 601. Deprivation of employment or other benefit for political activity.

Whoever, except as required by law, directly or indirectly, deprives, attempts to deprive, or threatens to deprive any person of any employment, position, work, compensation, or other benefit provided for or made possible by any Act of Congress appropriating funds for work relief or relief purposes, on account of race, creed, color, or any political activity, support of, or opposition to any candidate or any political party in any election, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

§ 602. Solicitation of political contributions.

Whoever, being a Senator or Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, or a candidate for Congress, or individual elected as, Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, or an officer or employee of the United States or any department or agency thereof, or a person receiving any salary or compensation for services from money derived from the Treasury of the United States, directly or indirectly solicits, receives, or is in any manner concerned in soliciting or receiving, any assessment, subscription, or contribution for any political purpose whatever, from any other such officer, employee, or person, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than three years or both.

§ 603. Place of solicitation.

Whoever, in any room or building occupied in the discharge of official duties by any person mentioned in section 602 of this title, or in any navy yard, fort, or arsenal, solicits or receives any contribution of money or other thing of value for any political purpose, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both.

§ 604. Solicitation from persons on relief.

Whoever solicits or receives or is in any manner concerned in soliciting or receiving any assessment, subscription, or contribution for any political purpose from any person known by him to be entitled to, or receiving compensation, employment, or other benefit provided for or made possible by any Act of Congress appropriating funds for work relief or relief purposes, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

§ 605. Disclosure of names of persons on relief.

Whoever, for political purposes, furnishes or discloses any list or names of persons receiving compensation, employment or benefits provided for or made possible by any Act of Congress appropriating, or authorizing the appropriation of funds for work relief or relief purposes, to a political candidate, committee, campaign manager, or to any person for delivery to a political candidate, committee, or campaign manager; and

Whoever receives any such list or names for political purposes—

Shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

§ 606. Intimidation to secure political contributions.

Whoever, being one of the officers or employees of the United States mentioned in section 602 of this title, discharges, or promotes, or degrades, or in any manner changes the official rank or compensation of any other officer or employee, or promises or threatens so to do, for giving or withholding or neglecting to make any contribution of money or other valuable thing for any political purpose, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both.

§ 607. Making political contributions.

Whoever, being an officer, clerk, or other person in the service of the United States or any department or agency thereof, directly or indirectly gives or hands over to any other officer, clerk, or person in the service of the United States, or to any Senator or Member of or Delegate to Congress, or Resident Commissioner, any money or other valuable thing on account of or to be applied to the promotion of any political object, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both.

§ 608. Limitations on contributions and expenditures.

(a)(1) No candidate may make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or election, to Federal office in excess of [—] $25,000.

[(A) $50,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of President or Vice President;

[(B) $35,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of Senator; or

[(C) $25,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of Representative, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to the Congress.]

(2) For purposes of this subsection, "immediate family" means a candidate's spouse, and any child, parent, grandparent, brother, or sister of the candidate, and the spouses of such persons.

(b)(1) Except as otherwise provided by paragraphs (2) and (3), no person shall make contributions to any candidate with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $1,000.

(2) No political committee (other than a principal campaign committee) shall make contributions to any candidate with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000. Contributions by the national committee of a political party serving as the principal campaign committee of a candidate for the office of President of the United States shall not exceed the limitation imposed by the preceding sentence with respect to any other candidate for Federal office. For purposes of this paragraph, the term "political committee" means an organization registered as a political committee under section 303 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 for a period of not less than 6 months which has received contributions from more than 50 persons and, except for any State political party organization, has made contributions to 5 or more candidates for Federal office.

(3) No individual shall make contributions aggregating more than $25,000 in any calendar year.

(4) For purposes of this subsection—

(A) contributions to a named candidate made to any political committee authorized by such candidate, in writing, to accept contributions on his behalf shall be considered to be contributions made to such candidate; and

(B) contributions made to or for the benefit of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be contributions made to or for the benefit of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States.

(5) The limitations imposed by paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection shall apply separately with respect to each election, except that all elections held in any calendar year for the office of President of the United States (except a general election for such office) shall be considered to be one election.

(6) For purposes of the limitations imposed by this section, all contributions made by a person, either directly or indirectly, on behalf of a particular candidate, including contributions which are in any way earmarked or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to such candidate, shall be treated as contributions from such person to such candidate. The intermediary or conduit shall report the original source and the intended recipient of such contribution to the appropriate supervisory officer and to the intended recipient.

(c)(1) No candidate shall make expenditures in excess of—

(A) $10,000,000 in the case of a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President of the United States;

(B) $20,000,000, in the case of a candidate for election to the office of President of the United States;

(C) in the case of any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, by a candidate for the office of Senator, the greater of—

(i) 5 cents multiplied by the population of the geographical area with respect to which the election is held; or

(ii) $75,000;

(D) $75,000, in the case of any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, by a candidate for the office of Representative, Delegate from the District of Columbia, or Resident Commissioner; or

(E) $15,000, in the case of any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, by a candidate for the office of Delegate from Guam or the Virgin Islands.

(2) For purposes of this subsection—

(A) expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be expenditures made by or on behalf of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States;

(B) expenditures made on behalf of any candidate by a principal campaign committee designated by such candidate under section 302(f)(1) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 shall be deemed to have been made by such candidate; and

(C) the population of any geographical area shall be the population according to the most recent decennial census of the United States taken under section 141 of title 13, United States Code.

(3) The limitations imposed by subparagraphs (C), (D), and (E) of paragraph (1) of this subsection shall apply separately with respect to each election.

(d)(1) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1975), as there becomes available necessary data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Comptroller General and publish in the Federal Register the per centum difference between the price index for the 12 months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each limitation established by subsection (c) shall be increased by such per centum difference. Each amount so increased shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)—

(A) the term "price index" means the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics; and

(B) the term "base period" means the calendar year 1973.

(e) (1) No person may make any expenditure (other than an expenditure made by or on behalf of a candidate under the provisions of subsection (c)) relative to a clearly identified candidate during a calendar year which, when added to all other expenditures made by such person during the year advocating the election or defeat of such candidate, exceeds $1,000.

(2) For purposes of paragraph (1), the term "clearly identified" means—

(A) the candidate's name appears;

(B) a photograph or drawing of the candidate appears; or

(C) the identity of the candidate is apparent by unambiguous reference.

[(b)] (f) No candidate or political committee shall knowingly accept any contribution or authorize any expenditure in violation of the provisions of this section.

[(c)] (g) Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine not to exceed [$1,000,] $25,000, imprisonment for not to exceed one year, or both.

§ 609. [Repealed. P.L. 92–225].

§ 610. Contributions or expenditures by national banks, corporations or labor organizations.

It is unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress, to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election to any political office, or in connection with any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any political office, or for any corporation whatever, or any labor organization to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election at which Presidential and Vice Presidential electors or a Senator or Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to Congress are to be voted for, or in connection with any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any of the foregoing offices, or for any candidate, political committee, or other person to accept or receive any contribution prohibited by this section.

Every corporation or labor organization which makes any contribution or expenditure in violation of this section shall be fined not more than [$5,000;] $25,000; and every officer or director of any corporation, or officer of any labor organization, who consents to any contribution or expenditure by the corporation or labor organization, as the case may be, and any person who accepts or receives any contribution, in violation of this section, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both; and if the violation was willful, shall be fined not more than [$10,000] $50,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.

For the purposes of this section "labor organization" means any organization of any kind, or any agency or employee representation committee or plan, in which employees participate and which exist for the purpose, in whole or in part, of dealing with employers concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or conditions of work.

As used in this section, the phrase "contribution or expenditure" shall include any direct or indirect payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money, or any services, or anything of value (except a loan of money by a national or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations and in the ordinary course of business) to any candidate, campaign committee or political party or organization, in connection with any election to any of the offices referred to in this section; but shall not include communications by a corporation to its stockholders and their families or by a labor organization to its members and their families on any subject; nonpartisan registration and get-out-the-vote campaigns by a corporation aimed at its stockholders and their families, or by a labor organization aimed at its members and their families; the establishment, administration, and solicitation of contributions to a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes by a corporation or labor organization: Provided, That it shall be unlawful for such a fund to make a contribution or expenditure by utilizing money or anything of value secured by physical force, job discrimination, financial reprisals, or the threat of force, job discrimination, or financial reprisal; or by dues, fees, or other monies required as a condition of membership in a labor organization or as a condition of employment, or by monies obtained in any commercial transaction.

§ 611. Contributions by Government contractors.

Whoever—

(a) entering into any contract with the United States or any department or agency thereof either for the rendition of personal services or furnishing any material, supplies, or equipment to the United States or any department or agency thereof or for selling any land or building to the United States or any department or agency thereof, if payment for the performance of such contract or payment for such material, supplies, equipment, land, or building is to be made in whole or in part from funds appropriated by the Congress, at any time between the commencement of negotiations for and the later of (1) the completion of performance under, or (2) the termination of negotiations for, such contract or furnishing of material, supplies, equipment, land or buildings, directly or indirectly makes any contribution of money or other thing of value, or promises expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, to any political party, committee, or candidate for public office or to any person for any political purpose or use; or

(b) knowingly solicits any such contribution from any such person for any such purpose during any such period; shall be fined not more than [$5,000] $25,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

This section shall not prohibit or make unlawful the establishment or administration of, or the solicitation of contributions to, any separate segregated fund by any corporation or labor organization for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, unless the provisions of section 610 of this title prohibit or make unlawful the establishment or administration of, or the solicitation of contributions to, such fund.

For purposes of this section, the term "labor organization" has the meaning given it by section 610 of this title.

§ 612. Publication or distribution of political statements.

Whoever willfully publishes or distributes or causes to be published or distributed, or for the purpose of publishing or distributing the same, knowingly deposits for mailing or delivery or causes to be deposited for mailing or delivery, or, except in cases of employees of the Postal Service in the official discharge of their duties, knowingly transports or causes to be transported in interstate commerce any card, pamphlet, circular, poster, dodger, advertisement, writing, or other statement relating to or concerning any person who has publicly declared his intention to seek the office of President, or Vice President of the United States, or Senator or Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to Congress, in a primary, general, or special election, or convention of a political party, or has caused or permitted his intention to do so to be publicly declared, which does not contain the names of the persons, associations, committees, or corporations responsible for the publication or distribution of the same, and the names of the officers of each such association, committee, or corporation, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

§ 613. Contributions by [agents of foreign principals] foreign nationals.

Whoever, being [an agent of a foreign principal] a foreign national, directly or through any other person [,either for or on behalf of such foreign principal or otherwise in his capacity as agent of such foreign principal,] knowingly makes any contribution of money or other thing of value, or promises expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, in connection with an election to any political office or in connection with any primary election, convention, or caucus held to select candidates for any political office; or

Whoever knowingly solicits, accepts, or receives any such contribution from any such [agent of a foreign principal or from such foreign principal] foreign national—

Shall be fined not more than [$5,000] $25,000 or imprisoned not more than five years or both.

[As used in this section—

[(1) The term "foreign principal" has the same meaning as when used in the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, as amended, except that such term does not include any person who is a citizen of the United States.

[(2) The term "agent of a foreign principal" means any person who acts as an agent, representative, employee, or servant, or any person who acts in any other capacity at the order, request, or under the direction or control, of a foreign principal or of a person any substantial portion of whose activities are directly or indirectly supervised, directed, or controlled by a foreign principal.]

As used in this section, the term "foreign national" means—

(1) a foreign principal, as such term is defined by section 1(b) of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938 (22 U.S.C. 611(b)), except that the term "foreign national" shall not include any individual who is a citizen of the United States; or

(2) an individual who is not a citizen of the United States and who is not lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as defined by section 101(a)(20) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(20)).

§ 614. Prohibition of contributions in name of another.

(a) No person shall make a contribution in the name of another person, and no person shall knowingly accept a contribution made by one person in the name of another person.

(b) Any person who violates this section shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

§ 615. Limitation on contributions of currency.

(a) No person shall make contributions of currency of the United States or currency of any foreign country to or for the benefit of any candidate which, in the aggregate, exceed $100, with respect to any campaign of such candidate for nomination for election, or election, to Federal office.

(b) Any person who violates this section shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

§ 616. Acceptance of excessive honorariums.

Whoever, while an elected or appointed officer or employee of any branch of the Federal Government—

(1) accepts any honorarium of more than $1,000 (excluding amounts accepted for actual travel and subsistence expenses) for any appearance, speech, or article; or

(2) accepts honorariums (not prohibited by paragraph (1) of this subsection) aggregating more than $10,000 in any calendar year; shall be fined not less than $10,000 nor more than $5,000.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

AN ACT To promote fair practices in the conduct of election campaigns for Federal political offices, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971".

TITLE I—CAMPAIGN COMMUNICATIONS

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 101. This title may be cited as the "Campaign Communications Reform Act".

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 102. For purposes of this title:

[(1) The term "communications media" means broadcasting stations, newspapers, magazines, outdoor advertising facilities, and telephones; but, with respect to telephones, spending or an expenditure shall be deemed to be spending or an expenditure for the use of communications media only if such spending or expenditure is for the costs of telephones, paid telephonists, and automatic telephone equipment, used by a candidate for Federal elective office to communicate with potential voters (excluding any costs of telephones incurred by a volunteer for use of telephones by him).

[(2) The term "broadcasting station" has the same meaning as such term has under section 315(f) of the Communications Act of 1934.]

[(3)] (1) The term "Federal elective office" means the office of President of the United States, or of Senator or Representative in, or Resident Commissioner or Delegate to, the Congress of the United States (and for purposes of section 103(b) such term includes the office of Vice President).

[(4)] (2) The term "legally qualified candidate" means any person who (A) meets the qualifications prescribed by the applicable laws to hold the Federal elective office for which he is a candidate, and (B) is eligible under applicable State law to be voted for by the electorate directly or by means of delegates or electors.

[(5) The term "voting age population" means resident population, eighteen years of age and older.

[(6) The term "State" includes the District of Columbia and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.]

MEDIA RATE AND RELATED REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 103. (a) (1) Section 315(b) of the Communications Act of 1934 is amended to read as follows:

"(b) The charges made for the use of any broadcasting station by any person who is a legally qualified candidate for any public office in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or election, to such office shall not exceed—

"(1) during the forty-five days preceding the date of a primary or primary runoff election and during the sixty days preceding the date of a general or special election in which such person is a candidate, the lowest unit charge of the station for the same class and amount of time for the same period; and

"(2) at any other time, the charges made for comparable use of such station by other users thereof."

(2)(A) Section 312(a) of such Act is amended by striking "or" at the end of clause (5), striking the period at the end of clause (6) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and "or", and adding at the end of such section 312(a) the following new paragraph:

"(7) for willful or repeated failure to allow reasonable access to or to permit purchase of reasonable amounts of time for the use of a broadcasting station by a legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office on behalf of his candidacy.".

(B) The second sentence of section 315(a) of such Act is amended by inserting "under this subsection" after "No obligation is imposed".

(b) To the extent that any person sells space in any newspaper or magazine to a legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office, or nomination thereto, in connection with such candidate's campaign for nomination for, or election to, such office, the charges made for the use of such space in connection with his campaign shall not exceed the charges made for comparable use of such space for other purposes.

[LIMITATIONS OF EXPENDITURES FOR USE OF COMMUNICATIONS MEDIA

[SEC. 104. (a)(1) Subject to paragraph (4), no legally qualified candidate in an election (other than a primary or primary runoff election) for a Federal elective office may—

[(A) spend for the use of communications media on behalf of his candidacy in such election a total amount in excess of the greater of—

[(i) 10 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under paragraph (5)) of the geographical area in which the election for such office is held, or

[(ii) $50,000, or

[(B) spend for the use of broadcast stations on behalf of his candidacy in such election a total amount in excess of 60 per centum of the amount determined under subparagraph (A) with respect to such election.

[(2) No legally qualified candidate in a primary election for nomination to a Federal elective office, other than President, may spend—

[(A) for the use of communications media, or

[(B) for the use of broadcast stations, on behalf of his candidacy in such election a total amount in excess of the amounts determined under paragraph (1) (A) or (B), respectively, with respect to the general election for such office. For purposes of this subsection a primary runoff election shall be treated as a separate primary election.

[(3)(A) No person who is a candidate for presidential nomination may spend—

[(i) for the use in a State of communications media, or

[(ii) for the use in a State of broadcast stations, on behalf of his candidacy for presidential nomination a total amount in excess of the amounts which would have been determined under paragraph (1) (A) or (B), respectively, had he been a candidate for election for the office of Senator from such State (or for the office of Delegate or Resident Commissioner in the case of the District of Columbia or the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico).

[(B) For purposes of this paragraph (3), a person is a candidate for presidential nomination if he makes (or any other person makes on his behalf) an expenditure for the use of any communications medium on behalf of his candidacy for any political party's nomination for election to the office of President. He shall be considered to be such a candidate during the period—

[(i) beginning on the date on which he (or such other person) first makes such an expenditure (or, if later, January 1 of the year in which the election for the office of President is held), and

[(ii) ending on the date on which such political party nominates a candidate for the office of President.

For purposes of this title and of section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934, a candidate for presidential nomination shall be considered a legally qualified candidate for public office.

[(C) The Comptroller General shall prescribe regulations under which any expenditure by a candidate for presidential nomination for the use in two or more States of a communications medium shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the number of persons in such State who can reasonably be expected to be reached by such communications medium.

[(4)(A) For purposes of subparagraph (B):

[(i) The term "price index" means the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

[(ii) The term "base period" means the calendar year 1970.

[(B) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1972), as there becomes available necessary data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Comptroller General and publish in the Federal Register the per centum difference between the price index for the 12 months preceeding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each amount determined under paragraph (1)(A)(i) and (ii) shall be increased by such per centum difference. Each amount so increased shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

[(5) Within 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act, and during the first week of January in 1973 and every subsequent year, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Comptroller General and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of each State and congressional district for the last calendar year ending before the date of certification.

[(6) Amounts spent for the use of communications media on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office (or for nomination to such office) shall, for the purposes of this subsection, be deemed to have been spent by such candidate. Amounts spent for the use of communications media by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for the office of Vice President of the United States shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to have been spent by the candidate for the office of President of the United States with whom he is running.

[(7) For purposes of this section and section 315(c) of the Communications Act of 1934—

[(A) spending and charges for the use of communications media include not only the direct charges of the media but also agents' commissions allowed the agent by the media, and

[(B) any expenditure for the use of any communications medium by or on behalf of the candidacy of a candidate for Federal elective office (or nomination thereto) shall be charged against the expenditure limitation under this subsection applicable to the election in which such medium is used.

[(b) No person may make any charge for the use by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office (or for nomination to such office) of any newspaper, magazine, or outdoor advertising facility, unless such candidate (or a person specifically authorized by such candidate in writing to do so) certifies in writing to the person making such charge that the payment of such charge will not violate paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of subsection (a), whichever is applicable.

[(c) Section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934 is amended by redesignating subsection (c) as subsection (g) and by inserting after subsection (b) the following new subsections:

["(c) No station licensee may make any charge for the use of such station by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office (or for nomination to such office) unless such candidate (or a person specifically authorized by such candidate in writing to do so) certifies to such licensee in writing that the payment of such charge will not violate any limitation specified in paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of section 104(a) of the Campaign Communications Reform Act, whichever paragraph is applicable.

["(d) If a State by law and expressly—

["(1) has provided that a primary or other election for any office of such State or of a political subdivision thereof is subject to this subsection,

["(2) has specified a limitation upon total expenditures for the use of broadcasting stations on behalf of the candidacy of each legally qualified candidate in such election,

["(3) has provided in any such law an unequivocal expression of intent to be bound by the provisions of this subsection, and

["(4) has stipulated that the amount of such limitation shall not exceed the amount which would be determined for such election under section 104(a)(1)(B) or 104(a)(2)(B) (whichever is applicable) of the Campaign Communications Reform Act had such election been an election for a Federal elective office or nomination thereto;

then no station licensee may make any charge for the use of such station by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate in such election unless such candidate (or a person specifically authorized by such candidate in writing to do so) certifies to such licensee in writing that the payment of such charge will not violate such State limitation

[“(e) Whoever willfully and knowingly violates the provisions of subsection (c) or (d) of this section shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $5,000 or imprisonment for a period not to exceed five years, or both. The provisions of sections 501 through 503 of this Act shall not apply to violations of either such subsection.

[“(f)(1) For the purposes of this section:

[“(A) The term ‘broadcasting station’ includes a community antenna television system.

[“(B) The terms ‘licensee’ and ‘station licensee’ when used with respect to a community antenna television system, means the operator of such system.

[“(C) The term ‘Federal elective office’ means the office of President of the United States, or of Senator or Representative in, or Resident Commissioner or Delegate to, the Congress of the United States.

[“(2) For purposes of subsections (c) and (d), the term ‘legally qualified candidate’ means any person who (A) meets the qualifications prescribed by the applicable laws to hold the office for which he is a candidate and (B) is eligible under applicable State law to be voted for by the electorate directly or by means of delegates or electors.”]

REGULATIONS

SEC. [105.] 104. The Comptroller General shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out sections 102[,] and 103(b)[, 104(a), and 104(b)] of this Act.

PENALTIES

SEC. [106.] 105. Whoever willfully and knowingly violates any provision of section 103(b) [,104(a), or 104(b)] or any regulation under section 105 shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment of not more than five years, or both.

TITLE II—CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENTS

SEC. 201. Section 591 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

§ 591. Definitions.

“When used in sections 597, 599, 600, 602, 608, 610, and 611 of this title—

“(a) ‘election’ means (1) a general, special, primary, or runoff election, (2) a convention or caucus of a political party held to nominate a candidate, (3) a primary election held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party, (4) a primary election held for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President, and (5) the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States;

"(b) 'candidate' means an individual who seeks nomination for election, or election, to Federal office, whether or not such individual is elected, and, for purposes of this paragraph, an individual shall be deemed to seek nomination for election, or election, to Federal office, if he has (1) taken the action necessary under the law of a State to qualify himself for nomination for election, or election, or (2) received contributions or made expenditures, or has given his consent for any other person to receive contributions or make expenditures, with a view to bringing about his nomination for election, or election, to such office;

"(c) 'Federal office' means the office of President or Vice President of the United States, or Senator or Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress of the United States;

"(d) 'political committee' means any individual, committee, association, or organization which accepts contributions or makes expenditures during a calendar year in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000;

"(e) 'contribution' means—

"(1) a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value (except a loan of money by a national or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations and in the ordinary course of business), made for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, for the purpose of influencing the results of a primary held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President, or for the purpose of influencing the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States;

"(2) a contract, promise, or agreement, express or implied, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution for such purposes;

"(3) a transfer of funds between political committees;

"(4) the payment, by any person other than a candidate or political committee, of compensation for the personal services of another person which are rendered to such candidate or political committee without charge for any such purpose; and

"(5) notwithstanding the foregoing meanings of 'contribution', the word shall not be construed to include services provided without compensation by individuals volunteering a portion or all of their time on behalf of a candidate or political committee;

"(f) 'expenditure' means—

"(1) a purchase, payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money or anything of value (except a loan of money by a national or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations and in the ordinary course of business), made for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, for the purpose of influencing the result of a primary held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President, or for the purpose of influencing the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States;

"(2) a contract, promise, or agreement, express or implied, whether or not legally enforceable, to make any expenditure; and

"(3) a transfer of funds between political committees;

"(g) 'person' and 'whoever' mean an individual, partnership, committee, association, corporation, or any other organization or group of persons; and

"(h) 'State' means each State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and any territory or possession of the United States.".

SEC. 202. Section 600 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 600. Promise of employment or other benefit for political activity.

"Whoever, directly or indirectly, promises any employment, position, compensation, contract, appointment, or other benefit, provided for or made possible in whole or in part by any Act of Congress, or any special consideration in obtaining any such benefit, to any person as consideration, favor, or reward for any political activity or for the support of or opposition to any candidate or any political party in connection with any general or special election to any political office, or in connection with any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any political office, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.".

SEC. 203. Section 608 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 608. Limitations on contributions and expenditures.

"(a)(1) No candidate may make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or election, to Federal office in excess of—

"(A) $50,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of President or Vice President;

"(B) $35,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of Senator; or

"(C) $25,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of Representative, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to the Congress.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection, 'immediate family' means a candidate's spouse, and any child, parent, grandparent, brother, or sister of the candidate, and the spouses of such persons.

"(b) No candidate or political committee shall knowingly accept any contribution or authorize any expenditure in violation of the provisions of this section.

"(c) Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine not to exceed $1,000, imprisonment for not to exceed one year, or both.".

SEC. 204. Section 609 of title 18, United States Code, is repealed.

SEC. 205. Section 610 of title 18, United States Code, relating to contributions or expenditures by national banks, corporations, or labor organizations, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraph:

"As used in this section, the phrase 'contribution or expenditure' shall include any direct or indirect payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money, or any services, or anything of value (except a loan of money by a national or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations and in the ordinary course of business) to any candidate, campaign committee, or political party or organization, in connection with any election to any of the offices referred to in this section; but shall not include communications by a corporation to its stockholders and their families or by a labor organization to its members and their families on any subject; nonpartisan registration and get-out-the-vote campaigns by a corporation aimed at its stockholders and their families, or by a labor organization aimed at its members and their families; the establishment, administration, and solicitation of contributions to a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes by a corporation or labor organization: Provided, That it shall be unlawful for such a fund to make a contribution or expenditure by utilizing money or anything of value secured by physical force, job discrimination, financial reprisals, or the threat of force, job discrimination, or financial reprisal; or by dues, fees, or other monies required as a condition of membership in a labor organization or as a condition of employment, or by monies obtained in any commercial transaction.".

SEC. 206. Section 611 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

TITLE III—DISCLOSURE OF FEDERAL CAMPAIGN FUNDS

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 301. When used in this title and in title IV of this Act—

(a) "election" means (1) a general, special, primary, or runoff election, (2) a convention or caucus of a political party held to nominate a candidate, (3) a primary election held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party, (4) a primary election held for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President, and (5) the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States;

(b) "candidate" means an individual who seeks nomination for election, or election, to Federal office, whether or not such individual is elected, and, for purposes of this paragraph, an individual shall be deemed to seek nomination for election, or election, if he has (1) taken the action necessary under the law of a State to qualify himself for nomination for election, or election, to Federal office, or (2) received contributions or made expenditures, or has given his consent for any other person to receive contributions or make expenditures, with a view to bringing about his nomination for election, or election, to such office;

(c) "Federal office" means the office of President or Vice President of the United States; or of Senator or Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress of the United States;

(d) "political committee" means any committee, association, or organization which accepts contributions or makes expenditures during a calendar year in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000, or which commits any act for the purpose of influencing, directly or indirectly, the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, except that any communication referred to in section 301(f)(4) of this Act which is not included within the definition of the term "expenditure" shall not be considered such an act;

(e) "contribution" means—

(1) a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value, made for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office or as a presidential or vice-presidential elector, or for the purpose of influencing the result of a primary held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President, or for the purpose of influencing the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States;

(2) a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution for any such purpose;

(3) a transfer of funds between political committees;

(4) the payment, by any person other than a candidate or political committee, of compensation for the personal services of another person which are rendered to such candidate or committee without charge for any such purpose; and

(5) notwithstanding the foregoing meanings of "contribution", the word shall not be construed to include (A) services provided without compensation by individuals volunteering a portion or all of their time on behalf of a candidate or political committee, (B) the use of real or personal property by an individual owner or lessee in rendering voluntary personal services to any candidate or political committee, including the cost of invitations and food and beverages provided on the individual's premises for candidate-related activities, (C) the sale of any food or beverage by a vendor for use in a candidate's campaign at a charge less than the normal comparable charge, if such charge for use in a candidate's campaign is at least equal to the cost of such food or beverage to the vendor, (D) any unreimbursed purchase or other payment by any individual for travel expenses with respect to the rendering of voluntary personal services by such individual to any candidate or political committee, or (E) the payment by a State or local committee of a political party of the costs of preparation, display, or mailing or other distribution incurred by such committee with respect to a printed slate card or sample ballot, or other printed listing, of 3 or more candidates for any public office for which an election is held in the State in which such committee is organized, except that this clause shall not apply in the case of costs incurred by such committee with respect to a display of any such listing

made on broadcasting stations, or in magazines or other similar types of general public political advertising (other than newspapers): Provided, That the cumulative value of activities by any person on behalf of any candidate under each of clauses (B) or (D) shall not exceed $500 with respect to any election;

(f) "expenditure" means—

(1) a purchase, payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money or anything of value, made for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, or as a presidential and vice-presidential elector, or for the purpose of influencing the result of a primary held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President, or for the purpose of influencing the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States;

(2) a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make an expenditure, [and]

(3) a transfer of funds between political committees; and

(4) notwithstanding the foregoing meanings of "expenditure", such term does not include (A) any news story, commentary, or editorial distributed through the facilities of any broadcasting station, newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication, unless such facilities are owned or controlled by any political party, political committee, or candidate, (B) nonpartisan activity designed to encourage individuals to register to vote or to vote, (C) any communication by any membership organization or corporation to its members or stockholders, if such membership organization or corporation is not organized primarily for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, (D) the use of real or personal property by an individual owner or lessee in rendering voluntary personal services to any candidate or political committee, including the cost of invitations and food and beverages provided on the individual's premises for candidate-related activities, (E) any unreimbursed purchase or other payment by any individual for travel expenses with respect to the rendering of voluntary services by such individual to any candidate or political committee, (F) any communication by any person which is not made for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, or (G) the payment by a State or local committee of a political party of the costs of preparation, display, or mailing or other distribution incurred by such committee with respect to a printed slate card or sample ballot, or other printed listing, of 3 or more candidates for any public office for which an election is held in the State in which such committee is organized, except that this clause shall not apply in the case of costs incurred by such committee with respect to a display of any such listing made on broadcasting stations, or in magazines or other similar types of general public political advertising (other than newspapers): Provided, That the cumulative value of activities by any person on behalf of any candidate under each clauses (D) or (E) shall not exceed $500 with respect to any election;

(j) "principal campaign committee" means the principal campaign committee designated by a candidate under section 302(f)(1); and

(k) "Board" means the Board of Supervisory Officers established by section 308(a)(1).

ORGANIZATION OF POLITICAL COMMITTEES

SEC. 302. (a) Every political committee shall have a chairman and a treasurer. No contribution and no expenditure shall be accepted or made by or on behalf of a political committee at a time when there is a vacancy in the office of chairman or treasurer thereof. No expenditure shall be made for or on behalf of a political committee without the authorization of its chairman or treasurer, or their designated agents.

(b) Every person who receives a contribution in excess of $10 for a political committee shall, on demand of the treasurer, and in any event within five days after receipt of such contribution, render to the treasurer a detailed account thereof, including the amount, the name and address (occupation and the principal place of business, if any) of the person making such contribution, and the date on which received. All funds of a political committee shall be segregated from, and may not be commingled with, any personal funds of officers, members, or associates of such committee.

(c) It shall be the duty of the treasurer of a political committee to keep a detailed and exact account of—

(1) all contributions made to or for such committee;

(2) the full name and mailing address (occupation and the principal place of business, if any) of every person making a contribution in excess of $10, and the date and amount thereof;

(3) all expenditures made by or on behalf of such committee; and

(4) the full name and mailing address (occupation and the principal place of business, if any) of every person to whom any expenditure is made, the date and amount thereof and the name and address of, and office sought by, each candidate on whose behalf such expenditure was made.

(d) It shall be the duty of the treasurer to obtain and keep a receipted bill, stating the particulars, for every expenditure made by or on behalf of a political committee in excess of $100 in amount, and for any such expenditure in a lesser amount, if the aggregate amount of such expenditures to the same person during a calendar year exceeds $100. The treasurer shall preserve all receipted bills and accounts required to be kept by this section for periods of time to be determined by the supervisory officer.

(e) Any political committee which solicits or receives contributions or makes expenditures on behalf of any candidate that is not authorized in writing by such candidate to do so shall include a notice on the face or front page of all literature and advertisements published in connection with such candidate's campaign by such committee or on its behalf stating that the committee is not authorized by such candidate and that such candidate is not responsible for the activities of such committee.

[(f)(1) Any political committee shall include on the face or front page of all literature and advertisements soliciting funds the following notice:

["A copy of our report filed with the appropriate supervisory officer is (or will be) available for purchase from the Superintendent of Documents, United States Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.".

[(2)(A) The supervisory officer shall compile and furnish to the Public Printer, not later than the last day of March of each year, an annual report for each political committee which has filed a report with him under this title during the period from March 10 of the preceding calendar year through January 31 of the year in which such annual report is made available to the Public Printer. Each such annual report shall contain—

[(i) a copy of the statement of organization of the political committee required under section 303, together with any amendments thereto; and

[(ii) a copy of each report filed by such committee under section 304 from March 10 of the preceding year through January 31 of the year in which the annual report is so furnished to the Public Printer.

[(B) The Public Printer shall make copies of such annual reports available for sale to the public by the Superintendent of Documents as soon as practicable after they are received from the supervisory officer.]

(f)(1) Each individual who is a candidate for Federal office (other than the office of Vice President of the United States) shall designate a political committee to serve as his principal campaign committee. No political committee may be designated as the principal campaign committee of more than one candidate, except that the candidate for the office of President of the United States nominated by a political party may designate the national committee of such political party as his principal campaign committee.

(2) Except as otherwise provided in section 608(e) of title 18, United States Code, no political committee other than a principal campaign committee designated by a candidate under paragraph (1) may make expenditures on behalf of such candidate.

(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, each report or statement of contributions received by a political committee (other than a principal campaign committee) which is required to be filed with a supervisory officer under this title shall be filed instead with the principal campaign committee for the candidate on whose behalf such contributions are accepted.

(4) It shall be the duty of each principal campaign committee to receive all reports and statements required to be filed with it under paragraph (3) of this subsection and to compile and file such reports and statements, together with its own reports and statements, with the appropriate supervisory officer in accordance with the provisions of this title.

(5) For purposes of paragraphs (1) and (3) of this subsection, the term "political committee" does not include any political committee which supports more than one candidate, except for the national committee of a political party designated by a candidate for the office of President of the United States under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

REGISTRATION OF POLITICAL COMMITTEES; STATEMENTS

SEC. 303. (a) Each political committee which anticipates receiving contributions or making expenditures during the calendar year in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000 shall file with the supervisory officer a statement of organization, within ten days after its organization or, if later, ten days after the date on which it has information which causes the committee to anticipate it will receive contributions or make expenditures in excess of $1,000. Each such committee in existence at the date of enactment of this Act shall file a statement of organization with the supervisory officer at such time as he prescribes.

(b) The statement of organization shall include—

(1) the name and address of the committee;

(2) the names, addresses, and relationships of affiliated or connected organizations;

(3) the area, scope, or jurisdiction of the committee;

(4) the name, address, and position of the custodian of books and accounts;

(5) the name, address, and position of other principal officers, including officers and members of the finance committee, if any;

(6) the name, address, office sought, and party affiliation of (A) each candidate whom the committee is supporting, and (B) any other individual, if any, whom the committee is supporting for nomination for election, or election, to any public office whatever; or, if the committee is supporting the entire ticket of any party, the name of the party;

(7) a statement whether the committee is a continuing one;

(8) the disposition of residual funds which will be made in the event of dissolution;

(9) a listing of all banks, safety deposit boxes, or other repositories used;

(10) a statement of the reports required to be filed by the committee with State or local officers, and, if so, the names, addresses, and positions of such persons; and

(11) such other information as shall be required by the supervisory officer.

(c) Any change in information previously submitted in a statement of organization shall be reported to the supervisory officer within a ten-day period following the change.

(d) Any committee which, after having filed one or more statements of organization, disbands or determines it will no longer receive contributions or make expenditures during the calendar year in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000 shall so notify the supervisory officer.

(e) In the case of a political committee which is not a principal campaign committee and which does not support more than one candidate, reports and notifications required under this section to be filed with the supervisory officer shall be filed instead with the appropriate principal campaign committee.

REPORTS BY POLITICAL COMMITTEES AND CANDIDATES

SEC. 304. (a) [Each] (1) Except as provided by paragraph (2), each treasurer of a political committee supporting a candidate or candidates for election to Federal office, and each candidate for election to such office, shall file with the appropriate supervisory officer reports of receipts and expenditures on forms to be prescribed or approved by him. [Such reports shall be filed on the tenth day of March, June, and September, in each year, and on the fifteenth and fifth days next preceding the date on which an election is held, and also by the thirty-first day of January. Such reports shall be complete as of such date as the supervisory officer may prescribe, which shall not be less than five days before the date of filing, except that any contribution of $5,000 or more received after the last report is filed prior to the election shall be reported within forty-eight hours after its receipt.] The reports referred to in the preceding sentence shall be filed as follows:

(A)(i) In any calendar year in which an individual is a candidate for Federal office and an election for such Federal office is held in such year, such reports shall be filed not later than the tenth day before the date on which such election is held and shall be complete as of the fifteenth day before the date of such election; except that any such report filed by registered or certified mail must be postmarked not later than the close of the twelfth day before the date of such election.

(ii) Such reports shall be filed not later than the thirtieth day after the date of such election and shall be complete as of the twentieth day after the date of such election.

(B) In any other calendar year in which an individual is a candidate for Federal office, such reports shall be filed after December 31 of such calendar year, but not later than January 31 of the following calendar year and shall be complete as of the close of the calendar year with respect to which the report is filed.

(C) Such reports shall be filed not later than the tenth day following the close of any calendar quarter in which the candidate or political committee concerned received contributions in excess of $1,000, or made expenditures in excess of $1,000, and shall be complete as of the close of such calendar quarter; except that any such report required to be filed after December 31 of any calendar year with respect to which a report is required to be filed under subparagraph (B) shall be filed as provided in such subparagraph.

(D) When the last day for filing any quarterly report required by subparagraph (C) occurs within 10 days of an election, the filing of such quarterly report shall be waived and superseded by the report required by subparagraph (A)(i).

Any contribution of $1,000 or more received after the fifteenth day, but more than 48 hours, before any election shall be reported within 48 hours after its receipt.

(2) Each treasurer of a political committee which is not a principal campaign committee and which does not support more than one candidate shall file the reports required under this section with the appropriate principal campaign committee.

(b) Each report under this section shall disclose—

(1) the amount of cash on hand at the beginning of the reporting period;

(2) the full name and mailing address (occupation and the principal place of business, if any) of each person who has made one or more contributions to or for such committee or candidate (including the purchase of tickets for events such as dinners, luncheons, rallies, and similar fundraising events) within the calendar year in an aggregate amount or value in excess of $100, together with the amount and date of such contributions;

(3) the total sum of individual contributions made to or for such committee or candidate during the reporting period and not reported under paragraph (2);

(4) the name and address of each political committee or candidate from which the reporting committee or the candidate received, or to which that committee or candidate made, any transfer of funds, together with the amounts and dates of all transfers;

(5) each loan to or from any person within the calendar year in an aggregate amount or value in excess of $100, together with the full names and mailing addresses (occupations and the principal places of business, if any) of the lender and endorsers, if any, and the date and amount of such loans;

(6) the total amount of proceeds from (A) the sale of tickets to each dinner, luncheon, rally, and other fundraising event; (B) mass collections made at such events; and (C) sales of items such as political campaign pins, buttons, badges, flags, emblems, hats, banners, literature, and similar materials;

(7) each contribution, rebate, refund, or other receipt in excess of $100 not otherwise listed under paragraphs (2) through (6);

(8) the total sum of all receipts by or for such committee or candidate during the reporting period, together with total receipts less transfers between political committees which support the same candidate and which do not support more than one candidate;

(9) the full name and mailing address (occupation and the principal place of business, if any) of each person to whom expenditures have been made by such committee or on behalf of such committee or candidate within the calendar year in an aggregate amount or value in excess of $100, the amount, date, and purpose of each such expenditure and the name and address of, and office sought by, each candidate on whose behalf such expenditure was made;

(10) the full name and mailing address (occupation and the principal place of business, if any) of each person to whom an expenditure for personal services, salaries, and reimbursed expenses in excess of $100 has been made, and which is not otherwise reported, including the amount, date, and purpose of such expenditure;

(11) the total sum of expenditures made by such committee or candidate during the calendar year, together with total expenditures less transfers between political committees which support the same candidate and which do not support more than one candidate;

(12) the amount and nature of debts and obligations owed by or to the committee, in such form as the supervisory officer may prescribe and a continuous reporting of their debts and obligations after the election at such periods as the supervisory officer may require until such debts and obligations are extinguished; and

(13) such other information as shall be required by the supervisory officer.

(c) The reports required to be filed by subsection (a) shall be cumulative during the calendar year to which they relate, but where there has been no change in an item reported in a previous report during such year, only the amount need be carried forward. If no contributions or expenditures have been accepted or expended during a calendar year, the treasurer of the political committee or candidate shall file a statement to that effect.

REPORTS BY OTHERS THAN POLITICAL COMMITTEES

SEC. 305. Every person (other than a political committee or candidate) who makes contributions or expenditures, other than by contribution to a political committee or candidate, in an aggregate amount in excess of $100 within a calendar year shall file with the supervisory officer a statement containing the information required by section 304. Statements required by this section shall be filed on the dates on which reports by political committees are filed, but need not be cumulative.

FORMAL REQUIREMENTS RESPECTING REPORTS AND STATEMENTS

SEC. 306. (a) A report or statement required by this title to be filed by a treasurer of a political committee, a candidate, or by any other person, shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the person filing such report or statement, taken before any officer authorized to administer oaths.

(b) A copy of a report or statement shall be preserved by the person filing it for a period of time to be designated by the supervisory officer in a published regulation.

(c) The supervisory officer may, by published regulation of general applicability, relieve any category of political committees of the obligation to comply with section 304 if such committee (1) primarily supports persons seeking State or local office, and does not substantially support candidates, and (2) does not operate in more than one State or on a statewide basis.

(d) The supervisory officer shall, by published regulations of general applicability, prescribe the manner in which contributions and expenditures in the nature of debts and other contracts, agreements, and promises to make contributions or expenditures shall be reported. Such regulations shall provide that they be reported in separate schedules. In determining aggregate amounts of contributions and expenditures, amounts reported as provided in such regulations shall not be considered until actual payment is made.

(e) If a report or statement required by section 303, 304(a)(1)(A)(ii), 304(a)(1)(B), or 304(a)(1)(C) of this title to be filed by a treasurer of a political committee or by a candidate, or if a report required by section 305 of this title to be filed by any other person, is delivered by registered or certified mail, to the appropriate supervisory officer or principal campaign committee with whom it is required to be filed, the United States postmark stamped on the cover of the envelope or other container in which such report or statement is so mailed shall be deemed to be the date of filing.

REPORTS ON CONVENTION FINANCING

SEC. 307. Each committee or other organization which—

(1) represents a State, or a political subdivision thereof, or any group of persons, in dealing with officials of a national political party with respect to matters involving a convention held in such State or political subdivision to nominate a candidate for the office of President or Vice President, or

(2) represents a national political party in making arrangements for the convention of such party held to nominate a candidate for the office of President or Vice President, shall, within sixty days following the end of the convention (but not later than twenty days prior to the date on which presidential and vice-presidential electors are chosen), file with the Comptroller General of the United States a full and complete financial statement, in such form and detail as he may prescribe, of the sources from which it derived its funds, and the purposes for which such funds were expended.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORY OFFICERS

SEC. 308. (a)(1) There is hereby established the Board of Supervisory Officers, which shall be composed of 7 members as follows:

(A) the Secretary of the Senate;

(B) the Clerk of the House of Representatives;

(C) the Comptroller General of the United States;

(D) two individuals appointed by the President of the Senate, upon the recommendations of the majority leader of the Senate and the minority leader of the Senate; and

(E) two individuals appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, upon the recommendations of the majority leader of the House and the minority leader of the House.

Of each class of two members appointed under subparagraphs (D) and (E), not more than one shall be appointed from the same political party. An individual appointed to fill a vacancy occurring other than by the expiration of a term of office shall be appointed only for the unexpired term for the member he succeeds. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the Board shall be filled in the same manner as in the case of the original appointment. Members of the Board appointed under subparagraphs (D) and (E)—

(i) shall be chosen from among individuals who are not officers or employees in the executive, legislative, or judicial branch of the Government of the United States (including elected and appointed officials);

(ii) shall be chosen on the basis of their maturity, experience, integrity, impartiality, and good judgment;

(iii) shall serve for terms of 4 years, except that, of the members first appointed under subparagraph (D), one shall be appointed for a term of one year and one shall be appointed for a term of 3 years and, of the members first appointed under subparagraph (E), one shall be appointed for a term of 2 years; and

(iv) shall receive compensation equivalent to the compensation paid at level IV of the Federal Executive Salary Schedule (5 U.S.C. 5315), prorated on a daily basis for each day spent in the work of the Board, shall be paid actual travel expenses, and per diem in lieu of subsistence expenses when away from their usual place of residence, in accordance with section 5703(b) of title 5, United States Code.

(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, it shall be the duty of the Board to supervise the administration of, seek to obtain compliance with, and formulate overall policy with respect to, this title, title I of this Act, and sections 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, and 616 of title 18, United States Code.

(b) Members of the Board shall alternate in serving as Chairman of the Board. The term of each Chairman shall be one year.

(c) All decisions of the Board with respect to the exercise of its duties and powers under the provisions of this title shall be made by majority vote of the members of the Board. A member of the Board may not delegate to any person his vote or any decisionmaking authority or duty vested in the Board by the provisions of this title.

(d) The Board shall meet at the call of any member of the Board, except that it shall meet at least once each month.

(e) The Board shall prepare written rules for the conduct of its activities.

(f) (1) The Board shall have a Staff Director and a General Counsel who shall be appointed by the Board. The Staff Director shall be paid at a rate not to exceed the rate of basic pay in effect for level IV of the Executive Schedule (5 U.S.C. 5315). The General Counsel shall be paid at a rate not to exceed the rate of basic pay in effect for level V of the Executive Schedule (5 U.S.C. 5316). With the approval of the Board, the Staff Director may appoint and fix the pay of such additional personnel as he considers desirable. Not less than 30 per centum of the additional personnel appointed by the Staff Director shall be selected as follows:

(A) one-half from among individuals recommended by the minority leader of the Senate; and

(B) one-half from among individuals recommended by the minority leader of the House of Representatives.

(2) With the approval of the Board, the Staff Director may procure temporary and intermittent services to the same extent as is authorized by section 3109(b) of title 5, United States Code, but at rates for individuals not to exceed the daily equivalent of the annual rate of basic pay in effect for grade GS–15 of the General Schedule (5 U.S.C. 5332).

POWERS OF THE BOARD

SEC. 309. (a) The Board shall have the power—

(1) to formulate general policy and to review actions of the supervisory officers with respect to the administration of this title, title I of this Act, and sections 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, and 616 of title 18, United States Code;

(2) to oversee the development of prescribed forms under section 311(a)(1);

(3) to review rules and regulations prescribed under section 104 of this Act or under this title to assure their consistency with the law and to assure that such rules and regulations are uniform, to the extent practicable;

(4) to render advisory opinions under section 313;

(5) to expeditiously conduct investigations and hearings, to encourage voluntary compliance, and to report apparent violations to the appropriate law enforcement authorities;

(6) to administer oaths or affirmations;

(7) to require by subpena, signed by the Chairman, the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence relevant to any investigation or hearing conducted by the Board under section 311(c); and

(8) to pay witnesses the same fees and mileage as are paid in like circumstances in the courts of the United States.

(b) Any district court of the United States, within the jurisdiction of which any inquiry is carried on, may, upon petition by the Board, in case of refusal to obey a subpena of the Board issued under subsection (a)(7), issue an order requiring compliance with such subpena. Any failure to obey the order of such district court may be punished by such district court as a contempt thereof.

REPORTS

SEC. 310. The Board shall transmit reports to the President of the United States and to each House of the Congress no later than March 31 of each year. Each such report shall contain a detailed statement with respect to the activities of the Board in carrying out its duties under this title, together with recommendations for such legislative or other action as the Board considers appropriate.

DUTIES OF THE SUPERVISORY OFFICER; INVESTIGATION BY THE BOARD

SEC. [308.] 311. (a) It shall be the duty of the supervisory officer—

(1) to develop and furnish to the person required by the provisions of this Act prescribed forms for the making of the reports and statements required to be filed with him under this title;

(2) to prepare, publish, and furnish to the person required to file such reports and statements a manual setting forth recommended uniform methods of bookkeeping and reporting;

(3) to develop a filing, coding, and cross-indexing system consonant with the purposes of this title;

(4) to make the reports and statements filed with him available for public inspection and copying, commencing as soon as practicable but not later than the end of the second day following the day during which it was received, and to permit copying of any such report or statement by hand or by duplicating machine, as requested by any person, at the expense of such person: Provided, That any information copied from such reports and statements shall not be sold or utilized by any person for the purpose of soliciting contributions or for any commercial purpose;

(5) to preserve such reports and statements for a period of ten years from date of receipt, except that reports and statements relating solely to candidates for the House of Representatives shall be preserved for only five years from the date of receipt;

[(6) to compile and maintain a current list of all statements or parts of statements pertaining to each candidate;

[(7) to prepare and publish an annual report including compilations of (A) total reported contributions and expenditures for all candidates, political committees, and other persons during the year; (B) total amounts expended according to such categories as he shall determine and broken down into candidate, party, and nonparty expenditures on the National, State, and local levels; (C) total amounts expended for influencing nominations and elections stated separately; (D) total amounts contributed according to such categories of amounts as he shall determine and broken down into contributions on the national, State, and local levels for candidates and political committees; and (E) aggregate amounts contributed by any contributor shown to have contributed in excess of $100;

[(8) to prepare and publish from time to time special reports comparing the various totals and categories of contributions and expenditures made with respect to preceding elections;

[(9) to prepare and publish such other reports as he may deem appropriate;

[(10) to assure wide dissemination of statistics, summaries, and reports prepared under this title;]

(6) to compile and maintain a cumulative index of reports and statements filed with him, which shall be published in the Federal Register at regular intervals and which shall be available for purchase directly or by mail for a reasonable price;

(7) to prepare and publish from time to time special reports listing those candidates for whom reports were filed as required by this title and those candidates for whom such reports were not filed as so required;

[11] (8) to make from time to time audits and field investigations with respect to reports and statements filed under the provisions of this title, and with respect to alleged failures to file any report or statement required under the provisions of this title;

[12] (9) to report apparent violations of law to the [appropriate law enforcement authorities] Board, pursuant to subsection (c)(1)(B); and [13] (10) to prescribe suitable rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this title, in accordance with the provisions of subsection (b).

[(b) The supervisory officer shall encourage, and cooperate with, the election officials in the several States to develop procedures which will eliminate the necessity of multiple filings by permitting the filing of copies of Federal reports to satisfy the State requirements.]

(b)(1) The supervisory officer, before prescribing any rule or regulation under this section, shall transmit a statement with respect to such rule or regulation to the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate or the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives, as the case may be, in accordance with the provisions of this subsection. Such statement shall set forth the proposed rule or regulation and shall contain a detailed explanation and justification of such rule or regulation.

(2) If the committee of the Congress which receives a statement from the supervisory officer under this subsection does not, through appropriate action, disapprove the proposed rule or regulation set forth in such statement no later than 30 legislative days after receipt of such statement, then the supervisory officer may prescribe such rule or regulation. In the case of any rule or regulation proposed by the Comptroller General of the United States, both the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate and the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives shall have the power to disapprove such proposed rule or regulation, and the Comptroller General may not prescribe any rule or regulation which has been disapproved by either such committee. No supervisory officer may prescribe any rule or regulation which is disapproved under this paragraph.

(3) If the supervisory officer proposing to prescribe any rule or regulation under this section is the Secretary of the Senate, he shall transmit such statement to the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate. If the supervisory officer is the Clerk of the House of Representatives, he shall transmit such statement to the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives. If the supervisory officer is the Comptroller

General of the United States, he shall transmit such statement to each such committee.

(4) For purposes of this subsection, the term "legislative days" does not include, with respect to statements transmitted to the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate, any calendar day on which the Senate is not in session, with respect to statements transmitted to the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives, any calendar day on which the House of Representatives is not in session, and with respect to statements transmitted to both such committees, any calendar day on which both Houses of the Congress are not in session.

[(c) It shall be the duty of the Comptroller General to serve as a national clearinghouse for information in respect to the administration of elections. In carrying out his duties under this subsection, the Comptroller General shall enter into contracts for the purpose of conducting independent studies of the administration of elections. Such studies shall include, but shall not be limited to, studies of—

[(1) the method of selection of, and the type of duties assigned to, officials and personnel working on boards of elections;

[(2) practices relating to the registration of voters; and

[(3) voting and counting methods.

Studies made under this subsection shall be published by the Comptroller General and copies thereof shall be made available to the general public upon the payment of the cost thereof. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to authorize the Comptroller General to require the inclusion of any comment or recommendation of the Comptroller General in any such study.

[(d)(1)] (c)(1)(A) [Any person who believes a violation of this title has occurred may file a complaint with the supervisory officer. If the supervisory officer determines there is substantial reason to believe such a violation has occurred, he shall expeditiously make an investigation, which shall also include an investigation of reports and statements filed by the complainant if he is a candidate, of the matter complained of. Whenever in the judgment of the supervisory officer, after affording due notice and an opportunity for a hearing, any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of this title or any regulation or order issued thereunder, the Attorney General on behalf of the United States shall institute a civil action for relief, including a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or any other appropriate order in the district court of the United States for the district in which the person is found, resides, or transacts business. Upon a proper showing that such person has engaged or is about to engage in such acts or practices, a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond by such court.] Any person who believes a violation of this title, title I of this Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code, has occurred may file a complaint with the Board.

(B) Any supervisory officer who has reason to believe a violation of this title, title I of this Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code, has occurred shall refer such apparent violation to the Board.

(C) The Board, upon receiving any complaint under subparagraph (A) or referral under subparagraph (B), or if it has reason to believe that any person has committed a violation of any such provision, shall notify the person involved of such apparent violation and shall—

(i) report such apparent violation to the Attorney General; or

(ii) make an investigation of such apparent violation.

(D) Any investigation under subparagraph (C) (ii) shall be conducted expeditiously and shall include an investiagtion of reports and statements filed by any complainant with respect to the apparent violation involved, if such complainant is a candidate. Any notification or investigation made under subparagraph (C) shall not be made public by the Board or by any other person without the written consent of the person receiving such notification or the person with respect to whom such investigation is made.

(E) The Board shall, at the request of any person who receives notice of an apparent violation under subparagraph (C), conduct a hearing with respect to such apparent violation.

(F) If the Board shall determine, after any investigation under subparagraph (C)(ii), that there is reason to believe that there has been an apparent violation of this title, title I of this Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code, the Board shall endeavor to correct any such apparent violation by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion.

(G) The Board shall refer apparent violations to the appropriate law enforcement authorities if the Board is unable to correct such apparent violations, or if the Board determines that any such referral is appropriate.

(H) Whenever in the judgment of the Board, after affording due notice and an opportunity for a hearing, any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of this title, title I of this Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code, the Attorney General on behalf of the United States shall institute a civil action for relief, including a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or any other appropriate order in the district court of the United States for the district in which the person is found, resides, or transacts business. Upon a proper showing that such person has engaged or is about to engage in such acts or practices, a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond by such court.

(2) In any action brought under paragraph (1) of this subsection, subpenas for witnesses who are required to attend a United States district court may run into any other district.

(3) Any party aggrieved by an order granted under paragraph (1) of this subsection may, at any time within sixty days after the date of entry thereof, file a petition with the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which such person is found, resides, or transacts business, for judicial review of such order.

(4) The judgment of the court of appeals affirming or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the district court shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

(5) Any action brought under this subsection shall be advanced on the docket of the court in which filed, and put ahead of all other actions (other than other actions brought under this subsection).

(d) In any case in which the Board refers an apparent violation to the Attorney General, the Attorney General shall respond by report to the Board with respect to any action taken by the Attorney General regarding such apparent violation. Each such report shall be transmitted no later than 60 days after the date the Board refers any apparent violation, and at the close of every 30-day period thereafter until there is final disposition of such apparent violation. The Board may from time to time prepare and publish reports on the status of such referrals.

STATEMENTS FILED WITH STATE OFFICERS

SEC. [309.] 312. (a) A copy of each statement required to be filed with a supervisory officer by this title shall be filed with the Secretary of State (or, if there is no office of Secretary of State, the equivalent State officer) of the appropriate State. For purposes of this subsection, the term "appropriate State" means—

(1) for reports relating to expenditures and contributions in connection with the campaign for nomination for election, or election, of a candidate to the office of President or Vice President of the United States, each State in which an expenditure is made by him or on his behalf, and

(2) for reports relating to expenditures and contributions in connection with the campaign for nomination for election, or election, of a candidate to the office of Senator or Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress of the United States, the State in which he seeks election.

(b) It shall be the duty of the Secretary of State, or the equivalent State officer, under subsection (a)—

(1) to receive and maintain in an orderly manner all reports and statements required by this title to be filed with him;

(2) to preserve such reports and statements for a period of ten years from date of receipt, except that reports and statements relating solely to candidates for the House of Representatives shall be preserved for only five years from the date of receipt;

(3) to make the reports and statements filed with him available for public inspection and copying during regular office hours, commencing as soon as practicable but not later than the end of the day during which it was received, and to permit copying of any such report or statement by hand or by duplicating machine, requested by any person, at the expense of such person; and

(4) to compile and maintain a current list of all statements or parts of statements pertaining to each candidate.

[PROHIBITION OF CONTRIBUTIONS IN NAME OF ANOTHER

[SEC. 310. No person shall make a contribution in the name of another person, and no person shall knowingly accept a contribution made by one person in the name of another person.]

ADVISORY OPINIONS

SEC. 313. (a) Upon written request to the Board by any individual holding Federal office, any candidate for Federal office, or any political committee, the Board shall render an advisory opinion, in writing, within a reasonable time with respect to whether any specific transaction or activity by such individual, candidate, or political committee would constitute a violation of this title, title I of this Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any person with respect to whom an advisory opinion is rendered under subsection (a) who acts in good faith in accordance with the provisions and findings of such advisory opinion shall be presumed to be in compliance with the provision of this title, title I of this Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code, with respect to which such advisory opinion is rendered.

(c) Any request made under subsection (a) shall be made public by the Board. The Board shall, before rendering an advisory opinion with respect to such request, provide any interested party with an opportunity to transmit written comments to the Board with respect to such request.

PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS

SEC. [311.] 314. (a) Any person who violates any of the provisions of this title shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

(b) In case of any conviction under this title, where the punishment inflicted does not include imprisonment, such conviction shall be deemed a misdemeanor conviction only.

JUDICIAL REVIEW

SEC. 315. (a) The Board, the supervisory officers, the national committee of any political party, and any individual eligible to vote in any election for the office of President of the United States are authorized to institute such actions in the appropriate district court of the United States, including actions for declaratory judgment or injunctive relief, as may be appropriate to implement or construe any provision of this title, title I of this Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code. The district court immediately shall certify all questions of constitutionality of this title, title I of this Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code, to the United States court of appeals for the circuit involved, which shall hear the matter sitting en banc.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any decision on a matter certified under subsection (a) shall be reviewable by appeal directly to the Supreme Court of the United States. Such appeal shall be brought no later than 20 days after the decision of the court of appeals.

(c) It shall be the duty of the court of appeals and of the Supreme Court of the United States to advance on the docket and to expedite to the greatest possible extent the disposition of any matter certified under subsection (a).

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 316. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, there are authorized to be appropriated to each of the supervisory officers and to the Board such sums as may be necessary to enable each such supervisory officer and the Board to carry out their duties under this Act.

TITLE IV—GENERAL PROVISIONS

EXTENSION OF CREDIT BY REGULATED INDUSTRIES

SEC. 401. The Civil Aeronautics Board, the Federal Communications Commission, and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall each promulgate, within ninety days after the date of enactment of this Act, its own regulations with respect to the extension of credit, without security, by any person regulated by such Board or Commission to any candidate for Federal office [(as such term is defined in section 301(c) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971)], or to any person on behalf of such a candidate, for goods furnished or services rendered in connection with the campaign of such candidate for nomination for election, or election, to such office.

PROHIBITION AGAINST USE OF CERTAIN FEDERAL FUNDS FOR ELECTION ACTIVITIES

SEC. 402. No part of any funds appropriated to carry out the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 shall be used to finance, directly or indirectly, any activity designed to influence the outcome of any election to Federal office, or any voter registration activity, or to pay the salary of any officer or employee of the Office of Economic Opportunity who, in his official capacity as such an officer or employee, engages in any such activity. [As used in this section, the term "election" has the same meaning given such term by section 301(a) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, and the term "Federal office" has the same meaning given such term by section 301(c) of such Act.]

[EFFECT ON STATE LAW

[SEC. 403. (a) Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to invalidate or make inapplicable any provision of any State law, except where compliance with such provision of law would result in a violation of a provision of this Act.

[(b) Notwithstanding subsection (a), no provision of State Law shall be construed to prohibit any person from taking any action authorized by this Act or from making any expenditure (as such term is defined in section 301(f) of this Act) which he could lawfully make under this Act.]

EFFECT ON STATE LAW

SEC. 403. The provisions of this Act, and of rules prescribed under this Act, supersede and preempt any provision of State law with respect to election to Federal office.

PARTIAL INVALIDITY

SEC. 404. If any provision of this Act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the Act and the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

REPEALING CLAUSE

SEC. 405. The Federal Corrupt Practices Act, 1925 (2 U.S.C. 241-256), is repealed.

PERIOD OF LIMITATIONS

SEC. 406. (a) No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any violation of title I of this Act, title III of this Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code, unless the indictment is found or the information is instituted within 3 years after the date of the violation.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law—

(1) the period of limitation referred to in subsection (a) shall apply with respect to violations referred to in such subsection committed before, on, or after the effective date of this section; and

(2) no person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any act or omission which was a violation of any provision of title I of this Act, title III of this Act, or section 608, 610, 611, or 613 of title 18, United States Code, as in effect on the day before the effective date of the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974, if such act or omission does not constitute a violation of any such provision, as amended by the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974.

Nothing in this subsection shall affect any proceeding pending in any court of the United States on the effective date of this section.

ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 407. (a) In any case in which the Board of Supervisory Officers, after notice and opportunity for a hearing on the record in accordance with section 554 of title 5, United States Code, makes a finding that a person who, while a candidate for Federal office, failed to file a report required by title III of this Act, and such finding is made before the expiration of the time within which the failure to file such report may be prosecuted as a violation of such title III, such person shall be disqualified from becoming a candidate in any future election for Federal office for a period of time beginning on the date of such finding and ending one year after the expiration of the term of the Federal office for which such person was a candidate.

(b) Any finding by the Board under subsection (a) shall be subject to judicial review in accordance with the provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. [406.] 408. Except as provided for in section 401 of this Act, the provisions of this Act shall become effective on December 31, 1971, or sixty days after the date of enactment of this Act, whichever is later.

TITLE 5, UNITED STATES CODE

CHAPTER 15—POLITICAL ACTIVITY OF CERTAIN STATE AND LOCAL EMPLOYEES

SEC.

§ 1501. Definitions

For the purpose of this chapter—

(1) "State" means a State or territory or possession of the United States;

(2) "State or local agency" means the executive branch of a State, municipality, or other political subdivision of a State, or an agency or department thereof;

(3) "Federal agency" means an Executive agency or other agency of the United States, but does not include a member bank of the Federal Reserve System; and

(4) "State or local officer or employee" means an individual employed by a State or local agency whose principal employment is in connection with an activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States or a Federal agency, but does not include—

(A) an individual who exercises no functions in connection with that activity; or

(B) an individual employed by an educational or research institution, establishment, agency, or system which is supported in whole or in part by a State or political subdivision thereof, or by a recognized religious, philanthropic, or cultural organization[; and].

[(5) the phrase "an active part in political management or in political campaigns" means those acts of political management or political campaigning which were prohibited on the part of employees in the competitive service before July 19, 1940, by determinations of the Civil Service Commission under the rules prescribed by the President.]

§ 1502. Influencing elections; taking part in political campaigns; prohibitions; exceptions

(a) A State or local officer or employee may not—

(1) use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interferring with or affecting the result of an election or a nomination for office;

(2) directly or indirectly coerce, attempt to coerce, command, or advise a State or local officer or employee to pay, lend, or contribute anything of value to a party, committee, organization, agency, or person for political purposes; or

[(3) take an active part in political management or in political campaigns.]

(3) be a candidate for elective office.

(b) A State or local officer or employee retains the right to vote as he chooses and to express his opinions on political subjects and candidates.

(c) Subsection (a)(3) of this section does not apply to—

(1) the Governor or Lieutenant Governor of a State or an individual authorized by law to act as Governor;

(2) the mayor of a city;

(3) a duly elected head of an executive department of a State or municipality who is not classified under a State or municipal merit or civil service system; or

(4) an individual holding elective office.

§1503 Nonpartisan political activity permitted.

[Section 1502(a)(3) of this title does not prohibit political activity in connection with—

[(1) an election and the preceding campaign if none of the candidates is to be nominated or elected at that election as representing a party any of whose candidates for presidential elector received votes in the last preceding election at which presidential electors were selected; or

[(2) a question which is not specifically identified with a National or State political party.

For the purpose of this section, questions relating to constitutional amendments, referendums, approval of municipal ordinances, and others of a similar character, are deemed not specifically identified with a National or State political party.]

§1503. Nonpartisan candidacies permitted

Section 1502(a)(3) of this title does not prohibit any State or local officer or employee from being a candidate in any election if none of the candidates is to be nominated or elected at such election as representing a party any of whose candidates for Presidential elector received votes in the last preceding election at which Presidential electors were selected.

§1504. Investigations; notice of hearing

When a Federal agency charged with the duty of making a loan or grant of funds of the United States for use in an activity by a State or local officer or employee has reason to believe that the officer or employee has violated section 1502 of this title, it shall report the matter to the Civil Service Commission. On receipt of the report, or on receipt of other information which seems to the Commission to warrant an investigation, the Commission shall—

(1) fix a time and place for a hearing; and

(2) send, by registered or certified mail, to the officer or employee charged with the violation and to the State or local agency employing him a notice setting forth a summary of the alleged violation and giving the time and place of the hearing.

The hearing may not be held earlier than 10 days after the mailing of the notice.

§ 1505. Hearings; adjudications; notice of determinations

Either the State or local officer or employee or the State or local agency employing him, or both, are entitled to appear with counsel at the hearing under section 1504 of this title, and be heard. After this hearing, the Civil Service Commission shall—

(1) determine whether a violation of section 1502 of this title has occurred;

(2) determine whether the violation warrants the removal of the officer or employee from his office or employment; and

(3) notify the officer or employee and the agency of the determination by registered or certified mail.

§ 1506. Orders; withholding loans or grants; limitations

(a) When the Civil Service Commission finds—

(1) that a State or local officer or employee has not been removed from his office or employment within 30 days after notice of a determination by the Commission that he has violated section 1502 of this title and that the violation warrants removal; or

(2) that the State or local officer or employee has been removed and has been appointed within 18 months after his removal to an office or employment in the same State in a State or local agency which does not receive loans or grants from a Federal agency;

the Commission shall make and certify to the appropriate Federal agency an order requiring that agency to withhold from its loans or grants to the State or local agency to which notice was given an amount equal to 2 years' pay at the rate the officer or employee was receiving at the time of the violation. When the State or local agency to which appointment within 18 months after removal has been made is one that receives loans or grants from a Federal agency, the Commission order shall direct that the withholding be made from that State or local agency.

(b) Notice of the order shall be sent by registered or certified mail to the State or local agency from which the amount is ordered to be withheld. After the order becomes final, the Federal agency to which the order is certified shall withhold the amount in accordance with the terms of the order. Except as provided by section 1508 of this title, a determination or order of the Commission becomes final at the end of 30 days after mailing the notice of the determination or order.

(c) The Commission may not require an amount to be withheld from a loan or grant pledged by a State or local agency as security for its bonds or notes if the withholding of that amount would jeopardize the payment of the principal or interest on the bonds or notes.

§ 1507. Subpenas and depositions

(a) The Civil Service Commission may require by subpena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence relating to any matter before it as a result of this chapter. Any member of the Commission may sign subpenas, and members of the Commission and its examiners when authorized by the Commission may administer oaths, examine witnesses, and receive evidence. The attendance of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence may be required from any place in the United States at the designated place of hearing. In case of disobedience to a subpena the Commission may invoke the aid of a court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence. In case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpena issued to a person, the United States District Court within whose jurisdiction the inquiry is carried on may issue an order requiring him to appear before the Commission, or to produce documentary evidence if so ordered, or to give evidence concerning the matter in question; and any failure to obey the order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof.

(b) The Commission may order testimony to be taken by deposition at any stage of a proceeding or investigation before it as a result of this chapter. Depositions may be taken before an individual designated by the Commission and having the power to administer oaths. Testimony shall be reduced to writing by the individual taking the deposition, or under his direction, and shall be subscribed by the deponent. Any person may be compelled to appear and depose and to produce documentary evidence before the Commission as provided by this section.

(c) A person may not be excused from attending and testifying or from producing documentary evidence or in obedience to a subpena on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is compelled to testify, or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, before the Commission in obedience to a subpena issued by it. A person so testifying is not exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

§ 1508. Judicial review

A party aggrieved by a determination or order of the Civil Service Commission under section 1504, 1505, or 1506 of this title may, within 30 days after the mailing of notice of the determination or order, institute proceedings for review thereof by filing a petition in the United States District Court for the district in which the State or local officer or employee resides. The institution of the proceedings does not operate as a stay of the determination or order unless—

(1) the court specifically orders a stay; and

(2) the officer or employee is suspended from his office or employment while the proceedings are pending.

A copy of the petition shall immediately be served on the Commission, and thereupon the Commission shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record on which the determination or order was made. The court shall review the entire record including questions of fact and questions of law. If application is made to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and it is shown to the satisfaction of the court that the additional evidence may materially affect the result of the proceedings and that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce this evidence in the hearing before the Commission, the court may direct that the additional evidence be taken before the Commission in the manner and on the terms and conditions fixed by the court. The Commission may modify its findings of fact or its determination or order in view of the additional evidence and shall file with the court the modified findings, determination, or order; and the modified findings of fact, if supported by substantial evidence, are conclusive. The court shall affirm the determination or order, or the modified determination or order, if the court determines that it is in accordance with law. If the court determines that the determination or order, or the modified determination or order, is not in accordance with law, the court shall remand the proceeding to the Commission with directions either to make a determination or order determined by the court to be lawful or to take such further proceedings as, in the opinion of the court, the law requires. The judgment and decree of the court are final, subject to review by the appropriate United States Court of Appeals as in other cases, and the judgment and decree of the court of appeals are final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States on certiorari or certification as provided by section 1254 of title 28. If a provision of this section is held to be invalid as applied to a party by a determination or order of the Commission, the determination or order becomes final and effective as to that party as if the provision had not been enacted.

SEC. 276. CERTAIN INDIRECT CONTRIBUTIONS TO POLITICAL PARTIES.

(a) DISALLOWANCE OF DEDUCTIONS.—No deduction otherwise allowable under this chapter shall be allowed for any amount paid or incurred for—

(1) advertising in a convention program of a political party, or in any other publication if any part of the proceeds of such publication directly or indirectly inures (or is intended to inure) to or for the use of a political party or a political candidate,

(2) admission to any dinner or program, if any part of the proceeds of such dinner or program directly or indirectly inures (or is intended to inure) to or for the use of a political party or a political candidate, or

(3) admission to an inaugural ball, inaugural gala, inaugural parade, or inaugural concert, or to any similar event which is identified with a political party or a political candidate.

(b) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

(1) POLITICAL PARTY.—The term "political party" means—

(A) a political party;

(B) a National, State, or local committee of a political party; or

(C) a committee, association, or organization, whether incorporated or not, which directly or indirectly accepts contributions (as defined in section 271(b)(2)) or make expenditures (as defined in section 271(b)(3)) for the purpose of influencing or attempting to influence the selection, nomination, or election of any individual to any Federal, State, or local elective public office, or the election of presidential and vice-presidential electors, whether or not such individual or electors are selected, nominated, or elected.

(2) PROCEEDS INURING TO OR FOR THE USE OF POLITICAL CANDIDATES.—Proceeds shall be treated as inuring to or for the use of a political candidate only if—

(A) such proceeds may be used directly or indirectly for the purpose of furthering his candidacy for selection, nomination, or election to any elective public office, and

(B) such proceeds are not received by such candidate in the ordinary course of a trade or business (other than the trade or business of holding elective public office).

[(c) ADVERTISING IN A CONVENTION PROGRAM OF A NATIONAL POLITICAL CONVENTION.—Subsection (a) shall not apply to any amount paid or incurred for advertising in a convention program of a political party distributed in connection with a convention held for the purpose of nominating candidates for the offices of President and Vice President of the United States, if the proceeds from such program are used solely to defray the costs of conducting such convention (or a subsequent convention of such party held for such purpose) and the amount paid or incurred for such advertising is reasonable in light of the business the taxpayer may expect to receive—

[(1) directly as a result of such advertising, or

[(2) as a result of the convention being held in an area in which the taxpayer has a principal place of business.]

SEC. 6012. PERSONS REQUIRED TO MAKE RETURNS OF INCOME.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Returns with respect to income taxes under subtitle A shall be made by the following:

(1)(A) Every individual having for the taxable year a gross income of $750 or more, except that a return shall not be required of an individual (other than an individual referred to in section 142(b))—

(i) who has not married (determined by applying section 143(a)) and for the taxable year has a gross income of less than $2,050, or

(ii) who is entitled to make a joint return under section 6013 and whose gross income, when combined with the gross income of his spouse, is, for the taxable year, less than $2,800 but only if such individual and his spouse, at the close of the taxable year, had the same household as their home.

Clause (ii) shall not apply if for the taxable year such spouse makes a separate return or any other taxpayer is entitled to an exemption for such spouse under section 151(e).

(B) The $2,050 amount specified in subparagraph (A)(i) shall be increased to $2,800 in the case of an individual entitled to an additional personal exemption under section 151(c)(1), and the $2,800 amount specified in subparagraph (A)(ii) shall be increased by $750 for each additional personal exemption to which the individual or his spouse is entitled under section 151(c);

(C) Every individual having for the taxable year a gross income of $750 or more and to whom section 141(e) (relating to limitations in case of certain dependent taxpayers) applies;

(2) Every corporation subject to taxation under subtitle A;

(3) Every estate the gross income of which for the taxable year is $600 or more;

(4) Every trust having for the taxable year any taxable income, or having gross income of $600 or over, regardless of the amount of taxable income; and

(5) Every estate or trust of which any beneficiary is a nonresident alien;

except that subject to such conditions, limitations, and exceptions and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate, nonresident alien individuals subject to the tax imposed by section 871 and foreign corporations subject to the tax imposed by section 881 may be exempted from the requirement of making returns under this section. The Secretary or his delegate shall, by regulation, exempt from the requirement of making returns under this section any political committee (as defined in section 301(d) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971) having no gross income for the taxable year.

Subtitle H—Financing of Presidential Election Campaigns

CHAPTER 95—PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN FUND

SEC. 9001. SHORT TITLE.

This chapter may be cited as the "Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act."

SEC. 9002. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this chapter—

(1) The term "authorized committee" means, with respect to the candidates of a political party for President and Vice President of the United States, [any political committee which is authorized in writing by such candidates to incur expenses to further the election of such candidates. Such authorization shall be addressed to the chairman of such political committee, and a copy of such authorization shall be filed by such candidates with the Comptroller General. Any withdrawal of any authorization shall also be in writing and shall be addressed and filed in the same manner as the authorization] the political committee designated under section 302(f)(1) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 by the candidate of a political party for President of the United States as his principal campaign committee.

(2) The term "candidate" means, with respect to any presidential election, an individual who (A) has been nominated for election to the office of President of the United States or the office of Vice President of the United States by a major party, or (B) has qualified to have his name on the election ballot (or to have the names of electors pledged to him on the election ballot) as the candidate of a political party for election to either such office in 10 or more States. For purposes of paragraphs (6) and (7) of this section and purposes of section 9004(a)(2), the term "candidate" means, with respect to any preceding presidential election, an individual who received popular votes for the office of President in such election.

(3) The term "Comptroller General" means the Comptroller General of the United States.

(4) The term "eligible candidates" means the candidates of a political party for President and Vice President of the United States who have met all applicable conditions for eligibility to receive payments under this chapter set forth in section 9003.

(5) The term "fund" means the Presidential Election Campaign Fund established by section 9006(a).

(6) The term "major party" means, with respect to any presidential election, a political party whose candidate for the office of President in the preceding presidential election received, as the candidate of such party, 25 percent or more of the total number of popular votes received by all candidates for such office.

(7) The term "minor party" means with respect to any presidential election, a political party whose candidate for the office of President in the preceding presidential election received, as the candidate of such party, 5 percent or more but less than 25 percent of the total number of popular votes received by all candidates for such office.

(8) The term "new party" means, with respect to any presidential election, a political party which is neither a major party nor a minor party.

(9) The term "political committee" means any committee, association, or organization (whether or not incorporated) which accepts contributions or makes expenditures for the purpose of influencing, or attempting to influence the nomination or election of one or more individuals to Federal, State, or local elective public office.

(10) The term "presidential election" means the election of presidential and vice-presidential electors.

(11) The term "qualified campaign expense" means an expense—

(A) incurred (i) by the candidate of a political party for the office of President to further his election to such office or to further the election of the candidate of such political party for the office of Vice President, or both (ii) by the candidate of a political party for the office of Vice President to further his election to such office or to further the election of the candidate of such political party for the office of President, or both, or (iii) by [an] the authorized committee of the candidates of a political party for the offices of President and Vice President to further the election of either or both of such candidates to such offices,

(B) incurred within the expenditure report period (as defined in paragraph (12)), or incurred before the beginning of such period to the extent such expense is for property services, or facilities used during such period, and

(C) neither the incurring nor payment of which constitutes a violation of any law of the United States or of the State in which such expense is incurred or paid.

An expense shall be considered as incurred by a candidate or [an] his authorized committee, if it is incurred by a person authorized by such candidate or such committee, as the case may be, to incur such expense on behalf of such candidate or such committee. If [an] the authorized committee of the candidates of a political party for President and Vice President of the United States also incurs expenses to further the election of one or more other individuals to Federal, State, or local elective public office, expenses incurred by such committee which are not specifically to further the election of such other individual or individuals shall be considered as incurred to further the election of such candidates for President and Vice President in such proportion as the Comptroller General prescribes by rules or regulations.

(12) The term "expenditure report period" with respect to any presidential election means—

(A) in the case of a major party, the period beginning with the first day of September before the election, or if earlier, with the date on which such major party at its national convention nominated its candidate for election to the office of President of the United States, and ending 30 days after the date of the presidential election; and

(B) in the case of a party which is not a major party, the same period as the expenditure report period of a major party which has the shortest expenditure report period for such presidential election under subparagraph (A).

SEC. 9003. CONDITION FOR ELIGIBILITY FOR PAYMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In order to be eligible to receive any payments under section 9006, the candidates of a political party in a presidential election shall, in writing—

(1) agree to obtain and furnish to the Comptroller General such evidence as he may request of the qualified campaign expenses [with respect to which payment is sought] of such candidates,

(2) agree to keep and furnish to the Comptroller General such records, books, and other information as he may request, and

(3) agree to an audit and examination by the Comptroller General under section 9007 and to pay any amounts required to be paid under such section [, and].

[(4) agree to furnish statements of qualified campaign expenses and proposed qualified campaign expenses required under section 9008.]

(b) MAJOR PARTIES.—In order to be eligible to receive any payments under section 9006, the candidates of a major party in a presidential election shall certify to the Comptroller General, under penalty of perjury, that—

(1) such candidates and their authorized [committees] committee will not incur qualified campaign expenses in excess of the aggregate payments to which they will be entitled under section 9004, and

(2) no contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses have been or will be accepted by such candidates or [any of] their authorized [committees] committee except to the extent necessary to make up any deficiency in payments received out of the fund on account of the application of section 9006(d), and no contributions to defray expenses which would be qualified campaign expenses but for subparagraph (C) of section 9002(11) have been or will be accepted by such candidates or [any of] their authorized [committees] committee.

Such certification shall be made within such time prior to the day of the presidential election as the Comptroller General shall prescribe by rules or regulations.

(c) MINOR AND NEW PARTIES.—In order to be eligible to receive any payments under section 9006, the candidates of a minor or new party in a presidential election shall certify to the Comptroller General, under penalty of perjury, that—

(1) such candidates and their authorized [committees] committee will not incur qualified campaign expenses in excess of the aggregate payments to which the eligible candidates of a major party are entitled under section 9004, and

(2) such candidates and their authorized [committees] committee will accept and expend or retain contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses only to the extent that the qualified campaign expenses incurred by such candidates and their authorized [committees] committee certified to under paragraph (1) exceed the aggregate payments received by such candidates out of the fund pursuant to section 9006.

Such certification shall be made within such time prior to the day of the presidential election as the Comptroller General shall prescribe by rules or regulations.

SEC. 9004. ENTITLEMENT OF ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES TO PAYMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the provisions of this chapter—

(1) The eligible candidates of [a] each major party in a presidential election shall be entitled to equal payments under section 9006 [equal in the aggregate to 15 cents multiplied by the total number of residents within the United States who have attained the age of 18, as determined by the Bureau of the Census, as of the first day of June of the year preceding the year of the presidential election] in an amount which, in the aggregate, shall not exceed $20,000,000.

(2)(A) The eligible candidates of a minor party in a presidential election shall be entitled to payments under section 9006 equal in the aggregate to an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount [computed] allowed under paragraph (1) for a major party as the number of popular votes received by the candidate for President of the minor party, as such candidate, in the preceding presidential election bears to the average number of popular votes received by the candidates for President of the major parties in the preceding presidential election.

(B) If the candidate of one or more political parties (not including a major party) for the office of President was a candidate for such office in the preceding presidential election and received 5 percent or more but less than 25 percent of the total number of popular votes received by all candidates for such office, such candidate and his running mate for the office of Vice President, upon compliance with the provisions of section 9003(a) and (c), shall be treated as eligible candidates entitled to payments under section 9006 in an amount computed as provided in subparagraph (A) by taking into account all the popular votes received by such candidate for the office of President in the preceding presidential election. If eligible candidates of a minor party are entitled to payments under this subparagraph, such entitlement shall be reduced by the amount of the entitlement allowed under subparagraph (A).

(3) The eligible candidates of a minor party or a new party in a presidential election whose candidate for President in such election receives, as such candidate, 5 percent or more of the total number of popular votes cast for the office of President in such election shall be entitled to payments under section 9006 equal in the aggregate to an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount [computed] allowed under paragraph (1) for a major party as the number of popular votes received by such candidate in such election bears to the average number of popular votes received in such election by the candidates for President of the major parties. In the case of eligible candidates entitled to payments under paragraph (2), the amount allowable under this paragraph shall be limited to the amount, if any, by which the entitlement under the preceding sentence exceeds the amount of the entitlement under paragraph (2).

(b) LIMITATIONS.—The aggregate payments to which the eligible candidates of a political party shall be entitled under subsections (a)(2) and (3) with respect to a presidential election shall not exceed an amount equal to the lower of—

(1) the amount of qualified campaign expenses incurred by such eligible candidates and their authorized [committees,] committee, reduced by the amount of contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses received and expended or retained by such eligible candidates and such [committees,] committee, or

(2) the aggregate payments to which the eligible candidates of a major party are entitled under subsection (a)(1), reduced by the amount of contributions described in paragraph (1) of this subsection.

(c) RESTRICTIONS.—The eligible candidates of a political party shall be entitled to payments under subsection (a) only—

(1) to defray qualified campaign expenses incurred by such eligible candidates or their authorized [committees,] committee, or

(2) to repay loans the proceeds of which were used to defray such qualified campaign expenses, or otherwise to restore funds (other than contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses received and expended by such candidates or such [committees] committee), used to defray such qualified campaign expenses.

SEC. 9005. CERTIFICATION BY COMPTROLLER GENERAL.

[(a) INITIAL CERTIFICATIONS.—On the basis of the evidence, books, records, and information furnished by the eligible candidates of a political party and prior to examination and audit under section 9007, the Comptroller General shall certify from time to time to the Secretary for payment to such candidates under section 9006 the payments to which such candidates are entitled under section 9004.]

(a) INITIAL CERTIFICATIONS.—Not later than 10 days after the candidates of a political party for President and Vice President of the United States have met all applicable conditions for eligibility to receive payments under this chapter set forth in section 9003, the Comptroller General shall certify to the Secretary for payment to such eligible candidates under section 9006 payment in full of amounts to which such candidates are entitled under section 9004.

(b) FINALTY OF CERTIFICATIONS AND DETERMINATIONS.—Initial certifications by the Comptroller General under subsection (a), and all determinations made by him under this chapter, shall be final and conclusive, except to the extent that they are subject to examination and audit by the Comptroller General under section 9007 and judicial review under section 9011.

SEC. 9006. PAYMENTS TO ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF CAMPAIGN FUND.—There is hereby established on the books of the Treasury of the United States a special fund to be known as the "Presidential Election Campaign Fund." The Secretary shall, [as provided by appropriation acts] from time to time, transfer to the fund an amount not in excess of the sum of the amounts designated (subsequent to the previous Presidential election) to the fund by individuals under section 6096. There is appropriated to the fund for each fiscal year, out of amounts in the general fund of the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount equal to the amounts so designated during each fiscal year, which shall remain available to the fund without fiscal year limitation.

(b) TRANSFER TO THE GENERAL FUND. If, after a presidential election and after all eligible candidates have been paid the amount which they are entitled to receive under this chapter, there are moneys remaining in the fund, the Secretary shall transfer the moneys so remaining to the general fund of the Treasury.

(c) PAYMENTS FROM THE FUND.—Upon receipt of a certification from the Comptroller General under section 9005 for payment to the eligible candidates of a political party, the Secretary shall pay to such candidates out of the fund the amount certified by the Comptroller General. Amounts paid to any such candidates shall be under the control of such candidates.

(d) INSUFFICIENT AMOUNTS IN FUND.—If at the time of a certification by the Comptroller General under section 9005 for payment to the eligible candidates of a political party, the Secretary or his delegate determines that the moneys in the fund are not, or may not be, sufficient to satisfy the full entitlements of the eligible candidates of all political parties, he shall withhold from such payment such amount as he determines to be necessary to assure that the eligible candidates of each political party will receive their pro rata share of their full entitlement. Amounts withheld by reason of the preceding sentence shall be paid when the Secretary or his delegate determines that there are sufficient moneys in the fund to pay such amounts, or portions thereof, to all eligible candidates from whom amounts have been withheld, but, if there are not sufficient moneys in the fund to satisfy the full entitlement of the eligible candidates of all political parties, the amounts so withheld shall be paid in such manner that the eligible candidates of each political party receive their pro rata share of their full entitlement.

SEC. 9007. EXAMINATIONS AND AUDITS; REPAYMENTS.

(a) EXAMINATIONS AND AUDITS.—After each presidential election, the Comptroller General shall conduct a thorough examination and audit of the qualified campaign expenses of the candidates of each political party for President and Vice President.

(b) REPAYMENTS.—

(1) If the Comptroller General determines that any portion of the payments made to the eligible candidates of a political party under section 9006 was in excess of the aggregate payments to which candidates were entitled under section 9004, he shall so notify such candidates, and such candidates shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to such portion.

(2) If the Comptroller General determines that the eligible candidates of a political party and their authorized [committees] committee incurred qualified campaign expenses in excess of the aggregate payments to which the eligible candidates of a major party were entitled under section 9004, he shall notify such candidates of the amount of such excess and such candidates shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to such amount.

(3) If the Comptroller General determines that the eligible candidates of a major party or [any] the authorized committee of such candidates accepted contributions (other than contributions to make up deficiencies in payments out of the fund on account of the application of section 9006(d)) to defray qualified campaign expenses (other than qualified campaign expenses with respect to which payment is required under paragraph (2)), he shall notify such candidates of the amount of the contributions so accepted, and such candidates shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to such amount.

(4) If the Comptroller General determines that any amount of any payment made to the eligible candidates of a political party under section 9006 was used for any purpose other than—

(A) to defray the qualified campaign expenses with respect to which such payment was made, or

(B) to repay loans the proceeds of which were used, or otherwise to restore funds (other than contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses which were received and expended) which were used, to defray such qualified campaign expenses, he shall notify such candidates of the amount so used, and such candidates shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to such amount.

(5) No payment shall be required from the eligible candidates of a political party under this subsection to the extent that such payment, when added to other payments required from such candidates under this subsection exceeds the amount of payments received by such candidates under section 9006.

(c) NOTIFICATION.—No notification shall be made by the Comptroller General under subsection (b) with respect to a presidential election more than 3 years after the day of such election.

(d) DEPOSIT OF REPAYMENTS.—All payments received by the Secretary under subsection (b) shall be deposited by him in the general fund of the Treasury.

[SEC. 9008. INFORMATION ON PROPOSED EXPENSES.

[(a) REPORTS BY CANDIDATES.—The candidates of a political party for President and Vice President in a presidential election shall, from time to time as the Comptroller General may require, furnish to the Comptroller General a detailed statement, in such form as the Comptroller General may prescribe, of—

[(1) the qualified campaign expenses incurred by them and their authorized committees prior to the date of such statement (whether or not evidence of such expenses has been furnished for purposes of section 9005), and

[(2) the qualified campaign expenses which they and their authorized committees propose to incur on or after the date of such statement.

The Comptroller General shall require a statement under this subsection from such candidates of each political party at least once each week during the second, third, and fourth weeks preceding the day of the presidential election and at least twice during the week preceding such day.

[(b) PUBLICATION.—The Comptroller General shall, as soon as possible after he receives each statement under subsection (a), prepare and publish a summary of such statement, together with any other data or information which he deems advisable, in the Federal Register. Such summary shall not include any information which identifies any individual who made a designation under section 6096.]

SEC. 9008. PAYMENTS FOR PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATING CONVENTIONS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF ACCOUNTS.—The Secretary shall maintain in the fund, in addition to any account which he maintains under section 9006(a), a separate account for the national committee of each major party and minor party. The Secretary shall deposit in each such account an amount equal to the amount which each such committee may receive under subsection (b). Such deposits shall be drawn from amounts designated by individuals under section 6096 and shall be made before any transfer is made to any account for any eligible candidate under section 9006(a).

(b) ENTITLEMENT TO PAYMENTS FROM THE FUND.—

(1) MAJOR PARTIES.—Subject to the provisions of this section, the national committee of a major party shall be entitled to payments under paragraph (3), with respect to any presidential nominating convention, in amounts which, in the aggregate, shall not exceed $2,000,000.

(2) MINOR PARTIES.—Subject to the provisions of this section, the national committee of a minor party shall be entitled to payments under paragraph (3), with respect to any presidential nominating convention, in amounts which, in the aggregate, shall not exceed an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount the national committee of a major party is entitled to receive under paragraph (1) as the number of popular votes received by the candidate for President of the minor party, as such candidate, in the preceding presidential election bears to the average number of popular votes received by the candidates for President of the major parties in the preceding presidential election.

(3) PAYMENTS.—Upon receipt of certification from the Comptroller General under subsection (g), the Secretary shall make payments from the appropriate account maintained under subsection (a) to the national committee of a major party or minor party which elects to receive its entitlement under this subsection. Such payments shall be available for use by such committee in accordance with the provisions of subsection (c).

(4) LIMITATION.—Payments to the national committee of a major party or minor party under this subsection from the account designated for such committee shall be limited to the amounts in such account at the time of payment.

(c) USE OF FUNDS.—No part of any payment made under subsection (b) shall be used to defray the expenses of any candidate or delegate who is participating in any presidential nominating convention. Such payments shall be used only—

(1) to defray expenses incurred with respect to a presidential nominating convention (including the payment of deposits) by or on behalf of the national committee receiving such payments; or

(2) to repay loans the proceeds of which were used to defray such expenses, or otherwise to restore funds (other than contributions to defray such expenses received by such committee) used to defray such expenses.

(d) LIMITATION OF EXPENDITURES.—

(1) MAJOR PARTIES.—Except as provided by paragraph (3), the national committee of a major party may not make expenditures with respect to a presidential nominating convention which, in the aggregate, exceed the amount of payments to which such committee is entitled under subsection (b)(1).

(2) MINOR PARTIES.—Except as provided by paragraph (3), the national committee of a minor party may not make expenditures with respect to a presidential nominating convention which, in the aggregate, exceed the amount of the entitlement of the national committee of a major party under subsection (b)(1).

(3) EXCEPTION.—The Presidential Election Campaign Fund Advisory Board may authorize the national committee of a major party or minor party to make expenditures which, in the aggregate, exceed the limitation established by paragraph (1) or paragraph (2) of this subsection. Such authorization shall be based upon a determination by such Board that, due to extraordinary and unforeseen circumstances, such expenditures are necessary to assure the effective operation of the presidential nominating convention by such committee.

(e) AVAILABILITY OF PAYMENTS.—The national committee of a major party or minor party may receive payments under subsection (b)(3) beginning on July 1 of the calendar year immediately preceding the calendar year in which a presidential nominating convention of the political party involved is held.

(f) TRANSFER TO THE FUND.—If, after the close of a presidential nominating convention and after the national committee of the political party involved has been paid the amount which it is entitled to receive under this section, there are moneys remaining in the account of such national committee, the Secretary shall transfer the moneys so remaining to the fund.

(g) CERTIFICATION BY COMPTROLLER GENERAL.—Any major party or minor party may file a statement with the Comptroller General in such form and manner and at such times as he may require, designating the national committee of such party. Such statement shall include the information required by section 303(b) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, together with such additional information as the Comptroller General may require. Upon receipt of a statement filed under the preceding sentences, the Comptroller General promptly shall verify such statement according to such procedures and criteria as he may establish and shall certify to the Secretary for payment in full to any such committee of amounts to which such committee may be entitled under subsection (b). Such certifications shall be subject to an examination and audit which the Comptroller General shall conduct no later than December 31 of the calendar year in which the presidential nominating convention involved is held.

(h) REPAYMENTS.—The Comptroller General shall have the same authority to require repayments from the national committee of a major party or minor party as he has with respect to repayments from any eligible candidate under section 9007(b). The provisions of section 9007(c) and section 9007(d) shall apply with respect to any repayment required by the Comptroller General under this subsection.

SEC. 9009. REPORTS TO CONGRESS; REGULATIONS.

(a) REPORTS.—The Comptroller General shall, as soon as practicable after each presidential election, submit a full report to the Senate and House of Representatives setting forth—

(1) the qualified campaign expenses (shown in such detail as the Comptroller General determines necessary) incurred by the candidates of each political party and their authorized committees;

(2) the amounts certified by him under section 9005 for payment to the eligible candidates of each political party; [and]

(3) the amount of payments, if any, required from such candidates under section 9007, and the reasons for each payment required[.]; and

(4) the expenses incurred by the national committee of a major party or minor party with respect to a presidential nominating convention;

(5) the amounts certified by him under section 9008(g) for payment to each such committee; and

(6) the amount of payments, if any, required from such committees under section 9008(h), and the reasons for each such payment.

Each report submitted pursuant to this section shall be printed as a Senate document.

(b) REGULATIONS, ETC.—The Comptroller General is authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations in accordance with the provisions of subsection (c), to conduct such examinations and audits (in addition to the examinations and audits required by section 9007(a)), to conduct such investigations, and to require the keeping and submission of such books, records, and information, as he deems necessary to carry out the functions and duties imposed on him by this chapter.

(c) REVIEW OF REGULATIONS.—

(1) The Comptroller General, before prescribing any rule or regulation under subsection (b), shall transmit a statement with respect to such rule or regulation to the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate and to the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives, in accordance with the provisions of this subsection. Such statement shall set forth the proposed rule or regulation and shall contain a detailed explanation and justification of such rule or regulation.

(2) If either such committee does not, through appropriate action, disapprove the proposed rule or regulation set forth in such statement no later than 30 legislative days after receipt of such statement, then the Comptroller General may prescribe such rule or regulation. The Comptroller General may not prescribe any rule or regulation which is disapproved by either such committee under this paragraph.

(3) For purposes of this subsection, the term "legislative days" does not include any calendar day on which both Houses of the Congress are not in session.

SEC. 9010. PARTICIPATION BY COMPTROLLER GENERAL IN JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.

(a) APPEARANCE BY COUNSEL.—The Comptroller General is authorized to appear in and defend against any action filed under section 9011, either by attorneys employed in his office or by counsel whom he may appoint without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and whose compensation he may fix without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title.

(b) RECOVERY OF CERTAIN PAYMENTS.—The Comptroller General is authorized through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a) to appear in the district courts of the United States to seek recovery of any amounts determined to be payable to the Secretary as a result of examination and audit made pursuant to section 9007.

(c) DECLARATORY AND INJUNCTIVE RELIEF.—The Comptroller General is authorized through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a) to petition the courts of the United States for declaratory or injunctive relief concerning any civil matter covered by the provisions of this subtitle or section 6096. Upon application of the Comptroller General, an action brought pursuant to this subsection shall be heard and determined by a court of three judges in accordance with the provisions of section 2284 of title 28, United States Code, and any appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court. It shall be the duty of the judges designated to hear the case to assign the case for hearing at the earliest practicable date, to participate in the hearing and determination thereof, and to cause the case to be in every way expedited.

(d) APPEAL.—The Comptroller General is authorized on behalf of the United States to appeal from, and to petition the Supreme Court for certiorari to review, judgments or decrees entered with respect to actions in which he appears pursuant to the authority provided in this section.

SEC. 9011. JUDICIAL REVIEW.

(a) REVIEW OF CERTIFICATION, DETERMINATION, OR OTHER ACTION BY THE COMPTROLLER GENERAL.—Any certification, determination, or other action by the Comptroller General made or taken pursuant to the provisions of this chapter shall be subject to review by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia upon petition filed in such Court by any interested person. Any petition filed pursuant to this section shall be filed within thirty days after the certification, determination, or other action by the Comptroller General for which review is sought.

(b) SUITS TO IMPLEMENT CHAPTER.—

(1) The Comptroller General, the national committee of any political party, and individuals eligible to vote for President are authorized to institute such actions, including actions for declaratory judgment or injunctive relief, as may be appropriate to implement or construe any provision of this chapter.

(2) The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction of proceedings instituted pursuant to this subsection and shall exercise the same without regard to whether a person asserting rights under provisions of this subsection shall have exhausted any administrative or other remedies that may be provided at law. Such proceedings shall be heard and determined by a court of three judges in accordance with the provisions of section 1284 of title 28, United States Code, and any appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court. It shall be the duty of the judges designated to hear the case to assign the case for hearing at the earliest practicable date, to participate in the hearing and determination thereof, and to cause the case to be in every way expedited.

SEC. 9012. CRIMINAL PENALTIES.

(a) EXCESS [CAMPAIGN] EXPENSES.—

(1) It shall be unlawful for an eligible candidate of a political party for President and Vice President in a presidential election or [any of his authorized committees] his authorized committee knowingly and willfully to incur qualified campaign expenses in excess of the aggregate payments to which the eligible candidates of a major party are entitled under section 9004 with respect to such election. It shall be unlawful for the national committee of a major party or minor party knowingly and willfully to incur expenses with respect to a presidential nominating convention in excess of the expenditure limitation applicable with respect to such committee under section 9008(d), unless the incurring of such expenses is authorized by the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Advisory Board under section 9008(d)(3).

(2) Any person who violates paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than one year or both. In the case of a violation by an authorized committee, any officer or member of such committee who knowingly and willfully consents to such violation shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

(b) CONTRIBUTIONS.—

(1) It shall be unlawful for an eligible candidate of a major party in a presidential election or [any of his authorized committees] his authorized committee knowingly and willfully to accept any contribution to defray qualified campaign expenses, except to the extent necessary to make up any deficiency in payments received out of the fund on account of the application of section 9006(d), or to defray expenses which would be qualified campaign expenses but for subparagraph (C) of section 9002(11).

(2) It shall be unlawful for an eligible candidate of a political party (other than a major party) in a presidential election or [any of his authorized committees] his authorized committee knowingly and willfully to accept and expend or retain contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses in an amount which exceeds the qualified campaign expenses incurred with respect to such election by such eligible candidate and his authorized committees.

(3) Any person who violates paragraph (1) or (2) shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both. In the case of a violation by an authorized committee, any officer or member of such committee who knowingly and willfully consents to such violation shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

(c) UNLAWFUL USE OF PAYMENTS.—

(1) It shall be unlawful for any person who receives any payment under section 9006, or to whom any portion of any payment received under such section is transferred, knowingly and willfully to use, or authorize the use of, such payment or such portion for any purpose other than—

(A) to defray the qualified campaign expenses with respect to which such payment was made, or

(B) to repay loans the proceeds of which were used, or otherwise to restore funds (other than contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses which were received and expended) which were used, to defray such qualified campaign expenses.

(2) It shall be unlawful for the national committee of a major party or minor party which receives any payment under section 9008(b)(3) to use, or authorize the use of, such payment for any purpose other than a purpose authorized by section 9008(c).

[(2)] (3) Any person who violates paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

(d) FALSE STATEMENTS, ETC.—

(1) It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully—

(A) to furnish any false, fictitious, or fraudulent evidence, books, or information to the Comptroller General under this subtitle, or to include in any evidence, books, or information so furnished any misrepresentation of a material fact, or to falsify or conceal any evidence, books, or information relevant to a certification by the Comptroller General or an examination and audit by the Comptroller General under this chapter; or

(B) to fail to furnish to the Comptroller General any records, books, or information requested by him for purposes of this chapter.

(2) Any person who violates paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

(e) KICKBACKS AND ILLEGAL PAYMENTS.—

(1) It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully to give or accept any kickback or any illegal payment in connection with any qualified campaign expense of eligible candidates or their authorized committees. It shall be unlawful for the national committee of a major party or minor party knowingly and willfully to give or accept any kickback or any illegal payment in connection with any expense incurred by such committee with respect to a presidential nominating convention.

(2) Any person who violates paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

(3) In addition to the penalty provided by paragraph (2), any person who accepts any kickback or illegal payment in connection with any qualified campaign expense of eligible candidates or their authorized committees, or in connection with any expense incurred by the national committee of a major party or minor party with respect to a presidential nominating convention, shall pay to the Secretary, for deposit in the general fund of the Treasury, an amount equal to 125 percent of the kickback or payment received.

(f) UNAUTHORIZED EXPENDITURES AND CONTRIBUTIONS.—

(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), it shall be unlawful for any political committee which is not an authorized committee with respect to the eligible candidates of a political party for President and Vice President in a presidential election knowingly and willfully to incur expenditures to further the election of such candidates, which would constitute qualified campaign expenses if incurred by an authorized committee of such candidates, in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000.

(2) This subsection shall not apply to (A) expenditures by a broadcaster regulated by the Federal Communications Commission, or by a periodical publication, in reporting the news or in taking editorial positions, or (B) expenditures by any organization described in section 501(c) which is exempt from tax under section 501(a) in communicating to its members the views of that organization.

(3) Any political committee which violates paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $5,000, and any officer or member of such committee who knowingly and willfully consents to such violation and any other individual who knowingly and willfully violates paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

(g) UNAUTHORIZED DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION.—

(1) It shall be unlawful for any individual to disclose any information obtained under the provisions of this chapter except as may be required by law.

(2) Any person who violates paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 9013. EFFECTIVE DATE OF CHAPTER.

The provisions of this chapter shall take effect on January 1, 1973.

CHAPTER 96—PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN FUND ADVISORY BOARD

SEC. 9021. ESTABLISHMENT OF ADVISORY BOARD.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF BOARD.—There is hereby established an advisory board to be known as the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Advisory Board (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Board"). It shall be the duty and function of the Board to counsel and assist the Comptroller General of the United States in the performance of the duties and functions imposed on him under the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act.

(b) COMPOSITION OF BOARD.—The Board shall be composed of the following members:

(1) the majority leader and minority leader of the Senate and the Speaker and minority leader of the House of Representatives, who shall serve ex officio;

(2) two members representing each political party which is a major party (as defined in section 9002(6)), which members shall be appointed by the Comptroller General from recommendations submitted by such political party; and

(3) three members representing the general public, which members shall be selected by the members described in paragraphs (1) and (2).

The terms of the first members of the Board described in paragraphs (2) and (3) shall expire on the sixtieth day after the date of the first presidential election following January 1, 1973, and the terms of subsequent members described in paragraphs (2) and (3) shall begin on the sixty-first day after the date of a presidential election and expire on the sixtieth day following the date of the subsequent presidential election. The Board shall elect a Chairman from its members.

(c) COMPENSATION.—Members of the Board (other than members described in subsection (b)(1)) shall receive compensation at the rate of $75 a day for each day they are engaged in performing duties and functions as such members, including traveltime, and, while away from their homes or regular places of business, shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by law for persons in the Government service employed intermittently.

(d) STATUS.—Service by an individual as a member of the Board shall not, for purposes of any other law of the United States be considered as service as an officer or employee of the United States.

CHAPTER 97—PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARY MATCHING PAYMENT ACCOUNT

SEC. 9031. SHORT TITLE.

This chapter may be cited as the "Presidential Primary Matching Payment Account Act."

SEC. 9032. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this chapter—

(1) The term "authorized committee" means, with respect to the candidates of a political party for President and Vice President of the United States, the political committee designated under section 302(f)(1) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 by the candidate of a political party for President of the United States as his principal campaign committee.

(2) The term "candidate" means an individual who seeks nomination for election to be President of the United States. For purposes of this paragraph, an individual shall be considered to seek nomination for election if he (A) takes the action necessary under the law of a State to qualify himself for nomination for election, (B) receives contributions or incurs qualified campaign expenses, or (C) gives his consent for any other person to receive contributions or to incur qualified campaign expenses on his behalf.

(3) The term "Comptroller General" means the Comptroller General of the United States.

(4) Except as provided by section 9034(a), the term "contribution"—

(A) means a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, the payment of which was made on or after the beginning of the calendar year immediately preceding the calendar year of the presidential election with respect to which such gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, is made, for the purpose of influencing the result of a primary election,

(B) means a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution for any such purpose,

(C) means a transfer of funds between political committees, and

(D) means the payment by any person other than a candidate, or his authorized committee, of compensation for the personal services of another person which are rendered to the candidate or committee without charge, but

(E) does not include—

(i) except as provided in subparagraph (D), the value of personal services rendered to or for the benefit of a candidate by an individual who receives no compensation for rendering such service to or for the benefit of the candidate, or

(ii) payments under section 9037.

(5) The term "matching payment account" means the Presidential Primary Matching Payment Account established under section 9037(a).

(6) The term "matching payment period" means the period beginning with the beginning of the calendar year in which a general election for the office of President of the United States will be held and ending on the date on which the national convention of the party whose nomination a candidate seeks nominates its candidate for the office of President of the United States.

(7) The term "primary election" means an election, including a runoff election or a nominating convention or caucus held by a political party, for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party, or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President of the United States.

(8) The term "political committee" means any individual, committee, association, or organization (whether or not incorporated) which accepts contributions or incurs qualified campaign expenses for the purpose of influencing, or attempting to influence, the nomination of any person for election to the office of President of the United States.

(9) The term "qualified campaign expense" means a purchase, payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money or of anything of value—

(A) incurred by a candidate, or by his authorized committee, in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, and

(B) neither the incurring nor payment of which constitutes a violation of any law of the United States or of the State in which the expense is incurred or paid.

For purposes of this paragraph, an expense is incurred by a candidate or by an authorized committee if it is incurred by a person specifically authorized in writing by the candidate or committee, as the case may be, to incur such expense on behalf of the candidate or the committee.

(10) The term "State" means each State of the United States and the District of Columbia.

SEC. 9033. ELIGIBILITY FOR PAYMENTS.

(a) CONDITIONS.—To be eligible to receive payments under section 9037, a candidate shall, in writing—

(1) agree to obtain and furnish to the Comptroller General any evidence he may request of qualified campaign expenses,

(2) agree to keep and furnish to the Comptroller General any records, books, and other information he may request, and

(3) agree to an audit and examination by the Comptroller General under section 9038 and to pay any amounts required to be paid under such section.

(b) EXPENSE LIMITATION; DECLARATION OF INTENT; MINIMUM CONTRIBUTIONS.—To be eligible to receive payments under section 9037, a candidate shall certify to the Comptroller General that—

(1) the candidate and his authorized committee will not incur qualified campaign expenses in excess of the limitation on such expenses under section 9035,

(2) the candidate is seeking nomination by a political party for election to the office of President of the United States,

(3) the candidate has received contributions which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000 in contributions from residents of each of at least 20 States, and

(4) the aggregate of contributions received from any person under paragraph (3) does not exceed $250.

SEC. 9034. ENTITLEMENT OF ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES TO PAYMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Every candidate who is eligible to receive payments under section 9033 is entitled to payments under section 9037 in an amount equal to the amount of each contribution received by such candidate on or after the beginning of the calendar year immediately preceding the calendar year of the presidential election with respect to which such candidate is seeking nomination, or by his authorized committee, disregarding any amount of contributions from any person to the extent that the total of the amounts contributed by such person on or after the beginning of such preceding calendar year exceeds $250. For purposes of this subsection and section 9033(b), the term "contribution" means a gift of money made by a written instrument which identifies the person making the contribution by full name and mailing address, but does not include a subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything described in subparagraph (B), (C), or (D) of section 9032(4).

(b) LIMITATIONS.—The total amount of payments to which a candidate is entitled under subsection (a) shall not exceed 50 percent of the expenditure limitation established by section 608(c)(1)(A) of title 18, United States Code.

SEC. 9035. QUALIFIED CAMPAIGN EXPENSE LIMITATION.

No candidate shall knowingly incur qualified campaign expenses in excess of the expenditure limitation established by section 608(c)(1)(A) of title 18, United States Code.

SEC. 9036. CERTIFICATION BY COMPTROLLER GENERAL.

(a) INITIAL CERTIFICATIONS.—Not later than 10 days after a candidate establishes his eligibility under section 9033 to receive payments under section 9037, the Comptroller General shall certify to the Secretary for payment to such candidate under section 9037 payment in full of amounts to which such candidate is entitled under section 9034.

(b) FINALITY OF DETERMINATIONS.—Initial certifications by the Comptroller General under subsection (a), and all determinations made by him under this chapter, are final and conclusive, except to the extent that they are subject to examination and audit by the Comptroller General under section 9038 and judicial review under section 9041.

SEC. 9037. PAYMENTS TO ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF ACCOUNT.—The Secretary shall maintain in the Presidential Election Campaign Fund established by section 9006(a), in addition to any account which he maintains under such section, a separate account to be known as the Presidential Primary Matching Payment Account. The Secretary shall deposit into the matching payment account, for use by the candidate of any political party who is eligible to receive payments under section 9033, the amount available after the Secretary determines that amounts for payments under section 9006(c) and for payments under section 9007(b)(3) are available for such payments.

(b) PAYMENTS FROM THE MATCHING PAYMENT ACCOUNT.—Upon receipt of a certification from the Comptroller General under section 9036, but not before the beginning of the matching payment period the Secretary or his delegate shall promptly transfer the amount certified by the Comptroller General from the matching payment account to the candidate. In making such transfers to candidates of the same political party, the Secretary or his delegate shall seek to achieve an equitable distribution of funds available under subsection (a), and the Secretary or his delegate shall take into account, in seeking to achieve an equitable distribution, the sequence in which such certifications are received. Transfers to candidates of the same political party may not exceed an amount which is equal to 45 percent of the total amount available in the matching payment account, and transfers to any candidate may not exceed an amount which is equal to 25 percent of the total amount available in the matching payment account.

SEC. 9038. EXAMINATIONS AND AUDITS; REPAYMENTS.

(a) EXAMINATIONS AND AUDITS.—After each matching payment period, the Comptroller General shall conduct a thorough examination and audit of the qualified campaign expenses of every candidate and his authorized committee who received payments under section 9037.

(b) REPAYMENTS.—

(1) If the Comptroller General determines that any portion of the payments made to a candidate from the matching payment account was in excess of the aggregate amount of payments to which such candidate was entitled under section 9034, he shall notify the candidate, and the candidate shall pay to the Secretary or his delegate an amount equal to the amount of excess payments.

(2) If the Comptroller General determines that any amount of any payment made to a candidate from the matching payment account was used for any purpose other than—

(A) to defray the qualified campaign expenses with respect to which such payment was made, or

(B) to repay loans the proceeds of which were used, or otherwise to restore funds (other than contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses which were received and expended) which were used, to defray qualified campaign expenses, he shall notify such candidate of the amount so used, and the candidate shall pay to the Secretary or his delegate an amount equal to such amount.

(3) Amounts received by a candidate from the matching payment account may be retained for the liquidation of all obligations to pay qualified campaign expenses incurred for a period not exceeding 6 months after the end of the matching payment period. After all obligations have been liquidated, that portion of any unexpended balance remaining in the candidate's accounts which bears the same ratio to the total unexpended balance as the total amount received from the matching payment account bears to the total of all deposits made into the candidate's accounts shall be promptly repaid to the matching payment account.

(c) NOTIFICATION.—No notification shall be made by the Comptroller General under subsection (b) with respect to a matching payment period more than 3 years after the end of such period.

(d) DEPOSIT OF REPAYMENTS.—All payments received by the Secretary or his delegate under subsection (b) shall be deposited by him in the matching payment account.

SEC. 9039. REPORTS TO CONGRESS; REGULATIONS.

(a) REPORTS.—The Comptroller General shall, as soon as practicable after each matching payment period, submit a full report to the Senate and House of Representatives setting forth—

(1) the qualified campaign expenses (shown in such detail as the Comptroller General determines necessary) incurred by the candidates of each political party and their authorized committees,

(2) the amounts certified by him under section 9036 for payment to each eligible candidate, and

(3) the amount of payments, if any, required from candidates under section 9038, and the reasons for each payment required.

Each report submitted pursuant to this section shall be printed as a Senate document.

(b) REGULATIONS, ETC.—The Comptroller General is authorized to prescribe rules and regulations in accordance with the provisions of subsection (c), to conduct examinations and audits (in addition to the examinations and audits required by section 9038 (a)), to conduct investigations, and to require the keeping and submission of any books, records, and information, which he determines to be necessary to carry out his responsibilities under this chapter.

(c) REVIEW OF REGULATIONS.—

(1) The Comptroller General, before prescribing any rule or regulation under subsection (b), shall transmit a statement with respect to such rule or regulation to the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate and to the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives, in accordance with the provisions of this subsection. Such statement shall set forth the proposed rule or regulation and shall contain a detailed explanation and justification of such rule or regulation.

(2) If either such committee does not, through appropriate action, disapprove the proposed rule or regulation set forth in such statement no later than 30 legislative days after receipt of such statement, then the Comptroller General may prescribe such rule or regulation. The Comptroller General may not prescribe any rule or regulation which is disapproved by either such committee under this paragraph.

(3) For purposes of this subsection, the term "legislative days" does not include any calendar day on which both Houses of the Congress are not in session.

SEC. 9040. PARTICIPATION BY COMPTROLLER GENERAL IN JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.

(a) APPEARANCE BY COUNSEL.—The Comptroller General is authorized to appear in and defend against any action instituted under this section, either by attorneys employed in his office or by counsel whom he may appoint without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and whose compensation he may fix without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title.

(b) RECOVERY OF CERTAIN PAYMENTS.—The Comptroller General is authorized, through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a), to institute actions in the district courts of the United States to seek recovery of any amounts determined to be payable to the Secretary or his delegate as a result of an examination and audit made pursuant to section 9038.

(c) INJUNCTIVE RELIEF.—The Comptroller General is authorized, through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a), to petition the courts of the United States for injunctive relief as is appropriate to implement any provision of this chapter.

(d) APPEAL.—The Comptroller General is authorized on behalf of the United States to appeal from, and to petition the Supreme Court for certiorari to review, judgments, or decrees entered with respect to actions in which he appears pursuant to the authority provided in this section.

SEC. 9041. JUDICIAL REVIEW.

(a) REVIEW OF AGENCY ACTION BY THE COMPTROLLER GENERAL.—Any agency action by the Comptroller General made under the provisions of this chapter shall be subject to review by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit upon petition filed in such court within 30 days after the agency action by the Comptroller General for which review is sought.

(b) REVIEW PROCEDURES.—The provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, apply to judicial review of any agency action, as defined in section 551(13) of title 5, United States Code, by the Comptroller General.

SEC. 9042. CRIMINAL PENALTIES.

(a) EXCESS CAMPAIGN EXPENSES.—Any person who violates the provisions of section 9035 shall be fined not more than $25,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both. Any officer or member of any political committee who knowingly consents to any expenditure in violation of the provisions of section 9035 shall be fined not more than $25,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

(b) UNLAWFUL USE OF PAYMENTS.—

(1) It is unlawful for any person who receives any payment under section 9037, or to whom any portion of any such payment is transferred, knowingly and willfully to use, or authorize the use of, such payment or such portion for any purpose other than—

(A) to defray qualified campaign expenses, or

(B) to repay loans the proceeds of which were used, or otherwise to restore funds (other than contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses which were received and expended) which were used, to defray qualified campaign expenses.

(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

(c) FALSE STATEMENTS, ETC.—

(1) It is unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully—

(A) to furnish any false, fictitious, or fraudulent evidence, books, or information to the Comptroller General under this chapter, or to include in any evidence, books, or information so furnished any misrepresentation of a material fact, or to falsify or conceal any evidence, books, or information relevant to a certification by the Comptroller General or an examination and audit by the Comptroller General under this chapter, or

(B) to fail to furnish to the Comptroller General any records, books, or information requested by him for purposes of this chapter.

(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

(d) KICKBACKS AND ILLEGAL PAYMENTS.—

(1) It is unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully to give or accept any kickback or any illegal payment in connection with any qualified campaign expense of a candidate, or his authorized committee, who receives payments under section 9037.

(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

(3) In addition to the penalty provided by paragraph (2), any person who accepts any kickback or illegal payment in connection with any qualified campaign expense of a candidate or his authorized committee shall pay to the Secretary for deposit in the matching payment account, an amount equal to 125 percent of the kickback or payment received.

TITLE III—PROVISIONS RELATING TO RADIO

* * * * * * *

FACILITIES FOR CANDIDATES FOR PUBLIC OFFICE

SEC. 315. (a) If any licensee shall permit any person who is a legally qualified candidate for any public office to use a broadcasting station, he shall afford equal opportunities to all other such candidates for that office in the use of such broadcasting station: Provided, That such licensee shall have no power of censorship over the material broadcast under the provisions of this section. No obligation is imposed under this subsection upon any licensee to allow the use of its station by any such candidate. Appearance by a legally qualified candidate on any—

(1) bona fide newscast,

(2) bona fide news interview,

(3) bona fide news documentary (if the appearance of the candidate is incidental to the presentation of the subject or subjects covered by the news documentary), or

(4) on-the-spot coverage of bona fide news events (including but not limited to political conventions and activities incidental thereto), shall not be deemed to be use of a broadcasting station within the meaning of this subsection. Nothing in the foregoing sentence shall be construed as relieving broadcasters, in connection with the presentation of newscasts, news interviews, news documentaries, and on-the-spot coverage of news events, from the obligation imposed upon them under this chapter to operate in the public interest and to afford reasonable opportunity for the discussion of conflicting views on issues of public importance.

(b) The charges made for the use of any broadcasting station by any person who is a legally qualified candidate for any public office in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or election, to such office shall not exceed—

(1) during the forty-five days preceding the date of a primary or primary runoff election and during the sixty days preceding the date of a general or special election in which such person is a candidate, the lowest unit charge of the station for the same class and amount of time for the same period; and

(2) at any other time, the charges made for comparable use of such station by other users thereof.

[(c) No station licensee may make any charge for the use of such station by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office (or for nomination to such office) unless such candidate (or a person specifically authorized by such candidate in writing to do so) certifies to such licensee in writing that the payment of such charge will not violate any limitation specified in paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of section 104(a) of the Campaign Communications Reform Act, whichever paragraph is applicable.

[(d) If a State by law and expressly—

[(1) has provided that a primary or other election for any office of such State or of a political subdivision thereof is subject to this subsection,

[(2) has specified a limitation upon total expenditures for the use of broadcasting stations on behalf of the candidacy of each legally qualified candidate in such election,

[(3) has provided in any such law an unequivocal expression of intent to be bound by the provisions of this subsection, and

[(4) has stipulated that the amount of such limitation shall not exceed the amount which would be determined for such election under section 104(a)(1)(B) or 104(a)(2)(B) (whichever is applicable) of the Campaign Communications Reform Act had such election been an election for a Federal elective office or nomination thereto;

then no station licensee may make any charge for the use of such station by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate in such election unless such candidate (or a person specifically authorized by such candidate in writing to do so) certifies to such licensee in writing that the payment of such charge will not violate such State limitation.

[(e) Whoever willfully and knowingly violates the provisions of subsection (c) or (d) of this section shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $5,000 or imprisonment for a period not to exceed five years, or both. The provisions of sections 501 through 503 of this Act shall not apply to violations of either such subsection.

[(f) (1) For the purposes of this section:

[(A) The term "broadcasting station" includes a community antenna television system.

[(B) The terms "licensee" and "station licensee" when used with respect to a community antenna television system, means the operator of such system.

[(C) The term "Federal elective office" means the office of President of the United States, or of Senator or Representative in, or Resident Commissioner or Delegate to, the Congress of the United States.

[(2) For purposes of subsections (c) and (d), the term "legally qualified candidate" means any person who (A) meets the qualifications prescribed by the applicable laws to hold the office for which he is a candidate and (B) is eligible under applicable State law to be voted for by the electorate directly or by means of delegates or electors.]

(c) For purposes of this section—

(1) the term "broadcasting station" includes a community antenna television system; and

(2) the terms "licensee" and "station licensee" when used with respect to a community antenna television system, mean the operator of such system.

[g] (d) The Commission shall prescribe appropriate rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this section.

MINORITY VIEWS

The House Administration Committee has labored at length to reform the present system of campaign financing. Committee members worked hard to pass a bill that would answer what some consider to be a public clamor for election reform.

While the Committee bill probably is too late to apply to the 1974 elections, it should provide a basis for reform in the 1976 and future elections. A bill could have been passed in time to be effective for the 1974 elections; the Committee can be justifiably criticized for failing to expeditiously bring a bill to the floor by commencing mark up sessions too late.

POSITIVE FEATURES

While the Committee bill does have loopholes and a few glaring defects, it accomplishes some good. The bill limits contributions to $1,000 per person and $5,000 for broad-based political committees. Individuals can contribute no more than $25,000 to all candidates and committees in a calendar year.

This provision may be the most significant reform in the Committee bill. Contribution limitations should restore public confidence by eliminating or reducing public suspicion that candidates are being "bought" or influenced by large campaign contributions. While these limitations may pose constitutional questions and could be difficult to enforce, they would prevent any individual or group from having a disproportionate impact on any campaign and would encourage candidates to raise more small contributions.

The Committee bill wisely prohibits the laundering and secretive earmarking of funds. Unlike the 1972 campaign, in future years the original source of all earmarked funds will have to be disclosed. Full disclosure of all earmarking will make it much easier to enforce contribution limitations.

Limits are placed on the amount of expenditures a candidate may make: $10 million for nomination for President, $20 million in a general election for President, 5¢ times the population of the geographical area or $75,000 for the Senate (whichever is greater) and $75,000 for House races. A cost of living escalator clause is included so that these limitations will not become outdated. In order to alleviate the constitutional problems posed by spending limitations, the Committee bill allows independent expenditures by individuals and political committees of up to $1,000. Under the 1971 Act, expenditures of this type of over $100 have to be disclosed. While Minority members disagree as to what level spending limits should be set there is basic agreement that some sort of limit must be set to rectify some of the abuses that became apparent in the 1972 campaign.

Several other important changes were made in the criminal code section: contributions by foreign nationals are prohibited, monetary penalties are increased, cash contributions over $100 are banned, contributions made in the name of another are prohibited, honorariums in excess of $1,000 per engagement or $10,000 per year are prohibited.

The Committee bill requires all candidates to designate a principal or central campaign committee. The reports of all other committees supporting that candidate must be filed with the principal committee, which in turn compiles these reports and sends them to the appropriate supervisory officer. All expenditures made on behalf of a candidate must be made through the principal campaign committee.

A principal campaign committee would increase accountability; a series of local committees all financially accountable to a centralized, single committee focuses responsibility by having a single point of control. Reporting procedures would be simplified.

A bill requires reports to be filed 10 days before the election, thirty days after the election, on January 31, quarterly in an election year, and quarterly in a non-election year if contributions or expenditures of $1,000 or more are made. By reducing the number of reports, the Committee bill should help reduce the burden on candidates, while actually furthering the goals of disclosure. The large number of reports that are presently filed make it most difficult for public interest groups, the press and other monitoring agencies to fully inform the public of the sources of funds. The sheer volume of reports impedes the goal of full disclosure. With fewer, more timely reports, the public should actually know more about candidates' sources of funds.

In addition, the Committee bill, by requiring the supervisory officers to publish a list of those who did file and those who did not file, should help foster compliance with the law.

By preempting state law, the Committee bill will alleviate candidates from the requirements that they comply with several sets of rules and regulations. This provision should streamline election law and assure greater compliance with federal law.

The bill opens the political process by allowing state and local employees to participate in political campaigns. Greater citizen participation in the political process will be encouraged.

The Committee bill repeals the media limitations in the 1971 law, thereby allowing the candidate to decide how he will apportion his funds within the overall spending limitations.

DEFICIENCIES

The bill has several important shortcomings:

Parties

Instead of strengthening the role of the parties in the political process, the Committee bill, by treating political parties the same as all other political committees, would significantly weaken and contribute to the demise of the two party system.

Section 101(b)(2) of the bill places a limitation of $5,000 on the contributions of political committees to candidates for Federal office.

The definition of political committee clearly encompasses the national and state committees of the major parties, thus limiting them to $5,000 in contributions. It would also apply to both direct cash transfers and services provided to or for the benefit of candidates, many of which are presently performed without the candidates' full knowledge.

The minority strongly believes that the national and state committees of the major parties should be excluded from the definition of political committee for the purposes of contribution limitation. The national and state committees have been traditionally the policy making bodies of the major parties and are cornerstones of our political system. The definition in the bill presently treats these important committees equally with all other committees, even small special interest committees. The national and state committees must be permitted the ability to assist candidates as the need arises so that a strong and dynamic party system can be maintained.

The governments of many countries throughout the world are going through a period of extreme instability. The United States can best avoid this phenomenon by furthering the development of a strong party system. If major parties are weakened or destroyed by a series of legislative shackels placed on them in the name of reform, our constitutional form of government will be seriously undermined.

In their haste to reform the funding of political campaigns, the Committee has severely limited the function of the parties. If the national and state committees have no control over their candidates, there will be little, if any, reason for candidates to adhere to the policy decisions of the party and the inevitable splintering of the two-party system will have begun. To prevent this from occurring, national and state parties must be exempted from the same limitations on contributions by political committees.

Financing of Conventions

The Minority is also opposed to the public financing of political conventions. Conventions are uniquely a party function and as such should not be supported by the overburdened public treasury. Nor should the party be entangled in the bureaucratic regulatory web which is envisioned by the present language of the bill.

The party must have the ability to determine the size and form of its convention; this can only be accomplished if the party retains control of its purse strings. Furthermore, the vitality of the party is enhanced by the participation of its members, while public financing of conventions will undercut individual initiative and participation.

The ever increasing encroachment of the federal bureaucracy into the private lives of our citizens is taking another large step with the enactment of convention financing. The two party system, free from bureaucratic tampering, has been a fourth branch in our constitutional form of government and will only remain a strong force if it is kept in the hands of the people.

Administration and Enforcement

Administration and enforcement of election law should be independent and avoid the appearance of conflict of interest. Any agency charged with responsibility of election law should not raise public suspicions about the fairness and effectiveness of enforcement. Public confidence in public officials should not be further lowered by an administration-enforcement system that fosters public cynicism. The Committee bill is not fully adequate in this regard. Hopefully, a better mechanism (such as an independent Federal Elections Commission) can be found, either by amendment on the floor or in the conference with the Senate.

Special Interest Groups

By placing a $5,000 limitation on how much special interest committees can give to candidates, the Committee bill took an important step towards reducing the influence that special interests gain through political contributions. More importantly, this limitation will help reduce public suspicions that public officials are "bought" by the large political contributions of special interest groups.

However, the Committee bill did not go nearly far enough. Clearly, the Congress must end the suspicion created among the public by the special interest contribution. The Minority has prepared and plans to offer five amendments on the floor that would eliminate or drastically curtail the ability of special interest groups to make contributions to federal candidates.

1. Ideally, it would probably be best to prohibit all contributions by special interest groups. In committee, Rep. Harold Froehlich offered an amendment to outlaw contributions by other than individuals and political party organizations. In offering this amendment, he astutely noted:

> If campaign contributions have ever been used for leverage in the political system, then surely the political action funds of special interest groups top the list for influencing political officials. If we are truly to reform the political system, then special interest campaign money should be outlawed.

This amendment was defeated by 15–7 on an almost straight party vote, with Republicans supporting it and Democrats opposed.

2. Since it can be argued that a band on giving by political committees is unconstitutional, the Minority strongly favors another approach which would drastically curtail the capabilities of special interests to gain influence through campaign contributions. This amendment, authored by Rep. Clarence Brown of Ohio, would prohibit the pooling of funds by any groups and require all contributions to be identified as to the original donor. Special interest groups would only be allowed to act as the agents of individual contributors, thereby reducing considerably special interest influence gained via political contributions. This amendment, as offered by Rep. Caldwell Butler, was also defeated in the Committee on a vote of 14 to 12 on an almost straight party vote.

3. The Committee bill allows special interest groups to give up to $5,000 per election. This limit is too high: Special interest groups should not be allowed to contribute five times as much as individuals.

A more appropriate limitation would be $2,500, $3,000 or even perhaps $1,000. The Minority will support efforts to lower this limit.

4. A fourth amendment that the Minority plans to offer is one that would prohibit contributions "in-kind" and require that contributions be made in cash or its equivalent. Presently, special interest groups are often able to get undue influence through providing "in-kind" services and goods such as cars, planes, storefronts, food, invaluable personal services, etc. Not only did the Committee bill fail to deal effectively with such abuses, it opened loopholes, in the form of exceptions to the definition of contribution and expenditure, that would exempt many of these activities from both the limitations and disclosure! Instead of curbing such abuses, the Committee bill would encourage them. Special interests would be especially well-equipped to use these loopholes to the hilt.

5. In the past, special interest groups have avoided full disclosure or the gift tax by proliferating the number of their political committees. This same activity could be used to circumvent contribution limitations. Several special interest groups have already set up ten, fifteen or twenty political committees to channel funds to candidates in anticipation of the passage of low contribution limitations. While the Committee report does contain language prohibiting this activity and it is obviously the intent of the bill to prohibit such activity, the Minority feels that an amendment banning the proliferation of political committees to circumvent the limitation is in order to ensure that the courts and administrators of the law have absolutely no latitude in interpreting the law.

In committee, when the opportunity for severely limiting or eliminating special interest money was presented, Republicans generally supported it, but Democrats were opposed. Democrats claim that special interest groups would severely limit the effectiveness of labor unions and liberal groups. But these amendments also apply in the same fashion to business, farm, conservative and corporate groups as well. The Minority intends to offer these amendments on the floor so that the American public will know how each Member and each party stands on the issue of special interest money. The public has a right to know who is more dependent on special interest contributions.

Minority Role

The Committee bill would have been far superior if the minority had been given a greater role in shaping the Committee's final product. Unfortunately, the Committee was run in a highly partisan fashion, to the detriment of both the bill and the general public. Out of the over 100 amendments offered in committee, about 60 were offered by the majority and slightly over 40 by the minority (about 30 of these were substantive). Only a couple of the Minority's amendments were accepted, while over a couple of dozen Majority amendments were accepted.

In particular, towards the end of the mark-up sessions, some minority amendments were rejected almost out of hand. As a result, several important amendments were rejected. For example, Rep. Caldwell Butler offered an amendment to close a major loophole in the contribution limitation section, but was defeated on an almost straight party vote. This amendment would have required that the endorser or guarantor of a bank loan count the loan as a contribution for the purposes of disclosure and the limitation. Under the Committee bill, wealthy individuals and special interest groups could guarantee loans worth thousands or tens of thousands of dollars without being subject to the contribution limitation. If the loans are defaulted, they would be in violation of the law no matter what they did. Further, the candidate would feel a strong obligation to the wealthy individual or special interest group. Hopefully, when the bill comes to the floor, this amendment and other important ones that were so abruptly treated in the committee will receive more thoughtful consideration. Their adoption will make the bill a much stronger one.

Dirty Tricks

In committee, Rep. Bill Frenzel offered an amendment to prohibit certain types of "dirty tricks", but unfortunately, the committee chose not to adopt it. The main argument against the amendment was that hearings had not been held to determine the best manner in which to deal with the problem. However, the abuses of Watergate have received ample attention in both the press and congressional hearings. On the floor, the minority plans to offer amendments patterned after the recommendations of the Senate Watergate Committee to prohibit "dirty tricks". These recommendations are the product of months of public hearings and considerable deliberation and debate and should be promptly accepted by the House.

Citizen Participation

A final concern of the Minority is that the sheer length and complexity of this bill will discourage citizen participation and involvement perhaps even driving many people right out of politics.

Many people, when confronted with the complexity of this legislation, may become overwhelmed and give up politics in disgust. There will be ample potential for unintentional violations of the law. Many people may worry about going to jail or being fined for an inadvertent violation.

Many well-qualified individuals may view the burdensome reporting requirements and complicated regulations as an insurmountable obstacle and choose not to run. In addition to understanding the lengthy complicated disclosure forms, candidates may have to familiarize themselves with hundreds of pages of regulations promulgated to insure fair administration and enforcement of the limitations. The complexity of this law may limit candidacies only to lawyers or to those who can afford to pay lawyers for their time.

Spontaneous, grassroots action and people who are political novices or independent of regular political channels should not be discouraged. The loss of such activities and candidacies would be a major blow to our political process.

The Minority urges the administrators and enforcers of the law to take every action possible to simplify reporting procedures and to make regulations easy to understand and intelligible to those not well versed in the law. In addition, services should be provided to candidates who do not understand the law or who are unable to understand the legal jargon used in the law and regulations so that they will not be found in violation of the law.

It would be ironic indeed, if, in the name of reforming our present system of campaign financing, we fail to drive out the special interests and only succeed in driving honest, concerned citizens from participation in the political process.

SEPARATE VIEWS OF CONGRESSMEN DICKINSON AND DEVINE

The undersigned recognize that honest elections are essential to the survival of our form of Government and that there is a constant and ongoing need for legislation in this field. However, this legislation, to be effective must be fair and workable. It is with this last thought in mind that the undersigned oppose this bill.

The undersigned regard the following aspects of the bill as particularly unrealistic for the reasons given:

1. Financing of Presidential Primaries.—The provisions for public financing of Presidential Primaries will inject the Federal Treasury into what many times amounts to a popularity contest under a formula that will probably work unfairly to the candidates involved.

The prospect of a Federal subsidy to run for office may very well result in a proliferation of candidates. Access to such subsidies would be an incentive to everyone with a desire for publicity to become a candidate; primaries may then become an anarchic jungle with policy issues largely obscured. The subsidy might also be a temptation for those who anticipate financial gain from running for office.

The use of private money we are told has weakened public confidence in the democratic process. But is this confidence likely to be restored when tax payers pay for campaigns they regard as frivolous, wasteful and in some cases, abhorrent?

Finally, we are told that subsidies will reduce the pressures on candidates for dependence on large campaign contributions from private sources. Where indeed will our democratic process be when the candidates' principal constituent is the Federal Establishment.

2. Financing of Conventions.—The undersigned oppose the public financing of political conventions. Conventions are uniquely a party function and as such should not be supported by the overburdened public treasury. Nor should the party be entangled in the bureaucratic regulatory web which is envisioned by the present language of the bill. The party must have the ability to determine the size and form of its convention; this can only be accomplished if the party retains control of its purse strings. Furthermore, the vitality of the party is enhanced by the participation of its members, while public financing of conventions will undercut individual initiative and participation.

Many people, when confronted with the complexity of this legislation, may become overwhelmed and give up politics in disgust. There will be ample potential for unintentional violations of the law. Many people may worry about going to jail or being fined for an inadvertent violation. Indeed, it is inevitable unless the administration and enforcement is done with tolerance and understanding of the complexities and problems involved.

Many well-qualified individuals may view the burdensome reporting requirements and complicated regulations as an insurmountable obstacle and choose not to run. In addition to understanding the lengthy complicated disclosure forms, candidates may have to familiarize themselves with hundreds of pages of regulations promulgated to insure fair administration and enforcement of the limitations.

WM. L. DICKINSON.
SAMUEL L. DEVINE.

SEPARATE VIEWS OF PHILIP M. CRANE

The campaign Reform Bill represents several months of hard work by members of the House Administration Committee and I believe it does correct several deficiencies in our election laws. On balance, however, I believe the bill as reported has a number of grave faults which is why I opposed it in Committee.

First of all, although the members wisely defeated suggestions for public financing of Congressional races, the bill does open the door to the concept of public financing by making it possible (if funds are available after presidential elections are financed) for candidates in presidential primaries to obtain public funds for their campaigns on a matching basis.

Let me briefly summarize why I believe public financing is undesirable. If election campaigns are financed wholly or in large part from Washington, this will greatly increase the potential power of the federal government. Public financing would also tend to decrease popular participation in campaigns. People would say "The government is paying for it with my tax money anyway, why should I contribute twice?" There would also be an increase in candidates with very little popular support who would be encouraged to run in order to obtain federal financing. The cost to the taxpayer will not be negligible. If Congressional candidates are eventually funded by the public (as several amendments urge) the taxpayers could be presented with an eventual bill in the area of $100 million per election.

There are also very serious constitutional questions. Taxpayer subsidy of political campaigns would be a form of compulsory political activity which limits the freedom of those who would prefer to refrain as well as those who chose to participate. If a citizen is forced to contribute to a political party whose views he may be indifferent to or opposed to, it may fairly be said that his freedom of conscience is being restricted. When this forced payment is combined with limitations on the amount he may contribute to those candidates he does believe in, freedom of expression is drastically curtailed. Most of those who now support subsidies for political parties would unequivocally condemn subsidies to religious groups, which would clearly be unconstitutional. It is a very real question whether the underlying issue—freedom of conscience and belief—is not, however, the same. What would happen if a religious-oriented party were formed, such as the Christian Democrats in many western nations? If this is thought unlikely, we only have to ask what would happen if the Democratic Party of Virginia, for instance, were to endorse the Sunday closing laws in that commonwealth, while the Republican Party were to decide to campaign against them.

In reality there is simply no effective way that campaign contributions can be limited without reducing freedom of speech and, in fact, without introducing a police state. Our efforts should be directed to full and complete disclosure of all contributions so that the voters will be able to judge for themselves if their representative is representing the majority of the people or some particular interest which gave a large sum to his campaign.

To maintain otherwise is to fly in the face of reality and to deceive our constituents. For instance, in a congressional election, you may have Candidate Alpha who favors a Right-to-Work Law and Candidate Beta who supports National Health Insurance. It is inevitable (and a necessary and healthy part of our democracy) that COPE and other trade union organizations are going to publicize their view that the Right-to-Work laws are undesirable, and they will do this with pamphlets, advertisements in the media and by door-to-door canvassing. The American Medical Association will doubtless exercise its constitutional right to explain to voters why it believes National Health Insurance should not be enacted.

Any realistic accounting of campaign funds would have to consider the manpower and money devoted by COPE to Right-to-Work laws in that district as expenditures assisting the campaign efforts of Candidate Beta. Similarly, there is no doubt that the expressed opinions and paid advertisements of the AMA would aid in the campaign of Candidate Alpha.

The limitations on spending in the present bill in so far as they are enforceable will merely increase the advantage of incumbents. Since 1954, less than 10% of all Members of the House who have run for reelection have been defeated. The only way a private citizen running for Congress can equalize the advantage in voter recognition and free publicity held by the sitting Member is by spending money to get his message across to the people. If he is limited to spending only as much as the incumbent his chances of defeating a well-known and entrenched Congressman are greatly reduced.

This bill, as reported, is permeated with loopholes—I will try to point out just a few of the most outstanding. The campaign spending limit (even granting that it can be realistically enforced) allows up to 25% of the spending limit to be spent on the solicitation of funds without being counted toward that limit. That is, candidates, in reality, will be allowed to spend their limit plus 25%.

The most glaring loopholes, however, are in the so-called limitations on labor union and corporate campaign spending. Although the present law states that "anything of value" contributed by a union or corporation must be reported, this law has rarely been enforced. If our aim is to have full disclosure of campaign contributions then we will be derelict in our duty if we overlook the fact that "in-kind" contributions from unions in presidential campaigns run as high as $100 million a year. This represents the salaries of union officials delegated to work in campaigns, the costs of printing, telephones, motel rooms, automobiles, office space, etc. This is a "loophole" wide enough to drive not a truck but a heavily loaded train through.

A recent book by attorney Douglas Caddy, The Hundred Million Dollar Payoff, documents these facts rigorously. I understand in fact that this book together with increasing complaints from all over the country has impelled the Justice Department to step up an investigation of union violations of the campaign laws. The thrust of Caddy's charges is directed at the real muscle behind labor's political influence—its in-kind contributions to candidates, i.e., mailings, voter registration and get-out-the-vote drives, printing, computerized lists, equipment, and a host of other services often provided under the guise of "political education" for its members. But the facts, as they are scrupulously outlined in this book, indicate that tens of millions of dollars in such union campaign services reach far beyond labor union membership and thus are in flagrant violation of the 1971 Federal Election Campaign Act. Surely this cannot be called a "Campaign Reform Bill" if it studiously avoids the single greatest loophole in our present campaign law.

This bill would have a far greater claim to fairness if it were amended to insure that union dues (which workers in most instances must pay to keep their jobs) could not be used for political purposes any more than corporate funds can be legally used for political activities now. It is a well-known fact that union officials (whose salaries are paid with union dues) often devote a considerable part of their time in union offices campaigning. Although the campaign contributions which are voluntarily collected from union members are maintained in segregated funds (such as COPE) the overhead expenses of collecting these contributions are often paid for by union dues; these are so-called "in-kind" contributions.

I intend to offer amendments on the floor which would ban the use of corporate funds or union dues for political purposes, including allegedly "non-partisan" registration drives. Since many union members do not approve of the candidates their involuntarily collected dues are supporting, it is grossly unjust to these citizens to coerce them into funding points of view with which they themselves disagree.

I would also hope that our colleagues will give support to the amendment of my colleague from Wisconsin (Mr. Froehlich) which would ban political committees (except agents of political parties) from collecting funds without having the donor designate to which candidates these funds are to be directed. Citizen participation in politics will be heightened if people give funds to individual candidates whose views reflect their own rather than to committees who are free to disburse these funds at their own discretion rather than the donor's.

Although well-intentioned, I regret to say that this bill if adopted in its present form will have a detrimental effect on our political life. It is simply too complicated and too involved to be readily understood by citizens not trained in the complexities of election law. An 80-page bill like this will provide the means for entrenched political machines (who can afford to employ dozens of specialist lawyers) to eliminate their challengers from the ballot if they unwittingly violate some obscure provision of this complicated legislation. Rather than encouraging more citizen participation this bill is bound to discourage non-professionals from entering politics. The threat of a huge fine or jail sentence for committing an innocent violation is almost certain to deter at least a sizeable number of qualified men and women, especially the young and inexperienced, from entering the political arena. Our aim should be to get more people involved in politics not fewer.

Unless we pass a law to repeal Original Sin within the boundaries of the United States we will always have some corruption in politics. This will be true whether we have total public or total private financing of campaigns. We will eliminate corruption by encouraging public-spirited citizens to run for office not by driving them away with threats of jail sentences and 80-page campaign laws.

The fundamental reason why there are people who wish to corrupt our political processes is because government has so much power in so many areas. If government influence were to be reduced, if the number of privileges government has in its power to bestow were to be reduced, there would be far less incentive for the unscrupulous to use big government for their own advantage. The most useful steps we can take toward restoring a sense of honor and decency to our public life would be to begin to lessen the tremendous power government holds over our lives.

I should like to conclude this statement with what I believe is a very appropriate comment made in a recent graduation address by the Chancellor of the University of Rochester, W. Allen Wallis:

"It is a striking paradox that the more people distrust the government, the more powers and responsibilities they heap upon it, many of the new powers being designed to counterbalance other powers that the government already has. . . .

The appropriate remedy for excessive governmental powers, for abuses of governmental powers, for ruthlessness and corruption in gaining control of governmental powers is not to create new governmental powers but to dismantle those that now exist."

PHILIP M. CRANE.

SUPPLEMENTAL VIEWS OF REPRESENTATIVE BILL FRENZEL

Since March 26, the House Administration Committee has met twenty times to consider 95 amendments to the Committee's original bill. While the Committee's bill and its tardiness in beginning work on it are subject to strong and legitimate criticism, the committee process, once mark-up was started, was full and open.

Since the Committee report analyzes the bill in the order that each section appears, these remarks cover the seven major subject areas in the following sequence: 1. administration and enforcement, 2. disclosure, 3. contribution limitations, 4. expenditure limitations, 5. other criminal code amendments, 6. public financing, 7. miscellaneous.

ADMINISTRATION AND ENFORCEMENT

In the aftermath of Watergate, the establishment of an effective administration and enforcement mechanism has been widely acclaimed by groups as diverse as the Nixon Administration, the Republican National Committee, the Senate Watergate Committee, the New York Times, and the Washington Post as the single most important change needed in existing election law. Yet, despite this widespread consensus that administration and enforcement of election law should be stronger and more independent, the House Administration Committee bill actually weakens the current system because of three major provisions that might make administration and enforcement less effective and independent.

1. It places four appointees of Congress and three employees of Congress in charge of the administration and enforcement of election law. The Committee bill also requires and forces this seven member board to conduct much of its business in secrecy.

2. It grants these seven people the power to interpret the law and grant presumed immunity from prosecution by issuing advisory opinions.

3. It gives two committees of Congress veto power over the rules and regulations promulgated to administer and implement campaign finance legislation, thereby giving these two committees the power to control all regulations drawn under this law. Clearly, the Congress has a strangle-hold on enforcement and supervision of its own elections. Not only is the fox in charge of the chicken coop, he is living in the farm house and managing the farm.

Board of Supervisory Officers

Section 207 of the Committee bill establishes a seven member Board of Supervisory Officers composed of the Secretary of the Senate, Clerk of the House, Comptroller General, and one appointee each by the minority and majority parties in both the Senate and the House. The four appointees are not subject to either executive review or congressional confirmation. Thirty percent of the staff is supposed to be composed of persons recommended by the minority. The Board supervises the administration of, seeks to obtain voluntary compliance with, and formulates overall policy with respect to the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 and certain provisions of the criminal code relating to elections.

The Board reviews rules and regulations and renders advisory opinions. It has the power to conduct investigations and hearings and subpoena witnesses. Interested parties may file complaints with the Board. The Board may refer the violation to the appropriate law enforcement authorities or the Attorney General. After such referral, the Attorney General must state within 60 days what action he has taken; and respond every thirty days thereafter until final disposition.

However, the creation of the Board fails to confront many of the basic problems inherent in the present administration and enforcement mechanism. Instead of eliminating the present conflict of interest situation, the Board maintains it. Not only will employees of the Congress be administering and enforcing election laws that affect their employers, but also direct appointees of Congress will be administering and enforcing these laws. The full-time supervisors will dominate the part-time appointees. This situation is clearly unacceptable.

Even with the most conscientious, diligent Board, public skepticism is certain to run high and there will be widespread doubt about the zeal and fairness of the Board's enforcement efforts.

The Clerk of the House, Secretary of the Senate and the Comptroller General administered the law in 1972. Despite a late start, the agencies labored heroically. The administration was not particularly bad, but it was not uniform.

The Clerk of the House generally performed well. Nevertheless, he did take several actions that did not seem to conform to the spirit of the 1971 law. Originally, he charged outside groups and individuals $1 per page to xerox reports, thereby thwarting the disclosure provisions of the 1971 Act. In addition, the Clerk, along with the Secretary of the Senate, wrote regulations that allowed contributors to secretly earmark and "wash" campaign funds. These practices were stopped in court.

According to the Justice Department, the Clerk did not promptly report some of the violations of title 18. The Clerk feels he is not required to report violations of title 18, even though the GAO has assumed this responsibility. Consequently, corporate contributions were in some cases not cited as violations of the law. The Justice Department became aware of this failure only because a court in the State of New York sent an inquiry asking whether or not a particular candidate had not been prosecuted for accepting corporate contributions.

The Clerk of the House waited until after the election to forward many of the violations to the Justice Department. The Clerk reported 5,000 unprocessed violations (most of them trivial or minor). The Clerk did not actively search for and investigate incomplete filings. Thus, some candidates may have been able to circumvent the law by simply not reporting all of their contributions and expenditures. Since the Clerk apparently did not conduct any field investigations, the Justice Department was forced to re-examine and re-investigate many of the complaints reported by the Clerk. Further, the Clerk declined to make public the violations it referred to the Justice Department, so the public still does not know who did or did not allegedly violate the 1971 Act in the 1972 election.

The Secretary of the Senate also could have done a much better job. The Secretary did not refer failures-to-file and late filings to the Justice Department until after the election. It was not until April, five months after the general election, that the Secretary's office undertook to identify the more significant types of violations. Even then, the Secretary only reported violations which he thought were "willful."

Between June 1972 and February 1974, the General Accounting Office did report and follow up many violations, some of which were prosecuted. The GAO probably did the best job of the supervisory and enforcement agents. The GAO was also the agency which was the least politically encumbered and the most free from conflicts of interest. With the institution of the supervisory board, the GAO would have much less independence.

Under the committee bill, any notification of a violation or investigation made by the Board cannot be made public by the Board or any other person without the written consent of the person who is involved in the violation or investigation. Those who are in violation of the law will be able to determine if and when their transgressions are to be made public. The public's right-to-know will be thwarted.

The creation of a Supervisory Board would further exacerbate the crisis of confidence in Congress and the Federal government. With the general public already doubting the effectiveness and fairness of election laws, increasing and intensifying the present conflicts of interest will only serve to further reduce and perhaps irreparably harm the public's confidence in the political process.

Advisory opinion

Section 208 of the bill adds a new section to the 1971 Act to allow a candidate or political committee to request an "advisory opinion" from the supervisory board. If the supervisory board, after having made the request public and having given interested parties opportunity for comment, rules that the action does not violate the Act or criminal code amendments relating to campaign practices, any person who makes a good faith and reasonable effort to comply with the opinion shall be presumed not to be in violation of the law.

This provision would allow the Board to grant presumed immunity from prosecution to candidates and political committees. The Board, composed of employees and direct appointees of Congress, would have the potential power to revise the intent of the law.

Veto of regulations

Sections 205(b), 408 and 409 give the House Administration Committee and the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration veto power over the rules and regulations of not only the Clerk of the House and Secretary of the Senate, respectively, but also over the rules and regulations of the GAO. The alleged purpose of this provision is to prevent the bureaucrats from changing the intent of the law, but this reasoning works both ways. If bureaucrats can change the intent of the law via promulgation of regulations, then so can a committee of Congress. The veto power robs the supervisory agencies of even the appearance of independence.

Summary

The House Administration Committee bill actually decreases the independence of the administrators and enforcers of the law in three ways: 1. Direct appointees and employees of Congress are given responsibility for administering and enforcing the law. 2. These same appointees and employees can issue advisory opinions which will grant presumed immunity from prosecution to candidates and committees. 3. Congressional committees will have veto power over the rules and regulations.

The committee's proposal does not affirmatively answer the most important question of all in the eyes of the public: will it reverse the long history of non-enforcement? If Congress's response to Watergate is to increase its control over Federal elections, then it will be hard to blame the public for becoming even more cynical and alienated.

Failure to file

The committee did pass a good amendment (section 205(a)(1)) that would require the supervisory officers to prepare and publish a list of those candidates who did file and those candidates who did not file reports. This has apparently been done by the Secretary of State of Pennsylvania with great success in increasing the percentage of those who comply with the law.

Disqualification of candidates

Section 302 of the bill provides that any candidate who fails to file will be disqualified from running for that office in the next election. Any decision by the Board of Supervisory Officers to disqualify a candidate for failure to file is subject to judicial review.

This penalty appears to be excessive, especially if the failure to file is inadvertent or accidental. More importantly, this provision is probably unconstitutional. Article I, section 2, clause 2 of the Constitution sets forth the sole qualifications for Representatives, and Article I, section 3, clause 3 sets forth the sole qualifications for Members of the United States Senate. Congress has no power to add to those qualifications. As was stated by the Supreme Court in Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486, 522, and 547 (1969), "the Constitution leaves the House (or the Senate) without authority to exclude any person, duly elected by his constituents, who meets all the requirements for membership expressly prescribed in the Constitution" and "the House is without power to exclude any member-elect who meets the Constitution's requirements for membership."

It is true that under the provisions of Article I, section 5, clause 1 of the Constitution that each House is the judge of the elections, returns and qualifications of its Members. This does not mean, however, that either House or the Congress as a whole has authority to add to the qualifications prescribed by the Constitution for the office of Representative or Senator, or to prevent a successful candidate from being seated who has qualifications. Yet, this is the effect of section 302.

The Court, in Powell v. McCormack, took note of the fact that a House of Congress has, in the past, excluded a candidate for other reasons than failure to meet constitutional qualifications. The Court rejected such instances as precedent by saying "that an unconstitutional action has been taken before surely does not render that same action any less unconstitutional at a later date . . . we are not inclined to give its precedents controlling weight. And, what evidence we have of Congress' early understanding confirms our conclusion that the House is without power to exclude any member-elect who meets the Constitution's requirements for membership." (395 U.S. 546, 547)

Proponents of this provision claim that the Ohio courts have upheld a similar disqualification provision in the Ohio law. In particular, the courts ruled that Donald E. Lukens could not file for governor of Ohio in February 1973, because he failed to file a statement covering campaign receipts and expenditures as a successful candidate for the Ohio State Senate in 1972. However, this case is not comparable, because the office of governor of Ohio was not created by the United States Constitution, as was the Congress. The courts seemed to express the reservation that, if applied to Members of Congress, the law would be unconstitutional because of the Powell v. McCormack decision.

Statute of limitations

Any candidate or person who violates any campaign finance law must be prosecuted, tried or punished for such violation within three years after the commission of the violation. This provision, contained in section 302, also applies retroactively to the 1971 Act.

GAO Clearinghouse

The committee, by 16 to 2, voted to abolish the elections clearinghouse in the General Accounting Office. The clearinghouse was instituted by the Keating amendment to the 1971 Act and is the only good thing the Federal government does to aid State and local officials in administering Federal elections. Presently, the Federal government dumps the administration of Federal elections into the laps of these State and local officials who are in turn at the mercy of Federal rules and regulations. Since its inception, the clearinghouse has drawn up and conducted studies using the first list of all State and local election boards, and has conducted and is conducting, a wide range of studies on fraud, election administration and voter registration. It publishes a monthly summary of election case law and changes in Federal and State election law which is invaluable to many State officials and some congressional officers. The clearinghouse has also facilitated the dissemination of information between State and local election boards. In the next few years, it will probably save these boards millions of dollars by showing State and local officials more effective means of administering elections, helping them to avoid the purchase of faulty and excessively expensive voting machines and encouraging the computerization and modernization of registration systems.

Penalties

Section 101(e) increases the monetary penalties for violation of sections 608, 610, 611 and 613 of title 18. Similar high monetary penalties are called for under sections 614 and 615. Prison penalties are left unchanged. This increase in penalties should help make enforcement of the law more effective. Big contributors and corporations will no longer be able to circumvent the law by making huge contributions and then face only a $1,000 fine. They will be forced to pay considerably more for any violation of the law.

Increasing the difficulty of enforcement.

Sections 102 and 206 make certain exemptions to the definitions of contributions and expenditure, thereby rendering ineffective certain disclosure provisions of the Federal Election Compaign Act of 1971 and the contribution and expenditure limitations under title 18. These exemptions make effective enforcement more difficult.

For example, presently, candidates who do not fully disclose their expenditures and contributions can be caught fairly easily, because if they spend or receive something which they have not reported, then there is clearly a violation of the law. However, if certain exemptions are made under the disclosure provisions, then a candidate might claim that a contribution or expenditure that he failed to report was not covered, because it was exempted under the exceptions to the definition of contribution and expenditure. Except for the more flagrant abuses, enforcement of the 1971 disclosure provisions will be more difficult.

Similarly, without full disclosure, it will be difficult to ascertain whether or not a candidate or other person has violated a contribution or expenditure limitation.

ALTERNATIVE: THE FEDERAL ELECTIONS COMMISSION

Instead of maintaining or possibly weakening the present administration and enforcement provisions, the committee could have strengthened them by adopting an amendment, which will be offered on the floor by myself and Rep. Dante Fascell, as follows:

The Frenzel-Fascell amendment is a compromise between those who would like to see full criminal prosecution powers in a Commission and those who wish to maintain the present unsatisfactory administration-enforcement system. The Commission will become the supervisory officer for all Federal elections, replacing the GAO, Clerk of the House and Secretary of the Senate.

The Commission is designed to protect the rights of Members of Congress and other candidates, as well as the rights of the general public. Safeguards are provided which do not exist under the present law to prevent the filing of false complaints and unfair prosecutions. They are as follows:

1. If the Commission becomes aware of any violation, it must immediately inform all persons involved. If the Commission determines that the persons involved had been making and continue to make a good faith and reasonable effort to comply with the law and take immediate steps to bring about compliance, no further legal proceedings can be taken.

2. The Commission must, upon request, issue an advisory opinion on the legality of any transaction or activity under its jurisdiction. Any person who makes a good faith and reasonable effort to comply with an advisory opinion shall be presumed not to be in violation of the law.

3. The Executive Director and employees are strictly prohibited from making regulations and using the enforcement and subpoena powers of the Commission. These powers remain solely in the hands of the full-time members of the Commission.

4. Any person who knowingly and willingly files a false complaint or makes false statements to the Commission can be fined and imprisoned.

5. If a candidate is cleared of false charges by an independent Commission, the public will more than likely have confidence in and respect the Commission's finding. On the other hand, if a candidate, especially an incumbent, is cleared of false charges by the Board of Supervisory Officers, the public may believe the Board's decision smacks of cronyism or is the result of a special favor or deal.

All six members of the Commission are selected from lists submitted by Congress. The congressional leadership nominates and the President appoints only from these lists.

Since the Commissioners are full-time members and the Commission is an independent establishment of the executive branch, no Members of Congress may serve on the Commission.

Considerable controversy has arisen over the advisability of allowing Commission appointments to be made by the Watergate White House. Our Commission would only allow the President to choose from among names submitted by Congress. We gave the President this limited discretion mainly because Presidential appointment is absolutely necessary if the Commission is to be given any authority to enforce campaign finance laws in the courts. The Supervisory Board in the committee bill is not presidentially appointed and, hence has no enforcement powers and cannot be given these powers.

The Commission would be similar in structure to the independent agencies of the executive branch. Such independent agencies have been found to have the constitutional authority to enforce the laws under their jurisdiction. See e.g. National Harness Manufacturer's Assoc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 268 F. 705 (6th Cir. 1920); United States v. Morton Salt, 338 U.S. 632 (1950); Texas and Pacific Railroad Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 162 U.S. 197 (1896).

The manner in which officers of independent agencies are appointed is controlled by Article II, section 2, clause 2 of the United States Constitution which states:

> (The President) shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, Judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law. But the Congress may, by law, vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

Whether the members of a Federal Elections Commission qualify as "officers of the United States" or as "inferior officers," it is clear from the Constitution that ultimate authority to appoint such members rests either with the President alone or with the courts of law or heads of departments, as Congress may designate by law.

Congressional appointment would be a usurpation of executive powers. In Springer v. Phillipine Islands, 277 U.S. 189 (1928), the Court stated:

> Legislative power, as distinguished from executive power, is authority to make laws, but not to enforce them or appoint the agents charged with the duty of such enforcement. The latter are executive functions. It is unnecessary to enlarge further upon the general subject, since it has so recently received the full consideration of this court . . . (in) Myers v. United States.

Although Congress does not have the authority itself to appoint the heads of independent agencies of other officers of the United States, it does have the power to circumscribe the President's power to nominate such officers. The contrary assertion that the mere grant of executive power confers upon the President the unfettered power of appointment is clearly inconsistent with statutes which restrict the exercise by the President of the power of nomination of officers of the United States.

Many of these statutes impose limitations upon Presidential appointments to Federal agencies. See e.g. Interstate Commerce Commission, 41 Stat. 456, 497 (February 28, 1920); Federal Trade Commission, 38 Stat. 717 (September 26, 1914); United States Tariff Commission, 39 Stat. 756, 795 (September 8, 1916). Of particular significance are those statutes which provide that the President may be restricted in his appointment to certain named individuals. See United States v. Myers, 272 U.S. 52.

In conclusion, it is constitutionally required under Article II that the President appoint the members of the Commission. However, it has been established by the courts and legislative practice that his power may be limited by Congress through designation of a list of individuals from which to choose.

To assure the Commission's independence, the members are chosen as follows: one from among individuals recommended by the Speaker and majority leader of the House, one from among individuals recommended by the majority leader of the Senate, one jointly by these three congressional leaders of the majority party, one by the minority leader of the House, one by the minority leader of the Senate and one jointly by the two congressional leaders of the minority party.

A Federal Elections Advisory Board, composed of members of Congress and appointees of the major political parties, is established to assure that Congress and the national parties have maximum input into the workings of the Commission.

The powers of the Commission are almost identical to those given the Board of Elections of the District of Columbia in the D.C. Campaign Finance Reform Act which passed the House by a 314–17 vote.

All criminal prosecution is left with the Justice Department. The Commission can conduct hearings and investigations on alleged or apparent violations. It can also petition the courts for declaratory or injunctive relief to bring about civil compliance with the law.

Since November 1972, sixteen States have enacted (Alaska, California, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Hawaii, Iowa, Kansas, Maryland, Massachusets, Minnesota, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Washington and Wisconsin) and three States have greatly strengthened (Kentucky, North Carolina and Rhode Island) independent agencies to enforce State campaign finance laws. The Federal Elections Comimssion builds on that experience.

ADVANTAGES OF COMPROMISE INDEPENDENT FEDERAL ELECTIONS COMMISSION

1. Restore public confidence

By judiciously enforcing campaign finance reform legislation, a Commission could increase public confidence in the effectiveness and fairness of election laws, and indirectly, in public officials themselves. Attainment of a coordinated, fair and equitable enforcement-administration agent without the present appearance of conflicts of interest would help restore public confidence.

2. Prevent unfair prosecutions

Under the present system, the Justice Department has the power to prosecute even the most minor violations of the law. In 1972, the Clerk of the House referred 5,000 violations to the Justice Department. If Justice wanted to, it could prosecute most of the candidates (including most of the incumbents) that ran in the 1972 election. In the aftermath of Watergate, the Justice Department could seriously embarrass and end the political careers of many candidates and incumbents by simply prosecuting them for minor violations. The Commission would have the power and authority to prevent such unfair prosecutions.

The Commission is designed to provide for the protection of the rights of Members of Congress and other candidates as well as the rights of the general public. Several safeguards, already listed above, are provided which do not exist under existing law.

3. Eliminate conflicts of interest

Currently, a conflict of interest situation exists in which employees of the House and Senate are charged with identifying and reporting possible violations of the law committed by their employers. Even with the most conscientious and well-intentioned Clerk of the House and Secretary of the Senate, the public is certain to be skeptical and question the objectivity and zeal of their enforcement efforts against persons to whom they owe their jobs.

The House Administration Committee bill establishes a Board of Supervisory Officers which would place four direct appointees of Congress and three employees of Congress in charge of the administration and enforcement of election law. Instead of eliminating the present conflict of interest situation, the Board would maintain it by allowing employees and direct appointees of Congress to police elections.

4. Reversing the past history of nonenforcement

Historically, campaign finance reform legislation has been a failure because of the lack of effective enforcement. The Corrupt Practices Act was almost never effective in its 50 year life. The failure of the Justice Department to prosecute in 1972 is widely known. No administration or enforcement agency that is in any manner politically encumbered has ever done an adequate, consistent job in administering and enforcing election law.

5. Reduce bureaucracy

One criticism of the Commission has been that it would add still another bureaucracy to the growing proliferation of Federal agencies. To the contrary, the Commission would combine the present work of three agencies (Clerk of the House, Secretary of the Senate and GAO) into a single entity.

Although it was argued in 1971 that the present arrangement would prevent the need for creating additional bureaucracy, the fact is that the Clerk assigned over 20 employees to this function, the Secretary 8 and the GAO 26. The creation of a single Commission would combine these duties and should reduce the total number of employees needed to carry out the same functions.

6. Increase coordination

At present, four separate agencies—the Clerk of the House, Secretary of the Senate, Comptroller General, and Justice Department—are charged with enforcing the 1971 law. This makes it difficult to achieve fair, consistent and coordinated supervision and enforcement of the law. Such matters as preparation of reporting forms or interpretations of the law may be treated differently by each entity or may require burdensome and extensive consultation to achieve consistency. A single Commission would eliminate many of these problems.

7. Visibility

The Commission would have much greater visibility than an office or agency buried within the Clerk, Secretary, GAO or Justice Department. The press, the public, elected officials, the parties and political committees could carefully scrutinize the Commission's actions and lay the blame for any failure squarely with the Commission. With a highly visible Commission, the public would expect and have confidence in nonpartisan, vigorus enforcement of the law.

8. Assure expeditious enforcement

Any adminstration and enforcement mechanism must provide for continuous, smooth coordination between the administrators and enforcers of the law. Without it, many serious violations that could be disclosed before the election (when enforcement is most effective) will not be made public until long after the election is over.

With spending and contribution limitations, enforcement before the election may be all-important. A Commission would be able to take almost instantaneous action to curb illegal activities and protect the rights of honest candidates while exposing the violators.

II. DISCLOSURE AND EXEMPTIONS

Section 206 of the Committee bill makes certain exceptions to the definitions of contribution and expenditure for the purpose of disclosure under title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971. Section 102 makes these exemptions applicable to contribution and expenditure limitations under title 18.

These exemptions, which were proposed in good faith to deal with legitimate problems have several negative, potentially disastrous effects. Since some types of donations and disbursements formerly defined as contributions and expenditures are no longer included in that definition, candidates will no longer have to make full and complete disclosure of contributions and expenditures.

Secondly, as was previously noted, enforcement of both the disclosure provisions and of contribution and expenditure limitations may be much more difficult.

Thirdly, these exemptions may be used as loopholes by special interests and wealthy individuals to circumvent limitations and to channel funds, goods and services into Federal campaigns from hidden, subterranean and suspicious sources.

Fourthly, these loopholes make ambiguous the prohibitions on contributions in the name of another and contributions by unions, coporations and foreign nationals. Since the exemptions apply to these sections as well, if the Committee bill passes with the loopholes intact, the courts may decide that certain types of donations by unions, corporations and foreign nationals are permissible.

Originally, the loopholes in the Committee bill were substantial. After tentative approval by the Committee, however, they were cleaned up an tightened up to a large extent. Nevertheless, these exemptions are still loopholes and may have disastrous effects on election law if the courts linterpret them literally.

Food, travel, and personal property

Two exceptions are exempt up to $500 from both the definition of contribution and expenditure for the purpose of disclosure and contributions and expenditure limitations. Without full disclosure of these exemptions, it may be difficult to determine whether an individual or political committee has spent $500 or more under either of these exemptions. Through these loopholes, contributors can legally breach the $1,000 maximum contribution limit. These exemptions are as follows:

1. the use of real or personal property by any individual who is the owner of the property with respect to the rendering of voluntary services to any candidate or political committee, including the cost of invitations and food and beverages provided on the individual's premises. This amendment was originally intended to cover only a person's home or a volunteer's van or car and was also created to allow friends of a candidate to have small receptions in their homes without becoming subject to the provisions of Federal election law. But this exemption's applicability is much wider. It would allow an individual or political committee to donate a computer, storefront, fleet of cars, printing factory, perhaps even a television or radio station. It would also allow "fat cats" to stage large, fancy receptions, cocktail parties and dinners in their homes. The candidate would not have to disclose the first $500 of such use as a contribution or expenditure and would not have to credit the first $500 to spending and contribution limitations.

2. Any unreimbursed travel expense with respect to the rendering of volunteer services. The original intent of this exemption was to prevent candidates from being prosecuted for not reporting the travel expenses of volunteers or friends working in their campaign. However, the legislative language of this loophole is much greater than that. Candidates might not have to report their rides on privately owned jets, yachts etc. during a campaign. Costs of transportation of voters to polls could also be exempt.

These two loopholes could be reduced in scope and still preserve the intent of their advocates, but there is no real need for either of them. If the activities exempted by these loopholes are not part of the candidate's formal, organized campaign, they may be classified as an independent expenditure. Any person can make independent expenditures advocating the election or defeat of a candidate that do not exceed $1,000 without the candidate's knowledge or authorization. If such activities are part of a candidate's formal, organized campaign, then they should be reported and counted against his contribution and expenditure limitations.

Slatecards

The so-called slatecard amendment exempts from the definition of contribution and expenditure for the purposes of disclosure and contribution and expenditure limitations any payment by a State or local party committee for the costs of preparation, display, mailing or other distribution of a listing of three or more candidates for any public office. This exemption does not apply to costs incurred with respect to broadcasting stations, magazines and other similar types of general public political advertising (other than newspapers). There is no ceiling or limitation placed on such activity.

The original intent of the slatecard amendment was to allow parties to print slatecards, sample ballots etc. to educate voters and encourage straight party voting without being subject to the disclosure provisions and contribution and expenditure limitations in Federal law. The slatecard amendment would eliminate the difficult problem of trying to prorate the costs of these items to each candidate's campaign so that they can be reported and credited to a candidate's contribution and expenditure limitation. It would also prevent candidates from being prosecuted for party activities they do not have any knowledge of. This provision would be especially helpful in senatorial and presidential campaigns where a candidate may have no idea what a local party in a remote region of the State or country may be doing in his behalf.

Unfortunately, this amendment also opens up a loophole. State and local parties could send out numerous mass mailings, buy huge quantities of sample ballots and pay for dozens of advertisements in newspapers. As long as the candidate appeared or was involved with two other candidates, the expenditure and source of the money would not have to be disclosed. Further, this might include mailings and newspaper advertisements that just incidentally mention two other candidates. Since State and local party committee is not defined, this provision could be widely abused. Special interests and wealthy individuals might set up dummy party committees and pump in thousands of dollars for a candidate's mailings or advertisements and would not have to disclose these donations as contributions.

This exemption is not needed. Both State and local and national parties could be allowed to spend funds independently of a candidate without that candidate's being forced to credit these expenditures to his limitations. The recently passed Senate bill (S. 3044) contained such a provision. State and local and national parties were each allowed to spend up to $10,000 in a House race and $20,000 or 2 cents per voter in any other race for Federal office.

The 1971 law already gives the supervisory officers discretion and flexibility in allowing State and local party committees to avoid disclosing and prorating expenses on behalf of specific Federal candidates. Under section 306(c), the supervisory officers may relieve any category of political committees of the obligation to comply with reporting requirements if the committee primarily supports persons seeking State or local office, does not substantially support any Federal candidate and does not operate in more than one State or on a statewide basis. A similar provision would be written into title 18 to cover contribution and expenditure limitations.

Fund raising

Any costs incurred by a candidate for fund raising purposes, provided that they do not exceed ¼ of the candidate's total spending limit, will be exempted from the definition of expenditure for the purposes of the expenditure limitations. This exemption does not apply to fund raising efforts made through broadcasting stations, newspapers, magazines, outdoor advertising facilities and other similar types of general public political advertising. This provision is another loophole, but is one that is actually needed.

A major goal of campaign finance reform is to encourage the solicitation and raising of small contributions. Yet, it generally costs considerably more to raise funds in small amounts. If candidates and political committees are forced to credit to their limitations all fund raising costs, then there will be a huge incentive to raise money in large chunks, thus defeating one of the major purposes of reform. By exempting fund raising costs from contribution and expenditure limitations, the Committee bill encourages candidates to raise sums in small amounts. Further, since these costs must be disclosed, the basic integrity of the 1971 Act is maintained.

The Committee bill also exempts fund raising costs by broad-based political committees. These costs cannot be incurred with respect to broadcasting stations, newspapers, magazines, outdoor advertising facilities and other similar types of general public political advertising. There is no limitation on such activities.

This provision is not really needed since it is unlikely that fund raising costs by broad-based political committees that give to many candidates will actually be prorated and credited to the candidates' own limitations. To assure that these costs aren't prorated and credited, legislative history can be made on the floor specifically exempting these costs.

A loophole is opened by this exemption. Five or more candidates, especially in large metropolitan, may get together and set up dummy fund raising committees. These committees would spend considerable sums on mass mailings and other similar fund raising techniques. They would give $5,000 to each candidate, but would actually spend much more in their behalf by using fund raising techniques to increase the candidates' name recognition and popularity. Such activities would not be credited to the candidates' contribution and expenditure limitations.

Vendors

The sale of food or beverage by a vendor for use in a candidate's campaign at a charge less than the normal charge, but at a charge at least equal to the cost of food or beverage is exempted from the definition of contribution for both the purposes of disclosure and of contribution limitations. This exemption may not be needed, since food and beverage purchases are largely exempt under another exception. Nevertheless, this provision does allow friends to give the candidate large amounts of food at a discount price without disclosure.

Since corporations and labor unions may be included as vendors, they may be able to make indirect contributions by selling candidates food and beverages at extremely cheap prices without even having to disclose such activities. It is also reasonable to assume that incumbents will have better luck in receiving these unreported gifts from whiskey merchants, provisioners, and innkeepers than their challengers.

Communications to membership organizations

The committee bill exempts from both the disclosure provisions and expenditure limitations any communication by any membership organization to its members, as long as the group is not organized primarily for the purpose of influencing Federal elections. Thus, any special interest group whose primary purpose is not to influence Federal elections could engage in campaign efforts which might parallel those being conducted by the candidate's organization.

Miscellaneous

There are three other exemptions in the committee bill, all of which appear to be non-controversial.

1. Any news story, commentary or editorial distributed through the facilities of any broadcasting station, newspaper, magazine or other periodical publication is exempted from the definition of expenditure, unless such facilities are owned or controlled by any political party, political committee or candidate. This provision is basically in conformity with the law already, although it may exempt some special interest publications which may be extremely useful and effective to certain candidates during a campaign.

2. Nonpartisan registration activity designed to encourage individuals to register to vote or to vote is exempted from the definition of expenditure. This activity is exempt anyhow.

3. Finally, any communication which is not made for the purpose of influencing an election is also exempted from the definition of expenditure. This seems to ratify existing law, but may be aimed at exempting an incumbent's newsletter and other similar publications (which are exempted anyhow).

Almost all of these exemptions are not needed. The Committee's problem is that its spending limits are too low. These exemptions acknowledge a need for candidates to spend in excess of $75,000. Raising the limit would accomplish the same purpose and assure full disclosure.

Common Cause amendment

Section 206(a) attempts to bring under the disclosure provisions of the 1971 Act groups such as Common Cause and the Environmental Policy Center (which attempt to influence the public by publishing information about incumbents and their records) by extending the definition of political committees to include those that commit any act for the purpose of influencing, directly or indirectly, the election of any person to Federal office. This section, however, will probably not force groups such as Common Cause to report because the phrase "act for the purpose" would require the Government to prove intent. This will be extremely difficult to prove in a court of law.

Duties of the supervisory officer

Section 205(a) eliminates the provisions of the 1971 Act that require the supervisory officers to publish an annual compilation of total contributions and expenditures made by candidates in the preceding year. It also eliminates the preparation of special reports and analyses of campaign financing trends and patterns. Finally, it eliminates the requirements that the supervisory officers assure wide dissemination of statistics, summaries and reports.

Thus, private individuals and public interest groups will be the public's only source of concise information about the disclosure information filed by candidates. The provision that eliminates the requirement that the supervisory officers consolidate data and publish summary reports may help to frustrate and reduce the usefulness of disclosure. Without these summaries, the public may find itself confronted only by a maze of reports and forms. The main purpose of disclosure—the dissemination to the public of information about candidates' sources of funds and disbursements—will be thwarted. Also, without the section encouraging wide dissemination, the Clerk and the Secretary might read the intent of the law as being that the reports remain locked up in their offices or be available to the public for only limited time periods.

Sale of cumulative index

Section 205(a) also adds a provision that requires the supervisory officers to publish a cumulative index of reports and statements in the Federal Register at regular intervals and to make the index available for purchase for a reasonable price. This would be a welcome addition to the present system.

Central or principal campaign committee

Sections 201 and 202 provide that every candidate for Federal office must designate a principal or central campaign committee and that all reports of other committees established to support that candidate must be funneled through the central committee. The purpose of these sections is to assure accountability and stop efforts to circumvent disclosure via the proliferation of committees. In addition, only the central committee may make expenditures on behalf of a candidate. Since the Committee's loophole definition of expenditure applies to these sections, this provision is not as effective as it could be. Candidates can simply use the exemptions to circumvent the law and spend money through other committees.

These two sections have two other good provisions. They delete the current requirements that a political committee include a notice on the face of all literature that a copy of its reports is available from the Superintendent of Documents, and the requirement that the Public Printer publish annual reports on the contributions and expenditures of every registered candidate or political committee. These provisions will lessen the burden on candidates, save the taxpayers millions of dollars, while at the same time not weakening the disclosure provisions of the 1971 Act.

Sections 201 and 202 could be further strengthened by adoption of the Cook amendment requiring that all expenditures made on behalf of a candidate who has received the nomination of his political party for president be specifically approved by the chairman of the political party or his designated representative.

Reports

Section 203 reduces the number of reports a candidate must file, thereby reducing the administrative burden on candidates, while at the same time assuring that the disclosure provisions are in no way weakened. Instead of a 5 day and 15 day report, there is a single 10 day report which is complete as of the fifteenth day before the election. Reports are also filed on the thirtieth day after the election and must be complete as of the twentieth day after the election. In any year in which an individual is a candidate, a report must be filed between December 31 of that year and January 31 of the following year. Reports must also be filed quarterly. If, however, a candidate or political committee both receives contributions and makes expenditures of less than $1,000 during a quarter in a non-election year, then no quarterly report is required. When the last day for filing a quarterly report occurs within ten days of an election, the quarterly report is waived. Finally, any contribution of $1,000 or more received after the final pre-election report must be reported within forty-eight hours after its receipt. The national acknowledgement on all reports should be eliminated and the candidate and his committee should report on the same form.

Transfers

Section 203 also requires that when a candidate files a report, he shall include not only the total sum of contributions and expenditures, but also contributions and expenditures less transfers between committees. This provision will alleviate the problem whereby it appears a candidate has spent $100,000, when actually he spent only $50,000, because half of the expenditures (or contributions) were transfers between his own committees.

Date of filing

Section 204 allows quarterly and post-election reports to be delivered by registered or certified mail and provides that the United States postmark stamped on the cover of the envelope shall be deemed the date of filing.

III. CONTRIBUTION LIMITATIONS

The committee bill limits contributions by political committees to candidates for Federal office to $5,000 per election. For the purposes of this limitation, a political committee is a committee which has existed for a period of not less than 6 months which has received contributions from more than 50 persons and has made contributions to 5 or more candidates for Federal office. State committees of a political party are not required to contribute to 5 or more candidates in order to qualify.

All other persons may contribute $1,000 per election to any candidate for Federal office.

A candidate for Federal office may contribute up to $25,000 from his own personal funds or the funds of his immediate family.

A candidate may pay off from his own funds or the funds of his immediate family, any campaign debt incurred before December 31, 1972.

The contribution limitations contained in the Committee bill will be somewhat ineffective and difficult to enforce, because of the exemptions the bill makes to the definition of contribution for the purposes of disclosure and the limitations.

Even if the exemptions are eliminated, there are several other problems with the way the contribution section is worded and drafted.

1. Endorsed or guaranteed loan loophole

The underlying rationale behind contribution limitations is that a person who provides large amounts of money to a campaign gains, or appears to gain, undue influence over the recipient candidate.

However, the definition of contribution contained in the committee bill does not specifically exempt loans from State or national banks. Originally, this exemption was necessary in order that such loans not be considered a contribution by the bank. Such loans are extremely useful in the early phases of campaigns before fund-raising efforts begin to show a return.

It is common practice for such loans, especially loans to political committees, to be endorsed by one or more individuals of sufficient means to repay the loan in case the recipient should fail to do so. Such endorsements must be reported by the recipient, but there is no mention of them in the definition of contribution in the contribution limitation section.

With the adoption of contribution limitations, these endorsements emerge as a major problem. They represent a gaping loophole through which individuals can still make large amounts of money available to a campaign. The contribution limitation cannot prevent anyone from endorsing loans in amounts as large as a bank will approve. Even if the loan is repaid, the endorser has demonstrated his ability to make large amounts of money available to a campaign, and would almost certainly acquire whatever undue influence accrued to individuals who formerly were able to make large contributions.

Moreover, this practice would enable wealthy candidates to endorse loans to their own campaigns in excess of the present limitation of $25,000 on expenditures from personal funds, an advantage which candidates of modest means would not enjoy.

If the recipient of the loan is unable to repay it, further complications arise. If the endorsed loans exceed $1,000, the endorser has either violated the law in the course of fulfilling a legal obligation openly and legitimately assumed, or the contribution limitation is essentially meaningless.

An amendment to repair this section was offered to require endorsements of bank loans to be treated as actual loans by the endorser for the purposes of reporting and the limitations. Under the terms of the amendment, no person would have been able to make contributions, loans, or endorsements of loans to any candidate or committee which total more than $1,000. This seemed to be a reasonable way of dealing with a major loophole, but the committee saw fit to reject it.

2. Separate elections

The contribution limitation applies separately to each election, but the bill does not state what qualifies as an election. Under the definition of election, a candidate could conceivably receive from one individual: $1,000 for a party convention, $1,000 for a primary, $1,000 for a primary run-off and $1,000 for the general election, or a total of $4,000. Similarly, special interest committees could conceivably give up to $20,000. Since the enforcers of the 1971 Act have had considerable trouble interpreting the meaning of election, language should be drafted to alleviate this problem.

3. Further contribution loopholes

Even if such language is added, an individual could still contribute up to $4,000 ($1,000 for the nomination+$1,000 for the general election+$500 for each of the two exemptions or $1,000+$1,000 in independent expenditures). He could also funnel money into the state and local parties that could be used for slatecards, sample ballots and newspaper advertisements which feature the candidate with two or more other candidates briefly mentioned. A political committee could contribute $12,000 plus donate money to state and local party committees for slatecards, newspaper advertisements, etc.

4. Special interest contributions

A recent Common Cause survey found that special interests groups have a total of $17.4 million in funds available for the 1974 congressional races; almost twice as much as the same groups reported spending on behalf of candidates in the 1972 congressional elections. Further, the prime fund raising season has not even started. Obviously, special interest groups have not learned much from Watergate. Public confidence will only be further undermined by the unleashing of this mammoth warchest. If public confidence is to be bolstered, then special interest money must be stringently regulated.

While it is the intent of the committee that wealthy individual and special interest groups be prohibited from proliferating their committees to circumvent the contribution limitations, there is no specific legislative language which prevents proliferation. Some special interest groups presently have ten, fifteen or twenty committees. These special interests could conceivably give up to almost a quarter of a million dollars ($12,000 x 20) to a candidate. While the committee's legislative history may be sufficient to prohibit such proliferation, a safer way would be to write legislative language into the bill.

Under the committee bill, an individual can give up to $25,000 to a political party or special interest committee supporting more than one candidate. However, the earmarking language in the bill prevents an individual from channeling funds to a particular candidate through these political parties and political committees. Nonetheless, an individual could give several thousand dollars to a particular party or special interest committee, knowing full well that a substantial part of that money would end up in the hands of a particular candidate. In addition, special interest committees can give unlimited amounts of funds to political parties and political committees supporting more than one candidate. Some limits might be placed on such giving.

The committee's $5,000 limit on special interest committees should be reduced to $3,000, $2,500 or perhaps even $1,000. A major purpose of this legislation is to discourage special interest influence, yet special interest groups are allowed to give five times as much as an individual.

Ideally, these problems could be eliminated by prohibiting the use of special interest money. Because this might be unconstitutional, all contributions should at least be identified as to the original donor. Special interest groups would only be allowed to act as the agents of individual contributors. This provision would reduce considerably special interest influence gained via political contributions. It would stimulate individual interest and participation and would prevent a few "bosses" from dictating political decisions to the many people in the organization. Such an amendment, offered by Rep. Caldwell Butler, was defeated by a vote of 14 to 12 in the committee.

5. Contributions "in-kind"

The committee left unchanged the status of "in-kind" contributions. The committee defeated a needed amendment to prohibit such contributions. Under the present disclosure language, "in-kind" contributions must be reported as contributions, but the law should be more specific as far as limitations are concerned.

6. Authorized committee loophole

The bill, as drafted, states that if a contribution is given to a political committee authorized by the candidate in writing to accept contributions for that candidate, then that contribution is treated as a contribution to the candidate. This language leaves a major loophole. It allows a candidate to receive contributions in excess of the limits simply by having the contributions go to a political committee of the candidate which is not authorized in writing to accept contributions for the candidate. This loophole is best closed by describing the limit in terms of a contribution made "to or for the benefit of a candidate" rather than just "to a candidate" and/or requiring that any political committee which is raising money for a specific candidate has to be authorized in writing by that candidate in order to raise money for him.

7. Campaign trips by the President and Vice President

The President and Vice President are often required either by law or the Secret Service to fly an official plane to political events. The cost of such a trip often runs into the tens of thousands of dollars. Would this count as a contribution? Certainly, it should not. If it does, the President or Vice President might unavoidably or inadvertently violate the contribution limitations. Also, the candidate might exceed his expenditure limitation. For the purposes of the limitations, the cost of such trips must be considered what it would normally cost a person to travel by commercial airline.

8. Aggregate limits

The bill limits the aggregate amount an individual can contribute in one year to all candidates to $25,000. However, the exemptions under the definition of contribution apply to this section, so an individual can in reality give more than this amount.

IV. EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS

The committee bill sets expenditure limitations of $10 million for candidates for nomination for President; $20 million for the general election for President; 5¢ times the population of the geographical area or $75,000 for nomination for election, or election, to the Senate (whichever is greater); $75,000 for nomination for election, or election, to the House of Representatives, Delegate from the District of Columbia, or Resident Commissioner; and $15,000 for nomination for election, or election, for delegate from Guam or the Virgin Islands.

The bill also allows any person to make independent expenditures advocating the election or defeat of a candidate not to exceed $1,000.

The bill repeals the media limitations in the 1971 Act so that candidates will have greater flexibility in how they use their campaign funds.

To assure that these limitations do not become outdated, the bill contains a cost of living escalator clause.

The exemptions under the definition of expenditure for the purposes of disclosure make the limitations ineffective and most difficult to enforce. Without full disclosure, it is impossible to know how much a candidate is spending. Further, the fund raising exemption specifically allows candidates to spend up to $18,750 in additional funds in a House race.

If an expenditure limitation is to be enacted, it should be straightforward and not fraught with loopholes. Public confidence will not be helped by a low limitation that can be easily circumvented through loopholes.

The spending limits in the bill could conceivably have a salutary effect. However, there is simply not enough information available on the cost of campaigns on which to attempt to establish realistic spending limitations. Higher limits should be established until we have better data.

States and congressional districts differ greatly geographically and in economic, social communications, and other factors. Campaign conditions, requirements and costs vary greatly in different parts of the country. There is no formula which can be used to gauge what is the proper amount to spend on a campaign. Placing the same limitation on total spending for all areas is bound to be discriminatory unless the limit is set high enough to account for the varying conditions.

The spending limits in the bill have a pro-incumbent bias. Low limits like those in the bill would tend to limit a challenger's ability to compete effectively. A $90,000 or $100,000 limitation for a congressional campaign may sound generous to reformers or to incumbents who re-election does not require spending of amounts anywhere near that figure. However, for the challenger a limitation of $75,000 imposes nearly impossible problems. With today's costs there is no way a challenger can make himself known over a well-known incumbent under stringent circumstances. In 1972, incumbents won well over 95% of the time, and the 12 challengers that did beat incumbents averaged expenditures of $125,000.

Incumbents have a formidable array of weaponry available to them. They have staff allowances. Legitimate staff legislative work frequently overlaps the political function. They have the franking privilege. Legitimate use of the frank can be extremely helpful politically, and the use of postal patron mailings is commonly thought to be a powerful political device as well as a necessary and legitimate means of communicating with constituents. Incumbents also have name and face recognition because they have ready access to the media. Since most political expense is directed toward name recognition, the incumbent need not spend nearly as much as a challenger even though he can raise funds more easily.

Higher spending limits will not mean excessively high spending. While political spending is increasing at a rapid rate, political spending in the United States is still not excessively high. While total spending for all political campaigns was $400 million in 1972, this figure was still less than the combined advertising budget for Proctor and Gamble, Ford and General Motors for the same year. Four times as much is spent on advertising for drugs and cosmetics. In 1972, advertising for all U.S. companies totaled $22.5 billion. Is this a rational allocation of national priorities? Should the cost of the debate on which type of soap suds or car to buy exceed by fifty times the cost of the debate on the important political issues of our time?

Furthermore, the costs of campaigning in the United States are not significantly higher than the corresponding costs in some nations and are actually lower than in many other countries. An index of political expenditures compared to the economic development of a country found a range of from 27¢ for Australia to $21.20 for Israel. The United States, at $1.12, was clustered near India and Japan at the lower range of the index.

While the amount of expenditures in a campaign is not the only variable affecting the number of people who vote, a reduction in expenditures would lead to a reduction in advertising and campaigning which might very well further reduce citizen interest and participation. Low limitations tend to reduce opportunities for voters to learn about candidates, but even more signficantly, low ceilings reduce the opportunities for voters to learn more about politics.

In setting strict limitations on the common person's ability to get himself or herself elected to Congress, the committee's bill would fail to do anything about the problem of the man who brings not money but other resources to the election. The celebrity, sports figure, the movie star and other famous individuals all have had their advertising done for them as a result of their occupations. They don't need to spend money on their political campaigns. Financial restrictions imposed on their opponents simply insure an unequal contest and deny the common man a chance to serve in Congress.

Low, stringent, sweeping overall expenditure limitations may invite violations of the law because such violations may be extremely difficult to document or prove. It gets progressively harder to keep track of what a candidate or his supporters are spending on such easily manufactured items as bumper stickers or other types of printed materials. Extreme limitations would increase incentives for circumvention of the law.

The belief that the committee's spending limits are too low is bolstered by a careful, voluminous study of the 33 Senate races in 1972 by a group of political scientists at Harvard. The study argues that the purpose of a political campaign is not just to elect the candidate, but also to inform the candidates, educate the electorate and encourage wider political participation.

> Watergate and related events tend to place the issue in the context of preventing excessive spending and controlling "corruption". The idea is that the less money spent, the less needs to be raised, and thus the purer the process. Completely neglected in this statement of the issue is the need for campaigns to serve the broader public purposes and currently proposed spending limits just wouldn't permit this to be done.

Even though 24 of the 67 candidates would have violated a limit of 25¢ per adult, and 47 would have violated a 10¢ limit, few candidates or campaign managers felt they had adequately carried out the broad goals of education and involvement. "If campaigns are to fulfill any of the functions listed above . . . the present level of spending is much too low, if anything" the Harvard study contends. It suggests that 50¢ per adult might be a sufficient figure—a total of $77 million in Senate general election campaigns, over three times the $24 million reported in the 1972 races.

Tight spending limits also substantially favor incumbents, according to the survey. Of the 25 incumbent Senators running for reelection in 1972, only six were outspent by challengers and three of them lost. Of the 20 Senate candidates spending below 10¢ per adult, the only four to win were all incumbents who ran against challengers who spent even less than they did. The only incumbent to spend more than 25¢ per adult and lose was Caleb Boggs of Delaware who was outspent by challenger Joseph Biden. Present proposals, it continues, are "far too low to achieve any conceivable purpose other than to maintain incumbents in office."

The independent expenditure limitation in the committee bill would allow an individual to spend $1,000 on dozens, perhaps even a hunddred candidates. To assure there are no abuses of this exemption, an aggregate limit of $5,000 should be set on independent expenditures.

V. OTHER CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENTS

Contributions by government contractors

Section 103 allows government contractors to set up separate, segregated funds. This eliminates the present ambiguity whereby corporations and labor unions who have government contracts may or may not be able to set up such funds for their members or employees to contribute to while those without contracts can.

Formerly, government contractors were prohibited from making and soliciting contributions, except possibly through separate, segregated funds. The committee's loopholes will now aply to government contractors as well as to individuals, Since these contributions will also be exempt from disclosure provisions, they will be difficult to monitor and will be subject to considerable abuse.

Contributions by foreign nationals

Section 101(d) prohibits contributions by foreign nationals. Since the definitions under section 591 do not apply to section 613, the meaning of contribution is not clear. If the definitions for this title are made to apply, foreign nationals will be able to use the exemptions or loopholes to circumvent the law. They will be able to give real and personal property, etc., as long as their donations under the exemptions do not exceed $500. Again, since these donations are also exempt from disclosure provisions, they will be extremely difficult to monitor and enforce.

Contributions in the name of another

Section 101(f) prohibits contributions in the name of another.

Cash contributions

Section 101(f) prohibits cash contributions in excess of $100.

Excessive honorariums

Section 101(f) limits the amount of honorariums an officer or employee of any branch of the Federal government can accept to $1,000 per appearance, speech, or article and to an aggregate of $10,000 in any calendar year. This provision is aimed particularly at those who enjoy full-time, relatively good paying government jobs, but who earn large fees for speechmaking. Some Members of Congress earn more than their salary each year by speaking to groups who will be limited as to how much they can give in campaign contributions, but not in honorarium contributions.

VI. PUBLIC FINANCING

General

Section 403 makes appropriations to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund automatic.

Section 404 limits the amount a candidate can receive from the Presidential Election Campaign Fund to $20 million in a general election.

Section 405 makes payments from the Fund payable upon initial certification of eligibility, not upon certification of each expense.

Party conventions

Section 406 of the committee bill provides for $2 million of taxpayers' funds for each major party's convention. Minor parties receive an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount the national committee of a major party is entitled to receive as the number of popular votes received by the candidate for President of the minor party in the preceding presidential election bears to the average number of popular votes received by the candidates for President of the major parties.

National parties may not make expenditures over and above the $2 million limit, unless the supervisory board determines that there are extraordinary or unforeseen circumstances.

Presidential primaries

Matching taxpayer financing is provided in presidential primaries. The funds for the presidential primaries are supplied by the Presidential Election Campaign Fund. In order to qualify for funds, a candidate must raise contributions of $250 or less totaling $5,000 in each of 20 States. Once he reaches the threshold, all aggregate contributions of $250 or less will be matched on a one for one basis. A candidate can receive up to $5 million in public funds.

Payments to candidates of the same political party cannot exceed 45% of the total amount available, while payments to any one candidate cannot exceed 25%. Candidates are subject to the same basic provisions as they would be under the Presidential Election Campaign Fund. The House Administration Committee and Senate Committee on Rules and Administration can veto any rules and regulations promulgated to administer the presidential primary fund.

Pros and cons of public financing

The pros and cons of public financing are well-known. I personally feel that any advantages that might possibly accrue under a system of public financing are outweighed by the potential negative effects it would have on the electoral process. In particular:

1. There is nothing inherent in public financing that will magically and instantly purify the elections process. Even with full public financing, special interest influence will not necessarily be reduced and the law and its spirit will still be broken, innocently and willfully.

2. Incumbents will be protected and challengers discouraged. A challenger has much less name recognition. In order to compensate for the many legitimate advantages of an incumbent (franking privileges, access to media, large personal staff, seniority, free office space and services), a challenger must commence campaigning early and spend considerably more. While in 1972 the typical challenger who beat an incumbent spent $125,000, almost all public financing bills will provide all candidates with only a small fraction of this amount.

3. Subsidizing campaigns from the Federal treasury will discourage citizen interest and participation, and make candidates less responsive to the demands, needs and concerns of the people. This reduction in interest, participation and responsiveness might further depress voter turnout and foster alienation and cynicism among the general public.

4. Public financing forces the taxpayer to support candidates who are in opposition to their own political views. Public financing denies the taxpayer the right to designate where his or her contribution will go. Worse, there is no personal contribution under the check-off. The check-off is a delusion, because it only allows a taxpayer to apportion some one else's money.

5. Full public financing is an infringement of freedom of speech. Public financing would deprive individuals of the long-enjoyed right of giving money to support candidates of one's choice. Any such prohibition or stringent limitation on giving is probably unconstitutional.

6. Public financing will weaken the party structure. With public financing, parties would have less reason to be responsive to their constituencies. Also, elected officials who receive their campaign funds directly from the Federal government will feel no obligation to their parties.

7. Public financing will unfairly discourage the formulation and operation of serious third or new parties. In so doing, it will dry up important sources of ideas and outlets for dissent and permanently enshrine the present two weak political parties (which in turn it further weakens).

8. Public financing is discriminatory in that it allows one individual to contribute thousands of dollars worth of time and labor, while another individual—perhaps handicapped or ill—cannot make a similar contribution in money.

9. Public financing will take control of the elections from the people and put it into the Federal bureaucracy. The people have little enough left in this country. We should not take their elections away too.

VII. MISCELLANEOUS

Preemption of State law

Sections 104 and 301 preempt State law. This is a welcome change which will insure that election laws are consistent and uniform and that candidates for Federal office do not bear the burden of complying with several different sets of laws and regulations.

Political activities by State and local employees

This bill allows State and local government employees to participate in political campaign activities. This needed change will open up the political process to greater numbers of people. These employees are still prohibited from running in partisan elections.

Taxes

Presently, candidates must pay income taxes on the funds left-over from the last campaign. The committee bill exempts candidates and political committees from this requirement.

Political parties

If this bill passes in its present form, national political party committees, including congressional and senatorial campaign committees, may be forced, for all practical purposes, to go out of business. State and local party committees will not be much better off. The committee bill limits contributions by political committees to $5,000. The definition of political committee clearly includes and encompasses national and State and local political party committees. The definition of contribution clearly includes "in-kind" goods and services.

The national committees and Democratic and Republican Senatorial and Congressional Campaign Committees currently provide invaluable services to both incumbents and challengers. They have large staffs with considerable expertise in public relations, campaign financing and campaign organization. They provide television and radio services (including recording studios) and myriad other services. All of these staff expenses and public relations services will have to be credited and prorated to individual candidates' contribution and expenditure limitations. Both the national committees and Senate and Congressional committees would probably spend up to their $5,000 contribution limit per candidate before the election. Candidates would then be forced to provide these services on their own. These political party committees would then be unable to give any funds directly to candidates' campaigns. The $5,000 limitation would be especially absurd in presidential races and in senatorial races in large States.

This limit becomes even more restrictive when, as is presently the case, most of the action is centered in 50 House races and 10 Senate races. Currently, much of the parties' efforts are channeled into these races. Party involvement in these competitive races would be drastically curtailed under the committee's bill.

While overall, in the short run, Republican party organizations will probably be hurt the most, Democratic organizations will also suffer greatly, because they concentrate such a large portion of their resources in a few key races.

This limitation also lends an even greater pro-incumbent bias to the committee's bill. The political parties are frequently most instrumental in defeating incumbents. They are the organizations best able to channel into a particular area the large amounts of resources and funds needed to beat well-known incumbents. Yet, the Committee bill would essentially prohibit these activities and further insulate incumbents.

State and local political parties might fare little better. For example, the Democratic State Central Committee of Iowa spent over $177,000 in the 1972 election, but might be limited to about $40,000 under the committee bill. The Republican Party of Wisconsin spent over $680,000, but would be limited to around $50,000 under the committee's limits. While it is true that these State committees could be divested of their fund raising efforts on behalf of candidates, such an action would greatly weaken these organizations. Powerful Republican suburban organizations and big city Democratic organizations would face similar problems.

A possibility would be that parties would begin spending large amounts in party primaries, thereby increasing intra-party conflict, creating considerable bitterness and further weakening the party system.

Political parties are the most broadly based groups in the political process and have a great potential for revitalizing our society. Strengthening the role of the parties in the political process may be as important a reform as changing the present system of campaign financing.

In many other democratic nations, the political parties provide a strong focus and rallying point for the consumer or public interest. In the United States, the weak political party system provides no match for the powerful special and vested interests. Yet, somewhat paradoxically, the committee bill further weakens political parties, thereby reducing the potential for harnessing and regulating the powerful special interests.

In its haste to reform our present system of campaign financing, the committee has weakened the party's control over candidates. There will be less and less reason for candidates to work together to formulate party policy and to adhere to party policy decisions. The party system may become hopelessly splintered and could even disintegrate. Given the political instability in European countries with fragmented party systems, such a change may undermine the very foundations of our political system.

National, State and local party committees should be exempted from the contribution limitations. Reformers assert that this will create a gaping loophole. To the contrary, a stronger party system is perhaps the most significant reform needed in the present political system. Further, if a $5,000 limitation is placed on how much a party organization can accept from an individual or committee, wealthy individuals will not be able to gain excessive influence. Also remember that since secretive earmarking and laundering are prohibited under the committee bill, no individual will be able to earmark more than $1,000 to any particular candidate. A political party exemption would not create a loophole and would be an invaluable addition to the Committee's bill.

If a straight-out party exemption is unacceptable, the House should consider an alternative proposal that was adopted by the Senate. Both national and State and local party committees should be able to make expenditures on behalf of a candidate totaling $10,000 in a House race and $20,000 or 2¢ per voter (whichever is greater) in both Senatorial and Presidential races. Such a provision would allow the parties to play a strong role in the electoral process, while at the same time assuring that limitations are placed on their activities.

AMENDMENTS

Campaign finance reform directly affects the lives and livelihood of every member of this body. Each member should have the opportunity to make his contribution to this piece of legislation. I am already aware of many amendments that may be offered. Other members I have not spoken with will undoubtedly have their own amendments. I will offer a number of major amendments to improve the bill, including amendments to establish an independent Federal Elections Commission, delete the loopholes, increase the spending limits and allow the parties a greater role in candidates' campaigns. I may also offer about ten amendments based on the recommendations of the Senate Watergate Committee. While it is conceivable that an "amateur night" might ensue if all of these amendments are offered, I have sufficient confidence in the Members of this body to believe that open, fully democratic proceedings are the way to obtain the best bill possible.

SUMMARY

After a late start, the Committee has worked diligently to produce an elections bill. Despite its deficiencies, it should be promptly brought to the floor for the necessary repairs. After amendment, it should be passed. The American public has waited long enough for a positive, straight-forward response to Watergate. We should not pass just any bill, but one that will, as much as possible, be free of loopholes and one that will restore public confidence in the integrity of the electoral process. The sooner we pass this bill, get it into and out of conference and on to the President's desk for signing, the better off everyone will be.

BILL FRENZEL.

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF MR. BUTLER

I was disappointed that the committee did not see fit to adopt amendments to deal with several problem areas of the bill. I offered three admendments which I felt would have improved the bill, and I still believe there is a need for action in these areas. A brief explanation of the problem and proposed solution follows:

1. POOLED CONTRIBUTIONS

It is my considered opinion that the use of political action committees as conduits for political contributions of particular special interest groups is one of the great evils of American politics today. Lobbying groups which also handle contributions have placed themselves in a position where they cannot serve their proper function, which is to educate and assist their representatives, without the suggestion of impropriety arising from past or potential financial contributions to the representative's campaign.

I offered an amendment which would have prohibited the pooling of contributions by special interest groups, requiring that all contributions to a candidate or party committee be identified as to the original donor, and that the donor designate the candidate or party committee which is to receive his contribution. This approach avoids the possible Constitutional challenge which might accompany an effort to prohibit outright contributions from other than individuals.

2. ENDORSEMENTS OF BANK LOANS

Under the existing law, loans are considered contributions to political candidates or committees. There is an exception for loans made by banks.

I proposed to amend the law to provide that, for the purposes of defining a political contribution only, endorsers of bank loans to political candidates are to be considered lenders in the amount of the unpaid balance of the loan. This balance would be divided equally among the endorsers if there are more than one.

This will, of course, bring such endorsements within the contributions limitations proposed in the bill. There will be no change in existing reporting requirements, as the Clerk now requires that all bank loans and their endorsers be reported on a single form, and their repayment on a different form.

My purpose is to insure that no one is able to use endorsements of bank loans as a means of circumventing the contributions limitation.

3. VOLUNTARY LIMITATIONS ON CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

There are many who contend that statutary limitations on contributions and expenditures for political campaigns are unconstitutional.

I propose to provide that any agreement between all the candidates for any single federal office to abide by the spending and contributions limitations set forth in this legislation would be valid and binding on the parties to the agreement, even if the courts ruled a portion of the law with reference thereto unconstitutional.

Such agreements would be filed with the appropriate supervisory officer on forms to be approved or supplied by him. There would be no criminal penalties for violation of such an agreement, with the parties to each agreement being left to existing civil remedies for enforcement.

This would be a reasonable solution to what could become a major problem.

HOUSE FLOOR DEBATES ON H.R. 16090

House of Representatives

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 7, 1974

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Edward G. Latch, D.D., offered the following prayer:

The fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness and righteousness and truth.—Ephesians 5: 9.

Almighty God, who hast gathered our people into a great nation and art calling them to live together with justice and good will, renew our spirits in Thee and restore to us a good relationship with those with whom we live and work.

Look with Thy favor upon those who serve our country here on Capitol Hill. Grant unto them wisdom of mind, strength of character, goodness of heart, and so direct them in their decisions that peace and justice may prevail for the benefit of all our people.

We pray especially for our President, our Speaker, and every Member of Congress. Make them equal to their high tasks, just in the exercise of power, generous in judgment, and always loyal to the royal within themselves.

In the spirit of Christ we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Without objection, the Journal stands approved.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Marks, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

On July 30, 1974:

H.R. 7207. An act for the relief of Emmett A. and Agnes J. Rathbun;

H.R. 9440. An act to provide for access to all duly licensed clinical psychologists and optometrists without prior referral in the Federal employee health benefits program;

H.R. 11295. An act to amend the Anadromous Fish Conservation Act in order to extend the authorization for appropriations to to carry out such act, and for other purposes; and

H.R. 15461. An act to secure to the Congress additional time in which to consider the proposed amendments to the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure which the Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court transmitted to the Congress on April 22, 1974;

H.R. 377. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell certain rights in the State of Florida; and

H.R. 3544. An act for the relief of Robert J. Beas.

On August 5, 1974:

H.R. 14592. An act to authorize appropriations during the fiscal year 1975 for procurement of aircraft, missiles, naval vessels, tracked combat vehicles, torpedoes, and other weapons and research, development, test and evaluation for the Armed Forces, and to prescribe the authorized personnel strength for each active duty component and of the Selected Reserve of each Reserve component of the Armed Forces and of civilian personnel of the Department of Defense, and to authorize the military training student loads and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Arrington, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 566. Concurrent resolution to provide additional copies of hearings and the final report of the Judiciary Committee on the impeachment inquiry.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 12281. An act to continue until the close of June 30, 1975, the suspension of duties on certain forms of copper.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H.R. 11577) entitled "An act to extend and expand the authority for carrying out conservation and rehabilitation programs on military reservations, and to authorize the implementation of such programs on certain public lands," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. HART, Mr. MOSS, Mr. STEVENS, and Mr. COOK to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PERMISSION TO FILE CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 15155, PUBLIC WORKS APPROPRIATIONS, 1975

Mr. EVINS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managers have until midnight tonight to file a conference report on the bill (H.R. 15155) making appropriations for public works for water and power development, including the Corps of Engineers—Civil, the Bureau of Reclamation, the Bonneville Power Administration and other power agencies of the Department of the Interior, the Appalachian regional development programs, the Federal Power Commission, the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Atomic Energy Commission, and related agencies and commissions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

(Mr. VANIK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

[Mr. VANIK addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.]

PERSONAL STATEMENT

(Mr. HANLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. HANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to announce that my vote in favor of the Giaimo amendments to reduce funding for the Safeguard ABM system was incorrectly recorded.

I have consistently supported funding for the Safeguard system and I have every intention of continuing to do so.

I believe that continuation of this program is essential to our Nation's efforts to develop a more advanced system such as site defense. The practical experience we would gain in the operation of Safeguard would prove invaluable in the development of site defense.

To support the emasculation of Safeguard now, after nearly 20 years of ABM research and $4.9 billion expended would seem to me to be the height of fiscal folly.

CONGRESSMEN'S STATEMENTS ON WATERGATE INAPPROPRIATE

(Mr. RUTH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RUTH. Mr. Speaker, there has been some interest in my response to the many questions we have all received concerning the impeachment inquiry. For the record I insert my response at this point.

STATEMENT OF EARL B. RUTH—AUGUST 6, 1974

During the entire Watergate investigation, my feeling has been that statements by Congressmen were not appropriate. Primarily, I have felt that as one sitting on the impeachment jury an open mind is a prerequisite for fairness.

Those who have made premature statements have convinced me that my position is correct. Many of their statements have been influenced by either what they hoped to be true or what they suspected to be fact.

As evidence unfolds, I feel that if and when a Representative is called upon to cast a vote the issue will be more clear-cut, which in reality is the purpose of the investigation.

I realize that the current flurry of comment is due to the President's latest statement and it is very tempting to try interpreting these recent developments. However, with things happening so fast, just as yesterday's statement can have no relevance to events of today, so can today's statement be outmoded tomorrow.

FOURTH ANNUAL REPORT ON GOVERNMENT SERVICES TO RURAL AMERICA—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 93-330)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am transmitting herewith the fourth annual report on Government Services to rural America as required by the Agricultural Act of 1970.

RICHARD NIXON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 7, 1974.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 16090, FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 1292 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 1292

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 16090) to impose overall limitations on campaign expenditures and political contributions; to provide that each candidate for Federal office shall designate a principal campaign committee; to provide for a single reporting responsibility with respect to receipts and expenditures by certain political committees; to change the times for the filing of reports regarding campaign expenditures and political contributions; to provide for public financing of Presidential nominating conventions and Presidential primary elections; and for other purposes, and all points of order against title IV of said bill for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 4, rule XXI, are hereby waived. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed two hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on House Administration, the bill shall be considered as having been read for amendment. No amendment, including any amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill, shall be in order to the bill except the following: In title I, (1) germane amendments to subsection 101(a) proposing solely to change the money amounts contained in said subsection, providing that said amendments have been printed in the Congressional Record at least one calendar day before being offered; and (2) the text of the amendment to be offered on page 13, following line 4, inserted in the Congressional Record of August 5, 1974, by Mr. Butler. In title II, (1) germane amendments to the provisions contained on page 33, line 17 through page 35, line 11, providing they have been printed in the Congressional Record at least one calendar day before being offered; and (2) the amendment printed on page E5246 of the Congressional Record of August 2, 1974. In title IV, (1) germane amendments which have been printed in the Congressional Record at least one calendar day before they are offered, except that sections 401, 402, 407, 409, and 410 shall not be subject to amendment; and (2) the text of the amendment printed in the Congressional Record of August 2, 1974, at page H7597, which amendment shall be in order, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, however, That not withstanding the foregoing provisions of this resolution, amendments to any portion of the bill shall be in order, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding, if offered by the direction of the Committee on House Administration, but said amendments shall not be subject to amendment. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. WYDLER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The call was taken by electronic device, and the following Members failed to respond:

The SPEAKER. On this rollcall 386 Members have recorded their presence by electronic device, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

PERMISSION TO FILE CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 2510, CREATING FEDERAL OFFICE OF PROCUREMENT POLICY

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managers may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report on the Senate bill S. 2510.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. NO. 93-1268)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2510) to create an Office of Federal Procurement Policy within the Executive Office of the President, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the text of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the amendment of the House to the text of the bill, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act".

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 2. It is declared to be the policy of Congress to promote economy, efficiency, and effectiveness in the procurement of property and services by and for the executive branch of the Federal Government by

(1) establishing policies, procedures, and practices which will require the Government to acquire property and services of the requisite quality and within the time needed at the lowest reasonable cost, utilizing competitive procurement methods to the maximum extent practicable;

(2) improving the quality, efficiency, economy, and performance of Government procurement organizations and personnel;

(3) avoiding or eliminating unnecessary overlapping or duplication of procurement and related activities;

(4) avoiding or eliminating unnecessary or redundant requirements placed on contractor and Federal procurement officials;

(5) identifying gaps, omissions, or inconsistencies in procurement laws, regulations, and directives and in other laws, regulations, and directives, relating to or affecting procurement;

(6) achieving greater uniformity and simplicity, wherever appropriate, in procurement procedures;

(7) coordinating procurement policies and programs of the several departments and agencies;

(8) minimizing possible disruptive effects of Government procurement on particular industries, areas, or occupations;

(9) improving understanding of Government procurement laws and policies within the Government and by organizations and individuals doing business with the Government;

(10) promoting fair dealing and equitable relationships among the parties in Government contracting; and

(11) otherwise promoting economy, efficiency, and effectiveness in Government procurement organizations and operations.

FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SEC. 3. (a) The Congress finds that economy, efficiency, and effectiveness in the procurement of property and services by the executive agencies will be improved by establishing an office to exercise responsibility for procurement policies, regulations, procedures, and forms.

(b) The purpose of this Act is to establish an Office of Federal Procurement Policy in the Office of Management and Budget to provide overall direction of procurement policies, regulations, procedures, and forms for executive agencies in accordance with applicable laws.

DEFINITION

SEC. 4. As used in this Act, the term "executive agency" means an executive department, a military department, and an independent establishment within the meaning of sections 101, 102, and 104(1), respectively, of title 5, United States Code, and also a wholly owned Government corporation within the meaning of section 101 of the Government Corporation Control Act (31 U.S.C. 846).

OFFICE OF FEDERAL PROCUREMENT POLICY

SEC. 5. (a) There is established in the Office of Management and Budget an office to be known as the Office of Federal Procurement Policy (hereinafter referred to as the "Office").

(b) There shall be at the head of the Office an Administrator for Federal Procurement Policy (hereinafter referred to as the "Administrator"), who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

tially similar provisions found in subsections 5(a) and 5(d) of the House amendment.

Subsection 6(c)

This subsection of the conference substitute incorporates provisions found in the House amendment (subsection 5(a)) excluding nonappropriated fund activities from the scope of the act. This takes the place of a similar provision in the Senate bill (subsection 6(d)(4)) which was limited to military nonappropriated fund activities. The conference substitute also incorporates a provision in the Senate bill, but not in the House amendment, for the Administrator to conduct a study of procurement by nonappropriated fund activities and report to the Congress within two years.

Subsections 6 (d), (e)

The conference substitute adopts a combination of language in the Senate bill (subsection 6(c)) and the House amendment (subsection 5(b)) enumerating six specific functions of the OFPP. There are a number of clarifying changes, including one to make clear that the OFPP will recommend and promote rather than oversee Civil Service Commission and other agency procurement personnel programs. The conference substitute also drops one enumerated function in the Senate bill (subsection 6(c)(2)) as redundant to another enumerated function (subsection 6(d)(3) of the conference substitute).

Subsection 6(e) of the conference substitute incorporates provisions in the Senate bill (subsection 6(c)(8)) and in the House amendment (subsection 5(c)) for the OFPP to consult with executive agencies in the development of policies, regulations, procedures, and forms. The conference substitute adopts the Senate language authorizing designation of other agencies to coordinate agency views.

Subsection 6(f)

The conference substitute incorporates with minor changes the provisions found in the House amendment (subsections 5(d) (1) and (2)) to rule out any authority of the OFPP to interfere with executive agency procurement actions or determinations of procurement needs. Counterpart provisions were included in the Senate bill (subsections 6(d) (1) and (2)).

A provision in the Senate bill (subsection 6(d)(3)) defining the authority of the and forms was deleted as redundant to other OFPP to deal with procurement procedures and forms was deleted as redundant to other provisions in the conference substitute (subsection 6(a)) giving the OFPP general authority over policies, regulations, procedures, and forms.

Subsection 6(g)

To assure that the OFPP will not have its procurement reform role diluted, the conference substitute includes specific language that, except as otherwise provided by law, the Administrator will have only those functions expressly assigned by the act. The conferees do not wish the Administrator to be burdened with extraneous responsibilities or to have any of his functions transferred elsewhere.

SECTION 7—ADMINISTRATIVE POWERS

The conference substitute incorporates substantially identical provisions found in the Senate bill (subsection 7(b)) and the House amendment (section 6) providing for executive agencies to furnish the OFPP with services, personnel, facilities, and access to records. The conference substitute omits other administrative provisions found in subsections 7(a) and 7(c) of the Senate bill as no longer necessary or appropriate in view of placement of the OFPP in the OMB.

SECTION 8—RESPONSIVENESS TO CONGRESS

Subsection 8(a)

The conference substitute incorporates modified language of the Senate bill (subsection 8(a)) for the Administrator to keep the Congress and its committees fully and currently informed and to submit annual and other reports on the major activities of the Office. The conferees agree that this wording is to be given a reasonable interpretation permitting submission of information on a summary basis at intervals consistent with the intent of this subsection. The conference substitute omits a provision in the Senate bill (subsection 8(b)) requiring the Administrator and OFPP personnel to testify before Congress. The conferees agree that it would be anomalous to spell out this requirement for the OFPP without a similar requirement for all executive officials. Nevertheless, the conferees expect that OFPP personnel will be available for information and testimony before congressional committees, and there is no intent to imply that the OFPP, or any other office, is beyond the reach of congressional committees.

Subsection 8 (b), (c)

The conference substitute incorporates a provision for the Administrator to give 30 days' advance notice of any proposed major policy change to the Committees on Government Operations of the Senate and the House of Representatives, with a description thereof, a summary of reasons, and the names of OFPP representatives designated for consultation with the committees. This reporting requirement is intended also to extend to policies implementing executive orders. This is a modified version of a provision found in the Senate bill (subsection 8(c)) but not in the House amendment. The conference substitute adds a provision for waiver by the President in emergency cases, but omits a provision for the proposed policy to be rendered ineffective by resolution of either House within 60 days.

SECTION 9—EFFECT ON EXISTING LAWS

The conference substitute follows the language of the House amendment (section 8) making any authority of executive agencies to prescribe policies, regulations, procedures, and forms subject to the authority of the OFPP. The Senate bill included a substantially similar provision (section 9).

SECTION 10—EFFECT ON EXISTING REGULATIONS

The conference substitute adopts a Senate bill provision (section 10) continuing existing procurement policies, regulations, procedures, and forms in effect until repealed, amended, or superseded by OFPP action. A substantially similar provision was contained in the House amendment (section 9).

SECTION 11—AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

The conference substitute incorporates, with changes, the provisions in the Senate bill (section 11) authorizing appropriations. As changed, this provision authorizes appropriations not to exceed $2 million for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, of which not more than $150,000 is to be available for research, and authorizes appropriations as may be necessary for each of the four fiscal years thereafter. It also provides that subsequent legislation to authorize appropriations is to be referred in the Senate to the Committee on Government Operations. The authorization of $2 million for the first fiscal year is in lieu of the $4 million authorized in the Senate bill, and in lieu of the $1 million estimated by the report on H.R. 15233 of the Committee on Government Operations (H. Rept. No. 93-1176, pp. 6-7).

The conference substitute is in lieu of a provision in the House amendment (section 10) which indefinitely authorized such unspecified sums as may be necessary to carry out the act. However, the conference substitute does include language, reflecting the House amendment, that appropriations shall be available "for no other purpose." This is intended to assure that such appropriations will be used only for activities of the OFPP and will not be mingled with appropriations for other OMB activities.

SECTION 12—DELEGATION

The conference substitute incorporates a Senate provision (section 12) authorizing delegation to OFPP personnel, and also to other agencies of any OFPP authority except the basic authority of OFPP to direct procurement policy and prescribe policies and regulations. The wording is changed specifically to authorize redelegation as provided in a counterpart provision of the House amendment (section 11). The House amendment did not include the restriction as to delegating the basic authority of the OFPP.

SECTION 13—ANNUAL PAY

The conference substitute adopts the provision of the House amendment (section 12) for compensating the Administrator at Executive Level IV ($38,000) rather than Executive Level III as provided in the Senate bill (section 13).

SECTION 14—ACCESS TO INFORMATION

Subsection 14(a)

The conference substitute incorporates identical provisions found in the Senate bill (subsection 14(a)) and the House amendment (section 13) giving the Comptroller General access to records of the OFPP.

Subsection 14(b)

The House conferees receded from their objection to subsection 14(b) of the Senate bill and accepted a modified version thereof in the conference substitute. There was no similar provision in the House amendment. This subsection of the conference substitute requires the Administrator to open to the public certain formal, scheduled meetings of the OFPP concerning the establishment of procurement policies and regulations and specifies that a ten-day notice will be given of such meetings. The Administrator is to designate the meetings subject to this subsection and prescribe, by regulation, the procedures to be followed in the conduct of such meetings. Although the Administrator is given authority to determine the need for and conduct of the public meetings, in general, it is intended that the formal meetings of the Office will be conducted so as to give substantial visibility to its rulemaking determinations. This subsection complements the provisions of subsection 6(d)(2) calling for the timely, effective solicitation of the viewpoints of interested parties, and is in line with the policy declaration in subsection 2 (9) on improving the understanding of procurement policies.

SECTION 15—REPEALS AND AMENDMENTS

The conference substitute adopts with technical changes provisions in the House amendment amending four sections of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act to make the authority of the Administrator of General Services to issue regulations and forms subordinate to the authority conferred on the OFPP Administrator to prescribe procurement policies, regulations, procedures, and forms under this act. The Senate bill covered two similar amendments to the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act. The technical changes in the conference substitute make clear that no authority is given to the OFPP Administrator apart from that specifically conferred by other provisions of this act.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 16090, FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. YOUNG) is recognized for 1 hour.

(Mr. YOUNG of Texas asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. MARTIN), for the purposes of debate only, pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 1292 provides for a modified open rule with 2 hours of general debate on H.R. 16090, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974.

House Resolution 1292 provides that all points of order against title IV of the bill for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 4, rule XXI—prohibiting appropriations in a legislative measure—are waived.

House Resolution 1292 also provides no amendment, including any amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill, shall be in order except the following: in title I: First, germane amendments to subsection 101(a) proposing to change the money amounts regarding contribution and expenditure limits contained in that subsection, providing that the amendments have been printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at least 1 calendar day prior to being offered; and second, the text of the amendment to be offered on page 13, following line 4, inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by Mr. Butler on August 5, 1974, pertaining to the consideration of bank loan endorses to be counted as contributors.

In title II: First, germane amendments relating to the composition of the Board of Supervisory Officers provisions contained on page 33, line 17 through page 35, line 11, providing they have been printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at least 1 calendar day before consideration; and second, the amendment printed on page E5246 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 2, 1974, relating to a change in the composition of the Board of Supervisory Officers and also deleting the authority of congressional committees to review campaign regulations. In title IV: First, germane amendments which have been printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at least 1 calendar day before they are offered, except that sections 401, 402, 407, 409, and 410—pertaining to public financing for Presidential campaigns—shall not be subject to amendment; and second, the text of the amendment printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 2, 1974, relating to matching public financing for congressional elections, which shall be in order, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding.

House Resolution 1292 also provides that amendments to any portion of the bill shall be in order, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding, if offered by the direction of the Committee on House Administration, but such amendments shall not be subject to amendment.

H.R. 16090 places limitations on campaign contributions and expenditures, it facilitates the reporting and disclosure of the sources and disposition of campaign funds by centralizing campaign expenditure and contribution reporting. The bill also establishes a Board of Supervisory Officers to oversee enforcement of and compliance with Federal campaign laws and strengthens the law for public financing of Presidential general elections and authorizes the use of the dollar checkoff fund for financing Presidential nominating conventions and campaigns for nomination to the office of President.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the adoption of House Resolution 1292 in order that we may discuss, debate, and pass H.R. 16090.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 4 minutes.

(Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 1292, as the gentleman from Texas (Mr. YOUNG) has explained, provides for 2 hours of debate on this very important piece of legislation.

Unfortunately, however, this resolution provides practically for a closed rule on the bill that will be debated by this body this afternoon. The Members can carefully go through the rule and the bill itself and they will find that really only three amendments are in order:

First, in regard to the amount of money which a candidate may expend or the amount of money which may be contributed to a candidate's campaign;

Second, an amendment may be offered in regard to changing the composition of the Board of Supervisory Officers, which amendment will be offered by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL);

And then the third amendment will be in order in regard to endorsers of loans from banks to political campaigns. This is another loophole in this present bill.

Those in essence are the only 2 amendments to be allowed to the bill itself.

Mr. Speaker, without going into all of the details of the bill, I would like to point out some of the loopholes that we are confronted with in this piece of legislation. The American people are demanding, Mr. Speaker, that the Congress enact tough legislation to tighten the laws in regard to campaign receipts and campaign expenditures in the conduct of campaigns. This bill does not meet the criteria that the American people are demanding today.

Let me point out further some of the loopholes in this legislation. First, we have the so-called slatecard expenditures. This provides that a committee or an organization may expend any amount that it wishes in regard to candidates in a situation where there are three or more candidates included in the advertising without being reported nor counted in the total expenditures of that candidate from his receipts.

This is restricted somewhat, but newspaper ads can be taken out by labor unions, the American Association of Manufacturers, the chamber of commerce, or other groups if three or more candidates are advertised through this means. This is a wide loophole which disregards the total expenditures as set forth in this legislation.

Mass mailings may be made by these organizations. Sample ballots may be distributed and, as I said, newspaper ads may be covered.

Then we have another loophole in this bill which allows a $500 limit of personal property, so-called. This would allow fat cats or friendly people to stage receptions, cocktail parties, and dinners in their homes for the purpose of promoting the candidacy of a particular Member running for Federal office. This also is not included in the total expenditures reported.

Rides on private jets or airplanes or donated travel, such as hauling a candidate around his district in an automobile, and so forth, is not reported. This is another loophole.

A fourth loophole concerns vendors, in regard to the sale of food or beverages at reduced prices for receptions or dinners by people friendly to a particular candidate.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. Speaker, there are exemptions also for organizations in communications to their members where these organizations are not organized primarily for the purpose of influencing political elections.

Mr. Speaker, again I point out there are far too many loopholes in this legislation, and there is no chance, and I repeat, no chance at all, to offer amendments to change these provisions. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we propose, on our side of the aisle, to make an attempt—and I hope it will be successful—to vote down the previous question, and I urge the Members to vote "no" on the previous question. I intend then to offer a resolution which provides for an open rule, not requiring that the amendments to be offered be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD 1 calendar day previously. Also that the bill shall be read by title rather than by section. I urge the Members to vote "no" on the previous question.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS).

(Mr. HAYS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, I was a little surprised to see the gentleman from Nebraska riding in here on a white horse because the gentleman has never been noted in my time here of being such a champion in carrying out election reforms.

Just let me take a minute or two to clear the air a little bit about the loopholes the gentleman talks about. We do provide in the bill—and I think it is a sensible provision—that if some woman gives a coffee party in her own house, and invites 30 or 40 of her neighbors in, that she does not have to report to the Federal Elections Commission, which is set up in this bill, that she made a contribution to a candidate, and the candidate, who may not know about it and failed to report it, could be subject to legal sanctions if he did not report it.

If that is a great big loophole, then I will argue this with you all afternoon. There is a limit on it.

We have a couple of committee amendments that were adopted in the committee this morning, and which will be offered to further tighten it up. The gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) was concerned about them, and the gentleman is satisfied that these amendments we will offer will make it workable.

It was not the intention of the committee to create great big loopholes. It was the intention of the committee not to have anyone who might want to engage in a little neighborhood politics subject to indictment, fine, and imprisonment, because they did not know that if they spent $20 for cookies and coffee they had to make a report to the Federal Elections Commission.

What we tried to do is put a tight limit with some sensible—and I emphasize the word sensible—exemptions.

What about the travel amendment? We are saying—and I am paraphrasing some language—we further tightened that up with a committee amendment that if a person voluntarily, on his own, comes into the gentleman's district to help him, then his expenses which he pays for up to $500 shall not be considered a contribution. That is all.

We are saying, furthermore, these are the big loopholes the gentleman is talking about, that if one gives a reception on his own as a fund raiser and he has a friend who has a motel, or any other place that he can hold a reception in, and he sells the person the food and beverage at wholesale price, that the difference between the wholesale price and the retail price is not considered a contribution.

He may not sell it to the person at less than cost. He may not lose a dime on it. If he does, that becomes a contribution, and that, again, to the extent of $500. If it is $600, he has got to list it.

These are just some commonsense exemptions that we have found over the past few years that we had better write into law, because if we do not we are going to have some rulings that just make it impossible to comply with the law.

Let me just give the Members one example of what I am talking about. Under the laws of the State of Ohio, one has to pay $50 filing fee and have 100 signatures or he cannot get on the ballot. That is the law. The secretary of state of Ohio, who is not a great friend of mine, says this is not a campaign expenditure; it is a legal requirement.

But under the rules promulgated by the Commission, they told me that I had to file—and I did not realize this until I had already filed—an amended return saying that I had contributed $50 to myself and then another set of papers saying I had spend $50 to pay the election board my filing fee.

That appealed to me as so ridiculous that I refused to do it. I simply wrote a letter to the Clerk of the House and I said, "I went to the Election Board and filed my papers, and I reached in my billfold and paid $50, which the law requires, and I have a receipt for it. You can consider that as saying I made a contribution to myself and, therefore, spent it, or anything you want to, but this letter is all I am filing."

I had the letter notarized, and I sent it in. Up to now I have not been indicted, but I may be. I cannot tell.

All we are trying to do in this bill is pass a tight expenditures law. I want to reiterate again for the benefit of those who supported the substitute 2 years ago which was floated by my friend, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANDERSON), who stood on this floor and said: "We do not need limitations; we just need disclosure; that will do the job," the bill I brought to the floor 2 years ago had limitations of $15 million on a Presidential campaign. I do not say this with any pleasure, but I will say this, if that bill had been passed and the substitute had not been passed—and I know it was not in the name of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANDERSON), but it was his bill; he got Mr. BROWN or somebody else to introduce it for him, but it was his bill——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. I just want to make a point. I am sure the gentleman now in the well would not mislead the House. When I said I did not think we need the limitations, I was referring to overall limits.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, I cannot yield any further; I do not have the time.

I will say that if we had limitations in the amount I specified 2 years ago, the country would not be in the trauma it is in today, because all of these people would not have been running around all over the country with bags full of money.

In retrospect, the President could have been elected for $4.59 given the situation we were in.

Mr. DAVIS of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. DAVIS of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I rise in support of the resolution. I ask that we do not vote down the previous question. I just say simply that if we vote down the previous question and do not have this rule and adopt some of the amendments that are floating around, it will make the Hatch Act look like the Bill of Rights.

Mr. HAYS. I think the gentleman has summed it up better than I could.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. DICKINSON) 3 minutes.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say why I am going to oppose this rule. I would like to get the attention of the Members because I think this is probably something they have not thought of before. I favored the idea of requiring the printing of proposed amendments in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at least one calendar day prior to their consideration, but I had never envisioned that in its infinite wisdom the Rules Committee would not provide any guarantee of at least 24 hours so that the Members could comply with this requirement.

This is the situation we are faced with now. We are considering adopting a rule that requires on its adoption that we have to have gone back to yesterday and have printed in the RECORD something that will make it in order to introduce today. How can this be so? We were told, some of us on the inside, that this was going to be so, and some of us did get our amendments put in the RECORD yesterday. But what are we doing?

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield, but I have only a few minutes.

Mr. HAYS. I appreciate the gentleman's cooperation.

Mr. Speaker, I announced to the House last night we would do this when there were at least 250 Members here on the floor, for whatever that is worth.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is all right. I happen not to have been here. But if 250 Members were here, that means about 250 Members were not here. They had no notice and even those present had no staff in their office due to the lateness of the hour.

I think the basic fundamental constitutional right of the Members is being abrogated and threatened if we start this type of procedure. What we are saying is that we must have at least 1 calendar day notice to get one's amendment printed, but immediately upon adoption of this rule we go right into the bill. There is no way one can protect himself unless one is privy to what is going on inside the committee or has some knowledge of it.

The "Rules of Proceedings" say:

In the exercise of their constitutional power to determine their rules of proceedings, the House of Congress may not "ignore constitutional restraints or violate fundamental rights, and there should be a reasonable relation between the mode or method of proceeding established by the rule and the result which is sought to be attained.

If we start this type of procedure, then no Member can ever be sure that he will be allowed to introduce an amendment even if it would normally be in order and it would be germane. We are denying to the Members of the House the right to offer an amendment that would normally be in order, that would be acceptable, but if he does not have the knowledge ahead of time that the rule would require him to do this, then he is precluded.

For this reason I urge the Members to vote down the rule and the previous question.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. JONES).

(Mr. JONES of Tennessee asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker,

I support the motion and I support the rule on H.R. 16090.

This is a very complex bill which the House Administration Committee has spent many long hours writing and rewriting. In size alone, it numbers 79 pages, more than double the length of the committee print we started with last March.

I think that all of us on the committee learned a lot during the hearing and markup process. There is a tendency to think that we are all experts on political campaigns and on election law. And that may be true in our own districts. But this bill is bigger than the Seventh Congressional District of Tennessee. It is being proposed as a new law to govern the conduct of all candidates for Federal office and all political committees that get involved in the campaigns of any candidate for Federal office anywhere in the country.

We have produced a good bill. It took a long time and it was not easy. It is not a perfect bill; there are still points of controversy. But under this rule, amendments will be offered to answer every doubt a Member may have about this bill.

Public financing of elections is one of the controversial points. H.R. 16090 provides for a complete package of public financing for the 1976 Presidential election. I favor that, because it is in the Presidential election that millions of dollars are required, where the public is demanding that we put a stop to the excessive influence of the special interests. We need to make sure that the abuses of 1972 do not happen again, and that is the reason I am supporting the idea of paying for the next Presidential election out of the dollar check-off fund.

Some people think we need to extend public financing to House and Senate elections as well. I disagree. I think we ought to give this new idea a trial run in the 1976 Presidential primaries to see how it will work. But to my colleagues who want to extend public financing to congressional races, let me assure you that you will get a chance to vote for such an amendment under the rule we are considering.

Then, there are some who feel we need to change the enforcement mechanism. Personally, I think Pat Jennings, the Clerk of the House, has done an outstanding job overseeing the thousands of pages of reports which candidates must file. As far as I can discover, there have been no complaints about the operation of his office or the office of the Secretary of the Senate during the past 2 difficult years we have operated under the current election law.

But for the Members who wish to provide for somebody else to serve on a Board of Supervisory Officers, an amendment will be offered to provide for this.

There are other amendments planned. I agree with some of my colleagues who feel that $75,000 is too much to spend on a primary, that $75,000 is too much to spend on an election for the House. I plan to support the amendment offered by my friend from Pennsylvania (Mr. DENT) to lower this amount. Others of you plan to support amendments to increase this amount.

My point is this: Under the rule proposed by the Rules Committee, all of these amendments will be in order.

The major vote that will not be in order will be proposals to create new loopholes for political party committees, to permit wealthy individuals and special interest groups to give money to a political party, which in turn could provide services to candidates. Under the bill, no committee can give a candidate more than $5,000. I think that is more than enough.

I can assure you that we will have many hours of debate under the 5-minute rule on the many amendments that will be offered under the pending rule. However, a completely open rule would prevent us from completing work on this bill for another week.

Look at what happened during the debate on the strip mining bill. Very few of us have any mining in our districts yet the debate went on and on and on—almost 2 full weeks of legislative time. Unfortunately, we just do not have 2 weeks left on the calendar to devote to this very important bill.

I speak from the experience of our committee deliberations. To those of you who really believe in election reform, who sincerely want to get a good bill passed this year to make sure that we do not have a repeat of the scandals of 1972—I urge you to support the rule on this bill.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS. I do not see the gentleman from Alabama on the floor, but I would like to announce to the membership, it would not be my position, nor do I know it would be the purpose of anybody on the committee, to object to an amendment not printed in the RECORD which would be otherwise germane under the rule.

I want the Members to know that if it is germane and the rule is adopted and if the amendment is germane or an amendment to an amendment, we do not intend to object.

We asked for that because this is an extremely technical bill, as the gentleman from Tennessee knows. We had hoped that on major amendments we would be put on notice so our legal staff would have a chance to examine them and tell us what the implications are but I have no intention to preclude a Member if the rule is adopted from offering any amendment to any section that the rule says amendments are in order to.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. I would like to point out that under the resolution we are considering at the present time any Member of the House could object to the offering of an amendment that is not printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, I am aware of that. I think all Members of the House are aware of this and if the rule is adopted and the amendment is germane, it will be accepted.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I urge support for this bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANDERSON).

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House, it is certainly not an overstatement to say that this is a bill for which the country has been waiting, and one in which every one of the 435 Members of this body is very, very much interested. The only question before us during this hour is the kind of rule under which we are to debate this bill.

I am asking the Members to vote down the previous question. I want a rule. I want a bill, but I suggest that it is a travesty on the legislative process and an insult to every one of the 435 Members of this House to tell us that we should be limited by the kind of rule that is proposed in this case.The Democratic caucus in February 1973, at least adopted some rules that were postulated in order to meet Democratic aims to do away with what they said was the iniquitous procedure that had been followed by the Committee on Ways and Means in presenting closed rules. Yet, we have the distinguished chairman—I think he is here—of our Committee on Rules take office in this Congress, and I remember reading an interview where he said he wanted the Members—referring to the Members of this body—to vote. "That is what they are sent here for."

Yet, they are going to muzzle the Members of this House today with the kind of rule suggested for adoption. Vote down the previous question; give us a chance to legislate. We will do that responsibly and intelligently.

Mr. Speaker, I took the trouble to see what some of the people around the country who are really interested in the subject of reform had to say about this, and I have letters and will put them in the RECORD. John Gardner wrote:

> DEAR REPRESENTATIVE ANDERSON: We deplore the failure of the House Rules Committee to fully open up the contribution and spending limits of H.R. 16090 to germane amendments.

I have a letter which I will put in the RECORD that I frankly solicited from Ralph Nader saying the same thing:

> The failure yesterday of the House Rules Committee to fully open up the contribution and spending limits of H.R. 16090 to amendments is an inappropriate action.

I am reminded of the claims that are given that this is the "Sunshine Congress." We have opened up the House to let the sunshine in. I have read that in the closing scene of the musical production "Hair" that they take off their clothes and they are naked by the time they finish, "Let the Sunshine In." Those who say they are for reform of the procedures of this House are going to be equally naked this afternoon in their pretentions to open up this body to let the sunshine in if they support this closed rule.

If we adopted the kind of modified closed rule that is being sought, and there are at least 10 areas—10 areas that were called to my attention as a member of the Committee on Rules in which perfectly legitimate amendments are sought to be offered on the floor of this House, and to suggest that in a matter as fundamentally as important as the electoral process, how we solicit campaign funds, how we are elected to office, is not of equal interest to every Member of this body—and I appreciate the gentleman's expertise, I appreciate the 21 markup sessions that it took to produce a bill and I am glad he is here today.

Many of the provisions, perhaps most of them, I will support, gladly support, but I would suggest that to deny us who are interested in other areas of the bill what is our legitimate right to write a piece of legislation of this interest and of this import on the floor is to deny us the right we ought to have as Members of this body.

Mr. Speaker, the letters follow:

COMMON CAUSE,
Washington, D.C., August 6, 1974.

Hon. JOHN B. ANDERSON,
House of Representatives,
Longworth House Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE ANDERSON: We deplore the failure of the House Rules Committee to fully open up the contribution and spending limits of HR 16090 to germane amendments. This action prevents major issues in controversy on the campaign finance bill from being considered on the House floor.

We believe that the House in considering the rule on HR 16090 should vote to defeat the previous question and should adopt an open rule making all germane amendments in order. To do less will seriously jeopardize House consideration and action on campaign finance reform in 1974.

Sincerely,

JOHN GARDNER.

AUGUST 6, 1974.

Hon. JOHN B. ANDERSON,
House of Representatives,
Longworth House Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE ANDERSON: The failure yesterday of the House Rules Committee to fully open up the contribution and spending limits of HR 16090 to germane amendments is an inappropriate action. Legislation of the dimensions of HR 16090 needs to receive full consideration on the floor of the House. This action prevents major areas of legitimate controversy from being considered by all members of the House of Representatives.

The House, in considering the rule on HR 16090 (H. Res. 1292), should vote to defeat the previous question and should vote an open rule making all germane amendments in order. HR 16090, the Anderson-Udall amendment and the Frenzel-Fascell amendments should be passed with the benefit of full debate and consideration of all relevant points of view.

Yours truly,

RALPH NADER.

PUBLIC CITIZEN,
August 6, 1974.

DEAR MEMBER OF CONGRESS: This Wednesday and Thursday, August 7th and 8th, the House will debate a bill of immense importance to the democratic institutions of the United States—H.R. 16090—the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974.

The House Administration Committee's bill reforms several areas of campaign financing abuses—abuses which have brought scandal, disrespect and criminal convictions not only to Presidential campaigns, but to congressional, state and local campaigns as well.

The Committee's bill would establish expenditure and contribution limits for individuals and committees; would provide public funds from the income tax check-off fund for Presidential general and primary campaigns; and would provide funds for national party conventions. However, it does contain two glaring omissions.

First, the bill limits any public support to only Presidential campaigns, completely omitting congressional races. Representatives John Anderson (R-Ill.) and Morris Udall (D-Ariz.) are proposing an amendment to cover congressional campaigns that deserves your support. Under this amendment, money from the income tax check-off fund would be provided to congressional candidates for general elections on a matching basis for private contributions of $50 or less. The matching funds could only be used for voter communication functions, i.e., radio and TV, newspaper advertising, billboards, etc. and would be limited to ⅓ of the candidate's spending limit (under the Committee's bill, to $25,000). In addition, each candidate will have to raise a threshold amount equal to 10% of the spending limit in order to qualify for matching payments. Thus, frivolous candidates would not qualify for these funds.

The second omission concerns enforcement powers. Representatives William Frenzel (R-Ill.) and Dante Fascell (D-Fla.) are introducing an amendment to correct this deficiency. As a Washington Post editorial, August 5, 1974 said, ". . . for there could be no more constructive change in federal campaign practices than to have the regulatory laws—whatever they may be—aggressively and consistently policed by an agency with enough authority to do the job." Given the history of weak enforcement of campaign financing laws and the extensive evidence of misuse of law enforcement agencies for political purposes, anything less than a truly independent elections commission with sufficient law enforcement authority will be perceived by citizens as a self-serving arrangement.

Congress Watch supports the provisions of the Committee bill to provide public funds for Presidential general elections, primaries, and nominating conventions. We oppose, however, the high limit on contributions by special interest groups ($10,000 per election).

Reform of the campaign financing system is one of the most difficult challenges facing the 93rd Congress. The Senate is firmly on record for serious reform. It is now the duty of the House of Representatives to see that the abuses which have brought the democratic institutions of America such disrespect are corrected. Your support of the Anderson-Udall and the Frenzel-Fascell amendments and HR 16090 is crucial to the reconstruction of citizen trust in government.

The House Rules Committee has failed to fully open the contribution and spending limits of HR 16090 to germane amendments. The House, in considering the rule on HR 16090, should vote to defeat the previous question and should adopt a rule making all germane amendments in order. It is inappropriate for a bill of the importance of HR 16090 to be considered under a rule which does not allow for major areas of controversy to be considered on the floor.

Yours truly,

JOAN CLAYBROOK.
MORGAN DOWNEY.

Mr. DENNIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. DENNIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to extend my congratulations to the gentleman from Illinois for what he said, and I associate myself with his remarks. I would like to say that as long as this Congress tries to start election reform by adopting a gag rule, it cannot expect to be any better thought of by the public than it unfortunately is.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is correct. There is the utmost irony in a situation where we find that we are legislating reform under the kind of rule that it proposed here this afternoon.

Vote down the previous question; let the gentleman from Nebraska offer an open rule so that we can work our will on this vital piece of legislation and get on with the kind of reform that the country is waiting for.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

(Mr. YOUNG of Florida asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the previous question on House Resolution 1292, the rule for consideration of H.R. 16090, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974.

H.R. 16090 is one of the most important legislative items on our calendar this year; it provides for long-overdue reforms in Federal election laws. The American people have been calling for these reforms ever since the revelations of widespread abuses by many candidates and campaign organizations of both parties during the 1972 elections. It is unfortunate that there has been such substantial delay in getting a bill before the House, and that we must consider it at a time of domestic upheaval which diverts our energies and attention.

I have long been a vigorous supporter of campaign reform, both in the Florida State Senate and here in the House. I agree with millions of Americans that there are glaring defects in existing Federal law, and I have introduced my own campaign reform bill, H.R. 11735, to correct these defects. My bill is much tougher in many respects than H.R. 16090, and I had therefore looked forward to offering amendments to the committee bill to make it tougher.

However, the Rules Committee has unfortunately decided that H.R. 16090 will be considered under what is essentially a "gag rule." Whole crucial sections of the bill will, under House Resolution 1292, be totally exempt from amendment. We will not be able to toughen up the provisions of H.R. 16090, nor will we be able to close some very glaring loopholes in the bill.

As I noted previously, campaign reform is one of the most pressing issues of our time. I am reluctant to vote against the rule for consideration of such an important bill, because I feel that

H.R. 16090 should be debated and passed, with certain amendments. But the rule which we have before us today is totally unsatisfactory for consideration of this measure because it does not allow the House to work its will in the normal legislative manner. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am going to join other Members in voting against the previous question on House Resolution 1292 so that we may bring H.R. 16090 to the floor under a completely open rule.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. CLEVELAND).

(Mr. CLEVELAND asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CLEVELAND. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on House Administration which produced this bill, I rise in opposition to its consideration under what amounts to a closed rule. It would be an utter disgrace for the House to act on the critical issue of political campaign reforms while denying Members meaningful opportunity to improve it by amendment.

The record will show that this legislation was finally reported, more than 2 years after the Watergate break-in, by a committee dominated—like the rest of the House—by the majority party. Many amendments offered in committee were rejected by party-line vote. Some amendments such as the Brademas proposal to use check-off funds for matching of small contributions to candidates in presidential primaries were adopted with bipartisan support, including my own. Yet the bill with all its deficiencies is essentially a Democratic product.

It is significant to me that many of the amendments barred from consideration by this rule deal with special-interest contributions, the problem of pooling of funds so as to prevent identification of original donors, and in-kind contributions.

The affinity of organized labor for the majority party makes all too evident the basis for resistance to this type of reforms, as well as other measures to tighten up this legislation. Because the majority does operate from a privileged sanctuary, the media and election reform advocates will probably remain respectfully and benignly silent.

The spectacle of a sharply limited rule is all the more abhorrent in view of the impeachment proceedings now in process of being accelerated. Granted, the fixing of responsibility for Watergate is the principal priority response to Watergate. But a close second is election reform. To do only half the job now would be manifestly a return to business as usual, politics as usual and I will have no part in it.

Incidentally, a third priority is further progress in congressional reform, from which this rule represents a giant step backward. It would be absolutely absurd to abandon our progress toward a more open and responsive Congress in enacting a legislative response to the closed-door horrors of Watergate. I, for one, tend to view this as being of a piece with the tactics of the Democratic Caucus in bottling up the latest congressional reform proposals.

One might argue that the debate would last too long, that the bill might be extensively altered. That is no excuse for preventing the House from working its will. I reject the suggestion that Members cannot act constructively and responsibly. Indeed, we have an obligation to assure that they are confronted with the opportunity and the responsibility to vote these pending amendments up or down, on the record.

I insist that we must take the time. The body has recently scheduled an entire 2 weeks of debate on impeachment. It now appears that 1 week will suffice. There is no way the House could spend its time more in the public interest than to take an entire week, if need be, to do the job that must be done on this bill.

Mr. CRONIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CRONIN).

(Mr. CRONIN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CRONIN. Mr. Speaker, Congress has spent the past year and a half attempting to enact a meaningful campaign reform bill. During this period many of us strongly and consistently urged prompt action by the House Administration Committee, only to be met with delay after delay. I was pleased when the committee—at long last—reported out a campaign reform measure, because I foresaw the opportunity to transform all of our efforts into reality.

Although I do not believe the bill as reported is strong enough to prevent campaign financing abuses, it is a good base from which to initiate an effective reform. Through the adoption on the floor of many strengthening amendments—several of which I am cosponsoring—I believe that the House could pass a meaningful reform bill which could be further strengthened in a House-Senate conference.

Now, through the procedural tactic of a modified closed rule, we are prohibited from even offering these amendments which I feel are necessary if we are to claim, with any integrity, that we have enacted a reform measure. If this rule is adopted, many of the major areas of controversy of campaign financing will never be considered by the 93d Congress. Instead of ignoring these issues, I feel it is the responsibility of every Member of Congress to take a public stand of each of them, so that their constituents will know exactly how their Congressman has voted on legislation to change the law which governs his reelection efforts. I believe the full House should have the opportunity to consider each of these amendments and to determine its merit.

Although I am certain my vote on the previous question to this rule could be misinterpreted by some of my constituents as "antireform," I am equally confident that my constituents will not be deceived by attempts to limit true campaign reform. Openness is a basic ingredient if any democratic system is to work; openness is what reform is all about. If we are truly concerned about reform with this bill on campaign financing and campaign practices, then it is imperative that we have an open rule. Therefore, I will vote no on the previous question, and I urge my colleagues to do likewise.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS), the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, I would yield to the gentleman from Illinois, who refused to yield to me, but that is beside the point.

I just want to make a few observations. The gentleman from Indiana (Mr. DENNIS) has shifted his position once this week on a very vital matter. He might shift again when he understands what is involved here.

A lot of the Members are shifting their positions over there, when they should not have taken one, as I did. I did not have to shift.

Let me say this to you, Mr. ANDERSON: I can understand the speech you made, and if I had been the author of the bill which produced Watergate, as you were, with no limitations I would be making the same kind of speech you made.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL).

(Mr. FRENZEL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, during the past 2 years, the American public has been forced to witness the depressing spectacle of massive violations of our campaign laws under a coverup atmosphere. Do we now dare to subject the American people to the irony or perhaps the outrage of considering the campaign finance reform bill under a closed rule?

The confidence of the American people in their Government is too low for us to embark on such a risky undertaking. With public cynicism and alienation so rampant, a campaign reform bill that is considered under a closed rule will be short on credibility.

The rationale for the closed rule is that the House cannot be trusted to deal with one of the most important issues it will consider all year. If our own leadership does not have confidence in us, then how can we expect the American people to have any confidence in us?

I think we can be trusted to handle the people's business. I think that is what we were elected for. If the public is to regain confidence in the Congress, then we have to show confidence in ourselves. I think the best way to display that confidence is for all Members to commit themselves to the principle that open proceedings are the way to obtain the best bill possible.

The closed rule will both stifle debate and discussion and drastically limit the amendments that can be offered. Only about half a dozen amendments will be in order. Proponents claim that, under an open rule, the House will take weeks to complete a bill. To date, there have been only about 50 separate amendments printed in the RECORD. Committee amendments will eliminate many of these. Under our proposed open rule, these are the only amendments that could be offered. A close examination of these amendments demonstrates that all of them are germane to the topic at hand, and should be debated.

I do not want to discuss the merits or demerits of the bill, but in an 80-page comprehensive election reform bill, each of us can find ideas for amendment. Why should some of us be more equal than the rest? We used an open rule in 1971, and we all survived.

Mr. Speaker, the case for an open rule is overwhelming.

We are not going to bring sunshine into the electoral process by considering the campaign reform bill in the dark.

We cannot expect the public to have confidence in this body, when we ourselves do not have sufficient confidence to allow Members to work their will freely on one of the most important issues of the year—an issue on which each of us has plenty of expertise.

What a dreadful irony it will be to handle a bill designed to open up the political processes under a procedure that is not open.

The public is not going to believe that this bill will open up the processes when it is legislated under a closed rule.

I urge Members to vote down the previous question so that we can consider the bill under an open rule.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. THOMPSON).

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, with due respect to the feelings of the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL), who has worked long and hard on this legislation and of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANDERSON), I rise in support of this rule. I do so because, notwithstanding the fact that it is not completely open, every single section of the proposed legislation in which there has been a major public interest is open and will be open.

Further, our distinguished committee chairman, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS), has indicated a willingness not to object to amendments which have not been printed in the RECORD if they are germane. What could be more open than that?

It has not been my habit to vote for closed rules, but I really honestly do not consider this to be closed since the very vital elements of it are open.

Mr. Speaker, only this morning in committee there were adopted and agreed to by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) and by other members, including myself, five committee amendments which go a long, long way toward satisfying the desires of those who really want meaningful election reform. Certainly the American people want it and demand it, and they are going to get it. We are going to get a very splendid piece of legislation as a result of this process.

I see no need to open it up further, especially on those technical aspects which really do not go to the heart of the matter. The heart of the matter is in the financing, in the limitation, and in the enforcement procedures, all of which are open.

Mr. Speaker, I respectfully request the Members of the House to vote for this rule.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. ARMSTRONG).

(Mr. ARMSTRONG asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Nebraska for yielding this time to me.

I commend the gentleman from Nebraska for his leadership in this matter in drawing the attention of the House to the serious shortcomings of this rule. I also particularly commend the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANDERSON), who has underscored so vividly the reasons of principle and conscience why this rule must be defeated. He has pointed out, and I think we all know, the moral implications of bringing this bill to the House floor for consideration under an antireform rule.

The very idea of bringing an election reform bill to the floor of the Congress of the United States under a closed rule is absurd, and it would be laughable if it were not tragic.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word about some needed amendments which will be precluded unless we vote down the previous question so an amendment providing for an open rule can be adopted.

Let me call attention of the Members to provisions of this bill as it is now written which give to candidates for public office a veto power over the rights of publication and speech of other persons. The language contained in this bill is strikingly similar to that which was held by a New York court to be unconstitutional just a few months ago. It is not my purpose to argue the legal considerations, but I just do not see how we can give that kind of a veto power to any person over the free speech and publication rights of another person without violating the first amendment of the Constitution.

I think we ought to have an amendment to strike that provision out of the bill. The Committee of the Whole ought to be entitled to take this matter up under debate and vote on an amendment which would be proposed on that portion of the bill.

Second, I want to point out this bill does not deal effectively with in kind contributions. It does not close the existing loopholes; it opens up new loopholes, not only as to limitation but also as to reporting.

Third, Mr. Speaker, I want to respond to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS), who has mentioned Watergate. One of the most serious shortcomings of this piece of legislation is that it fails to take into account the abuses revealed by the Watergate investigation. This rule would not make in order, amendments to the bill which would be offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. DEL CLAWSON) and others aimed at outlawing specific Watergate types of abuse. I refer to campaign spying, and espionage, and that kind of thing. In my judgment, these are far more in need of legislative attentive than other aspects of the bill that comes before us.

Let me say to the Members of the House that worthwhile amendments will be proposed; let them be considered and vote them up or down on their merits. I urge my colleagues to vote down the previous questions so that the Members of this body can exercise their prerogatives and have free and open debate on the bill and its amendments.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to a distinguished member of the committee, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BRADEMAS).

(Mr. BRADEMAS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule, and urge that the Committee on Rules and the Committee on House Administration be supported in their effort to produce what I believe can mark a milestone in major campaign reform legislation written by the Congress of the United States.

The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANDERSON) who has himself made a significant contribution to the shaping of public opinion on this important legislation, remarked that the only question before the House today was the rule. That is not the only question. The real question coming up, in my judgment, is whether we will have a campaign reform bill this year or not. For one of the reasons for the rule that has been brought forth by the Committee on Rules to the floor of the House today is to make sure, on the one hand, that all of the major matters that are in controversy or that may have been considered by the Committee on House Administration are in fact brought before the floor of the House so that we will have a chance to vote on them while, on the other hand, assuring that we are not hit with such a raft of amendments that may be frivolous in nature that, with time running out in this session of Congress, they could pose a danger to the passage of effective campaign reform legislation this year.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to note, if the Members will look at the rule, that germane amendments to limitations on expenditures and contributions will be made in order.

The amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BUTLER) to make bank loan endorsers contributors is in order. Germane amendments to the composition of the supervisory board are in order, and the Fascell-Frenzel amendment relating to the Supervisory Board is made in order. These parts of title IV which have to do with public financing will be made in order, and the rule specifically permits a vote on the Anderson-Udall amendment on public financing of congressional elections. Committee amendments are also made in order under the rule.

There will be, therefore, this speaker, ample opportunity for the House to work its will in this bill on matters of substance.

The Committee on House Administration considered nearly 100 amendments over the many days of markup. We worked long and hard.

I want to say further, Mr. Speaker, that this is a bipartisan bill. The gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) made contributions. Members on both sides of the aisle made contributions.

So, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the real issue here, and I am not now going to take time to go into the substance of the major features of the bill, but the real issue here is: Do the Members want a campaign reform bill this year or not? If they do, then they should vote for the previous question and the rule.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on House Administration, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS), a question.

The gentleman has stated that he would not object to amendments being offered on the floor regardless of whether they had been published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD 1 calendar day previous to today.

I would ask the gentleman from Ohio, does the gentleman's statement also include that the entire bill be open to amendment, and that the gentleman does not object to amendments to other sections?

Mr. HAYS. Of course not. I said anything that the rule does make in order.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. I decline to yield any further. I am glad the gentleman from Ohio clarified that, because we still have a closed rule before us.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FREY).

(Mr. FREY asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FREY. Mr. Speaker, reference was just made to the position of the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. DENNIS) and by implication to other Members on our side of the aisle who served on the Committee on the Judiciary. I certainly was proud of these men, or I was proud of the entire Committee on the Judiciary in the way they approached this issue of impeachment. It was obviously a tough issue and tore a lot of people apart. But these men acted on the evidence, and they acted within their consciences.

Then changes of position in light of the new evidence was not only courageous but correct. To question this is to do these men a disservice.

During this time of the debate on impeachment we heard from both sides of the committee words like "fairness and justice," words like "bipartisan approach," and words like "rule of law."

The Judiciary Committee, I think, acted on the whole within these concepts and most of us in this country were proud of such actions.

I would say to my colleagues on the other side of the aisle that we are in a position today where the House can continue in the path which the Committee on the Judiciary followed. Certainly, it is a tough vote to vote down the previous question and provide an open rule when the head of the Democratic Campaign Committee wants a modified closed rule. But your position is not nearly as tough as the position that many of us have been in and had to wrestle with. There is only one fair way to approach this issue. That is to vote down the previous question and open up this rule and give us a real chance at reform. It is something that we want; it is something that this country needs. This country will not tolerate a double standard of conduct; one for impeachment of the President, the other for the Democratic Party and the Congress. It is time in the House for fairness, not partisan action. The vote will tell the story more than any words.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. DENT).

(Mr. DENT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I take this moment just to say that I endorse the rule and the previous question on it, because I started this little bill on its way with the hearings in our subcommittee over a long period of time. Most of the closed parts of the bill are matters that in my honest opinion have very little to do with campaign behavior. Most of them are kinds of regulations and criteria that have to be put into legislation for guidelines.

The real heart of the legislation that all of us are interested in is the matter of solicitation of funds, the spending of funds, limitations or no limitations. I am going to support the rule. But I say to the House that ever since I started working on the bill before we put it up to the full committee, Mr. HAYS took all of the hard work and all of the blame and abuse on the legislation because some persons do not believe one has to have time to work, and he had to have time. The Members may think this is an argument on a rule. Can they imagine what we have gone through for over 2 years in the committee?

I intend to offer two amendments. I will offer one myself and the other will be offered by the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. MATHIS) dealing with the limits of spending, dealing with the total amounts, dealing with how much one can contribute and how much one can accept. That is what the people call reform. That is what the people are interested in.

When we get to the floor and action on the bill, I hope some of us will stay around and let me give them the facts after 2 years of intense work on this bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished Minority Leader, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. RHODES).

(Mr. RHODES asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the rule on H.R. 16090, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974, and I ask that the previous question be voted down so that the rule may be amended.

I have consistently urged enactment of responsible campaign reform legislation, and I feel it is a priority for the 93d Congress. The House Administration Committee has worked long to develop H.R. 16090, and while I do not agree with all of the committee's proposals I commend the members for their diligent efforts. I cannot, however, allow the rule under which we will consider this important legislation to go unchallenged.

In a straight partyline vote, the Committee on Rules adopted House Resolution 1292, a "modified closed" rule. Instead of full and open consideration of campaign reform, the rule permits Members to amend only a few, specific portions of the bill.

On such a vital issue, where real, workable reform is essential, it is unconscionable that the major party would impose a gag rule.

As set forth in the statement by the Republican Policy Committee, H.R. 16090 contains many areas of serious concern. For that reason the House should have every opportunity to work its will and consider not just the provisions adopted by the House Administration Committee but the substantive amendments proposed by other Members of the House.

I think it is strange, Mr. Speaker, of those sections which are eligible for amendment under this rule the section which have to be amended in order to shut off the "soft money" type of contribution is not one. In other words there are no amendments which can be offered which would shut off the kind of contribution which certainly is unconscionable, if not illegal. I do not know why it would be that any campaign reform bill worthy of the name would not shut off the largest source of illegal aid that we have in the whole country.

It has been said that this bill does not deal with all of the things which caused Watergate. That is undoubtedly true, but I think it is even more serious that it does not even deal with the type of opening in the artery of the political system which causes the hemorrhage which the "soft money" causes.

I do not believe that the gentleman from Ohio really is getting his hats mixed up, and that he is wearing his hat as the chairman of the Democratic Congressional Committee with as much more pride as he wears the hat of the chairman of the House Administration Committee. I just think it is at least suspect that this "soft money" phase of the bill is not covered adequately.

I ask that the previous question be defeated so that the proper amendments can be offered to make this truly a campaign reform bill which will be evenhanded as it deals with both parties.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished majority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. O'NEILL).

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the rule.

I ask the Members on our side of the aisle to stay with the gentleman from Ohio, the chairman of the committee, who has worked so long and arduously on this bill.

It is quite unexpected that the minority party should at the last minute come up with the roadblocks that they have. Their actions have made this a partisan issue. I certainly hope that our party stays with the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS) and I congratulate him and his committee for the work which they have done in reporting a campaign reform bill that has teeth in it. H.R. 16090 is a strong measure, and it is a giant step toward improving Federal campaign practices.

The bipartisan House Administration Committee has had an exhaustive and lengthy debate on this issue. They have spent over 4 months drafting this legislation and have considered more than 95 amendments. Chairman HAYS has been fair and patient with all the members of his committee, and everyone—Democrats and Republicans alike—have had ample opportunity to offer amendments and alternative proposals.

The leadership considers this bill of highest priority in the 93d Congress. The American people have been waiting long enough for a straightforward and positive response from the Congress on the numerous campaign abuses stemming from the Watergate affair. The Senate has already acted. Time is running out. The House must agree on an effective campaign reform package as a step toward restoring public confidence in Government.

I believe that this bill meets that objective. It is a solid measure, which corrects some of the abuses of campaign financing that were so graphically pointed out to all of us over the past 2 years. H.R. 16090 places strict limits on campaign contributions and expenditures—simplifies campaign reporting procedures and provides for public financing of the 1976 Presidential election.

If this badly needed reform is to become effective in time for the 1976 election, it must be acted upon this session. I repeat—time is running out. We must have immediate action by the House so that the differences with the Senate-passed bill can be worked out quickly in conference. This is why I think the rule is a fair and reasonable one.

It allows for amendments to the most controversial sections of the bill: expenditure limits, contribution limits, composition of the board, public financing of both Presidential and congressional elections, and bank loan endorsers as contributors. We cannot delay action. Public confidence in the electoral process will continue to erode unless we act responsibly and expeditiously on this bill. If we do not adopt this rule, we will open up the floor to amendments that will prolong interminably the debate and final action on this urgently needed legislation. That would not only be self-defeating, it would also be a betrayal of the public mandate to their representatives to act immediately on substantive revisions in our campaign financing laws.

Mr. Speaker, the rule is openly fair. We cannot delay action. I urge all my colleagues to vote "aye" on the previous question.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. PRITCHARD).

(Mr. PRITCHARD asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. Speaker, the very credibility of this Congress reform spirit depends upon adoption of an open rule for this Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments bill so that a number of crucial perfecting amendments can be considered. Without these amendments, this Congress, under the facade of reform, will be passing laws that in reality are insufficient and incomplete.

I have been a strong proponent of Federal campaign reform throughout my short tenure here in the House. This rule, House Resolution 1292, which limits consideration of perfecting amendments to only certain sections of the bill is inimical to the very spirit of reform.

Numerous crucial amendments have been drafted for this Federal election campaign reform bill. But many of these cannot even be considered because of this modified closed rule that we have been given by the Rules Committee. How are we to be able to develop the best possible legislation for Federal election campaign reform if we are unwilling to subject the entire bill to proper scrutiny? Does this Congress fear consideration of all these amendments? Is this true reform?

This bill in its present form is not the true campaign reform legislation we so crucially need and I cannot accept it until certain basic and crucial revisions are affected.

Halfway measures designed to appease the appetite without satisfying the hunger of the times for thorough election campaign reform are little better than no pretense at reform.

This bill fails to provide for any Federal funding in congressional elections, but requires comprehensive public financing of Presidential election campaigns. I urge adoption of the Anderson-Udall amendment to eliminate this double standard and extend clean election standards to congressional races. The Anderson-Udall congressional matching amendment provides for limited public funds to match small private contributions to congressional campaigns.

I also urge adoption of the Frenzel-Fascell amendment to create an independent body to enforce compliance with these clean election laws and require full congressional accountability.

This bill before us, H.R. 16090, limits congressional campaign expenditures to $75,000. It sounds good to the lay ear. But surely we are all aware that such an across-the-board spending limitation gives a nearly insurmountable advantage to the incumbent.

As incumbents with the franking privilege, high profiles in our district media, and full time to devote to being Congressmen, we naturally have a tremendous advantage over any challenger. I have heard some of my colleagues estimate the advantage to be one of as much as $80,000.

A challenger limited to spending $75,000 must attempt to overcome a Congressman also spending $75,000 in addition to his huge incumbency benefits. Is this limitation equitable when we know that a challenger must spend so much more than the incumbent just to be in the race?

Common Cause prefers a $90,000 spending limitation; $75,000 seems quite low for major congressional campaigns. The point is that with the present format of the legislation, any lowering of the limitation level would only exacerbate the disadvantage of the nonincumbent. Clearly we need to develop a mechanism to create greater equity in campaigns by allowing challengers to spend an amount to begin to counter the incumbency advantage. The solution may be a lower spending limitation for the incumbent.

I suspect that my colleagues on the other side of the aisle are anticipating the predicted landslide congressional victories for their party this fall. So naturally they are anxious to pass this bill, heavily weighted in favor of the incumbent, which will become law next year with Congress heavily controlled by the Democratic majority. Such a bias to the advantage of the incumbent will insure their continued strength and domination in this body. The new election campaign laws would not apply to this fall's election campaigns.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I believe it essential that we establish strong financial disclosure laws for candidates and elected officials. To this end I am a cosponsor of H.R. 16195. We had hoped to offer that bill as the Steelman amendment to H.R. 16090 before us today. But to my distress the Parliamentarian ruled the proposed amendment nongermane and the Rules Committee refused the special rule necessary for its consideration.

For the record, though, this financial disclosure legislation is something this Congress must concern itself with in the very near future.

That is where we stand now with H.R. 16090. With these necessary amendments we can make it an acceptable Federal election campaign act amendments bill; without these amendments the American people will have to wait another year for true election campaign reform laws.

I urge this Congress to demand an open rule for consideration of amendments to H.R. 16090.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARCHER).

(Mr. ARCHER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, one of the major responsibilities of this Congress is to eliminate the abuses in our Nation's election processes, but the reform proposal before us is surely deficient in this desired result. It does have a number of strong points, but there are still too many weaknesses in the bill that can only be corrected by amendment.

Unfortunately, we will not be allowed to offer those amendments on the House floor. The chairman of the House Administration Committee saw to that when he went before the Rules Committee. The result is a rule allowing only the five amendments he approved. Others will not be allowed because, by his own admission before the committee, they would not benefit Democrats.

In my opinion, this is an irresponsible answer to the Nation's plea for open election processes. The bill that should accomplish that goal has become itself a closed partisan issue. As it now stands, there can be no amendment to restrict the "in-kind" contributions Democrats enjoy from big labor. Instead, the limitation has actually been increased from $100 provided in present law to $500 per individual. Nor can any amendment even be considered to restrict contributions by organized griups, whether they be big labor or big business, which deny the individual's right to decide which candidate receives his contribution.

According to the present bill, incumbents still have too great an advantage over their challengers in congressional races. I also question whether or not the American people want to finance Presidential nominating conventions of political parties with their tax dollars.

We need responsible nonpartisan campaign reform to guarantee fair competition in our election processes, not a package that simply carries the title of "reform" but in fact is designed to assure advantages to only one political party. If we indeed want true reform and open elections in this country, we also need to open up the debate and amendment procedure by which this reform legislation is written.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. CONABLE).

(Mr. CONABLE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CONABLE. Mr. Speaker, the majority leader apparently feels that Republican Members are throwing obstacles in the way of election reform. Nothing could be further from the truth. Our situation typifies the dilemma of the minority. For too long we have been working and calling upon the majority for progress in Federal campaign legislation. Having committed ourselves in many ways to the concept of reform, we are now presented with a reform package, credible in appearance, but inclusive of partisan mischief. What do we do to "throw obstacles in the way of reform"? We ask for the right of amendment, to protect our party procedures and our view of what is appropriate. To criticize this insistence is partisan politics, for we have no further remedy; and so we must take our chances that the public will misinterpret a vote against a restrictive rule. I think most people realize this problem exists for any minority on any issue within the control of the majority. I regret that the majority in this case has not dealt with this vital subject on a level above traditional politics.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. MAYNE).

(Mr. MAYNE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the attempt by moving the previous question to prevent debate and amendment of House Resolution 1292, the resolution providing for consideration of H.R. 16090, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974. The resolution provides for a closed rule allowing only amendments of five special types to be considered. The Members of the House, as well as the Nation, have long awaited this legislation, one of the most important bills to come before the House in this Congress. It is completely inappropriate to hog-tie and hamstring this House through a closed rule so that it can not even consider the several very important amendments that would be offered to this legislation, in order to strengthen its provisions, improve its enforceability and feasibility, fill the loopholes, and correct the several defects evident in the bill as reported.

H.R. 16090 as reported by the House Administration Committee constitutes a substantial improvement over the present law regarding campaign financing and disclosure, and I commend the chairman and members of the House Administration Committee for their work and efforts in preparing it and bringing it before the House. However, it is sadly deficient in several major instances.

The Senate Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities—the Watergate Committee—in its recent report stated that an independent Federal Elections Commission is the single-most important change needed in existing law. Early in May, 1973, I cosponsored introduction with the distinguished gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANDERSON) of H.R. 7901, the Clean Elections Act, which proposed establishment of just such a Commission. The House Republican task force on election reform under the able chairmanship of our colleague from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) in July, 1973, publicly recommended enactment of such a reform.

I am gratified that the Chamber of Commerce, the White House, and such public-interest groups as the League of Women Voters, Common Cause, and Congress Watch have joined in urging enactment of this absolutely essential reform. I share their disappointment that the House Administration Committee bill instead provides for an inadequate, Congress-dominated, nonindependent mechanism to administer this act. I strongly urge my colleagues to defeat the motion for the previous question so that the Frenzel amendment establishing a more independent administration and enforcement agency may be given the consideration it deserves. I am a cosponsor of the Frenzel amendment and shall give it my strong support.

The Anderson-Udall Clean Elections Act introduced in May of last year with my full support also proposed public financing through limited matching of private contributions for congressional candidates. I cannot understand the present bill's failure to incorporate similar provisions as a protection against candidates being tempted to rely on "fat-cats" and special interest groups for campaign financing in the future. I am an early cosponsor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANDERSON), which would establish a system of matching grants for congressional general elections, matching payments for private contributions of $50 or less, and I am pleased that public interest groups including the League of Women Voters, the Center for Public Financing, Common Cause and Congress Watch all agree that adoption of this amendment is essential if we are to obtain true campaign financing reform.

The bill contains still other deficiencies which cry out for correction by floor amendments, amendments which will not be allowed unless the proposed closed rule is amended into an open rule. For example, the bill as reported exempts certain gifts-in-kind from limitations and disclosure, such as up to $500 of unreimbursed travel expenses. Furthermore, the bill does not require the amount of a bank loan whose endorser waives repayment after an election be counted as part of his total allowable contribution. The bill's limitations on special interest group contributions to campaigns are woefully inadequate. I intend to support appropriate amendments to correct these deficiencies if the closed rule is amended to permit such amendments to be offered—but we must first defeat any attempt to move the previous question and thereby prevent amendment of the rule.

Ladies and gentlemen of the House, I respectfully urge all to join in defeating this effort to gag the membership and prevent it from working its will, and to amend the rule so that we may adopt these desperately needed amendments and enact campaign reform legislation of which this House can truly be proud. It is indeed time for this House to agree to effective campaign reform as a straight-forward response to the so-called Watergate abuses and a step toward restoring public confidence in Government and especially in this Congress.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. HUDNUT).

(Mr. HUDNUT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HUDNUT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, as an original cosponsor of the Anderson-Udall bill, on Monday, August 5 I submitted a statement before the House Rules Committee appealing to them to adopt an open rule on H.R. 16090 that would permit the offering of amendments during debate on the House floor, including one that several of us are interested in to require complete financial disclosure of everyone in public life above the $32,000 level of income, which might or might not be ruled germane or might or might not be in the view of the House a good idea. They voted against this open rule on a straight party line vote. This was most disappointing even though we have great respect for the wisdom and integrity of our colleagues on the other side of the aisle.

It appears the majority does not want to allow a bill to pass that would in any way discomfit or disadvantage their Members on their side of the aisle who presently control the Congress. It appears that they are more eager to perpetuate themselves than to effect true campaign reform, and more concerned about the narrow self-interest of incumbents and special groups than they are in the public's interest in clean, competitive election campaigns by persons who are willing to be forthright and open with the public about their sources of income. The public should know this. They should be aware of the support of the other party for a closed rule. And they should also be assured that I and many of my colleagues on our side of the aisle intend to flight this issue as hard as we can.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on the previous question.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN).

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I happen to be one of those Members not fortunate enough to serve on the House Administration Committee and who, therefore, will be foreclosed from an opportunity to present an amendment to this legislation, unless we get an open rule. I, frankly, resent that.

It was said in the Committee on Rules that there were no experts on campaign reform. I would submit there are 435 experts in this House on campaign reform and that we all deserve some opportunity to work our will on this legislation.

Now, we had an open rule the last time we had campaign reform legislation in 1971 and 1972 and we got good legislation out of it; at least we got legislation that is substantially better than what we had been operating under previously. That is not the case with this proposed legislation.

We admire and respect the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS). He is one of the cleverest and funniest speakers in this House and he is a man of considerable power in this body; but this bill is merely an exercise in that power, unless we can get an open rule.

This bill is also an example of his cleverness. While it is called reform legislation, it strengthens the hand of the majority party and those groups which generally support that party. But it is bipartisan to the extent that it benefits incumbents of both parties.

The funny thing about this bill is that it comes to the floor under a gag rule passed by the Rules Committee on a straight party-line vote. The argument that reform of campaigns should be passed under gag rule—that we cannot amend a bill to give the public a fairer share in how their campaign contributions are to be collected, spent, and reported.

Mr. Speaker, I regret that this has become such a partisan bill, but perhaps the times make the circumstances.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MICHEL).

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I take the well with less than wholehearted support for broad sweeping election reform legislation. I am really speaking only as an individual, for I would say the majority of my party would not probably not hold to that particular position.

I frankly would be content with something providing for full disclosure of contributions in limited amounts, both cash, and in kind, closely monitored and wth stiff penalties for violations.

There is no simple solution to this problem upon which we are about to legislate. There is a wide disparity of conditions that prevail in this country. What is good for New York City certainly is not good for the hinterlands out in the Midwest in Peoria or in some rural community.

On the expenditure side, I have to take a very practical stance. I am representing a party in the minority. How can we in the minority ever hope to gain majority status when incumbency carries with it so many advantages and we Republicans are so outnumbered here in the Congress. Challengers are tightly limited by this bill and cannot possibly compete with incumbents in those districts where expensive media can make the difference.

The Senate-passed bill is for all practical purposes an incumbent protection act. All of us here today are incumbents. As a practical matter, none of us are about to give our challengers an advantage; but I think just simple equity dictates that at least we debate this overall question.

I can appreciate the chairman's concern over opening this thing up and having some silly amendments being offered here and people demagoguing all over the place. I should like to be the first one down here in the well to help fight those kind of silly amendments.

I must say, Mr. Speaker that I do resent being so restricted, as we can be under this rule. I feel strongly, as do several other Members with responsible amendments, that our legitimate rights in this House are being submerged simply by sheer weight of political numbers. For that reason, I take this time to ask that we vote down the previous question and open up the rule so we may have an opportunity to offer our constructive amendments and have them stand or fall on their merit after reasonable debate.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, again I urge the Members of the House to vote down the previous question so that we can have open debate on this matter for a very important piece of legislation and the Members of the House can be able to work their will in the forming of the election process.

The present resolution we have before us precludes amendments to about 95 percent of the bill and the Members will not be allowed to offer amendments to most of the sections of the legislation because of the type of resolution we are currently considering.

Again I urge a no vote on the previous question, so that we may have an open debate on this bill and the Members can work their will. The people of the United States expect no less from their Congress.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remaining 4 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. UDALL) for the purpose of closing debate.

(Mr. UDALL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, sometimes we cannot have everything we want. I want debates under open rules whenever possible, but I also want to end a national system of election laws that have brought disgrace and shame to this country.

We have today an historic opportunity to change that system of laws, and I see the thing possibly going down the drain, and I do not like it. I would have preferred to have debated this bill a year ago. I think we should have done so. I would have preferred to have taken 5 or 6 days to debate it. But the clock is running and we are confronted with a condition where we are going to adjourn for a recess in a week or 2 weeks or 3 weeks. The Senate is probably going to start an all day program on the impeachment trial, and we have some tough choices.

One choice is to conform to procedural purity here and probably lose a bill which has 95 percent of what I want and what I think the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANDERSON) wants and those who have supported this long bipartisan effort want. The other choice is to do something we do not like to do and support—not a closed rule—this is a modified open rule—which takes two pages in the rule to list the kinds of things, parts of the bill that are open for debate. So we can stand on procedural purity on one side and lose an historic opportunity. I reluctantly decline to be a party to such a destructive choice.

Let me make a couple of things clear. Most of the points in dispute; most of the points mentioned are either in the law, the kind of things the gentleman from Colorado talked about such as spying, dirty tricks, these kinds of things, are in the law and people have gone to jail for violating them; or they are in the bill; or they are made open for debate and amendment in the rule.

The rule provides that the Anderson-Udall public financing amendment is available for debate; the Frenzel-Fascell, supervisory authority is open for debate. The amounts for limitation of spending and contributions are open for debate. The Butler amendment to take care of the problem of bank loans is open for amendment and debate.

So, what are we talking about here? We are talking about losing an historic opportunity, because we are insisting of some kind of theoretical procedural sanctity and we are going to end up with a fiasco here this afternoon where we lose an opportunity we have all fought for. I do not think we ought to do that. I think we ought to support this most sensible, modified, open rule in this case. Before this day is out we will have sent on to conference with the Senate a darn good bill. In that conference, many of the other things my friends are concerned about can be corrected.

Mr. WAGGONNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UDALL. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. WAGGONNER. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Arizona for yielding to me.

I have the same problem with open rules as the gentleman has expressed having himself, but I am convinced of the mood of the House, having listened to this debate and having followed the media reporting of this matter and rule, the mood which prevails in this House today is one of few of the media and that with a completely open rule, there are going to be totally unworkable and unrealistic amendments offered which this Congress will not have the courage to resist. Emotions and fear of being against reform with prevail.

We will have an unworkable bill which will guarantee each of us 4-year terms—2 years when we are elected and 2 years in jail, because nobody can comply with what I think we will be faced with. Let us use some commonsense for a change.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UDALL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

For the record, I would like to address myself to the gentleman from Ohio, the chairman of the committee, who remarked that somehow an amendment I offered to the 1971 Campaign Finance Act was responsible for Watergate.

The hearings on that act began in June 1971; it was reported to the House in October 1971; it was not brought to the floor until December 1971; it was stalled in conference until mid-January 1972; so that we did not get an effective date for enactment until April 1972.

I think the record shows who is responsible for the fact that we have Watergate.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UDALL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree with every word the gentleman from Arizona has said. This is a much stronger bill than the Senate bill, and a far stronger bill than the cynics thought this Congress would enact.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Arizona.

I want to join in his comments. I support this rule because every major issue has been considered or is reachable by amendment. There are obviously many other amendments which could be offered but in the interest of passing in this session of Congress the important reforms contained in this bill and leave for later additional improvements.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired.

All time has expired.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the adoption of the closed rule, House Resolution 1292, which would provide for consideration of the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974. While the House Administration Committee has worked for some time on this measure, and has reported a bill to the floor of the House which will provide for significant reform, I would agree with many of my colleagues that it is inappropriate to consider a bill of this importance with a closed rule. It is clear that at a time when both the country and the Congress are attempting to recover from the excessive campaign practices of past elections, all Members of the House of Representatives should have the opportunity to offer amendments which they sincerely believe will correct certain deficiencies in the measure as reported by the committee.

One major provision of the bill as reported by the committee which should be corrected would place a limitation of $5,000 on the contributions of political committees to candidates for Federal office. The definition of a political committee clearly includes the National and State committees of both major parites, and this action if approved by the House would significantly weaken the two-party system as we know it in this country. I would support those Members of the House who feel that National and State committees of major parties should be excluded from the definition of political committee for the purposes of contribution limitations.

Throughout the history of this Republic political parties have been important institutions in our political process and have provided a measure of stability in our political system. If the opportunity was offered, I would join with the minority members of the House Administration Committee in supporting an amendment which would provide for continued viability of our national and State parties so that they may assist candidates as the need arises, and to provide for the continuation of the two party system in this country. This is just illustrative of many other areas of this legislation which should be strengthened by the adoption of constructive floor amendments, including those sections dealing with special interest groups, and the inability of the committee to deal affectively with the problems associated with in kind contributions.

I would hope that my colleagues will realize that the people of this country will be watching what we in the Congress do in the area of campaign reform legislation, and it should be incumbent upon us to provide for a thorough and complete discussion of this bill and of all amendments which would strengthen the provisions of the legislation. I hope that my colleagues will vote to oppose the adoption of this rule and will vote to provide for an open rule instead. To do any less is political cynicism disguised as "reform."

Mr. DON H. CLAUSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to debate of the campaign reform bill under the restrictive procedures proposed by the House Rules Committee.

I do so because I am deeply disturbed that the leigslation approved by the House Administration Committee does not include the provisions of my own Election Campaign Espionage bill which would outlaw political spying in election campaigns.

This bill, which I introduced last year, is designed to prohibit individuals from interfering in the political campaign of any other candidate. It would prohibit the use of contributions for the commission of any illegal act such as wiretapping, electronic surveillance, burglary, or other such activities.

And, it makes it a felony to cover up any violation of Federal election laws.

It is his type of repugnant political activity that we must be seeking to end and I believe we should go ahead and do so directly rather than indirectly through other controls.

I believe very strongly in the concept embodied by my bill because the type of behavior known as "Watergate" has no place in the American election process and is completely contrary to our system of free and open elections.

Bill Stodart, my administrative assistant who passed away last month, worked quite closely with me in the process of developing this proposal.

He did the basic research needed to perfect the language and achieve the goal we both sought to reach.

It was his keen sense of the need for morality to retain and improve America's participatory democracy that helped to come up with the idea for this legislation and get it into final form.

The distinguished gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) offered my proposal as an amendment in the committee but it was not accepted. If possible amendments are prohibited when the bill is considered on the floor of the House, it will be impossible to offer this amendment to outlaw "dirty tricks" and coverups.

The gentleman from Minnesota has been most helpful in trying improve the bill before us. It is a "dirty trick" to prevent the House from considering amendments to a bill of this nature.

Therefore, I urge the House to reject the rule and allow a more stringent regulation of conduct in political campaigns to be included in this measure.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of House Resolution 1292.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. Before the Chair goes into the question, he desires to state that the monitor on the Republican side is not in order. The Chair has tried to see if we could get up a substitute monitor but apparently there is not sufficient time.

While the Chair could order the vote taken by rollcall, the Chair thinks that both sides can use the Democratic monitor and can alternate in the use of the monitor and save that much time. Therefore, the Chair will ask the Democratic operator and monitor to alternate with the Republican operator and monitor.

For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. WYDLER. I just want to make it clear to the Chair that in coming onto the House floor at 12 o'clock, I informed the clerks of the House that the Republican monitor was not working. That was within a few minutes after noon today.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was not informed about that until 2 minutes ago. The Chair is the proper person to be advised of things of this sort.

The Chair is going to order that the vote on the previous question be taken by electronic device.

Without objection, a recorded vote was ordered on the motion for the previous question.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 219, noes 190, not voting 25, as follows:

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON RULES TO HAVE UNTIL MIDNIGHT THURSDAY, AUGUST 8, 1974, TO FILE CERTAIN PRIVILEGED REPORTS

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules have until midnight tomorrow night, Thursday, August 8, 1974, to file certain privileged reports.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO FILE CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 15405, DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION APPROPRIATIONS, 1975

Mr. McFALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managers may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report on the bill (H.R. 15405), making appropriations to the Department of Transportation and related agencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 16090) to impose overall limitations on campaign expenditures and political contributions; to provide that each candidate for Federal office shall designate a principal campaign committee; to provide for a single reporting responsibility with respect to receipts and expenditures by certain political committees; to change the times for the filing of reports regarding campaign expenditures and political contributions; to provide for public financing of Presidential nominating conventions and Presidential primary elections; and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS).

The motion was agreed to.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H.R. 16090, with Mr. BOLLING in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS) will be recognized for 1 hour, and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) will be recognized for 1 hour.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS).

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I propose to take as little time in general debate as possible. There is usually not a very heavy attendance, and I think we will get down to the crux of the disagreements, if any, under the 5-minute rule.

I want to quickly run through the general provisions of the bill.

There are questions that Members have, and I will yield myself more time in an attempt to answer them.

In title I, the Criminal Code amendments, we have these limits of $1,000 per election by any person to a candidate. A "person," of course, is a broad term under the law. There is a $5,000 limit per election on contributions to candidates for Federal office by multicandidate committees. That would be the Democratic Campaign Committee, the Republican Campaign Committee, et cetera.

There is a $25,000 limit on the amount one individual may contribute in one year to all candidates. In other words, if a man wanted to contribute $1,000 to 25 candidates, he could do it, and then the ball game is over for him.

This gets away from the type of $2.5 million contributions and $1 million contributions that were had on both sides the last time, and of course, if the bill stays as it is, there will be no contributions in Federal elections because we propose to fund them out of the income tax checkoff.

The expenditure limits are set overall in this way: The President for the general election, $20 million; for the primary election, $10 million; for the Senate, $75,000 or 5 cents times the population of the State, whichever is larger; in the House, $75,000 in each primary and general election.

Expenditure limitations would be increased by the cost of living escalation.

There is a prohibition against a candidate spending more than $25,000 of his own funds in an election. That, of course, includes the candidate, his wife, and members of his immediate family.

We allow an exemption for slatecards and sample ballots being exempted from the reporting requirement. The reason for that is that in very, very many geographical areas of this country there are counties with a population of 20,000, 30,000, and 40,000 where the parties in the county on both sides put out a sample ballot. I will use, for example, one county in my district in Ohio which has a population of 16,000 people. You can buy 16,000 sample ballots, even at today's prices, for less than $300 if you buy them from the people who print the ballots.

In Ohio the law requires anything labeled "sample ballot" to have the names of every candidate for both parties on it.

Mr. Chairman, under the old law, if that party spent $300 in this year's election for sample ballots, which would be one for every household in the county, they would be forced, under the penalty of fine and imprisonment, whether they knew it or not, to report to the Federal Election Commission that they had spent $20 on my behalf, for instance, because there are 15 candidates this year in my district on the ballot.

That is the kind of little thing that is one of the technical violations, of which there are literally thousands, that we are trying to eliminate by what seems to me to be a rather sensible exemption.

Under the Disclosure Act we simplify the reporting requirements. We provide for a single 10-day preelection report instead of the 5-day and 15-day report that the present law provides. The reason we did that is simply because the 5-day provision was not realistic. By the time you got your books closed, got your report made, and got it down here and the clerk put it on his computer and it was recorded, it was difficult to get copies in by election day.

So we did away with this. We now make one report mandatory 10 days before election and another 30 days after election.

I think the Members are also going to be delighted to know that we have eliminated these reports which had to come quarterly, most of which said, zero, zero, zero, but which had to be notarized and sent in. In any quarter in any year in which you do not spend $1,000 in that quarter, you do not make a report until the end of the year, when you make a cumulative report. If you spent over $1,000 in a quarter, you have to file a report.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS) has expired.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, we waive quarterly reports if they fall within the 10 days of a pre- or post-election report. In other words, if a quarterly report came within 10 days or 30 days after election, you just combine them and make one report.

We require each candidate to have a principal campaign committee. I am going to take a little time to explain that. If you have nine counties in the district or nine wards in the city and you want to have a committee in each ward, that is all right, but you have got to designate one committee as your principal committee. All of those country or ward committees have to report whatever they spend in your name to the principal committee, and the principal committee is responsible and must make the report to the reporting authority.

Mr. Chairman, we have agreed, by a committee amendment, with the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL), as well as other Members—the committee agreed to it this morning—that the committee will offer an amendment on the composition of the board, which will be as follows: The board will be composed of six people, four voting members and two nonvoting members. The four voting members will be appointed, two by the Speaker of the House and two by the Vice President of the United States.

I wish to tell the Members that we included the Vice President of the United States in an effort to be eminently fair to the minority side, because normally those appointments are made by the Speaker of the House and the President pro tempore of the Senate, and they are both Democrats. However, we stipulate that those appointees must be, one from each party in both cases, and to that are added the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate as nonvoting members of the Board, for the purpose of being there and being in on the promulgation of rules and regulations and being available for Members to consult as to what are the proper procedures so that one can make out his report and have some real feeling that he is within the law.

We also have compromised another thing in the bill which will be offered as a committee amendment. Under the old bill the reporting authority got together and made rules and regulations and they changed the law. It was 5 days and 15 days, but by regulation they changed it to 22 days and 12 days. We do not think that ought to be done. We had in there that any rules or regulations they made could be vetoed by either committee, but we decided that raised a constitutional question. So, by committee amendment, we will change that so that anything they promulgate can be vetoed within 30 days by a vote of either House of the Congress.

In other words, it would probably be referred to the committee. If they thought it worthwhile, they would bring it to the House for a vote.

In title II we amend the Hatch Act so as to allow State and local government employees to participate on a voluntary basis in certain partisan political activities.

We strengthen and expand the existing dollar checkoffs now limited to the financing of Presidential elections. The gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BRADEMAS) will explain this later in detail. We make the dollar checkoff self-perpetuating to assure that the money may be used within the election, and we set aside $20 million for each major political party. We define major political parties and minor political parties, and something will be available for the minor political parties.

The definition of a minor political party is one that got 5 percent of the vote in the last election. As I say, there is $20 million for each major party in the State, and they may not raise any money privately, and they may not spend more than $20 million, which must be spent again through a designated single committee, which may be the national committee or it may be another, but it must be one single committee, and they will not be out running all over the country, raising money.

Finally, we put in the law that political committees with no gross income for the taxable year would not be required to file income tax returns for that year. The IRS rules that whether you made a nickel or not you had to file a return.

Well, I was chairman around here many years ago when the Committee on Excess Government Paperwork was formed, and I think this was excess government paperwork. Anybody who does not have any income does not have to file a return, so why should a political committee which has no income be forced to file a return? We just wiped it out. That is one of the reasons of the waiver on points of order in the rule.

Mr. Chairman, I have touched on the high points, and other Members will explain in greater detail other sections. The members of the committee will be available to answer any questions that other Members may have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio serves as the chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, and the gentleman and I are friendly adversaries in the sense that one of my responsibilities around here is chairman of the Republican Campaign Committee.

I have one question. The gentleman stated that there is a $5,000 limitation on contributions to candidates for Federal office by committees other than one's "principal" campaign committees, and the gentleman from Ohio I think in the course of his general debate a moment ago likened the congressional committees to some of the better known recognized special interest groups. What was the rationale in the treatment of those kinds of committees as though they are on a par with the respective congressional campaign committees we chair?

I would like to think our respective national committees, senatorial and congressional campaign committees, could be looked upon in a special way—even in this bill. Why could we not have been excluded from this limitation?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 additional minute in order to answer the question posed by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MICHEL).

Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman from Illinois—and I understand that this is a complicated matter—that the rationale was in trying to make a distinction between the different candidate committees—and it was not my contention, and I want to make a little legislative history here, and I do not think it was the intention of the committee, to include whatever services we give to any candidate as far as the $5,000 is concerned.

In other words, if you furnish a candidate with a voting record, or my voting record, or if I furnish a candidate with the gentleman's, that is not included. We were talking about the way I understood it, and I believe that is the intent—a cash contribution to the candidate's campaign.

Mr. MICHEL. Strictly a financial contribution under an information and educational allowance, or whatever we might call it; but the inhouse kind of contributions that our respective committees have been accustomed to making candidates or to incumbents would be excluded?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

It is my belief that they are not included—just the cash contributions.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield to the gentleman from Hawaii.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

As the gentleman knows, when he appeared before the Rules Committee, I raised a question relative to the definition of the term "any election" as used in section 101. I raise the question for the reason that, while setting the limitation on the amount that any person may contribute, the term "any election" is used, in setting the maximum for expenditures that any candidate may make, the term "any campaign for nomination for election, or for election" is used.

Mr. HAYS. May I say to the gentleman I do not have the section at my fingertips, but there is a section in there defining elections, and in the definition of election as the term is used, it means any primary, any runoff, and any general election.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. That is fine. For the purpose of establishing legislative history, I thought I should raise the question.

Mr. HAYS. It is also in the bill in the definition.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I will remind the gentleman that the definition merely refers to existing law, which is not printed in the bill itself.

Mr. HAYS. But in the Ramseyer report it is there, and it is defined that way.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONYERS. I appreciate the chairman's yielding to me.

I should like to have him explain, if he would, the question I raised with him before that apparently requires new political parties to have to accumulate 5 percent of the vote, which means that it would have to go from 0 percent to in excess of 5 percent. I know that it is in existing legislation, and is continued in the bill.

Mr. HAYS. Let me say that there is defined in there—and one of the other Members is going into it in depth—major party and minor party—and a minor party is one which accumulated 5 percent—and new parties. A minor party, to be called a minor party and to be eligible, must have gotten the 5 percent in the last election, but that is subject to amendment. That is in one of the sections that is open, and it could be amended.

Mr. CONYERS. The gentleman from Ohio perceives, then, the problem I am raising?

Mr. HAYS. I do.

Mr. CONYERS. We are precluding new parties from getting started. Both of the major parties in the United States pried themselves from splinter groups or from different political formations and entities. What we are now requiring is that these new parties, to get the benefit of public financing—as important and vital as it is—we are now in effect requiring to grow to at least 5 percent or die. I think that is a very serious situation that ought to be gone into very carefully by the Chairman and the Members.

Mr. HAYS. Let me say to the gentleman that I respect his position. He and I may have a fundamental philosophical disagreement about this without affecting our friendship. I personally would like to do anything I can to protect the two-party system, because I am too familiar with too many European countries that have multiparty systems that have degenerated into almost anarchy. There will be provisions for debate on this under the 5-minute rule. There will be provision for amendment, and I do not want to use more time because I have promised a lot of time; but I will be glad to discuss it further with the gentleman under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. CONYERS. Before we get into the 5-minute rule, the 5-minute rule, as I see it practiced on the floor, is that after we start the 5-minute rule, a great number of Members will decide that we ought to cut off the 5-minute rule—and I am referring to the $90 billion Department of Defense bill that was just considered yesterday.

Mr. HAYS. I will assure the gentleman that he will have 5 minutes if I have to get it and give it to him myself.

Mr. CONYERS. I am not only concerned about getting the 5 minutes but I am equally concerned about the provisions that limit new and small parties which ought to be thoroughly considered in passing this legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman yielding. I wanted to ask my colleague, the gentleman from Michigan, did he vote for the closed rule?

Mr. CONYERS. I think that is an irrelevant question.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. I do not think so. As a matter of fact, it is a most relevant question because an open rule would have guaranteed the gentleman from Michigan more adequate time for appropriate amendments.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. DICKINSON), the ranking minority member of the Committee on House Administration.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, let me say at the beginning that I want to compliment the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS) and the membership of our committee for the conscientious hard work that they have put forth in bringing forward this bill. We had 21 different sessions on markup. We charged up the hill many times and charged back down again, and we charged up on the same hill again. There are many things in this bill that are good, that are salutary, that are needed.

There are many things in this bill that I object to that I would like very much to see removed from the bill. For instance, I favor some of the spending limitations, but on the question of campaign expenditures for Members of Congress I think that the amount is excessive. We voted I do not know how many different times on different figures and they ranged anywhere from $150,000 per election down to as low as $50,000 or even less. We finally settled on the figure of $60,000 per election. We tried to take into account the differences in rural areas and metropolitan areas or industrialized areas and agricultural areas in trying to work some equity because we realize the situation is different from Manhattan, say, to the rural areas of my 13 counties, and it costs more in some areas.

I felt that $60,000 was the most equitable figure we could have settled on. After we voted on it, it came up again and then we voted on $75,000. I can support the $75,000, but if an amendment is offered I will vote to go back to $60,000, because this means $50,000 per election, which means every time we vote.

It means that if there is a primary, that is $75,000. Then if there is a runoff a month later, that is $75,000, or a total of $150,000 which we will have spent right there. It is not a pass through and it is not cumulative, but we can spend $75,000 per election there or $150,000 total for the primary and runoff, and then if there is a general election, that is another $75,000, and if there is a runoff after that general election, as is permitted in some States, there is another $75,000, and it is up to $300,000 for a seat in the Congress, which I think is too high.

Mr. MATHIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MATHIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offered an amendment in the committee which reduced the amount of expenditure per election to $42,500. The gentleman supported that, and I would appreciate the gentleman's support in this instance as on that date.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I think it might be appropriate to make the observation that in the last election the challengers who defeated incumbents spent on the average, $120,000 to defeat the incumbents. I subscribe to the gentleman's personal view and hope that we could keep campaign expenditures down to a minimum in each one of our districts, but the facts of life prove that the only way one can possibly unseat those of us who are incumbents with our built-in advantages, and this was particularly true in 1972, is to spend considerable sums of money. So the $42,500, while good talk for the folks back home, is one of those kinds of amendments I referred to during the consideration of the rule as rather ridiculous and it will put the Members unfairly to the mast on the floor when we get under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. DICKINSON. I thank the gentleman for his observation.

Mr. Chairman, moving right along now, there are other features of the bill I find most repugnant and objectionable. For instance, on the financing of national conventions out of the public till, there is $2 million set aside here to finance the national conventions.

This is bad for many reasons. They say, "If you do not want it, we will make it optional." The Democrats say, "We want it. You don't have to take it if you don't want it."

We can find going through the whole thread of this bill the partisanship, I suppose, which is part of this ball game; but but let me remind all of us that with the pursestrings goes control. That is a simple axiom of life that we cannot change.
