It was originally added to a Senate-passed campaign finance bill by Members of the House of Representatives, not as a reform measure, but to openly punish and pressure Members of the Senate who had not gone along with the idea of steep pay raises for Members of Congress. The House author of the honorarians limitation, Congressman ANNUNZIO, vocally announced his purpose in proposing the provision. During what brief discussion there was of the section in the House, the author of this restriction stated that:

"In the main, it is aimed at the members of the other body who have been so piously proclaiming from time to time that Members of Congress do not need any pay raises."

He repeated this purpose when discussing the conference report which became law, adding the hope that we Senators, in his words, "will now come along to acting more wisely when the measure of a pay raise comes up."

Surely, Mr. President, there is no room in Federal law for provisions such as this, which are run through by one House of Congress out of pique with the other body, and as a self-serving tool for pressuring that other body to approve congressional pay raises. Mr. President, this bit of background on the origin of what is now section 327 highlights what is wrong with it. It is a narrow and badly worded limitation on outside income of Members of Congress and other Government officials. When an amendment was offered during debate on the Campaign Finance Law which called for a far-reaching restriction of outside payments and fees to Members of Congress, it was beaten down by a vote of 61 to 31. That proposed amendment had been offered by Senator ALLEN and it would have prohibited the receipt by Members of Congress and Government officials of nearly all payments other than their official salaries. This is the kind of honest amendment I can vote for and, although I did cast my vote against tabling the Allen amendment, it was badly beaten.

I just wanted to have it a part of the record that this provision received absolutely no consideration by either body of Congress; it was capriciously put on by a man who wanted to get even with the Senate or in some way pressure the Senate into going along with the pay raises that the House of Representatives wanted.

There has been far more discussion on this matter on March 18 and today than there appeared during the whole time we were considering this bill in the past.

I think we should express our gratitude to the Senator from Alabama for having allowed us to tell of our feelings relative to this matter.

I personally think it is unconstitutional to tell any Member of Congress whether he can or cannot make an outside income, and if we ever get to the point of having to live on the exact income that we make, after paying taxes here, in Arizona, and every other place they can get ahold of you, the business of being a Senator is not going to be monetarily attractive.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the Senator for his explanation of the origin of the bill.

Of course, the Senator also pointed out this same issue has been debated here in the Chamber, and there was an amendment by the Senator from Alabama that would have sought to place a limit on honoraria that could be paid to members of the Federal establishment.

The Senator from Alabama is not concerned with what may have motivated the Members of the House of Representatives to introduce such an amendment, but when the election bill got to conference, the House provision was for a limitation of $10,000 per annum, and the conferees, apparently feeling that the Senate might want a somewhat higher figure, did arrive at the $15,000 limitation. So that is how it came about. I do not know the motives that prompted Members of the House of Representatives to offer that amendment. Whatever motivated it, it is a good provision, and it is a provision that was accepted by the conferees and that was agreed to here in the Senate by the acceptance of the conference report.

It has been the law of the land and has been working fairly well, I assume, for some years; and now, when we are trying to amend the campaign law to meet the Supreme Court's objections and criticisms, why, it is necessary to bring up the honoraria question. I am sure the Members of the Senate and the Senator from Alabama had no idea whatsoever of going into the honoraria question again until action was taken here in the Chamber lifting the ceiling. Once that that was done, it left the Senator from Alabama, feeling as a matter of principle that this limit should be placed on such income, no recourse but to seek to restore that amendment.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. That is the purpose of this amendment.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I will not only yield but I will yield the floor and give the Senator from Oregon an opportunity to speak in his own right.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, first let me respond——

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Yes, I yield.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I wonder if I might be able to offer my amendment at this time and then if the Senator wants to——

Mr. PACKWOOD. Yes.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I have an amendment at the desk to the Allen amendment which I would like to offer. Mr. President, first of all——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As drafted the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota would not be in order unless the amendment of the Senator from Alabama is divided.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I ask for a division of the Allen amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so divided. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 50, line 10 strike "616" and insert the following: § 616 of title 18, U.S.C. is amended to read as follows:

"§ 616. Acceptance of outside income.

"No elected or appointed officer or employee of any branch of the Federal Government may receive any salary, wage, or other income of any nature in excess of $15,000 per annum, other than Federal Government compensation established by law while serving as such an officer or employee. Violation of this section is punishable by a fine of $5,000."

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Simply by brief way of explanation, as I said in the colloquy that Senator ALLEN and I had a few minutes ago, I can very easily live within any limitation that the Senate wishes to impose on outside income, including the $15,000 limitation. That does not bother me.

What bothers me is that one source of outside income is singled out for limitation while all other sources are allowed to remain limitless, and that includes income from law practices, business interests, ownership of stocks and bonds and their dividends that are received thereby, and income of all other sources.

I simply think it is unfair for this Congress to do such a thing, so I think all income ought to be limited. If we are going to limit one, let us limit them all.

I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from Alabama would yield for a question.

Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield for a question?

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator has the floor.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I had the floor.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I thought I had the floor.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Oregon had the floor. He yielded to the Senator from South Dakota for purposes of submitting the amendment, and he still maintains the floor.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator wants to yield the floor, the Senator from Alabama will be glad then to yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. No; I do not want to yield the floor. But will the Senator yield for a question while I have the floor?

Mr. ALLEN. No; that would hardly be in order. I will yield if I have the floor. Not having the floor, I have nothing to yield.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I am intrigued with the theory of the Senator from Alabama. He has alluded to Senators and Congressmen being bought, that they go to appear before groups that are not interested in hearing our oratorical ability or thoughts upon legislation but really want to pay us off in exchange, apparently, for a vote or favorable consideration because they have invited us to speak; or, at least, I judge that is what he is driving at. Although, he said that does not apply to all groups. I certainly do not think he would indicate that it applied to the University of Alabama when Senator RIBICOFF and I spoke there.

But we are well aware of the rumors—I cannot verify this; I think the rumors probably are true—of lawyers in Congress—and I am a lawyer—who take partnership shares from a law firm. They do no work for the law firm. The law firm has clients that have interests before Federal agencies or before Congress.

We are all aware that there are Members—or at least rumors of such—who have interests in farming operations, interests in brokerage houses, who are still receiving money from those operations, although they do not put in any significant time in the running of those operations.

We do not have time. If we are going to be responsible Congressmen, we have to spend the bulk of our time in Washington, attending to public business.

When I was elected to the Senate in 1968, I sold all my interests in the law firm and have received no interest from it at all from the time I started serving.

However, it seems to me that if the Senator is talking about conflicts of interest here, if he means to allude to the fact that perhaps we are invited to speak before groups who want us to come or to write articles for groups or publications put out by special interest groups because they are interested in incurring our favor, then his amendment is drawn too narrowly. We should require public disclosure of all income, from whatever source derived, of whatever amount, and then let the public make up their minds as to whether or not there is a conflict of interest, based upon that disclosure.

If the Senator is not really alluding to the fact that we are being bought or that our favor is being incurred but that it takes too much time away from Congress, I point out that I cited the other day the earnings of the top money earners on the speaking circuit; and their attendance is above that of the average in the Senate. They are not missing business because of that. Others who do not make much money from speaking are missing more votes than that group.

The thing that intrigues me about the Senator's proposal is that we cannot be paid more than $1,000 to write an article or to make a speech, or more than $15,000 a year, but there is no limit on what we can be paid to write a book.

I was approached by a publishing company to write a book. I am no good at writing. I thought of taking a whirl at it. But writing is a painfully slow process. I admire journalists. I admire people who are glib of pen. I chose not to do it.

If the Senator is opposed to somebody being paid a thousand dollars to write a book, I would think he would be opposed to a Senator or a Member of the House being guaranteed $25,000 or $50,000 by a publishing house to write a book.

The Senator says it is only because we are Senators that we are asked to make these appearances.

Mr. President, apparently, it is only because we are Senators that we are asked to write a book. Nobody ever asked me, when I served in the State legislature, to write a book. Nobody ever asked me, when I was practicing law privately, to write a book. When I came to the Senate, I was asked to write one. Yet, the Senator's limitation would say that it is perfectly all right. Instead of writing one article and calling it an article and being paid, it is all right, in essence, to write 20 articles, string them together, call it a book, have it published, and be paid $20,000. To me, that kind of distinction is nonsense.

In this bill, we are talking about disclosure. The very reason why we are talking about honorariums in this bill is that the Rules Committee made a change in the law regarding honorariums. This was not sprung on the floor for the first time. The Rules Committee made a change when the matter came out of the Rules Committee. It is germane to this bill. A limitation was put in 2 years ago, when the bill was passed initially.

We are all familiar with the fact that the House has very strict rules of germaneness, and there are very few bills that are relevant and germane and under consideration by the House to which this proposal can be attached.

So it is relevant to this bill; it is germane to this bill.

In all fairness, if we are going to talk about either full disclosure or limiting our outside income, it should be all income which, by any conceivable stretch of the imagination, might be tainted, because we receive it because we are Senators. To draw this artificial distinction and say that it refers only to that income from speeches, only that income from writing little articles, not big books, which is going to be limited, that, to me, is unfair and is artificial.

Again I say that if the Senator or others are alluding to the fact that special interest groups are trying to buy us, we have taken care of that problem in the Senate. It was taken care of before I came to the Senate, by requiring that these honorariums be listed. A Member has to tell where he went, to whom he spoke, on what date, and how much he was paid. That information is filed every May 15. They are public documents and normally are published every year in the newspapers, including our home papers.

We all have to run for reelection. We have to answer to our voters in connection with whom we spoke to, where, and when. It seems to me that that is a much better body to be responsive to than to set an artificial limitation, an artificial amount for a very narrow spectrum of activities, and not attempt in any other way to limit any other outside income that might allegedly come to us solely because we are Members of the U.S. Senate.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PACKWOOD. I yield.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I think this matter has been discussed thoroughly. It was debated thoroughly the other day, and I move that——

Mr. President, I withhold my motion.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, while the Senator from Oregon is making a call for a Senator who is not in the Chamber, I will try to explain to my colleagues and those citizens who may not understand the genesis or the source of the so-called honorarium.

To begin with, "honorarium" is not even explained in the proposed legislation. I looked it up in a dictionary, and it reads:

An honorary payment or reward, usually in recognition of gratuitous or professional services on which custom or propriety forbids any price to be set.

There is not even that simple explanation in the proposed legislation.

Mr. President, I never have figured out how much money is available through colleges alone in this country, to pay for a series of lectures. I do not know of many colleges in this country that do not have annual sessions of speakers. They range all the way from prominent businessmen to professional this, professional that, and certainly included would be the attitudes and the thinking of Members of Congress or men in politics. I do not know all the sources of these funds. But I think they come mostly—as I know with respect to colleges in Arizona—from local people who have sufficient sums of money to see that the school is provided with enough money to bring in speakers.

In the colleges I know of in Arizona, the student's fee to attend these lectures is included in the student union dues. Then additional tickets are sold to citizens of the community or citizens of the State. I know of two such programs that earn a considerable sum of money on top of the money that they pay to the person who is speaking.

I know that these honorariums, so-called, sound like a devastatingly large amount of money, and it is a large amount of money. But when you take one-third off the reported fee, which goes to the man or the company that has arranged a date, and then you have travel arrangements, which are not always included, you are lucky if you wind up with half the money that was reportedly paid to the person who is accepting the so-called honorarium.

That is as brief an explanation as I can give of these amounts that are available to public speakers all over the country. I might say, Mr. President, having been in this business for many, many years, that the agencies are always looking for new speakers. They never have enough to fill the bill, or even take the invitations that are offered.

I think this is a service that can be offered the universities of the country. I think it would probably be very nice if each one of us felt that we could afford to travel across this country. One night next week I am going out to Brigham Young University in Utah. I shall get my expenses paid and I shall spend all night getting back. Last night I was in Wichita, Kans., as we say in Spanish, "por nada," or for nothing.

I enjoy doing it, but I like to feel that once in a while, when one organization that I know can afford it says to me, "Look, we would like to have you be the principal speaker at our convention, and we will pay you, give you $3,000," I should like to think that I could take that.

I do not think I am any different from the average person in this body. I am reportedly a wealthy man. I think that is the most costly reputation I have ever had come about. When a grandfather of 10 is supporting 7 of them and 2 children who have broken families, it is not easy. When I look at what I have to spend—and, as I say, I am no different from any other Member of this body—when I look at what I have to spend on the first of January, before I even buy a loaf of bread, every penny I make in this body is gone.

People might say, "Well, why don't you get out of it and go back to something that you can do better at?" I am too old for that. Nevertheless, on this business of the grass is always greener on the other side—$44,000 is a lot of money. I remember when I was president of my corporation, I finally got the board to raise my annual salary to $6,500. That was the third biggest salary paid in the State of Arizona. The same corporation has not a salary now within $3,000 of being that low.

This being on the Government payroll, trying to keep a home at home and a home here, even though we are allowed some tax benefit, having an automobile at home and an automobile here, double expenses—I can tell my colleagues, I can tell the American public that it is not all it is piped up to be. It is costly.

I think it is perfectly all right, perfectly legal for us to be able to accept honorariums whenever they are offered. My good friend from Oregon has mentioned books. I had my first book published in 1941; and you know who published it? BARRY GOLDWATER, all by himself. I made some money on it, so it was all right. But now, lo and behold, I am a U.S. Senator. Like my friend from Oregon, I find writing very difficult, but I do enjoy it. I do it mostly because I have staff members who can put my English into understandable English. Most of my English, I will admit, could not be printed. But after my staff gets through with it, it reads in a rather nice way.

I am on a radio program. Nobody is going to ask Mr. GOLDWATER of Arizona to go on a radio program. I go on television shows once in a while. I am a union member of the Television Actors Guild, a dues-paying member, and very proud of it. And I do pretty well with it. But that is not prohibited.

So here I stand, able to make far more money than most Members of this body only because the bill we are talking about was so narrowly drawn, it has such a vicious, mean purpose behind it, that we did not have time, really, to think it out. I think that if we really want to go the whole way, I would favor the amendment offered by my friend from Alabama last year and the effecting amendment now being offered to his amendment to say, you are going to get—whatever it is, $42,000, $42,350 a year—and that is it. Although I keep remembering that probably the best legislators we ever had were not paid anything, I do not propose that we go back to that.

I just wanted to say these few words because I do not think this amendment of the Senator from Alabama and the amendment that is proposed to it by the Senator from South Dakota are necessary. Therefore, Mr. President, I move that we lay——

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold?

Mr. GOLDWATER. For the same purpose we discussed before?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Yes, I should like to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, has a motion been made to lay the amendment on the table?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator withdraw the motion?

Mr. GOLDWATER. I did not make that motion.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I thought I heard the Senator make it.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I was in the motion of making a motion, and I stopped the motion of making the motion.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, did the Senator from Arizona make a motion or not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He was in the middle of making a motion.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I understand to accommodate absent Senators a request is going to be made that the motion to table soon to be made by the distinguished Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWWATER), whom I admire so very much, after that motion is made the matter will be passed over in order that another amendment can be offered and discussed, and then have a back-to-back vote on the amendment or motion to table, whatever might be pending.

I would like to comment a little bit though on what the distinguished Senator from Arizona has said about the general subject of honorariums and writing books and one thing and another.

He spoke of his writing books and then his staff would brush up what he had written. Well, I assumed he was talking about his publishing staff rather than his Senate staff making those changes because I do not believe he would have his Senate staff working on a book he is about to publish. But, in any event, the staff would brush up the Senator's draft of his book and then send it to the publisher. I, of course, would be delighted to purchase any of Senator GOLDWATER's books because I know they would be well worth reading.

I was—it is hard to say amused—somewhat chagrined would be a better word, to hear the distinguished Senator speaking of this business of——

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator withhold? We will have order in the Senate so the Senator from Alabama can be heard.

Mr. ALLEN. I was somewhat chagrined, possibly even disappointed, at the remarks about the sad state of those members of the Federal Establishment who are on the lecture circuit. They have to pay a third of their honorariums to booking agents. They apparently would book a U.S. Senator just like they might book a talking dog act or some sort of a sideshow, and I would think it a little bit beneath the position of a U.S. Senator to have booking agents to book him into towns and to pander his services to various people who might want to hear from a Senator.

So I am not too outraged at the plight that such members of the Federal Establishment might find themselves in. The high cost of booking agents would seem to have entered into the discussions on this bill, and that is real bad, and I guess we ought to condemn by passing in the Senate a sense-of-the-Senate resolution, Mr. President, like we do about these SALT agreements, SALT I and SALT II—pass a sense-of-the-Senate resolution decrying the high rates of compensation of booking agents for speeches by Senators.

I might say I would vote for such a sense of the Senate resolution because they should not treat our Senators that way. They should not charge them a third of the take. They should not charge them that. That is too high a compensation for a booking agent to get, to get one-third as much as the U.S. Senator who has to leave these hallowed Halls to rush to the place where he is to make a speech and spend 30 minutes making a speech, and pick up his check and then come back to these hallowed Halls and for that the booking agent gets one-third. [Laughter.]

I would be willing to join in the introduction of a resolution that would decry this high cost of booking agents or the high fees of booking agents for Senators' speeches because that is what apparently makes this limitation so confining.

One thousand dollars is not enough when you take into consideration that you have to pay your booking agent—and I guess every self-respecting Senator has got him a booking agent. I am not very self-respecting because I do not have such a booking agent. [Laughter.]

But I am certainly willing to accommodate the wishes of those who are seeking to defeat this amendment, and if it is the wish of the leadership to make unanimous-consent request I have no objection to that.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I thank the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I move to table division one of the Allen amendment.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent—and I do this because I understand there are about 10 Members down at the White House at the present time for the signing of the Marianas covenant bill which passed both Houses and which is on the President's desk—that the vote on the motion to table the Allen amendment be set aside; that the Senate proceed to the Allen amendment No. 1517 on which there is a time limit of 30 minutes equally divided; that upon the disposition of the Allen amendment No. 1517 the Senate vote on the motion to table the original Allen amendment.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWER). Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Montana? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, what is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator from Alabama offering his amendment?

AMENDMENT NO. 1517

Mr. ALLEN. I call up my amendment No. 1517, and inasmuch as it was offered prior to the introduction of the substitute amendment, I modify my amendment to conform to the wording of the substitute amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so modified.

The clerk will report the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) offers a proposed amendment 1517, as modified to amendment No. 1516.

SEC. . (a) Each person referred to in subparagraph (b) herein shall file annually with the Comptroller General of the United States on or before February 15 of each year a full and complete report of net worth as of the end of the preceding calendar year, such report to consist of a statement of assets (and of their reasonable market value) owned by him, or jointly by him and his spouse, and of liabilities owed by him, or jointly by him and his spouse, together with a full and complete statement of income for the preceding calendar year, such statement of income to consist of a list of the identity of each source of income and a list of the amount paid by each source of income to him, or jointly to him and his spouse, during the preceding calendar year, except that in lieu of such statement of income, each individual referred to in subparagraph (b) may file with the Comptroller General of the United States a copy of such person's Federal income tax report for such calendar year.

(b) The provisions of this section shall apply to any person who as an officer or employee of the United States within the executive, legislative, or judicial branch of the Government of the United States received compensation at a gross annual rate in excess of $25,000 during the year 1976 or any subsequent year.

(c) The report required by this section shall be in such form and shall contain such information as the Comptroller General may prescribe in order to meet the provisions of this section. Notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, all reports filed under this section shall be maintained by the Comptroller General as public records, open to inspection by members of the public, and copies of such records shall be furnished upon request at a reasonable fee. Any report filed under this section shall be retained by the Comptroller General for a period of five years.

(d) All reports required hereunder shall be certified as being correct by the person filing the same and shall be duly sworn to and properly notarized.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may need.

Mr. President, this is a very simple amendment. In this age where disclosure is not only sought but demanded by the public and we require disclosure of information in many areas, I think it might be well for the entire Federal Establishment to make a disclosure of their assets, of their income, the sources of that income each year, and that this disclosure be made a matter of public record.

That is all that the amendment does. It provides that any Federal employee, including Members of the House and Senate, including members of the judiciary, including members of the executive department, each year shall file a financial statement giving a listing of his assets, the value of such assets, and the liabilities, nature of such liabilities and amount of liabilities, and, subtracting one from the other, giving his net worth.

And then not only give a statement giving their assets and liabilities and net worth, but also give a statement of their income for the preceding year and the sources of that income.

In lieu of making the second half of the disclosure, that is, the nature of income, the sources of income and the amount of the income, they might file, if they saw fit, a copy of their Federal income tax for the preceding calendar year which would, of course, contain all of this information required.

This information would be kept by the Comptroller General, filed as an official record open to the public.

I feel that this amendment is in line with the desire and demand of the public generally, that those who serve the public should advise the public of how they are profiting from such public service and from income outside such public service, and also give a statement of their assets and liabilities so that the comparison can be made of their financial status at any given time and in comparison with any previous year.

Such a report would not be required under the amendment of anyone making $25,000 or less, but as to any person in the Federal employ making in excess of $25,000 per year, this statement would be required.

Many such bills have been introduced in the Senate. I have been a cosponsor of such a bill. I believe the distinguished Senator from New Jersey (Mr. CASE) has been a pioneer in this effort. But for some reason or another, these bills do not seem to get out of the committee. They do not seem to get on the Senate floor for consideration.

So this is an opportunity to vote on this measure which I think is very definitely in the public interest and is well within the right of the public to demand to know.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

I simply wish to respond to the Senator and say that his statement a moment ago, that these proposals never get out of committee, is in error.

Right now, there is pending, of course, a number of proposals on this particular point that are referred to committee, but a predecessor bill that I introduced (S. 366) was passed by the Senate. That was part of an election bill, that had a similar provision in it. S. 372 in 1973 and again in 1974, as a part of the bill S. 3044, had a very similar provision in it, although some of them were a little broader than the precise proposal of the Senator at this time.

Accordingly, I am going to attempt to broaden it right now.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator yield just a moment for a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN. I heard the Senator's recital of the bills that had gotten out on the floor. I did not seem to hear him say that was an independent bill of this sort. It was always part of another bill, such as we are trying to do right here.

Is that correct?

Mr. CANNON. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CANNON. S. 366, S. 372, and, again in 1974, as part of S. 3044.

Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator from Nevada that the amendment is not in order. This is an amendment to the Allen amendment?

Mr. CANNON. This is an amendment to the Allen amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will not be in order until the time has been used or yielded back on the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to offer this amendment now. I think it will probably be acceptable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 2, line 15, after the period insert the following: "The provisions of this section also apply to any individual not described in the preceding sentence who is a candidate within the meaning of section 301(b) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(b)), except that the report required by subsection (a) shall be filed within 30 days after the date on which he becomes a candidate within the meaning of such section, and on each February 15th thereafter so long as he is such a candidate."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, the essence of the amendment has been stated now. It would apply to any person who was a candidate for Federal office, and require him to comply with the reporting provisions of the bill, and to file a reporting within 30 days after they become a candidate.

Mr. ALLEN. I think it is a fine amendment. I am delighted to accept it. I think it improves the thrust of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Will the Senator yield me a minute?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I am not opposed to this amendment. We have a State law in my State which requires this anyway. But we are, as in some other States—though not too many—a community property State. This raises serious legal questions because a spouse owns half of the property. Also, agreements can be made where a spouse can have separate property which would belong only to her. I am wondering how this amendment would apply under the community property law. Suppose the spouse said, "Well, I am not responsible for this because I had the bad judgment to marry a Senator. I should not be made a second-class citizen. I have my own property and I should be no different than anyone else."

How would this apply to that situation?

Mr. ALLEN. The amendment provides for the person and his spouse. It would not only cover men and their wives but women and their husbands.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes, it would work both ways.

Mr. ALLEN. It would apply. That is one of the burdens he would assume on becoming a Federal employee.

Mr. MAGNUSON. If it applied, it would apply to community property that was acquired during the time of the marriage. But there is some legal doubt about whether the separate property is put on the table. If there is a divorce or a separation suit, the judge puts it all on the table and makes a decision.

It seems to me it might be a little bit harsh on a spouse who has a separate income, not from politics, that he or she should be subject to this ruling. The problem only arises in what we call community-property States, of which I believe there are seven or eight.

There might be a spouse who would say, "I am not going to tell anybody. I am not a public official. I will not tell anybody unless I want to." As far as the Senator from Washington is concerned, I have voluntarily complied with this provision in accordance with Washington State law. This provision poses a real legal problem when applied to community property.

Mr. ALLEN. I imagine that anyone objecting to the filing of this could make a legal point of it. The law is probably going back to the Supreme Court.

Mr. MAGNUSON. It would not be the public official herself or himself who would object, but it would be the spouse who says, "I am not a public official."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time on the amendment has expired.

Mr. ALLEN. I think there would be more reason for requiring this in a community property State than there would be where there was separate image. At least the husband would have community property with his wife's property as well. If anyone objects to doing this, they could make a legal point of it.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I will probably get popular with the women's lib. Legally, there have been some cases where the husband is supposed to be the breadwinner and there are court decisions, where the wife became the breadwinner for the family and he happened to be a public official. This poses some problems.

As the Senator says, I suppose this matter will be taken to the court.

The PRESIDING OFICER. Who yields time?

Do the Senators yield back their time?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CANNON. Will the Senator withhold? This is on my amendment to the Allen amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nevada to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

NAVAL PETROLEUM RESERVES PRODUCTION ACT OF 1976—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on H.R. 49 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWER). The report will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill H.R. 49 to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to establish on certain public lands of the U.S. national petroleum reserves the development of which needs to be regulated in a manner consistent with the total energy needs of the Nation, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by all of the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

(The conference report is printed in the RECORD of March 23, 1976 beginning at page H2266.)

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the conference report on the Naval Petroleum Reserves Production Act of 1976—H.R. 49—and in connection therewith I have a brief statement.

The report was signed by all the conferees of the House and the Senate. The Senate will act first on the report.

The bill, as reported by the conferees, represents what I consider to be an excellent compromise between two substantially different pieces of legislation—H.R. 49 on the part of the House and S. 2173 on the part of the Senate.

H.R. 49, as passed by the House, authorized the establishment of national petroleum reserves under the administration of the Interior Department and directed that the naval petroleum reserves become a part of the national petroleum reserves. The national petroleum reserves were then to be produced at the maximum rate with the oil going into the Nation's pipelines to ease the energy crisis.

S. 2173, on the other hand, retained Navy jurisdiction over the existing reserves, but directed that they be produced with the oil being sold on the open market and the proceeds used to help defray the costs to complete the development of the naval reserves and to fill a strategic storage system.

Mr. President, there were 26 conferees on this bill from the Armed Services and Interior and Insular Affairs Committees of both the House and the Senate. The conference met in formal, open session seven different times to reach agreement on the many issues.

The bill as it is presented in this report accomplishes the objectives of both pieces of legislation as originally passed by the respective House. Navy jurisdiction is retained over Naval Petroleum Reserves 1, 2, and 3 and immediate production is directed. The oil produced is to be sold on the open market with adequate protection provided for small, independent refiners. Initial production is for a 6-year period and there is a mechanism to extend that period providing the Congress does not object. The proceeds from the sale of the oil are to go into a special account where they will be available as offsetting receipts to reduce outlay requirements, not only for continued exploration and development of the naval reserves, but also for the construction and filling of a strategic storage system as authorized in the Energy Policy and Conservation Act and for operations in the Alaska reserve which I shall discuss next.

The huge, largely unexplored reserve in Alaska presented a different case than the three naval reserves in the continental United States. The outlay of capital that will be required to explore and develop the Alaskan reserve and the extremely difficult environmental problems that can be expected, strongly suggested that retention of Navy jurisdiction was inappropriate. Therefore, the conferees agreed to transfer jurisdiction of Naval Petroleum Reserve 4 in Alaska to the Interior Department on June 1, 1977. It is made very clear that the ongoing program of petroleum exploration is not to be jeopardized, but any development leading to production is specifically prohibited until the President directs a study on production alternatives and gets congressional approval before proceeding.

Mr. President, this bill accomplishes several things:

First, it puts domestic oil in the Nation's pipelines, thereby reducing import requirements;

Second, it puts dollars in the Treasury as a result of the sale of oil. These dollars are earmarked to pay for further development of the naval reserves and for a strategic storage system that more adequately protects this country from energy blackmail; and Third, it maintains necessary congressional oversight of these important national resources.

I know of no opposition to the conference report. The Departments of Interior and the Navy and the Federal Energy Administration have been consulted during the course of our deliberations and, as far as I know, support the concepts we have reported.

I move the immediate adoption of the conference report.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, after nearly 3 years of congressional effort—impeded alternately by stalemate and inertia—I am delighted that we are at long last on the threshold of opening up the oil-rich Elk Hills Naval Petroleum Reserve to full production.

Today the Senate has before it the conference report on H.R. 49, the Naval Petroleum Reserves Production Act of 1976. Title I provides for a transfer of authority for administering the vast Petroleum Reserve No. 4 in Alaska from the Secretary of the Navy to the Secretary of the Interior, effective June 1, 1977. A major exploration program is authorized, but development and production are precluded at this time.

Title II amends title 10 of the United States Code which previously prohibited any production from the naval petroleum reserves except for national defense purposes and only after a recommendation by the President and an act of Congress. The new provision maintains Navy jurisdiction over reserves numbered 1, 2, and 3, but authorizes and directs that within 90 days of enactment, the Secretary shall commence oil production for 6 years at the maximum efficient rate—MER. For Elk Hills, the MER is now estimated to be approximately 350,000 barrels a day.

The Secretary is also authorized to construct, acquire or contract for the use of storage or shipping facilities. If necessary, the Secretary may condemn any pipeline not operated as a common carrier if the owner refused to carry, without discrimination and at a reasonable rate, any petroleum produced at the reserve. In addition, if new pipelines are required, rights-of-way may be acquired by the use of condemnation under Federal statutory authority, but such pipelines must be operated as common carriers. At Elk Hills, pipelines and associated facilities capable of handling 350,000 barrels of oil a day are required to be in place not later than 3 years after enactment in order to assure the availability of the necessary facilities to transport petroleum from the reserve and to maintain production at the maximum efficient rate.

While this production is authorized for only 6 years, the bill also provides a mechanism whereby additional 3-year extensions of the production authority can be accomplished. If, at the end of the first 6 years of production, or a subsequent 3-year extension, the President determines the necessity for continued production, he must submit a recommendation to the Congress, together with a certification that the continued production is in the national interest. If neither the House nor the Senate affirmatively disapproves this Presidential recommendation, production is then authorized for another 3-year period.

SMALL REFINERS

The Secretary is required to structure bids for the sale of the Government's share of the oil in such a manner as to insure a full and equal opportunity for the acquisition of petroleum from the reserves. In no event may more than 20 percent of the Federal share of petroleum produced from Elk Hills be acquired by a single purchaser.

In addition, the Secretary has the authority, if he finds it to be in the public interest, to set aside up to 25 percent of the estimated Federal production for small refiners not having an adequate source of petroleum of their own.

COMMON CARRIER PIPELINES

When the Senate considered its version of H.R. 49 last summer, I offered an amendment to conform to the committee bill to that passed by the House on the issue of requiring that pipelines serving the reserves be common carriers. This was necessary to insure that successful bidders on the U.S. share of oil from any of the reserves not face any risk of being unable to transport it from the reserve to the refinery through discrimination by private carriers. I am thus pleased that the conferees have fashioned common carrier language which requires that any pipeline used to carry any petroleum from the reserves must accept such petroleum produced from them without discrimination and at reasonable rates.

Mr. President, I wish to commend the distinguished chairman of the Armed Services Committee's Subcommittee on Naval Petroleum Reserves (Mr. CANNON) for his diligent efforts to bring this long-stalled issue to fruition. It was nearly 3 years ago—during the critical fuel shortages in the winter of 1973—that Senator TUNNEY and I first called upon the Congress to authorize production from these reserves. It was especially ironic during those dark days of fuel shortages—when Californians faced the spectre of rolling blackouts, long gasoline lines, and temporary industrial shut-downs—to know that 1 billion barrels of crude oil lay in the ground untapped just a few miles away in Kern County, Calif.

Today, the Senate takes its final step toward finally opening up these reserves to production. While we are fortunately not facing severe and immediate fuel shortages such as those created by the Arab oil embargo, the production of oil from Elk Hills and other reserves is an important insurance policy against suffering such shortages again. Furthermore, the 350,000 barrels a day that can eventually be produced from Elk Hills will displace 350,000 barrels a day of oil we are now importing. That can have a positive economic impact by curbing the current outflow of oil dollars.

Mr. President, I strongly urge the Senate to approve this conference report so that we can get on with the business of assuring our citizens that we will have adequate domestic sources of energy for our future needs. The authorization of production from the naval petroleum reserves, together with the exploration program planned for the huge reserve in Alaska, is an important spoke in the wheel that may move us toward a measure of energy self-sufficiency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from California.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am delighted that the Senator from Nevada has brought this measure to the floor in the form it is in. I commend him for his work on it. It is a very significant piece of legislation which I believe will mean a great deal in making more oil available on this continent.

Mr. CANNON. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Nevada on the resolution the conference committee has made to the problems we may have had initially in the consideration of this measure. It is my understanding that they have been resolved to the satisfaction of all conferees. I share with him his satisfaction with the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1976

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3065) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for its administration by a Federal Election Commission appointed in accordance with the requirements of the Constitution, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN). Who yields time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has 9 minutes. The Senator from Nevada has 8 minutes. Who yields time?

Mr. CANNON. I yield the Senator from California such time as he may require.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, there may be only one other amendment to be offered. That is one I would like to offer. Since apparently there is no more to be said at this time on the Allen amendment, I ask unanimous consent that I may submit my amendment at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, what is the amendment?

Mr. CRANSTON. It is the amendment the Senator's staff has seen regarding the amendment suggesting the $1,000 threshold.

Mr. PACKWOOD. $1,000 for organizational limits, or $1,000 per candidate per year?

Mr. CRANSTON. $1,000 for each communication. I am seeking permission to send it up now, that is all I am asking, so that we can discuss it.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I thought the Senator was moving its adoption.

Mr. CRANSTON. No, I am asking unanimous consent to call it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENT SUBMITTED ON AMENDMENT NO. 1517

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I am voting in favor of the Allen amendment, not because I believe that it is a complete or the best means of preventing corruption by public officials, but because the Senate has so far failed to make any meaningful reforms in this area.

My reservations to the approach embodied in the Allen amendment are basicly two in number. First, it would strip some public officials of their rights to financial privacy without any evidence that these individuals are involved in criminal activity. Second, I fear that it might actually prove to be counterproductive to the prevention of corruption by public officials by lulling the press and public into the belief that public disclosure is an effective check where in reality, it may not be much of a check at all. Those who would abuse the public trust would also not hesitate to lie about their personal finances, just as they would on their tax returns. The only way to check would be through a complete and exhaustive audit.

A better approach to this problem, in my judgment, lies in Senate Resolution 175 which I introduced last summer. This resolution would require that the very extensive confidential financial disclosure statements now filed by Senators, Senate officers, and staff aides who are paid at the rate of $15,000 annually or higher would automatically be made available on request to any competent Federal or State court in any case involving alleged criminal misconduct by that Senator, officer, or employee. The resolution would also require that the financial disclosure statements would be provided to a grand jury investigating allegations of criminal misconduct by a Member of the Senate.

I believe that this approach would preserve the privacy rights of public officials while insuring that they would be fully accountable for their financial records in the event that there were suspicion of crime.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All remaining time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment (No. 1517, as amended) of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN). On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GARY HART. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. The clerk will suspend until Senators take their seats. The Senate will be in order.

The assistant legislative clerk resumed and concluded the call of the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BIDEN), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Washington (Mr. JACKSON), and the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. LEAHY) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Washington (Mr. JACKSON) would vote "yea."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK), and the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY) are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 76, nays 13, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 91 Leg.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, what is the parliamentary situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the motion to table division 1 of the amendment of the Senator from Alabama. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, if the motion to table is agreed to, does that carry the Allen amendment and the amendment to the Allen amendment that is pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Division 1 of the Allen amendment and the Abourezk amendment thereto would fall.

CHILD DAY CARE SERVICES UNDER TITLE XX OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on H.R. 9803 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HANSEN). The report will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9803) to postpone for six months the effective date of the requirement that a child day care center meet specified staffing standards (for children between six weeks and six years old) in order to qualify for Federal payments for the services involved under title XX of the Social Security Act, so long as the standards actually being applied comply with State law and are no lower than those in effect in September 1975, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by a majority of the conferees.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, under the Social Services Amendments of 1974, child care operators receiving funds under the social services program are required to meet certain Federal standards including standards with respect to the number of staff in relation to the number of children served. The 1974 legislation would have required child care facilities to come into compliance with the standards by October of last year or face a denial of Federal funds. Because these standards would have increased substantially the cost of operation for many child care operators, possibly resulting in a cutback in the amount of care provided, Congress deferred the effective date of these staffing standards insofar as they apply to preschool children to February 1, 1976. This was intended to allow time for the development of legislation which would make it possible to implement the standards without curtailing services.

In January, the Senate passed the bill H.R. 9803, which would have provided the necessary funding to enable States to come into compliance by raising the annual limit on social services funding by $250 million starting with $125 million in fiscal year 1976. This bill would have also provided substantial incentives for States to meet the new staffing standards by employing welfare recipients. It would have modified the child care requirements somewhat in the case of family day care homes and would have allowed State rather than Federal standards to apply in facilities serving only a few federally funded children.

Because the House conferees could not reach an accommodation with the House Budget Committee over certain technical matters, action on this measure was delayed and the House ultimately was unable to accept the Senate provisions on a permanent basis although the House conferees did not, I believe, have any substantive disagreement with the Senate provisions. However, agreement was reached to adopt the provisions temporarily through September 30 of this year, and I feel confident that it will be possible to further extend them at a later date. Thus, the conference agreement largely follows the Senate provisions although on a somewhat limited and temporary basis. A more detailed description of the agreement is presented in the statement of the conferees, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, since the time the conferees reached agreement on H.R. 9803, the lawyers of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare have discovered that, by a contorted reading of the language in the legislation, they can find a way to interpret it to defeat its purposes. While I do not see how any reasonable reading of the bill could reach that conclusion, I want to make the legislative history on this point completely explicit. The provisions of section 3(d)(2) of the bill as agreed to by the conferees are intended to operate only as a limitation on the provisions of section 3(d)(1). Thus, these two paragraphs taken together have the effect of increasing the Federal matching rate for child care services from 75 to 80 percent but making that increased matching applicable only to the additional $125 million in funding provided by this bill. There is no intent to in any way limit, restrict, or reduce the social services funding otherwise available to States under existing law.

DESCRIPTION OF CHILD CARE CONFERENCE REPORT—(H.R. 9803)

The House bill provided for the suspension until April 1, 1976, of Federal staffing standards for the care of preschool children in child care facilities receiving funding under the Social Security Act. The Senate amendment provided that these standards will be suspended until July 1, 1976. The conference substitute suspends the standards until July 1, 1976.

The Senate amendment added a statement of findings and purpose to the effect that the new child care standards will require increased expenditures and that the purpose of the bill is to provide funding to meet these added costs. The conference substitute includes this statement.

The Senate amendment added a provision which would increase the $2.5 billion limit on Federal funding for social services programs by $250 million annually beginning with fiscal year 1977 (with $125 million in fiscal year 1976 and $62.5 million for the July-September 1976 transition quarter). The additional funds would be available only for matching State child care expenditures and 80 percent of the funds (prior to the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1977) would be allocated among the States on the basis of State population. The Senate amendment required that the new funds be used in such a way as to increase the employment of welfare recipients and other low-income persons in child care related jobs to the maximum extent feasible as determined by the States. The conference substitute provides that $62.5 million in additional Federal child care funding will be available for fiscal 1976 and $62.5 million for the July-September transition quarter. No funding is provided beyond September 30, 1976.

The Senate amendment permitted States to use a part of the additional funding to reimburse providers of child care for the costs of employing welfare recipients. Under the Senate provisions, the amount payable to a qualified provider could not exceed $4,000 (an additional $1,000 in Federal funding would be available as a tax credit or, in the case of public and nonprofit providers, as a Treasury Department payment in lieu of tax credit). These payments could be made only to child care providers having a clientele at least 20% of which is composed of children receiving child care funded under the Social Security Act. The conference substitute generally follows the Senate provision except that payments to public and nonprofit providers could be made up to amounts equal to $5,000 per year per employee. (Such providers would not be eligible for a payment in lieu of the tax credit.)

The Senate amendment provided that the additional social services money available for child care would be eligible for matching State expenditures at an 80% rate rather than the curent-law rate of 75%. The conference substitute accepts this Senate provision.

The Senate amendment provided that 20% of the additional funding available in fiscal year 1976, the July-September 1976 transition quarter, and fiscal year 1977 would be allocated by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to States which he determines to need additional funds because of special difficulty in meeting the child care standards. Funds set aside for special needs but not used would be reallocated on the basis of State population. The conference substitute includes this provision with respect to the additional funding provided for fiscal 1976 and the transition quarter.

The Senate amendment extended the work incentive program expense credit allowed by section 40 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to permit a credit for a portion of the wages paid to an individual who is a Federal welfare recipient who is employed in connection with a child day care services program, and made several other changes in the rules applicable to the computation of the credit allowable for expenses of employing such an individual. Specifically—

(1) the limitation on the amount of the credit allowable for work incentive program expenses under section 50A(a)(2) of the Code, which limits the maximum credit to $25,000 plus 50 percent of tax liability in excess of $25,000, would not apply to so much of the credit as is attributable to Federal welfare recipients employed in connection with a child day care services program;

(2) the amount of the credit allowable for wages paid to any particular Federal welfare recipient could not exceed $1,000;

(3) the credit would be allowed to a State, a political subdivision of a State, or a tax-exempt organization;

(4) the credit is allowed for wages paid to such a Federal welfare recipient after September 30, 1975, and before January 1, 1981; and

(5) the full credit would be refunded to the taxpayer even if the amount of the credit allowed exceeded his tax liability (in the case of a State, a political subdivision of a State, or a taxexempt organization, the entire amount of the credit would be refunded).

The conference substitute is the same as the Senate amendment with the following exceptions:

(1) Under the conference substitute, States, political subdivisions of States, and tax-exempt organizations are not eligible for the credit against tax allowed by section 40 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to expenses of work incentive programs).

(2) Under the conference substitute the credit is not refundable in excess of the taxpayer's liability for tax.

(3) Under the conference substtiute, the credit is allowed only with respect to wages paid after the date of enactment of the conference substitute and before October 1, 1976.

A taxpayer who intends to claim the credit allowed by section 40 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 for the taxable year can, of course, adjust his quarterly payments of estimated tax, or his withholding (in the case of an individual), to take account of the amount of the credit he expects to claim.

The Senate amendment would permit State welfare agencies to waive the Federal staffing requirements in the case of child care centers and group day care homes which meet State standards if the children receiving federally funded care represent no more than 20 percent of the total number of children served (or, in the case of a center, there are no more than 5 such children), provided that it is infeasible to place the children receiving Federally funded care in a facility which does meet the Federal requirements. The amendment would also modify the limitations on the number of children who may be cared for in a family day care home by providing that the family day care mother's own children not be counted unless they are under age 6. This change would apply retroactive to October 1, 1975. The conference substitute accepts the Senate amendment on a temporary basis effective through September 30, 1976.

The Senate amendment added a provision making permanent certain modifications provided under P.L. 94–120 governing funding of services for addicts and alcoholics. The provisions involved (which expired January 31, 1966) require that special confidentiality requirements of the Comprehensive Alcohol Abuse Act be observed with regard to addicts and alcoholics, clarify that the entire rehabilitative process must be considered in determining whether medical services provided to addicts and alcoholics can be funded as an integral part of a State social services program, and provide for funding of a 7-day detoxification period even though social services funding is generally not available to persons in institutions. The conference substitute accepts the Senate amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I oppose this legislation and urge my colleagues to reject the conference report.

In all fairness, I must state that my objections go principally to the bill itself rather than to the specific action of the conference committee. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Finance has handled the conference in a manner to which I have no objection. As our chairman has explained, the conference committee accepted most of the provisions of the Senate bill. The duration of these provisions was limited, however, to accommodate the objections of the House Budget Committee.

Thus, from the Senate's standpoint this was a "successful" conference. Nevertheless, this is still ill-advised legislation and I urge its rejection. As the Senate is aware, this legislation continues for a brief period the suspension of the day care staffing ratios imposed under title XX of the Social Security Act. Once this brief suspension expires on July 1, 1976, the staffing ratios will go into effect. This bill also provides that States will receive additional title XX funds to comply with these requirements.

The fallacy of this bill is that it continues the assumption that Congress has such a monopoly on wisdom and sensitivity that only we can be trusted to decide how many children can be adequately cared for by one adult in a day care center. I cannot accept this notion as a matter of principle.

Moreover, in this particular case, we must candidly admit that the standards we now impose and fund are ones which may not even be appropriate. The standards continue to be controversial even among day care professionals and the administration is even now engaged in a study that we directed to determine what standards are appropriate. Even if a case for mandatory Federal staffing ratios could be made, it has not been made yet.

Given these facts, I cannot accept the argument that we should let the standards go into effect and then provide additional money to enable States to comply with these standards. At the very least, I would like to obtain the facts first. As our colleague, Senator PACKWOOD, noted earlier when we debated this bill, when we make a mistake, it is imposed nationwide. In my view, we are continuing a serious mistake here and seeking to bury it in an avalanche of Federal dollars.

Thus, while I commend our chairman for our "successful" conference, I must oppose this bill. We should reject this conference report and then pass legislation simply postponing these staffing ratios. This will give us time both to ascertain the facts and to consider other alternatives such as the President's social services block grant proposal.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Under Secretary Marjorie Lynch of HEW.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

MARCH 15, 1976.

Hon. HUGH SCOTT,
Minority Leader, U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SCOTT: This letter is to express to you the Department's strong opposition to the conference report on H.R. 9803 and to ask you to bring our concerns over the report to the attention of other Members of the Senate.

The conference report would authorize an additional $125 million over and above the $2.5 billion ceiling on funding under title XX of the Social Security Act to assist States in meeting the costs of full enforcement of the Federal interagency day care requirements (FIDCR) as modified under title XX. Favorable congressional action on this new entitlement—to be available to the States for the balance of the current fiscal year and for the July 1–September 30, 1976 transition quarter—would effectively commit the Congress to perpetuation of the controversial FIDCR staffing standards and later authorization of $250 million annually in order to help States meet the costs of their full implementation.

As you know, the President has recommended, as part of his social services block grant proposal introduced as S. 3061 and H.R. 12175, that FIDCR, and particularly the costly and controversial staffing standards, be deleted from Federal law. Under the President's proposal, each State would be required to have in effect its own appropriate mandatory standards, including requirements relating to safety, sanitation, and protection of civil rights, for day care services provided under title XX. We strongly believe that the formulation of staff-to-children ratios and related standards for day care services is most appropriately left to State discretion just as the formulation of teacher-pupil ratios and related standards is left to the States under Federal education assistance programs.

Also, enactment of the conference report would violate the spirit and intent of both title XX as it exists and the President's block grant proposal by earmarking a specific amount of title XX services funds for a specific purpose. The States fought long and hard in the years preceding enactment of title XX to win the flexibility to make their own decisions on the best uses of Federal services funding.

Thus, should the Congress act favorably on the conference report, it would signal a retreat from the historic steps toward a more productive Federal-State partnership taken in title XX just a year ago.

Moreover, the conference report contains a substantial technical defect. We are advised that section 3(d)(2) of the report is intended to integrate the report's provision for 100 percent Federal payment of "Federal welfare recipient employment incentive expenses (i.e., the salaries of welfare recipients employed to provide child day care services in child day care facilities) with the report's provision to establish an 80 percent Federal share for other child day care services under title XX. Because this intent is so imperfectly rendered by the section, the report instead appears to limit the "total amount of the Federal payments which may be paid to any State" for fiscal year 1976 and the transition quarter to a small fraction of the amount that would be paid under current law.

In lieu of the conference report, we urge that the Congress extended to October 1, 1976, the moratorium on imposition of the child day care staffing standards enacted by Public Law 94–120 last October. This will give the Congress time to pass the President's title XX block grant proposal.

We are advised by the Office of Management and Budget that enactment of H.R. 9803 would not be consistent with the Administration's objectives.

Sincerely,

MARJORIE LYNCH,
Under Secretary.

Mr. CURTIS. Frankly, Mr. President, the objection to this legislation is that the States should be allowed to decide how many children an adult in charge of a day care center can look after. The idea

The second assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BIDEN), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Washington (Mr. JACKSON) and the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. LEAHY) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Washington (Mr. JACKSON) would vote "yea."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK) and Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY) would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 59, nays 30, as follows:

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1976

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3065) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for its administration by a Federal Election Commission appointed in accordance with the requirements of the Constitution, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion by the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER) to table the Allen amendment, division No. 1.

The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

So the motion to lay on the table Division 1 of Mr. ALLEN's amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BUCKLEY). The question recurs on division 2 of the Allen amendment.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I have an amendment to division 2 of the Allen amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. ABOUREZK) proposes an amendment:

On page 50, line 14, strike "616" and insert the following: Section 616 is amended to read as follows:

"§ 616. Acceptance of outside income.

"No elected or appointed officer or employee of any branch of the Federal Government may receive any salary, wage, or other income of any nature in excess of $15,000.00 per annum, other than Federal Government compensation established by law while serving as such an officer or employee. Violation of this section is punishable by a fine of $5,000.00.".

Mr. ABOUREZK addressed the Chair.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. ABOUREZK. I yield.

Mr. PACKWOOD. As I understood, the amendment just offered is identical to the amendment upon which we just voted. It was a decisive vote. I plan to move to table this amendment. I do not want to cut anyone off, and I will withhold the motion for a moment.

I will make the motion to table. As I understand it, the amendment is identical to the amendment upon which we just voted.

Mr. ABOUREZK. As I understand, the Allen amendment had to be divided into two parts, and I offered my amendment to the second part similarly to the way I offered my amendment on the first part. If the Senator is going to move to table, the only reason this is being done is because of procedural limitations. It is the same thing as we had before.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I do not plan to ask for the yeas and nays unless some other Senator wants them.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I do not need a rollcall vote.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I do not want to cut anybody off, but if there is no discussion, I would move to table the amendment. I understand the motion to table would carry with it both division 2 of the Allen amendment and the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota to division 2 of the Allen amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to table the Allen amendment would carry with it the Abourezk amendment.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I so move to table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is to lay on the table.

The motion to lay on the table division 2 of the Allen amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, is it in order to move to reconsider the previous vote by which the motion to lay on the table division 1 of the Allen amendment was agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I move to reconsider that vote.

Mr. CANNON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 15, line 16, after the word "expenditures", insert the following language: "in excess of $1,000".

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, unless this amendment is adopted, the following would occur under the bill as it is now before us:

If a local chamber of commerce invited a candidate for Congress to speak on behalf of his candidacy at its regular meeting, the chamber of commerce—local, State, or whatever—would have to attribute a portion of the cost of the meeting, rental of the hall, and the cost of the meal based on the number of minutes the candidate spoke, and then fill out a Federal form and file that in Washington.

If a local union business agent, going from job site to job site to settle grievances, took several minutes at each job site to urge union members to vote for a candidate, he would have to keep track of the actual number of minutes spent, figure the total cost of his time and transportation, and come up with a cost per minute figure, all of which he would have to report in writing with the Federal Elections Commission.

If the president of a small business, at a meeting of his management officers, urged them to work for the defeat of an antibusiness candidate, he would have to keep a record of his time and costs, and report the whole affair to the Federal Government.

The amendment I have offered would place a $1,000 threshold on this reporting requirement. It would remedy this intrusion into the normal activities of organizations and the enormous volume of paperwork involved, by assuring that the reporting requirement is confined to significant activities whose fundamental purpose is to influence the election of a candidate.

We have set up a Federal Commission on Paperwork to do away with needless paperwork, but if we do not watch carefully what we are doing here, we are going to create the most amazing proliferation of paperwork that one could imagine.

The language now in the bill has no threshold above which reports must be filed about efforts that may relate in only a very minor way or an insignificant way to an election. Every requirement in the bill except the particular requirement my amendment addresses itself to has a threshold. Without a reasonable threshold, every minute of an employee's time, every minute spent at a stockholders' meeting, every speech before a Rotary Club advocating the election or defeat of a candidate would have to be translated into dollars and cents and reported to the Federal Government. Every sentence in a letter from a union agent to union members, every line in an industry trade publication, every word in a political club's monthly newsletter which urged the election of a candidate would necessitate the filling out of a Federal form to be filed in Washington.

I think these consequences are intolerable, for three simple reasons:

First. This reporting requirement is a totally unnecessary intrusion of the Federal Government into the routine political activities of individuals and organizations.

Second. The amount of paperwork required to make these reports would be staggering and would particularly discourage the activities of volunteer political clubs and organizations, which are usually the only way the average citizen can be active in politics. I think that this time, when there is so much cynicism and despair about politics, is the very worst time to do anything more to discourage individuals from working together in political activities.

Third. The average small business, individual union local, or voluntary membership organization would find it technically very difficult and very troublesome to allocate costs so as to come up with an accurate dollars and cents figure for relatively insignificant communications and activities.

So I propose this amendment, in summary, to put a $1,000 threshold on the reporting requirement of the amendment offered to this bill by the Senator from Oregon (Mr. PACKWOOD). This would enable us to distinguish between significant political efforts by an organization and the routine expression by an organization of its political opinions.

We have a responsibility, I think, in all cases, to temper any Federal reporting requirements which could serve to harass or intimidate reasonable and legal private activities by individuals and groups, whether in political activities or any other type of activities. Particularly in the area of political expression, we want to be very sure we do not intimidate or discourage people from getting organized or involved in politics. This amendment is aimed at protecting the little company, the union local, the membership group, or whatever it may be. I think this amendment is important because there would be reporting of activities by such groups, and I urge the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CRANSTON. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. I would like to have the Senator respond to some questions for clarification in my own mind.

Do I correctly understand that the pending legislation requires that a businessman or a union member keep track of time spent supporting a candidate, or is that a regulation of the Federal Election Commission?

Mr. CRANSTON. Let me read to the Senator from line 11, page 15 of the pending bill, which will stand if the bill is passed without my amendment or some similar language:

A corporation, labor organization, or other membership organization which explicitly advocates the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate through a communication with its stockholders or members or their families shall, notwithstanding the provisions of section 301(f)(4)(C), report such expenditures under paragraph (1) to the extent that they are directly attributable to such communications.

That means that someone working on union time or business time, putting out a communication to stockholders, a communication to members of a labor union, communications to members of any organization, business, labor, or private, would be required to count whatever time or money was spent. If they put out a mailing, a newspaper to union members, or a bulletin to stockholders—and this would include verbal communications—advocating the election of a candidate, they would have to figure out that cost and report it.

Mr. NELSON. This applies to corporations and businesses of all kinds?

Mr. CRANSTON. It applies to a corporation, labor organization, or other membership organization. That could be the members of Sierra Club or other organization?

Mr. NELSON. Does it apply to all of the members of Sierra Club or other organization?

Mr. CRANSTON. It would apply to a communication made to the members, so that if a member speaks as an individual to the group advocating a candidate or if the organization sends out a mailing to its members, that would count. Certainly if an official, particularly a party official, communicates in any way in behalf of a candidate, that would count.

Mr. NELSON. So the Senator is saying that his interpretation of this provision in the bill is that a member of the Sierra Club or any other association who went out on his own time, in the evening, to speak in behalf of a specific candidate, would have to do this?

Mr. CRANSTON. I think it is unclear as to an individual member working on his own time. But any official of the business group or the organization as well as anyone paid by a union, the chamber of commerce, and so forth, who spoke or who says in an official publication representing the organization, a publication which may consist of 99 percent of something else, but in 1 point "Reelect Senator NELSON," that would count.

Mr. NELSON. Then is it the Senator's interpretation that it has to be a paid employee or owner?

Mr. CRANSTON. It is not clear. I suspect that might be the way that it would be interpreted, but the language is not clear in the bill as written.

Mr. NELSON. Simply for my own information and clarification I shall ask: If there is a small business which is incorporated, with two owners, who are husband and wife, and they run a little business operation of some kind, are they covered by that?

Mr. CRANSTON. Yes; if it is a publication of a corporation or small business, a communication to their members or stockholders.

Mr. NELSON. I understood the Senator to say if they spoke in behalf of the candidate.

Mr. CRANSTON. If an official speaks, or if a labor union member speaks on union time.

Mr. NELSON. No; I start out with a case of a small corporation, say a little business incorporated with two or three owners.

Mr. CRANSTON. All right.

Mr. NELSON. They do not have any publication, but the owners decide to take time off, go out and peddle literature, go to meetings, and speak in behalf of the candidate. Are they required to report that as a contribution?

Mr. CRANSTON. To members of his group, yes; to the general public, no. Let me add this point. Even a volunteer, after he came to a meeting and spoke, would have to figure out the cost of the meeting, the hall, food served, and so forth, and allocate that. If 5 minutes were taken by someone who was allowed a platform to advocate some candidate, then the cost of 5 minutes' worth of that meeting becomes an attributable, reportable cost.

Mr. NELSON. So if the League of Women Voters has a meeting, and they invite candidates, as is their practice, to invite candidates to come and respond to questions expressing their views——

Mr. CRANSTON. They have provided a platform for the advocacy of the election of a particular candidate. The cost of that meeting to that extent would have to be allocated under this bill as written.

Mr. NELSON. In the course of the activities of the league, they are not endorsing, but it is the practice to invite candidates for Congress, from both parties, candidates for State legislatures, from both parties, mayors, city councilmen, aldermen. Now they have a league meeting, and all of these candidates come. Does the league then have to report that they provided the facilities, and so forth, for a candidate to speak in his own behalf or someone else in his behalf?

Mr. CRANSTON. The interpretation of the counsel of the Committee on Rules and Administration of this language, as written, is yes, that would have to be reported. It is similar to providing a billboard so a candidate's name can be blared forth. That is obviously a campaign expense. This is the same. It is a meeting provided as a platform for advocacy of an election of a particular candidate.

Mr. NELSON. It sounds like an act of insanity on our part to include such a provision in legislation. What are we trying to do?

Mr. CRANSTON. I do not think that it was intended to be that broad, but that is as broad as it appears to be. That is why I am offering an amendment in a moment of sanity on my part.

Mr. NELSON. Let me pursue this a little further. So the league is going to have to report, and if the amendment of the Senator from California is adopted, then, in this particular case, the league would have to keep track of all time. At such stage as they shall have computed the cost for the contribution to reach $1,000, then they have to report even under the Senator's amendment. Is that correct?

Mr. CRANSTON. No; under my amendment if there was one meeting or one communication that could be interpreted as having a value of $1,000 that would have to be reported. But there would not be an accumulative aggregate building up.

Mr. NELSON. How is the value of the meeting determined?

Mr. CRANSTON. They have to compute the cost. Any rent for the hall, any cost of the utilities that had to be paid, any expense for food and alcoholic beverages served.

Mr. NELSON. Then if a member, let us say an employee of the union, a union officer, goes to a meeting of another union, or goes to a meeting forum of any kind——

Mr. CRANSTON. A meeting of his union. Forget about another union, because that apparently would not count. But a meeting of his union members on his union time, that would be reportable.

Mr. NELSON. So if the president, secretary-treasurer, business agent, or anyone who is employed by the union, makes a speech at a union meeting, saying, "I, president of this union, believe that we ought to elect so and so," that is chargeable?

Mr. CRANSTON. Right.

Mr. NELSON. How do we compute the cost there? Do we have to take the value of the hall?

Mr. CRANSTON. We have to find out the value of the hall any utility bills they have to pay, the lighting for the particular moment he is speaking, his salary, and how much time out of his 8-hour or 12-hour day he took for this particular purpose. If he gave a 30-minute speech for one candidate, then that much is charged. If he mentioned his name and took a couple minutes, he still would have to calculate the value of that.

Mr. NELSON. That is something.

Then, if he gives a half-hour speech, he has to compute what his hourly rate of pay would be if he translated his salary into an hourly rate; is that what the Senator is saying?

Mr. CRANSTON. Right.

Mr. NELSON. This union official in this case goes to a meeting at night. There is a rally, say, called in the labor temple. A thousand people come. They are having the candidate there, and the union official is there. It is in the union hall, and the union official gives a speech. Even though it is in the evening and everyone comes on his own time, he has to compute that as a contribution?

Mr. CRANSTON. I would assume that it would be considered part of his official work. He might have his travel expenses paid, and he might be paid for whatever he spent on parking and for his meals, and so forth. The union, presumably, would pay something for the use of that hall. Therefore, all of that would have to be computed and reported.

Mr. NELSON. Then, when a corporate president, such as Mr. Geneen, whose salary the last time I knew it was $750,000 a year, gives a brief speech to his executives, he would have to compute out the 8 hours a day and divide it into this $750,000 and compute his computation that way; is that right?

Mr. CRANSTON. Yes; if that were a $250,000 board room or some meeting in the Bahamas or some convention in Bermuda, he would have to calculate all the costs of the very expensive board room, or the cost of the trip to Bermuda, or wherever the pitch was made, for a candidate.

Mr. NELSON. This does not apply to lawyers, I take it, who represent corporations or represent unions, or does it? Suppose a lawyer has a retainer from General Motors and another one has a retainer for the AFL–CIO, as a lawyer, but he goes out and does some campaigning. Is he covered?

Mr. CRANSTON. That is not clear. If a lawyer made a communication to a 40-member law firm saying, "I think we all ought to support so and so," that would count.

Mr. NELSON. Even though the law firm is not incorporated?

Mr. CRANSTON. It would not matter whether it was incorporated or not.

Mr. NELSON. So if one of the members of the law firm had a strong conviction about a candidate and decided to send a letter to members of the law firm, the secretaries, manager of the office, and so forth, writing it on his own time and saying this, "I think you ought to vote for so and so and here is the reason," that counts?

Mr. CRANSTON. He would have to tell Uncle Sam how much all of that cost in writing, filing it here in Washington.

Mr. NELSON. Then under the amendment that the Senator from California has offered, the provisions of this section would not be triggered, so to speak, until such time as this individual or this organization had made a contribution equivalent to $1,000 or more?

Mr. CRANSTON. An expenditure, an effort, or an endorsement that costs $1,000.

I should like to add that anybody who did not manage to comply with this law as it is now written would be subject to a $5,000 fine, even if they did not report some very penny-ante expenditure which was covered under this law.

Mr. NELSON. Nevertheless, even under the amendment of the Senator from California, all these thousands and thousands and thousands of people in the country will have to start keeping a personal written record, so that they will know when they get to a thousand dollars.

Mr. CRANSTON. Most people do not spend a thousand dollars on a particular event. Most groups do not. But if they do, they will be pretty conscious of it, I think.

If I spent $30 today, $40 tomorrow, and $50 the day following, I would not have to add all that up. Under my amendment, it would have to be an action, a meeting, a communication that cost at least $1,000 before it would have to be reported.

Mr. NELSON. I am curious. Why does the Senator not offer an amendment to knock out the entire section? It strikes me as a preposterous, bureaucratic interference with the activities of people. It is totally unmanageable. I think we should have the paperwork commission that is now studying Federal paperwork study this matter and give us a report before we put such stuff in the statutes, with criminal penalties.

Mr. CRANSTON. I say to my colleague that this section was originally offered as an amendment by the Senator from Oregon. I voted against the amendment, but it prevailed by a fairly reasonable margin, not overwhelming. It is, therefore, the will of the Senate. I do not think the Senate understands exactly the consequences of this section. We analyzed it and found that these were the real implications. Maybe the Senate would reverse itself. But since the Senate adopted it, I offered an amendment which I thought was a reasonable compromise with the will of the Senate as expressed in the vote the other day.

Mr. NELSON. I must say that the matter puzzles me. I may have some more questions, but I will be happy to step aside momentarily, while the Senator from Louisiana makes whatever inquiries or observations he desires.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I have one question, if the Senator will yield.

Mr. CRANSTON. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The section sought to be amended speaks of a communication, and therefore the thousand-dollar limit would define or limit the cost of a communication. The Senator means, I take it, to make the duty to report a cumulative duty; so that if an organization or a corporation sent a series of mailings of which the individual cost was less than a thousand dollars but the cumulative cost was more than a thousand dollars, there would be a duty to report.

Mr. CRANSTON. The answer is "No." We felt that for the reasons developed pretty well by the Senator from Wisconsin in his questions, it would be an intolerable burden to keep track of a number of actions that would be very minor, communications that might be very insignificant in size and in cost, but which eventually could add up to a thousand dollars over the course of a year-long political campaign. Those of us who drafted the amendment I have offered felt that we should just limit it to a single action which cost $1,000 and have that as the threshold.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Suppose someone puts out a mailing on Monday to the A's which cost $999, and did that for 26 days in a row, at a total cost of $25,000——

Mr. CRANSTON. Very plainly, that would be a deliberate evasion of the law, and that would count as one communication.

Mr. JOHNSTON. By what test does the Senator determine one communication or a series?

Mr. CRANSTON. I should think that it would be the test of reason. If you start with the letter "A" and mail the letter "B" the next day, that might be because you do not have the capacity to mail the entire alphabet in 1 day.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I could not hear the Senator.

Mr. CRANSTON. The Senator from Louisiana was asking about somebody trying to get around this by just mailing the letter "A" one day, costing $900, and the letter "B" the next day, costing $800, as to whether that would have to be reported. I say that it would have to be reported. That obviously would be a single communication, even though it were done on different days.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Suppose it is the letter "A" today and a telephone solicitation tomorrow?

Mr. CRANSTON. I am not certain. Perhaps the Senator from Wisconsin has a wiser idea: We should eliminate the entire section and not be faced with such knotty questions.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Do I correctly understand the Senator's initial presentation to be—in looking at his sheet, I see reference to the chamber of commerce—that he contends we are imposing this intolerable burden of reporting on little organizations that communicate with their members and that that is unfair? Is that the thrust of the Senator's amendment?

Mr. CRANSTON. Will the Senator repeat the question?

Mr. PACKWOOD. As I read the Senator's examples—the chamber of commerce, the local union, the president of a small business—we are imposing upon them an intalerable recordkeeping burden, to see that they do not make communications that are valued at more than a hundred dollars.

Mr. CRANSTON. Yes, I think that is an intolerable recordkeeping burden.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I am curious. Is it not true that under the present law, the law that was in effect before 1974, every organization that communicated with its members specifically advocating the election or defeat of a candidate had to report it as a contribution, with the exception of corporations and unions, which were exempt by the law? That has been the law, that is the law, and we have made no change, and this has existed in the past.

Mr. CRANSTON. Perhaps we have to look at that, too. I am concerned with this particular provision in this amendment, which plainly—on page 15, line 11, section 2—does what I stated it does.

Mr. PACKWOOD. The present law is that any organization that communicates with its members, advocating the specific election or defeat of a candidate, must report that as a contribution now—and that has been the law for years, with the exception of unions and corporations communicating with their members or with their shareholders. We then added this amendment last week, the so-called Packwood amendment, imposing upon unions and corporations the same thing we have imposed upon every other organization in this country for years.

Mr. CRANSTON. May I say that I believe the Senator is wrong. The present law does not include—this is section (c)—any communication by any membership, organization, or corporation to its members or stockholders, if such membership, organization, or corporation is not organized primarily for the purpose of influencing the nomination or election of any person to office.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Read the section about contributions—specifically, paragraph (f).

Mr. CRANSTON. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Specifically, paragraph (f), the definition of "contribution."

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BUMPERS. Do I correctly understand that the Cranston amendment is a perfecting amendment to the Cannon substitute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. BUMPERS. Would a substitute to the perfecting amendment of the Senator from California be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the second degree, the amendment would be in order.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I send such substitute to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arkansas (Mr. BUMPERS) proposes an amendment in the nature of a substitute to the Cranston amendment:

Substitute for the language of the Cranston amendment the following:

On page 15, line 18 of Amendment 1516, strike the period and add the following: "Provided, however, That such expenditures need not be reported with respect to any candidate unless they exceed $1,000 with respect to that candidate."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises the Senator that since the amendment adresses itself to a line other than that of the pending amendment, it would not be in order as a substitute.

Mr. BUMPERS. The Senator understands. I will attempt a redrafting.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield for a question?

Mr. CRANSTON. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Suppose someone had a phone bank situation in which, for a period of 30 days, let us say, he hired a building, rented telephones, paid employees on a weekly basis, and had utility expenses and other incidental expenses—coffee, all those things that go with the operation of a phone bank. All of these bills would come in separately, the payroll checks would be paid separately. Would we aggregate those expenses and treat them as a one-time expense for the purpose of the $1,000 limitation? Would it be on a daily basis? Would we characterize the expenditures? Just how would we handle that?

Mr. CRANSTON. I am not certain. That is one of the problems. I think we would just have to make a reasonable effort to calculate what were the costs involved in the particular action at the particular time it was taken.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I am inclined to agree with the Senator from Wisconsin that, rather than making this more simple, I think it might create an even greater burden. Maybe we ought to just do away with the whole provision—either that or get one we can interpret and not get into trouble every time we try to make a decision as to what it is all about.

Mr. CRANSTON. If the Senator wishes to offer an amendment to that effect,

I shall certainly not be unhappy with the Senator. I explained why I offered my approach, because the Senate did vote for this section the other day. I think it is increasingly clear that the Senate did not understand all the implications. Certainly, I did not at the time even though I voted against it. I did not realize it was quite as bad as I now find it to be.

Mr. DURKIN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CRANSTON. Yes.

Mr. DURKIN. With the Senator's amendment, he relieves anyone of the reporting requirements?

Mr. CRANSTON. Up to $1,000.

Mr. DURKIN. Up to $1,000?

Mr. CRANSTON. Yes.

Mr. DURKIN. It seems to me, and this is a question, does that not still impose on each and every group the requirement to keep records and to set up some sort of compliance system so that they can establish the facts, if accused by the FEC in a criminal proceeding of exceeding $1,000?

Mr. CRANSTON. I should think most small groups—a local union, a small chamber of commerce, a small business—would seldom engage in a single activity that would be likely to cost $1,000. Therefore, I should not think they would have to be keeping such records. But any fairly large organization whose efforts reach any substantial number of people and whose expenditures might be in the proximity of $1,000 would have to keep records to make sure they are not in violation of the law.

Mr. DURKIN. Again, I think I agree with the thrust of the amendment, but I still think it falls short to where we are imposing a nightmare situation on an awful lot of small groups who want to express their rights and their feelings under the first amendment.

Mr. CRANSTON. Three Senators have now suggested that I do not totally cure the problem. If one of those Senators wishes to offer an amendment to strike the whole section that I am seeking to amend, that might be an appropriate procedure.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, back to the point I made again, for the purpose of the definition of a contribution to a political campaign, I am quoting from section 431(d) "political committee," and then (e) "contribution means." Those are the definitions of contribution. "Contribution means a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value made for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election or elections"—then it goes on. "Anything of value." That means that if the Red Cross or the Boy Scouts send out to their membership organization a statement that says, "Vote for Packwood," or "Vote for Culver," under the present law—and the law was in effect before 1974—that is a contribution and that must be reported. Except, under the present law, subsection (F) says "any payment made or obligation incurred by a corporation or a labor organization in communicating with their members or shareholders."

We have lived with this law for years. It has not caused intolerable burdens on little organizations. We have not seen the Boy Scouts or the Red Cross prosecuted yet under the existing law. I ask the Senator from California, if there has been no intolerable burden in the past in terms of what a contribution is, why is this Packwood amendment, offered last week to apply the same standard to unions and businesses, suddenly causing an intolerable burden on these organizations that have never felt burdened before?

Mr. CRANSTON. Do they have to report that now?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Under the present law, that is correct.

Mr. CRANSTON. The Senator did not read the whole paragraph. I am looking at the same paragraph, which reads:

(F) Any payment made or obligation incurred by a corporation or a labor organization which, under the provisions of the last paragraph of section 601 of title 18, United States Code, would not constitute an expenditure by such corporation or labor organization;

I repeat, "would not constitute an expenditure."

Mr. PACKWOOD. All that section does is exempt labor organizations and corporations from the other limitations in the definition of section (e) "contribution."

Mr. CRANSTON. If it is the Senator's judgment that they have to report under present law, why is his amendment required?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Because my amendment applies to corporations or unions, that are exempt from the present law when they communicate with their members. I am simply trying to apply the same law to them that has applied to every other organization from time immemorial.

Mr. CRANSTON. Presently, a political club that makes an endorsement to its members does not have to report to the Federal Government.

Mr. PACKWOOD. It is a contribution. It has to be reported.

Mr. CRANSTON. It is not a contribution. Where is the definition in the present law that makes that a contribution?

Mr. PACKWOOD. All right. Is the Senator looking at a yellow book?

Mr. CRANSTON. Yes.

Mr. PACKWOOD. On page 10, start at the top "(e) contribtuion" means, and it lists what contributions are. Now, if a political club makes a $1,000 contribution to a Packwood for Re-Election Committee, that is certainly a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value and that is certainly a contribution within the present law.

Mr. CRANSTON. Where is a communication by a political organization to its members covered by page 10 language?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Under (A). It is a contribution in kind, something of value.

Mr. BUMPERS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For what purpose does the Senator rise?

Mr. BUMPERS. I am trying to help both the Senators on the floor now by offering another substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon has the floor.

Mr. BUMPERS. Will the Senator yield for the purpose of my offering a substitute?

Mr. PACKWOOD. I shall yield for the purpose of hearing what it is. I am not sure I shall yield for the purpose of the Senator's offering it. If he will tell me first what it is, maybe then I shall yield.

Mr. BUMPERS. This would be a substitute to the Cranston perfecting amendment which would, after the words "in excess of $1,000," add the following: "In the aggregate, during the calendar year, with respect to a particular candidate." That would not eliminate all of the problems in this. I am not sure it would make this even palatable to me, but I will say that it eliminates what I perceive to be loopholes wide enough to drive a wagon and team through. This would at least limit the amount of support any of these organizations could give a candidate in a year to $1,000; that is, without reporting.

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator yield for a very brief observation?

Mr. BUMPERS. I still do not have the floor.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I shall yield in a minute. Let me respond to the Senator from Arkansas first.

I frankly prefer his amendment to that of the Senator from California, because at least it is talking about an aggregate amount for a year. I want to make sure that it does not read "per candidate per year" so that an organization—let us take New York with 38 Congressmen. A corporation or a union could say, $1,000 a year per candidate; that is $38,000; we do not have to report it. And off they go with $38,000 for a year.

I want to come back to the definition of "contribution" as "gift, subscription, loan advance, or deposit, of money or anything of value" and make the point that this is all presently in the law. It is being imposed on all kinds of organizations except unions and businesses today. They have lived with it, they have survived. The country has not collapsed; music is still written, symphonies are still played.

I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Florida wanted to comment about all these amendments and about the bill in general from the point of view of the experience of the Senator from Florida as chief election officer of our State for some 3½ years prior to service here. The Senator from Florida is disturbed that this body may be seeking to require the kinds of disclosures that are almost impossible accurately, fully, and appropriately to require be disclosed. If we go too far in requiring the kinds of disclosures of intangible in kind support, we are going to end up getting a total avoidance and ignoring of the law and its requirements. It will be a bootleg situation. It will be just like prohibition, as well as making it almost an offense—ethical, moral, and legal—to support anyone who wants to run for office.

I think we really have to take a hard look and aim toward a "who-gave-it" and "who-got-it" approach of the tangibles, of the measurables, of the things that traditionally are reported and need to be reported because if we go very much farther in terms of Sam comes up to Joe and say, "I would like you to support our friend Bill," and then he has to file a report we are just going to wreck the entire election reform trends in the country. That is what disturbs me about all of these provisions.

Mr. PACKWOOD. There are a number of things that the Senator and I know about. In the Oregon Legislature I served on the election committee for 6 years, and I know the problems the Senator is talking about. If you drive your friend running for the State legislature around the State in your own car, is that a contribution?

Mr. STONE. That is right. If you stop at a parking meter, do you have to stuff a voucher in the meter? You can carry this thing too far.

What we need is the kind of disclosure of the money expenses, of the money contributions, of the kind of inkind contribution that would be a billboard or something measurable in a reasonable way.

When we go so far as to require reporting of just oral presentations, I think we are going to—well, you know, there used to be a device in our legislature for killing a bill. It is called sweetening it up. If you sweeten it up too much and it gets impossible to swallow, that is what worries this Senator.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I am very happy with the compromise agreement the leadership worked out, and I would be happy to take it with no amendments. But I am curious—and I frankly say to the Senator from California—as to why it is offered. This applies not only to individuals but it applies to corporations. If we are worried about the poor little individuals, they still have to report if they give $100 or more, and if they give it to two or three candidates in terms of time we have to evaluate it. We do not seem to worry about the little, tiny contributor in this amendment. What we worry about are the organizations and, specifically, the unions and the business organizations which will now be required to allocate up to $1,000.

If they do not allocate that much, they do not have to report it when, in years past, we required all other membership organizations to report contributions of up to $100. I frankly think the amendment is being offered to make a gigantic loophole in the amendment the Senate accepted last week, and what is it worth for a union business agent as he goes around his normal duties to also at the same time pass out perhaps a bit of literature; what is it worth to have a corporate vice president who, in the course of his vice presidency visiting around the State, is doing a little politicking on the side.

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator answer how it is worded so as to be able to allocate the time and prorate it in his report, the same thing as a business executive going around?

Mr. PACKWOOD. I can tell the Senator what the Federal Election Commission did in a ruling that was filed January 19. Thirty legislative days have passed, and it is now in effect, and here is what it says:

> General Rule. Expenditures made on behalf of more than one candidate shall be attributed to each candidate in proportion to the benefit each can be reasonably expected to receive.

The Senator asked about the Federal Election Commission. This ruling was set before the Senate on January 19 and none of us has done anything about it.

Mr. STONE. The Senator does not want to ask the Election Commission what the value of that benefit would be and that is almost impossible to ascertain. What the Senator from Florida is looking for here is the "who-gave-it" and "who-got-it" kind of reporting that makes sense, that can be enforced, that will not impose a totally speculative burden on the ordinary citizen who happens to be a member of an organization and wants to support someone for office. We all want to support someone for office.

Mr. PACKWOOD. We all knew specifically when we voted on this amendment last week and it passed 50 to 42 what we were directing ourselves at. We were not directing ourselves at the Boy Scouts or the Red Cross, which have lived with this apparent problem for years successfully. We were aiming it at corporations who use corporate money to solicit stockholders or their corporate officers to vote for or against people, or union telephone banks, union mailings by the hundreds of thousands to their members.

Mr. STONE. The Senator would completely agree with the Senator from Oregon on that, and I think the Senator from California's proposal is directed at that kind of an operation, phone banks, massive mailings.

But what the Senator from Florida gets a little bit disturbed about is the reach of a provision that might require an estimated reporting of the value of somebody's time while he is doing something else.

Mr. PACKWOOD. And my fear also is when you get——

Mr. STONE. Why can we not tailor this provision to avoid that?

Mr. PACKWOOD. When you get to the telephone bank, and it is set up and frankly, I have had some experience—when I was Republican chairman in Oregon in Multnomah County I had been involved in some union telephone banks when they were supporting some of the Republican candidates, and I sat in the basement of the Labor Temple and watched the banks work all day long, banks of telephones put in there, paid for by the union, calling up their members, and if this is not a contribution, I do not know what is.

Mr. STONE. Surely it is, but is that not worth $1,000 or more?

Mr. PACKWOOD. It depends. What I am curious about, because up until this time it has been exempt, it does not have to be reported at all, but I am a little worried about the answer of the Senator from California when, in response to the Senator from Louisiana "What about a mailing done on Monday, you can figure its value worth $900; and another mailing on Tuesday worth $900," he answered that is one communication.

Well, I can find a great number of ways to get under this $1,000, and I can find all kinds of subcommittees to set up at $900 a day and call it a continual communication and subvert the intention of this amendment.

Mr. STONE. No question that there are ways to round and "loophole in" any provision, and I think if the Senator from California seriously presses his amendment—which, I think he is doing—he should make it clear that the $1,000 he refers to is cumulative as opposed to—cumulative for any candidate as opposed to—a ceiling on any one communication. Obviously that would be a loophole big enough to drive a number of elephants through.

Mr. PACKWOOD. What the Senator is saying is that this amendment should indicate the $1,000 is cumulative for any Federal election that year not per candidate per year.

Mr. STONE. Well, I am not writing his amendment, but certainly——

Mr. PACKWOOD. No, but the Senator——

Mr. STONE. But what I think we should be doing, what the Senator from Florida thinks we should be doing, is requiring disclosure that is disclosable, that is readily disclosable, that is enforceable, that is reasonable, but we should not be so loading this bill down, and certainly not by floor amendments or by hastily drawn unreviewed provisions with the kind of required disclosure that it is impossible to do or very unlikely to do, and that all we would thereby accomplish would be to create the likelihood of abuse by the enforcement of it.

Mr. PACKWOOD. What I am intrigued with is why this amendment is offered. I come back to the original point I made which is how we have been able to live with this law for years.

Mr. STONE. Probably by not observing it.

Mr. PACKWOOD. No, probably by virtue of the fact that all of these organizations found a way to observe it, and we exempted unions and business so they do not have to observe it. Now we are saying we are going to make them observe the same law that the Boy Scouts have to observe, and you would think we were bringing the skies down.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator know of any endorsement of political candidates by the Boy Scouts?

Mr. PACKWOOD. No, nor by the Red Cross or most other such associations.

Mr. STONE. That is why such associations were able to live with it. They did not have to do anything about it.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Here is an example that the Senator from California uses. The local chamber of commerce invites a candidate for Congress to speak on behalf of his candidacy. Well, the amendment that I had offered specifically says this: "Except that expenditures for any such communication which expressly advocates the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate must be reported."

The chamber of commerce at its annual, monthly, or weekly meeting——

Mr. STONE. It is not advocating the election or defeat of that candidate.

Mr. PACKWOOD. It is not advocating the eleotion or defeat of a candidate, and yet this is the example of things he uses to be reported.

If the local union business agent going from job site to job site settling grievances talks to several members about candidates both of those within the Federal Election Commission opinion are de minimis and they would not be reported now.

I just do not understand what the overwhelming concern is of the Senator from California at this late moment.

Mr. STONE. What the Senator from Florida is concerned about are exactly those two words that the Senator from Oregon has just referred to, de minimis. Let us monitor what we are putting into this compromise bill to make sure that you do not load it down with de minimis reporting and, thereby, ruin the whole thing, and set up a wave or a backlash of protest that will have us coming in here after this election, this current election, and repealing all the disclosure requirements that have been built into the reform legislation now on the books.

That is the only concern of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. I disagree with the approach of the Senator from California and the Senator from Florida.

The amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Oregon is understandable, it is reasonable, it is specific.

If a labor organization or a corporation directly and overtly spends money to promote the candidacy of a candidate, they have got to report it, is that not all that is involved?

Mr. PACKWOOD. All that is involved.

Forget the other small organizations for a moment. All we are imposing, when it is not a straight-out cash contribution, is to have the same kind of allocation we impose on individual citizens in Poughkeepsie, Tulsa, and anywhere else. If they give $100, they have to do it. But we are told it is an insurmountable burden for a corporation or union to figure out.

Mr. CURTIS. I hope no one will be misled by that sort of smoke screen.

The individual who is against disclosure has a right to his position and would be more forthright to oppose this on the ground that one does not want disclosure than it is on the ground that it is going to harm some innocent organizations that are not in the business of promoting a candidate.

I think the Senator is to be commended.

The Supreme Court in the Buckley case made a great deal of the fact of the virtue of disclosure, that there should be complete disclosure, and that that was the only way one could bring about complete and accurate reporting.

It also made mention of the principle that through disclosure the problems would solve themselves because the general public would insist upon proper actions.

I believe that the efforts of the Senator from California and those who support him are very detrimental because they are tearing down the requirement of reporting what one spends in a direct effort to elect or defeat a candidate.

I support the Senator's amendment. I commend him for it.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Trying to enlarge the loophole a bit to get more in without reporting.

Mr. CURTIS. Correct.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I do not think corporations ought to have that privilege. The Boy Scouts do not have it, and I do not think the unions should have it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULVER). Who yields time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, is the time controlled?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the time is not controlled.

Does any Senator seek recognition?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I just wish to comment on this issue.

I think the Packwood proposal as it is now is completely unreasonable in that lem. There ought to be some kind of a triggering provision to require reporting.

We have that in all of the other exemption provisions.

The Senator says that we do not provide any other exemptions. He is relating now to the communication of the corporations and the labor organizations. But let us take a look and see what we have done with triggering with respect to other matters.

Consider for example the definition of expenditure. An expenditure means a purchase, payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money, or anything of value, made for the purpose of influencing the election, and so on. But does not include—then we have the exemption provision:

(A) any news story, commentary, or editorial distributed through the facilities of any broadcasting station, newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication, unless such facilities are owned or controlled by any political party, political committee, or candidate;

(B) nonpartisan activity designed to encourage individuals to register to vote, or to vote;

(C) any communication by any membership organization or corporation to its members or stockholders, if such membership organization or corporation is not organized primarily for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office;

(D) the use of real or personal property and the cost of invitations, food, and beverages, voluntarily provided by an individual to a candidate in rendering voluntary personal services on the individual's residential premises for candidate-related activities if the cumulative value of such activities by such individual on behalf of any candidate do not exceed $500 with respect to any election;

We have a triggering figure there, of $500 in that exemption.

The next is:

(E) any unreimbursed payment for travel expenses made by an individual who, on his own behalf, volunteers his personal services to a candidate if the cumulative amount for such individual incurred with respect to such candidate does not exceed $500 with respect to any election;

We have a triggering provision there.

We have a triggering provision back in the definition of contributions itself where we exclude the value of the services provided without compensation by individuals who volunteer a portion or all of their time on behalf of a candidate or political committee.

We also have an exclusion:

(B) the use of real or personal property and the cost of invitations, food, and bevages, voluntarily provided by an individual to a candidate in rendering voluntary personal services on the individual's residential premises for candidate-related activities;

So that is excluded from the term of a contribution.

Also, the exclusion:

(C) the sale of any food or beverage by a vendor for use in a candidate's campaign at a charge less than the normal comparable charge, if such charge for use in a candidate's campaign is at least equal to the cost of such food or beverage to the vendor;

We have all kinds of exclusions, both with respect to a contribution and on expenditure—what is deemed an expenditure.

I think it is reasonable that we have—and we do have—some kind of a triggering provision.

The $500 limit was the area that was used in these other exemptions. Maybe that is a reasonable triggering figure rather than the $1,000 of the Senator from California. I do not have a strong feeling there.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CANNON. Just let me finish this to get it all at one point.

Then we have a blanket exclusion where we say:

to the extent that the cumulative value of activities by an individual on behalf of any candidate under each of clauses (B), (C), and (D) does not exceed $500 with respect to any election;

We have all those triggering provisions and every one of them is based on a floor of some sort, and those are $500.

I do not know whether it is reasonable here to say $1,000 or $500. But I certainly believe that we should not have to allocate every single item that we do, that the court has already said that corporations or unions can do in communication with their membership, to try to allocate a value to it and report that value when it is an item of a de minimis nature and an undue burden, certainly, on small organizations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Is the chairman suggesting that the limit, the threshold on individuals is $500 and that they can go up to that amount without reporting?

Mr. CANNON. No, not at all.

I was suggesting exactly what the law says here, and I think the Senator is familiar with that.

This defines the extent to which certain types of services can be contributed without being considered a contribution.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Travel, cocktail parties in one's home?

Mr. CANNON. Certain types of services that can be expended for without being considered an expenditure if they do not exceed $500.

Mr. PACKWOOD. But apart from those very limited exceptions, even under the bill it is $500 and beyond that one has to report it?

Mr. CANNON. Right.

Mr. PACKWOOD. If one goes out and spends on behalf of a number of candidates, according to the ruling I read a moment ago, filed January 19, one has to apportion that and figure out how one spent one's time.

Mr. CANNON. The contributor does not have to report it; the recipient does.

Mr. PACKWOOD. There is no way he can report it unless the contributor says he did it.

I go out, using my own time as an individual, and I do $150 worth of activities that are genuinely reportable. There is no way the recipient will know it unless I tell him.

That is the $100 threshold.

Second, the chairman makes reference to the fact that my amendment has no threshold. It has a $100 threshold. It is the same threshold we apply to everybody else. I do not know why it is any harder for a corporation to understand than it is an individual. It is probably easier for a corporation and easier for a union than an individual.

I come back again to the point I have made consistently: Every other organization with the exception of unions and corporations have had to comply with this communication to their members concept for years. That is not a new provision in the law. It has not caused hardship. They have figured out a way to live with it. I do not understand why it is going to cause such a hardship with corporations and such a hardship with unions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I move to table the amendment. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays are ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BIDEN), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Washington (Mr. JACKSON), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), and the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. LEAHY) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Washington (Mr. JACKSON), and the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) would each vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. YOUNG) are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 49, as follows:

So the motion to lay on the table was rejected.

Mr. BUMPERS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DURKIN). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the amendment proposed by Mr. CRANSTON to S. 3065.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arkansas (Mr. BUMPERS) proposes an amendment:

After "$1,000" in the matter proposed to be inserted insert the following: "per candidate per election".

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, this amendment simply provides that instead of only allowing a contribution of $1,000 on separate days or per communication as that section now reads, a communication could mean any number of things. As I stated earlier in a colloquy with the Senator from California, I felt that this left a loophole big enough to drive a wagon and team through. My amendment simply states that these organizations need not report contributions up to $1,000 as long as they are limited to $1,000 per candidate per election.

In the Cranston amendment as it now stands, if we leave it per communication, that would mean, for example, that an organization could have a small banquet some evening and, as long as the cost did not exceed $600 or $800 for a candidate, it would not be reportable. They could hold another banquet the next night for the same candidate at the same cost and that would not be reportable. I simply think there ought to be some limit.

The Senator from California has raised a question of accounting. How do these organizations account for what they spend? He wanted to avoid that, and it is a laudable thing to try to avoid. But as I understand it, if his amendment now stands, and they are not required to report anything unless the expenditure is over $1,000 on a given occasion or a particular communication, they would still be under an obligation to account for it to prove that they had not exceeded the $1,000 limitation.

This one would not impose any greater burden on them to account for what they spent or what they gave in kind, but it would limit the amount they could give to one candidate in any one election to $1,000.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BUMPERS. I am happy to yield.

Mr. FORD. When the Senator says "any one election," does that include the primary or general, or does he say the primary election would be one and the general election would be another?

Mr. BUMPERS. The latter.

Mr. FORD. The latter.

Mr. BUMPERS. It would be two separate elections.

Mr. FORD. Two separate, so it would be limited to $1,000 in the primary and then $1,000 in the general election?

Mr. BUMPERS. The Senator is correct. That would be my interpretation of it.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I shall speak very briefly against the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas. I understand his reasons for proposing it. I sympathize fully with the problem that we all face and that he is seeking to correct. It would correct one aspect of it, but it would not solve the problem that caused me to offer the amendment in the first place.

There would be a cumulative, aggregate total which some person or some organization might reach, where they crossed the $1,000 threshold and then would have to report, and, thus, keep track of every expenditure.

If a labor leader called a union member and talked for 10 minutes on one matter and for 1 minute said, "I hope you will vote for so and so in the election," that would have to be calculated as to cost. It would have to be kept track of. When all such expenditures added up to $1,000, the union would have to file a report.

The same would apply to a corporation officer, on business time, talking with members of the firm about sales or whatever. He would have to keep track of any time he spent, and the cost of it, if he mentioned a candidate.

The same would apply with respect to a corporation head communicating with stockholders. They would have to keep these terribly painstaking records, and for that reason I oppose the amendment.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CRANSTON. I yield.

Mr. BUMPERS. How would the Senator propose that SUNPAC or any labor organization, or any of the organizations we are talking about, prove that they had not spent more than $1,000?

Mr. CRANSTON. In any given venture, whether it is a mailing or a mass meeting or communication in some such fashion, if only a small number of people were involved, it would approach $1,000.

If it were a massive mailing to 100,000 stockholders of a company or 100,000 members of a union, then it might well be in the $1,000 class, and the burden would be upon that union to report; and it would be in violation of the law if it did not. An opposition candidate would have cause to ask the Federal Election Commission to see whether there had been a violation of the statute.

Mr. BUMPERS. If the candidate against whom this communication was made raised the question as to whether or not they had spent in excess of $1,000 and the Election Commission decided to investigate, how would that organization prove to the Election Commission that they were within the law?

Mr. CRANSTON. They would then have the responsibility of adding up the costs of that particular operation. Without the amendment I have offered, they would have that responsibility in every penny ante thing they did if it was worth $1,000. It would inhibit the active political participation of Americans.

Mr. BUMPERS. I think the Senator has a certain point. It is in those questionable cases where the expenditure is very close to a thousand dollars that they would be jeopardizing themselves if they did not keep an account of it.

Mr. CRANSTON. Yes, they would.

Mr. BUMPERS. The second part, the heart, of the perfecting amendment I have offered is that under the amendment of the Senator from California, they can do this as many times as they wish, as long as they do not exceed $1,000 on any one communication or at any one time. That would mean that a corporation or a labor union could send out a communication every week and expend $900 and be well within the law, and they could do that on behalf of any number of candidates. I think that goes against what we are talking about here in the form of election reform. There is no reform if we allow that kind of loophole to remain in this law.

Mr. CRANSTON. I grant that I do not like that situation at all, but I like less the situation in which a citizens' group, or a corporation, or a small business, or a union, or an advocacy group, or whatever, has to report everything they do, regardless of how penny ante, and file a report in Washington on that action.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I think that almost everyone here understands the nature of the amendment. I know that everyone is anxious to go home, and I am ready to vote on the matter. I am perfectly willing to accept a voice vote.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield? I have had trouble hearing him.

Mr. BUMPERS. I yield.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I think I support the Senator's amendment. His amendment simply says that you must aggregate, that you have to keep records of what you spend; that once you have reached $1,000 for a candidate, you have to start reporting, including the other expenditures, and whatever else you spend afterward.

That is an amendment in the right direction, and I am prepared to accept it, if it is accepted.

I have a bit more debate remaining on the substance of the Cranston amendment, as amended. I think it is a step in the right direction.

Mr. CRANSTON. It is the difficulty in allocating the cost of an operation for some totally different purpose that creates the real difficulty. If one were just doing an operation specifically to support a group of candidates or a candidate and nothing else was going on, it would be very easy to know the cost. But, when it is a little item in a newsletter or a few remarks in a phone call or a few words in a speech on another topic, that is when you get into difficulty in trying to allocate and to keep all those records.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

All those in favor, signify by saying "aye."

All those opposed, signify by saying "nay."

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BIDEN), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Washington (Mr. JACKSON), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE), and the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. LEAHY) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Washington (Mr. JACKSON) and the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE), would each vote "yea".

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. YOUNG), are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 75, nays 9, as follows:

So Mr. BUMPERS' amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIFFIN subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on vote No. 95, which was the Bumpers unprinted amendment to the Cranston amendment, I be recorded as having voted "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The foregoing rollcall vote reflects the above order.)

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senate has reached an overwhelming degree of unanimity on the issue we have been laboring on. There was a motion made to table my amendment that was rejected by a reasonable margin. There was an overwhelming vote now on the Bumpers amendment to my amendment. I suggest now since we have that degree of unanimity that we proceed to a vote and wrap up this bill.

As far as I am concerned, I do not ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California, as amended.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I do not want to ask for the yeas and nays on the Cranston amendment, as amended, either. I think the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas was an immense improvement. I still have some misgivings about making this distinction. I am going to go along with it and support the amendment, but I have some misgivings about saying to the small $100 contributor, "You are stuck, you have to keep your records, and you will allocate."

We are saying to the others, to the corporations and unions, "We will let you have a $1,000 exemption."

If the purpose of this law was disclosure, and if the purpose of this law was not to make it a burden on the small donor, why, we have simply reversed it, and we have made it a greater burden on the smaller donor than on the large corporation, and we have made the smaller donor disclose his smaller dollar contributions, and we have said to the larger corporation, "You do not have to report it."

It flies in the face of logic.

I will not say anything further on it. I think the Senate has worked its will and I will support the Cranston amendment, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, as far as I know, there is only one other amendment. If it is offered I am willing to accept it. I know there will be some talk against it, but I do not intend to ask for a rollcall vote on that, but I do ask for a rollcall vote on final passage, Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PACKWOOD. That amendment is on its way over now. I believe it is the Stevens amendment, is it not, and I can offer it on his behalf.

AMENDMENT NO. 1515

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration and that the clerk read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oregon (Mr. PACKWOOD) on, behalf of Mr. STEVENS proposes an amendment:

On page 14, after line 14, add the following:

(4) Section 304(b) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(b) is further amended by inserting immediately after paragraph (14) the following new paragraph:

"(15) When committee treasurers and candidates show that best efforts have been used to obtain and submit the information required by this subsection, they shall be deemed to be in compliance with this subsection.".

Mr. PACKWOOD. This is the anti-nit-picking amendment which indicates that if the treasurer or the candidate are in good faith, and they have tried to comply—and the good Lord knows they are going to have enough trouble complying, and everybody I have run across in this election year I have advised not to be a political treasurer, and that they are out of their minds if they undertake that task in the midst of this political campaign—but this merely says that if a finding is made that they have tried in good faith to try to comply with the law they shall not be harassed and they will be regarded as having made a good faith effort, and the Federal Election Commission shall take that into account.

That is all I have to say. I have nothing more to say. I hate to preclude the Senator from Alaska before he gets here.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I will not take more than 30 seconds. It seems to me—and I am certainly not going to ask for a vote, but it seems to me—as candidates or treasurers that to set up a separate standard, if we say we did it in good faith and with good intentions and made a good faith effort that we ought not to be subjected to the same prosecution—it seems to me——

Mr. PACKWOOD. That is not quite enough. You cannot close your eyes and say, "Don't tell me anything and, therefore, I am in good faith," the amendment does not allow that. I do not want to give anybody any misimpression. You cannot use the standard, "I did not know because I did not ask."

Mr. CANNON. I am willing to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alaska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter dated March 24, addressed to the minority leader, Senator HUGH SCOTT, and myself from Ruth C. Clusen, president of the League of Women Voters of the United States which endorses the pending substitute be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D.C., March 24, 1976.

Hon. Senator MIKE MANSFIELD and Senator HUGH SCOTT,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATORS MANSFIELD and SCOTT: The League of Women Voters of the United States applauds the wise leadership you have exercised in developing a compromise on the amendments to the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971. We support the change in direction, as evidenced in your substitute bill, away from provisions that would seriously undermine the independence of the Federal Election Commission. Specifically, we are pleased to see the deletion of the section circumscribing the advisory opinion process.

In conclusion, the League of Women Voters of the United States endorses the "Mansfield-Scott" substitute and urges all members of the United States Senate to act speedily to pass this vital piece of legislation.

Sincerely,

RUTH C. CLUSEN,
President.

TERMINATING PAYMENTS TO UNSUCCESSFUL PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, yesterday there was introduced a compromise amendment as a substitute for S. 3065, the Federal Election Campaign Act amendments. I applaud my colleagues for their diligent effort in attempting to resolve the very serious questions presented by this debate, and I am hopeful that we will be able to dispose of this bill expeditiously.

I am especially pleased with section 306 of the substitute which deals with the termination of payments to unsuccessful Presidential candidates. What the provision says is that Federal payments will be stopped for any candidate who receives less than 10 percent of the vote in two consecutive primaries unless he or she is able to acquire 20 percent of a primary vote subsequent to the disqualification.

The campaign reform law permits those taxpayers who wish to participate more fully in this country's political process to earmark $1 of their taxes for use in Presidential campaigns. It is far better, Mr. President, to have millions of Americans contribute $1 to a campaign than to rely on the million-dollar contributors, as was done in past years.

But, I have been quite concerned about the basic fairness in using this money from the tax checkoff to finance campaigns of candidates who are no longer serious contenders for the Presidential nomination. In the case of my own campaign, when I decided to run only in Texas, I immediately stopped all requests for additional funding and even turned $74,000 back to the Treasury. This is only fair, Mr. President, and I urge my colleagues to adopt the section 306 formula as a statutory requirement.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to speak very briefly on my reasons for opposing passage of this bill.

I appreciate the efforts of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle in their attempts to achieve a difficult compromise on the fundamental issues which separate them. And I believe that the compromise substitute is preferable to the special interest legislation which it replaced.

Nevertheless, the proposal before us still fails to deal with most of the underlying problems left in the wake of the Supreme Court's decision. Nothing has been done to redress the enormous advantages enjoyed by incumbents, or wealthy candidates, or those having the support of well-financed political action committees, at the expense of relatively unknown candidates of average means whose access to funding remains constricted by the limitations on contributions in the existing law.

As such candidates face enormous difficulties in raising the seed money required to launch viable campaigns, we can expect to see the advantages of incumbency magnified, and challengers restricted increasingly to the ranks of the very wealthy or of individuals who have the support of powerful special interest groups.

I predict the situation will only get worse until the Supreme Court finally rules that the current contributions limits are unconstitutional in their application. Then the political process will once again open up to allow anyone able to develop the independent financial backing necessary to challenge the wealthy and the entrenched.

In the meantime, I must underscore my opposition to the underlying law by opposing the bill even as amended.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I recognize that it probably represents the best bill on which we can reach agreement in the Senate, I must nevertheless vote against

S. 3065 as amended by the compromise substitute.

I can appreciate the fact that many of the amendments now included do have considerable redeeming features, but would still prefer a simple reconstitution of the Commission. I am pleased however that the amendment relating to termination of matching funds payments for lack of demonstrable support—and that requiring both corporations and unions to report the costs of campaign communications with their members and stockholders—have been retained.

Two other provisions—which I sponsored—are in the compromise version and will have the very desirable effect of strengthening and making more effective the national political party structure. These are the ones eliminating the candidate allocation requirement for voter registration drive expenses and removing the ceiling on transfers of contributions between and among various levels of the committee organization.

Although the compromise reached with respect to solicitation of funds from employees may not be totally consistent with the SUNPAC decision, it probably also represents a fair settlement of the issue. Similarly, the congressional control over the Federal Election Commission—which I continue to believe should be strong and independent—has, I think, been modified to a near acceptable level.

My greatest disappointment in this legislation, Mr. President, is that we have not seized upon it as an opportunity to do away with the public financing experiment. I have already spoken on this matter during consideration of the Weicker amendment, but would just like to reiterate that the time has clearly arrived for a new assessment of this concept.

Again, Mr. President, notwithstanding the positive aspects of the compromise reached by the party and committee leadership and the fact that it may be a fairly reasonable solution to the impasse which had developed with respect to consideration of this measure, I do not agree with its overall thrust to the extent that I can give it my support. Accordingly, without speculating as to the likelihood of a veto, I only hope that we can dispose of the matter without consuming any more of the Senate's time.

Mr. MONTOYA. Third reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DURKIN). The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrosment and the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to make any necessary technical and clerical changes in the bill to reflect the amendments adopted by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BIDEN), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Washington (Mr. JACKSON), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. McGEE), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. McINTYRE), and the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. LEAHY) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Washington (Mr. JACKSON), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. McINTYRE), and the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) would each vote "yea."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from South Caroline (Mr. THURMOND), and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. YOUNG) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), and the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS) would each vote "nay."

So the bill (S. 3065) was passed, as follows:

S. 3065

An act to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for its administration by a Federal Election Commission appointed in accordance with the requirements of the Constitution, and for other purposes

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976".

TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION MEMBERSHIP

SEC. 101. (a)(1) The second sentence of section 309(a)(1) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(1)), as redesignated by section 105 (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Act"), is amended to read as follows: "The Commission is composed of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, ex officio and without the right to vote, and eight members appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.".

(2) The last sentence of section 309(a)(1) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(1)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows: "No more than three members of the Commission appointed under this paragraph may be affiliated with the same political party, and at least two members appointed under this paragraph shall not be affiliated with any political party.".

(b) Section 309(a)(2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(2)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"(2)(A) Members of the Commission shall serve for terms of eight years, except that of the members first appointed—

"(i) two of the members, not affiliated with the same political party, shall be appointed for terms ending on April 30, 1977,

"(ii) two of the members, not affiliated with the same political party, shall be appointed for terms ending on April 30, 1979,

"(iii) two of the members, not affiliated with the same political party, shall be appointed for terms ending on April 30, 1981, and

"(iv) two of the members, not affiliated with the same political party, shall be appointed for terms ending on April 30, 1983.

"(B) An individual appointed to fill a vacancy occurring other than by the expiration of a term of office shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member he succeeds.

"(C) Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the Commission shall be filled in the same manner as in the case of the original appointment.".

(c)(1) Section 309(b) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(b)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) The Commission shall administer, seek to obtain compliance with, and formulate policy with respect to, this Act and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. The Commission shall have exclusive and primary jurisdiction with respect to the civil enforcement of such provisions.

"(2) Nothing in this Act shall be construed to limit, restrict, or diminish any investigatory, informational, oversight, supervisory, or disciplinary authority or function of the Congress or any committee of the Congress with respect to elections for Federal office.".

(2) The first sentence of section 309(c) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(c)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof the following: ", except that the affirmative vote of five members of the Commission shall be required in order for the Commission to establish guidelines for compliance with the provisions of this Act or with chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or for the Commission to take any action in accordance with paragraph (6), (7), (8), or (10) of section 310(a)".

(d) The last sentence of section 309(f)(1) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(f)(1)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the period the following: "without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service or the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates".

(e)(1) The President shall appoint members of the Federal Election Commission under section 309(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)), as redesignated by section 105 and as amended by this section, as soon as practicable after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) The first appointments made by the President under section 309(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)), as redesignated by section 105 and as amended by this section, shall not be considered to be appointments to fill the unexpired terms of members serving on the Federal Election Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(3) Members serving on the Federal Election Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act may continue to serve as such members until a majority of the members of the Commission are appointed and qualified under section 309(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)), as redesignated by section 105 and as amended by this section. Until a majority of the members of the Commission are appointed and qualified under the amendments made by this Act, members serving on such Commission on the date of enactment of this Act may exercise only such powers and functions as are consistent with the determinations of the Supreme Court of the United States in Buckley et al. against Valeo, Secretary of the United States Senate, et al. (numbered 75-436, 75-437) January 30, 1976.

(f) The provisions of section 309(a)(3) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(3)), as redesignated by section 105, which prohibit any individual from being appointed as a member of the Federal Election Commission who is, at the time of his appointment, an elected or appointed officer or employee of the executive, legislative, or judicial branch of the Federal Government, shall not apply in the case of any individual serving as a member of such Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(g)(1) All personel, liabilities, contracts, property, and records determined by the Director of the Office of Management and Budget to be employed, held, or used primarily in connection with the functions of the Federal Election Commission under title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 as such title existed on January 1, 1976, or under any other provision of law are transferred to the Federal Election Commission as constituted under the amendments made by this Act to the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, personnel engaged in functions transferred under paragraph (1) shall be transferred in accordance with applicable laws and regulations relating to the transfer of functions.

(B) The transfer of personnel pursuant to paragraph (1) shall be without reduction in classification or compensation for one year after such transfer.

(3) All laws relating to the functions transferred under this Act shall, insofar as such laws are applicable and not amended by this Act, remains in full force and effect. All orders, determinations, rules, advisory opinions, and opinions of counsel made, issued, or granted by the Federal Election Commission before its reconstitution under the amendments made by this Act which are in effect at the time of the transfer provided by paragraph (1) shall continue in effect to the same extent as if such transfer had not occurred.

(4) The provisions of this Act shall not affect any proceeding pending before the Federal Election Commission at the time this section takes effect.

(5) No suit, action, or other proceeding commenced by or against the Federal Election Commission or any officer or employee thereof acting in his official capacity shall abate by reason of the transfer made under paragraph (1). The court before which such suit, action, or other proceeding is pending may, on motion or supplemental petition filed at any time within twelve months after the date of enactment of this Act, allow such suit, action, or other proceeding to be maintained against the Federal Election Commission if the party making the motion or filing the petition shows a necessity for the survival of the suit, action, or other proceeding to obtain a settlement of the question involved.

(6) Any reference in any other Federal law to the Federal Election Commission, or to any member or employee thereof, as such Commission existed under the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 before its amendment by this Act shall be held and considered to refer to the Federal Election Commission or the members or employees thereof, as such Commission exists under the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 as amended by this Act.

(d) Section 304(b) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(b)) is further amended by inserting immediately after paragraph (14) the following new paragraph:

"(15) When committee treasurers and candidates show that best efforts have been used to obtain and submit the information required by this subsection, they shall be deemed to be in compliance with this subsection.".

(d) Section 304(e) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(e)) is amended to read as follows:

"(e)(1) Every person (other than a political committee or candidate) who makes contributions or expenditures expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, other than by contribution to a political committee or candidate, in an aggregate amount in excess of $100 within a calendar year shall file with the Commission, on a form prepared by the Commission, a statement containing the information required of a person who makes a contribution in excess of $100 to a candidate or political committee and the information required of a candidate or political committee receiving such a contribution.

"(2) A corporation, labor organization, or other membership organization which explicitly advocates the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate through a communication with its stockholders or members or their families shall, notwithstanding the provisions of section 301(f)(4)(C), report such expenditures in excess of $1,000 per candidate per election under paragraph (1) to the extent that they are directly attributable to such communications.

"(3) Any person who makes a contribution in response to a solicitation under section 521(b)(3)(B) which, when added to all other contributions made by him to the same recipient during the calendar year, exceeds $100 shall report to the recipient the total amount of such contributions made to such recipient for that year. Paragraph (4) does not apply to reports under this paragraph.

"(4) Statements required by this subsection shall be filed on the dates on which reports by political committees are filed. Such statements shall include (A) the information required by subsection (b)(9), stated in a manner indicating whether the contribution or expenditure is in support of, or opposition to, the candidate; and (B) under penalty of perjury, a certification whether such expenditure is made in cooperation, consultation, or concert, with, or at the request or suggesting of, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate. Any expenditure, including but not limited to those described in subsection (b)(13), of $1,000 or more made after the fifteenth day, but more than forty-eight hours, before any election shall be reported within forty-eight hours of such expenditure.

"(5) The Commission shall be responsible for expeditiously preparing indices which set forth, on a candidate-by-candidate basis, all expenditures separately, including but not limited to those reported under subsection (b)(13), made with respect to each candidate, as reported under this subsection, and for periodically issuing such indices on a timely pre-election basis.".

REPORTS BY CERTAIN PERSONS

SEC. 105. Title III of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431-441) is amended by striking out section 308 thereof (2 U.S.C. 437a) and by redesignating section 309 through section 321 as section 308 through section 320, respectively.

POWERS OF COMMISSION

SEC. 106. (a) Section 310(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437d(a)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (8) thereof, by inserting "develop such prescribed forms and to" immediately before "make", and by inserting immediately after "Act" the following: "and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954";

(2) in paragraph (9) thereof, by striking out "and sections 608" and all that follows through "States Code" and inserting in lieu thereof "and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954"; and

(3) by striking out paragraph (10) and redesignating paragraph (11) as paragraph (10).

(b)(1) Section 310(a)(6) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437d(a)(6)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"(6) to initiate (through civil actions for injunctive, declaratory, or other appropriate relief), defend (in the case of any civil action brought under section 313(a)(9)), or appeal any civil action in the name of the Commission for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this Act and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, through its general counsel;".

(2) Section 310 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437d), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) Except as provided in section 313(a)(9), the power of the Commission to initiate civil actions under subsection (a)(6) shall be the exclusive civil remedy for the enforcement of the provisions of this Act.".

ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 107. Section 313 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437g), as redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"ENFORCEMENT

"SEC. 313. (a)(1) Any person who believes a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, has occurred may file a complaint with the Commission. Such complaint shall be in writing, shall be signed and sworn to by the person filing such complaint, and shall be notarized. Any person filing such a complaint shall be subject to the provisions of section 1001 of title 18, United States Code. The Commission may not conduct any investigation under this section, or take any other action under this section, solely on the basis of a complaint of a person whose identity is not disclosed to the Commission.

"(2) The Commission, upon receiving a complaint under paragraph (1), or if it has reason to believe that any person has committed a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, shall notify the person involved of such alleged violation and shall make an investigation of such alleged violation in accordance with the provisions of this section.

"(3) Any investigation under paragraph (2) shall be conducted expeditiously and shall include an investigation, conducted in accordance with the provisions of this section, of reports and statements filed by any complainant under this title, if such complainant is a candidate. Any notification or investigation made under paragraph (2) shall not be made public by the Commission or by any other person without the written consent of the person receiving such notification or the person with respect to whom such investigation is made.

"(4) The Commission shall afford any person who receives notice of an alleged violation under paragraph (2) a reasonable opportunity to demonstrate that no action should be taken against such person by the Commission under this Act.

"(5)(A) If the Commission determines that there is reason to believe that any person has committed or is about to commit a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the Commission shall make every endeavor to correct or prevent such violation by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion, and to enter into a conciliation agreement with the person involved. A conciliation agreement, unless violated, shall constitute an absolute bar to any further action by the Commission with respect to the violation which is the subject of the agreement, including bringing a civil proceeding under paragraph (B) of this section.

"(B) If the Commission is unable to correct or prevent any such violation by such informal methods, the Commission may, if the Commission determines there is probable cause to believe that a violation has occurred or is about to occur, institute a civil action for relief, including a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or any other appropriate order, including a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of $5,000 or an amount equal to the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, in the district court of the United States for the district in which the person against whom such action is found, resides, or transacts business.

"(C) In any civil action instituted by the Commission under paragraph (B), the court shall grant a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order, including a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of $5,000 or an amount equal to the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, upon a proper showing that the person involved has engaged or is about to engage in a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

"(D) If the Commission determines that there is probable cause to believe that a knowing and willful violation under section

328(a), or a knowing and willful violation of a provision of chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, has occurred or is about to occur, it may refer such apparent violation to the Attorney General of the United States without regard to the limitations set forth in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph.

"(6)(A) If the Commission believes that there is clear and convincing proof that a knowing and willful violation of the Act or chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has been committed, any conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission under paragraph (5)(A) may include a requirement that the person involved in such conciliation agreement shall pay a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of (i) $10,000; or (ii) an amount equal to 300 percent of the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation.

"(B) If the Commission believes that a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has been committed, a conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission under paragraph (5)(A) may include a requirement that the person involved in such conciliation agreement shall pay a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of (i) $5,000; or (ii) an amount equal to the amount of the contribution or expenditure involved in such violation.

"(7) The Commission shall make available to the public the results of any conciliation attempt, including any conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission, and any determination by the Commission that no violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has occurred.

"(8) In any civil action for relief instituted by the Commission under paragraph (5), if the court determines that the Commission has established through clear and convincing proof that the person involved in such civil action has committed a knowing and willful violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the court may impose a civil penalty of not more than the greater of (A) $10,000; or (B) an amount equal to 300 percent of the contribution or expenditure involved in such violation. In any case in which such person has entered into a conciliation agreement with the Commission under paragraph (5)(A), the Commission may institute a civil action for relief under paragraph (5) if it believes that such person has violated any provision of such conciliation agreement. In order for the Commission to obtain relief in any such civil action, it shall be sufficient for the Commission to establish that such person has violated, in whole or in part, any requirement of such conciliation agreement.

"(9) In any action brought under paragraph (5) or paragraph (8) of this subsection, subpenas for witnesses who are required to attend a United States district court may run into any other district.

"(10)(A) Any party aggrieved by an order of the Commission dismissing a complaint filed by such party under paragraph (1), or by a failure on the part of the Commission to act on such complaint in accordance with the provisions of this section within ninety days after the filing of such complaint, may file a petition with the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.

"(B) The filing of any action under subparagraph (A) shall be made—

"(i) in the case of the dismissal of a complaint by the Commission, no later than sixty days after such dismissal; or

"(ii) in the case of a failure on the part of the Commission to act on such complaint, no later than sixty days after the ninety-day period specified in subparagraph (A).

"(C) In such proceeding the court may declare that the dismissal of the complaint or the action, or the failure to act, is contrary to law and may direct the Commission to proceed in conformity with that declaration within thirty days, failing which the complainant may bring in his own name a civil action to remedy the violation complained of.

"(11) The judgment of the district court may be appealed to the court of appeals and the judgment of the court of appeals affirming or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the district court shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

"(12) Any action brought under this subsection shall be advanced on the docket of the court in which filed, and put ahead of all other actions (other than other actions brought under this subsection or under section 314).

"(13) If the Commission determines after an investigation that any person has violated an order of the court entered in a proceeding brought under paragraph (5), it may petition the court for an order to adjudicate that person in civil contempt, or, if it believes the violation to be knowing and willful, it may instead petition the court for an order to adjudicate that person in criminal contempt.

"(b) In any case in which the Commission refers an apparent violation to the Attorney General, the Attorney General shall respond by report to the Commission with respect to any action taken by the Attorney General regarding such apparent violation. Each report shall be transmitted no later than sixty days after the date the Commission refers any apparent violation, and at the close of every thirty-day period thereafter until there is final disposition of such apparent violation. The Commission may from time to time prepare and publish reports on the status of such referrals.".

PROHIBITION ON CONVERSION OF CONTRIBUTIONS TO PERSONAL USE

SEC. 107A. Section 317 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 439a) is amended by inserting after "other lawful purpose" the following: ", except that no such amount may be converted to any personal use".

DUTIES OF COMMISSION

SEC. 108. (a) Section 315(a)(6) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438(a)(6)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", and to compile and maintain a separate cumulative index of reports and statements filed with it by political committees supporting more than one candidate, which shall include a listing of the date of the registration of any such political committee and the date upon which any such political committee qualifies to make expenditures under section 320, and which shall be revised on the same basis and at the same time as the other cumulative indices required under this paragraph".

(b) Section 315(c)(2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438(c)(2)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by striking out "30 legislative days" in the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "30 calendar days or 15 legislative days, whichever is later,".

ADDITIONAL ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITY

SEC. 109. Section 407 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 456) is repealed.

CONTRIBUTION AND EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS; OTHER LIMITATIONS

SEC. 110. Title III of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431-441) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" before "No" in section 318 (2 U.S.C. 439b), as redesignated by section 105 of this Act;

(2) by adding the following new subsection at the end of section 318 (2 U.S.C. 439b), as redesignated by section 105 of this Act:

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no Senator, Representative, Resident Commissioner, or Delegate shall mail as franked mail under section 3210 of title 39, United States Code, any general mass mailing when such mailing is mailed at or delivered to any postal facility less than sixty days prior to the date of any primary or general election in which such Senator, Representative, Resident Commissioner, or Delegate is a candidate for Federal office. For purposes of this subsection in term 'general mass mailing' means newsletters and similar mailings of more than five hundred pieces the content of which is substantially identical and which are mailed to or delivered to any postal facility at the same time or several different times.";

(3) by striking out section 320 (2 U.S.C. 441), as redesignated by section 105 of this Act; and

(4) by inserting after section 319 (2 U.S.C. 439c), as redesignated by such section 105, the following new sections:

"LIMITATIONS ON CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

"SEC. 320. (a)(1) No person shall make contributions—

"(A) to any candidate and his authorized political committees with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $1,000;

"(B) to any political committee established and maintained by a political party, which is not the authorized political committee of any candidate, in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $25,000; or

"(C) to any other political committee on any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000.

"(2) No multi-candidate political committee shall make contributions—

"(A) to any candidate and his authorized political committees with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000;

"(B) to any political committee established and maintained by a political party, which is not the authorized committee of any candidate in any calendar year, which, in the aggregate, exceed $25,000; or

"(C) to any other political committee in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $10,000.

The limitations on contributions contained in paragraph (2) do not apply to transfers between and among political committees which are national, State, district, or local committees (including any subordinate committee thereof) of the same political party. For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'multi-candidate political committee' means a political committee which has been registered under section 303 for a period of not less than six months, which has received contributions from more than fifty persons, and, except for any State political party organization, has made contributions to five or more candidates for Federal office.

"(3) For purposes of the limitations under paragraphs (1) and (2), all contributions made by political committees established, financed, maintained, or controlled by any person or persons, including any parent, subsidiary, branch, division, department, affiliate, or local unit of such person, or by any group of persons, shall be considered to have been made by a single political committee, except that (A) nothing in this sentence shall limit transfers between political committees of funds raised through joint fundraising efforts; (B) this sentence shall not apply so that contributions made by a political party through a single national committee and contributions by that party through a single State committee in each State are treated as having been made by a single political committee; and (C) a political committee of a national organization shall not be precluded from contributing to a candidate or committee merely because of its affiliation with a national multicandidate political committee which has made the maximum contribution it is permitted to make to a candidate or a committee.

"(4) No individual shall make contributions aggregating more than $25,000 in any calendar year. For purposes of this paragraph, any contribution made to a candidate in a year other than the calendar year in which the election is held with respect to which such contribution was made, is considered to be made during the calendar year in which such election is held.

"(5) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) contributions to a named candidate made to any political committee authorized by such candidate to accept contributions on his behalf shall be considered to be contributions made to such candidate;

"(B)(i) expenditures made by any person in cooperation, consultation, or concert, with, or at the request or suggestion of, a candidate, his authorized political committees, or their agents, shall be considered to be a contribution to such candidate;

"(ii) the financing by any person of the dissemination, distribution, or republication, in whole or in part, of any broadcast or any written, graphic, or other form of campaign materials prepared by the candidate, his campaign committees, or their authorized agents shall be considered to be an expenditure for purposes of this paragraph; and

"(C) contributions made to or for the benefit of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be contributions made to or for the benefit of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States.

"(6) The limitations imposed by paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection (other than the annual limitation on contributions to a political committee under paragraph (2)(B)) shall apply separately with respect to each election, except that all elections held in any calendar year for the office of President of the United States (except a general election for such office) shall be considered to be one election.

"(7) For purposes of the limitations imposed by this section, all contributions made by a person, either directly or indirectly, on behalf of a particular candidate, including contributions which are in any way earmarked or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to such candidate, shall be treated as contributions from such person to such candidate. The intermediary or conduit shall report the original source and the intended recipient of such contribution to the Commission and to the intended recipient.

"(b)(1) No candidate for the office of President of the United States who is eligible under section 9003 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to condition for eligibility for payments) or under section 9033 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to eligibility for payments) to receive payments from the Secretary of the Treasury may make expenditures in excess of—

"(A) $10,000,000, in the case of a campaign for nomination for election to such office, except the aggregate of expenditures under this subparagraph in any one State shall not exceed the greater of 16 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State (as certified under subsection (e)), or $200,000; or

"(B) $20,000,000 in the case of a campaign for election to such office.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be expenditures made by or on behalf of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States; and

"(B) an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a Vice Presidential candidate, if it is made by—

"(i) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for the purposes of making any expenditure; or

"(ii) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, or an agent of the candidate, to make the expenditure.

"(c)(1) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1976), as there become available necessary data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register the percent difference between the price index for the twelve months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each limitation established by subsection (b) and subsection (d) shall be increased by such percent difference. Each amount so increased shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) the term 'price index' means the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics; and

"(B) the term 'base period' means the calendar year 1974.

"(d)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law with respect to limitations on expenditures or limitations on contributions, the national committee of a political party and a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may make expenditures in connection with the general election campaign of candidates for Federal office, subject to the limitations contained in paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection.

"(2) The national committee of a political party may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of any candidate for President of the United States who is affiliated with such party which exceeds an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States (as certified under subsection (e)). Any expenditure under this paragraph shall be in addition to any expenditure by a national committee of a political party serving as the principal campaign committee of a candidate for the office of the President of the United States.

"(3) The national committee of a political party, or a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate for Federal office in a State who is affiliated with such party which exceeds—

"(A) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Senator, or of Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, the greater of—

"(i) 2 cents multipled by the voting age population of the State (as certified under subsection (e)); or

"(ii) $20,000; and

"(B) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner in any other State, $10,000.

"(e) During the first week of January 1975, and every subsequent year, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, of each State, and of each congressional district as of the first day of July next preceding the date of certification. The term 'voting age population' means resident population, eighteen years of age or older.

"(f) No candidate or political committee shall knowingly accept any contribution or make any expenditure in violation of the provisions of this section. No officer or employee of a political committee shall knowingly accept a contribution made for the benefit or use of a candidate, or knowingly make any expenditure on behalf of a candidate, in violation of any limitation imposed on contributions and expenditures under this section.

"(g) The Commission shall prescribe rules under which any expenditure by a candidate for Presidential nomination for use in two or more States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

"(h) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, amounts totaling not more than $20,000 may be contributed to a candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to the United States Senate during the year in which an election is held in which he is such a candidate, by the Republican or Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, or the national committee of a political party, or any combination of such committees.

"CONTRIBUTIONS OR EXPENDITURES BY NATIONAL BANKS, CORPORATIONS, OR LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

"SEC. 321. (a) It is unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress, to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election to any political office, or in connection with any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any political office, or for any corporation whatever, or any labor organization to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election at which Presidential and Vice Presidential electors or a Senator or Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, Congress are to be voted for, in connection with any primary election or political convention, or caucus held to select candidates for any of the foregoing offices, or for any candidate, political commitee, or other person to accept or receive any contribution prohibited by this section, or for any officer or any director of any corporation or any national bank or any officer of any labor organization to consent to any contribution or expenditure by the corporation, national bank, or labor organization, as the case may be, prohibited by this section.

"(b)(1) For the purposes of this section 'labor organization' means any organization of any kind, or any agency or employee representation committee or plan, in which employees participate and which exist for the purpose, in whole or in part, of dealing with employers concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or conditions of work. As used in this section and in section 12(h) of the Public Utility Holding Company Act (15 U.S.C. 791(h)), the phrase 'contribution or expenditure' shall include any direct or indirect payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money, or any services, or anything of value (except a loan of money by a national or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations and in the ordinary course of business) to any candidate, campaign committee, or political party or organization, in connection with any election to any of the offices referred to in this section; but shall not include communications by a corporation to its stockholders and executive or administrative personnel and their families or by a labor organization to its members and their families on any subject; nonpartisan registration and get-out-the-vote campaigns by a corporation aimed at its stockholders and executive or administrative personnel and their families, or by a labor organization aimed at its members and their families; or the establishment, administration, and solicitation of contributions to a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes by a corporation or labor organization, or by a membership organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock.

"(2) It shall be unlawful—

"(A) for such a fund to make a contribution or expenditure by utilizing money or anything of value secured by physical force, job discrimination, financial reprisals, or the threat of force, job discrimination, or financial reprisal; or by dues, fees, or other moneys required as a condition of membership in a labor organization or as a condition of employment, or by moneys obtained in any commercial transaction;

"(B) for an employee to solicit a subordinate employee;

"(C) for any person soliciting an employee for a contribution to such a fund to fail to inform such employee of the political purposes of such fund at the time of such solicitation; and

"(D) for any person soliciting an employee for a contribution to such a fund to fail to inform such employee, at the time of such solicitation, of his right to refuse to so contribute without any reprisal.

"(3)(A) Except as provided in subparagraphs (B) and (C), it shall be unlawful—

"(i) for a corporation, or a separate segregated fund established by a corporation, to solicit contributions to such a fund from any person other than its stockholders and their families and its executive or administrative personnel and their families, and

"(ii) for a labor organization, or a separate segregated fund established by a labor organization, to solicit contributions to such a fund from any person other than its members and their families.

"(B) It shall not be unlawful under this section for a corporation, a labor organization, or a separate segregated fund established by such corporation or such labor organization, to make two written solicitations for contributions during the calendar year from any stockholder, officer, or employee of a corporation or the families of such persons. A solicitation under this subparagraph may be made only by mail addressed to the stockholder, officer, or employee at his residence, and shall be so designed that the corporation, labor organization, or separate segregated fund conducting such solicitation cannot determine who makes a contribution as a result of such solicitation and who does not.

"(C) This paragraph shall not prevent a membership organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock, or a separate segregated fund established by a membership organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock, from soliciting contributions to such a fund from members of such organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock.

"(4) Notwithstanding any other law, any method of soliciting voluntary contributions or of facilitating the making of voluntary contributions to a separate segregated fund established by a corporation, permitted to corporations, shall also be permitted to labor organizations.

"(5) Any corporation that utilizes a method of soliciting voluntary contributions or facilitating the making of voluntary contributions, shall made available, on written request and at a cost sufficient only to reimburse the corporation for the expenses incurred thereby, that method, to a labor organization representing any members working for that corporation.

"(6) For purposes of this section, the term 'executive or administrative personnel' means individuals employed by a corporation who are paid on a salary, rather than hourly, basis and who have policymaking or supervisory responsibilities.

"(7) For purposes of this section, the term 'stockholder' includes any individual who has a legal or vested beneficial interest in stock, including, but not limited to, an employee of a corporation who participates in a stock bonus, stock option, or employee stock ownership plan.

"CONTRIBUTIONS BY GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS

"SEC. 322. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person—

"(1) who enters into any contract with the United States or any department or agency thereof either for the rendition of personal services or furnishing any material, supplies, or equipment to the United States or any department or agency thereof or for selling any land or building to the United States or any department or agency thereof, if payment for the performance of such contract or payment for such material, supplies, equipment, land, or building is to be made in whole or in part from funds appropriated by the Congress, at any time between the commencement of negotiations for and the later of (A) the completion of performance under, or (B) the termination of negotiations for, such contract or furnishing of materials, supplies, equipment, land, or buildings, directly or indirectly to make any contribution of money or other thing of value, or to promise expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, to any political party, committee, or candidate for public office or to any person for any political purpose or use; or

"(2) knowingly to solicit any such contribution from any such person for any such purpose during any such period.

"(b) This section does not prohibit or make unlawful the establishment or administration of, or the solicitation of contributions to, any separate segregated fund by any corporation or labor organization for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, unless the provisions of section 321 prohibit or make unlawful the establishment or administration of, or the solicitation of contributions to, such fund. Each specific prohibition, allowance, and duty applicable to a corporation, labor organization, or separate segregated fund under section 321 applies to a corporation, labor organization, or separate segregated fund to which this subsection applies.

"(c) For purposes of this section, the term 'labor organization' has the meaning given it by section 321.

"PUBLICATION OR DISTRIBUTION OF POLITICAL STATEMENTS

"SEC. 323. Whenever any person makes an expenditure for the purpose of financing communications expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate through broadcasting stations, newspapers, magazines, outdoor advertising facilities, direct mails, and other similar types of general public political advertising, such communication—

"(1) if authorized by a candidate, his authorized political committees or their agents, shall clearly and conspicuously, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commission, state that the communication has been authorized; or

"(2) if not authorized by a candidate, his authorized, political committees, or their agents, shall clearly and conspicuously, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commission, state that the communication is not authorized by any candidate, and state the name of the person who made or financed the expenditure for the communication, including, the case of a political committee, the name of any affiliated or connected organization required to be disclosed under section 303(b)(2).

"CONTRIBUTIONS BY FOREIGN NATIONALS

"SEC. 324. (a) It shall be unlawful for a foreign nation directly or through any other person to make any contribution of money or other thing of value, or to promise expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, in connection with an election to any political office or in connection with any primary election, convention, or caucus held to select candidates for any political office; or for any person to solicit, accept, or receive any such contribution from a foreign national.

"(b) As used in this section, the term 'foreign national' means—

"(1) a foreign principal, as such term is defined by section 1(b) of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938 (22 U.S.C. 611(b)), except that the term 'foreign national' shall not include any individual who is a citizen of the United States; or

"(2) an individual who is not a citizen of the United States and who is not lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as defined by section 101(a)(20) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(20)).

"PROHIBITION OF CONTRIBUTIONS IN NAME OF ANOTHER

"SEC. 325. No person shall make a contribution in the name of another person or knowingly permit his name to be used to effect such a contribution, and no person shall knowingly accept a contribution made by one person in the name of another person.

"LIMITATION ON CONTRIBUTION OF CURRENCY

"SEC. 326. No person shall make contributions of currency of the United States or currency of any foreign country to or for the benefit of any candidate which, in the aggregate, exceed $100, with respect to any campaign of such candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office.

"FRAUDULENT MISREPRESENTATION OF CAMPAIGN AUTHORITY

"SEC. 327. No person who is a candidate for Federal office or an employee or agent of such candidate shall—

"(1) fraudulently misrepresent himself or any committee or organization under his control as speaking or writing or otherwise acting for or on behalf of any other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof on a matter which is damaging to such other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof; or

"(2) willfully and knowingly to participate in or conspire to participate in any plan, scheme, or design to violate paragraph (1).

"PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS

"SEC. 328. (a) Any person, following the enactment of this section, who knowingly and willfully commits a violation of any provision or provisions of this Act which involves the making, receiving, or reporting of any contribution or expenditure having a value in the aggregate of $1,000 or more during a calendar year shall be fined in an amount which does not exceed the greater of $25,000 or 300 percent of the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, imprisoned for not more than one year, or both. A willful and knowing violation of section 321(b)(2), including such a violation of the provisions of such section as applicable through section 322(b), is punishable by a fine of not more than $50,000, imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both. In the case of a knowing and willful violation of section 325 or 326, the penalties set forth in this section shall apply to a violation involving an amount having a value in the aggregate of $250 or more during a calendar year. In the case of a knowing and willful violation of section 327, the penalties set forth in this section shall apply without regard to whether the making, receiving, or reporting of a contribution or expenditure of $1,000 or more was involved.

"(b) A defendant in any criminal action brought for the violation of a provision of this Act, or of a provision of chatper 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, may introduce as evidence of his lack of knowledge of or intent to commit the offense for which the action was brought a conciliation agreement entered into between the defendant and the Commission under section 313 which specifically deals with the act or failure to act constituting such offense and which is still in effect.

"(c) In any criminal action brought for a violation of a provision of this Act, or of a provision of chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the court before which such action is brought shall take into account, in weighing the seriousness of the offense and in considering the appropriateness of the penalty to be imposed if the defendant is found guilty, whether—

"(1) the specific act or failure to act which constitutes the offense for which the action was brought is the subject of a conciliation agreement entered into between the defendant and the Commission under section 313,

"(2) the conciliation agreement is in effect, and

"(3) the defendant is, with respect to the violation for which the defense is being asserted, in compliance with the conciliation agreement.".

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 111. Section 319 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 439c), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following sentence: "There are authorized to be appropriated to the Federal Election Commission $8,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, $2,000,000 for the period beginning July 1, 1976, and ending September 30, 1976, and $8,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1977.".

SAVINGS PROVISION

SEC. 112. Except as otherwise provided by this Act, the repeal by this Act of any section or penalty shall not have the effect to release or extinguish any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under such section or penalty, and such section or penalty shall be treated as remaining in force for the purpose of sustaining any proper action or prosecution for the enforcement of any penalty, forfeiture, or liability.

TITLE IV—COMMISSION TO STUDY PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATING PROCESS

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 401. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to improve the system of nominating candidates for election to the office of the President of the United States by studying such system in a broad manner never before attempted in the two-hundred-year history of this Nation.

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION

SEC. 402. (a) There is established the Bicentennial Commission on Presidential Nominations (hereinafter referred to as the "Commission").

(b) The Commission shall be composed of twenty members to be appointed as follows:

(1) six members shall be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, on the recommendation of the majority and minority leaders, of whom at least two shall be Members of the Senate and at least two shall be elected or appointed State officials;

(2) six members shall be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, of whom at least two shall be Members of the House and at least two shall be elected or appointed State officials;

(3) six members shall be appointed by the President; and

(4) two members shall be the chairmen of the two national political parties and shall serve as ex officio members.

(c) At no time shall more than three members appointed under paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of subsection (b) be individuals who are of the same political affiliation.

(d) A vacancy in the Commission shall not affect its powers, and shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made, subject to the same limitations with respect to party affiliations as the original appointment.

(e) Twelve members shall constitute a quorum, but a lesser number may conduct hearings. The Chairman of the Commission shall be selected by the members from among the members, other than ex officio members.

FUNCTIONS OF THE COMMISSION

SEC. 403. (a) The Commission shall make a full and complete investigation with respect to the Presidential nominating process. Such investigation shall include but not be limited to a consideration of—

(1) the manner in which States conduct primaries for the expression of a preference for the nomination of candidates for election to the office of President of the United States and caucuses for the selection of delegates to the national nominating conventions of political parties;

(2) State laws and the rules of national political parties which govern the participation of voters and candidates in such primaries and caucuses;

(3) the financing of campaigns for the nomination of candidates for election to the office of the President of the United States;

(4) the relationship between candidates for election to the office of the President of the United States and the news media, including how candidates achieve public recognition and whether such candidates should be guaranteed access to the television media;

(5) the interrelationship of the elements described in paragraphs (1) through (4) of this section;

(6) alternative nominating systems, including but not limited to a national or regional primary system for the expression of a preference for the nomination of candidates for election to the office of President of the United States and variations on the present nominating system;

(7) the manner in which candidates are nominated for election to the office of Vice President of the United States; and

(8) the extent to which the State laws and the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 promote or retard independent candidacies for election to the office of President.

(b) The Commission shall submit to the President and to the Congress such interim reports as it deems advisable, and not later than one year after the enactment of this title, a final report of its study and investigation based upon a full consideration of alternatives to our current Presidential nominating system, including an analysis of the strengths and weaknesses of all such alternatives studied, together with its recommendations as to the best system to establish for the 1980 Presidential elections. The Commission shall cease to exist sixty days after it final report is submitted.

POWERS AND ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SEC. 404. (a) The Commission may, in carrying out the provisions of this title, sit and act at such times and places, hold such hearings, take such testimony, request the attendance of such witnesses, administer oaths, have such printing and binding done, and commission studies by any Federal agency or executive department, as the Commission deems advisable.

(b) Per diem and mileage allowances for witnesses requested to appear under the authority conferred by this section shall be paid from funds appropriated to the Commission.

(c) Subject to such rules and regulations as may be adopted by the Commission, the chairman shall have the power to—

(1) appoint and fix the compensation of an executive director, and such additional staff personnel as may be necessary, without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and without regard to chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title relating to classification in General Schedule pay rates, but at such rates not in excess of the maximum rate for GS-18 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of such title; and

(2) procure temporary and intermittent services to the same extent as is authorized by section 3109 of title 5, United States Code, but at rates not to exceed $100 a day for individuals.

COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS

SEC. 405. (a) Members of the Commission who are otherwise employed by the Federal Government shall serve without compensation but shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in carrying out the duties of the Commission.

(b) Members of the Commission not otherwise employed by the Federal Government shall receive per diem at the maximum daily rate for GS-18 of the General Schedule when they are engaged in the performance of their duties as members of the Commission and shall be entitled to reimbursement for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in carrying out the duties of the Commission.

TIMELINESS OF APPOINTMENTS

SEC. 406. It is the sense of the Congress that the appointments of individuals to serve as members of the Commission be completed within ninety days after the enactment of this title.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 407. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title.

TITLE V—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

USE OF FRANKED MAIL BEFORE ELECTIONS

SEC. 501. Section 3210(a)(5)(D) of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out "28" and inserting in lieu thereof "60".

FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE OF FEDERAL OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

SEC. 502. (a) Each person referred to in subparagraph (b) herein shall file annually with the Comptroller General of the United States on or before February 15 of each year a full and complete report of net worth as of the end of the preceding calendar year, such report to consist of a statement of assets (and of their reasonable market value) owned by him, or jointly by him and his spouse, and of liabilities owed by him, or jointly by him and his spouse, together with a full and complete statement of income for the preceding calendar year, such statement of income to consist of a list of the identity of each source of income and a list of the amount paid by each source of income to him, or jointly to him and his spouse during the preceding calendar year, except that in lieu of such statement of income, each individual referred to in subparagraph (b) may file with the Comptroller General of the

(b) The provisions of this section shall apply to any person who as an officer or employee of the United States within the executive, legislative, or judicial branch of the Government of the United States received compensation at a gross annual rate in excess of $25,000 during the year 1976 or any subsequent year. The provisions of this section also apply to any individual not described in the preceding sentence who is a candidate within the meaning of section 301(b) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(b)), except that the report required by subsection (a) shall be filed within thirty days after the date on which he becomes a candidate within the meaning of such section, and on each February 15 thereafter so long as he is such a candidate.

(c) The report required by this section shall be in such form and shall contain such information as the Comptroller General may prescribe in order to meet the provisions of this section. Notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, all reports filed under this section shall be maintained by the Comptroller General as public records, open to inspection by members of the public, and copies of such records shall be furnished upon request at a reasonable fee. Any report filed under this section shall be retained by the Comptroller General for a period of five years.

(d) All reports required hereunder shall be certified as being correct by the person filing the same and shall be duly sworn to and properly notarized.

AUTHORIZING SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS TO THE ENERGY RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION FOR FISCAL YEAR 1976 AND THE TRANSITION PERIOD

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 677, S. 3108.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3108) to amend Public Law 94–187 to increase the authorization for appropriations to the Energy Research and Development Administration in accordance with section 261 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, section 305 of the Energy Reorganization Act of 1974, and section 16 of the Federal Nonnuclear Energy Research and Development Act of 1974, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TITLE I—AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR FISCAL YEAR 1976

That section 101(a)(5) of Public Law 93–187 is hereby amended by striking therefrom the figure "$3,158,970,000" and substituting the figure "$3,188,970,00."

SEC. 2. Section 101(b) of Public Law 94–187 is hereby amended by striking from subsection (15)(G), capital equipment, the figure "$237,502,000" and substituting the figure "$241,502,000".

TITLE II—AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE PERIOD JULY 1, 1976, THROUGH SEPTEMBER 30, 1976

That section 201(a)(5) of Public Law 94–187 is hereby amended by striking therefrom the figure "$914,849,000" and substituting the figure "$937,849,000".

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an excerpt from the report (No. 94–707), explaining the purposes of the measure.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY OF THE BILL

This bill authorizes supplemental appropriations of $34,000,000 to the Energy Research and Development Administration for fiscal year 1976 and $23,000,000 for the transition period in budget authority and $26,500,000 and $17,500,000 in budget outlays for the respective periods. The supplemental request is needed primarily to provide a balanced nuclear weapons research, development, and testing program, a capability to verify the peaceful nuclear explosive agreement now being negotiated with the Soviet Union as part of the Threshold Test Ban Treaty, and to purchase at reduced cost a needed computer now being leased for the Lawrence Livermore Laboratory.

BACKGROUND

On October 22, 1975, the President submitted to Congress amendments to the Energy Research and Development Administration's Weapons program for fiscal year 1976 and the transition period. Due to the lateness of the request, the Congress was unable to initiate action prior to adjournment of the 1st Session of the 94th Congress. As a result, Public Law 94–187, Authorization of Appropriations for Fiscal Year 1976 and Transition Period for the Energy Research and Development Administration dated December 31, 1975, did not provide this increased funding.

On January 13, 1976, the Energy Research and Development Administration transmitted to the Congress a request for increase in appropriations for fiscal year 1976 of $34,000,000 and for the transition period of $23,000,000 (see Appendix). On March 9, 1976 Senator John O. Pastore, Chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, introduced, by request, S. 3108, to amend Public Law 94–187 to increase the authorization for appropriations to the Energy Research and Development Administration in accordance with section 261 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, section 305 of the Energy Reorganization Act of 1974, and section 16 of the Federal Nonnuclear Energy Research and Development Act of 1974, and for other purposes. The bill was referred to the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

On March 9, 1976, Representative Melvin Price, Vice Chairman of the Joint Committee, introduced an identical bill, H.R. 12388, by request, which was referred to the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

The Joint Committee met in executive session on March 12, 1976, and voted without dissent to report the bill favorably to the Senate. The Joint Committee met in executive session on March 18, 1976, and voted without dissent to file this report.

HEARINGS

On February 3, 1976, the Subcommittee on Legislation of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy held an executive hearing on the request for authorization of supplemental appropriations for fiscal year 1976 and the transitional period as well as for fiscal year 1977. Testimony was presented on behalf of the Energy Research and Development Administration by Dr. Robert C. Seamans, Jr., Administrator; Alfred D. Starbird, Assistant Administrator for National Security; and Major General Joseph K. Bratton, U.S. Army, Director of Military Application.

Testimony was also heard from Dr. Harold M. Agnew, Director of Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory; Dr. Roger M. Batzel, Director of Lawrence Livemore Laboratory; and Dr. Morgan Sparks, President of Sandia Laboratories. Brigadier General William B. Maxson, USAF, Deputy Assistant to the Secretary of Defense (Atomic Energy), was present and expressed Department of Defense support for the ERDA request for supplemental appropriations.

COMMITTEE COMMENTS

The ERDA request was for an increase of $34,000,000 for fiscal year 1976 and $23,000,000 for the transition period in budget authority and $26,500,000 and $17,500,000 in budget outlays for the respective periods. ERDA states this supplemental would provide amounts for the following purposes:

(1) Research and Development. The level of scientific manpower in the ERDA laboratories for nuclear weapon activities has declined from about 9,800 man-years in fiscal year 1970 to about 7,900 man-years in fiscal year 1975. Since the Department of Defense requirements for engineering development of current weapons has not diminished over this period, the major impact of this reduction has been particularly serious in advanced development for future weapons where the level of effort has reduced from about 2,150 man-years in fiscal year 1970 to about 1,450 in fiscal year 1975. Without the supplemental the total laboratories' effort will reduce to 7,600 man-years and advanced development to 1,250 in fiscal year 1976, whereas the supplemental will permit holding to approximately the fiscal year 1975 levels.

(2) Nuclear Testing. To accomplish all required high yield nuclear testing prior to the proposed March 31, 1976, effective date of the Threshold Test Ban Treaty, ERDA deferred all advanced development tests for over a year. Funds, which remain for the fourth quarter of fiscal year 1976 and fiscal year 1976T, will support only a few low yield tests, only 60 percent of that for recent years. Without this supplement ERDA would be unable to restore testing to a minimum required level. In addition, ERDA would have to make a force reduction of approximately 800 test personnel, an area where there had already been a reduction in strength of about 50 percent during the past five years.

(3) Special Test Detection. Negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union are going on and are directed toward reaching a Peaceful Nuclear Explosion (PNE) agreement by March 31, 1976. The supplemental would provide the necessary funds for development of equipment techniques, and data analysis needed for accomplishing verification that the Soviet PNE experiments are consistent with the agreement. Without these requested amounts, the United States could find itself unprepared to take the necessary Treaty verification actions for U.S.S.R. nuclear explosions. This would be an important element in completing the Threshold Test Ban Treaty signed in July 1974 between the United States and the Soviet Union.

(4) Capital Equipment. Because the new Control Data Corporation Star computers installed at the Lawrence Livermore Laboratory (LLL) have not yet reached anticipated capability, it has been necessary for the laboratory to hold a leased CDC 7600 computer longer than expected. Purchase rather than further leasing of that computer offers substantial financial advantages to the Government. Without this computer there would be a severe shortage of weapons program computing capacity in LLL.

The Joint Committee concurs with the request of the Energy Research and Development Administration.

TIME LIMITATION AGREEMENT—S. 3149

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at such time as the bill S. 3149, a bill to regulate commerce and protect human health and the environment by requiring testing and necessary use restrictions on certain chemical substances, and for other purposes, is made the pending business before the Senate, there be a time limitation thereon of 2 hours to be equally divided between Mr. TUNNEY and Mr. PEARSON; that there be a time limitation on any amendment, debatable motion, appeal or point of order if submitted to the Senate of 30 minutes, and that the agreement be in the usual form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT TO 10 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today it stand in adjournment until the hour of 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF CERTAIN SENATORS ON TOMORROW AND CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 857

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that after the two leaders or their designees have been recognized under the standing order tomorrow, Mr. BROOKE, Mr. GRIFFIN, Mr. BARTLETT, and Mr. TALMADGE each be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes, and that the Senate then proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 857, a joint resolution making further continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1976, and the period ending September 30, 1976, and for other purposes.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF S. 3015, S. 3149, AND H.R. 9721

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that upon the disposition of House Joint Resolution 857, the continuing appropriation resolution on tomorrow, the Senate proceed to the consideration of S. 3015, a bill to provide for the continued expansion and improvement of the Nation's airport and airway system, to streamline the airport grant in aid process and strengthen national airport systems planning, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that upon the disposition of the airport and airway bill, S. 3015, the Senate proceed to the consideration of S. 3149, concerning restrictions on certain toxic substances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that upon the disposition of S. 3149, the Senate proceed to the consideration of H.R. 9721, to provide for increased U.S. participation in the Inter-American Development Bank.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATOR TALMADGE TOMORROW

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Georgia (Mr. TALMADGE) be recognized first among the four Senators to be recognized under the special orders tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senate will convene at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning. After the two leaders or their designees have been recognized under the standing order, the Senator from Georgia (Mr. TALMADGE) will be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes, to be followed by Mr. BROOKE to be followed by Mr. GRIFFIN, to be followed by Mr. BARTLETT, each to be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

Upon the disposition of those special orders, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 857, a joint resolution making further continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1976 and the period ending September 30, 1976. At least one rollcall vote is anticipated on that joint resolution or on amendments thereto, or both; and upon the disposition of that joint resolution the Senate will proceed to take up the Airport and Airway Act, S. 3015, on which there is a time limitation agreement. Hopefully the Senate may dispose of that measure tomorrow. In any event, if it does not, it will resume action thereon on Friday.

Upon the disposition of S. 3015 either tomorrow or Friday, the Senate will move to the toxic substance bill, S. 3149 on which there is a time limitation agreement, and upon the disposition of S. 3149—and there will be rollcall votes on that measure and on motions and amendments in relation to the same—the Senate will then take up H.R. 9721, an act to provide for increased participation by the United States in the Inter-American Development Bank. There is a time limitation agreement on that measure.

So it is rather clear that the Senate will be in session on Friday and there will be rollcall votes, because we have time agreements on these measures. The leadership would like to state that upon the disposition of the Inter-American Development Bank bill, it is the hope that the Senate can proceed to S. 3168, the authorization bill for the Department of State, the U.S. Information Agency, and the Board for International Broadcasting.

Then next week, upon the disposition of all those measures, the leadership would expect to move to the no-fault insurance bill, S. 354. Also waiting in the wings is the food stamp bill, S. 3136, and the other measures that were outlined in my statement of the program previously.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 10 A.M.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, if there be no further business to come before the Senate, I move, in accordance with the previous order, that the Senate stand in adjournment until the hour of 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and at 7:07 p.m. the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, March 25, 1976, at 10 a.m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nomination received by the Senate March 24, 1976:

TITLE IV—COMMISSION TO STUDY PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATING PROCESS

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 401. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to improve the system of nominating candidates for election to the office of the President of the United States by studying such system in a broad manner never before attempted in the two-hundred-year history of this Nation.

Amdt. No. 1436

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION

SEC. 402. (a) There is established the Bicentennial Commission on Presidential Nominations (hereinafter referred to as the "Commission").

(b) The Commission shall be composed of twenty members to be appointed as follows:

(1) six members shall be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, of whom at least two shall be Members of the Senate and at least two shall be elected or appointed State officials;

(2) six members shall be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, of whom at least two shall be Members of the House and at least two shall be elected or appointed State officials;

(3) six members shall be appointed by the President; and

(4) two members shall be the chairman of the two national political parties and shall serve as ex officio members.

(c) At no time shall more than three members appointed under paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of subsection (b) be individuals who are of the same political affiliation.

(d) A vacancy in the Commission shall not affect its powers, and shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made, subject to the same limitations with respect to party affiliations as the original appointment.

(e) Twelve members shall constitute a quorum, but a lesser number may conduct hearings. The Chairman of the Commission shall be selected by the members from among the members, other than ex officio members.

FUNCTIONS OF THE COMMISSION

SEC. 403. (a) The Commission shall make a full and complete investigation with respect to the Presidential nominating process. Such investigation shall include but not be limited to a consideration of—

(1) the manner in which States conduct primaries for the expression of a preference for the nomination of candidates for election to the office of President of the United States and caucuses for the selection of delegates to the national nominating conventions of political parties;

(2) State laws and the rules of national political parties which govern the participation of voters and candidates in such primaries and caucuses;

(3) the financing of campaigns for the nomination of candidates for election to the office of the President of the United States;

(4) the relationship between candidates for election to the office of the President of the United States and the news media, including how candidates achieve public recognition and whether such candidates should be guaranteed access to the television media;

(5) the interrelationship of the elements described in paragraphs (1) through (4) of this section;

(6) alternative nominating systems, including but not limited to a national or regional primary system for the expression of a preference for the nomination of candidates for election to the office of President of the United States and variations on the present nominating system; and

(7) the manner in which candidates are nominated for election to the office of Vice President of the United States.

(b) The Commission shall submit to the President and to the Congress such interim reports as it deems advisable, and not later than one year after the enactment of this resolution, a final report of its study and investigation based upon a full consideration of alternatives to our current Presidential nominating system, including an analysis of the strengths and weaknesses of all such alternatives studied, together with its recommendations as to the best system to establish for the 1980 Presidential elections. The Commission shall cease to exist sixty days after its final report is submitted.

POWERS AND ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SEC. 404. (a) The Commission may, in carrying out the provisions of this joint resolution, sit and act at such times and places, hold such hearings, take such testimony, request the ttendance of such witnesses, administer oaths, have such printing and binding done, and commission studies by any Federal agency or executive department, as the Commission deems advisable.

(b) Per diem and mileage allowances for witnesses requested to appear under the authority conferred by this section shall be paid from funds appropriated to the Commission.

(c) Subject to such rules and regulations as may be adopted by the Commission, the chairman shall have the power to—

(1) appoint and fix the compensation of an executive director, and such additional staff personnel as may be necessary, without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and without regard to chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title relating to classification in General Schedule pay rates, but at such rates not in excess of the maximum rate for GS–18 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of such title; and

(2) procure temporary and intermittent services to the same extent as is authorized by section 3109 of title 5, United States Code, but at rates not to exceed $100 a day for individuals.

COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS

SEC. 405. (a) Members of the Commission who are otherwise employed by the Federal Government shall serve without compensation but shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in carrying out the duties of the Commission.

(b) Members of the Commission not otherwise employed by the Federal Government shall receive per diem at the maximum daily rate for GS-18 of the General Schedule when they are engaged in the performance of their duties as members of the Commission and shall be entitled to reimbursement for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in carrying out the duties of the Commission.

TIMELINESS OF APPOINTMENTS

SEC. 406. It is the sense of the Congress that the appointments of individuals to serve as members of the Commission be completed within ninety days after the enactment of this resolution.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 407. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this resolution.

AMENDMENT

Intended to be proposed by Mr. GRIFFIN to S. 3065, a bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for its administration by a Federal Election Commission appointed in accordance with the requirements of the Constitution, and for other purposes, viz: Strike all after line 5, page 1 and substitute the following:

SEC. 2. (a) The text of paragraph 1 of section 310 (a) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (hereinafter the "Act") (2 U.S.C. 437c (a)) is amended to read as follows: "There is established a Commission to be known as the Federal Election Commission. The Commission is composed of six members, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. No more than three of the members shall be affiliated with the same political party.".

(b) Section 309(a)(2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c (a)(2)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"(2)(A) Members of the Commission shall serve for terms of six years, except that of the members first appointed—

"(i) two of the members, not affiliated with the same political party, shall be appointed for terms ending on April 30, 1977,

"(ii) two of the members, not affiliated with the same political party, shall be appointed for terms ending on April 30, 1979, and

"(iii) two of the members, not affiliated with the same political party, shall be appointed for terms ending on April 30, 1981.

"(B) An individual appointed to fill a vacancy occurring other than by the expiration of a term of office shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member he succeeds.

"(C) Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the Commission shall be filled in the same manner as in the case of the original appointment.".

(c) The provision of section 310(a)(3) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(3)), forbidding appointment to the Federal Election Commission of any person currently elected or appointed as an officer or employee in the executive, legislative, or judicial branch of the Government of the United States, shall not apply to any person appointed under the amendments made by the first section of this Act solely because such person is a member of the Commission on the date of enactment of this Act.

(d) Section 310(a)(4) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(4)) is amended by striking out "(other than the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives)".

(e) Section 310(a)(5) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(5)) is amended by striking out "(other than the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives)".

SEC. 4. All actions heretofore taken by the Commission shall remain in effect until modified, superseded, or repealed according to law.

SEC. 5. The provisions of chapter 14 of title 2, the United States Code, of section 608 of title 18, and of chapters 95 and 96 of title 26 shall not apply to any election, as defined in section 301 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431(a)), that occurs after December 31, 1976, except runoffs relating to elections occurring before such date.

(IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE)

Proposed by Mr. GRIFFIN to S. 3065, a bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for its administration by a Federal Election Commission appointed in accordance with the requirements of the Constitution, and for other purposes, viz: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976".

SEC. 2. (a) The text of paragraph 1 of section 310(a) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (hereinafter the "Act") (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)) is amended to read as follows: "There is established a Commission to be known as the Federal Election Commission. The Commission is composed of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, ex officio, and without the right to vote, and six members appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. No more than three of the members shall be affiliated with the same political party.".

(b) Section 310(a)(2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c (a)(2)), is amended to read as follows:

"(2)(A) Members of the Commission shall serve for terms of six years, except that of the members first appointed—

"(i) two of the members, not affiliated with the same political party, shall be appointed for terms ending on April 30, 1977,

"(ii) two of the members, not affiliated with the same political party, shall be appointed for terms ending on April 30, 1979, and

"(iii) two of the members, not affiliated with the same political party, shall be appointed for terms ending on April 30, 1981.

"(B) An individual appointed to fill a vacancy occurring other than by the expiration of a term of office shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member he succeeds.

"(C) Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the Commission shall be filled in the same manner as in the case of the original appointment.".

SEC. 3. (1) The President shall appoint members of the Federal Election Commission under section 310(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)), as amended by this Act, as soon as practicable after the date of the enactment.

(2) The first appointments made by the President under section 310(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)), as amended by this section, shall not be considered to be appointments to fill the unexpired terms of members serving on the Federal Election Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(3) Members serving on the Federal Election Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act may continue to serve as such members until all six of the members of the Commission are appointed and qualified under section 310(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)), as redesignated by section 105 and as amended by this section. Until all six of the members of the Commission are appointed and qualified under the amendments made by this Act, members serving on such Commission on the date of enactment of this Act may exercise only such powers and functions as are consistent with the determinations of the Supreme Court of the United States in Buckley et al. against Valeo, Secretary of the United States Senate, et al. (numbered 75–436, 75–437) January 30, 1976.

SEC. 4. The provisions of section 310 (a) (3) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c (a) (3)), which prohibit any individual from being appointed as a member of the Federal Election Commission who is, at the time of his appointment, an elected or appointed officer or employee of the executive, legislative, or judicial branch of the Federal Government, shall not apply in the case of any individual serving as a member of such Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 5. (1) All personnel, liabilities, contracts, property, and records determined by the Director of the Office of Management and Budget to be employed, held, or used primarily in connection with the functions of the Federal Election Commission under title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 as such title existed on January 1, 1976, or under any other provision of law are transferred to the Federal Election Commission as constituted under the amendments made by this Act to the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

(2) (A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, personnel engaged in functions transferred under paragraph (1) shall be transferred in accordance with applicable laws and regulations relating to the transfer of functions.

(B) The transfer of personnel pursuant to paragraph (1) shall be without reduction in classification or compensation for one year after such transfer.

(3) All laws relating to the functions transferred under this Act shall, insofar as such laws are applicable and not amended by this Act, remain in full force and effect. All orders, determinations, rules, advisory opinions, and opinions of counsel made, issued, or granted by the Federal Election Commission before its reconstitution under the amendments made by this Act which are in effect at the time of the transfer provided by paragraph (1) shall continue in effect to the same extent as if such transfer had not occurred.

(4) The provisions of this Act shall not affect any proceeding pending before the Federal Election Commission at the time this section takes effect.

(5) No suit, action, or other proceeding commenced by or against the Federal Election Commission or any officer or employee thereof acting in his official capacity shall abate by reason of the transfer made under paragraph (1). The court before which such suit, action, or other proceeding is pending may, on motion or supplemental petition filed at any time within twelve months after the date of enactment of this Act, allow such suit, action, or other proceeding to be maintained against the Federal Election Commission if the party making the motion or filing the petition shows a necessity for the survival of the suit, action, or other proceeding to obtain a settlement of the question involved.

(6) Any reference in any other Federal law to the Federal Election Commission, or to any member or employee thereof, as such Commission existed under the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 before its amendment by this Act shall be held and considered to refer to the Federal Election Commission, or the members or employees thereof, as such Commission exists under the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 as amended by this Act.

SEC. 6. By addition to section 610 of title 18, United States Code, at the end thereof ", except that expenditures for any such communications which expressly advocate the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate must be reported to the Commission in accordance with section 434 (e)".

TITLE IV—ASSISTANCE FOR CONGRESSIONAL CAMPAIGN COMMUNICATIONS AMENDMENT OF 1971 ACT

SEC. 401. (a) The Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new title:

Amdt. No. 1507

"TITLE V—CONGRESSIONAL CAMPAIGN COMMUNICATIONS ASSISTANCE BROADCAST TIME

"SEC. 501. (a) Each station licensee shall make available to eligible congressional candidates without charge for campaign broadcasts—

"(1) in the case of a primary, general, or special election, an amount of broadcast time equal in value to the amount of such time a candidate could purchase at the rate required by section 315 (b) (1) of the Communications Act of 1934 (determined without regard to the date of the broadcast), for the lesser of—

"(A) $200,000, or

"(B) 5 cents multiplied by the number of qualified voters in the district in which the candidate seeks election, and

"(2) in the case of a runoff election, an amount euqal to one-half of the amount which would be determined under paragraph (1).

"(b) In any broadcast area served by more than one television station licensee, or more than one radio station licensee, or both, the obligation imposed on licensees by subsection (a) shall be allocated among the television station licensees and among the radio station licensees on an equitable basis so that a candidate is entitled to the same total amount of broadcast time by radio and by television in such area as that to which he would be entitled if such area were served only by one radio station or only by one television station.

"(c) (1) A television station licensee shall make the use of its facilities available to candidates under this section for broadcast during the period beginning at 6 o'clock postmeridian local time and ending at 11 o'clock postmeridian local time on any day on which the use of such facilities is made available and a radio station licensee shall make the use of its facilities available to candidates under this section for broadcast at prime listening times as determined under regulations promulgated by the Federal Communications Commission.

"(2) No broadcast time during which a candidate appears on any regularly scheduled news report or regularly scheduled public affairs program broadcast by a station licensee shall be deducted from the broadcast time to which that candidate is entitled under this section.

"(d) The Federal Communications Commission, after consultation with the Federal Elections Commissions shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section, and may grant variances from the requirements of this section whenever it determines that any requested variance is not inconsistent with the purposes of this section.

"TELEPHONE SERVICE

"SEC. 502. (a) Any telephone company regulated by the Federal Communications Commission under title II of the Communications Act of 1934, or any telephone company with lines or facilities interconnected with the lines or facilities of such a regulated telephone company, shall make available to eligible congressional candidates without charge, fee, or deposit the use of its facilities and services to the extent that the value of the facilities and services furnished to such candidate under this section does not exceed an amount equal to 1 cent multiplied by the number of qualified voters in the district in which the candidate seeks election, or $100,000, whichever is less.

"(b) The Federal Communications Commission, after consultation with the Federal Elections Commission, shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section, and may grant variances from the requirements of this section whenever it determines that any requested variance is not inconsistent with the purposes of this section.

"CAMPAIGN MAIL

"SEC. 503. (a) Each eligible congressional candidate in a primary, general, or special election is authorized to make mailings of his campaign material free of postage.

"(b) The provisions of subsection (a) apply to only so much free postage as does not exceed an amount equal to 1 cent multiplied by the number of qualified voters in the district in which the candidate seeks election, or $100,000, whichever is less.

"(c) In the case of a runoff election, an eligible candidate shall receive an amount equal to one-half of the amount which would be determined under paragraph (b).

"(d) The United States Postal Service, after consultation with the Federal Election Commission, shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

"(e) There are authorized to be appropriated to the United States Postal Service an amount equal to the postage that would have been paid on the campaign material mailed in accordance with this section if this section had not been enacted.

"DEFINITIONS: ADJUSTMENT OF AMOUNTS

"SEC. 504. (a) For purposes of this title—

"(1) the term 'eligible congressional candidate' means a candidate (as defined in section 301(b) of this Act) for nomination for election, or for election, as a United States Senator, Representative, Resident Commissioner, or Delegate who is certified by the Federal Election Commission as having obtained the signatures of the lesser of—

"(A) 3 per centum of the qualified voters in the State or district in which he seeks nomination or election, or

"(B) one hundred and fifty thousand qualified voters;

"(2) the term 'district' means State in the case of a senatorial candidate,

"(3) the term 'qualified voters' means registered voters or, if a State does not provide for permanent registration of voters, individuals qualified to vote in the most recently conducted general election for Federal, State, districtwide office, and

"(4) the term 'station licensee' has the same meaning as it has in the Communications Act of 1934.

"(b) Candidates shall file qualifying petitions with the Secretary of State (or, if there is no office of Secretary of State, the equivalent State officer) of the appropriate State, who shall either accept or reject such petition within fifteen days.

"(c) The Federal Election Commission shall not certify any candidate as an eligible congressional candidate unless the signatures on such petition are verified by the State election officials pursuant to paragraph (b) of this section.

"SEC. 505. At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1977) the value of the time which a station licensee is obligated to make available to eligible candidates under section 501, the value of the telephone service made available under section 502, and the amount of free postage made available under section 503, shall be increased over the amounts set forth in such sections by the per centum difference determined for adjustments under section 320 (c) of this Act.".

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976".

Amdt. No. 1516

TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION MEMBERSHIP

SEC. 101. (a) (1) The second sentence of section 309 (a) (1) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 437c (a) (1)), as redesignated by section 105 (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Act"), is amended to read as follows: "The Commission is composed of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, ex officio and without the right to vote, and eight members appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.".

(2) The last sentence of section 309 (a) (1) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c (a) (1)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows: "No more than three members of the Commission appointed under this paragraph may be affiliated with the same political party, and at least two members appointed under this paragraph shall not be affiliated with any political party.".

(b) Section 309 (a) (2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c (a) (2)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"(2) (A) Members of the Commission shall serve for terms of eight years, except that of the members first appointed—

"(i) two of the members, not affiliated with the same political party, shall be appointed for terms ending on April 30, 1977,

"(ii) two of the members, not affiliated with the same political party, shall be appointed for terms ending on April 30, 1979,

"(iii) two of the members, not affiliated with the same political party, shall be appointed for terms ending on April 30, 1981, and

"(iv) two of the members, not affiliated with the same political party, shall be appointed for terms ending on April 30, 1983.

"(B) An individual appointed to fill a vacancy occurring other than by the expiration of a term of office shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member he succeeds.

"(C) Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the Commission shall be filled in the same manner as in the case of the original appointment.".

(c) (1) Section 309(b) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c (b)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"(b) (1) The Commission shall administer, seek to obtain compliance with, and formulate policy with respect to, this Act and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. The Commission shall have exclusive and primary jurisdiction with respect to the civil enforcement of such provisions.

"(2) Nothing in this Act shall be construed to limit, restrict, or diminish any investigatory, informational, oversight, supervisory, or disciplinary authority or function of the Congress or any committee of the Congress with respect to elections for Federal office.".

(2) The first sentence of section 309(e) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(e)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof the following: ", except that the affirmative vote of five members of the Commission shall be required in order for the Commission to establish guidelines for compliance with the provisions of this Act or with chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or for the Commission to take any action in accordance with paragraph (6), (7), (8), or (10) of section 310(a)".

(d) The last sentence of section 309(f)(1) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(f)(1)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the period the following: "without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service or the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates".

(e) (1) The President shall appoint members of the Federal Election Commission under section 309(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)), as redesignated by section 105 and as amended by this section, as soon as practicable after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) The first appointments made by the President under section 309(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)), as redesignated by section 105 and as amended by this section, shall not be considered to be appointments to fill the unexpired terms of members serving on the Federal Election Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(3) Members serving on the Federal Election Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act may continue to serve as such members until a majority of the members of the Commission are appointed and qualified under section 309(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)), as redesignated by section 105 and as amended by this section. Until a majority of the members of the Commission are appointed and qualified under the amendments made by this Act, members serving on such Commission on the date of enactment of this Act may exercise only such powers and functions as are consistent with the determinations of the Supreme Court of the United States in Buckley et al. against Valeo, Secretary of the United States Senate, et al. (numbered 75-436, 75-437) January 30, 1976.

(f) The provisions of section 309(a)(3) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(3)), as redesignated by section 105, which prohibit any individual from being appointed as a member of the Federal Election Commission who is, at the time of his appointment, an elected or appointed officer or employee of the executive, legislative, or judicial branch of the Federal Government, shall not apply in the case of any individual serving as a member of such Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(g)(1) All personnel, liabilities, contracts, property, and records determined by the Director of the Office of Management and Budget to be employed, held, or used primarily in connection with the functions of the Federal Election Commission under title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 as such title existed on January 1, 1976, or under any other provision of law are transferred to the Federal Election Commission as constituted under the amendments made by this Act to the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, personnel engaged in functions transferred under paragraph (1) shall be transferred in accordance with applicable laws and regulations relating to the transfer of functions.

(B) The transfer of personnel pursuant to paragraph (1) shall be without reduction in classification or compensation for one year after such transfer.

(3) All laws relating to the functions transferred under this Act shall, insofar as such laws are applicable and not amended by this Act, remains in full force and effect. All orders, determinations, rules, advisory opinions, and opinions of counsel made, issued, or granted by the Federal Election Commission before its reconstitution under the amendments made by this Act which are in effect at the time of the transfer provided by paragraph (1) shall continue in effect to the same extent as if such transfer had not occurred.

(4) The provisions of this Act shall not affect any proceeding pending before the Federal Election Commission at the time this section takes effect.

(5) No suit, action, or other proceeding commenced by or against the Federal Election Commission or any officer or employee thereof acting in his official capacity shall abate by reason of the transfer made under paragraph (1). The court before which such suit, action, or other proceeding is pending may, on motion or supplemental petition filed at any time within twelve months after the date of enactment of this Act, allow such suit, action, or other proceeding to be maintained against the Federal Election Commission if the party making the motion or filing the petition shows a necessity for the survival of the suit, action, or other proceeding to obtain a settlement of the question involved.

(6) Any reference in any other Federal law to the Federal Election Commission, or to any member or employee thereof, as such Commission existed under the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 before its amendment by this Act shall be held and considered to refer to the Federal Election Commission, or the members or employees thereof, as such Commission exists under the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 as amended by this Act.

CHANGES IN DEFINITIONS

SEC. 102. (a) Section 301 (a) (2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431 (a) (2)) is amended by striking out "held to" and inserting in lieu thereof "which has authority to".

(b) Section 301 (e) (2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431 (e) (2)) is amended by inserting "written" immediately before "contract".

of the individual rendering such services), other than services attributable to activities which directly further the election of a designated candidate or candidates to Federal office, nor shall this paragraph apply in the case of legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of a candidate or political committee solely for the purpose of insuring compliance with the provisions of this Act or chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (unless the person paying for such services is a person other than the employer of the individual rendering such services), but amounts paid or incurred for such legal or accounting services shall be reported in accordance with the requirements of section 304(b)".

(d) Section 301(e)(5) is amended—

(1) by striking out "or" at the end of clause (E),

(2) by inserting "or" at the end of clause (F), and

(3) by inserting after clause (F) the following new clause:

"(G) a loan of money by a National or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations and in the ordinary course of business, but such loans—

"(i) shall be reported in accordance with the requirements of section 304(b); and

"(ii) shall be considered a loan by each endorser or guarantor, in that proportion of the unpaid balance thereof that each endorser or guarantor bears to the total number of endorsers or guarantors;".

(e) Section 301(e)(5) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431(e)(5)) is amended by striking out "individual" where it appears after clause (G) and inserting in lieu thereof "person".

(f) Section 301(f)(4) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431(f)(4)) is amended—

(1) by inserting before the semicolon in clause (B) the following: ", or partisan activity designed to encourage individuals to register to vote, or to vote, conducted by the national committee of a political party, or a subordinate committee thereof, or the State committee of a national party, but such partisan activity shall be reported in accordance with the requirements of section 304".

(2) by striking out "or" at the end of clause (F) and at the end of clause (G); and

(3) by inserting immediately after clause (H) the following new clauses:

"(I) any costs incurred by a candidate in connection with the solicitation of contributions by such candidate except that this clause shall not apply with respect to costs incurred by a candidate in excess of an amount equal to 20 percent of the expenditure limitation applicable to such candidate under section 320(b), but all such costs shall be reported in accordance with section 304(b);

"(J) the payment, by any person other than a candidate or political committee, of compensation for legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of the national committee of a political party (unless the person paying for such services is a person other than the employer of the individual rendering such services), other than services attributable to activities which directly further the election of a designated candidate or candidates to Federal office, or the payment for legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of a candidate or political committee solely for the purpose of insuring compliance with the provision of this title or of chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (unless the person paying for such services is a person other than the employer of the individual rendering such services), but amounts paid or incurred for such legal or accounting services shall be reported under section 304(b); or

"(K) a loan of money by a national or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations and in the ordinary course of business, but such loan shall be reported in accordance with section 304(b);".

(g) Section 301 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (m);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (n) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(o) 'Act' means the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 as amended by the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 and the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976.".

ORGANIZATION OF POLITICAL COMMITTEES

SEC. 103. (a) Section 302(b) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 432(b)) is amended by striking out "$10" and inserting in lieu thereof "$100".

(b) Section 302(c)(2) of such Act (2 U.S.C. 432(c)(2)) is amended by striking out "$10" and inserting in lieu thereof "$100".

(c) Section 302 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 432) is amended by striking out subsection (e) and by redesignating subsection (f) as subsection (e).

REPORTS BY POLITICAL COMMITTEES AND CANDIDATES

SEC. 104. (a) Section 304(a)(1) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(a)(1)) is amended by adding at the end of subparagraph (C) the following: "In any year in which a candidate is not on the ballot for election to Federal office, such candidate and his authorized committees shall only be required to file such reports not later than the tenth day following the close of any calendar quarter in which the candidate and his authorized committees received contributions or made expenditures, or both, the total amount of which, taken together, exceeds $5,000, and such reports shall be complete as of the close of such calendar quarter; except that any such report required to be filed after December 31 of any calendar year with respect to which a report is required to be filed under subparagraph (B) shall be filed as provided in such subparagraph.".

(b) Section 304(a)(2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(a)(2)) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) Each treasurer of a political committee authorized by a candidate to raise contributions or make expenditures on his behalf, other than the candidate's principal campaign committee, shall file the reports required under this section with the candidate's principal campaign committee.".

(c) Section 304(b) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(b)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (12);

(2) by redesignating paragraph (13) as paragraph (14); and

(3) by inserting immediately after paragraph (12) the following new paragraph:

"(13) in the case of expenditures in excess of $100 by a political committee other than an authorized committee of a candidate expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, through a separate schedule (A) any information required by paragraph (9), stated in a manner which indicates whether the expenditure involved is in support of, or in opposition to, a candidate; and (B) under penalty of perjury, a certification whether such expenditure is made in cooperation, consultation, or concert, with, or at the request or suggestion of, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate; and".

(d) Section 304(e) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(e)) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) (1) Every person (other than a political committee or candidate) who makes contributions or expenditures expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, other than by contribution to a political committee or candidate, in an aggregate amount in excess of $100 within a calendar year shall file with the Commission, on a form prepared by the Commission, a statement containing the information required of a person who makes a contribution in excess of $100 to a candidate or political committee and the information required of a candidate or political committee receiving such a contribution.

"(2) A corporation, labor organization, or other membership organization which explicitly advocates the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate through a communication with its stockholders or members or their families shall, notwithstanding the provisions of section 301(f)(4)(C), report such expenditures under paragraph (1) to the extent that they are directly attributable to such communications.

"(3) Statements required by this subsection shall be filed on the dates on which reports by political committees are filed. Such statements shall include (A) the information required by subsection (b)(9), stated in a manner indicating whether the contribution or expenditure is in support of, or opposition to, the candidate; and (B) under penalty of perjury, a certification whether such expenditure is made in cooperation, consultation, or concert, with, or at the request or suggesting of, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate. Any expenditure, including but not limited to those described in subsection (b) (13), of $1,000 or more made after the fifteenth day, but more than forty-eight hours, before any election shall be reported within forty-eight hours of such expenditure.

"(4) The Commission shall be responsible for expeditiously preparing indices which set forth, on a candidate-by-candidate basis, all expenditures separately, including but not limited to those reported under subsection (b) (13), made with respect to each candidate, as reported under this subsection, and for periodically issuing such indices on a timely pre-election basis.".

REPORTS BY CERTAIN PERSONS

SEC. 105. Title III of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431–441) is amended by striking out section 308 thereof (2 U.S.C. 437a) and by redesignating section 309 through section 321 as section 308 through section 320, respectively.

POWERS OF COMMISSION

SEC. 106. (a) Section 310(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437d(a)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (8) thereof, by inserting "develop such prescribed forms and to" immediately before "make", and by inserting immediately after "Act" the following: "and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954";

(2) in paragraph (9) thereof, by striking out "and sections 608" and all that follows through "States Code" and inserting in lieu thereof "and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954"; and

(3) by striking out paragraph (10) and redesignating paragraph (11) as paragraph (10).

(b) (1) Section 310 (a) (6) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437d (a) (6)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"(6) to initiate (through civil actions for injunctive, declaratory, or other appropriate relief), defend (in the case of any civil action brought under section 313 (a) (9)), or appeal any civil action in the name of the Commission for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this Act and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, through its general counsel;".

(2) Section 310 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437d), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) Except as provided in section 313 (a) (9), the power of the Commission to initiate civil actions under subsection (a) (6) shall be the exclusive civil remedy for the enforcement of the provisions of this Act.".

ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 107. Section 313 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437g) as redesignated by section105, is amended to read as follows:

"ENFORCEMENT

"SEC. 313. (a) (1) Any person who believes a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, has occurred may file a complaint with the Commission. Such complaint shall be in writing, shall be signed and sworn to by the person filing such complaint, and shall be notarized. Any person filing such a complaint shall be subject to the provisions of section 1001 of title 18, United States Code. The Commission may not conduct any investigation under this section, or take any other action under this section, solely on the basis of a complaint of a person whose identity is not disclosed to the Commission.

"(2) The Commission, upon receiving a complaint under paragraph (1), or if it has reason to believe that any person has committed a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, shall notify the person involved of such alleged violation and shall make an investigation of such alleged violation in accordance with the provisions of this section.

"(3) Any investigation under paragraph (2) shall be conducted expeditiously and shall include an investigation, conducted in accordance with the provisions of this section, of reports and statements filed by any complainant under this title, if such complainant is a candidate. Any notification or investigation made under paragraph (2) shall not be made public by the Commission or by any other person without the written consent of the person receiving such notification or the person with respect to whom such investigation is made.

"(4) The Commission shall afford any person who receives notice of an alleged violation under paragraph (2) a reasonable opportunity to demonstrate that no action should be taken against such person by the Commission under this Act.

"(5) (A) If the Commission determines that there is reason to believe that any person has committed or is about to commit a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the Commission shall make every endeavor to correct or prevent such violation by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion, and to enter into a conciliation agreement with the person involved. A conciliation agreement, unless violated, shall constitute an absolute bar to any further action by the Commission with respect to the violation which is the subject of the agreement, including bringing a civil proceeding under paragraph (B) of this section.

"(B) If the Commission is unable to correct or prevent any such violation by such informal methods, the Commission may, if the Commission determines there is probable cause to believe that a violation has occurred or is about to occur, institute a civil action for relief, including a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or any other appropriate order, including a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of $5,000 or an amount equal to the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, in the district court of the United States for the district in which the person against whom such action is found, resides or transacts business.

"(C) In any civil action instituted by the Commission under paragraph (B), the court shall grant a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order, including a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of $5,000 or an amount equal to the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, upon a proper showing that the person involved has engaged or is about to engage in a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

"(D) If the Commission determines that there is probable cause to believe that a knowing and willful violation under section 328(a), or a knowing and willful violation of a provision of chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, has occurred or is about to occur, it may refer such apparent violation to the Attorney General of the United States without regard to the limitations set forth in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph.

"(6) (A) If the Commission believes that there is clear and convincing proof that a knowing and willful violation of the Act or chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has been committed, any conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission under paragraph (5) (A) may include a requirement that the person involved in such conciliation agreement shall pay a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of (i) $10,000; or (ii) an amount equal to 300 percent of the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation.

"(B) If the Commission believes that a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has been committed, a conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission under paragraph (5) (A) may include a requirement that the person involved in such conciliation agreement shall pay a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of (i) $5,000; or (ii) an amount equal to the amount of the contribution or expenditure involved in such violation.

"(7) The Commission shall make available to the public the results of any conciliation attempt, including any conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission, and any determination by the Commission that no violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has occurred.

"(8) In any civil action for relief instituted by the Commission under paragraph (5), if the court determines that the Commission has established through clear and convincing proof that the person involved in such civil action has committed a knowing and willful violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the court may impose a civil penalty of not more than the greater of (A) $10,000; or (B) an amount equal to 300 percent of the contribution or expenditure involved in such violation. In any case in which such person has entered into a conciliation agreement with the Commission under paragraph (5) (A), the Commission may institute a civil action for relief under paragraph (5) if it believes that such person has violated any provision of such conciliation agreement. In order for the Commission to obtain relief in any such civil action, it shall be sufficient for the Commission to establish that such person has violated, in whole or in part, any requirement of such conciliation agreement.

"(9) In any action brought under paragraph (5) or paragraph (8) of this subsection, subpenas for witnesses who are required to attend a United States district court may run into any other district.

"(10) (A) Any party aggrieved by an order of the Commission dismissing a complaint filed by such party under paragraph (1), or by a failure on the part of the Commission to act on such complaint in accordance with the provisions of this section within ninety days after the filing of such complaint, may file a petition with the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.

"(B) The filing of any action under subparagraph (A) shall be made—

"(i) in the case of the dismissal of a complaint by the Commission, no later than sixty days after such dismissal; or

"(ii) in the case of a failure on the part of the Commission to act on such complaint, no later than sixty days after the ninety-day period specified in subparagraph (A).

"(C) In such proceeding the court may declare that the dismissal of the complaint or the action, or the failure to act, is contrary to law and may direct the Commission to proceed in conformity with that declaration within thirty days, failing which the complainant may bring in his own name a civil action to remedy the violation complained of.

"(11) The judgment of the district court may be appealed to the court of appeals and the judgment of the court of appeals affirming or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the district court shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

"(12) Any action brought under this subsection shall be advanced on the docket of the court in which filed, and put ahead of all other actions (other than other actions brought under this subsection or under section 314).

"(13) If the Commission determines after an investigation that any person has violated an order of the court entered in a proceeding brought under paragraph (5) it may petition the court for an order to adjudicate that person in civil contempt, or, if it believes the violation to be knowing and willful, it may instead petition the court for an order to adjudicate that person in criminal contempt.

"(b) In any case in which the Commission refers an apparent violation to the Attorney General, the Attorney General shall respond by report to the Commission with respect to any action taken by the Attorney General regarding such apparent violation. Each report shall be transmitted no later than sixty days after the date the Commission refers any apparent violation, and at the close of every thirty-day period thereafter until there is final disposition of such apparent violation. The Commission may from time to time prepare and publish reports on the status of such referrals.".

DUTIES OF COMMISSION

SEC. 108. (a) Section 315 (a) (6) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438 (a) (6)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", and to compile and maintain a separate cumulative index of reports and statements filed with it by political committees supporting more than one candidate, which shall include a listing of the date of the registration of any such political committee and the date upon which any such political committee qualifies to make expenditures under section 320, and which shall be revised on the same basis and at the same time as the other cumulative indices required under this paragraph".

(b) Section 315 (c) (2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438 (c) (2)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by striking out "30 legislative days" in the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "30 calendar days or 15 legislative days, whichever is later,".

ADDITIONAL ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITY

SEC. 109. Section 407 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 456) is repealed.

CONTRIBUTION AND EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS; OTHER LIMITATIONS

SEC. 110. Title III of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431-441) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" before "No" in section 318 (2 U.S.C. 439b), as redesignated by section 105 of this Act;

(2) by adding the following new subsection at the end of section 318 (2 U.S.C. 439b), as redesignated by section 105 of this Act:

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no Senator, Representative, Resident Commissioner, or Delegate shall mail as franked mail under section 3210 of title 39, United States Code, any general mass mailing when such mailing is mailed at or delivered to any postal facility less than sixty days prior to the date of any primary or general election in which such Senator, Representative, Resident Commissioner, or Delegate is a candidate for Federal office. For purposes of this subsection the term 'general mass mailing' means newsletters and similar mailings of more than five hundred pieces the content of which is substantially identical and which are mailed to or delivered to any postal facility at the same time or several different times.";

(3) by striking out section 320 (2 U.S.C. 441), as redesignated by section 105 of this Act; and

(4) by inserting after section 319 (2 U.S.C. 439c), as redesignated by such section 105, the following new sections:

"LIMITATIONS ON CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

"SEC. 320. (a) (1) No person shall make contributions—

"(A) to any candidate and his authorized political committees with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $1,000;

"(B) to any political committee established and maintained by a political party, which is not the authorized political committee of any candidate, in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $25,000; or

"(C) to any other political committee in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000.

"(2) No multi-candidate political committee shall make contributions—

"(A) to any candidate and his authorized political committees with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000;

"(B) to any political committee established and maintained by a political party, which is not the authorized committee of any candidate in any calendar year, which, in the aggregate, exceed $25,000; or

"(C) to any other political committee in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $10,000.

The limitations on contributions contained in paragraph (2) do not apply to transfers between and among political committees which are national, State, district, or local committees (including any subordinate committee thereof) of the same political party. For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'multi-candidate political committee' means a political committee which has been registered under section 303 for a period of not less than six months, which has received contributions from more than fifty persons, and, except for any State political party organization, has made contributions to five or more candidates for Federal office.

"(3) For purposes of the limitations under paragraphs (1) and (2), all contributions made by political committees established, financed, maintained, or controlled by any person or persons, including any parent, subsidiary, branch, division, department, affiliate, or local unit of such person, or by any group of persons, shall be considered to have been made by a single political committee, except that (A) nothing in this sentence shall limit transfers between political committees of funds raised through joint fund-raising efforts; (B) this sentence shall not apply so that contributions made by a political party through a single national committee and contributions by that party through a single State committee in each State are treated as having been made by a single political committee; and (C) a political committee of a national organization shall not be precluded from contributing to a candidate or committee merely because of its affiliation with a national multicandidate political committee which has made the maximum contribution it is permitted to make to a candidate or a committee.

"(4) No individual shall make contributions aggregating more than $25,000 in any calendar year. For purposes of this paragraph, any contribution made to a candidate in a year other than the calendar year in which the election is held with respect to which such contribution was made, is considered to be made during the calendar year in which such election is held.

"(5) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) contributions to a named candidate made to any political committee authorized by such candidate to accept contributions on his behalf shall be considered to be contributions made to such candidate;

"(B) (i) expenditures made by any person in cooperation, consultation, or concert, with, or at the request or suggestion of, a candidate, his authorized political committees, or their agents, shall be considered to be a contribution to such candidate;

"(ii) the financing by any person of the dissemination, distribution, or republication, in whole or in part, of any broadcast or any written, graphic, or other form of campaign materials prepared by the candidate, his campaign committees, or their authorized agents shall be considered to be an expenditure for purposes of this paragraph; and

"(C) contributions made to or for the benefit of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be contributions made to or for the benefit of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States.

"(6) The limitations imposed by paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection (other than the annual limitation on contributions to a political committee under paragraph (2)(B)) shall apply separately with respect to each election, except that all elections held in any calendar year for the office of President of the United States (except a general election for such office) shall be considered to be one election.

"(7) For purposes of the limitations imposed by this section, all contributions made by a person, either directly or indirectly, on behalf of a particular candidate, including contributions which are in any way earmarked or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to such candidate, shall be treated as contributions from such person to such candidate. The intermediary or conduit shall report the original source and the intended recipient of such contribution to the Commission and to the intended recipient.

"(b) (1) No candidate for the office of President of the United States who is eligible under section 9003 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to condition for eligibility for payments) or under section 9033 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to eligibility for payments) to receive payments from the Secretary of the Treasury may make expenditures in excess of—

"(A) $10,000,000, in the case of a campaign for nomination for election to such office, except the aggregate of expenditures under this subparagraph in any one State shall not exceed the greater of 16 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State (as certified under subsection (e)), or $200,000; or

"(B) $20,000,000 in the case of a campaign for election to such office.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be expenditures made by or on behalf of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States; and

"(B) an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a Vice Presidential candidate, if it is made by—

"(i) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for the purposes of making any expenditure; or

"(ii) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, or an agent of the candidate, to make the expenditure.

"(c) (1) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1976), as there become available necessary data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register the percent difference between the price index for the twelve months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each limitation established by subsection (b) and subsection (d) shall be increased by such percent difference. Each amount so increased shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) the term 'price index' means the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics; and

"(B) the term 'base period' means the calendar year 1974.

"(d) (1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law with respect to limitations on expenditures or limitations on contributions, the national committee of a political party and a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may make expenditures in connection with the general election campaign of candidates for Federal office, subject to the limitations contained in paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection.

"(2) The national committee of a political party may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of any candidate for President of the United States who is affiliated with such party which exceeds an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States (as certified under subsection (e)). Any expenditure under this paragraph shall be in addition to any expenditure by a national committee of a political party serving as the principal campaign committee of a candidate for the office of the President of the United States.

"(3) The national committee of a political party, or a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate for Federal office in a State who is affiliated with such party which exceeds—

"(A) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Senator, or of Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, the greater of—

"(i) 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State (as certified under subsection (e)); or

"(ii) $20,000; and

"(B) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner in any other State, $10,000.

"(e) During the first week of January 1975, and every subsequent year, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, of each State, and of each congressional district as of the first day of July next preceding the date of certification. The term 'voting age population' means resident population, eighteen years of age or older.

"(f) No candidate or political committee shall knowingly accept any contribution or make any expenditure in violation of the provisions of this section. No officer or employee of a political committee shall knowingly accept a contribution made for the benefit or use of a candidate, or knowingly make any expenditure on behalf of a candidate, in violation of any limitation imposed on contributions and expenditures under this section.

"(g) The Commission shall prescribe rules under which any expenditure by a candidate for Presidential nomination for use in two or more States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

"(h) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, amounts totaling not more than $20,000 may be contributed to a candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to the United States Senate or House of Representatives, during the year in which an election is held in which he is such a candidate, by the Republican or Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, the Democratic National Congressional Committee, the National Republican Congressional Committee, or the national committee of a political party, or any combination of such committees.

"CONTRIBUTIONS OR EXPENDITURES BY NATIONAL BANKS, CORPORATIONS, OR LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

"SEC. 321. (a) It is unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress, to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election to any political office, or in connection with any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any political office, or for any corporation whatever, or any labor organization to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election at which Presidential and Vice Presidential electors or a Senator or Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, Congress are to be voted for, in connection with any primary election or political convention, or caucus held to select candidates for any of the foregoing offices, or for any candidate, political committee, or other person to accept or receive any contribution prohibited by this section, or for any officer or any director of any corporation or any national bank or any officer of any labor organization to consent to any contribution or expenditure by the corporation, national bank, or labor organization, as the case may be, prohibited by this section.

"(b) (1) For the purposes of this section 'labor organization' means any organization of any kind, or any agency or employee representation committee or plan, in which employees participate and which exist for the purpose, in whole or in part, of dealing with employers concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or conditions of work. As used in this section and in section 12(h) of the Public Utility Holding Company Act (15 U.S.C. 79l(h)), the phrase 'contribution or expenditure' shall include any direct or indirect payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money, or any services, or anything of value (except a loan of money by a national or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations and in the ordinary course of business) to any candidate, campaign committee, or political party or organization, in connection with any election to any of the offices referred to in this section; but shall not include communications by a corporation to its stockholders and executive or administrative personnel and their families or by a labor organization to its members and their families on any subject; nonpartisan registration and get-out-the-vote campaigns by a corporation aimed at its stockholders and executive or administrative personnel and their families, or by a labor organization aimed at its members and their families; or the establishment, administration, and solicitation of contributions to a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes by a corporation or labor organization, or by a membership organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock.

"(2) It shall be unlawful—

"(A) for such a fund to make a contribution or expenditure by utilizing money or anything of value secured by physical force, job discrimination, financial reprisals, or the threat of force, job discrimination, or financial reprisal; or by dues, fees, or other moneys required as a condition of membership in a labor organization or as a condition of employment, or by moneys obtained in any commercial transaction;

"(B) for an employee to solicit a subordinate employee;

"(C) for any person soliciting an employee for a contribution to such a fund to fail to inform such employee of the political purposes of such fund at the time of such solicitation; and

"(D) for any person soliciting an employee for a contribution to such a fund to fail to inform such employee, at the time of such solicitation, of his right to refuse to so contribute without any reprisal.

"(3) (A) Except as provided in subparagraphs (B) and (C), it shall be unlawful—

"(i) for a corporation, or a separate segregated fund established by a corporation, to solicit contributions to such a fund from any person other than its stockholders and their families and its executive or administrative personnel and their families, and

"(ii) for a labor organization, or a separate segregated fund established by a labor organization, to solicit contributions to such a fund from any person other than its members and their families.

"(B) It shall not be unlawful under this section for a corporation, a labor organization, or a separate segregated fund established by a corporation or a labor organization, to solicit in writing one contribution during the calendar year for use in connection with primary election campaigns, and one contribution during the calendar year for use in connection with general election campaigns, from any stockholder, officer, or employee of a corporation or the families of such persons. A solicitation under this subparagraph may be made only by mail addressed to the stockholder, officer, or employee at his residence, and shall be so designed that the corporation, labor organization, or separate segregated fund conducting such solicitation cannot determine who makes a contribution as a result of such solicitation and who does not.

"(C) This paragraph shall not prevent a membership organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock, or a separate segregated fund established by a membership organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock, from soliciting contributions to such a fund from members of such organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock.

"(4) Notwithstanding any other law, any method of soliciting voluntary contributions or of facilitating the making of voluntary contributions to a separate segregated fund established by a corporation, permitted to corporations, shall also be permitted to labor organizations.

"(5) Any corporation that utilizes a method of soliciting voluntary contributions or facilitating the making of voluntary contributions, shall make available, on written request, that method, to a labor organization representing any members working for that corporation.

"(6) For purposes of this section, the term 'executive or administrative personnel' means individuals employed by a corporation who are paid on a salary, rather than hourly, basis and who have policymaking or supervisory responsibilities.

"(7) For purposes of this section, the term 'stockholder' includes any individual who has a legal or vested beneficial interest in stock, including, but not limited to, an employee of a corporation who participates in a stock bonus, stock option, or employee stock ownership plan.

"CONTRIBUTIONS BY GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS

"SEC. 322. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person—

"(1) who enters into any contract with the United States or any department or agency thereof either for the rendition of personal services or furnishing any material, supplies, or equipment to the United States or any department or agency thereof or for selling any land or building to the United States or any department or agency thereof, if payment for the performance of such contract or payment for such material, supplies, equipment, land, or building is to be made in whole or in part from funds appropriated by the Congress, at any time between the commencement of negotiations for and the later of (A) the completion of performance under, or (B) the termination of negotiations for, such contract or furnishing of material, supplies, equipment, land, or buildings, directly or indirectly to make any contribution of money or other thing of value, or to promise expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, to any political party, committee, or candidate for public office or to any person for any political purpose or use; or

"(2) knowingly to solicit any such contribution from any such person for any such purpose during any such period.

"(b) This section does not prohibit or make unlawful the establishment or administration of, or the solicitation of contributions to, any separate segregated fund by any corporation or labor organization for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, unless the provisions of section 321 prohibit or make unlawful the establishment or administration of, or the solicitation of contributions to, such fund. Each specific prohibition, allowance, and duty applicable to a corporation, labor organization, or separate segregated fund under section 321 applies to a corporation, labor organization or separate segregated fund to which this subsection applies.

"(c) For purposes of this section, the term 'labor organization' has the meaning given it by section 321.

"PUBLICATION OR DISTRIBUTION OF POLITICAL STATEMENTS

"SEC. 323. Whenever any person makes an expenditure for the purpose of financing communications expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate through broadcasting stations, newspapers, magazines, outdoor advertising facilities, direct mails, and other similar types of general public political advertising, such communication—

"(1) if authorized by a candidate, his authorized political committees or their agents, shall clearly and conspicuously, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commission, state that the communication has been authorized; or

"(2) if not authorized by a candidate, his authorized, political committees, or their agents, shall clearly and conspicuously, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commission, state that the communication is not authorized by any candidate, and state the name of the person who made or financed the expenditure for the communication, including, the case of a political committee, the name of any affiliated or connected organization required to be disclosed under section 303 (b) (2).

"CONTRIBUTIONS BY FOREIGN NATIONALS

"SEC. 324. (a) It shall be unlawful for a foreign national directly or through any other person to make any contribution of money or other thing of value, or to promise expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, in connection with an election to any political office or in connection with any primary election, convention, or caucus held to select candidates for any political office; or for any person to solicit, accept, or receive any such contribution from a foreign national.

"(b) As used in this section, the term 'foreign national' means—

"(1) a foreign principal, as such term is defined by section 1(b) of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938 (22 U.S.C. 611(b)), except that the term 'foreign national' shall not include any individual who is a citizen of the United States; or

"(2) an individual who is not a citizen of the United States and who is not lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as defined by section 101(a)(20) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(20)).

"PROHIBITION OF CONTRIBUTIONS IN NAME OF ANOTHER

"SEC. 325. No person shall make a contribution in the name of another person or knowingly permit his name to be used to effect such a contribution, and no person shall knowingly accept a contribution made by one person in the name of another person.

"LIMITATION ON CONTRIBUTION OF CURRENCY

"SEC. 326. No person shall make contributions of currency of the United States or currency of any foreign country to or for the benefit of any candidate which, in the aggregate, exceed $100, with respect to any campaign of such candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office.

"FRAUDULENT MISREPRESENTATION OF CAMPAIGN AUTHORITY

"SEC. 327. No person who is a candidate for Federal office or an employee or agent of such a candidate shall—

"(1) fraudulently misrepresent himself or any committee or organization under his control as speaking or writing or otherwise acting for or on behalf of any other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof on a matter which is damaging to such other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof; or

"PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS

"SEC. 328. (a) Any person, following the enactment of this section, who knowingly and willfully commits a violation of any provision or provisions of this Act which involves the making, receiving, or reporting of any contribution or expenditure having a value in the aggregate of $1,000 or more during a calendar year shall be fined in an amount which does not exceed the greater of $25,000 or 300 percent of the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, imprisoned for not more than one year, or both. A willful and knowing violation of section 321

(b) (2), including such a violation of the provisions of such section as applicable through section 322 (b), is punishable by a fine of not more than $50,000, imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both. In the case of a knowing and willful violation of section 325 or 326, the penalties set forth in this section shall apply to a violation involving an amount having a value in the aggregate of $250 or more during a calendar year. In the case of a knowing and willful violation of section 327, the penalties set forth in this section shall apply without regard to whether the making, receiving, or reporting of a contribution or expenditure of $1,000 or more was involved.

"(b) A defendant in any criminal action brought for the violation of a provision of this Act, or of a provision of chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, may introduce as evidence of his lack of knowledge of or intent to commit the offense for which the action was brought a conciliation agreement entered into between the defendant and the Commission under section 313 which specifically deals with the act or failure to act constituting such offense and which is still in effect.

"(c) In any criminal action brought for a violation of a provision of this Act, or of a provision of chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the court before which such action is brought shall take into account, in weighing the seriousness of the offense and in considering the appropriateness of the penalty to be imposed if the defendant is found guilty, whether—

"(1) the specific act or failure to act which constitutes the offense for which the action was brought is the subject of a conciliation agreement entered into between the defendant and the Commission under section 313,

"(2) the conciliation agreement is in effect, and

"(3) the defendant is, with respect to the violation for which the defense is being asserted, in compliance with the conciliation agreement.".

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 111. Section 319 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 439c), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following sentence: "There are authorized to be appropriated to the Federal Election Commission $8,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, $2,000,000 for the period beginning July 1, 1976, and ending September 30, 1976, and $8,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1977.".

SAVINGS PROVISION

SEC. 112. Except as otherwise provided by this Act, the repeal by this Act of any section or penalty shall not have the effect to release or extinguish any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under such section or penalty, and such section or penalty shall be treated as remaining in force for the purpose of sustaining any proper action or prosecution for the enforcement of any penalty, forfeiture, or liability.

TERMINATION OF PAYMENTS FOR LACK OF DEMONSTRABLE SUPPORT

SEC. 306. Section 9037 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to payments to eligible candidates in primary campaigns) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) TERMINATION OF PAYMENTS FOR LACK OF DEMONSTRABLE SUPPORT.—

"(1) GENERAL RULE.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this chapter, no payment shall be made under this chapter to any candidate more than 30 days after the date of the second consecutive primary election in which such candidate receives less than 10 percent of the number of votes cast for all candidates of the same party for the same office in such primary election if the candidate permitted or authorized the appearance of his name on the ballot or certifies to the Commission that he will not be an active candidate in the primary. If the primary elections are held in more than one State on the same date, a candidate shall, for purposes of this subsection, be treated as receiving that percentage of the votes on that date which he received in the primary election conducted on such date in which he received the greatest percentage vote. The provisions of this section shall apply as of the date of enactment of the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976.

"(2) REINSTATEMENT OF PAYMENTS.—Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1), a candidate whose payments have been terminated under paragraph (1) may again receive payments (including amounts he would have received but for paragraph (1)) if he receives 20 percent or more of the total number of votes cast for candidates of the same party in a primary election held after the date on which the election was held which was the basis for terminating payments to him.".

TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

of 1954 (relating to contributions) is amended by striking out "9006(d)" and inserting in lieu thereof "9006(c)".

TITLE IV—COMMISSION TO STUDY PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATING PROCESS

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 401. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to improve the system of nominating candidates for election to the office of the President of the United States by studying such system in a broad manner never before attempted in the two-hundred-year history of this Nation.

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION

SEC. 402. (a) There is established the Bicentennial Commission on Presidential Nominations (hereinafter referred to as the "Commission").

(b) The Commission shall be composed of twenty members to be appointed as follows:

(1) six members shall be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, on the recommendation of the majority and minority leaders, of whom at least two shall be Members of the Senate and at least two shall be elected or appointed State officials;

(2) six members shall be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, of whom at least two shall be Members of the House and at least two shall be elected or appointed State officials;

(3) six members shall be appointed by the President; and

(4) two members shall be the chairman of the two national political parties and shall serve as ex officio members.

(c) At no time shall more than three members appointed under paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of subsection (b) be individuals who are of the same political affiliation.

(d) A vacancy in the Commission shall not affect its powers, and shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made, subject to the same limitations with respect to party affiliations as the original appointment.

(e) Twelve members shall constitute a quorum, but a lesser number may conduct hearings. The Chairman of the Commission shall be selected by the members from among the members, other than ex officio members.

FUNCTIONS OF THE COMMISSION

SEC. 403. (a) The Commission shall make a full and complete investigation with respect to the Presidential nominating process. Such investigation shall include but not be limited to a consideration of—

(1) the manner in which States conduct primaries

for the expression of a preference for the nomination of candidates for election to the office of President of the United States and caucuses for the selection of delegates to the national nominating conventions of political parties;

(2) State laws and the rules of national political parties which govern the participation of voters and candidates in such primaries and caucuses;

(3) the financing of campaigns for the nomination of candidates for election to the office of the President of the United States;

(4) the relationship between candidates for election to the office of the President of the United States and the news media, including how candidates achieve public recognition and whether such candidates should be guaranteed access to the television media;

(5) the interrelationship of the elements described in paragraphs (1) through (4) of this section;

(6) alternative nominating systems, including but not limited to a national or regional primary system for the expression of a preference for the nomination of candidates for election to the office of President of the United States and variations on the present nominating system;

(7) the manner in which candidates are nominated for election to the office of Vice President of the United States; and

(8) the extent to which State laws and the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 promote or retard independent candidacies for election to the office of President.

(b) The Commission shall submit to the President and to the Congress such interim reports as it deems advisable, and not later than one year after the enactment of this title, a final report of its study and investigation based upon a full consideration of alternatives to our current Presidential nominating system, including an analysis of the strengths and weaknesses of all such alternatives studied, together with its recommendations as to the best system to establish for the 1980 Presidential elections. The Commission shall cease to exist sixty days after its final report is submitted.

POWERS AND ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SEC. 404. (a) The Commission may, in carrying out the provisions of this title, sit and act at such times and places, hold such hearings, take such testimony, request the attendance of such witnesses, administer oaths, have such printing and binding done, and commission studies by any Federal agency or executive department, as the Commission deems advisable.

(b) Per diem and mileage allowances for witnesses requested to appear under the authority conferred by this section shall be paid from funds appropriated to the Commission.

(c) Subject to such rules and regulations as may be adopted by the Commission, the chairman shall have the power to—

(1) appoint and fix the compensation of an executive director, and such additional staff personnel as may be necessary, without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and without regard to chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title relating to classification in General Schedule pay rates, but at such rates not in excess of the maximum rate for GS–18 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of such title; and

(2) procure temporary and intermittent services to the same extent as is authorized by section 3109 of title 5, United States Code, but at rates not to exceed $100 a day for individuals.

COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS

SEC. 405. (a) Members of the Commission who are otherwise employed by the Federal Government shall serve without compensation but shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in carrying out the duties of the Commission.

(b) Members of the Commission not otherwise employed by the Federal Government shall receive per diem at the maximum daily rate for GS–18 of the General Schedule when they are engaged in the performance of their duties as members of the Commission and shall be entitled to reimbursement for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in carrying out the duties of the Commission.

TIMELINESS OF APPOINTMENTS

SEC. 406. It is the sense of the Congress that the appointments of individuals to serve as members of the Commission be completed within ninety days after the enactment of this title.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 407. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title.

TITLE V—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

A BILL

To amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide that members of the Federal Election Commission shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976".

I

FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION MEMBERSHIP

SEC. 101. (a) (1) The second sentence of section 309 (a) (1) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 473c(a) (1)), as so redesignated by section 105, hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Act", is amended to read as follows: "The Commission is composed of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, ex officio and without the right to vote, and 6 members appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.".

(2) The last sentence of section 309(a) (1) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a) (1)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows: "No more than 3 members of the Commission appointed under this paragraph may be affiliated with the same political party.".

(b) Section 309(a) (2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c (a) (2)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"(2) (A) Members of the Commission shall serve for terms of 6 years, except that of the members first appointed—

"(i) one shall be appointed for a term of 1 year;

"(ii) one shall be appointed for a term of 2 years;

"(iii) one shall be appointed for a term of 3 years;

"(iv) one shall be appointed for a term of 4 years;

"(v) one shall be appointed for a term of 5 years; and

"(vi) one shall be appointed for a term of 6 years;

as designated by the President at the time of appointment, except that of the members first appointed under this subparagraph, no member affiliated with a political party shall be appointed for a term that expires 1 year after another member affiliated with the same political party.

"(B) A member of the Commission may serve on the Commission after the expiration of his term until his successor has taken office as a member of the Commission.

"(C) An individual appointed to fill a vacancy occurring other than by the expiration of a term of office shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member he succeeds.

"(D) Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the Commission shall be filled in the same manner as in the case of the original appointment.".

(c) (1) Section 309(a) (3) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a) (3)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentences: "Members of the Commission shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. Any individual who is engaging in any other business, vocation, or employment at the time such individual begins to serve as a member of the Commission shall terminate or liquidate such activity no later than 1 year after beginning to serve as such a member.".

(2) Section 309(b) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(b)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) The Commission shall administer, seek to obtain compliance with, and formulate policy with respect to, this Act and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. The Commission shall have exclusive primary jurisdiction with respect to the civil enforcement of such provisions.

"(2) Nothing in this Act shall be construed to limit, restrict, or diminish any investigatory, informational, oversight, supervisory, or disciplinary authority or function of the Congress or any committee of the Congress with respect to elections for Federal office.".

(3) The first sentence of section 309(c) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437(c)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof the following ", except that the affirmative vote of 4 members of the Commission shall be required in order for the Commission to establish guidelines for compliance with the provisions of this Act or with chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or for the Commission to take any action in accordance with paragraph (6), (7), (8), or (10) of section 310(a)".

(d) (1) The President shall appoint members of the Federal Election Commission under section 309(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)), as so redesignated by section 105 and as amended by this section, as soon as practicable after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) The first appointments made by the President under section 309(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)) as so redesignated by section 105 and as amended by this section, shall not be considered to be appointments to fill the unexpired terms of members serving on the Federal Election Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(3) Members serving on the Federal Election Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act may continue to serve as such members until members are appointed and qualified under section 309(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)), as so redesignated by section 105 and as amended by this section, except that until appointed and qualified under this Act, members serving on such Commission on such date of enactment may, beginning on March 1, 1976, exercise only such powers and functions as may be consistent with the determinations of the Supreme Court of the United States in Buckley et al. against Valeo, Secretary of the United States Senate, et al. (numbered 75–436, 75–437) (January 30, 1976).

(e) The provisions of section 309 (a) (3) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c (a) (3)), as so redesignated by section 105, which prohibit any member of the Federal Election Commission from being an elected or appointed officer or employee of the executive, legislative, or judicial branch of the Federal Government, shall not apply in the case of any individual serving as a member of such Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act.

"(p) 'independent expenditure' means an expenditure by a person expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate which is made without cooperation or consultation with any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate and which is not made in concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate; and

"(q) 'clearly identified' means (1) the name of the candidate appears; (2) a photograph or drawing of the candidate appears; or (3) the identity of the candidate is apparent by unambiguous reference.".

ORGANIZATION OF POLITICAL COMMITTEES

SEC. 103. Section 302 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 432) is amended by striking out subsection (e) and by redesignating subsection (f) as subsection (e).

REPORTS BY POLITICAL COMMITTEES AND CANDIDATES

SEC. 104. (a) Section 304(a)(1)(C) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(a)(1)(C)) is amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof the following: "except that, in any year in which a candidate is not on the ballot for election to Federal office, such candidate and his authorized committees shall only be required to file such reports not later than the tenth day following the close of any calendar quarter in which the candidate and his authorized committees received contributions or made expenditures totaling in excess of $10,000, and such reports shall be complete as of the close of such calendar quarter (except that any such report required to be filed after December 31 of any calendar year with respect to which a report is required to be filed under subparagraph (B) shall be filed as provided in such subparagraph)".

(b) Section 304(a)(2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(a)(2)) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) Each treasurer of a political committee authorized by a candidate to raise contributions or make expenditures on his behalf, other than the candidate's principal campaign committee, shall file the reports required under this section with the candidate's principal campaign committee.".

(c) Section 304(b) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(b)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (12);

(2) by redesignating paragraph (13) as paragraph (14); and

(3) by inserting immediately after paragraph (12) the following new paragraph:

"(13) in the case of an independent expenditure in excess of $100 by a political committee, other than an authorized committee of a candidate, expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, through a separate schedule (A) any information required by paragraph (9) stated in a manner which indicates whether the independent expenditure involved is in support of, or in opposition to, a candidate; and (B) under penalty of perjury, a certification whether such independent expenditure is made in cooperation, consultation, or concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate.".

(d) Section 304(e) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(e)) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) (1) Every person (other than a political committee or candidate) who makes contributions or independent expenditures expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, other than by contribution to a political committee or candidate, in an aggregate amount in excess of $100 during a calendar year shall file with the Commission, on a form prepared by the Commission, a statement containing the information required of a person who makes a contribution in excess of $100 to a candidate or political committee and the information required of a candidate or political committee receiving such a contribution.

"(2) Statements required by this subsection shall be filed on the dates on which reports by political committees are filed. Such statements shall include (A) the information required by subsection (b) (9), stated in a manner indicating whether the contribution or independent expenditure is in support of, or opposition to, the candidate; and (B) under penalty of perjury, a certification whether such independent expenditure is made in cooperation, consultation, or concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate. Any independent expenditure, including those described in subsection (b) (13), of $1,000 or more made after the fifteenth day, but more than 24 hours, before any election shall be reported within 24 hours of such independent expenditure.

"(3) The Commission shall be responsible for expeditiously preparing indices which set forth, on a candidate-by-candidate basis, all expenditures separately, including those reported under subsection (b) (13), made with respect to each candidate, as reported under this subsection, and for periodically issuing such indices on a timely preelection basis.".

REPORTS BY CERTAIN PERSONS

SEC. 105. Title III of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431 et seq.) is amended by striking out section 308 thereof (2 U.S.C. 437a) and by redesignating section 309 through section 321 as section 308 through section 320, respectively.

CAMPAIGN DEPOSITORIES

SEC. 106. The second sentence of section 308(a)(1) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437b(a)(1)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended by striking out "a checking account" and inserting in lieu thereof "one or more checking accounts, at the discretion of any such committee,".

POWERS OF COMMISSION

SEC. 107. (a) Section 310(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437d(a)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (8) thereof, by inserting "develop such prescribed forms and to" immediately before "make", and by inserting immediately after "Act" the following: "and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954";

(2) in paragraph (9) thereof, by striking out "and sections 608" and all that follows through "States Code" and inserting in lieu thereof "and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954"; and

(3) by striking out paragraph (10) and redesignating paragraph (11) as paragraph (10).

(b) (1) Section 310 (a) (6) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437d (a) (6)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"(6) to initiate (through civil actions for injunctive, declaratory or other appropriate relief) defend (in the case of any civil action brought under section 313 (a) (9)) or appeal any civil action in the name of the Commission for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this Act and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, through its general counsel;".

(2) Section 310 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437d), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) Except as provided in section 313 (a) (9), the power of the Commission to initiate civil actions under subsection (a) (6) shall be the exclusive civil remedy for the enforcement of the provisions of this Act.".

ADVISORY OPINIONS

SEC. 108. (a) Section 312 (a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437f (a)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 312. (a) Upon written request to the Commission by any individual holding Federal office, any candidate for Federal office, any political committee, or the national committee of any political party, the Commission shall render an advisory opinion, in writing, within a reasonable time with respect to whether any specific transaction or activity by such individual, candidate, or political committee would constitute a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. No advisory opinion shall be issued by the Commission or any of its employees except in accordance with the provisions of this section.".

(b) Section 312 (b) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437 (b)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"(b) (1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any person who relies upon any provision or finding of an advisory opinion in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (2) (A) and who acts in good faith in accordance with the provisions and findings of such advisory opinion shall not, as a result of any such act, be subject to any sanction provided by this Act or by chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

"(2) (A) Any advisory opinion rendered by the Commission under subsection (a) may be relied upon by (i) any person involved in the specific transaction or activity with respect to which such advisory opinion is rendered; and (ii) any person involved in any specific transaction or activity which is similar to the transaction or activity with respect to which such advisory opinion is rendered.

"(B) (i) The Commission shall, no later than 30 days after rendering an advisory opinion with respect to a request received under subsection (a), transmit to the Congress proposed rules or regulations relating to the transaction or activity involved if such transaction or activity is not subject to any existing rule or regulation prescribed by the Commission. In any such case in which the Commission receives more than one request for an advisory opinion involving the same or similar transactions or activities, the Commission may not render more than one advisory opinion relating to the transactions or activities involved.

"(ii) Any rule or regulation prescribed by the Commission under this subparagraph shall be subject to the provisions of section 315(c).".

(c) Section 315(c)(1) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438(c)(1)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting "or under section 312(b)(2)(B)" immediately after "under this section".

(d) The amendments made by this section shall apply to any advisory opinion rendered by the Federal Election Commission after October 15, 1974.

ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 109. Section 313 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437g), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"ENFORCEMENT

"SEC. 313. (a) (1) Any person who believes a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, has occurred may file a complaint with the Commission. Such complaint shall be in writing, shall be signed and sworn to by the person filing such complaint, and shall be notarized. Any person filing such a complaint shall be subject to the provisions of section 1001 of title 18, United States Code. The Commission may not conduct any investigation under this section, or take any other action under this section, solely on the basis of a complaint of a person whose identity is not disclosed to the Commission. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the Commission shall not have the authority to inquire into or investigate the utilization or activities of any staff employee of any person holding Federal office without first consulting with such person holding Federal office. An affidavit given by the person holding Federal office that such staff employee is performing his regularly assigned duties shall be a complete bar to any further inquiry or investigation of the matter involved.

"(2) The Commission, if it has reasonable cause to believe that any person has committed a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, shall notify the person involved of such apparent violation and shall make an investigation of such violation in accordance with the provisions of this section.

"(3) (A) Any investigation under paragraph (2) shall be conducted expeditiously and shall include an investigation, conducted in accordance with the provisions of this section, of reports and statements filed by any complainant under this title, if such complainant is a candidate.

"(B) Any notification or investigation made under paragraph (2) shall not be made public by the Commission or by any other person without the written consent of the person receiving such notification or the person with respect to whom such investigation is made.

"(4) The Commission shall, at the request of any person who receives notice of an apparent violation under paragraph (2), afford such person a reasonable opportunity to demonstrate that no action shall be taken against such person by the Commission under this Act.

"(5) (A) If the Commission determines that there is reasonable cause to believe that any person has committed or is about to commit a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the Commission shall make every endeavor for a period of not less than 30 days to correct or prevent such violation by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion, and to enter into a conciliation agreement with the person involved, except that, if the Commission has reasonable cause to believe that—

"(i) any person has failed to file a report required to be filed under section 304(a)(1)(C) for the calendar quarter occurring immediately before the date of a general election;

"(ii) any person has failed to file a report required to be filed no later than 10 days before an election; or

"(iii) on the basis of a complaint filed less than 45 days but more than 10 days before an election, any person has committed a knowing and willful violation of this Act of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954;

the Commission shall make every effort, for a period of not less than one-half the number of days between the date upon which the Commission determines there is reasonable cause to believe such a violation has occurred and the date of the election involved, to correct or prevent such violation by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion, and to enter into a conciliation agreement with the person involved. A conciliation agreement, unless violated, shall constitute a complete bar to any further action by the Commission, including the bringing of a civil proceeding under subparagraph (B).

"(B) If the Commission is unable to correct or prevent any such violation by such informal methods, the Commission may, if the Commission determines there is probable cause to believe that a violation has occurred or is about to occur, institute a civil action for relief, including a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or any other appropriate order, including a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of $5,000 or an amount equal to the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, in the district court of the United States for the district in which the person against whom such action is brought is found, resides, or transacts business.

"(C) In any civil action instituted by the Commission under subparagraph (B), the court shall grant a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order, including a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater or $5,000 or an amount equal to the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, upon a proper showing that the person involved has engaged or is about to engage in a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

"(D) If the Commission determines that there is probable cause to believe that a knowing and willful violation subject to and as defined in section 328 has occurred or is about to occur, it may refer such apparent violation to the Attorney General of the United States without regard to any limitation set forth in subparagraph (A).

"(6) (A) If the Commission believes that there is clear and convincing proof that a knowing and willful violation of this Act or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, has been committed, any conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission under paragraph (5) (A) may include a requirement that the person involved in such conciliation agreement shall pay a civil penalty which shall not exceed the greater of (i) $10,000; or (ii) an amount equal to 200 percent of the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation.

"(B) If the Commission believes that a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has been committed, a conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission under paragraph (5) (A) may include a requirement that the person involved in such conciliation agreement shall pay a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of (i) $5,000; or (ii) an amount equal to the amount of the contribution or expenditure involved in such violation.

"(C) The Commission shall make available to the public (i) the results of any conciliation attempt, including any conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission; and (ii) any determination by the Commission that no violation of the Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, has occurred.

"(7) In any civil action for relief instituted by the Commission under paragraph (5), if the court determines that the Commission has established through clear and convincing proof that the person involved in such civil action has committed a knowing and willful violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the court may impose a civil penalty of not more than the greater of (A) $10,000; or (B) an amount equal to 200 percent of the contribution or expenditure involved in such violation. In any case in which such person has entered into a conciliation agreement with the Commission under paragraph (5) (A), the Commission may institute a civil action for relief under paragraph (5) if it believes that such person has violated any provision of such conciliation agreement. In order for the Commission to obtain relief in any such civil action, it shall be sufficient for the Commission to establish that such person has violated, in whole or in part, any requirement of such conciliation agreement.

"(8) In any action brought under paragraph (5) or paragraph (7), subpenas for witnesses who are required to attend a United States district court may run into any other district.

"(9) (A) Any party aggrieved by an order of the Commission dismissing a complaint filed by such party under paragraph (1), or by a failure on the part of the Commission to act on such complaint in accordance with the provisions of this section within 90 days after the filing of such complaint, may file a petition with the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.

"(B) The filing of any petition under subparagraph (A) shall be made—

"(i) in the case of the dismissal of a complaint by the Commission, no later than 60 days after such dismissal; or

"(ii) in the case of a failure on the part of the Commission to act on such complaint, no later than 60 days after the 90-day period specified in subparagraph (A).

"(C) In any proceeding under this paragraph the court may declare that the dismissal of the complaint or the action, or the failure to act, is contrary to law and may direct the Commission to proceed in conformity with such declaration within 30 days, failing which the complainant may bring in his own name a civil action to remedy the violation involved in the original complaint.

"(10) The judgment of the district court may be appealed to the court of appeals and the judgment of the court of appeals affirming or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the district court shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

"(11) Any action brought under this subsection shall be advanced on the docket of the court in which filed, and put ahead of all other actions (other than other actions brought under this subsection or under section 314).

"(12) If the Commission determines after an investigation that any person has violated an order of the court entered in a proceeding brought under paragraph (5) it may petition the court for an order to adjudicate such person in civil contempt, except that if it believes the violation to be knowing and willful it may petition the court for an order to adjudicate such person in criminal contempt.

"(b) In any case in which the Commission refers an apparent violation to the Attorney General, the Attorney General shall respond by report to the Commission with respect to any action taken by the Attorney General regarding such apparent violation. Each report shall be transmitted no later than 60 days after the date the Commission refers any apparent violation, and at the close of every 30-day period thereafter until there is final disposition of such apparent violation. The Commission may from time to time prepare and publish reports on the status of such referrals.

"(c) Any member of the Commission, any employee of the Commission, or any other person who violates the provisions of subsection (a) (3) (B) shall be fined not more than $2,000. Any such member, employee, or other person who knowingly and willfully violates the provisions of subsection (a) (3) (B) shall be fined not more than $5,000.".

DUTIES OF COMMISSION

SEC. 110. (a) (1) Section 315 (a) (6) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438 (a) (6)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", and to compile and maintain a separate cumulative index of reports and statements filed with it by political committees supporting more than one candidate, which shall include a listing of the date of the registration of any such political committee and the date upon which any such political committee qualifies to make expenditures under section 320 (a) (2), and which shall be revised on the same basis and at the same time as the other cumulative indices required under this paragraph".

(2) Section 315 (a) (8) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438 (a)

(8)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", and to give priority to auditing and field investigating the verification for, and the receipt and use of, any payments received by a candidate under chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954".

(b) Section 315(c)(2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438(c)(2)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended—

(1) by inserting ", in whole or in part," immediately after "disapprove"; and

(2) by inserting immediately after the second sentence thereof the following new sentences: "Whenever a committee of the House of Representatives reports any resolution relating to any such rule or regulation, it is at any time thereafter in order (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. The motion is highly privileged and is not debatable. An amendment to the motion is not in order, and it is not in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to.".

(c) Section 315 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) In any proceeding, including any civil or criminal enforcement proceeding against any person charged with violating any provision of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, no rule, regulation, guideline, advisory opinion, opinion of counsel or any other pronouncement by the Commission or by any member, officer, or employee thereof (other than any rule or regulation of the Commission which takes effect under subsection (c)) shall be used against any person, either as having the force of law, as creating any presumption of violation or of criminal intent, or as admissible in evidence against such person, or in any other manner whatsoever.".

ADDITIONAL ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITY

SEC. 111. Section 407(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 456(a)) is amended by inserting immediately after "such title III," the following: "the Commission shall (1) make every endeavor for a period of not less than 30 days to correct such failure by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion; or (2) in the case of any such failure which occurs less than 45 days before the date of the election involved, make every endeavor for a period of not less than one-half the number of days between the date of such failure and the date of the election involved to correct such failure by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion, except that no action may be taken by the Commission with respect to any complaint filed with the Commission during the 5-day period immediately before an election until after the date of such election. If the Commission fails to correct such failure through such informal methods, then".

CONTRIBUTION AND EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS; PENALTIES

SEC. 112. (a) Title III of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431 et seq.), as amended by section 105, is further amended by striking out section 316, as so redesignated by section 105, by striking out section 320, as so redesignated by section 105, and by inserting immediately after section 319 the following new sections:

"LIMITATIONS ON CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

"SEC. 320. (a) (1) Except as otherwise provided by paragraphs (2) and (3), no person shall make contributions to any candidate with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $1,000, or to any political committee in any calendar year which exceed, in the aggregate, $1,000.

"(2) No political committee (other than a principal compaign committee) shall make contributions to (A) any candidate with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000; or (B) to any political committee in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000. Contributions by the national committee of a political party serving as the principal campaign committee of a candidate for the office of President of the United States shall not exceed the limitation imposed by the preceding sentence with respect to any other candidate for Federal office. For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'political committee' means an organization registered as a political committee under section 303 for a period of not less than 6 months which has received contributions from more than 50 persons and, except for any State political party organization, has made contributions to 5 or more candidates for Federal office. For purposes of the limitations provided by paragraph (1) and this paragraph, all contributions made by political committees established or financed or maintained or controlled by any corporation, labor organization, or any other person, including any parent, subsidiary, branch, division, department, or local unit of such corporation, labor organization, or any other person, or by any group of such persons, shall be considered to have been made by a single political committee, except that (A) nothing in this sentence shall limit transfers between political committees of funds raised through joint fundraising efforts; and (B) for purposes of the limitations provided by paragraph (1) and this paragraph, all contributions made by a single political committee established or financed or maintained or controlled by a national committee of a political party and by a single political committee established or financed or maintained or controlled by the State committee of a political party shall not be considered to have been made by a single political committee. In any case in which a corporation and any of its subsidiaries, branches, divisions, departments, or local units, or a labor organization and any of its subsidiaries, branches, divisions, departments, or local units establish or finance or maintain or control more than one separate segregated fund, all such separate segregated funds shall be treated as a single separate segregated fund for purposes of the limitations prescribed by paragraph (1) and this paragraph.

"(3) No individual shall make contributions aggregating more than $25,000 in any calendar year. For purposes of this paragraph, any contribution made to a candidate in a year other than the calendar year in which the election is held with respect to which such contribution was made is considered to be made during the calendar year in which such election is held.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) contributions to a named candidate made to any political committee authorized by such candidate to accept contributions on his behalf shall be considered to be contributions made to such candidate;

"(B) (i) expenditures made by any person in cooperation, consultation, or concert, with, or at the request or suggestion of, a candidate, his authorized political committees, or their agents shall be considered to be a contribution to such candidate;

"(ii) the financing by any person of the dissemination, distribution, or republication, in whole or in part, of any broadcast or any written, graphic, or other form of campaign materials prepared by the candidate, his campaign committees, or their authorized agents shall be considered to be an expenditure for purposes of this paragraph; and

"(C) contributions made to or for the benefit of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be contributions made to or for the benefit of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States.

"(5) The limitations imposed by paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection shall apply separately with respect to each election, except that all elections held in any calendar year for the office of President of the President of the United States (except a general election for such office) shall be considered to be one election.

"(6) For purposes of the limitations imposed by this section, all contributions made by a person, either directly or indirectly, on behalf of a particular candidate, including contributions which are in any way earmarked or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to such candidate, shall be treated as contributions from such person to such candidate. The intermediary or conduit shall report the original source and the intended recipient of such contribution to the Commission and to the intended recipient.

"(b) (1) No candidate for the office of President of the United States who has established his eligibility under section 9003 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to condition for eligibility for payments) or under section 9033 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to eligibility for payments) to receive payments from the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate may make expenditures in excess of—

"(A) $10,000,000, in the case of a campaign for nomination for election to such office, except the aggregate of expenditures under this subparagraph in any one State shall not exceed twice the greater of 8 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State (as certified under subsection (e)), or $100,000; or

"(B) $20,000,000 in the case of a campaign for election to such office.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be expenditures made by or on behalf of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States; and

"(B) an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a candidate for the office of Vice President, if it is made by—

"(i) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for the purposes of making any expenditure; or

"(ii) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, or an agent of the candidate, to make the expenditure.

"(c) (1) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1976), as there become available necessary data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register the per centum difference between the price index for the twelve months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each limitation established by subsection (b) and subsection (d) shall be increased by such per centum difference. Each amount so increased shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) the term 'price index' means the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics; and

"(B) the term 'base period' means the calendar year 1974.

"(d) (1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law with respect to limitations on expenditures or limitations on contributions, the national committee of a political party and a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may make expenditures in connection with the general election campaign of candidates for Federal office, subject to the limitations contained in paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection.

"(2) The national committee of a political party may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of any candidate for President of the United States who is affiliated with such party which exceeds an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States (as certified under subsection (e)). Any expenditure under this paragraph shall be in addition to any expenditure by a national committee of a political party serving as the principal campaign committee of a candidate for the office of the President of the United States.

"(3) The national committee of a political party, or a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate for Federal office in a State who is affiliated with such party which exceeds—

"(A) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Senator, or of Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, the greater of—

"(i) 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State (as certified under subsection (e)); or

"(ii) $20,000; and

"(B) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner in any other State, $10,000.

"(e) During the first week of January 1975, and every subsequent year, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, of each State, and of each congressional district as of the first day of July next preceding the date of certification.

The term 'voting age population' means resident population, 18 years of age or older.

"(f) No candidate or political committee shall knowingly accept any contribution or make any expenditure in violation of the provisions of this section. No officer or employee of a political committee shall knowingly accept a contribution made for the benefit or use of a candidate, or knowingly make any expenditure on behalf of a candidate, in violation of any limitation imposed on contributions and expenditures under this section.

"(g) The Commission shall prescribe rules under which any expenditure by a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President for use in 2 or more States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

"CONTRIBUTIONS OR EXPENDITURES BY NATIONAL BANKS, CORPORATIONS, OR LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

"SEC. 321. (a) It is unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress, to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election to any political office, or in connection with any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any political office, or for any corporation whatever, or any labor organization to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election at which Presidential and Vice Presidential electors or a Senator or Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress are to be voted for, or in connection with any primary election or political convention, or caucus held to select candidates for any of the foregoing offices, or for any candidate, political committee, or other person knowingly to accept or receive any contribution prohibited by this section, or any officer or any director of any corporation or any national bank, or any officer of any labor organization, to consent to any contribution or expenditure by such corporation, national bank, or labor organization, as the case may be, which is prohibited by this section.

"(b) (1) For purposes of this section the term 'labor organization' means any organization of any kind, or any agency or employee representation committee or plan, in which employees participate and which exists for the purpose, in whole or in part, of dealing with employers concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or contributions of work.

"(2) For purposes of this section, the term 'contribution or expenditure' shall include any direct or indirect payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money, or any services, or anything of value (except a loan of money by a national or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations and in the ordinary course of business) to any candidate, campaign committee, or political party or organization, in connection with any election to any of the officers referred to in this section, but shall not include (A) communications by a corporation to its stockholders and executive officers and their families or by a labor organization to its members and their families on any subject; (B) nonpartisan registration and get-out-the-vote campaigns by a corporation aimed at its stockholders and executive officers and their families; or by a labor organization aimed at its members and their families; and (C) the establishment, administration, and solicitation of contributions to a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes by a corporation or labor organization, except that (i) it shall be unlawful for such a fund to make a contribution or expenditure by utilizing money or anything of value secured by physical force, job discrimination, financial reprisals, or the threat of force, job discrimination, or financial reprisal, or by dues, fees, or other moneys required as a condition of membership in a labor organization or as a condition of employment, or by moneys obtained in any commercial transaction; (ii) it shall be unlawful for a corporation or a separate segregated fund established by a corporation to solicit contributions from any person other than its stockholders, executive officers, and their families, for an incorporated trade association or a separate segregated fund established by an incorporated trade association to solicit contributions from any person other than the stockholders and executive officers of the member corporations of such trade association and the families of such stockholders and executive officers (to the extent that any such solicitation of such stockholders and executive officers, and their families, has been separately and specifically approved by the member corporation involved, and such member corporation has not approved any such solicitation by more than one such trade association in any calendar year, or for a labor organization or a separate segregated fund established by a labor organization to solicit contributions from any person other than its members and their families; (iii) notwithstanding any other law, any method of soliciting voluntary contributions or of facilitating the making of voluntary contributions to a separate segregated fund established by a corporation, permitted to corporations, shall also be permitted to labor organizations; and (iv) any corporation which utilizes a method of soliciting voluntary contributions or facilitating the making of voluntary contributions, shall make available, on written request, such method to a labor organization representing any members working for such corporation.

"(3) For purposes of this section the term 'executive officer' means an individual employed by a corporation who is paid on a salary rather than hourly basis and who has policymaking or supervisory responsibilities.

"CONTRIBUTIONS BY GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS

"SEC. 322. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person who enters—

"(1) into any contract with the United States or any department or agency thereof either for the rendition of personal services or furnishing any material, supplies, or equipment to the United States or any department or agency thereof or for selling any land or building to the United States or any department or agency thereof, if payment for the performance of such contract or payment for such material, supplies, equipment, land, or building is to be made in whole or in part from funds appropriated by the Congress, at any time between the commencement of negotiations for and the later of (A) the completion of performance under, or (B) the termination of negotiations for, such contract or furnishing of material, supplies, equipment, land, or buildings, directly or indirectly makes any contribution of money or other thing of value, or promises expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, to any political party, committee, or candidate for public office or to any person for any political purpose or use; or

"(2) to solicit any such contribution from any such person for any such purpose during any such period.

"(b) This section does not prohibit or make unlawful the establishment or administration of, or the solicitation of contributions to, any separate segregated fund by any corporation or labor organization for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, unless the provisions of section 321 prohibit or make unlawful the establishment or administration of, or the solicitation of contributions to, such fund.

"(c) For purposes of this section, the term 'labor organization' has the meaning given it by section 321.

"PUBLICATION OR DISTRIBUTION OF POLITICAL STATEMENTS

"SEC. 323. Whenever any person makes an expenditure for the purpose of financing any communication expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate through any broadcasting station, newspaper, magazine, outdoor advertising facility, direct mailing, or other similar type of general public political advertising, such communication—

"(1) if authorized by a candidate, his authorized political committees, or their agents, shall clearly and conspicuously, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commission, state that such communication has been so authorized; or

"(2) if not authorized in accordance with paragraph (1), shall clearly and conspicuously, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commission, state that such communication is not authorized by any candidate, and state the name of the person that made or financed the expenditure for the communication, including, in the case of a political committee, the name of any affiliated or connected organization as stated in section 303 (b) (2).

"CONTRIBUTIONS BY FOREIGN NATIONALS

"SEC. 324. (a) It shall be unlawful for a foreign national directly or through any other person to make any contribution of money or other thing of value, or to promise expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, in connection with an election to any political office or in connection with any primary election, convention, or caucus held to select candidates for any political office, or for any person to solicit, accept, or receive any such contribution from any such foreign national.

"(b) As used in this section, the term 'foreign national' means—

"(1) a foreign principal, as such term is defined by section 1 (b) of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938 (22 U.S.C. 611 (b)), except that the term 'foreign national' shall not include any individual who is a citizen of the United States; or

"(2) an individual who is not a citizen of the United States and who is not lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as defined by section 101 (a) (20) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101 (a) (20)).

"PROHIBITION OF CONTRIBUTIONS IN NAME OF ANOTHER

"SEC. 325. No person shall make a contribution in the name of another person or knowingly permit his name to be used to effect such a contribution, and no person shall knowingly accept a contribution made by one person in the name of another person.

"LIMITATION ON CONTRIBUTIONS OF CURRENCY

"SEC. 326. (a) No person shall make contributions of currency of the United States or currency of any foreign country to or for the benefit of any candidate which, in the aggregate, exceeds $250, with respect to any campaign of such candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office.

"(b) Any person who knowingly and willfully violates the provisions of this section shall be fined in an amount which does not exceed the greater of $25,000 or 300 percent of the amount of the contribution involved.

"ACCEPTANCE OF EXCESSIVE HONORARIUMS

"SEC. 327. No person while an elected or appointed officer or employee of any branch of the Federal Government shall accept—

"(1) any honorarium of more than $1,000 (excluding amounts accepted for actual travel and subsistence expenses) for any appearance, speech, or article; or

"(2) honorariums (not prohibited by paragraph (1) of this section) aggregating more than $15,000 in any calendar year.

"PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS

"SEC. 328. Any person who knowingly and willfully commits a violation of any provision or provisions of this Act, other than the provisions of section 326, which involves the making, receiving, or reporting of any contribution or expenditure having a value, in the aggregate, of $5,000 or more during a calendar year shall be fined in an amount which does not exceed the greater of $25,000 or 300 percent of the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.".

(b) Title III of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431 et seq.), as amended by section 105 and subsection (a), is further amended by inserting immediately after section 315 the following new section:

"FRAUDULENT MISREPRESENTATION OF CAMPAIGN AUTHORITY

"SEC. 316. No person, being a candidate for Federal office or an employee or agent of such a candidate shall—

"(1) fraudulently misrepresent himself or any committee or organization under his control as speaking or writing or otherwise acting for or on behalf of any other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof on a matter which is damaging to such other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof; or

"(2) participate in or conspire to participate in any plan, scheme, or design to violate paragraph (1).".

SAVINGS PROVISION RELATING TO REPEALED SECTIONS

SEC. 113. Title III of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431 et seq.), as amended by section 105 and section 112, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SAVING PROVISION RELATING TO REPEALED SECTIONS

"SEC. 329. Except as otherwise provided by this Act, the repeal by the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976 of any provision or penalty or penalties shall not have the effect of releasing or extinguishing any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under such provision or penalty, and such provision or penalty shall be treated as remaining in force for the purpose of sustaining any proper action or prosecution for the enforcement of any penalty, forfeiture, or liability.".

PRINCIPAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEES

SEC. 114. Section 302(f) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 432 (f)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Any occasional, isolated, or incidental support of a candidate shall not be construed as support of such candidate for purposes of the preceding sentence.".

TERMINATION OF AUTHORITY OF COMMISSION

SEC. 115. Title IV of the Act (2 U.S.C. 451 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"TERMINATION OF AUTHORITY OF COMMISSION

"SEC. 409. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act or any other provision of law, the authority of the Commission to carry out the provisions of this Act, and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, shall terminate at the close of March 31, 1977, if either House of the Congress by appropriate action determines that such termination shall take effect pursuant to subsection (b).

"(b) The appropriate committee of each House of the Congress shall, commencing January 3, 1977, conduct a review of the elections of candidates for Federal office conducted in 1976, the operation of chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 with respect to such elections, and the activities conducted by the Commission, and report to their respective Houses not later than March 1, 1977. Such report shall include a recommendation of whether the authority of the Commission shall be terminated on March 31, 1977, as set forth in subsection (a).

"(c) Nothing in this section shall affect any proceeding pending in any court of the United States on the date of the enactment of this section. The Attorney General of the United States shall have the authority to act on behalf of the United States in any such proceeding.".

TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

SEC. 116. (a) Section 306(d) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 436(d)) is amended by inserting immediately after "304 (a) (1) (C)," the following: "304(c),".

(b) (1) Section 310(a) (7) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437d(a) (7)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended by striking out "313" and inserting in lieu thereof "312".

(c) (1) Section 9002(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (defining Commission) is amended by striking out "310(a) (1)" and inserting in lieu thereof "309(a) (1)".

(2) Section 9032(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (defining Commission) is amended by striking out "310(a) (1)" and inserting in lieu thereof "309(a) (1)".

TITLE II—AMENDMENTS TO TITLE 18, UNITED STATES CODE

REPEAL OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS

SEC. 201. (a) Chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out sections 608, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, and 617.

(b) The table of sections for chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out the items relating to sections 608, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, and 617.

CHANGES IN DEFINITIONS

SEC. 202. (a) Section 591 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out "602, 608, 610, 611, 614, 615, and 617" and insert in lieu thereof "and 602".

(b) Section 591 (e) (4) of title 18, United States Code is amended by inserting immediately before the semicolon the following: ", except that this subparagraph shall not apply (A) in the case of any legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of the national committee of a political party, other than any legal or accounting services attributable to any activity which directly furthers the election of any designated candidate to Federal office; or (B) in the case of any legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of a candidate or political committee solely for the purpose of ensuring compliance with the provisions of this chapter, the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954".

(c) Section 591 (f) (4) of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by redesignating clause (F) through clause (I) as clause (G) through clause (J), respectively; and

(2) by inserting immediately after clause (E) the following new clause:

"(F) the payment, by any person other than a candidate or a political committee, of compensation for legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of the national committee of a political party, other than services attributable to activities which directly further the election of any designated candidate to Federal office, or for legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of a candidate or political committee solely for the purpose of ensuring compliance with the provisions of this chapter, the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954;".

TITLE III—AMENDMENTS TO INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1954

ENTITLEMENT OF ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES TO PAYMENTS

SEC. 301. Section 9004 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to entitlement of eligible candidates to payments) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(d) EXPENDITURES FROM PERSONAL FUNDS.—In order to be eligible to receive any payment under section 9006, the candidate of a major, minor, or new party in an election for the office of President shall certify to the Commission, under penalty of perjury, that such candidate shall not knowingly make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with his campaign for election to the office of President in excess of, in the aggregate, $50,000. For purposes of this subsection, expenditures from personal funds made by a candidate of a major, minor, or new party for the office of Vice President shall be considered to be expenditures by the candidate of such party for the office of President.

"(e) DEFINITION OF IMMEDIATE FAMILY.—For purposes of subsection (d), the term 'immediate family' means a candidate's spouse, and any child, parent, grandparent, brother, or sister of the candidate, and the spouses of such persons.".

PAYMENTS TO ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES; INSUFFICIENT AMOUNTS IN FUND

SEC. 302. (a) Section 9006 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to payments to eligible candidates) is amended by striking out subsection (b) thereof and by redesignating subsection (c) and subsection (d) as subsection (b) and subsection (c), respectively.

(b) Section 9006(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to insufficient amounts in fund), as so redesignated by subsection (a), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "In any case in which the Secretary or his delegate determines that there are insufficient moneys in the fund to make payments under subsection (b), section 9008(b)(3), and section 9037(b), moneys shall not be made available from any other source for the purpose of making such payments.".

PROVISION OF LEGAL OR ACCOUNTING SERVICES

SEC. 303. Section 9008(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to limitation of expenditures) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) PROVISION OF LEGAL OR ACCOUNTING SERVICES.—For purposes of this section, the payment, by any person other than the national committee of a political party, of compensation to any person for any legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of the national committee of a political party shall not be treated as an expenditure made by or on behalf of such national committee with respect to the presidential nominating convention of the political party involved.".

REVIEW OF REGULATIONS

SEC. 304. (a) Section 9009(c)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to review of regulations) is amended—

(1) by inserting ", in whole or in part," immediately after "disapprove"; and

(2) by inserting immediately after the first sentence thereof the following new sentences: "Whenever a committee of the House of Representatives reports any resolution relating to any such rule or regulation, it is at any time thereafter in order (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. The motion is highly privileged and is not debatable. An amendment to the motion is not in order, and it is not in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to.".

(b) Section 9039 (c) (2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to review of regulations) is amended—

(1) by inserting ", in whole or in part," immediately after "disapprove"; and

(2) by inserting immediately after the first sentence thereof the following new sentences: "Whenever a committee of the House of Representatives reports any resolution relating to any such rule or regulation, it is at any time thereafter in order (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. The motion is highly privileged and is not debatable. An amendment to the motion is not in order, and it is not in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to.".

ELIGIBILITY FOR PAYMENTS

SEC. 305. Section 9033 (b) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to expense limitation; declaration of intent; minimum contributions) is amended by striking out "limitation" and inserting in lieu thereof "limitations".

QUALIFIED CAMPAIGN EXPENSE LIMITATION

SEC. 306. (a) Section 9035 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to qualified campaign expense limitation) is amended—

(1) in the heading thereof, by striking out "LIMITATION" and inserting in lieu thereof "LIMITATIONS";

(2) by inserting "(a) EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS.—" immediately before "No candidate";

(3) by inserting immediately after "States Code" the following: ", and no candidate shall knowingly make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with his campaign for nomination for election to the office of President in excess of, in the aggregate, $50,000"; and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) DEFINITION OF IMMEDIATE FAMILY.—For purposes of this section, the term 'immediate family' means a candidate's spouse, and any child, parent, grandparent, brother, or sister of the candidate, and the spouses of such persons.".

(b) The table of sections for chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by striking out the item relating to section 9035 and inserting in lieu thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 9035. Qualified campaign expense limitations.".

RETURN OF FEDERAL MATCHING PAYMENTS

SEC. 307. (a) (1) Section 9002 (2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (defining candidate) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The term 'candidate' shall not include any individual who has ceased actively to seek election to the office of President of the United States or to the office of Vice President of the United States, in more than one State.".

(2) Section 9003 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to condition for eligibility for payments) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) WITHDRAWAL BY CANDIDATE.—In any case in which an individual ceases to be a candidate as a result of the operation of the last sentence of section 9002(2), such individual—

"(1) shall no longer be eligible to receive any payments under section 9006; and

"(2) shall pay to the Secretary, as soon as practicable after the date upon which such individual ceases to be a candidate, an amount equal to the amount of payments received by such individual under section 9006 which are not used to defray qualified campaign expenses.".

(b) (1) Section 9032 (2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (defining candidate) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The term 'candidate' shall not include any individual who is not actively conducting campaigns in more than one State in connection with seeking nomination for election to be President of the United States.".

(2) Section 9033 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to eligibility for payments) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) WITHDRAWAL BY CANDIDATE.—In any case in which an individual ceases to be a candidate as a result of the operation of the last sentence of section 9032(2), such individual—

"(1) shall no longer be eligible to receive any payments under section 9037; and

"(2) notwithstanding the provisions of section 9038(b)(3), shall pay to the Secretary, as soon as practicable after the date upon which such individual ceases to be a candidate, an amount equal to the amount of payments received by such individual under section 9037 which are not used to defray qualified campaign expenses.".

TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

SEC. 308. (a) Section 9008(b)(5) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to adjustment of entitlements) is amended—

(1) by striking out "section 608(c) and section 608(f) of title 18, United States Code," and inserting in lieu thereof "section 320(b) and section 320(d) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971"; and

(2) by striking out "section 608(d) of such title" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 320(c) of such Act".

(b) Section 9034(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to limitations) is amended by striking out "section 608(c)(1)(A) of title 18, United States Code," and inserting in lieu thereof "section 320(b)(1)(A) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971".

(c) Section 9035(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to expenditure limitations), as so redesignated by section 305(a), is amended by striking out "section 608(c)(1)(A) of title 18, United States Code," and inserting in lieu thereof "section 320(b)(1)(A) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971".

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1976

MARCH 17, 1976.—Committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed

Mr. HAYS of Ohio, from the Committee on House Administration, submitted the following REPORT

together with

MINORITY VIEWS, SEPARATE VIEWS, SUPPLEMENTAL VIEWS AND ADDITIONAL VIEWS

[To accompany H.R. 12406]

The Committee on House Administration, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 12406) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide that members of the Federal Election Commission shall be appointed by the President by and with advice and consent of the Senate, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report favorably thereon without amendment and recommend that the bill do pass.

On March 11, 1976, a quorum being present, the Committee adopted by recorded vote of 15 ayes and 9 nays, a motion to report H.R. 12406 without amendment.

The Oversight Subcommittee of the Committee on House Administration has not submitted any findings with respect to this bill. No other special oversight findings were necessitated as a result of consideration of this bill.

No budget statement is submitted.

No estimate or comparison was received from the Director of the Congressional Budget Office as referred to in subdivision (C) of clause 2(1)(3) of Rouse Rule XI.

No findings of recommendations of the Committee on Government Operations were received as referred to in subdivision (d) of clause 2 (1)(3) of House Rule XI.

The enactment of H.R. 12406 is not expected to have an inflationary impact on prices and costs in the operation of the national economy, especially during the current serious recession. Specific language in the bill provides that no moneys shall be made available from any other source if there are insufficient moneys in the Presidential Election Campaign fund.

This bill provides for a Federal Election Commission appointed in accordance with the requirements of the Constitution as stated by the Supreme Court of the United States in Buckley v. Valeo, (Nos. 75–436, 75–437), decided January 30, 1976. Among other things, the bill also gives the Commission exclusive primary jurisdiction for the civil enforcement of the Act and of the public financing of presidential campaigns.

The Committee on House Administration first held discussion sessions and then held mark-up sessions on February 23, 24 and 25 and March 1, 2, 3, 4, 8, 9 and 10, 1976, authorized the minority to submit their views by noon March 17, 1976, and ordered H.R. 12406 be reported to the House of Representatives.

Purpose of the Bill

In Buckley, et al. v. Valeo, et al. (Nos. 75–436 and 75–437; January 30, 1976), the Supreme Court of the United States upheld against constitutional challenge the contribution limitations, the recordkeeping and disclosure requirements, and the provisions for public financing of Presidential elections and conventions embodied in the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, and the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974. The Court, however, ruled that certain of the expenditure limitations imposed by the Act contravene the First Amendment, and that the Federal Election Commission could not exercise the full range of administrative and enforcement powers granted to it because the method provided for appointing the Commissioners did not comport with the requirements of Art. II, §2, cl. 2 (the Appointment Clause). The Court stayed the latter ruling for a period of 50 days to avoid interrupting enforcement of the Act while the Congress considers what legislative action is warranted.

The Federal Election Campaign Act, as amended, created a comprehensive, integrated scheme for the regulation of campaigns for Federal office. After the Buckley decision, the congressional design does not remain fully intact. Moreover, the initial administration of the Act by the Federal Election Commission has revealed certain procedural and substantive problems in the Act that were not fully anticipated. To assure that the 1976 Federal elections are conducted under fair, uniform, and enforceable rules, it is therefore necessary to fill the most important gaps in the law revealed by the Supreme Court's decision and by the actions of the Commission; and to do so while meeting, insofar as possible, the time constraints imposed by the Court. That is the purpose of H.R. 12406 as reported to the House of Representatives by the Committee on House Administration.

Prior to turning to the section-by-section explanation of H.R. 12406 it appears helpful to first state the basic principles that have guided the Committee and that are embodied in the bill, and to then address certain other issues treated in the bill.

First, to meet the requirements of Art. II, § 2, cl. 2 of the Constitution, H.R. 12406 modifies the present law to provide that the six full members of the Federal Election Commission shall be appointed by the President of the United States by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. (The Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives are to serve on an ex-officio basis and without the right to vote.)

Second, election campaigns are the central expression of this country's democratic ideal. It is therefore essential in this sensitive area that the system of administration and enforcement enacted into law does not provide room for partisan misuse or for administrative action which does not comport with the intent of the enabling statute. At the same time it is recognized that the authorities charged with administering and enforcing the law must have the independence required by the tripartite system of government created by the Constitution. To mediate between these conflicting concerns, H.R. 12406 provides that the Commission shall initiate investigations, bring judicial actions, and take other steps of comparable importance only upon the affirmative vote of four of its six voting members. The four-vote requirement serves to assure that enforcement actions, as to which the Congress has no continuing voice, will be the product of a mature and considered judgment. The bill also provides that when the Commission issues an advisory opinion it shall reduce that opinion to a regulation subject to congressional veto through the procedures presently provided. This amendment is intended to apply to opinions of counsel rendered by the Federal Election Commission. It is the intent of the Committee that the advisory opinions and regulations shall be the only means through which the Commission may establish guidelines and procedures for carrying out the Act. In any case in which the Commission desires that an opinion of counsel shall have any operative effect on any person, the Commission must propose a regulation based on the opinion of counsel. The proposed regulation will then be subject to the congressional review authority set out in section 315(c) of the Act. Those familiar with administrative agencies know that the process at elaborating a statute has a quasi-legislative component. There is no bright line between the process of interstitial law-making through the rendering of opinions as opposed to the promulgation of regulations. That being so, the Committee determined that to prevent the Commission from interpreting the Act in a manner inconsistent with the congressional intent it is necessary to treat on the same basis, situations in which an advisory opinion is issued and those in which a regulation is issued. At the same time H.R. 12406 strengthens the Commission's ability to administer the law by making it plain that FEC has the authority to issue rules and regulations concerning each and every provision of the Act, and not only those relating to disclosure and reporting. These amendments complete the process of assuring that the Commission possesses the means necessary to elaborate the law and that it does do in a manner that comports with the will of Congress as embodied in the Act.

Third, originally the Federal campaign laws were enforced solely through the criminal law. The 1971 Act as amended recognized the inadequacies of that approach and provided also for civil actions through the Federal Election Commission and the Department of Justice. The result was that enforcement responsibility was fragmented, and the line between improper conduct remediable in civil proceedings and conduct punishable as a crime blurred. On the occasion of reconstituting the Federal Election Commission the Committee concluded that it was appropriate to simplify and rationalize the present enforcement system.

H.R. 12406 places its reliance on civil enforcement, except as to substantial violations committed with a specific wrongful intent. The bill distinguishes between violations of the law as to which there is not a specific wrongful intent which are subject to injunctive relief and civil penalties of up to $5,000 or the amount in question, whichever is greater, and violations as to which the Commission has clear and convincing proof that the acts were committed with a knowledge of all the relevant facts and a recognition that the action is prohibited by law, which are subject to injunctive relief and a civil penalty of $10,000 or twice the amount in question. These civil penalties were not provided for in the 1971 Act or its predecessors. Criminal penalties are reserved for knowing and willful violations involving an amount in excess of $5,000 and are punishable by a fine of up to $25,000 or three times the amount in question, imprisonment of up to one year, or both. The delineation of these different classes of offenses is intended to promote greater unformity and certainty in enforcing the law.

H.R. 12406, following the pattern set in the 1974 Amendments, channels to the Federal Election Commission complaints alleging on any theory, that a person is entitled to relief, because of conduct regulated by this Act, other than complaints directed to the Attorney General and seeking the institution of a criminal proceeding. And, as noted above, the bill also clarifies the point that the Commission has the authority to issue rules and regulatons concerning every facet of the Act and not simply those relating to disclosure. In both particulars, H.R. 12406 advances the goal of expert, uniform, non-partisan administration of the law.

In addition to centralizing civil enforcement authority in the Commission, the bill takes one additional step to limit unjustifiable litigation burdens that might otherwise be imposed on the courts and on individuals against whom a complaint has been filed. The Commission is charged with the duty, upon receiving a complaint, to attempt to conciliate the matter for a specified reasonable period of time.

The phrase "exclusive primary jurisdiction" used to describe the congressional intent to centralize the civil enforcement of the Act in the Federal Election Commission is taken from the Supreme Court's decisions in San Diego Unions v. Garmon, 359 U.S. 236. There the Court recognized that Congress, in enacting the National Labor Relations Act, "entrusted administration of the labor policy for the nation to a centralized administrative agency, armed with its own procedures, and equipped with its specialized knowledge and cumulative experience" (Garmon, 359 U.S. at 242). On that basis the Court stated that all complaints bottomed on an alleged violation of the NLRA are within that Agency's "exclusive competence" (id at 245) and that all other tribunals must therefore "yield to the primary jurisdiction of the National Board" (id). The Court's ruling in Garmon captures the essence not only of the NLRA's administrative scheme, but of this Act's enforcement procedures as well.

Together, the requirement of four votes for affirmative action, the broad investigatory powers granted (which are limited only by the requirement that complaints be signed and sworn to and that the Commission shall not act solely on the basis of anonymous information), the conciliation procedure mandated, and the substantial civil remedies provided represent a delicate balance designed to effectively prevent and redress violations, and to winnow out, short of litigation, insubstantial complaints and those matters as to which settlement is both possible and desirable.

Fourth, prior to 1971 the laws regulating Federal campaigns permitted an infinite proliferation of political committees which were ostensibly separate entities but which were in fact a means for advancing a candidate's campaign. That deficiency brought the campaign laws into disrepute and provided an essential predicate for the 1971 and 1974 reforms that the Congress enacted. Buckley v. Valeo's invalidation of the limitations placed by the 1971 Act, as amended, on individual expenditures and on candidate expenditures promises a repetition of the pre-1971 experience. To prevent that result, while safeguarding the full enjoyment of the First Amendment right of individuals and groups to make expenditures for political expression, H.R. 12406 contains a series of prophylactic measures. These are directed solely at requiring full reporting and disclosure by individuals and groups that make "independent expenditures" (a term defined in the bill in conformity with the Buckley Court's definition); and at placing several additional limitations akin to those upheld by the Court on the amount that may be contributed by or to a political committee. In the definition of "independent expenditures," the phrase "at the * * * suggestion of * * * is intended to include direct suggestions made by a candidate or his agent, his campaign manager, his campaign treasurer, or any other person responsible for reporting contributions and expenditures in connection with the campaign of the candidate. It is not the Committee's intent to hold a candidate responsible for suggestions by persons over whom he does not exercise any control. Further, for example, if a candidate or some other person suggests in a speech to a group of persons that everything possible should be done to defeat the opponent of the candidate, it is not the intent of the Committee that such a reference in a speech be viewed as a "suggestion" for purposes of the definition.

Thus, H.R. 12406 provides that an individual or a political committee making independent expenditures in excess of $100 shall be required to report the information presently required of candidate committees for comparable activities and shall be required to certify that the expenditure was not made in cooperation, consultation, or concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, a candidate. The bill also provides that communications by a candidate and his committees utilizing the mass media expressly advocating his election or his opponent's defeat shall clearly and conspicuously state that the communication has been authorized by the candidate, and that such a communication by any other individual or political committee shall state that the communication has not been authorized by a candidate, and shall state also the name of the person making or financing the expenditure for the communication. Both of these provisions are designed to provide additional information to the voting public and to do so in a manner which places comparable reporting and disclosure requirement on candidates, and on individuals and groups making independent expenditures.

The bill also refines and strengthens in three separate respects the contribution limitations contained in the 1971 Act and upheld by the Supreme Court:

To discourage circumvention of the $1,000 limit on contributions by a person to a candidate and his authorized political committees in an election, and of the requirement that independent expenditures be properly identified and truly independent, contributions to a political committee in a calendar year by any person are limited to $1,000. For the same reasons contributions by a multi-candidate political committee to another political committee are limited to $5,000 in a calendar year.

To prevent corporations, labor organizations, or other persons or groups of persons from evading the contribution limits of H.R. 12406, the bill establishes the following rules:

All of the political committees set up by a single corporation and its subsidiaries would be treated as a single political committee for the purposes of H.R. 12406's contribution limitations;

All of the political committees set up by a single international union and its local unions would be treated as a single political committee for the purposes of H.R. 12406's contribution limitations;

All of the political committees set up by the AFL–CIO and all its State and local central bodies would be treated as a single political committee for the purposes of H.R. 12406's contribution limitations;

All the political committees established by the Chamber of Commerce and its State and local Chambers would be treated as a single political committee for the purposes of H.R. 12406's contribution limitations;

The anti-proliferation rules just stated would also apply in the case of multiple committees established by a group of persons.

There is an exception to the foregoing rules by which a political committee set up by a national political party, and a political committee set up by each State political party, are to be treated separately for the purposes of H.R. 12406's contribution limitations. However, all political committees set up by a national political party would be treated as a single political committee for the purposes of H.R. 12406's contribution limitations. Moreover, all political committees set up by a State political party or by county or city parties in that State would be treated as a single political committee for the purposes of H.R. 12406's contribution limitations.

Political committees which have engaged in a joint fundraising effort may divide the money so collected between the committees which participate in the effort.

Finally, the bill treats expenditures made in cooperation, consultation, or concert with or at the request or suggestion of a candidate as a contribution in kind to that candidate and provides further that the republication of a candidate's campaign materials shall be regarded as such as a contribution. This provision is designed to draw a line between "independent expenditures" protected by the First Amendment because they are an expression of an individual's views, and expenditures which are disguised contributions to a candidate. The present law strikes the proper balance on political party expenditures in connection with the general election campaign of the parties' candidates. H.R. 12406, therefore, retains the language of the 1971 Act on this subject. A candidate who runs under a political party's banner signifies that his campaign is on behalf of that party. Thus, the limited separate permission for these political party expenditures is plainly designed to encourage a specific type of contribution to such candidates in order to strengthen the party system; that limited permission cannot on any theiory be regarded as dealing with "independent expenditures".

One further provision of H.R. 12406, deserves separate extended comment. The Federal Election Commission, in its Advisory Opinion No. 1975–23 concerning a proposal by the Sun Oil Company to establish a series of separate, segregated political funds, rules that Sun Oil could use its treasury moneys, and contributions generated by treasury moneys, to solicit its employees as well as its stockholders, and ruled further that the corporation could facilitate the making of such contributions by instituting a check-off system. The general rule enacted in 1971 is that "corporations and labor unions [must] confine their activities [of a political nature] to their own stockholders and members, the beneficial owners of these organizations," and the present statutory law not only draws a line between corporate and union political activities financed by treasury money limited to stockholders and members, which are permitted, and other treasury financed political activities, which are prohibited, but does so by spelling out rules that the Congress believed "apply equally to labor unions and corporations."

The Sun Oil opinion destroys the intent of the Congress to establish rules that apply equally to labor unions and corporations. There are as many corporate shareholders as there are union members. Under the Commission's ruling corporations are free to use their treasury funds to solicit stockholders, union members, and all unorganized employees. Unions are limited to union members. Moreover, corporations are permitted to establish systems whereby those who wish to contribute to a corporate political committee may take advantage of the convenience of a check-off system, while by reason of the limitations created by § 302 of the Taft-Hartley Act, union members are denied that system for making contributions to union political committees. And, of more fundamental importance, the FEC's decision is directly contrary to a more particular congressional intent expressed in 1971. As noted above, the congressional understanding that the permissions written into the law are only for "activities directed at members and stockholders."

H.R. 12406 proposes three limited clarifications of the law. First, the bill broadens the permissions contained in the present law to allow corporations to communicate with and solicit voluntary contributions from "executive officers". The Committee believes that management personnel as well as stockholders should be considered to be among the beneficial owners of a corporation. Second, H.R. 12406 continues the rule that unions may only solicit those they represent—their members—and reaffirms the intent of the 1971 Congress that corporations must also confine their activities to a roughly comparable group—namely, stockholders and executive officers. Third, H.R. 12406 provides that methods of soliciting voluntary contributions or of facilitating the making of such contributions which the law permits corporations shall also be permitted to unions. The bill also provides that where a corporation is in fact utilizing a particular method of soliciting voluntary contributions or facilitating the making of contributions to a corporate political fund, such as the check-off, the corporation must upon request make that means available to unions representing employees of that corporation or to union member employees.

In addition to the major points just discussed there are several narrower issues that should be noted:

1. The amendments to section 301(e)(4) and section 301(f)(4) of the Act are intended to reflect the Committee's understanding of the intent with which these provisions were originally enacted.

2. Section 320(a)(2) is not intended to apply to principal campaign committees of candidates for Congress nor to their subordinate committees.

3. The amendments made by the bill in connection with the congressional review of proposed regulations of the Commission, are not intended to foreclose debate on the floor of the House of Representatives relating to a resolution to disapprove any proposed regulation. The amendments provide that a motion to move to the consideration of the resolution is not debatable. The resolution itself, however, will be debatable.

4. The provision in the amendment relating to congressional review of proposed regulations permitting disapproval in part reflects the current understanding and is intended to permit disapproval of discrete self-contained sections or subdivisions of proposed regulations and is not intended to permit the rewriting of regulations by piecemeal changes.

5. Section 321 of the Act (formerly section 610 of title 18, United States Code), is added by section 112 of the bill, is intended to apply to cooperative associations, whether or not the cooperative associations are incorporated. The cooperative will be permitted to establish a separate, segregated fund for political purposes and to solicit contributions from members of the cooperative in accordance with the provisions of section 321.

6. The present law permits the AFL–CIO to solicit all AFL–CIO union members to make voluntary contributions to COPE, its political committee. But because the stockholders and executive officers of corporations that belong to trade associations have only a distant indirect relationship to the association and because corporations often belong to many such associations the law on their solicitation is unclear. To end this uncertainty H.R. 12406 permits solicitations of stockholders and executive officers by a single trade association selected by the corporation.

7. The amendment to the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 made by section 307 of the bill, which requires the return of Federal matching payments by candidates who withdraw from a Presidential campaign is intended to provide that a candidate will remain eligible for Federal payments only so long as he maintains a good faith, multistate campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to the Office of President. A candidate should not be considered to be actively seeking nomination or election if he curtails his campaign activity to such an extent that it is reasonable to conclude that he no longer intends to engage in activity necessary to secure the nomination or win the election involved.

Changes in Existing Law Made by the Bill, as Reported

In compliance with clause 3 of Rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives, changes in existing law made by the bill, as reported, are shown as follows (existing law proposed to be omitted is enclosed in black brackets, new matter is printed in italic, existing law in which no change is proposed is shown in roman):

Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971

* * * * * * *

TITLE III—DISCLOSURE OF FEDERAL CAMPAIGN FUNDS

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 301. When used in this title and title IV of this Act—

(a) "election" means (1) a general, special, primary, or runoff election, (2) a convention or caucus of a political party [held] which has authority to nominate a candidate, (3) a primary election held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party, and (4) a primary election held for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President;

(b) "candidate" means an individual who seeks nomination for election, or election, to Federal office, whether or not such individual is elected, and, for purposes of this paragraph, an individual shall be deemed to seek nomination for election, or election, if he has (1) taken the action necessary under the law of a State to qualify himself for nomination for election, or election, to Federal office, or (2) received contributions or made expenditures, or has given his consent for any other person to receive contributions or make expenditures, with a view to bringing about his nomination for election, or election, to such office;

(c) "Federal office" means the office of President or Vice President of the United States; or of Senator or Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress of the United States;

* * * * * * *

(e) "contribution"—

(1) means a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value made for the purpose of—

(A) influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office or for the purpose of influencing the results of a primary held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party, or

(B) influencing the result of an election held for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President of the United States;

(2) means a written contract, promise, or agreement, [expressed or implied,] whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution for such purposes;

(3) means funds received by a political committee which are transferred to such committee from another political committee or other source;

(4) means the payment, by any person other than a candidate or a political committee, of compensation for the personal services of another person which are rendered to such candidate or political committee without charge for any such purpose, except that this subparagraph shall not apply (A) in the case of any legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of the national committee of a political party, other than any legal or accounting services attributable to activity which directly furthers the election of any designated candidate to Federal office; or (B) in the case of any legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of a candidate or political committee solely for the purpose of insuring compliance with the provisions of this Act, chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954; but

(5) does not include—

(A) the value of services provided without compensation by individuals who volunteer a portion or all of their time on behalf of a candidate or political committee;

(B) the use of real or personal property and the cost of invitations, food, and beverages, voluntarily provided by an individual to a candidate in rendering voluntary personal services on the individual's residential premises for candidate-related activities;

(C) the sale of any food or beverage by a vendor for use in a candidate's campaign at a charge less than the normal comparable charge, if such charge for use in a candidate's campaign is at least equal to the cost of such food or beverage to the vendor;

(D) any reimbursed payment for travel expenses made by an individual who on his own behalf volunteers his personal services to a candidate;

(E) the payment by a State or local committee of a political party of the costs of preparation, display, or mailing or other distribution incurred by such committee with respect to a printed slate card or sample ballot, or other printed listing, of 3 or more candidates for any public office for which an election is held in the State in which such committee is organized, except that this clause shall not apply in the case of costs incurred by such committee with respect to a display of any such listing made on broadcasting stations, or in newspapers, magazines or other similar types of general public political advertising; [or]

(F) any payment made or obligation incurred by a corporation or a labor organization which, under the provisions of the last paragraph of section 610 of title 18, United States Code, would not constitute an expenditure by such corporation or labor organization; or to the extent that the cumulative value of activities by any individual on behalf of any candidate under each of clauses

(G) a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value to a national committee of a political party or a State committee of a political party which is specifically designated for the purpose of defraying any cost incurred with respect to the construction or purchase of any office facility which is not acquired for the purpose of influencing the election of any candidate in any particular election for Federal office, except that any such gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value, and any such cost, shall be reported in accordance with section 304(b);

(B), (C), and (D) does not exceed $500 with respect to any election;

(f) "expenditure"—

(1) means a purchase, payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money or anything of value, made for the purpose of—

(A) influencing the nomination for election, or the election, of any person to Federal office, or to the office of presidential and vice-presidential elector; or

(B) influencing the results of a primary election held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President of the United States;

(2) means a contract, promise, or agreement, express or implied, whether or not legally enforceable, to make any expenditure;

(3) means the transfer of funds by a political committee to another political committee; but

(4) does not include—

(A) any news story, commentary, or editorial distributed through the facilities of any broadcasting station, newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication, unless such facilities are owned or controlled by any political party, political committee, or candidate;

(B) nonpartisan activity designed to encourage individuals to register to vote or to vote;

(C) any communication by any membership organization or corporation to its members or stockholders, if such membership organization or corporation is not organized primarily for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office;

(D) the use of real or personal property and the cost of invitations, food, and beverages, voluntarily provided by an individual to a candidate in rendering voluntary personal services on the individual's residential premises for candidate-related activities if the cumulative value of such activities by such individual on behalf of any candidate do not exceed $500 with respect to any election;

(E) any unreimbursed payment for travel expenses made by an individual who on his own behalf volunteers his personal services to a candidate if the cumulative amount for such individual incurred with respect to such candidate does not exceed $500 with respect to any election;

(F) the payment, by any person other than a candidate or a political committee, of compensation for legal or accounting services, rendered to or on behalf of the national committee of a political party, other than services attributable to activities which directly further the election of any designated candidate to Federal office, or for legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of a candidate or political committee solely for the purpose of insuring compliance with the provisions of this Act, chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954;

(F) any communication by any person which is not made for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election of any person to Federal office; [or]

(G) the payment by a State or local committee of a political party of the costs of preparation, display, or mailing or other distribution incurred by such committee with respect to a printed slate card or sample ballot, or other printed listing, of 3 or more candidates for any public office for which an election is held in the State in which such committee is organized, except that this clause shall not apply in the case of costs incurred by such committee with respect to a display of any such listing made on broadcasting stations, or in newspapers, magazines or other similar types of general public political advertising; [or]

(H) any payment made or obligation incurred by a corporation or a labor organization which, under the provisions of the last paragraph of section 610 of title 18, United States Code, would not constitute an expenditure by such corporation or labor organization; or

(J) any costs incurred by a candidate in connection with the solicitation of contributions by such candidate, except that this clause shall not apply with respect to costs incurred by a candidate in excess of an amount equal to 20 percent of the expenditure limitation applicable to such candidate under section 320(b), except that all such costs shall be reported in accordance with section 304(b).

* * * * * * *

(m) "political party" means an association, committee, or organization which nominates a candidate for election to any Federal office, whose name appears on the election ballot as the candidate of such association, committee, or organization: [and]

(n) "principal campaign committee" means the principal campaign committee designated by a candidate under section 302(f)(1)[.]

(o) "Act" means the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 as amended by the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 and the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976;

(p) "independent expenditure" means an expenditure by a person expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate which is made without cooperation or consultation with any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate and which is not made in concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate; and

(q) "clearly identified" means (1) the name of the candidate appears; (2) a photograph or drawing of the candidate appears;

or (3) the identity of the candidate is apparent by unambiguous reference.

REPORTS

SEC. 304. (a)(1) Except as provided by paragraph (2), each treasurer of a political committee supporting a candidate or candidates for election to Federal office, and each candidate for election to such office, shall file with the Commission reports of receipts and expenditures on forms to be prescribed or approved by it. The reports referred to in the preceding sentence shall be filed as follows:

(A)(i) In any calendar year in which an individual is a candidate for Federal office and an election for such Federal office is held in such year, such reports shall be filed not later than the tenth day before the date on which such election is held and shall be complete as of the fifteenth day before the date of such election; except that any such report filed by registered or certified mail must be postmarked not later than the close of the twelfth day before the date of such election.

(ii) Such reports shall be filed not later than the thirtieth day after the date of such election and shall be complete as of the twentieth day after the date of such election.

(B) In any other calendar year in which an individual is a candidate for Federal office, such reports shall be filed after December 31 of such calendar year, but not later than January 31 of the following calendar year and shall be complete as of the close of the calendar year with respect to which the report is filed.

(C) Such reports shall be filed not later than the tenth day following the close of any calendar quarter in which the candidate or political committee concerned received contributions in excess of $1,000, or made expenditures in excess of $1,000, and shall be complete as of the close of such calendar quarter; except that any such report required to be filed after December 31 of any calendar year with respect to which a report is required to be filed under subparagraph (B) shall be filed as provided in such subparagraph except that, in any year in which a candidate is not on the ballot for election to Federal office, such candidate and his authorized committees shall only be required to file such reports not later than the tenth day following the close of any calendar quarter in which the candidate and his authorized committees received contributions or made expenditures totaling in excess of $10,000, and such reports shall be complete as of the close of such calendar quarter (except that any such report required to be filed after December 31 of any calendar year with respect to which a report is required to be filed under subparagraph (B) shall be filed as provided in such subparagraph).

* * * * * * *

(2) Each treasurer of a political committee [which is not a] authorized by a candidate to raise contributions or make expenditures on his behalf, other than the candidate's principal campaign committee, shall file the reports required under this section with the [appropriate] candidate's principal campaign committee.

* * * * * * *

(b) Each report under this section shall disclose—

(1) * * *

(12) the amount and nature of debts and obligations owed by or to the committee, in such form as the supervisory officer may prescribe and a continuous reporting of their debts and obligations after the election at such periods as the Commission may require until such debts and obligations are extinguished, together with a statement as to the circumstances and conditions under which any such debt or obligation is extinguished and the consideration therefor; [and]

(13) in the case of an independent expenditure in excess of $100 by a political committee, other than an authorized committee of a candidate, expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, through a separate schedule (A) any information required by paragraph (9) stated in a manner which indicates whether the independent expenditure involved is in support of, or in opposition to, a candidate; and (B) under penalty of perjury, a certification whether such independent expenditure is made in cooperation, consultation, or concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate.

[(13)] (14) such other information as shall be required by the Commission.

* * * * * * *

to a political committee or candidate, in an aggregate amount in excess of $100 within a calendar year shall file with the Commission a statement containing the information required by this section. Statements required by this subsection shall be filed on the dates on which reports by political committees are filed but need not be cumulative.]

(e)(1) Every person (other than a political committee or candidate) who makes contributions or independent expenditures expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, other than by contribution to a political committee or candidate, in an aggregate amount in excess of $100 during a calendar year shall file with the Commission, on a form prepared by the Commission, a statement containing the information required of a person who makes a contribution in excess of $100 to a candidate or political committee and the information required of a candidate or political committee receiving such a contribution.

(2) Statements required by this subsection shall be filed on the dates on which reports by political committees are filed. Such statements shall include (A) the information required by subsection (b)(9), stated in a manner indicating whether the contribution or independent expenditure is in support of, or opposition to, the candidate; and (B) under penalty of perjury, a certification whether such independent expenditure is made in cooperation, consultation, or concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate. Any independent expenditure, including those described in subsection (b)(13), of $1,000 or more made after the fifteenth day, but more than 24 hours, before any election shall be reported within 24 hours of such independent expenditure.

(3) The Commission shall be responsible for expeditiously preparing indices which set forth, on a candidate-by-candidate basis, all expenditures separately, including those reported under subsection (b)(13), made with respect to each candidate, as reported under this subsection, and for periodically issuing such indices on a timely preelection basis.

[REPORTS BY CERTAIN PERSONS

[SEC. 308. Any person (other than an individual) who expends any funds or commits any act directed to the public for the purpose of influencing the outcome of an election, or who publishes or broadcasts to the public any material referring to a candidate (by name, description, or other reference) advocating the election or defeat of such candidate, setting forth the candidate's position on any public issue, his voting record, or other official acts (in the case of a candidate who holds or has held Federal office), or otherwise designed to influence individuals to cast their votes for or against such candidate or to withhold their votes from such candidate shall file reports with the Commission as if such person were a political committee. The reports filed by such person shall set forth the source of the funds used in carrying out any activity described in the preceding sentence in the same detail as if the funds were contributions within the meaning of section 301(e), and payments of such funds in the same detail as if they were expenditures within the meaning of section 301(f). The provisions of this section do not apply to any publication or broadcast of the United States Government or to any news story, commentary, or editorial distributed through the facilities of a broadcasting station or a bona fide newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication. A news story, commentary, or editorial is not considered to be distributed through a bona fide newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication if—

[(1) such publication is primarily for distribution to individuals affiliated by membership or stock ownership with the person (other than an individual) distributing it or causing it to be distributed, and not primarily for purchase by the public at newsstands or by paid subscription; or

[(2) the news story, commentary, or editorial is distributed by a person (other than an individual) who devotes a substantial part of his activities to attempting to influence the outcome of elections, or to influence public opinion with respect to matters of national or State policy or concern.]

CAMPAIGN DEPOSITORIES

SEC. [309] 308. (a)(1) Each candidate shall designate one or more national or State banks as his campain depositories. The principal campaign committee of such candidate, and any other political committee authorized by him to receive contributions or to make expenditures on his behalf, shall maintain [a checking account] one or more checking accounts, at the discretion of any such committee, at a depository designated by the candidate and shall deposit any contributions received by such committee into such account. A candidate shall deposit any payment received by him under chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 in the account maintained by his principal campaign committee. No expenditure may be made by any such committee on behalf of a candidate or to influence his election except by check drawn on such account, other than petty cash expenditures as provided in subsection (b).

(2) The treasurer of each political committee (other than a political committee authorized by a candidate to receive contributions or to make expenditures on his behalf) shall designate one or more national or State banks as campaign depositories of such committee, and shall maintain a checking account for the committee at each such depository.

All contributions received by such committee shall be deposited in such accounts. No expenditure may be made by such committee except by check drawn on such accounts, other than petty cash expenditures as provided in subsection (b).

(b) A political committee may maintain a petty cash fund out of which it may make expenditures not in excess of $100 to any person in connection with a single purchase or transaction. A record of petty cash disbursements shall be kept in accordance with requirements established by the Commission, and such statements and reports thereof shall be furnished to the Commission as it may require.

(c) A candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to the office of President of the United States may establish one such depository in each State, which shall be considered as his campaign depository for such State by his principal campaign committee and any other political committee authorized by him to receive contributions or to make expenditures on his behalf in such State, under rules prescribed by the Commission. The campaign depository of the candidate of a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be the campaign depository designated by the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States.

FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION

SEC. [310] 309. (a)(1) There is established a commission to be known as the Federal Election Commission. The Commission is composed of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, ex officio and without the right to vote, and 6 members appointed [as follows:

[(A) 2 shall be appointed, with the confirmation of a majority of both Houses of the Congress, by the President pro tempore of the Senate upon the recommendations of the majority leader of the Senate and the minority leader of the Senate;

[(B) 2 shall be appointed, with the confirmation of a majority of both Houses of the Congress, by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, upon the recommendations of the majority leader of the House and the minority leader of the House; and by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

[A member appointed under subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) shall not be affiliated with the same political party as the other member appointed under such paragraph.] No more than 3 members of the Commission appointed under this paragraph may be affiliated with the same political party.

* * * * * * *

[(2) Members of the Commission shall serve for terms of 6 years, except that of the members first appointed—

[(A) one of the members appointed under paragraph (1)(A) shall be appointed for a term ending on the April 30 first occurring more than 6 months after the date on which he is appointed;

[(B) one of the members appointed under paragraph (1)(B) shall be appointed for a term ending 1 year after the April 30 on which the term of the member referred to in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph ends;

[(C) one of the members appointed under paragraph (1)(C) shall be appointed for a term ending 2 years thereafter;

[(D) one of the members appointed under paragraph (1)(A) shall be appointted for a term ending 3 years thereafter;

[(E) one of the members appointed under paragraph (1)(B) shall be appointed for a term ending 4 years thereafter; and

[(F) one of the members appointed under paragraph (1)(C) shall be appointed for a term ending 5 years thereafter.

An individual appointed to fill a vacancy occurring other than by the expiration of a term of office shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member he succeeds. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the Commission shall be filled in the same manner as in the case of the original appointment.]

(2)(A) Members of the Commission shall serve for terms of 6 years, except that of the members first appointed—

(i) one shall be appointed for a term of 1 year;

(ii) one shall be appointed for a term of 2 years;

(iii) one shall be appointed for a term of 3 years;

(iv) one shall be appointed for a term of 4 years;

(v) one shall be appointed for a term of 5 years; and

(vi) one shall be appointed for a term of 6 years;

as designated by the President at the time of appointment, except that of the members first appointed under this subparagraph, no member affiliated with a political party shall be appointed for a term that expires 1 year after another member affiliated with the same political party.

(B) A member of the Commission may serve on the Commission after the expiration of his term until his successor has taken office as a member of the Commission.

(C) An individual appointed to fill a vacancy occurring other than by the expiration of a term of office shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member he succeeds.

(D) Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the Commission shall be filled in the same manner as in the case of the original appointment.

(3) Members shall be chosen on the basis of their maturity, experience, integrity, impartiality, and good judgment and shall be chosen from among individuals who, at the time of their appointment, are not elected or appointed officers or employees in the executive, legislative or judicial branch of the Government of the United States. Members of the Commission shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. Any individual who is engaging in any other business, vocation, or employment at the time such individual begins to serve as a member of the Commission shall terminate or liquidate such activity no later than 1 year after beginning to serve as such a member.

* * * * * * *

[(b) A political committee may maintain a petty cash fund out of which it may make expenditures not in excess of $100 to any person in connection with a single purchase or transaction. A record of petty

cash disbursements shall be kept in accordance with requirements established by the Commission, and such statements and reports thereof shall be furnished to the Commission as it may require.]

(b)(1) The Commission shall administer, seek to obtain compliance with, and formulate policy with respect to, this Act and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. The Commission shall have exclusive primary jurisdiction with respect to the civil enforcement of such provisions.

(2) Nothing in this Act shall be construed to limit, restrict, or diminish any investigatory, informational, oversight, supervisory, or disciplinary authority or function of the Congress or any committee of the Congress with respect to elections for Federal office.

(c) A candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to the office of President of the United States may establish one such depository in each State, which shall be considered as his campaign depository for such State by his principal campaign committee and any other political committee authorized by him to receive contributions or to make expenditures on his behalf in such State, under rules prescribed by the Commission, except that the affirmative vote of 4 members of the Commission shall be required in order for the Commission to establish guidelines for compliance with the provisions of this Act or with chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or for the Commission to take any action in accordance with paragraph (6), (7), (8), or (10) of section 310(a). The campaign depository of the candidate of a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be the campaign depository designated by the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States.

POWERS OF COMMISSION

SEC. [311] 310. (a) The Commission has the power—

(1) to require, by special or general orders, any person to submit in writing such reports and answers to questions as the Commission may prescribe; and such submission shall be made within such a reasonable period of time and under oath or otherwise as the Commission may determine;

(2) to administer oaths or affirmations;

(3) to require by subpena, signed by the chairman or the vice chairman, the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all documentary evidence relating to the execution of its duties;

(4) in any proceeding or investigation, to order testimony to be taken by deposition before any person who is designated by the Commission and has the power to administer oaths and, in such instances, to compel testimony and the production of evidence in the same manner as authorized under paragraph (3) of this subsection;

(5) to pay witnesses the same fees and mileage as are paid in like circumstances in the courts of the United States;

[(6) to initiate (through civil proceedings for injunctive, declaratory, or other appropriate relief), defend, or appeal any civil action in the name of the Commission for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this Act, through its general counsel;]

(6) to initiate (through civil actions for injuctive, declaratory or other appropriate relief) defend (in the case of any civil action brought under section 313(a)(9)) or appeal any civil action in the name of the Commission for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this Act and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 through its general counsel;

(7) to render advisory opinions under section [313] 312;

(8) to develop such prescribed forms and to make, amend, and repeal such rules, pursuant to the provisions of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code, as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954;

(9) to formulate general policy with respect to the administration of this Act [and sections 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, 616, and 617 of title 18, United States Code] and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954;

[(10) to develop prescibed forms under section 311(a)(1); and]

[11] (10) to conduct investigations and hearings expeditiously, to encourage voluntary compliance, and to report apparent violations to the appropriate law enforcement authorities.

* * * * * * *

(e) Except as provided in section 313(a)(9), the power of the Commission to initiate civil actions under subsection (a)(6) shall be the exclusive civil remedy for the enforcement of the provisions of this Act.

SEC. [312] 311. The Commission shall transmit reports to the President of the United States and to each House of the Congress no later than March 31 of each year. Each such report shall contain a detailed statement with respect to the activities of the Commission in carrying out its duties under this title, together with recommendations for such legislative or other action as the Commission considers appropriate.

ADVISORY OPINIONS

SEC. [313] 312. (a) Upon written request to the Commission by any individual holding Federal office, any candidate for Federal office, [or] any political committee, or the national committee of any political party, the Commission shall render an advisory opinion, in writing, within a reasonable time with respect to whether any specific transaction or activity by such individual, candidate, or political committee would constitute a violation of this Act [of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or of section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, 616, or 617 of title 18, United States Code.] or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. No advisory opinion shall be issued by the Commission or any of its employees except in accordance with the provisions of this section.

[(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any person with respect to whom an advisory opinion is rendered under subsection (a) who acts in good faith in accordance with the provisions and findings of such advisory opinion shall be presumed to be in compliance with the provision of this Act, of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or of section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, 616, or 617 of title 18, United States Code, with respect to which such advisory opinion is rendered.]

(b)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any person who relies upon any provision or findings of an advisory opinion in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (2)(A) and who acts in good faith in accordance with the provisions and findings of such advisory opinion shall not, as a result of any such act, be subject to any sanction provided by this Act or by chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

(2)(A) Any advisory opinion rendered by the Commission under subsection (a) may be relied upon by (i) any person involved in the specific transaction or activity with respect to which such advisory opinion is rendered; and (ii) any person involved in any specific transaction or activity which is similar to the transaction or activity with respect to which such advisory opinion is rendered.

(B)(i) The Commission shall, no later than 30 days after rendering an advisory opinion with respect to a request received under subsection (a), transmit to the Congress proposed rules or regulations relating to the transaction or activity involved if such transaction or activity is not subject to any existing rule or regulation prescribed by the Commission. In any such case in which the Commission receives more than one request for an advisory opinion involving the same or similar transactions or activities, the Commission may not render more than one advisory opinion relating to the transactions or activities involved.

(ii) Any rule or regulation prescribed by the Commission under this subparagraph shall be subject to the provisions of section 315(c).

[ENFORCEMENT

[SEC. 314. (a)(1)(A) Any person who believes a violation of this Act or of section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, 616, or 617 of title 18, United States Code, has occurred, may file a complaint with the Commission.

[(B) In any case in which the Clerk of the House of Representatives or the Secretary of the Senate (who receive reports and statements as custodian for the Commission) has reason to believe a violation of this Act or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, 616, or 617 of title 18, United States Code, has occurred, he shall refer such apparent violation to the Commission.

[(2) The Commission, upon receiving any complaint under paragraph (1)(A), or a referral under paragraph (1)(B), or if it has reason to believe that any person has committed a violation of any such provision, shall notify the person involved of such apparent violation and shall—

[(A) report such apparent violation to the Attorney General; or [(B) make an investigation of such apparent violation.

[(3) Any investigation under paragraph (2)(B) shall be conducted expeditiously and shall include an investigation of reports and statements filed by any complainant under this title, if such complainant is a candidate. Any notification or investigation made under paragraph

(2) shall not be made public by the Commission or by any other person without the written consent of the person receiving such notification or the person with respect to whom such investigation is made.

[(4) The Commission shall, at the request of any person who receives notice of an apparent violation under paragraph (2), conduct a hearing with respect to such apparent violation.

[(5) If the Commission determines, after investigation, that there is reason to believe that any person has engaged, or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of this Act, it may endeavor to correct such violation by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion. If the Commission fails to correct the violation through informal methods, it may institute a civil action for relief, including a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or any other appropriate order in the district court of the United States for the district in which the person against whom such action is brought is found, resides, or transacts business. Upon a proper showing that such person has engaged or is about to engage in such acts or practices, the court shall grant a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order.

[(6) The Commission shall refer apparent violations to the appropriate law enforcement authorities to the extent that violations of provisions of chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, are involved, or if the Commission is unable to correct apparent violations of this Act under the authority given it by paragraph (5), or if the Commission determines that any such referral is appropriate.

[(7) Whenever in the judgment of the Commission, after affording due notice and an opportunity for a hearing, any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of this Act or of section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, 616, or 617 of title 18, United States Code, upon request by the Commission the Attorney General on behalf of the United States shall institute a civil action for relief, including a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or any other appropriate order in the district court of the United States for the district in which the person is found, resides, or transacts business. Upon a proper showing that such person has engaged or is about to engage in such acts or practices, a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond by such court.

[(8) In any action brought under paragraph (5) or (7) of this subsection, subpenas for witnesses who are required to attend a United States district court may run into any other district.

[(9) Any party aggrieved by an order granted under paragraph (5) or (7) of this subsection may, at any time within 60 days after the date of entry thereof, file a petition with the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which such order was issued for judicial review of such order.

[(10) The judgment of the court of appeals affirming or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the district court shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

[(11) Any action brought under this subsection shall be advanced on the docket of the court in which filed, and put ahead of all other actions (other than other actions brought under this subsection or under section 315).

[(b) In any case in which the Commission refers an apparent violation to the Attorney General, the Attorney General shall respond by report to the Commission with respect to any action taken by the Attorney General regarding such apparent violation. Each report shall be transmitted no later than 60 days after the date the Commission refers any apparent violation, and at the close of every 30-day period thereafter until there is final disposition of such apparent violation. The Commission may from time to time prepare and publish reports on the status of such referrals.]

ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 313. (a)(1) Any person who believes a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, has occurred may file a complaint with the Commission. Such complaint shall be in writing, shall be signed and sworn to by the person filing such complaint, and shall be notarized. Any person filing such a complaint shall be subject to the provisions of section 1001 of title 18, United States Code. The Commission may not conduct any investigation under this section, or take any other action under this section, solely on the basis of a complaint of a person whose identity is not disclosed to the Commission. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the Commission shall not have the authority to inquire into or investigate the utilization or activities of any staff employee of any person holding Federal office without first consulting with such person holding Federal office. An affidavit given by the person holding Federal office that such staff employee is performing his regularly assigned duties shall be a complete bar to any further inquiry or investigation of the matter involved.

(2) The Commission, if it has reasonable cause to believe that any person has committed a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, shall notify the person involved of such apparent violation and shall make an investigation of such violation in accordance with the provisions of this section.

(3)(A) Any investigation under paragraph (2) shall be conducted expeditiously and shall include an investigation, conducted in accordance with the provisions of this section, of reports and statements filed by any complainant under this title, if such complainant is a candidate.

(B) Any notification or investigation made under paragraph (2) shall not be made public by the Commission or by any other person without the written consent of the person receiving such notification or the person with respect to whom such investigation is made.

(4) The Commission shall, at the request of any person who receives notice of an apparent violation under paragraph (2), afford such person a reasonable opportunity to demonstrate that no action shall be taken against such person by the Commission under this Act.

(5)(A) If the Commission determines that there is reasonable cause to believe that any person has committed or is about to commit a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the Commission shall make every endeavor for a period of not less than 30 days to correct or prevent such violation by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion, and to enter into a conciliation agreement with the person involved. Except that, if the Commission has reasonable cause to believe that—

(i) any person has failed to file a report required to be filed under section 304(a)(2)(C) for the calendar quarter occurring immediately before the date of a general election;

(ii) any person has failed to file a report required to be filed no later than 10 days before an election; or

(iii) on the basis of a complaint filed less than 45 days but more than 10 days before an election, any person has committed a knowing and willful violation of this Act of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954;

the Commission shall make every effort, for a period of not less than one-half the number of days between the date upon which the Commission determines there is reasonable cause to believe such a violation has occurred and the date of the election involved, to correct or prevent such violation by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion, and to enter into a conciliation agreement with the person involved. A conciliation agreement, unless violated, shall constitute a complete bar to any further action by the Commission, including the bringing of a civil proceeding under subparagraph (B).

(B) If the Commission is unable to correct or prevent any such violation by such informal methods, the Commission may, if the Commission determines there is probable cause to believe that a violation has occurred or is about to occur, institute a civil action for relief, including a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or any other appropriate order, including a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of $5,000 or an amount equal to the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, in the district court of the United States for the district in which the person against whom such action is brought is found, resides, or transacts business.

(C) In any civil action instituted by the Commission under subparagraph (B), the court shall grant a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order, including a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater or $5,000 or an amount equal to the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, upon a proper showing that the person involved has engaged or is about to engage in a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

(D) If the Commission determines that there is probable cause to believe that a knowing and willful violation subject to and as defined in section 328 has occurred or is about to occur, it may refer such apparent violation to the Attorney General of the United States without regard to any limitation set forth in subparagraph (A).

(6)(A) If the Commission believes that there is clear and convincing proof that a knowing and willful violation of this Act or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, has been committed, any conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission under paragraph (5)(A) may include a requirement that the person involved in such conciliation agreement shall pay a civil penalty which shall not exceed the greater of (i) $10,000; or (ii) an amount equal to 200 percent of the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation.

(B) If the Commission believes that a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has been committed, a conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission under paragraph (5)(A) may include a requirement that the person involved in such conciliation agreement shall pay a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of (i) $5,000; or (ii) an amount equal to the amount of the contribution or expenditure involved in such violation.

(C) The Commission shall make available to the public (i) the results of any conciliation attempt, including any conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission; and (ii) any determination by the Commission that no violation of the Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, has occurred.

(7) In any civil action for relief instituted by the Commission under paragraph (5), if the court determines that the Commission has established through clear and convincing proof that the person involved in such civil action has committed a knowing and willful violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the court may impose a civil penalty of not more than the greater of (A) $10,000; or (B) an amount equal to 200 percent of the contribution or expenditure involved in such violation. In any case in which such person has entered into a conciliation agreement with the Commission under paragraph (5)(A), the Commission may institute a civil action for relief under paragraph (5) if it believes that such person has violated any provision of such conciliation agreement. In order for the Commission to obtain relief in any such civil action, it shall be sufficient for the Commission to establish that such person has violated, in whole or in part, any requirement of such conciliation agreement.

(8) In any action brought under paragraph (5) or paragraph (7), subpenas for witnesses who are required to attend a United States district court may run into any other district.

(9)(A) Any party aggrieved by an order of the Commission dismissing a complaint filed by such party under paragraph (1), or by a failure on the part of the Commission to act on such complaint in accordance with the provisions of this section within 90 days after the filing of such complaint, may file a petition with the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.

(B) The filing of any petition under subparagraph (A) shall be made—

(i) in the case of the dismissal of a complaint by the Commission, no later than 60 days after such dismissal; or

(ii) in the case of a failure on the part of the Commission to act on such complaint, no later than 60 days after the 90-day period specified in subparagraph (A).

(C) In any proceeding under this paragraph the court may declare that the dismissal of the complaint or the action, or the failure to act, is contrary to law and may direct the Commission to proceed in conformity with such declaration within 30 days, failing which the complainant may bring in his own name a civil action to remedy the violation involved in the original complaint.

(10) The judgment of the district court may be appealed to the court of appeals and the judgment of the court of appeals affirming or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the district court shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

(11) Any action brought under this subsection shall be advanced on the docket of the court in which filed, and put ahead of all other actions (other than other actions brought under this subsection or under section 314).

(12) If the Commisison determines after an investigation that any person has violated an order of the court entered in a proceeding brought under paragraph (5) it may petition the court for an order to adjudicate such person in civil contempt, except that if it believes the violation to be knowing and willful it may petition the court for an order to adjudicate such person in criminal contempt.

(b) In any case in which the Commission refers an apparent violation to the Attorney General, the Attorney General shall respond by report to the Commission with respect to any action taken by the Attorney General regarding such apparent violation. Each report shall be transmitted no later than 60 days after the date the Commission refers any apparent violation, and at the close of every 30-day period thereafter until there is final disposition of such apparent violation. The Commisison may from time to time prepare and publish reports on the status of such referrals.

(c) Any member of the Commission, any employee of the Commission, or any other person who violates the provisions of subsection (a)(3)(B) shall be fined not more than $2,000. Any such member, employee, or other person who knowingly and willfully violates the provisions of subsection (a)(3)(B) shall be fined not more than $5,000.

JUDICIAL REVIEW

SEC. [315] 314. (a) The Commission, the national committee of any political party, or any individual eligible to vote in any election for the office of President of the United States may institute such actions in the appropriate district court of the United States, including actions for declaratory judgment, as may be appropriate to construe the constitutionality of any provision of this Act or of section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, 616, or 617 of title 18, United States Code. The district court immediately shall certify all questions of constitutionality of this Act or of section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, 616, or 617 of title 18, United States Code to the United States court of appeals for the circuit involved, which shall hear the matter sitting en banc.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, any decision on a matter certified under subsection (a) shall be reviewable by appeal directly to the Supreme Court of the United States. Such appeal shall be brought no later than 20 days after the decision of the court of appeals.

(c) It shall be the duty of the court of appeals and of the Supreme Court of the United States to advance on the docket and to expedite to the greatest possible extent the disposition of any matter certified under subsection (a).

DUTIES

SEC. [316] 315. (a) It shall be the duty of the Commission—

(1) to develop and furnish to the person required by the provisions of this Act prescribed forms for the making of the reports and statements required to be filed with it under this title;

(2) to prepare, publish, and furnish to the person required to file such reports and statements a manual setting forth recommended uniform methods of bookkeeping and reporting;

(3) to develop a filing, coding, and cross-indexing system consonant with the purposes of this title;

(4) to make the reports and statements filed with it available for public inspection and copying, commencing as soon as practicable but not later than the end of the second day following the day during which it was received, and to permit copying of any such report or statement by hand or by duplicating machine, as requested by any person, at the expense of such person: Provided, That any information copied from such reports and statements shall not be sold or utilized by any person for the purpose of soliciting contributions or for any commercial purpose;

(5) to preserve such reports and statements for a period of ten years from date of receipt, except that reports and statements relating solely to candidates for the House of Representatives shall be preserved for only five years from the date of receipt;

(6) to compile and maintain a cumulative index of reports and statements filed with it, which shall be published in the Federal Register at regular intervals and which shall be available for purchase directly or by mail for a reasonable price, and to compile and maintain a separate cumulative index of reports and statements filed with it by political committees supporting more than one candidate, which shall include a listing of the date of the registration of any such political committee and the date upon which any such political committee qualifies to make expenditures under section 320(a)(2), and which shall be revised on the same basis and at the same time as the other cumulative indices required under this paragraph;

(7) to prepare and publish from time to time special reports listing those candidates for whom reports were filed as required by this title and those candidates for whom such reports were not filed as so required;

(8) to make from time to time audits and field investigations with respect to reports and statements filed under the provisions of this title, and with respect to alleged failures to file any report or statement required under the provisions of this title, and to give priority to auditing and field investigating the verification for, and the receipt and use of, any payments received by a candidate under chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954;

* * * * * * *

(c)(1) The Commission, before prescribing any rule or regulation under this section or under section 312(b)(2)(B), shall transmit a statement with respect to such rule or regulation to the Senate or to the House of Representatives, as the case may be, in accordance with the provisions of this subsection. Such statement shall set forth the proposed rule or regulation and shall contain a detailed explanation and justification of such rule or regulation.

(2) If the appropriate body of the Congress which receives a statement from the Commission under this subsection does not, through appropriate action, disapprove, in whole or in part, the proposed rule or regulation set forth in such statement no later than 30 legislative days after receipt of such statement, then the Commission may prescribe such rule or regulation. In the case of any rule or regulation proposed to deal with reports or statements required to be filed under this title by a candidate for the office of President of the United States, and by political committees supporting such a candidate both the Senate and the House of Representatives shall have the power to disapprove such proposed rule or regulation. Whenever a committee of the House of Representatives reports any resolution relating to any such rule or regulation, it is at any time thereafter in order (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. The motion is highly privileged and is not debatable. An amendment to the motion is not in order, and it is not in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to. The Commission may not prescribe any rule or regulation which is disapproved under this paragraph.

* * * * * * *

(e) In any proceeding, including any civil or criminal enforcement proceeding against any person charged with violating any provision of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, no rule, regulation, guideline, advisory opinion, opinion of counsel or any other pronouncement by the Commission or by any member, officer, or employee thereof (other than any rule or regulation of the Commission which takes effect under subsection (c)) shall be used against any person, either as having the force of law, as creating any presumption of violation or of criminal intent, or as admissible in evidence against such person, or in any other manner whatsoever.

[STATEMENTS FILED WITH STATE OFFICERS

[SEC. 317. (a) A copy of each statement required to be filed with the Commission by this title shall be filed with the Secretary of State (or, if there is no office of Secretary of State, the equivalent State officer) of the appropriate State. For purposes of this subsection, the term "appropriate State" means—

[(1) for reports relating to expenditures and contributions in connection with the campaign for nomination for election, or election, of a candidate to the office of President or Vice President of the United States, each State in which an expenditure is made by him or on his behalf, and

[(2) for reports relating to expenditures and contributions in connection with the campaign for nomination for election, or election, of a candidate to the office of Senator or Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress of the United States, the State in which he seeks election.

[(b) It shall be the duty of the Secretary of State, or the equivalent State officer, under subsection (a)—

[(1) to receive and maintain in an orderly manner all reports and statements required by this title to be filed with him;

[(2) to preserve such reports and statements for a period of ten years from date of receipt, except that reports and statements relating solely to candidates for the House of Representatives shall be preserved for only five years from the date of receipt;

[(3) to make the reports and statement filed with him available for public inspection and copying during regular office hours, commencing as soon as practicable but not later than the end of the day during which it was received, and to permit copying of any such report or statement by hand or by duplicating machine, requested by any person, at the expense of such person; and

[(4) to compile and maintain a current list of all statements or parts of statements pertaining to each candidate.]

FRAUDULENT MISREPRESENTATION OF CAMPAIGN AUTHORITY

SEC. 316. No person, being a candidate for Federal office or an employee or agent of such a candidate shall—

(1) fraudulently misrpresent himself or any committee or organization under his control as speaking or writing or otherwise acting for or on behalf of any other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof on a matter which is damaging to such other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof; or

(2) participate in or conspire to participate in any plan, scheme, or design to violate paragraph (1).

USE OF CONTRIBUTED AMOUNTS FOR CERTAIN PURPOSES

SEC. [318] 317. Amounts received by a candidate as contributions that are in excess of any amount necessary to defray his expenditures, and any other amounts contributed to an individual for the purpose of supporting his activities as a holder of Federal office, may be used by such candidate or individual, as the case may be, to defray any ordinary and necessary expenses incurred by him in connection with his duties as a holder of Federal office, may be contributed by him to any organization described in section 170(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as may be used for any other lawful purpose. To the extent any such contribution, amount contributed, or expenditure thereof is not otherwise required to be disclosed under the provisions of this title, such contribution, amount contributed, or expenditure shall be fully disclosed in accordance with rules promulgated by the Commission. The Commission is authorized to prescribe such rules as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

PROHIBITION OF FRANKED SOLICITATIONS

SEC. [319] 318. No Senator, Representative, Resident Commissioner, or Delegate shall make any solicitations of funds by a mailing under the frank under section 3210 of title 39, United States Code.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. [320] 319. There are authorized to be appropriated to the Commission for the purpose of carrying out its function under this Act, and under chapters 95 and 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, not to exceed $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975.

[PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS

[SEC. 321. (a) Any person who violates any of the provisions of this title shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

[(b) In case of any conviction under this title, where the punishment inflicted does not include imprisonment, such conviction shall be deemed a misdemeanor conviction only.]

LIMITATIONS ON CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

SEC. 320. (a) (1) Except as otherwise provided by paragraphs (2) and (3), no person shall make contributions to any candidate with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $1,000, or to any political committee in any calendar year which exceed, in the aggregate, $1,000.

(2) No political committee (other than a principal campaign committee) shall make contributions to (A) any candidate with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000; or (B) to any political committee in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000. Contributions by the national committee of a political party serving as the principal campaign committee of a candidate for the office of President of the United States shall not exceed the limitation imposed by the preceding sentence with respect to any other candidate for Federal office. For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'political committee' means an organization registered as a political committee under section 303 for a period of not less than 6 months which has received contributions from more than 50 persons and, except for any State political party organization, has made contributions to 5 or more candidates for Federal office. For purposes of the limitations provided by paragraph (1) and this paragraph, all contributions made by political committees established or financed or maintained or controlled by any corporation, labor organization, or any other person, including any parent, subsidiary, branch, division, department, or local unit of such corporation, labor organization, or any other person, or by any group of such persons, shall be considered to have been made by a single political committee, except that (A) nothing in this sentence shall limit transfers between political committees of funds raised through joint fundraising efforts; and (B) for purposes of the limitations provided by paragraph (1) and this paragraph, all contributions made by a single political committee established or financed or maintained or controlled by a national committee of a political party and by a single political committee established or financed or maintained or controlled by the State committee of a political party shall not be considered to have been made by a single political committee. In any case in which a corporation and any of its subsidiaries, branches, divisions, departments, or local units, or a labor organization and any of its subsidiaries, branches, divisions, departments, or local units establish or finance or maintain or control more than one separate segregated fund, all such separate segregated funds shall be treated as a single separate segregated fund for purposes of the limitations prescribed by paragraph (1) and this paragraph.

(3) No individual shall make contributions aggregating more than $25,000 in any calendar year. For purposes of this paragraph, any contribution made to a candidate in a year other than the calendar year in which the election is held with respect to which such contribution was made is considered to be made during the calendar year in which such election is held.

(4) For purposes of this subsection—

(A) contributions to a named candidate made to any political committee authorized by such candidate to accept contributions on his behalf shall be considered to be contributions made to such candidate;

(B)(i) expenditures made by any person in cooperation, consultation, or concert, with, or at the request of suggestion of, a candidate, his authorized political committees, or their agents shall be considered to be a contribution to such candidate;

(ii) the financing by any person of the dissemination, distribution, or republication, in whole or in part, of any broadcast or any written, graphic, or other form of campaign materials prepared by the candidate, his campaign committees, or their authorized agents shall be considered to be an expenditure for purposes of this paragraph; and

(C) contributions made to or for the benefit of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be contributions made to or for the benefit of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States.

(5) The limitations imposed by paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection shall apply separately with respect to each election, except that all elections held in any calendar year for the office of President of the President of the United States (except a general election for such office) shall be considered to be one election.

(6) For purposes of the limitations imposed by this section, all contributions made by a person, either directly or indirectly, on behalf of a particular candidate, including contributions which are in any way earmarked or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to such candidate, shall be treated as contributions from such person to such candidate. The intermediary or conduit shall report the original source and the intended recipient of such contribution to the Commission and to the intended recipient.

(b)(1) No candidate for the office of President of the United States who has established his eligibility under section 9003 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to condition for eligibility for payments) or under section 9033 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to eligibility for payments) to receive payments from the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate may make expenditures in excess of—

(A) $10,000,000, in the case of a campaign for nomination for election to such office, except the aggregate of expenditures under this subparagraph in any one State shall not exceed twice the greater of 8 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State (as certified under subsection (e)), or $100,000; or

(B) $20,000,000 in the case of a campaign for election to such office.

(2) For purposes of this subsection—

(A) expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be expenditures made by or on behalf of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States; and

(B) an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a candidate for the office of Vice President, if it is made by—

(i) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for the purposes of making any expenditure; or

(ii) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, or an agent of the candidate, to make the expenditure.

(c)(1) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1976), as there become available necessary data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register the per centum difference between the price index for the twelve months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each limitation established by subsection (b) and subsection (d) shall be increased by such per centum difference. Each amount so increased shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)—

(B) the term "base period" means calendar year 1974.

(d)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law with respect to limitations on expenditures or limitations on contributions, the national committee of a political party and a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may make expenditures in connection with the general election campaign of candidates for Federal office, subject to the limitations contained in paragraph (2) and (3) of this subsection.

(2) The national committee of a political party may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of any candidate for President of the United States who is affiliated with such party which exceeds an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States (as certified under subsection (e)). Any expenditure under this paragraph shall be in addition to any expenditure by a national committee of a political party serving as the principal campaign committee of a candidate for the office of the President of the United States.

(3) The national committee of a political party, or a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a

State committee, may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate for Federal office in a State who is affiliated with such party which exceeds—

(A) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Senator, or of Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, the greater of—

(i) 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State (as certified under subsection (e)); or

(ii) $20,000; and

(B) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner in any other State, $10,000.

(e) During the first week of January 1975, and every subsequent year, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, of each State, and of each congressional district as of the first day of July next preceding the date of certification. The term "voting age population" means resident population, 18 years of age or older.

(f) No candidate or political committee shall knowingly accept any contribution or make any expenditure in violation of the provisions of this section. No officer or employee of a political committee shall knowingly accept a contribution made for the benefit or use of a candidate, or knowingly make any expenditure on behalf of a candidate, in violation of any limitation imposed on contributions and expenditures under this section.

(g) The Commission shall prescribe rules under which any expenditure by a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President for use in 2 or more States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

CONTRIBUTIONS OR EXPENDITURES BY NATIONAL BANKS, CORPORATIONS, OR LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

SEC. 321. (a) It is unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress, to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election to any political office, or in connection with any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any political office, or for any corporation whatever, or any labor organization to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election at which Presidential and Vice Presidential electors or a Senator or Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress are to be voted for, or in connection with any primary election or political convention, or caucus held to select candidates for any of the foregoing offices, or for any candidate, political committee, or other person knowingly to accept or receive any contribution prohibited by this section, or any officer or any director of any corporation or any national bank, or any officer of any labor organization, to consent to any contribution or expenditure by such corporation, national bank, or labor organization, as the case may be, which is prohibited by this section.

(b)(1) For purposes of this section the term 'labor organization' means any organization of any kind, or any agency or employee representation committee or plan, in which employees participate and which exists for the purpose, in whole or in part, of dealing with employers concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or contributions of work.

(2) For purposes of this section, the term 'contribution or expenditure' shall include any direct or indirect payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money, or any services, or anything of value (except a loan of money by a national or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations and in the ordinary course of business) to any candidate, campaign committee, or political party or organization, in connection with any election to any of the officers referred to in this section, but shall not include (A) communications by a corporation to its stockholders and executive officers and their families or by a labor organization to its members and their families on any subject; (B) nonpartisan registration and get-out-the-vote campaigns by a corporation aimed at its stockholders and executive officers and their families; or by a labor organization aimed at its members and their families; and (C) the establishment, administration, and solicitation of contributions to a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes by a corporation or labor organization, except that (i) it shall be unlawful for such a fund to make a contribution or expenditure by utilizing money or anything of value secured by physical force, job discrimination, financial reprisals, or the threat of force, job discrimination, or financial reprisal, or by dues, fees, or other moneys required as a condition of membership in a labor organization or as a condition of employment, or by moneys obtained in any commercial transaction; (ii) it shall be unlawful for a corporation or a separate segregated fund established by a corporation to solicit contributions from any person other than its stockholders, executive officers, and their families, for an incorporated trade association or a separate segregated fund established by an incorporated trade association to solicit contributions from any person other than the stockholders and executive officers of the member corporations of such trade association and the families of such stockholders and executive officers (to the extent that any such solicitation of such stockholders and executive officers, and their families, has been separately and specifically approved by the member corporation involved, and such member corporation has not approved any such solicitation by more than one such trade association in any calendar year, or for a labor organization or a separate segregated fund established by a labor organization to solicit contributions from any person other than its members and their families; (iii) notwithstanding any other law, any method of soliciting voluntary contributions or of facilitating the making of voluntary contributions to a separate segregated fund established by a corporation, permitted to corporations, shall also be permitted to labor organizations; and (iv) any corporation which utilizes a method of soliciting voluntary contributions or facilitating the making of voluntary contributions, shall make available, on written request, such method to a labor organization representing any members working for such corporation.

(3) for purposes of this section the term "executive officer" means an individual employed by a corporation who is paid on a salary rather than hourly basis and who has policymaking or supervisory responsibilities.

CONTRIBUTIONS BY GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS

SEC. 322. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person who enters—

(1) into any contract with the United States or any department or agency thereof either for the rendition of personal service or furnishing any material, supplies, or equipment to the United States or any department or agency thereof or for selling any land or building to the United States or any department or agency thereof, if payment for the performance of such contract or payment for such material, supplies, equipment, land, or building is to be made in whole or in part from funds appropriated by the Congress, at any time between the commencement of negotiations for and the later of (A) the completion of performance under, or (B) the termination of negotiations for, such contract or furnishing of material, supplies, equipment, land, or buildings, directly or indirectly makes any contribution of money or other thing of value, or promises expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, to any political party, committee, or candidate for public office or to any person for any political purpose or use; or

(2) to solicit any such contribution from any such person for any such purpose during any such period.

(b) This section does not prohibit or make unlawful the establishment or administration of, or the solicitation of contributions to, any separate segregated fund by any corporation or labor organization for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, unless the provisions of section 321 prohibit or make unlawful the establishment or administration of, or the solicitation of contributions to, such fund.

(c) For purposes of this section, the term "labor organization" has the meaning given it by section 321.

PUBLICATION OR DISTRIBUTION OF POLITICAL STATEMENTS

SEC. 323. Whenever any person makes an expenditure for the purpose of financing any communication expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate through any broadcasting station, newspaper, magazine, outdoor advertising facility, direct mailing, or other similar type of general public political advertising, such communication—

(1) if authorized by a candidate, his authorized political committees, or their agents, shall clearly and conspicuously, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commission, state that such communication has been so authorized; or

(2) if not authorized in accordance with paragraph (1), shall clearly and conspicuously, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commission, state that such communication is not authorized by any candidate, and state the name of the person that made or financed the expenditure for the communication, including, in the case of a political committee, the name of any affiliated or connected organization as stated in section 302(b)(2).

CONTRIBUTIONS BY FOREIGN NATIONALS

SEC. 324. (a) It shall be unlawful for a foreign national directly or through any other person to make any contribution of money or other thing of value, or to promise expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, in connection with an election to any political office or in connection with any primary election, convention, or caucus held to select candidates for any political office, or for any person to solicit, accept, or receive any such contribution from any such foreign national.

(b) As used in this section, the term "foreign national" means—

(1) a foreign principal, as such term is defined by section 1(b) of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938 (22 U.S.C. 611(b)), except that the term "foreign national" shall not include any individual who is a citizen of the United States; or

(2) an individual who is not a citizen of the United States and who is not lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as defined by section 101(a)(20) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(20)).

PROHIBITION OF CONTRIBUTIONS IN NAME OF ANOTHER

SEC. 325. No person shall make a contribution in the name of another person or knowingly permit his name to be used to effect such a contribution, and no person shall knowingly accept a contribution made by one person in the name of another person.

LIMITATION ON CONTRIBUTIONS OF CURRENCY

SEC. 326. (a) No person shall make contributions of currency of the United States or currency of any foreign country to or for the benefit of any candidate which, in the aggregate, exceeds $250, with respect to any campaign of such candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office.

(b) Any person who knowingly and willfully violates the provisions of this section shall be fined in an amount which does not exceed the greater of $25,000 or 300 percent of the amount of the contribution involved.

ACCEPTANCE OF EXCESSIVE HONORARIUMS

SEC. 327. No person while an elected or appointed officer or employee of any branch of the Federal Government shall accept—

(1) any honorarium of more than $1,000 (excluding amounts accepted for actual travel and subsistence expenses) for any appearance, speech, or article; or

(2) honorariums (not prohibited by paragraph (1) of this section) aggregating more than $15,000 in any calendar year.

PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS

SEC. 328. Any person who knowingly and willfully commits a violation of any provision or provisions of this Act, other than the provisions of section 326, which involves the making, receiving, or reporting of any contribution or expenditure having a value, in the aggregate, of $5,000 or more during a calendar year shall be fined in an amount which does not exceed the greater of $25,000 or 300 percent of the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

SAVING PROVISION RELATING TO REPEALED SECTIONS

SEC. 329. Except as otherwise provided by this Act, the repeal by the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976 of any provision or penalty or penalties shall not have the effect of releasing or extinguishing any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under such provision or penalty, and such provision or penalty shall be treated as remaining in force for the purpose of sustaining any proper action or prosecution for the enforcement of any penalty, forfeiture, or liability.

ADDITIONAL ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITY

SEC. 407. (a) In any case in which the Commission, after notice and opportunity for a hearing on the record in accordance with section 554 of title 5, United States Code, makes a finding that a person who, while a candidate for Federal office, failed to file a report required by title III of this Act, and such finding is made before the expiration of the time within which the failure to file such report may be prosecuted as a violation of such title III, the Commission shall (1) make every endeavor for a period of not less than 30 days to correct such failure by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion; or (2) in the case of any such failure which occurs less than 45 days before the date of the election involved, make every endeavor for a period of not less than one-half the number of days between the date of such failure and the date of the election involved to correct such failure by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion, except that no action may be taken by the Commission with respect to any complaint filed with the Commission during the 5-day period immediately before an election until after the date of such election. If the Commission fails to correct such failure through such informal methods, then such person shall be disqualified from becoming a candidate in any future election for Federal office for a period of time beginning on the date of such finding and ending one year after the expiration of the term of the Federal office for which such person was a candidate.

TERMINATION OF AUTHORITY OF COMMISSION

SEC. 409. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act or any other provision of law, the authority of the Commission to carry out the provisions of this Act, and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, shall terminate at the close of March 31, 1977, if either House of the Congress by appropriate action determines that such termination shall take effect pursuant to subsection (b).

(b) The appropriate committee of each House of the Congress shall, commencing January 3, 1977, conduct a review of the elections of candidates for Federal office conducted in 1976, the operation of chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 with respect to such elections, and the activities conducted by the Commission, and report to their respective Houses not later than March 1, 1977. Such report shall include a recommendation of whether the authority of the Commission shall be terminated on March 31, 1977, as set forth in subsection (a).

(c) Nothing in this section shall affect any proceeding pending in any court of the United States on the date of the enactment of this section. The Attorney General of the United States shall have the authority to act on behalf of the United States in any such proceeding.

SEC. 9002. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this chapter—

(1) The term "authorized committee" means, with respect to the candidates of a political party for President and Vice President of the United States, any political committee which is authorized in writing by such candidates to incur expenses to further the election of such candidates. Such authorization shall be addressed to the chairman of such political committee, and a copy of such authorization shall be filed by such candidates with the Commission. Any withdrawal of any authorization shall also be in writing and shall be addressed and filed in the same manner as the authorization.

(2) The term "candidate" means, with respect to any Presidential election, an individual who (A) has been nominated for election to the office of President of the United States or the office of Vice President of the United States by a major party, or (B) has qualified to have his name on the election ballot (or to have the names of electors pledged to him on the election ballot) as the candidate of a political party for election to either such office in 10 or more States. For purposes of paragraphs (6) and (7) of this section and purposes of section 9004(a)(2), the term "candidate" means, with respect to any preceding presidential election, an individual who received popular votes for the office of President in such election. The term "candidate" shall not include any individual who has ceased actively to seek election to the office of President of the United States or to the office of Vice President of the United States, in more than one State.

(3) The term "Commission" means the Federal Election Commission established by section [310] 310(a)(1) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

(a) IN GENERAL.— * * *

* * * * * * *

(d) WITHDRAWAL BY CANDIDATE.—In any case in which an individual ceases to be a candidate as a result of the operation of the last sentence of section 9002(2), such individual—

(1) shall no longer be eligible to receive any payments under section 9006; and

(2) shall pay to the Secretary, as soon as practicable after the date upon which such individual ceases to be a candidate, an amount equal to the amount of payments received by such individual under section 9006 which are not used to defray qualified campaign expenses.

SEC. 9004. ENTITLEMENT OF ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES TO PAYMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.— * * *

* * * * * * *

(d) EXPENDITURES FROM PERSONAL FUNDS.—In order to be eligible to receive any payment under section 9006, the candidate of a major, minor, or new party in an election for the office of President shall certify to the Commission, under penalty of perjury, that such candidate shall not knowingly make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with his campaign for election to the office of President in excess of, in the aggregate, $50,000. For purposes of this subsection, expenditures from personal funds made by a candidate of a major, minor, or new party for the office of Vice President shall be considered to be expenditures by the candidate of such party for the office of President.

(e) DEFINITION OF IMMEDIATE FAMILY.—For purposes of subsection (d), the term "immediate family" means a candidate's spouse, and any child, parent, grandparent, brother, or sister of the candidate, and spouses of such persons.

* * * * * * *

SEC. 9006. PAYMENTS TO ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF CAMPAIGN FUND.—There is hereby established on the books of the Treasury of the United States a special fund to be known as the "Presidential Election Campaign Fund." The Secretary shall, from time to time, transfer to the fund an amount not in excess of the sum of the amounts designated (subsequent to the previous Presidential election) to the fund by individuals under section 6096. There is appropriated to the fund for each fiscal year, out of amounts in the general fund of the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount equal to the amounts so designated during each fiscal year, which shall remain available to the fund without fiscal year limitation.

[(b) TRANSFER TO THE GENERAL FUND.—If, after a presidential election and after all eligible candidates have been paid the amount which they are entitled to receive under this chapter, there are moneys remaining in the fund, the Secretary shall transfer the moneys so remaining to the general fund of the Treasury.]

[(c)] (b) PAYMENTS FROM THE FUND.—Upon receipt of a certification from the Commission under section 9005 for payment to the eligible candidates of a political party, the Secretary shall pay to such candidates out of the fund the amount certified by the Commission. Amounts paid to any such candidates shall be under the control of such candidates.

[(d)] (c) INSUFFICIENT AMOUNTS IN FUND.—If at the time of a certification by the Comptroller General under section 9005 for payment to the eligible candidates of a political party, the Secretary or his delegate determines that the moneys in the fund are not, or may not be, sufficient to satisfy the full entitlements of the eligible candidates of all political parties, he shall withhold from such payment such amount as he determines to be necessary to assure that the eligible candidates of each political party will receive their pro rata share of their full entitlement. Amounts withheld by reason of the preceding sentence shall be paid when the Secretary or his delegate determines that there are sufficient moneys in the fund to pay such amounts, or portions thereof, to all eligible candidates for whom amounts have been withheld, but, if there are not sufficient moneys in the fund to satisfy the full entitlement of the eligible candidates of all political parties, the amounts so withheld shall be paid in such manner that the eligible candidates of each political party receive their pro rata share of their full entitlement. In any case in which the Secretary or his delegate determines that there are insufficient moneys in the fund to make payments under subsection (b), section 9008(b)(3), and section 9037(b), moneys shall not be made available from any other source for the purpose of making such payments.

SEC. 9008. PAYMENTS FOR PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATING CONVENTIONS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF ACCOUNTS.—* * *

(b) ENTITLEMENT TO PAYMENTS FROM THE FUND.—

(1) MAJOR PARTIES.—Subject to the provisions of this section, the national committee of a major party shall be entitled to payments under paragraph (3), with respect to any presidential nominating convention. in amounts which, in the aggregate, shall not exceed $2,000,000.

(2) MINOR PARTIES.—Subject to the provisions of this section, the national committee of a minor party shall be entitled to payments under paragraph (3), with respect to any presidential nominating convention, in amounts which, in the aggregate, shall not exceed an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount the national committee of a major party is entitled to receive under paragraph (1) as the number of popular votes received by the candidate for President of the minor party, as such candidate, in the preceding presidential election bears to the average number of popular votes received by the candidates for President of the United States of the major parties in the preceding presidential election.

(3) PAYMENTS.—Upon receipt of certification from the Commission under subsection (g), the Secretary shall make payments from the appropriate account maintained under subsection (a) to the national committee of a major party or minor party which elects to receive its entitlement under this subsection. Such payments shall be available for use by such committee in accordance with the provisions of subsection (c).

(4) LIMITATION.—Payments to the national committee of a major party or minor party under this subsection from the account designated for such committee shall be limited to the amounts in such account at the time of payment.

(5) ADJUSTMENT OF ENTITLEMENTS.—The entitlements established by this subsection shall be adjusted in the same manner as expenditure limitations established by section [608(c) and section 608(f) of title 18, United States Code,] section 320(b) and section 320(d) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 are adjusted pursuant to the provisions of section [608(d) of such title] 320(c) of such Act.

* * * * * * *

(d) LIMITATION OF EXPENDITURES.—

(1) MAJOR PARTIES.—Except as provided by paragraph (3), the national committee of a major jarty may not make expenditures with respect to a presidential nominating convention which, in the aggregate, exceed the amount of payments to which such committee is entitled under subsection (b) (1).

(2) MINOR PARTIES.—Except as provided by paragraph (3), the national committee of a minor party may not make expenditures with respect to a presidential nominating convention which, in the aggregate, exceed the amount of the entitlement of the national committee of a major party under subsection (b) (1).

(3) EXCEPTION.—The Commission may authorize the national committee of a major party or minor party to make expenditures which, in the aggregate, exceed the limitation established by paragraph (1) or paragraph (2) of this subsection. Such authorization shall be based upon a determination by the Commission that, due to extraordinary and unforeseen circumstances, such expenditures are necessary to assure the effective operation of the presidential nominating convention by such committee.

(4) PROVISION OF LEGAL OR ACCOUNTING SERVICES.—For purposes of this section, the payment, by any person other than the national committee of a political party, of compensation to any person for any legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of the national committee of a political party shall not be treated as an expenditure made by or on behalf of such national committee with respect to the presidential nominating convention of the political party involved.

(c) REVIEW OF REGULATIONS.—

(1) The Commission, before prescribing any rule or regulation under subsection (b), shall transmit a statement with respect to such rule or regulation to the Senate and to the House of Representatives, in accordance with the provisions of this subsection. Such statement shall set forth the proposed rule or regulation and shall contain a detailed explanation and justification of such rule or regulation.

(2) If either such House does not, through appropriate action, disapprove, in whole or in part, the proposed rule or regulation set forth in such statement no later than 30 legislative days after receipt of such statement, then the Commission may prescribe such rule or regulation. Whenever a committee of the House of Representatives reports any resolution relating to any such rule or regulation, it is at any time thereafter in order (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. The motion is highly privileged and is not debatable. An amendment to the motion is not in order, and it is not in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to. The Commission may not prescribe any rule or regulation which is disapproved by either such House under this paragraph.

CHAPTER 96—PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARY MATCHING PAYMENT ACCOUNT

SEC. 9031. SHORT TITLE.

This chapter may be cited as the "Presidential Primary Matching Payment Account Act."

SEC. 9032. DEFINITIONS.

FOR PURPOSES OF THIS CHAPTER—

(1) The term "authorized committee" means, with respect to the candidates of a political party for President and Vice President of the United States, any political committee which is authorized in writing by such candidates to incur expenses to further the election of such candidates. Such authorization shall be addressed to the chairman of such political committee, and a copy of such authorization shall be filed by such candidates with the Commission. Any withdrawal of any authorization shall also be in writing and shall be addressed and filed in the same manner as the authorization.

(2) The term "candidate" means an individual who seeks nomination for election to be President of the United States. For purposes of this paragraph, an individual shall be considered to seek nomination for election if he (A) takes the action necessary under the law of a State to qualify himself for nomination for election, (B) receives contributions or incurs qualified campaign expenses, or (C) gives his consent for any other person to receive contributions or to incur qualified campaign expenses on his behalf. The term "candidate" shall not include any individual who is not actively conducting campaigns in more than one State in connection with seeking nomination for election to be President of the United States.

(3) The term "Commission" means the Federal Election Commission established by section [310] 309(a)(1) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

SEC. 9033. ELIGIBILITY FOR PAYMENTS.

(a) CONDITIONS.— * * *

(b) EXPENSE LIMITATION; DECLARATION OF INTENT; MINIMUM CONTRIBUTIONS.—To be eligible to receive payments under section 9037, a candidate shall certify to the Commission that—

(1) the candidate and his authorized committees will not incur qualified campaign expenses in excess of the [limitation] limitations on such expenses under section 9035,

(2) the candidate is seeking nomination by a political party for election to the office of President of the United States,

(3) the candidate has received matching contributions which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000 in contributions from residents of each of at least 20 States, and

(4) the aggregate of contributions certified with respect to any person under paragraph (3) does not exceed $250.

(c) WITHDRAWAL BY CANDIDATE.—In any case in which an individual ceases to be a candidate as a result of the operation of the last sentence of section 9032(2), such individual—

(1) shall no longer be eligible to receive any payments under section 9037; and

(2) notwithstanding the provisions of section 9038(b)(3), shall pay to the Secretary, as soon as practicable after the date upon which such individual ceases to be a candidate, an amount equal to the amount of payments received by such individual under section 9037 which are not used to defray qualified campaign expenses.

SEC. 9034. ENTITLEMENT OF ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES TO PAYMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Every candidate who is eligible to receive payments under section 9033 is entitled to payments under section 9037 in an amount equal to the amount of each contribution received by such candidate on or after the beginning of the calendar year immediately preceding the calendar year of the presidential election with respect to which such candidate is seeking nomination, or by his authorized committees, disregarding any amount of contributions from any person to the extent that the total of the amounts contributed by such person on or after the beginning of such preceding calendar year exceeds $250. For purposes of this subsection and section 9033(b), the term 'contribution' means a gift of money made by a written instrument which identifiies the person making the contribution by full name and mailing address, but does not include a subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value or anything described in subparagraph (B), (C), or (D) of section 9032(4).

(b) LIMITATIONS.—The total amount of payments to which a candidate is entitled under subsection (a) shall not exceed 50 percent of the expenditure limitation applicable under section [608(c)(1)(A) of title 18, United States Code] 320(b)(1)(A) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

(e) "contribution"—

(1) means a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value (except a loan of money by a national or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations and in the ordinary course of business, which shall be considered a loan by each endorser or guarantor, in that proportion of the unpaid balance thereof that each endorser or guarantor bears to the total number of endorsers or guarantors), made for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office or for the purpose of influencing the results of a primary held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President of the United States;

(2) means a contract, promise, or agreement, express or implied, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution for such purposes;

(3) means funds received by a political committee which are transferred to such committee from another political committee or other source;

(4) means the payment, by any person other than a candidate or a political committee, of compensation for the personal services of another person which are rendered to such candidate or political committee without charge for any such purpose, except that this subparagraph shall not apply (A) in the case of any legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of the national committee of a political party, other than any legal or accounting services attributable to any activity which directly furthers the election of any designated candidate to Federal office; or (B) in the case of any legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of a candidate or political committee solely for the purpose of ensuring compliance with the provisions of this chapter, the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954; but

(f) "expenditure"—

(1) means a purchase, payment, distributions, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money or anything of value (except a loan of money by a national or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations and in the ordinary course of business), made for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office or for the purpose of influencing the results of a primary held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President of the United States;

(2) means a contract, promise, or agreement, express or implied, whether or not legally enforceable, to make any expenditure; and

(3) means the transfer of funds by a political committee to another political committee; but

(4) does not include—

(A) any news story, commentary, or editorial distributed through the facilities of any broadcasting station, newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication, unless such facilities are owned or controlled by any political party, political committee, or candidate;

(B) nonpartisan activity designed to encourage individuals to register to vote or to vote;

(C) any communication by any membership organization or corporation to its members or stockholders, if such membership organization or corporation is not organized primarily for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office;

(D) the use of real or personal property and the cost of invitations, food, and beverages, voluntarily provided by an individual to a service on the individual's residential premises for candidate-related activities;

(E) any unreimbursed payment for travel expenses made by an individual who on his own behalf volunteers his personal services to a candidate;

(F) the payment, by any person other than a candidate or a political committee, of compensation for legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of the national committee of a political party, other than services attributable to activities which directly further the election of any designated candidate to Federal Office, or for legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of a candidate or political committee solely for the purpose of ensuring compliance with the provisions of this chapter, the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954;

[F] (G) any communication by any person which is not made for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office;

[G] (H) the payment by a State or local committee of a political party of the costs of preparation, display, or mailing or other distribution incurred by such committee with respect to a printed slate card or sample ballot, or other printed listing, of 3 or more candidates for any public office for which an election is held in the State in which such committee is organized, except that this clause shall not apply in the case of costs incurred by such committee with respect to a display of any such listing made on broadcasting stations, or in newspapers, magazines or other similar types of general public political advertising;

[H] (I) any costs incurred by a candidate in connection with the solicitation of contributions by such candidate, except that this clause shall not apply with respect to costs incurred by a candidate in excess of an amount equal to 20 percent of the expenditure limitations applicable to such candidate under section 608(c) of this title;

[I] (J) any costs incurred by a political committee (as such term is defined by section 608(b)(2) of this title) with respect to the solicitation of contributions to such political committee or to any general political fund controlled by such political committee, except that this clause shall not apply to exempt costs incurred with respect to the solicitation of contributions to any such political committee made through broadcasting stations, newspapers, magazine, outdoor advertising facilities, and other similar types of general public political advertising;

to the extent that the cumulative value of activities by any individual on behalf of any candidate under each of clauses (D) or (E) does not exceed $500 with respect to any election;

(g) "person" and "whoever" mean an individual, partnership, committee, association, corporation, or any other organization or group of persons;

(h) "State" means each State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and any territory or possession of the United States; and

(i) "political party" means any association, committee, or organization which nominates a candidate for election to any Federal office whose name appears on the election ballot as the candidate of such association, committee, or organization;

(j) "State committee" means the organization which, by virtue of the bylaws of a political party, is responsible for the day-to-day operation of such political party at the State level, as determined by the Federal Election Commission;

(k) "national committee" means the organization which, by virture of the bylaws of the political party, is responsible for the day-to-day operation of such political party at the national level, as determined by the Federal Election Commission established under section 310(a) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971; and

[§ 608. Limitations on contributions and expenditures.

[(a)(1) No candidate may make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with his campaigns during any calendar year for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office in excess of, in the aggregate—

[(A) $50,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of President or Vice President of the United States;

[(B) $35,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of Senator or for the office of Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative; or

[(C) $25,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of Representative, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner, in any other State.

[For purposes of this paragraph, any expenditure made in a year other than the calendar year in which the election is held with respect to which such expenditure was made, is considered to be made during the calendar year in which such election is held.

[(2) For purposes of this subsection, "immediate family" means a candidate's spouse, and any child, parent, grandparent, brother, or sister of the candidate, and the spouses of such persons.

[(3) No candidate or his immediate family may make loans or advances from their personal funds in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office unless such loan or advance is evidenced by a written instrument fully disclosing the terms and conditions of such loan or advance.

[(4) For purposes of this subsection, any such loan or advance shall be included in computing the total amount of such expenditures only to the extent of the balance of such loan or advance outstanding and unpaid.

[(b)(1) Except as otherwise provided by paragraphs (2) and (3), no person shall make contributions to any candidate with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $1,000.

[(2) No political committee (other than a principal campaign committee) shall make contributions to any candidate with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000. Contributions by the national committee of a political party serving as the principal campaign committee of a candidate for the office of President of the United States shall not exceed the limitation imposed by the preceding sentence with respect to any other candidate for Federal office. For purposes of this paragraph, the term "political committee" means an organization registered as a political committee under section 303 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 for a period of not less than 6 months which has received contributions from more than 50 persons and, except for any State political party organization, has made contributions to 5 or more candidates for Federal office.

[(3) No individual shall make contributions aggregating more than $25,000 in any calendar year. For purposes of this paragraph, any contribution made in a year other than the calendar year in which the election is held with respect to which such contribution was made, is considered to be made during the calendar year in which such election is held.

[(4) For purposes of this subsection—

[(A) contributions to a named candidate made to any political committee authorized by such candidate, in writing, to accept contributions on his behalf shall be considered to be contributions made to such candidate; and

[(B) contributions made to or for the benefit of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be contributions made to or for the benefit of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States.

[(5) The limitations imposed by paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection shall apply separately with respect to each election, except that all elections held in any calendar year for the office of President of the United States (except a general election for such office) shall be considered to be one election.

[(6) For purposes of the limitations imposed by this section, all contributions made by a person, either directly or indirectly, on behalf of a particular candidate, including contributions which are in any way earmarked or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to such candidate, shall be treated as contributions from such person to such candidate. The intermediary or conduit shall report the original source and the intended recipient of such contribution to the Commission and to the intended recipient.

[(c)(1) No candidate shall make expenditures in excess of—

[(A) $10,000,000, in the case of a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President of the United States, except that the aggregate of expenditures under this subparagraph in any one State shall not exceed twice the expenditure limitation applicable in such State to a candidate for nomination for election to the office of Senator, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, as the case may be;

[(B) $20,000,000, in the case of a candidate for election to the office of President of the United States;

[(C) in the case of any campaign for nomination for election by a candidate for the office of Senator or by a candidate for the office of Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, the greater of—

[(i) 8 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State (as certified under subsection (g)); or

[(ii) $100,000;

[(D) in the case of any campaign for election by a candidate for the office of Senator or by a candidate for the office of Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, the greater of—

[(i) 12 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State (as certified under subsection (g)); or

[(ii) $150,000;

[(E) $70,000, in the case of any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, by a candidate for the office of Representative in any other State, Delegate from the District of Columbia, or Resident Commissioner; or

[(F) $15,000, in the case of any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, by a candidate for the office of Delegate from Guam or the Virgin Islands.

[(2) For purposes of this subsection—

[(A) expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be expenditures made by or on behalf of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States; and

[(B) an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a Vice Presidential candidate, if it is made by—

[(i) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for the purposes of making any expenditure; or

[(ii) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, or an agent of the candidate, to make the expenditure.

[(3) The limitations imposed by subparagraphs (C), (D), (E), and (F) of paragraph (1) of this subsection shall apply separately with respect to each election.

[(4) The Commission shall prescribe rules under which any expenditure by a candidate for Presidential nomination for use in 2 or more States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

[(d)(1) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1976), as there become available necessary data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register the per centum difference between the price index for the 12 months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each limitation established by subsection (c) and subsection (f) shall be increased by such per centum difference. Each amount so increased shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

[(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)—

[(B) the term "base period" means the calendar year 1974.

[(e)(1) No person may make any expenditure (other than an expenditure made by or on behalf of a candidate within the meaning of subsection (c)(2)(B)) relative to a clearly identified candidate during a calendar year which, when added to all other expenditures made by such person during the year advocating the election or defeat of such candidate, exceeds $1,000.

[(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)—

[(A) "clearly identified" means—

[(i) the candidate's name appears;

[(ii) a photograph or drawing of the candidate appears; or

[(iii) the identity of the candidate is apparent by unambiguous reference; and

[(B) "expenditure" does not include any payment made or incurred by a corporation or a labor organization which, under the provisions of the last paragraph of section 610, would not constitute an expenditure by such corporation or labor organization.

[(f)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law with respect to limitations on expenditures or limitations on contributions, the national committee of a political party and a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may make expenditures in connection with the general election campaign of candidates for Federal office, subject to the limitations contained in paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection.

[(2) The national committee of a political party may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of any candidate for President of the United States who is affiliated with such party which exceeds an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States (as certified under subsection (g)). Any expenditure under this paragraph shall be in addition to any expenditure by a national committee of a political party serving as the principal campaign committee of a candidate for the office of President of the United States.

[(3) The national committee of a political party, or a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate for Federal office in a State who is affiliated with such party which exceeds—

[(A) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Senator, or of Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, the greater of—

[(i) 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State (as certified under subsection (g)); or

[(ii) $20,000; and

[(B) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner in any other State, $10,000.

[(g) During the first week of January 1975, and every subsequent year, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, of each State, and of each congressional district as of the first day of July next preceding the date of certification.

The term "voting age population" means resident population, 18 years of age or older.

[(h) No candidate or political committee shall knowingly accept any contribution or make any expenditure in violation of the provisions of this section. No officer or employee of a political committee shall knowingly accept a contribution made for the benefit or use of a candidate, or knowingly make any expenditure on behalf of a candidate, in violation of any limitation imposed on contributions and expenditures under this section.

[(i) Any person who violates any provision of this section shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.]

[§ 610. Contributions or expenditures by national banks, corporations, or labor organizations.

[It is unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress, to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election to any political office, or in connection with any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any political office, or for any corporation whatever, or any labor organization to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election at which Presidential and Vice Presidential electors or a Senator or Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to Congress are to be voted for, or in connection with any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any of the foregoing offices, or for any candidate, poiltical committee, or other person to accept or receive any contribution prohibited by this section.

[Every corporation or labor organization which makes any contribution or expenditure in violation of this section shall be fined not more than $25,000; and every officer or director of any corporation, or officer of any labor organization, who consents to any contribution or expenditure by the corporation or labor organization, as the case may be, and any person who accepts or receives any contribution, in violation of this section, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both; and if the violation was willful, shall be fined not more than $50,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.

[For the purposes of this section "labor organization" means any organization of any kind, or any agency or employee representation committee or plan, in which employees participate and which exist for the purpose, in whole or in part, of dealing with employers concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or conditions of work.

[As used in this section, the phrase "contribution or expenditure" shall include any direct or indirect payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money, or any services, or anything of value (except a loan of money by a national or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations and in the ordinary course of business) to any candidate, campaign committee, or political party or organization, in connection with any election to any of the offices referred to this section; but shall not include communications by a corporation to its stockholders and their families or by a labor organization to its members and their families on any subject; nonpartisan registration and get-out-the-vote campaigns by a corporation aimed at its stockholders and their families, or by a labor organization aimed at its members and their families; the establishment, administration, and solicitation of contributions to a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes by a corporation or labor oragnization: Provided, That it shall be unlawful for such a fund to make a contribution or expenditure by utilizing money or anything of value secured by physical force, job discrimination, financial reprisals, or the threat of force, job discrimination, or financial reprisal; or by dues, fees, or other monies required as a condition of membership in a labor organization or as a condition of employment, or by monies obtained in any commercial transaction.

[§ 611. Contributions by Government contractors.

[Whoever—

[(a) entering into any contract with the United States or any department or agency thereof either for the rendition of personal services or furnishing any material, supplies, or equipment to the United States or any department or agency thereof or for selling any land or building to the United States or any department or agency thereof, if payment for the performance of such contract or payment for such material, supplies, equipment, land, or building is to be made in whole or in part from funds appropriated by the Congress, at any time between the commencement of negotiations for and the later of (1) the completion of performance under, or (2) the termination of negotiations for, such contract or furnishing of material, supplies, equipment, land or buildings, directly or indirectly makes any contribution of money or other thing of value, or promises expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, to any political party, committee, or candidate for public office or to any person for any political purpose or use; or shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

[This section does not prohibit or make unlawful the establishment or administration of, or the solicitation of contributions to any separate segregated fund by any corporation or labor organization for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, unless the provisions of section 610 of this title prohibit or make unlawful the establishment or administration of, or the solicitation of contributions to, such fund.

[For purposes of this section, the term "labor organization" has the meaning given it by section 610 of this title.

[§ 612. Publication or distribution of political statements.

[Whoever willfully publishes or distributes or causes to be published or distributed, or for the purpose of publishing or distributing the same, knowingly deposits for mailing or delivery or causes to be deposited for mailing or delivery, or, except in cases of employees of the Postal Service in the official discharge of their duties, knowingly transports or causes to be transported in interstate commerce any card, pamphlet, circular, poster, dodger, advertisement, writing, or other statement relating to or concerning any person who has publicly declared his intention to seek the office of President, or Vice President of the United States, or Senator or Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to Congress, in a primary, general, or special election, or convention of a political party, or has caused or permitted his intention to do so to be publicly declared, which does not contain the names of the persons, associations, committees, or corporations responsible for the publication or distribution of the same, and the names of the officers of each such association, committee, or corporation, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

[§ 613. Contributions by foreign nationals.

[Whoever, being a foreign national directly or through any other person, knowingly makes any contribution of money or other thing of value, or promises expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, in connection with an election to any political office or in connection with any primary election, convention, or caucus held to select candidates for any political office; or

[Whoever knowingly solicits, accepts, or receives any such contribution from any such foreign national—

[Shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than five years or both.

[As used in this section, the term "foreign national" means—

[(1) a foreign principal, as such term is defined by section 1(b) of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938 (22 U.S.C. 611 (b)), except that the term "foreign national" shall not include any individual who is a citizen of the United States; or

[(2) an individual who is not a citizen of the United States and who is not lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as defined by section 101(a)(20) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(20)).

[§ 614. Prohibition of contributions in name of another.

[(a) No person shall make a contribution in the name of another person or knowingly permit his name to be used to effect such a contribution, and no person shall knowingly accept a contribution made by one person in the name of another person.

[(b) Any person who violates this section shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

[§ 615. Limitation on contributions of currency.

[(a) No person shall make contributions of currency of the United States or currency of any foreign country to or for the benefit of any candidate which, in the aggregate, exceeds $100, with respect to any campaign of such candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office.

[(b) Any person who violates this section shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

[§ 616. Acceptance of excessive honorariums.

[Whoever, while an elected or appointed officer or employee of any branch of the Federal Government—

[(1) accepts any honorarium of more than $1,000 (excluding amounts accepted for actual travel and subsistence expenses) for any appearance, speech, or article; or

[(2) accepts honorariums (not prohibited by paragraph (1) of this section) aggregating more than $15,000 in any calendar year shall be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000.

[§ 617. Fraudulent misrepresentation of campaign authority.

[Whoever, being a candidate for Federal office or an employee or agent of such a candidate—

[(1) fraudulently misrepresents himself or any committee or organization under his control as speaking or writing or otherwise acting for or on behalf of any other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof on a matter which is damaging to such other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof; or

[(2) willfully and knowingly participates in or conspires to participate in any plan, scheme, or design to violate paragraph (1); shall, for each such offense, be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.]

SECTION-BY-SECTION EXPLANATION OF THE BILL

SHORT TITLE

Section 1 of the bill provides that this legislation may be cited as the "Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976".

TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION MEMBERSHIP

Section 101(a)(1) amends section 309(a)(1) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (hereinafter in this explanation referred to as the "Act"), as so redesignated by section 105 of the bill, to provide that the Federal Election Commission (hereinafter in this explanation referred to as the "Commission") is composed of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives ex officio and without the right to vote, and 6 members appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Section 101(a)(2) amends section 309(a)(1) of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105 of the bill, to provide that no more than 3 members of the Commission appointed by the President may be affiliated with the same political party.

Section 101(b) amends section 309(a) of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105, by rewriting paragraph (2). Section 309(a)(2)(A) provides that members of the Commission shall serve for terms of 6 years, except that members first appointed shall serve for staggered terms as designated by the President. In making such designations, the President may not appoint an individual affiliated with any political party for a term which expires 1 year after the term of another member affiliated with the same political party.

Section 309(a)(2)(B) provides that a member of the Commission may serve after the expiration of his term until his successor has taken office.

Section 309(a)(2)(C) provides that an individual appointed to fill a vacancy occurring other than by the expiration of a term of office may be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member he succeeds.

Section 309(a)(2)(D) provides that a vacancy in the Commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

Section 101(c)(1) of the bill amends section 309(a)(3) of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105 of the bill, to provide that members of the Commission shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. Members are given 1 year to terminate or liquidate any such activities.

Section 101(c)(1) amends section 309 of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105 of the bill, by rewriting subsection (b). Section 309 (b)(1) requires the Commission to administer and formulate policy regarding the Act and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. The Commission is given exclusive primary jurisdiction regarding the civil enforcement of such provisions.

Section 309(b)(2) provides that the provisions of the Act do not limit, restrict, or diminish any investigatory, informational, oversight, supervisory, or disciplinary authority or function of the Congress or any committee of the Congress regarding elections to Federal office.

Section 101(c)(3) of the bill amends section 309(c) of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105 of the bill, to require an affirmative vote of 4 members of the Commission in order for the Commission to establish guidelines for compliance with the Act or with chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or for the Commission to take any action under (1) section 310(a)(6) of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105 of the bill, relating to the initiation of civil actions; (2) section 310(a)(7) of the Act, relating to the rendering of advisory opinions; (3) section 310(a)(8) of the Act, relating to rule-making authority; or (4) section 310(a)(10) of the Act, relating to investigations and hearings.

Section 101(d)(1) provides that the President shall appoint members of the Commission as soon as practicable after the date of the enactment of the bill. Subsection (d)(2) provides that the first appointments made by the President shall not be considered appointments to fill the unexpired terms of members serving on the Commission on the date of the enactment of the bill.

Subsection (d)(3) provides that members of the Commission serving on the date of the enactment of the bill may continue to serve as such members until members are appointed and qualified under section 309(a) of the Act, as amended by the bill, except that they may exercise only such powers and functions as may be consistent with the determinations of the Supreme Court of the United States in Buckley et al. v. Valeo, et al. (Nos. 75–436, 75–437) (January 30, 1976).

Section 101(e) provides that members serving on the Commission on the date of the enactment of the bill shall not be subject to the provisions of section 309(a)(3) of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105 of the bill, which prohibit any member of the Commission from being an elected or appointed officer or employee of any branch of the Federal Government.

Changes in Definitions

Election

Section 102(a) of the bill amends section 301(a)(2) of the Act to provide that any caucus or convention of a political party which has authority to nominate a candidate shall be considered to be an election.

Contribution

Section 102(b) amends section 301(e)(2) of the Act to provide that a contract, promise, or agreement to make a contribution must be in writing in order to be considered a contribution.

Section 102(c)(1) amends section 301(e)(4) of the Act to provide that the definition of contribution shall not apply to (1) legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of the national committee of a political party, other than legal or accounting services attributable to any activity which directly furthers the election of a designated candidate for Federal office; or (2) legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of a candidate or political committee for the sole purpose of ensuring compliance with the Act, chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Subsection (c)(2) adds a new clause (G) to section 301(e)(5) of the Act. Clause (G) provides that the term contribution shall not include a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value to a national committee or a State committee of a political party which is for the sole purpose of defraying any cost incurred for the construction or purchase of any office facility which is not acquired for the purpose of influencing the election of any candidate in any particular election for Federal office. Clause (G) requires that any such gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value, and any such cost, must be reported in accordance with section 304(b) of the Act.

Expenditure

Section 102(d)(1) amends section 301(f)(4) of the Act by adding a new clause (I). Clause (I) provides that the term expenditure does not include any costs incurred by a candidate in connection with any solicitation of contributions by the candidate. Clause (I) does not apply, however, to costs incurred by a candidate in excess of an amount equal to 20 percent of the applicable expenditure limitation under section 320(b) of the Act, except that all such costs shall be reported in accordance with section 304(b).

Subsection (d)(2) amends section 301(f)(4) of the Act by adding a new clause (F). Clause (F) provides that the term expenditure does not include the payment, by any person other than a candidate or a political committee, of compensation for (1) legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of the national committee of a political party, other than legal or accounting services attributable to any activity which directly furthers the election of a designated candidate for Federal office; or (2) legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of a candidate or political committee for the sole purpose of ensuring compliance with the Act, chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Other definitions

Section 102(e) amends section 301 of the Act by adding the following new definitions:

1. The term "Act" is defined to mean the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, as amended by the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 and the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976.

2. The term "independent expenditure" is defined to mean any expenditure by a person which expressly advocates the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate which is made without cooperation or consultation with any candidate, or any authorized committee or agent of the candidate, and which is not made in concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, any candidate, or any authorized committee or agent of the candidate.

3. The term "clearly identified" is defined to mean (1) the name of the candidate involved appears; (2) a photograph or drawing of the candidate appears; or (3) the identity of the candidate is apparent by unambiguous reference.

Organization of Political Committees

Section 103 of the bill amends section 302 of the Act by striking out subsection (e), relating to a requirement that political committees raising contributions or making expenditures on behalf of a candidate without being authorized to do so by the candidate must indicate this lack of authority on any campaign literature and campaign advertisements. Section 323 of the Act, as added by the bill, contains a similar provision.

Reports by Political Committees and Candidates

Section 104(a) amends section 304(a)(1)(C) of the Act to provide that in any year in which a candidate is not on the ballot for election to Federal office, the candidate and his authorized committees must file a report not later than the tenth day after the close of any calendar quarter in which the candidate and his authorized committees received contributions or made expenditures which aggregate a total of more than $10,000. Each report must be complete as of the close of the calendar quarter, except that any report which must be filed after December 31 of any calendar year in which a report must be filed under section 304(a)(1)(B) shall be filed as provided in section 304(a)(1)(B).

Section 104(b) amends section 304(a) of the Act by rewriting paragraph (2). Paragraph (2) provides that each treasurer of a political committee authorized by a candidate to raise contributions or make expenditures on behalf of the candidate, other than the principal campaign committee of the candidate, must file reports with the principal campaign committee of the candidate (rather than with the Commission).

Section 104(c) amends section 304(b) of the Act by adding a new paragraph (13). Paragraph (13) requires each report to include, in the case of an independent expenditure in excess of $100 by a political committee, other than an authorized committee of a candidate, expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, through a separate schedule (1) any information required by section 304(b)(9), stated in a manner which indicates whether the independent expenditure is in support of, or in opposition to, a candidate; and (2) under penalty of perjury, certification whether the independent expenditure is made in cooperation, consultation, or concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of the candidate. If such expenditure is made with such cooperation, consultation, or concert, or as a result of such request or suggestion, it no longer would qualify as an independent expenditure.

Section 104(d) amends section 304 of the Act by rewriting subsection (e). Subsection (e)(1) requires every person (other than a political committee or a candidate) who makes independent expenditures of more than $100 in a calendar year to file a statement with the Commission containing information required of a person who makes contributions of more than $100 to a candidate or political committee and information required of a candidate or political committee receiving such a contribution.

Subsection (e)(2) provides that statements required by subsection (e) must be filed on dates for the filing of reports by political committees. The statements must include (1) information required by section 309(b)(9), stated in a manner which indicates whether the contribution or independent expenditure is in support of, or in opposition to, a candidate; and (2) under penalty of perjury, certification whether the independent expenditure is made in cooperation, consultation, or concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, a candidate or any authorized committee or agent of the candidate.

Any independent expenditure, including independent expenditures described in section 304(b)(13), of $1,000 or more which is made after the fifteenth day, but more than 24 hours, before any election must be reported within 24 hours of the independent expenditure.

Subsection (e)(3) requires the Commission to prepare indices regarding expenditures made with respect to each candidate. The indices must be issued on a timely preelection basis.

Reports by Certain Persons

Section 105 amends title III of the Act by striking out section 308, relating to reports by certain persons.

Campaign Depositories

Section 106 amends section 308(a)(1) of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105 of the bill, to provide that it is within the discretion of political committees to maintain one or more checking accounts at banks which they designate as campaign depositories.

Powers of Commission

Section 107(a) amends section 310(a) of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105 of the bill, by combining paragraph (10) with paragraph (8). Paragraph (10) relates to the authority of the Commission to develop forms for the filing of reports.

Section 107(b)(1) amends section 310(a) of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105 of the bill, by rewriting paragraph (6). Paragraph (6) gives the Commission authority to initiate, defend, and appeal civil actions.

Subsection (b)(2) amends section 310 of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105 of the bill, by adding a new subsection (e) which provides that the civil action authority of the Commission is the exclusive civil remedy for enforcing the Act, except for actions which may be brought under section 313(a)(9) of the Act, as added by the bill.

Advisory Opinions

Section 108(a) amends section 312 of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105 of the bill, by rewriting subsection (a). Subsection (a) provides that the Commission shall render a written advisory opinion upon the written request of any individual holding a Federal office, any candidate for Federal office, any political committee, or any national committee of a political party. Any such advisory opinion must be rendered within a reasonable time after the request is made and shall indicate whether a specific transaction or activity would constitute a violation of the Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. Subsection (a) prohibits the Commission or any of its employees from issuing any advisory opinion except in accordance with the provisions of section 312.

Section 108(b) amends section 312 of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105, by rewriting subsection (b). Subsection (b)(1) provides that any person who relies on an advisory opinion and who acts in good faith in accordance with the advisory opinion may not be penalized under the Act or under chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 as the result of any such action.

Subsection (b)(2) provides that an advisory opinion may be relied upon by (1) any person involved in the transaction or activity with respect to which the advisory opinion is rendered; and (2) any person involved in any similar transaction or activity.

The Commission is required to transmit to the Congress proposed rules and regulations based on an advisory opinion if the transaction or activity involved is not already covered by any rule or regulation of the Commission. If the Commission receives more than one request for an advisory opinion involving the same or similar transactions or activities, the Commission may not render more than one advisory opinion relating to the transactions or activities. Any rule or regulation which the Commission proposes under subsection (b) is subject to the congressional review procedures of section 315(c) of the Act.

Section 108(c) makes a conforming amendment to section 315(c)(1) of the Act.

Section 108(d) provides that the amendments made by section 108 apply to any advisory opinion rendered by the Commission after October 15, 1974.

Enforcement

Section 109 of the bill amends title III of the Act by rewriting section 313, as so redesignated by section 105 of the bill.

Complaints

Section 313(a)(1) permits any person who believes that the Act or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has been violated to file a written complaint with the Commission. The complaint must be notarized and signed and sworn to by the person filing the complaint. The person shall be subject to the provisions of section 1001 of title 18, United States Code (relating to false or fraudulent statements).

The Commission is prohibited from conducting any investigation, or taking any other action, solely on the basis of an anonymous complaint.

Subsection (a)(1) prohibits the Commission from investigating the actions or activities of any staff employee of any person holding a Federal office unless the Commission first consults with the person holding Federal office. If the person provides an affidavit that the staff employee is performing his regularly assigned duties, the affidavit shall be a complete bar to any further investigation by the Commission.

Notification and investigation

Subsection (a)(2) provides that, if the Commission has reasonable cause to believe that a person has violated the Act or chapter 95 or Chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the Commission is required to notify the person and to conduct an investigation of the violation.

Subsection (a)(3) requires the Commission to conduct any investigation expeditiously and to include in the investigation an additional investigation of any reports and statements filed with the Commission by the complainant involved, if the complainant is a candidate for Federal office. Subsection (a)(3) prohibits the Commission and any other person from making public any investigation or any notification made under subsection (a)(2) without the written consent of the person receiving the notification or the person under investigation.

Subsection (a)(4) requires the Commission to permit any person who receives notification under subsection (a)(2) to demonstrate that the Commission should not take any action against such person under the Act.

Conciliation agreements

Subsection (a)(5) requires the Commission to seek to correct or prevent any violation of the Act by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion during the 30-day period after the Commission determines there is reasonable cause to believe that a violation has occurred or is about to occur. The Commission also is required to seek to enter into a conciliation agreement with the person involved in such violation. If, however, the Commission has reasonable cause to believe that—

(1) a person has failed to file a report required under section 304(a)(1)(C) of the Act before the date of an election;

(2) a person has failed to file a report required to be filed no later than 10 days before an election; or

(3) on the basis of a complaint filed less than 45 days but more than 10 days before an election, a person has committed a knowing and willful violation of the Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954;

the Commission shall seek to informally correct the violation and to enter into a conciliation agreement with the person involved for a period of not less than one-half the number of days between the date upon which the Commission determines that there is reasonable cause to believe a violation has occurred and the date of the election involved.

Any conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission and a person involved in a violation shall constitute a complete bar to any further action by the Commission, unless the person involved violates the conciliation agreement.

Civil actions

Subsection (a)(5) also provides that the Commission may institute a civil action for relief if the Commission is unable to correct or prevent a violation by informal methods and if the Commission determines there is probable cause to believe that the violation has occurred or is about to occur. The relief sought in any civil action may include a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or any other appropriate order, including a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of $5,000 or an amount equal to the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in the violation. The civil action may be brought in the district court of the United States for the district in which the person against whom the action is brought is found, resides, or transacts business.

The court involved shall grant the relief sought by the Commission in a civil action brought by the Commission upon a proper showing that the person involved has engaged or is about to engage in a violation of the Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Referrals to Attorney General

Subsection (a)(5) also permits the Commission to refer an apparent violation to the Attorney General of the United States if the Commission determines that there is probable cause to believe that a knowing and willful violation subject to and as defined in section 328 of the Act has occurred or is about to occur. In order for such a referral to made the violation or violations must involve the making, receiving, or reporting of any contribution or expenditure having a value, in the aggregate, of $5,000 or more during a calendar year. The Commission is not required to engage in any informal conciliation efforts before making any such referral.

Civil penalties

Subsection (a)(6) permits the Commission to include a civil penalty in a conciliation agreement if the Commission believes that there is clear and convincing proof that a knowing and willful violation of the Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has occurred. The civil penalty may not exceed the greater of (1) $10,000; or (2) an amount equal to 200 percent of the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in the violation. If the Commission believes that a violation has occurred which is not a knowing and willful violation, the conciliation agreement may require the person involved to pay a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of (1) $5,000; or (2) an amount equal to the amount of the contribution or expenditure involved in the violation.

Availability of information

Subsection (a)(6) also requires the Commission to make available to the public (1) the results of any conciliation efforts made by the Commission, including any conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission; and (2) any determination by the Commission that a person has not committed a violation of the Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Court-imposed civil penalties

Subsection (a)(7) permits a court to impose a civil penalty in any civil action for relief brought by the Commission if the court determines that there is clear and convincing proof that a person has committed a knowing and willful violation of the Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. The civil penalty may not exceed the greater of (1) $10,000; or (2) an amount equal to 200 percent of the contribution or expenditure involved in the violation.

In any case in which a person against whom the court imposes a civil penalty has entered into a conciliation agreement with the Commission, the Commission may bring a civil action if it believes that the person has violated the conciliation agreement. The Commission may obtain relief if it establishes that the person has violated, in whole or in part, any requirement of the conciliation agreement.

Subpenas

Subsection (a)(8) provides that subpenas for witnesses in civil actions in any United States district court may run into any other district.

Private actions for relief

Subsection (a)(9) permits any party to file a petition with the United States District Court for the District of Columbia if the party is aggrieved by an order of the Commission dismissing a complaint filed by the party or by a failure on the part of the Commission to act on the complaint within 90 days after the complaint is filed. The petition must be filed (1) in the case of a dismissal by the Commission, no later than 60 days after the dismissal; or (2) in the case of a failure on the part of the Commission to act on the complaint, no later than 60 days after the initial 90-day period.

The court may declare that the dismissal or failure to act is contrary to law and may direct the Commission to take any action consistent with the declaration no later than 30 days after the court makes the declaration. If the Commission fails to act during the 30-day period, the party who filed the original complaint may bring in his own name a civil action to remedy the violation involved.

Appeals procedures

Subsection (a)(10) provides that any judgment of a district court may be appealed to the court of appeals. Any judgment of a court of appeals which affirms or sets aside, in whole or in part, any order of the district court shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

Subsection (a)(11) provides that any action brought under subsection (a) shall be advanced on the docket of the court involved and put ahead of all other actions, other than actions brought under subsection (a) or under section 314.

Civil and criminal contempt

Subsection (a)(12) permits the Commission to petition a court for an order to adjudicate a person in civil contempt if the Commission determines after an investigation that the person has violated an order of the court entered in a proceeding brought under subsection (a)(5). If the Commission believes that the violation is a knowing and willful violation, the Commission may petition the court for an order to adjudicate the person in criminal contempt.

Reports by Attorney General

Section 313(b) requires the Attorney General to report to the Commission requiring apparent violations referred to the Attorney General by the Commission. The reports must be transmitted to the Commission no later than 60 days after the date of the referral, and at the close of every 30-day period thereafter until there is final disposition. The Commission may from time to time prepare and publish reports relating to the status of such referrals.

Penalty for disclosure of information

Section 313(c) imposes a penalty against any member of the Commission, any employee of the Commission, or any other person who reveals the identity of any person under investigation in violation of section 313(a)(3)(B). Any such member, employee, or other person is subject to a fine of $2,000 for any such violation. If the violation is knowing and willful the maximum fine is $5,000.

DUTIES OF COMMISSION

Cumulative index

Section 110(a)(1) amends section 315(a)(6) of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105 of the bill, to require the Commission to compile and maintain a separate cumulative index of reports and statements filed by the political committees supporting more than one candidate. The index must include a listing of the date of registration of such political committees and the date upon which such political committees qualify to make expenditures under section 320(a)(2) of the Act. The Commission is required to review the index on the same basis and at the same time as other cumulative indices required under section 315(a)(6).

Auditing of Federal payments

Section 110(a)(2) amends section 315(a)(8) of the Act to require the Commission to give priority to auditing and conducting field investigations requiring the verification for, and the receipt and use of, any payments received by a candidate under chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Congressional review procedures

Section 110(b) amends section 315(c)(2) of the Act to provide that the Congress may disapprove proposed rules and regulations of the Commission in whole or in part. The amendment also provides that, whenever a committee of the House of Representatives reports any resolution relating to a proposed rule or regulation of the Commission, it is in order at any time (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. The motion is highly privileged and is not debatable. An amendment to the motion is not in order, and it is not in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to. Although the motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution is not debatable, debate may be conducted with respect to the consideration of the resolution.

Applicability of Commission rulings

Section 110(c) amends section 315 of the Act by adding a new subsection (e). Subsection (e) provides that, in any civil or criminal proceeding to enforce the Act or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, no rule, regulation, guideline, advisory opinion, opinion of counsel, or any other pronouncement by the Commission or by any member, officer, or employee of the Commission may be used against the person against whom the proceeding is brought. No such rule, regulation, guideline, advisory opinion, opinion of counsel, or other pronouncement (1) shall have the force of law; (2) may be used to create any presumption of violation or of criminal intent; (3) shall be admissible in evidence against the person involved; or (4) may be used in any other manner. The provisions of subsection (e) do not apply to any rule or regulation of the Commission which takes effect under section 315(c).

Additional Enforcement Authority

Section 111 amends section 407(a) of the Act to establish conciliation procedures regarding the enforcement of section 407. The amendment provides that, if a person fails to file a report required by title III of the Act, the Commission shall (1) make very effort for a period of not less than 30 days to correct the failure by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion; or (2) in the case of any failure to file which occurs less than 45 days before the date of an election, make every effort to correct the failure by informal methods for a period of not less than one half the number of days between the date of the failure and the date of the election. The Commission, however, may not take any action regarding any complaint filed with the Commission during the 5-day period immediately before an election until after the date of the election.

Contribution and Expenditure Limitations; Penalties

Section 112(a) amends title III of the Act by striking out section 316, as so redesignated by section 105 of the bill, by striking out section 320, as so redesignated by section 105 of the bill, and by adding new sections 320 through 328.

A. LIMITATIONS ON CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

Contribution limitations

Section 320(a)(1) prohibits any person from making contributions (1) to any candidate in connection with any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $1,000; or (2) to any political committee in any calendar year which exceed, in the aggregate, $1,000.

Subsection (a)(2) prohibits any political committee (other than a principal campaign committee) from making contributions to (1) any candidate in connection with any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000; or (2) any political committee in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000. Contributions by the national committee of a political party serving as the principal campaign committee of a Presidential candidate may not exceed the limitation described in the preceding sentence with respect to any other candidate for Federal office.

The term "poltical committee" is in (a)(2) defined to mean an organization which (1) is registered as a political committee under section 303 of the Act for a period of not less than 6 months; (2) has received contributions from more than 50 persons; and (3) except for any State political party organization, has made contributions to 5 or more candidates for Federal office.

Subsection (a)(2) also provides that, for purposes of the limitations provided by subsection (a)(1) and subsection (a)(2), all contributions made by political committees which are established, financed, maintained, or controlled by any corporation, labor organization, or any other person (including any parent, subsidiary, branch, division, department, or local unit of such corporation, labor organization, or any other person), or by any group of such persons, shall be considered to have been made by a single political committee, except that (1) the amendment made by the bill does not limit transfers between political committees of funds raised through joint fund raising efforts; and (2) for purposes of the limitations provided by subsection (a)(1) and subsection (a)(2), all contributions made by a single political committee which is established, financed, maintained, or controlled by a national committee of a political party and by a single political committee established, financed, maintained, or controlled by the State committee of a political party, shall not be considered to have been made by a single political committee.

Subsection (a)(2) also provides that, in any case in which a corporation and any of its subsidiaries, branches, divisions, departments, or local units, or a labor organization and any of its subsidiaries, branches, divisions, departments, or local units establish, finance, maintain, or control more than one separate segregated fund, all such funds shall be treated as a single separate segregated fund for purposes of the limitations provided by subsection (a)(1) and subsection (a)(2).

Subsection (a)(3) prohibits any individual from making contributions which, in the aggregate, exceed $25,000 in any calendar year. Any contribution which is made to a candidate in a year other than the calendar year in which the election involved is held, is considered to be made during the calendar year in which the election is held.

Subsection (a)(4) provides that (1) any contribution to a named candidate which is made to any political committee authorized by the candidate to accept contributions on behalf of the candidate shall be considered to be contributions made to the candidate; (2) any expenditure which is made by any person in cooperation, consultation, or concert, with, or at the request or suggestion of, a candidate or any authorized political committee or agent of the candidate shall be considered to be a contribution to the candidate; (3) any expenditure to finance publication of any campaign broadcast or any other campaign materials prepared by a candidate or any authorized political committee or agency of the candidate shall be considered to be a contribution to that candidate; and (4) contributions made to a vice presidential nominee shall be considered to be contributions to the presidential nominee of the party involved.

Subsection (a)(5) provides that the contribution limitations established by subsection (a)(1) and subsection (a)(2) shall apply separately to each election, except that all elections in any calendar year for the office of President (except a general election for such office) shall be considered to be one election.

Subsection (a)(6) provides that all contributions made by a person on behalf of a particular candidate, including contributions which are earmarked or directed through an intermediary or conduit to such candidate, shall be treated as contributions from the person involved to the candidate. The intermediary or conduit is required to report the name of the original source of the contribution and the name of the intended recipient of the contribution to the Commission and to report the name of the original source of the contribution to the intended recipient.

Expenditure limitations

Section 320(b)(1) prohibits any candidate for the office of President who has established his eligibility to receive payments under section 9003 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 or under section 9033 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 from making expenditures in excess of (1) $10,000,000, in the case of a campaign for nomination for election to the office of President; or (2) $20,000,000 in the case of a campaign for election to the office of President. In the case of campaigns for nomination, the aggregate of expenditures in any one State may not exceed twice the greater of (1) 8 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State; or (2) $100,000.

Subsection (b)(2) provides that (1) expenditures made by a vice-presidential nominee shall be considered to be expenditures made by the presidential nominee of the same political party; and (2) an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate if it is made by (A) a committee or agent of the candidate authorized to make expenditures; or (B) any person authorized or requested by the candidate or an authorized committee or agent of the candidate to make the expenditure involved.

Increases in expenditure limitations

Section 320(c)(1) provides that, at the beginning of each calendar year (beginning in 1976), as there become available necessary data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Commission the percentage difference between the price index from the 12-month period preceding the calendar year and the price index for the base period. The term "price index" is defined to mean the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average), and the term "base period" is defined to mean the calendar year 1974. Each limitation established by section 320(b) and section 320(d) shall be increased by such percentage difference.

Expenditures by political party committees

Section 320(d)(1) provides that the national committee of a political party and a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may make expenditures in connection with the general election campaign of candidates for Federal office.

Subsection (d)(2) provides that the national committee of a political party may not make expenditures in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate for the office of President which exceed an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States. Any expenditures under subsection (d)(2) are considered as an addition to expenditures by a national committee of a political party which is serving as the principal campaign committee of a candidate for the office of President.

Subsection (d)(3) provides that the national committee of a political party and that the State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may each make expenditures in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate for Federal office in any State which do not exceed (1) in the case of candidates for election to the office of Senator (or of Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative), the greater of (A) 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State; or (B) $20,000; and (2) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner in any other State, $10,000.

Voting age population

Section 320(e) requires the Secretary of Commerce, during the first week of January 1975, and each subsequent year, to certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, of each State, and of each congressional district, as of the first day of July next preceding the date of certification. The term "voting age population" is defined to mean resident population, 18 years of age or older.

Prohibition of contributions and expenditures

Section 320(f) prohibits candidates and political committees from knowingly accepting any contribution or knowingly making any expenditure in violation of section 320. Subsection (f) also prohibits any officer or employee of a political committee from knowingly accepting a contribution made to a candidate, or knowingly making an expenditure on behalf of a candidate in violation of section 320.

Attribution of expenditures

Section 320(g) requires the Commission to prescribe rules under which expenditures by a candidate for Presidential nomination for use in two or more States shall be attributed to the expenditure limits of such candidate in each State involved. The attribution shall be based on the voting age population in each State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by the expenditure.

B. CONTRIBUTIONS OR EXPENDITURES BY NATIONAL BANKS, CORPORATIONS, OR LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

Prohibition of contributions and expenditures

Section 321(a) makes it unlawful for any national bank or any corporation to make any contribution or expenditure in connection with (1) any election to any political office; or (2) any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any political office. Subsection (a) also prohibits any corporation or labor organization from making a contribution or expenditure in connection with (1) any general election for Federal office; or (2) any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any Federal office.

Subsection (a) also prohibits any candidate, political committee, or other person from knowingly accepting or receiving any contribution which is prohibited by section 321. It is also unlawful for any officer or director of a corporation or national bank, or any officer of a labor organization, to consent to any contribution or expenditure which is prohibited by section 321.

Definition of labor organization

Section 321 (b) (1) defines the term "labor organization" to mean any organization or any agency or employee representation committee or plan in which employers participate and which exists for the purpose of dealing with employees regarding grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or conditions of work.

Definition of contribution or expenditure

Subsection (b) (2) defines the term "contribution or expenditure" to include any payment or other distribution of money, services, or anything of value (except a lawful loan by a national or State bank in the ordinary course of business) to any candidate, campaign committee, or political party or organization, in connection with any election to any Federal office.

Such term, however, does not include—

(1) communications on any subject by a corporation to its stockholders and executive officers and their families, or by a labor organization to its members and their families;

(2) nonpartisan registration and voting campaigns conducted by a corporation with respect to its stockholders and its executive officers and their families, or by a labor organization with respect to its members and their families; and

(3) the establishment, administration, and solicitation of contributions to a separate segregated fund to be used for political purposes by a corporation or labor organization, except that—

(A) it is unlawful for such a fund to make a contribution or expenditure through the use of money or anything of value secured by (i) physical force; (ii) job discrimination; (iii) financial reprisal; (iv) the threat of force, job discrimination, or financial reprisals; (v) dues, fees, or other moneys required as a condition of membership in a labor organization or as a condition of employment; or (vi) moneys obtained in any commercial transaction;

(B) it is unlawful for a corporation or a separate segregated fund established by a corporation to solicit contributions from any person other than stockholders and executive officers of such corporation and their families, for an incorporated trade association or a separate segregated fund established by such an association to solicit contributions from any person other than the stockholders and executive officers of the member corporations of such trade association and the families of stockholders and executive officers (to the extent that any such solicitation has been separately and specifically approved by the member corporation involved, and such member corporation has not approved any such solicitation by more than one such trade association in any calendar year), or for a labor organization or a separate segregated fund established by a labor organization to solicit contributions from any person other than the members of the labor organization and their families;

(C) any method of soliciting voluntary contributions, or of facilitating the making of voluntary contributions, to a separate segregated fund established by a corporation which may be used by a corporation also may be used by labor organizations; and

(D) a corporation which uses a method of soliciting voluntary contributions or facilitating the making of voluntary contributions shall make such method available to a labor organization representing any members who work for the corporation, upon written request by the labor organization.

Definition of executive officer

Subsection (b)(3) defines the term "executive officer" to mean an individual employed by a corporation who is paid on a salary rather than an hourly basis and who has policymaking or supervisory responsibilities.

C. CONTRIBUTIONS BY GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS

Section 322(a) makes it unlawful for any person who enters into certain contracts with the United States to make any contribution, or to promise to make any contribution, to any political party, committee, or candidate for public office, or to any person for any political purpose or use, or to solicit any such contribution from any such person. The prohibition applies during the period beginning on the date of the commencement of negotiations for the contract involved and ending on the later of (1) the completion of performance under the contract; or (2) the termination of negotiations for the contract.

The prohibition applies with respect to any contract with the United States or any department or agency of the United States for (1) the performance of personal services; (2) furnishing any materials, supplies, or equipment; or (3) selling any land or building. The prohibition, however, applies only if payment under the contract is to be made in whole or in part from funds appropriated by the Congress.

Section 322(b) provides that section 322 does not prohibit the operation of a separate segregated fund by a corporation or labor organization for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, unless the provisions of section 321 prohibit the operation of such fund.

Section 322(c) defines the term "labor organization" by giving it the same meaning as in section 321.

D. PUBLICATION OR DISTRIBUTION OF POLITICAL STATEMENTS

Section 323 provides that, whenever a person makes an expenditure to finance a communication which advocates the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate through a broadcasting station, newspaper, magazine, outdoor advertising facility, direct mailing, or other type of general public political advertising, such communication (1) if authorized by a candidate or an authorized political committee or agent of a candidate, shall state that such communication has been so authorized; or (2) if not authorized by a candidate, or an authorized political committee or agent of a candidate, shall state (A) that the communication is not so authorized; and (B) the name of the person making or financing the expenditure for the communication, including (in the case of a political committee) the name of any affiliated organization as stated in section 303(b)(2) of the Act.

E. CONTRIBUTIONS BY FOREIGN NATIONALS

Section 324(a) makes it unlawful for a foreign national to make any contribution in connection with (1) any election to any political office; or (2) any primary election, convention, or caucus held to select candidates for any political office. It is also unlawful for any person to solicit, accept, or receive any such contribution from a foreign national.

Section 324(b) defines the term "foreign national" to mean (1) a foreign principal, as defined by section 1(b) of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, except that the term "foreign national" does not include any individual who is a citizen of the United States; or (2) an individual who is not a citizen of the United States and who is not lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as defined by section 101(a)(20) of the Immigration and Nationality Act.

Section 324 is the same as section 613 of title 18, United States Code, except that the penalties have been omitted in order to conform with section 328 of the Act. The bill eliminates section 613 of title 18, United States Code.

F. PROHIBITION OF CONTRIBUTIONS IN NAME OF ANOTHER

Section 325 prohibits any person from (1) making a contribution in the name of another person; (2) knowingly permitting his name to be used to make such a contribution; and (3) knowingly accepting a contribution made by one person in the name of another person.

Section 325 is the same as section 614 of title 18, United States Code, except that the penalties have been omitted in order to conform with section 328 of the Act. The bill eliminates section 614 of title 18, United States Code.

G. LIMITATION ON CONTRIBUTIONS OF CURRENCY

Section 326(a) prohibits any person from making contributions of currency of the United States or of any foreign country to any candidate which, in the aggregate, exceed $250, with respect to any campaign of the candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office.

Sectin 326(b) provides that any person who knowingly and willfully violates section 326 shall be fined in an amount which does not exceed the greater of $25,000 or 300 percent of the amount of the contribution involved.

H. ACCEPTANCE OF EXCESSIVE HONORARIUMS

Section 327 prohibits any person who is an elected or appointed officer of employee of any branch of the Federal Government from accepting (1) any honorarium of more than $1,000 (excluding amounts accepted for actual travel and subsistence expenses) for any appearance, speech, or article; or (2) honorariums aggregating more than $15,000 in any calendar year.

Section 327 is the same as section 616 of title 18, United States Code, except that the penalties have been omitted in order to conform with section 328 of the Act. The bill eliminates section 616 of title 18, United States Code.

I. PENALTIES FOR VIOLATIONS

Section 328 provides that any person who knowingly and willfully violates any provision or provisions of the Act (other than section 326) which involves the making, receiving, or reporting of any contribution or expenditure having a value, in the aggregate, of $5,000 or more during any calendar year shall be fined in an amount which does not exceed the greater of $25,000 or 300 percent of the amount of the contribution or expenditure involved, imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

J. FRAUDULENT MISREPRESENTATION OF CAMPAIGN AUTHORITY

Section 112(b) of the bill amends title III of the Act by adding a new section 316. Section 316 prohibits any candidate for Federal office, or any employee or agent of the candidate from (1) fraudulently misrepresenting himself (or any committee or organization under his control) as acting for or on behalf of any other candidate or political party regarding a matter which is damaging to such other candidate or political party; or (2) participating in, or conspiring to participate in, any plan to violate section 316.

Section 316 is substantially the same as section 617 of title 18, United States Code, except that the penalties have been omitted in order to conform with section 328 of the Act. The bill eliminates section 617 of title 18, United States Code.

Savings Provision Relating to Repealed Sections

Section 113 amends title III of the Act by adding a new section 329. Section 329 provides that the repeal by the bill of any provision or penalty shall not have the effect of releasing or extinguishing any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under the provision or penalty. The provision or penalty shall be treated as remaining in force for the purpose of sustaining any action or prosecution for the enforcement of the penalty, forfeiture, or liability.

Principal Campaign Committees

Section 114 amends section 302(f) of the Act to provide that, with respect to the designation of political committees as principal campaign committees, any occasional, isolated, or incidental support of a candidate shall not be construed as support of such candidate for purposes of section 302.

Termination of Authority of Commission

Section 115 amends title IV of the Act by adding a new section 409. Section 409(a) provides that the authority of the Commission to carry out the Act and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 will terminate at the close of March 31, 1977, if either House of the Congress determines by appropriate action that such termination shall take effect.

Section 409(b) provides that the appropriate committee of each House of the Congress shall, beginning on January 3, 1977, conduct a review of (1) elections for Federal office conducted in 1976; (2) the operation of chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 with respect to such elections; and (3) the activities of the Commission. Each such committee shall report to the appropriate House of the Congress not later than March 1, 1977. The report shall include a recommendation of whether the authority of the Commission shall be terminated on March 31, 1977.

Section 409(c) provides that section 409 does not affect any proceeding pending in any court of the United States on the effective date of section 409. The Attorney General is given authority to act on behalf of the United States in any such proceeding.

Technical and Conforming Amendments

Section 116 makes several technical and conforming amendments to the Act and to the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

TITLE II—AMENDMENTS TO TITLE 18, UNITED STATES CODE

Repeal of Certain Provisions

Section 201(a) amends chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, by striking out sections 608 (relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures), 610 (relating to contributions or expenditures by national banks, corporations, or labor organizations), 611 (relating to contributions by Government contractors), 612 (relating to publication or distribution of political statements), 613 (relating to contributions by foreign nationals), 614 (relating to prohibition of contributions in name of another), 615 (relating to limitations on contributions of currency), 616 (relating to acceptance of excessive honorariums), and 617 (relating to fraudulent misrepresentation of campaign authority).

Section 201(b) makes conforming amendments to the table of sections for chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code.

Changes in Definitions

Section 202(a) makes a conforming amendment to section 591 of title 18, United States Code, based upon the amendment made by section 201(a) of the bill.

Section 202(b) amends section 591(e)(4) of title 18, United States Code, to provide that the term "contribution" does not apply (1) in the case of any legal or accounting services rendered to the national committee of a political party, other than any such services attributable to any activity which directly furthers the election of any designated candidate to Federal office; or (2) in the case of any legal or accounting services rendered to a candidate or political committee solely for the purpose of ensuring compliance with the Act, chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Section 202(c) amends section 591(f)(4) of title 18, United States Code, to provide that the term "expenditure" does not include the payment by any person other than a candidate or political committee, of compensation for legal or accounting services rendered (1) to the national committee of a political party, other than services attributable to activities which further the election of a designated candidate to Federal office; or (2) to a candidate or political committee solely for the purpose of ensuring compliance with the Act, chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

TITLE III—AMENDMENTS TO INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1954

Entitlement of Eligible Candidates to Payments

Section 301 amends section 9004 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 by adding new subsections (d) and (e). Subsection (d) provides that, in order to be eligible to receive payments under section 9006, a candidate of a major, minor, or new party for election to the office of President must certify to the Commission that the candidate will not knowingly make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with his campaign for election to the office of President in excess of an aggregate amount of $50,000. Expenditures made by a vice-presidential nominee shall be considered to be expenditures made by the Presidential nominee of the same political party.

Subsection (e) defines the term "immediate family" to mean the spouse of a candidate, and any child, parent, grandparent, brother, or sister of the candidate, and the spouses of such persons.

Payments to Eligible Candidates; Insufficient Amounts in Fund

Section 302(a) amends section 9006 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 by striking out subsection (b). Subsection (b) provides that any moneys remaining in the Presidential Election Campaign Fund after a Presidential election shall be transferred to the general fund of the Treasury.

Section 302(b) amends section 9006(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as so redesignated by section 302(a) of the bill, to provide that, in any case in which the Secretary of the Treasury determines that there are not sufficient moneys in the Presidential Election Campaign Fund to make payments under section 9006(b), section 9008(b)(3), and section 9037(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, moneys shall not be made available from any other source for the purpose of making payments.

Provision of Legal or Accounting Services

Section 303 amends section 9008(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 by adding a new paragraph (4). Paragraph (4) provides that any payment by a person other than the national committee of a political party of compensation to any person for legal or accounting services rendered to the national committee of a political party shall not be treated as an expenditure made by the national committee with respect to the Presidential nominating convention of the political party involved.

Review of Regulations

Section 304(a) amends section 9009(c)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide that the Congress may disapprove proposed rules and regulations of the Commission in whole or in part. The amendment also provides that, whenever a committee of the House of Representatives reports any resolution relating to a proposed rule or regulation of the Commission, it is in order at any time (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. The motion is highly privileged and is not debatable. An amendment to the motion is not in order, and it is not in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to. Although the motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution is not debatable, debate may be conducted with respect to the consideration of the resolution.

Section 304(b) makes an identical amendment to section 9039(c)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Eligibility for Payments

Section 305 makes a conforming amendment to section 9033(b)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, based upon amendments made by section 306 of the bill.

Qualified Campaign Expense Limitation

Section 306(a) amends section 9035 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide that any candidate seeking Federal matching funds in connection with a campaign for nomination for election to the office of President may not knowingly make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with his campaign which exceed an aggregate amount of $50,000. Section 306(a) also amends section 9035 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 by adding a new subsection (b) which defines the term "immediate family" to mean the spouse of a candidate, and any child, parent, grandparent, brother, or sister of the candidate, and the spouses of such persons.

Section 306(b) makes a conforming amendment to the table of sections for chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Return of Federal Matching Funds

Section 307(a)(1) amends section 9002(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide that the term "candidate" does not include any individual who has ceased actively to seek election to the office of President or to the office of Vice President in more than one State.

Section 307(a)(2) amends section 9003 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 by adding a new subsection (d). Subsection (d) provides that, in any case in which an individual ceases to be a candidate for the office of President or Vice President as a result of the operation of the last sentence of section 9002(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (which is added by the amendment made by section 307(a)(1) of the bill), such individual (1) shall no longer be eligible to receive any Federal payments; and (2) shall pay to the Secretary of the Treasury, as soon as practicable after the date upon which the individual ceases to be a candidate, an amount equal to the amount of payments received by the individual which are not used to defray qualified campaign expenses.

Section 307(b) makes amendments to section 9032(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 and to section 9033 of such Code which are substantially similar to the amendments made by section 307(a). The amendments made by section 307(b) relate to the receipt of Federal matching payments in Presidential primary elections.

Technical and Conforming Amendments

Section 308 makes several technical and conforming amendments to the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

SUPPLEMENTAL VIEWS OF JAMES C. CLEVELAND

Although I find myself in sympathy with some of the thoughts expressed in the minority views, I have not signed them. Some of the items to which the minority object can probably be taken care of by the amendment process on the Floor of the House or in the House-Senate conference committee.

It has been argued that the provisions of the bill are unduly restrictive of the Federal Elections Commission and its ability to make and enforce decisions. I don't find this particularly objectionable. Although Congressional motives in imposing restrictions on the rule-making process of the FEC may be suspect, to me at least, it is high time that the U.S. Congress imposes similar restrictions on most other independent regulatory agencies.

It is no secret that there is growing disenchantment with the manner in which the federal government is performing. Many of the complaints can be laid directly at the door of independent regulatory agencies that have assumed powers the Congress never intended and have exercised those powers with such arrogance and stupidity as to erode public confidence in government.

For this reason, it is predictable that so-called "sunset" laws will soon be enacted by states and, hopefully, the message will eventually get through to Congress. Insofar as we are establishing procedures to closely monitor the FEC—despite the fact that the Congressional motive may be subject to suspicion in this particular case—the experiment is well worth at least trying.

I do have some objections to the legislation, however. The principal one is based on my conviction that the Congress made a significant error in totally pre-empting all state election laws, and federal pre-emption is continued in the new amendments. Some of the states had excellent laws which were more practicable and fully as effective as the federal law if not more so. In spite of the growing feeling in the U.S. Congress that it is inefficient to attempt to run everything from Washington, we're at it again. The ultimate act of violence to the principle that there are many important functions best left to the states is the provision in this bill that a candidate doesn't even have to file copies of his disclosure reports with any state office.

JAMES C. CLEVELAND.

MINORITY VIEWS

On January 30th of this year, the Supreme Court issued its opinion in Buckley v. Valeo. The Court held inter alia that the administrative powers delegated to the Federal Election Commission were unconstitutional because of the manner in which the members were appointed. It left our Committee with a compelling duty to take prompt action to remedy the situation.

Fortunately, the circumstances of this situation presented us with an easily achievable solution, a simple reconstitution of the Commission. Unfortunately, the majority of the Committee ignored this alternative. Instead, without the benefit of hearings, they embarked on a process which has resulted in the bill that we have before us at the present time.

The Committee has reported H.R. 12406, a bill of extraordinary complexity, which amounts to a massive revision of the Federal Election Campaign Act. While this bill has fifty-eight pages, only the first two deal with the essential reconstitution of the Federal Election Commission.

The amendments represent a major change in our election laws in a year of both Presidential and Congressional election contests. This is truly analogous to changing the rules in a baseball game in the third inning. They contain features which clearly benefit Congressional incumbents to the detriment of challengers; this is fundamentally unfair. They strike at the very heart of an independent Federal Election Commission and in effect reconstitute it as a virtual sub-committee of this Committee. Taken together, these provisions amount to an antireform rather than to a reform measure.

There are few who would not agree that the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 and its 1974 amendments are a very complex and extremely unwieldy piece of legislation. The act is hardly conducive to compliance by the public for the simple reason that it is so difficult to understand. The record of the 1976 elections will doubtlessly be replete with unintentional violations. One of our major goals should be to encourage greater participation in the political process. Unfortunately, we have added yet another layer of complexity to the law that will discourage participation.

The implication of the preceding paragraph is obvious; our election law should be made easier to understand. The most cursory review of this legislation indicates that we have not accomplished that result. Rather, we have made key sections of the Federal Election Campaign Act even more complex than they were when we began our work.

It cannot be denied that the more delay there is in the development and ultimate passage by the Congress of curative legislation, the greater uncertainty there will be among candidates and committees as to what the ground rules will be for the upcoming elections. As was noted above, we could have reported out a simple reconstitution bill to bring the act's appointment mechanism into harmony with the Court's mandate. If we had taken that route instead of the one we did, then the "reconstitution crisis" would be over and done with, and hopefully the Commission would be well on the way, with an occasional nudge from the Congress to getting on with its assigned responsibilities.

Legislation of this sort should not be written in an election year. Rather, we should postpone the consideration of any substantive amendments, aside from a simple reconstitution, until after the elections. In 1977, we will have two conditions that are conducive to a major overhaul of the Act which are absent at this time. The political atmosphere will be less heated, and perhaps more importantly, the elections will have given us vitally needed experience as to how the present law works and how the Federal Election Commission functions during a "peak business year". Serious difficulties have already become apparent in the Presidential primary matching fund area. This year's elections will surely reveal problems in other areas of the present law.

THE BILL IS A MAJOR REVISION OF OUR ELECTION LAW IN AN ELECTION YEAR.

This legislation has a myriad of provisions that amount to a major revision of the Federal Election Campaign Act. Space limitations do not permit a treatment of each change; however, the major amendments are discussed below:

The definitions of contribution and expenditure have been amended to exclude legal and accounting services rendered in certain circumstances. Independent expenditure is defined to reflect the Court's opinion in the Buckley case. New reporting requirements in the independent expenditure area have been added to the present law.

The reporting requirements for political committees and candidates have been amended so that in non-election years, candidates and committees will not be obliged to file quarterly reports unless they have received contributions or made expenditures in excess of $10,000.00. This provision limits the disclosure features of the present law.

The bill changes the law governing political action committees including a drastic reduction in permissible individual contributions and amendments designed to restrict the proliferation of these groups.

Another major change involves the area of criminal penalties. The bill provides for fines of up to the greater of $25,000 or 300 percent of the amount of any involved contributions or expenditures or for a jail sentence but only for violations of the law where the amount of the contributions or expenditures involved is more than $5,000.

Any individual who "knowingly or willfully" violates the section limiting cash contributions is subject to a fine "which does not exceed the greater of $25,000 or 300 percent of the amount of the contribution involved. The level of permissible cash contributions incidentally has been raised to $250.

This new penalty section replaces the separate penalty sections under present law which attach to illegal corporate and labor union contributions; the contribution limitations; and other sections dealing with illegal political activity. The penalties have been lessened, this is particularly true of the possibility of imprisonment. For example, under present law, a willful violation of the section forbidding corporate contributions, no matter what the amount, could result in a prison term of two years. This bill severely limits the possibility of imprisonment for violations.

Present law requires that copies of all reports filed under the Act also be filed with the Secretary of State of the state where a given candidate is running for office. This provision allows local residents ready access to a candidate's filings. The bill strikes this provision thus eliminating one facet of the present law's disclosure provisions.

This Bill Destroys the Independence of the Federal Election Commission

Section 108 of the bill grants the Congress a veto power over all advisory opinions. The Commission will be obliged to submit its advisory opinions to the Congress under the Congressional review sections of the Federal Election Campaign Act. This means that our committee will have thirty days in which to scrutinize each one and will be able to disapprove those with which they do not agree.

It will take longer than it has heretofore for the public to obtain final opinions on which they can rely. The increased uncertainty and difficulty that will result from this new process will surely decrease the effectiveness of advisory opinions as vehicles for interpreting the Federal Election Campaign Act.

This section applies to every advisory opinion issued by the Commission since its inception unless the transaction dealt with in the opinion is subject to a pre-existing Commission regulation. To date, the Commission has not prescribed any rules or regulations, yet it has issued nearly 100 advisory opinions. Moreover, a single advisory opinion often speaks to more than one issue.

It is clear from the preceeding paragraph that the Congress will be deluged by a veritable flood of advisory opinions submitted for our review. Many of these involve intricate fact patterns and complex legal issues. There is a very real question whether we will have the time to give each one the attention it deserves. Additionally, this provision cannot help but result in a virtual hodgepodge of inconsistent regulations.

Section 10 of the bill includes a provision that in effect gives either House of Congress, the opportunity to literally rewrite proposed regulations submitted to it by the Commission. It provides that Congress can veto regulations, entirely or in part, during the course of the Congressional review process. It should be noted that the Supreme Court in its opinion in Buckley specifically reserved judgment on the constitutionality of the review process. The constitutionality of this provision has been questioned and no doubt will be again. It would appear that a strengthening of the Congressional review provisions would increase the vulnerability of the Act to a court challenge and could lead us to a repetition of the same sort of crisis brought on by the Buckley opinion.

The enforcement section of the Act has been completely restructured. A new reasonable cause standard has been added. In a preponderance of cases, the Commission will be obliged to correct or prevent violations by informal methods with an eye to entering into conciliation agreements. Such an agreement, unless violated, is a complete bar to further enforcement activity. Other parts of the new enforcement section include a provision for civil penalty fines. Furthermore, the Federal Election Commission is prohibited from acting on any violation that occurs within five days of an election. This section, which covers some eight pages in the bill, imposes a rigid procedural frame work on the Commission that may prevent that agency from effectively carrying out its responsibilities.

Section 115 of the bill directs our Committee and the appropriate Committee in the other body to review the Commission's implementation of the election laws during the first three months of calendar year 1977. They are further directed to recommend whether the Commission should be terminated as of March 31, 1977. A recommendation by either House to that effect will result in the demise of the Commission. Notwithstanding the fact that a directive issued by the 94th Congress to the 95th Congress is of dubious legal efficacy, it represents clear notice from the Committee to the Commission that their activities during the remainder of this campaign year will be closely monitored and could lead to their abolition.

This Legislation Is Slanted Toward Incumbent Office Holders

The Commission will not be authorized to investigate whether a Federal office holder's staff is engaged in improper campaign activities without first consulting the office holder. If an affadavit is executed by the office holder that the staff is performing its regularly assigned duties, then the Commission is barred from any further inquiry. This provision clearly imparts an advantage to incumbents which is not enjoyed by challengers.

The very complexity of this legislation will help incumbents, who with their large staffs and greater access to expert assistance will be better able to cope with the arcane mysteries of this bill than will challengers.

The Present Situation Calls for a Simple Extension of the Federal Election Commission and Nothing More

The Minority believes that this bill should not be passed for the reasons stated in the preceding paragraphs. The Federal Election Commission should be reconstituted so that it can continue to implement the Federal Election Campaign Act. The Congress should move promptly to pass legislation appropriate to that end. It would be derelict in its duty if it did not so act.

ADDITIONAL VIEWS BY CONGRESSMEN DEVINE AND DICKINSON

It is our view that the electoral process in a republic is better served by the candid, free and informed weighing of the competing interests, candidates, and campaigns facing the voters.

Accordingly, we are inalterably opposed to the basic concepts imbodied in H.R. 12406. The first amendment cure for corrupt infection is open discussion of the evil and wide participation in the political process. H.R. 12406 will, in our opinion, through legal restrictions, bureaucratic regulation and complexities drive people, ideas, and issues from the political arena, which should be an uninhibited market place for the vast array of public interests that must ultimately forge the course of government. Further, as written, an inbalance favoring big labor continues to the detriment of others who would like to have a reasonable political imput.

We are particularly opposed to the concept of Public Financing and fully agree with Chief Justice Burger in his dissenting opinion in Buckley v. Valeo:

> I would, however, fault the Court for not adequately analyzing and meeting head-on, the issue whether public financial assistance to the private political activity of individual citizens and parties is a legitimate expenditure of public funds. The public monies at issue here are not being employed simply to police the integrity of the electoral process or to provide a forum for the use of all participants in the political dialog, as would, for example, be the case if free broadcast time were granted. Rather, we are confronted with the Government's actual financing, out of general revenues, a segment of the political debate itself. As Senator Howard Baker remarked during the debate on this legislation:
> "I think there is something politically incestuous about the Government financing and, I believe, inevitably then regulating, the day to day procedures by which the Government is selected. I think it is extraordinarily important that the Government not control the machinery by which the public expresses the range of its desires, demands, and dissent."
> If this "incest" affected only the issue of wisdom of the plan, it would be none of the concern of judges. But, in my view, the inappropriateness of subsidizing, from general revenues, the actual political dialog of the people—the process which begets the Government itself—is as basic to our national tradition as the separation of church and state also deriving from the First Amendment.

Already we have seen examples of potential abuses in public financing. We have single issue candidates using public funds to promote their cause. We have candidates withdrawing or "suspending" their campaigns under conditions which could abuse the system. We have closed one loophole by an amendment in the Committee; others remain.

We are also opposed to the Federal Election Commission as conceived in this bill. We question whether Congress should turn over the management of its elections to another branch of government. It does violence to the separation of powers and injects bureaucracy into the political selection process.

In an attempt to reach this problem, H.R. 12406 provides for elaborate legislative vetoes. But this method is on thin ice constitutionally. The plaintiffs in the Buckley case challenged the legislative veto as an unconstitutional infringement of separation-of-powers principles. If commission rules subject to the veto are regarded as legislative in nature, then the veto results in what is in effect legislation by Congress without the President's having his constitutionally required opportunity to participate in the legislative process. If, on the other hand, the rule-making function is executive—as the Court strongly suggested in its discussion of the method of appointing the commissioners—then the veto is an impermissible intrusion on executive authority. And the Act's provision for a veto by either House acting alone is even more questionable than the more usual device of concurrent resolution.

The Court found it unnecessary to pass on the legislative veto issue as such, since it held the commission's rule-making power unconstitutional because of the appointment method. The Court's opinion contains a lengthy footnote (slip opinion page 134, n. 176) which carefully outlined the legislative-veto question and expressly left it open. In that footnote the Court cited two law review articles which argued that the legislative veto is unconstitutional.

If the Congressional control of the commission does not pass constitutional muster and the remainder of H.R. 12406 is allowed to stand, the problems are compounded rather than resolved. This whole bundle might well be categorized in the area of reform simply for the sake of reform.

SEPARATE VIEWS OF CONGRESSMEN DICKINSON AND DEVINE

When the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 were before the last Congress we filed separate views in the Committee Report at Page 123 of House Report 93–1239 as follows:

"The undersigned recognize that honest elections are essential to the survival of our form of Government and that there is a constant and ongoing need for legislation in this field. However, this legislation, to be effective must be fair and workable. It is with this last thought in mind that the undersigned oppose this bill.

"The undersigned regard the following aspects of the bill as particularly unrealistic for the reasons given:

1. "Financing of Presidential Primaries.—The provisions for public financing of Presidential Primaries will inject the Federal Treasury into what many times amounts to a popularity contest under a formula that will probably work unfairly to the candidates involved.

"The prospect of a Federal subsidy to run for office may very well result in a proliferation of candidates. Access to such subsidies would be an incentive to everyone with a desire for publicity to become a candidate; primaries may then become an anarchic jungle with policy issues largely obscured. The subsidy might also be a temptation for those who anticipate financial gain from running for office.

"The use of private money we are told has weakened public confidence in the democratic process. But is this confidence likely to be restored when tax payers pay for campaigns they regard as frivolous, wasteful and in some cases, abhorrent?

"Finally, we are told that subsidies will reduce the pressures on candidates for dependence on large campaign contributions from private sources. Where indeed will our democratic process be when the candidates' principal constituent is the Federal Establishment.

"2. Financing of Conventions.—The undersigned oppose the public financing of political conventions. Conventions are uniquely a party function and as such should not be supported by the overburdened public treasury. Nor should the party be entangled in the bureaucratic regulatory web which is envisioned by the present language of the bill. The party must have the ability to determine the size and form of its convention; this can only be accomplished if the party retains control of its purse strings. Furthermore, the vitality of the party is enhanced by the participation of its members, while public financing of conventions will undercut individual initiative and participation.

"The ever increasing encroachment of the federal bureaucracy into the private lives of our citizens is taking another large step with the enactment of convention financing. The two party system, free from bureaucratic tampering, has been a fourth branch in our constitutional form of government and will only remain a strong force if it is kept in the hands of the people.

"3. Political Parties.—Instead of strengtening the role of political parties in the political process, the Committee bill, by treating political parties the same as all other political committees, would significantly weaken and contribute to the demise of the two party system.

"Section 101(b)(2) of the bill places a limitation of $5,000 on the contributions of political committees to candidates for Federal office. The definition of political committee clearly encompasses the national and state committees of the major parties, thus limiting them to $5,000 contributions. It would also apply to both direct cash transfers and services provided to or for the benefit of candidates, many of which presently performed without the candidates' full knowledge.

"The undersigned strongly believe that the national and state committees of the major parties should be excluded from the definition of political committee for the purpose of contribution limitations. The national and state committees have been traditionally the policy making bodies of the major parties and are cornerstones of our political system. The definition in the bill presently treats these important committees equally with all other committees, even small special interest committees. The national and state committees must be permitted the ability to assist candidates as the need arises so that a strong and dynamic party system can be maintained.

"The governments of many countries throughout the world are going through a period of extreme instability. The United States can best avoid this phenomenon by furthering the development of a strong party system. If major parties are weakened or destroyed by a series of legislative shackles placed on them in the name of reform, our constitutional form of government will be seriously undermined.

"In their haste to reform the funding of political campaigns, the Committee has severely limited the function of the parties. If the national and state committees have no control over their candidates, there will be little, if any, reason for candidates to adhere to the policy decisions of the party and the inevitable splintering of the two-party system will have begun. To prevent this from occurring, national and state parties must be exempted from the same limitations on contributions by political committees.

"4. Citizens participation.—A final concern of the undersigned is that the sheer length and complexity of this bill will discourage citizen participation and involvement perhaps even driving many people right out of politics.

Many people, when confronted with the complexity of this legislation, may become overwhelmed and give up politics in disgust. There will be ample potential for unintentional violations of the law. Many people may worry about going to jail or being fined for an inadvertent violation. Indeed, it is inevitable unless the administration and enforcement is done with tolerance and understanding of the complexities and problems involved.

Many well-qualified individuals may view the burdensome reporting requirements and complicated regulations as an insurmountable obstacle and choose not to run. In addition to understanding the lengthy complicated disclosure forms, candidates may have to familiarize themselves with hundreds of pages of regulations promulgated to insure fair administration and enforcement of the limitations.

Spontaneous, grassroots action and people who are political novices or independent of regular political channels should not be discouraged. The loss of such activities and candidacies would be a major blow to our political process.

The undersigned urge the administrators and enforcers of the law to take every action possible to simplify reporting procedures and to make regulations easy to understand and intelligible to those not well versed in the law. In addition, services should be provided to candidates who do not understand the law or who are unable to understand the legal jargon used in the law and regulations so that they will not be found in violation of the law.

It would be ironic indeed if, in the name of reforming our present system of campaign financing, we fail to drive out the special interests and only succeed in driving honest, concerned citizens from participation in the political process.

These views are now coming to pass. Considering the provisions that are contained in H.R. 12406, we respectfully reassign these same views and as things are now going we fully expect to reassign them in the 95th Congress.

WILLIAM L. DICKINSON.
SAMUEL L. DEVINE.

SUPPLEMENTAL VIEWS OF MR. FRENZEL

When the Supreme Court decision on Buckley, et al, was announced, the President promptly asked the Congress to reestablish the Federal Election Commission.

To encourage the Congress not to get slowed down in the consideration of other aspects of the election law, he also proposed that the FEC be given an expiration date of next winter. That feature would force another look at the whole law next year, but would assure that election laws now in effect would remain uniform throughout this year's election period.

The House Administration Committee ignored this good advice. Instead, it is now presenting a major, comprehensive revision and recodification of the election laws.

A sweeping revision of our election law is not a bad idea if it had been done in the regular manner. But no witnesses were called. The FEC was not called to testify. No party officials were allowed to testify. No candidates could appear. No public interest groups were invited. In short, not one minute of public hearings were held.

Incumbents re-wrote the law all by themselves. But none of the challengers, none of the parties, and none of the people, were even allowed to present testimony.

Without hearings, the Committee fashioned about the kind of an election bill a group of incumbents might be expected to make. It guts the independence of the FEC, and it feathers the nests of incumbents. It is a substantial retreat from the reforms of 1974. The foxes are back in charge of the chicken coop.

H.R. 12406 weakens the Election Commission to an intolerable level. Under it, either House of Congress can veto any decision of the Federal Election Commission. In fact, either House can terminate the FEC. Under the bill, the FEC is subservient to Congress. It is reduced to being almost a subcommittee of the House Administration Committee.

The bill is self serving—another incumbent's delight. Penalties are reduced, and in some cases, like receiving excessive honoraria, eliminated. Congressional staff is made immune from investigation. Filings with Secretaries of States are eliminated.

The bill changes or eliminates all existing procedures. It repeals all advisory opinions. Since Congress has approved no regulations, there are none. Without advisory opinions, all candidates, parties, and political participants are without rules or guidelines.

Based on the Congressional record of rejecting regulations, the primaries will be over long before any regulations are in place. Some needed regulations probably won't be approved by general election time.

The bill also changes all the criminal procedures, by instituting a new civil procedure, and by changing, largely through reductions, the penalties for violation.

Briefly here's what the bill does:

I. Reconstitutes the Federal Election Commission, but

II. Removes its last shred of independence by:
- (a) effectively repealing all existing advisory opinions;
- (b) eliminating all opinions other than advisory opinions;
- (c) claiming a one-House veto on future opinions;
- (d) allowing a veto of any part of a regulation;
- (e) extending veto powers over forms as well as regulations;
- (f) providing a preferential, non-debatable rule on veto resolution;
- (g) allowing either House to kill the FEC by resolution.

III. Provides special shelters for incumbents by:
- (a) immunizing all congressional employees from FEC investigation;
- (b) reducing penalties for such violations as receiving excessive honoraria;
- (c) effectively removes jail sentences for violators, but provides them for false swearing of complaints;
- (d) allowing one candidate's committee to transfer funds to another;
- (e) eliminating filing with secretaries of state;
- (f) directing FEC to audit Presidential candidates first;
- (g) remaining silent on disclosure of congressional office accounts (slush funds);
- (h) increasing allowable cash contributions by 250 percent;
- (i) adding restrictions and burdensome reporting for independent expenditures.

IV. Revises criminal code and penalty sections by:
- (a) creating a civil process;
- (b) giving FEC power to assess fines;
- (c) making FEC prosecutor in civil cases;
- (d) removing most jail penalties, if less than $5,000 violation;
- (e) reducing authority of Justice Department;
- (f) reducing FEC ability to ask that illegal practices be enjoined.

V. Gives Union Political Action Committees unfair advantages by:
- (a) repealing SUNPAC (AO No. 23) decision which was approved by Justice Department and by Supreme Court;
- (b) giving unions exclusive right to solicit union members for political contributions;
- (c) denying corporate political action committees right to solicit their employees;
- (d) preserving exemption from disclosure for political action committee expenditures.

VI. Makes other substantial changes too numerous to detail

H.R. 12406, the Committee bill, is bad law. It seeks to use a popular, needed, feature—the reconstitution of the Federal Election Commission—as a vehicle to carry many complicated, objectionable changes in all facets of our election law.

H.R. 12406 is not necessary. There are nearly 100 House sponsors of simple reconstitution bills. That was the President's recommendation and Common Cause's recommendation. A simple bill to reestablish the Federal Election Commission is still the best solution. H.R. 12406 is an unacceptable 58 page monster.

SUPPLEMENTAL VIEWS OF W. HENSON MOORE

I am strongly opposed to this bill for reasons expressed in the Minority Report and one additional one. Section 321(b) provides among other things that a corporate political action committee cannot solicit to be members of that committee any person other than its stockholders, executive officers or their families. Executive officers are defined as salaried employees with policy making or supervisory authority. This changes the existing law which allows a corporate political action committee to solicit not only those persons, but any employee of the corporation. The existing law has been approved by the Federal Elections Commission, the Justice Department and the United States Supreme Court in the recent decision of McCarthy and Buckley v. Valeo.

I believe this new language to be unconstitutional, unwise and unfair. It makes an illogical distinction between types of employees of a corporation and treats them discriminatorily. Under the new language, a corporate political action committee could not solicit the large majority of its employees for no apparent rational reason. Whether an employee is paid by the hour, piece or salary, and whether an employee supervises others or is supervised, he or she is no less an employee and has the same economic interests as all others working for the employer.

What then is the reason the current law is so radically altered in this bill? Since no hearings were held to develop evidence for the need for such, one can only conclude the obvious—"politics". The strongest and most effective coalition of political action committees in the nation, those of labor unions, oppose any challenge to their current collective political dominance as the most powerful special interest group in American politics today. Certainly members of unions should be encouraged to participate in union political action committees, but this is not a valid reason to deny this right to other American workers.

Although of no legal significance, there is no evidence that labor unions are justified in fearing a loss of the political power of the "working man". The activities of a political action committee are determined by its membership. Employee ("working man") members of such a committee should have the same interests and rights in any political action committee they choose to join, whether labor or place of employment related. Thus, it cannot be the concern for the political activities of the working man in general that causes labor union opposition, but the fear of increased competition or diminution of power of their own political action committees.

As a matter of fact, many members of unions might well choose to also join the political action committee of the corporation for which they work as well as that of their union. It should be pointed out that approximately 75 percent of America's total labor force does not belong to unions, and if they work for corporations and are not shareholders or executive officers, they cannot be solicited. This practically all but eliminates their right to participate in this type of political activity. This bill also prevents non-union employees of a corporation or employees of a corporation which has no union at all from being solicited if they are not shareholders or executive officers. Therefore, in an unconstitutional, unwise and unfair manner, only labor union political action committees can under this bill solicit employees who are not shareholders or executive officers. This is a severe political limitation.

The whole purpose in political action committees is to allow persons with like philosophical and/or economic interests to band together and to promote those interests through a political action committee. This is participation in our political system and certainly any participation in politics should be encouraged and not hindered. Our democracy needs greater, not less, participation by our citizenry. Political action committees can be justified only on this basis. They currently meet this need by encouraging citizens by the thousands to become more politically active. There should be no "political" hindrances on who can join and participate in such committees.

For these reasons and the ones expressed in other minority views, this bill should be defeated and the Federal Election Commission simply reconstituted.

W. HENSON MOORE.

HOUSE FLOOR DEBATES ON H.R. 12406

selective enforcement, whether by the executive branch or by a commission appointed by the legislative branch, creates an atmosphere of guilt. It is a most unfortunate situation.

Mr. Speaker, I think the point of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS) is well taken. Since I have disagreed with him on other aspects I want to register my agreement on this one.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. ARMSTRONG). I agree with him. I would like to do what he says, but I am also aware that I could not sell that package to the committee and probably not to the House.

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to prolong this. There will be a chance to debate this this full, and I do not want to foreclose debate under the 5-minute rule, however long it may take; but there is a provision in the bill of the other body that really, in my view, would be very restrictive if we passed it.

There are many things we are going to debate, but as far as this Commission is concerned, I just think that we have too many commissions in town now. I think that instead of adding another one, probably what we ought to do is to abolish some of them.

Mr. Speaker, let me tell the Members what they say. They say in their bill that everybody who makes more than $25,000 in the Government shall file a statement with the Commission, I believe, of his annual net worth, his income, from what sources it came, and so on. I do not know how many people there are. Somebody estimated that there are 150,000. That may be high or low, but I will take that figure. That is 150,000 more pieces of paper for this Commission to audit and look over; and if that provision stays in, in conference, instead of having 200 employees down there, they are going to need another 1,000 or so. Therefore, we have to draw the line somewhere with respect to this. We did the best we could in committee with the votes that we had.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. Speaker, I just want to make the point that the regulatory framework is so complicated as we now have it as to discourage participation.

In my State and in other areas of the country good people who want to participate and to be active in campaigns, either as fund raisers, treasurers, or contributors, are saying that it is too complicated and the risks are too great.

Based on my own experience, I know of this happening, not among people who are naive, but among lawyers, CPA's, and other professional people who feel that the law is impossible to comply with.

As for the point of whether or not it would be feasible to pass the kind of legislation which the gentleman has mentioned, and which I myself favor; that is, abolishing the Commission and making it simple for the law enforcement authorities to enforce the law through the regular process, the issue before us in this instance is the adoption of the rule. My complaint is that the rule which is now before us, if adopted, precludes even the attempt to do what the gentleman from Ohio and I both favor.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I think the rule is a rule which will enable the House to work its will in large measure. The majority and the minority on the committee are agreed to that, I believe altogether. I agreed to ask for this kind of a rule in consultation with the minority and put into the request every single amendment on which there was substantial disagreement or that they wanted to put in.

As I say, I think the House can substantially work its will if this rule is adopted.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 333, nays 73, not voting 26, as follows:

CORRECTION OF THE RECORD

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to delete certain words as printed on page H2023 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 17, 1976, and that the permanent RECORD be corrected accordingly to reflect the deletion, the words referred to being as follows:

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ECKHARDT. I yield to my colleague from Texas.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman think that if we change that name from "Magna Carta" to "Mogen David" that we could get it over?

Mr. ECKHARDT. I would not go that far.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 12406) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide that members of the Federal Election Commission shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS).

The motion was agreed to.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 12406) with Mr. BOLLING in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS) will be recognized for 1 hour, and the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS) will be recognized for 1 hour.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to try as briefly as I can and as quickly as I can and as lucidly as I can to outline the provisions of this bill and not to get into any arguments pro or con about it.

It was reported out on March 11 by a vote of 15 ayes and 9 noes. A clean bill was later introduced. The Members have all heard the debate on the rule—or those who were here. The rule has been adopted, which is a limited, open rule.

Among other things, the bill provides that the six FEC commissioners shall be named by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. The commissioners shall serve staggered 6-year terms, with no more than three Members and no two consecutive appointments from the same party. The present commissioners will serve until the new commissioners are appointed. Upon appointment, the commissioners must terminate any outside employment within 1 year of confirmation.

It really is immaterial to me, but as one chairman said at one time when presenting a budget, "It would be boring." This may be boring to the Members, and it has been a subject I have been dealing with for a long time. All I am trying to do is tell the Members what is in the bill because it affects everyone who is in the House who will be running in the future.

Major actions by the Commission, including initiation of civil suits, referral of criminal violations to the Justice Department, establishment of guidelines or forms and the issuance of advisory opinions require affirmative vote of four of the six Commissioners.

I had a talk last night—the first I have ever talked to him on the telephone—with the staff director of the Commission. As the Members know, their books have to close tomorrow on this quarter and the report has to be in on the 10th of April. Some people, anticipating that there will be no bills to pay or no expenditures to make, already filled out the forms and are checking them over, including the treasurer of my campaign.

She called me yesterday and said, "I got all these forms filled out this morning and finished. We audited them here and they are ready to go, and before I got to the post office they brought in the mail and there is a whole, brand-new set of forms radically changed from what we have been using."

I called the staff director and I said, "I don't know if this is poor judgment or poor timing or just general laxity." He said, well, he thought it was poor timing, and that he hoped that today the Commission could rule that we could use the forms currently in effect or the new ones if we have them in time, either one. A Member has to give the same information on what he spent, what he took in and how much he had left on hand, but these are some of the complications we get into with the Commission.

I think it was an innocent act. I think they just did not think or maybe the Post Office Department did not get the forms out in timely fashion after they mailed them.

In item 6, the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate and this committee are to review this, the FEC 1976 election operations, and report to their separate Houses by March 1, 1977, recommending whether or not the FEC authority should expire on March 31.

This was something that I understood the White House wanted, only in a more radical form. They wanted a self-destruct provision, just saying it does terminate on, I think it was, January 31.

The Commission may continue to issue advisory opinions in response to written requests, and anyone acting in accord with an advisory opinion is not subject to prosecution.

Here comes the one that is controversial:

Within 30 days after issuing an advisory opinion, the FEC must transmit to Congress a proposed regulation relating to the transaction in such opinion if it is not subject to an existing regulation.

Why? I will tell the Members why. Because if the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. LONG) writes in for an advisory opinion and he gets one, under the present system that is only applicable to the gentleman from Maryland. And if the gentleman from California (Mr. SISK) talks to the gentleman from Maryland and the gentleman from Maryland tells him he has an advisory opinion so-and-so, and the gentleman from California acts upon it without it being made in the form of a regulation, some capricious person over in the Justice Department could possibly prosecute the gentleman from California (Mr. SISK).

So we are not trying, as somebody said, to make this Commission a subcommittee of the Committee on House Administration; we are trying to make it do a consistent job. I was not too strong for the advisory opinion in the beginning. I think it has been a good thing. But I think it ought to be applied across the board.

Each advisory opinion issued before enactment must be proposed as a regulation within 30 days of enactment or lose its status.

Any person may file a written, signed, and notarized complaint with the Commission. Details of the investigation are not to be made public without the written consent of the person being investigated.

If the Commission determines that a person has committed or is about to commit a noncriminal violation of Federal election law, it must for a period of 30 days try to correct such violation by informal methods of conciliation, conference, and persuasion.

What are we saying here? We are saying that if one of your reports comes in with line 14–C blank, and there should be something in there, that instead of referring it over to the Justice Department for a civil violation, the Commission shall call your treasurer, or whoever files the report, and say, "Look, you forgot to fill in line 14–C on page 7. Give us the information or file an amended report." If you do that, that wipes out the violation.

If the Commission is unable to settle an apparent violation of this act through conciliation, it may bring a civil action.

The Commission would have exclusive primary jurisdiction over civil actions to enforce the law.

If the Commission believes a criminal violation of election law has been committed, it may refer the apparent violation to the Attorney General. A criminal violation is defined as any "knowing and willful" violation involving a contribution or expenditure in excess of $5,000.

The Committee on Rules made in order an amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) to reduce that to $1,000, and if he offers such an amendment I do not intend to vigorously oppose it.

The bill establishes an appeals procedure whereby any person aggrieved by an order of the Commission dismissing or failing to act on his or her complaint may petition no later than 60 days following the dismissal of the complaint by the Commission, or no later than 60 days following the 90-day period in the event the Commission fails to act on the complaint.

The bill prohibits any FEC member or staff employee from disclosing the fact that an individual is being investigated or is about to be investigated by the Commission, without the written consent of the person to be investigated.

Why? Let me tell the Members about the Rose investigation or about the Gradison investigation. But in the Rose case, it was more flagrant. Someone wrote an anonymous letter in, saying that Mr. ROSE of North Carolina had given an Indian a Cadillac to round up the Indian vote. It was not signed, being anonymous, and it was not notarized. It was not anything but a piece of paper with some writing on it. The Commission, or somebody—we have not found out who yet, because we have three or four different stories—sent nine investigators into Mr. ROSE's district, with eight-column headlines saying that he had been charged with a flagrant violation of the election law, they spent a week down in sunny North Carolina on the beach, and they said there was not any violation, after he had gotten all of that bad publicity which is attendant to a thing like that.

So that is why we tried to say this with respect to these complaints which are generally made against an incumbent for the purposes of getting the opponent some free publicity. This one was not that way; this was made a year after the election. God knows why it was made. Anyway, they cannot get those eight-column headlines until after they have gone in and investigated.

After prescribing rules and regulations, the Commission would be required to transmit such rules or regulations—this is in the law now—to each House of Congress. Either House could disapprove all or part of any Commission rule or regulation within 30 legislative days after submission.

Number 17: The Commission would not be permitted to investigate the activities of a staff member of a Federal officeholder without first notifying such person holding Federal office.

This pertains to what the staff member may be doing in your office or elsewhere.

If a Federal officeholder signs an affidavit stating that a staff employee is performing his regularly assigned duties, further inquiry or investigation of the matter would be prohibited.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS) has expired.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the reason for that provision is that if we lose control of our staff, we might as well not be here. We cannot have seven or eight people in there sitting with them every day and asking what they are doing. I presume they would even want to look in your files.

No person would be permitted to contribute more than $1,000, and no political committee could contribute more than $5,000 to any multicandidate political committee or party committee during a calendar year.

Contrary to what the Washington Post says, that eliminates the Democratic Campaign Committee of which I am chairman.

Number 19: The bill increases the ceiling on cash contributions of individuals and groups to candidates running for Federal office from $100 to $250.

Mr. Chairman, I will be candid with the Members. I do not know where the $50 came from. There was a motion to change it from $100 to $200, and then much to my amazement I heard in the committee that 35 percent of the people in this country do not have checking accounts, and that for many candidates running $100-a-plate dinners this would preclude a man from buying a ticket for his wife and himself. That is the reason it was raised. Somebody offered an amendment to change it from $100 to $200, and somebody offered an amendment to amend that amendment to make it $250. That amendment carried. I do not know why the $50 is there, but I am completely in support of a $200 minimum.

Number 20: The bill eliminates the requirement that candidates and committees must file reports with the Secretary of State in the State where they are candidates.

The reason for that is that many Secretaries have said they do not know what to do with the reports when they get them. There is no provision made as to what they should do with them, so they simply file them, and a good many Secretaries, I am told, simply throw them away. All of this information will be available in the Clerk's office and down in the Commission, and every Commission would provide access to UPI and AP, and let us not think they will not have that report on the date it is filed. This will eliminate many more thousands of papers during the year.

Item 21: The bill eases reporting requirements in nonelection years.

That is done by saying that if you do not spend more than a certain amount of money in a quarter, you do not file a report for that quarter. We have had that provision in there, and then, as we know, the Election Commission rule said that in a quarter where you did not have to file a report there was a rule that said you had to file a report to that effect. I do not know whether these rules are worth anything.

Item 22: Locals of a union, subsidiaries of a corporation, and other similarly structured groups—and this is important; there has been a lot of flack about this, but it is pretty clear if you understand it—would be treated as part of the parent with respect to the $5,000 limitation on contributions to any one candidate or political committee.

In other words, if an international union contributed $5,000 to a candidate, no local union could contribute anything. If the international contributed $1,000, its local unions could contribute up to an additional $4,000, but the maximum applies to the whole bag. Of course, this applies to corporation taxes as well. If what we will call the national PAC or the medi PAC contributes $2,000 to your campaign, your local State PAC can contribute another $3,000, but the $5,000 is the overall limit on them.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Would this have any effect whatesoever on the personal contribution of a doctor who might be a member of the AMA or of the State organization?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. No, no. Corporations are prohibited from soliciting contributions from anyone other than their stockholders, executive officers, and their families. Trade associations may not solicit funds from anyone other than the stockholders and executive members of corporations and their families. Labor unions are prohibited from soliciting contributions from non-members.

Mr. Chairman, I now go to paragraph 24: Anyone making independent expenditures for the benefit of candidates for Federal office must file contribution and spending reports on the same basis as political committees.

Twenty-five: Whenever an individual makes an expenditure financing any communication advocating the election or defeat of a candidate for public office, such communication must be clearly identified as authorized by a political candidate or committee, or if not authorized by a candidate or committee, that fact must be clearly identifiable.

Mr. Chairman, I think that is for the protection of every candidate, whether an incumbent or not.

Twenty-six: No person seeking the Presidency would be eligible for Federal funds if he or she spent more than $50,000 of his or her own funds of those of his or her immediate family.

Twenty-seven: If the Secretary of the Treasury determines there are insufficient moneys in the dollar checkoff fund to make payments to candidates, no moneys would be available to make such payments from other sources.

Twenty-eight: Candidates ceasing to actively campaign for the Presidency would no longer be eligible to receive Federal funds. Following such a withdrawal, a former candidate must return to the Treasury Department all funds received and not being used to defray qualified campaign expenses.

Twenty-nine: Candidates receiving voluntary legal or accounting services would not have to include such services against their expenditure limitations even if payment was made by a third party to the volunteer.

Thirty: The Federal Elections Commission would be prohibited from acting on any election law violation occurring within 5 days of an election.

Mr. Chairman, that does not mean that anyone would be barred from ever acting, but in that 5-day period when all the charges and countercharges are flying around, they will not take any public action until after the election. Then they can proceed to investigate the elections to their heart's content, but this is to try to minimize what our committee, which has policed elections, has gone through, a flurry of charges in the last 3 or 4 days before an election.

Mr. Chairman, that, in broad, general outline, is what the bill contains.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL).

(Mr. FRENZEL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, the bill before us, H.R. 12406, is a maze of complicated revisions and recodification of our existing law. In it we reconstituted the Federal Election Commission at the expense of eliminating its independence.

We are also making massive revisions in other areas of the election law. This bill is only going to serve to confuse the electoral process in the middle of an election year. And, we have done all of this without the benefit of public hearings. The only experts who count are ourselves.

Briefly, here is how the bill changes the rules in the middle of the ballgame.

First, we are reconstituting the Federal Election Commission but at the same time removing its last shred of independence. We are effectively repealing all existing advisory opinions. We are eliminating all opinions other than advisory opinions. We're claiming a one-House veto on future opinions. The bill allows a veto of any part of any regulation and provides a preferential nondebatable rule on veto resolutions. We are extending veto powers over forms as well as regulations and we are allowing either House to kill the FEC by resolution. That is a pretty thorough job of nailing the lid on the coffin.

Second, the bill is self-serving. The League of Women Voters have labeled it as an "Incumbent Protection Commission." We are extending "executive privilege" to all congressional employees. Everybody knows Watergate only applies to "the other guys."

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) believes, and I certainly do not believe, that that was the intent of the committee.

I want to make legislative history to the effect that if he commits any criminal act, this does not quash it.

All we were attempting to do was to prohibit the commission from coming in and saying, "You have not worked enough this week. You have been out campaigning too much."

I would also point out that if the man makes that affidavit that the person has worked full time, he is subject to perjury action; and I would not take that lightly, I do not think.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his legislative history. However, I have an easier way to cure the problem and that is simply to delete the section. The language itself is self-evident and I urge each Member to take a look at the language in the committee bill.

We are allowing one candidate's committe to transfer funds to another. Why not fool the contributor, and pass money to less popular friends. We are directing the FEC to audit Presidential candidates first. There is no sense in letting them get to us. We are adding restrictions and burdensome reporting for an independent expenditure. Those expenditures might be spent against us. However, of course, we remained silent on disclosure of congressional office accounts—slush funds. It is no fun to give away our own advantages.

Third, the bill is revising the criminal code and penalty sections. We are creating a new civil process and giving the FEC power to assess fines. We have removed most jail penalties, except those involving a knowing and willful violation of more than $5,000. Any person can commit a willful, knowing, premeditated offense like, for instance, accepting $4,900 in corporate money, or taking $4,900 in cash, or violating the contribution limit by $4,900, and be assured of no criminal penalty. We are reducing the authority of the Justice Department, and are also reducing the FEC's ability to ask that illegal practices be enjoined. We are removing most jail sentences for violators but we thoughtfully provided them for false swearing of complaints.

Fourth, the bill weakens the disclosure provisions of existing law. We are eliminating filings with the local secretaries of state. We surely do not want the local press to print that stuff, do we? We have also raised the reporting threshold to $10,000 in an off-election year. We have also increased the allowable cash contribution level by 250 percent. We are keeping our own slush funds secret, and allowing unions and corporations to continue to make covert political contributions.

Fifth, we are giving union political action committees unfair advantage over their corporate counterparts. We are repealing the SUNPAC decision which was approved by the Justice Department, and by reference, by the Supreme Court. We give unions exclusive rights to solicit union members for political contributions. We have denied corporate political action committees the right to solicit their own employees. And we have preserved the exemption from disclosure for political action committee expenditures. No wonder big labor wants this bill. I wonder if there will be a bundle available for those who vote for it.

A sweeping revision of our election law may not have been a bad idea if it had been done in the regular manner, after hearings, and some time other than in the middle of an election year. However, here we are using a popular and needed feature—the reconstitution of the Federal Election Commission—as a vehicle to carry many complicated, objectionable changes in all facets of our election law.

The committee worked hard to produce H.R. 12406. The chairman and members deserve credit for their diligence, but, not for their work product. There are nearly 100 House sponsors of simple reconstitution bills. That was the President's recommendation and Common Cause's recommendation. A simple bill to reestablish the Federal Election Commission is still the best solution and, at the appropriate time, I will offer the short 3-page reconstitution bill as a substitute for this 58-page monster. I will also offer other important amendments.

I will try to restore some of the independence of the FEC, by striking the section on advisory opinions, the section containing the "item veto," and the section permitting one House to kill the Commission.

I will seek to improve disclosure by restoring filings with secretaries of state and by asking corporations and unions to disclose political expenses from corporate funds, or from union—involuntary—treasury money.

I will also try to remove some of the self-serving aspects of the bill like the "executive privilege" for congressional employees, some of the new criminal and conciliation features, and the contributions from one candidate's committee to another.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I urge this committee to reject the Burton amendment to extend public financing to congressional elections. That idea is, in my judgment, ill-timed and ill-conceived. Public financing is a poor idea which generates most of the need for personnel in the FEC and carries an unusually high overhead cost.

We are in the middle of a public financing experiment for Presidential elections now. I wish we did not have it at all, because it apparently lures unattractive candidates, props them up when they should fall down, and, in general, wastes taxpayer dollars. However, we ought to have sense enough to let the test be completed before we compound our miseries. I hope the Burton amendment is defeated.

Mr. Chairman, if my substitute amendment, which provides for simple reconstitution of the Election Commission, is not adopted, I hope that this committee will vote down the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 seconds.

I just want to say that the whole gist of the gentleman's complaint seems to be about the House changing the rules in the middle of the game. Well, the Federal Election Commission is writing opinions and decisions every day and will continue to right up to election day, changing the rules week by week.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. DENT).

(Mr. DENT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that the House is not full because I believe that this is one subject that they ought to listen to. There appears to be only a small portion of the experts on this subject matter on the floor right now. We all recognize that every one of us elected to this body is a real expert in this field, and that is why it is difficult for the House to pass this kind of legislation and get any unanimity of opinion.

However, when I hear the Member who just preceded me talk about study and hearings, I think he has been around here long enough to know that after about 5 years of study and hearings, we have not changed the viewpoint of a single person who has appeared before us or those of us who have held the hearings, so I do not think there is going to be any change if we hold hearings on this bill for the next 100 years.

What we have to do is take the consensus of the members of the committee, properly named and duly qualified by the Rules of the House to study this proposition, and to bring before the Members the best bill that they can conceive and put into that bill before this House for a vote. To do other than that would not only be to kid ourselves but to do what some have accused us of trying to do, and that is kid the public. We are not kidding the public. This is a very serious matter in not only what it means to the individual Members now in Congress, or those who are out in the field at the moment campaigning, but what we do for the long-range welfare of the country itself and the makeup of this body.

What the Supreme Court did, of course, was in their judgment what they thought to be right in interpreting that act before them. But commonsense must tell every one of us that once we lift the ceiling on spending, all of the other restrictions and criteria that we set up on the election regarding the funding, or the spending of funds for an election, become minor in importance, because under the particular view of the Supreme Court there is a difference between a person who has personal wealth seeking office and a person who has little or no personal wealth and must depend upon his fellow citizens to contribute to his campaign.

We had to rewrite the act. Everyone of us knows that most of the problems that we have seen in the elections in the past have been somehow connected with the spending of funds or the collecting of funds.

We thought we had written a rather tight-ship piece of legislation. It did not please everybody, nor will any bill that is ever passed please everybody. But somehow or other the American people have been fed by the single-purpose organizations the idea that somehow in this Nation of ours, after almost 200 years, we have come full swing and have picked 435 dunderheads in this Congress. We are in this Congress no better and no worse than those who have preceded us in all the Congresses since the Constitution was put into effect. We are representative of the citizens of this country. Some are smart and some are dumb and some have a great deal of education and some have little education, and some are liberal and some are conservative. But we are the representatives of the American people in an American type of Government.

There are those who would try to pattern this Government differently and put it in the hands of those who they think are better qualified by birth or by nature of their standing in society or by the money they have either earned themselves or have inherited.

It is said the incumbent has a great advantage. The greatest disadvantage to any elected public official is his record if he does not have a good one. More people are defeated by their records than those who fail to raise enough money or fail to spend enough money.

I do not want to read the litany but I have seen a candidate who has spent $138,000 against an opponent who spent $735. Does that mean the person who had spent $735 was not qualified to be a Member of this body or does it mean he was overwhelmed by the inherited wealth of the individual?

I could lay before the Members a record of one contest in which more than $470,000 was spent between the two individuals. Time will not allow me to give the Members the details as I see them.

I want to say now this legislation is far from being perfect but it will be less perfect when this House is through with it if the Members continue to do what I hear they will try to do. How could we accept the recommendation by my colleague from Minnesota when he said these are the reasons he wants us to vote for a simple substitute, that takes everything we have had in the past which has been proven by experience already to be bad and just gives the President the sole right, which the Supreme Court said was his, to name the Commissioners?

How does that take care of all the things that have been proven bad? Why does the gentleman recommend that? Here is what he says he recommends and he recommends it because it is recommended by the President of the United States, who is no longer a Member of this body. I can stand here and believe in my heart that the President would be the first to stand up to defeat that simple proposal which is being offered today. Who else does he name as the great authority to tell the 435 Members of this Congress, the freely elected Members, what to do?

Common Cause is named. It is a single-issue organization, determined, as the Fabians in Great Britain were, to destroy the kind of government in existence. It was a government in Great Britain which had brought that country to its highest peak, and it was brought to its lowest depth in less than 35 years. That is what we will have here because the first plank in the platform of the Fabians was public financing of campaigns.

I want to say to the Members that this public financing is a fraud. Why is it a fraud? It is a fraud because it is not public financing and it is not identified as being a contribution to candidates as such, as individuals. What it is is a raid on the Treasury of $70 million or less.

These funds would normally be tax receipts for the proper expenses of the Government.

If the contributions were after tax then they would be properly labeled public funding by taxpayers willing to help their candidate.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. McHUGH).

(Mr. McHUGH asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McHUGH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the principal purpose of this legislation, which is to reconstitute the Federal Election Commission—FEC. If we are serious about the many reforms adopted in recent years to cleanse Federal election campaigns, we must have an independent agency to monitor those reforms. The FEC is that agency and this legislation must insure its continuation.

In my view the Supreme Court was correct in holding that the FEC, as originally established by Congress, was structured in violation of the Constitution. The FEC is an enforcement agency and such agencies are within the executive branch of Government. The fact that its members were appointed by Congress breached the separation of powers mandated by our Constitution.

The original agency was not only flawed legally, however. It was flawed in a very practical sense. It was not a truly independent agency. Its prime purpose was to see that candidates for Federal office abided by the rules in the conduct of their campaigns; to assure, for example, that contributions did not exceed the legal limits. The fact that Congress alone could control that agency rendered it less than independent or, at the very least, appeared to render it less than independent, which is almost as bad.

We now have an opportunity to rectify the initial error. By reconstituting the FEC we cannot only conform that agency to the Supreme Court's ruling, but make it a truly independent body.

Unfortunately, the legislation before use today accomplishes only part of the job. It would bring the FEC within the Supreme Court's legal standard, but it would not assure substantial independence for the agency. For example, the bill provides that either House of Congress can abolish the FEC in 1977. This puts the FEC on a short leash vis-a-vis Congress, and the implication is fairly clear that if this enforcement agency is too rough on the Members of Congress during their 1976 campaigns, the agency will be abolished in 1977. This is not the kind of provision which promotes real independence.

There are other glaring weaknesses in the bill, such as the provision precluding the FEC from investigating alleged abuse of staff employees by an officeholder if the officeholder simply signs an affidavit stating that the employee is performing his regularly assigned duties. This is tantamount to enabling the accused in a criminal case to have his indictment dismissed by signing an affidavit that he is not guilty. It hamstrings the FEC and surely will breed greater skepticism on the part of the public.

In addition to strengthening the FEC and assuring its independence, Mr. Chairman, I believe we should adopt Mr. BURTON's amendment to provide partial public financing for congressional campaigns. This is a reform which has been extended to Presidential campaigns. There is no good reason why we should deprive the public of similar reform in congressional races.

Last year I sponsored a bill with Mr. MAGUIRE of New Jersey which in my view addresses this issue more comprehensively than Mr. BURTON's amendment. Among other things, our bill would provide for partial public financing of primary campaigns which, as we all know, are the only races that count in certain districts. To withhold matching public funds from primary campaigns is to grant only half a loaf. Although the Burton amendment is too limited in this and certain other respects, it nonetheless offers the best hope this year of additional progress.

The reasons for public financing have been oft stated. The people of this Nation have come to understand that the present system is neither fair nor democratic. Unless a candidate is personally wealthy, he must look to private sources to finance the expensive costs of running for office. As statistics and commonsense both indicate, these sources are not representative of the electorate as a whole. In the recent past, 90 percent of campaign donations have come from less than 1 percent of the population. This 1 percent represents people who often have substantial and particular interests in the decisions to be made and the choices formulated by elected officials.

The effect is a distortion of the political process in which those with the wherewithal to help a candidate underwrite his campaign develop an influence among the electorate. Legislation enacted in 1974 went far toward redressing this imbalance in Presidential elections. However, the lack of any provisions covering congressional races was a major shortcoming. To be comprehensive, reforms directed toward limiting the outsized impact of private contributions in our political system must also cover races for Congress.

The Burton amendment is not perfect. But it would be a significant reform. It would encourage candidates for Congress to rely upon small contributions; it would impose limits on the money candidates who accept public funds could spend in their campaigns; and it would provide for the matching public funds out of the dollar check-off account, which is an account voluntarily contributed to by the taxpayers. In short, the amendment would go far to return congressional campaigns, and the financing of them in particular, to average Americans. It would establish a system of funding which would serve the public interest rather than the special interests.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. VANDER JAGT).

(Mr. VANDER JAGT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. VANDER JAGT. Mr. Chairman, I rise to commend and to criticize the House Administration Committee for the bill which it has presented to us. I commend the distinguished chairman of that committee for some improvements in this legislation over the prior law. Of course, that bill that we passed in 1974 left a lot of room for improvement, so that really was not very difficult to achieve.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VANDER JAGT. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. That was not my bill. That was a product of the House, if the gentleman will remember.

Mr. VANDER JAGT. If the gentleman will note, I did not tar with the brush of claiming that was the gentleman's bill; but I do sincerely commend the chairman for the courage and the conviction with which the gentleman has tried in some respects to bring reasonableness and commonsense and due process to the rules by which we conduct ourselves in congressional campaigns.

Unfortunately, I believe that the committee succumbed to the temptation of overkill. I believe that the temptation when they had so many votes was just irresistible to try to jimmy the legislation, so that it really was blatantly favorable to the interests of the other side and in some respects makes a mockery of clean independent campaign enforcement.

The right of either House to veto a regulation coming from the FEC, I believe, strips the FEC of independent regulatory authority. We are the ones who are being regulated and yet we are the ones who can override any regulation of that Commission. It is like giving the utilities the right to veto any rule promulgated by the Federal Power Commission. It is like putting the rabbits in charge of guarding the cabbage patch.

I think that Common Cause and all the others who worked so hard for campaign reform should be leading the charge against this bill, which strips the FEC of independent regulatory authority.

I also believe that this bill, taken together with other legislation that is already on the books, in the way in which this dovetails in with that legislation, blatantly favors one special interest group. If this bill passes, with one glaring exception, the impact that any interest group can have on the outcome of any congressional election is limited to $5,000. That one glaring exception is one very special interest group, big labor, upon which there is no limit whatsoever. If this bill passes, with one glaring exception, every single special interest group will have to report in minute detail exactly what it spent on a congressional election. That one glaring exception is a very special interest group, big labor. They will not have to report one cent of what they spent to influence the outcome of a congressional election under section 301.

If this bill passes, we will have limited by law all interest groups, including our own congressional committees, including our two great national political parties, to pigmy size, while giant labor is free to lope across the political landscape—unregulated, unchecked, and unreported.

In a way, I have to hand it to the majority leadership for focusing the attention of the press on the dispute of how many people can be solicited in a plant. The outcome of that dispute will not make more difference than a glass of water to the level of a flood. As long as we are arguing about how many peas we can solicit with the pea shooter that we are confined to by law and labor continues to be able to fire its cannons without any regulations or any reporting whatsoever, we are accomplishing nothing. This is not conjecture. It is not theory of what might happen. It already took place in New Hampshire in the special election. There were not two campaigns for Senator in New Hampshire. There were three. There was Wyman for Senate, DURKIN for Senate, and labor for DURKIN for Senate. In fact, labor probably spent more for DURKIN for Senate than the Durkin committee spent to send DURKIN to the U.S. Senate and not a penny of that had to be reported. Not all the doorbell ringing nor the telephone banks nor the hundreds of thousands of dollars spent to send out campaign literature were in any way limited or regulated let alone reported.

It is like sending a prizefighter into the ring and he has to fight two men. Only in this instance we say that in addition to the boxing match pitting one man against two, he has to fight with one arm behind his back if this law passes. By focusing the attention of the Members of this body and the press and public on petty cash, I think the majority leadership is walking off with bank robbery in very, very sizable amounts. I believe that so long as this bill remains as it is, the President would be derelict in his duty to the American people, to clean elections, to independent enforcement of honest elections and the traditional notion of American fair play if he did not veto this legislation.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BRADEMAS).

(Mr. BRADEMAS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 12406, the Federal Election Campaign Amendments of 1976.

First, however, Mr. Chairman, I want to take this opportunity to commend the chairman of the Committee on House Administration, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS), for the diligence and the fairness with which he conducted the committee's lengthy deliberations on this very important matter.

I should also add, Mr. Chairman, that all of the members of the House Administration Committee expended much time and effort on this bill.

We considered over 60 amendments offered by both majority and minority members of the committee and although I did not, any more than did any other member of the committee, prevail in my views in every detail of the bill, I believe that the bill our committee has brought to the House today is on the whole a very sound measure.

Mr. Chairman, let me take a moment to remind members of the committee of the background of this legislation. In 1971, Congress passed the Federal Election Campaign Act for the purpose of requiring that campaign expenditures and contributions in both Federal primary and general elections be disclosed.

Then, in order to prevent the excessive influence of large sums of money in campaigns for Federal office, Congress in 1974 passed the Federal Election Campaign Act amendments. This legislation provided for limitations on campaign expenditures and on contributions to campaigns as well as calling for extensive reporting and recordkeeping and the establishment of an independent Federal Election Commission to administer and enforce the provisions of the act.

It was, Members will recall, in early 1975, on January 2, that the constitutionality of the Federal Election Campaign Act amendments was challenged in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia.

Just a year later, on January 30, 1976, the Supreme Court of the United States upheld the contribution limitations provided by the act as well as the recordkeeping and disclosure provisions and the public financing of Presidential elections and conventions authorized in the law.

On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, Members will also recall that the Supreme Court held several provisions of the 1974 act unconstitutional, specifically, the ceiling on independent expenditures, the limitation on a candidate's expenditures from his own personal funds, and the ceiling on overall campaign expenditures.

All three of these provisions were held by the Supreme Court to be in violation of the first amendment.

In addition, the Supreme Court ruled that, in view of the manner in which the Federal Election Commission members were appointed, the exercise of the administrative and enforcement powers delegated to the Commission was unconstitutional. The court held that the method of appointment violated article II, section 2, clause 2 of the Constitution.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 12406 complies with the constitutional standards indicated by the Supreme Court, it closes some of the loopholes created by the decision of the Court, extends the reforms enacted in 1974 and clarifies certain ambiguities that appeared when the law was put into effect.

Let me at this time, Mr. Chairman, focus my own remarks on the key provisions of the bill dealing with the reconstitution of the Commission, independent expenditures, limitations on contributions, and the political activities permitted to corporations and labor unions.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 12406 continues the Federal Election Commission and reconstitutes its voting membership to conform with the requirement of the Supreme Court that the Commissioners be duly constituted officers of the United States appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House will continue to serve as nonvoting ex officio members. The bill also stipulates that no more than three members of the Commission can be of the same political party and that no member of the Commission may engage in any other business, vocation, or employment.

Mr. Chairman, it needs hardly to be emphasized that the election process is the keystone of the American democracy. It is, therefore, imperative that the laws governing our elections be administered and enforced with unquestionable fairness and in strict compliance with the intent of Congress.

Based on these principles, H.R. 12406 provides that only upon the affirmative vote of four of its six voting members can the Commission promulgate rules and regulations, initiate investigations, or bring judicial action.

Another problem to which the House Administration Committee addressed itself in this bill was that of unnecessary and frivolous litigation, which can be both burdensome and extremely costly. H.R. 12406 requires that upon receipt of a complaint, and before instituting any judicial action, the Commission attempt for at least 30 days, through conciliation and persuasion, to correct an alleged violation of the act. The bill also provides, however, that when a complaint has been filed less than 45 days but no more than 10 days before the election. the conciliation period shall be only one half the number of days between the date of the complaint and the election.

Mr. Chairman, not only does the bill under consideration grant authority to the Commission to enter into conciliation agreements with alleged violators but also allows the Commission, as part of such agreements, to levy severe monetary fines of up to $5,000 or, if there is evidence that the violation was knowingly and willfully made, of up to $10,000.

Moreover, all conciliation agreements or any determnation by the Commission that no violation has occurred must be made public.

Mr. Chairman, I would also remind the members of the committee that the January 1976 decision of the Supreme Court nullified the $1,000 ceiling on independent expenditures made by any individual or group. Independent expenditures are expenditures which are made on behalf of a candidate without his authorization or against a candidate's opponent without the authorization of the candidate.

The effect, Mr. Chairman, of this ruling by the Supreme Court can be to put political "fat cats" and special interest groups back into business because they are now permitted to spend unlimited amounts on behalf of a specific candidate or against a specific candidate's opponent.

Mr. Chairman, these political "fat cats" have already begun to return to the election arena. The Miami, Fla., Herald reported on March 17, 1976 that Joseph Coors:

> The millionaire beer magnate from Colorado, became the first "fat cat" to pour thousands of dollars into the cause of an active, Presidential candidate. . . . Coors spent more than $18,000 for full page advertisements promoting Ronald Reagan in eight Florida newspapers on that day before the primary last Tuesday.

Mr. Chairman, in order to assure that any independent expenditure is in fact independent, H.R. 12406, in complete accord with the guidelines of the Supreme Court, specifies that in order to qualify as an "independent expenditure," the expenditure must be made without the cooperation or the suggestion of any candidate. Otherwise, the contribution limits elsewhere in the bill of $1,000 by an individual or $5,000 by a group will apply.

Moreover, Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration requires that any individual or any committee making independent expenditures in behalf of a candidate or against a candidate must report all such expenditures to the Federal Election Commission on the same basis as political commitees are required to report, that is to say, on a regular and cumulative basis.

Still more important, independent expenditures—like the expenditures of Joseph Coors in Florida which I have cited—of $1,000 or more made during the 15 days prior to an election must be reported within 24 hours.

Finally, the bill requires that billboards, television advertisements and other similar public advertisements—financed by independent expenditures—must include a conspicuous statement identifying the person making the expenditure and whether or not it is authorized by any candidate.

Mr. Chairman, it was only after extensive and thorough debate in the Committee on House Administration that these disclosure requirements for independent expenditures were adopted, and I believe that if we are to prevent the corrupting influence of large sums of money in elections to Federal office, the requirements are essential.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I wish to discuss briefly one of the most important sections of the bill, the one covering political activities permitted to corporations and labor organizations.

Members will recall that the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 set forth rules for political activity by corporations and labor unions.

Prior to enactment of the 1971 act the Corrupt Practices Act had for 50 years prohibited corporations and labor unions from making direct expenditures in connection with a Federal election campaign.

The 1971 act, however, included an amendment sponsored by our distinguished former colleague in the House, the gentleman from Idaho, Mr. Orval Hansen.

Mr. Hansen's remarks during floor consideration of his amendment summed up accurately what he had in mind:

> There is, of course, no need to belabor the point that Government policies profoundly effect both business and labor . . . if an organization, whether it be the NAM, the AMA or the AFL–CIO, believes that certain candidates pose a threat to its well-being or the well-being of its members or stockholders, it should be able to get its views to those members or stockholders (93 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD 43380)."

In other words, Mr. Chairman, the entire thrust of the Hansen amendment in the 1971 act was to allow corporations to play a catalytic role in involving their stockholders in political activities deemed important by the management of the corporation and to allow labor unions the same latitude of action with respect to their members. The underlying principle was clearly that just as labor unions and their members might have a legitimate interest in the outcome of an election, so might a corporation and its stockholders.

Let me, Mr. Chairman, again quote Mr. Hansen in the 1971 debate:

The amendment... (was) designed to recognize the fact that a stockholder or a union member exists in two capacities: in his individual capacity with his own individual views and his capacity as a member of an organization that has interests as an organization (93 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD 43382).

It is of very great importance, Mr. Chairman, to note that throughout consideration in the House of the Hansen amendment, Mr. Hansen's remarks and those of other Members of the House who took part in the debate without exception linked the valid political interests of corporations to those of their stockholders, and the valid political interests of labor unions to those of their members.

At no point was it then suggested that the valid political interests involved were such that, for example, a corporation should be allowed to solicit contributions from any individuals other than its stockholders nor was it suggested at any point that a labor union should be allowed to solicit any individuals other than its members.

The purpose of the Hansen amendment was to allow labor unions and corporations to join with their members and stockholders, respectively, in the expression of commonly held views.

There was no intention to enact into law the notion that either corporations or labor unions should be given free rein to solicit contributions from every individual conceivably within their reach. That, Mr. Chairman, would have made a mockery of the law and invited the worst kind of abuse. Such an interpretation would have meant that the rationale advanced in support of the amendment—the joint expression of views by persons sharing a commonality of interest—was dishonest and misleading.

However, Mr. Chairman, as with too many other acts of Congress, despite a definitely articulated legislative intent, a regulatory agency intervened to reverse the intent of Congress.

In an advisory opinion issued on December 3, 1975, by the Federal Election Commission, the Commission—at the request of the Sun Oil Co.—interpreted the law to permit a corporation not only to solicit political contributions from its stockholders but also from all other employees, including its wage and hourly employees.

Thus, at a single stroke, and in defiance of the intent of Congress, the Federal Election Commission destroyed the balance which Congress had created between the sometimes competing interests of business and labor.

While paying lip service to the legislative history of the relevant section of the law, the Commission announced that the statute was vague and determined that—

It would be illogical to conclude that corporations could solicit only their stockholders and not their employees."

The result of the action of the Federal Election Commission was aptly described in a statement, which according to the New York Times of December 14, 1975 was made by one of the Commissioners of the FEC in a speech before an audience of businessmen:

We did a great deal of work on the Sun Oil request—

Said Commissioner Joan D. Aiken. She said:

At this point, it's smooth sailing for political action committee plans.

Mr. Chairman, aside from the propriety—or lack thereof—of the remarks of Commissioner Aiken, it is clear that the "Sun Oil" opinion represents a kind of regulatory agency coup, the substitution of the judgment of a regulatory agency for the intent of Congress expressed in legislation.

Mr. Chairman, now is the time and place to set right what can only be described as an outrageous abuse of power by a regulatory agency.

Indeed, Mr. Chairman, listening to the words of the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. VANDER JAGT, a few moments ago, I hardly recognized the bill he said he was describing and which we are today debating. I cite, only by way of indicating the effect of the "Sun Oil" advisory opinion, the report in the financial section of the New York Times of last Sunday, March 28, 1976, to the following effect:

What began as a slow but steady stream of corporate "political action committees"—formed last year following a landmark ruling by the Federal Election Commission—is turning into a torrent.

American business and professional groups, already sitting on top of a $9 million political war chest, are rushing to form new committees which aim to raise additional millions of dollars for this year's Presidential and Congressional candidates.

Mr. Chairman, now is the time to set right a situation which, if not corrected, can substantially distort the entire balance of the American political system.

It is my understanding that it is President Ford's view that we in Congress should not concern ourselves with this matter, that we should at present simply vote to allow him to appoint all of the Commissioners of the Federal Election Commission, to continue the flow of Presidential matching funds and wait another year to consider the Federal election law, including the Sun Oil question, after, Mr. Chairman, the current Presidential and congressional campaigns are over.

That point of view, Mr. Chairman, is to suggest that we repair the leaky roof of the barn but leave open the door so that the horse can escape. And President Ford intends to ride that horse, with moneybags on both sides of the saddle, and everyone knows it.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot accede to the proposition that it is right to leave a gaping hole in the Federal election laws, even if for 1 year, even if for one election.

This Congress has a responsibility to insure the integrity of the election laws. We cannot avoid that responsibility simply by exhorting the next Congress to do what we should do now.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire as to what the status of the time is?

The CHAIRMAN. The majority has 23½ minutes remaining, and the minority has 46 minutes remaining.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. VANDER JAGT).

(Mr. VANDER JAGT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. VANDER JAGT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me because the gentleman who immediately preceded me in the well referred to me and referred to a statement that I had made.

My statement was that this bill before us, taken together with other legislation already on the books, creates a giant loophole for a very special interest group, which is labor. I went on to say that the political action committees of management and labor are relatively inconsequential as to their impact on the outcome of a campaign compared to the so-called communication or education loophole enjoyed by labor.

I then cited the situation in New Hampshire where literally hundreds of thousands of pieces of literature went into that campaign proclaiming "Send a Fighter to the U.S. Senate. Send John Durkin to the Senate If You Want Jobs. Send John Durkin If You Want to Stop Inflation."

Under the law that is not political. That is not campaigning; that is educational. It is, therefore, unregulated, unlimited, and unreported. The literature said:

Vote for John Durkin for the U.S. Senate on September 16.

That under the law is not political, it is educational, and it is that loophole to which I was referring.

Since the gentleman from Indiana quoted from the New York Times, I will cite another issue of the New York Times. This appeared as the lead paragraph of the story on the front page on Saturday. This is not GUY VANDER JAGT speaking; this is the reporter analyzing this issue, and he has stated it well:

Organized labor is fighting a stubborn and sometimes camouflaged battle to retain a major political weapon—the right to spend unlimited, unreported amounts of money from the union treasury to support candidates.

Mr. Chairman, I include at this point the entire article, as follows:

LABOR FIGHTING TO RETAIN EDGE IN ELECTION OUTLAYS

(by Warren Weaver, Jr.)

WASHINGTON, March 27.—Organized labor is fighting stubborn and sometimes camouflaged battle to retain major political weapon—the right to spend unlimited, unreported amounts of money from the union treasury to support candidates.

Unions, like corporations, are prohibited from using their dues money to make direct campaign contributions. Generally, they are allowed to set up political committees to collect voluntary contributions from members and then distribute the proceeds among prolabor candidates.

In 1971, however, Congress approved a relatively obscure amendmetn to the campaign law that expanded radically the political potential of unions. It permitted them to spend any amount of their resources to communicate with their members "on any subject."

As a result, labor can devote unmeasured thousands of dollars to set up a telephone bank for a political candidate, carry on mass mailings in his behalf and conduct door-to-door canvasses, as long as the voters reached are all members of the union that is paying the bills.

CORPORATIONS APPEAR WARY

In the current Congressional debate over revising the campaign law, Republicans are trying to compel unions to report this kind of spending, how much and for whom, just as all other political spending is reported under the current disclosure law. Labor is resisting fiercely.

The issue has been partly clouded by the fact that the law of 1971 gave corporations the same right to use corporate funds to communicate with their stockholders. But this did not apply until 1974 to corporations with Government contracts, most of the major ones—and little if any subsequent political activity appears to have resulted.

Corporations, generally, have had little experience with legal participation in campaigns and their illegal participation revealed in the Watergate scandals has tended to discourage them from taking advantage of this new power.

But the unions, old hands at organizing support for candidates they favor, have made profitable use of this communicating power.

In the New Hampshire special senate election last September, the product of a virtual tie the year before, thousands of dollars of union money financed telephone banks and canvassing for John A. Durkin, the Democratic victor, all unreported and all outside the spending ceiling then in effect.

Similarly in a special New York house election this month, the New York State A.F.L.-C.I.O. and New York State United Teachers both sent computerized mailings and illustrated flyers to all their members in the 39th Congressional District.

Although the upstate district had not sent a Democrat to Washington since 1874, the Republican nominee, John T. Calkins, was deefated by Stanley N. Lundine, the Democratic Mayor of Jamestown, by 20,000 votes. The unions boasted they had spent $20,000, made 60,000 phone calls and distributed 50,000 pieces of literature.

PACKWOOD PROPOSES CHANGE

When the bill reconstituting the Federal Election Commission came up on the Senate floor this week, Republicans proposed an amendment that would require unions and corporations to report this "communications" spending to the commission, just as candidates, parties and private individuals all do.

In the ensuing debate, some Democratic liberal stalwarts found themselves arguing disclosure of campaign spending, the keystone of electoral refrom by almost any standard, was an invasion of privacy when certain groups were affected.

Senator Alan Cranston, Democrat of California, called the requiring of such spending reports "a dangerous Federal intrusion into the internal affairs" of unions and corporations. "I see no reason why the costs of such internal communications are any business of the Federal government," he said.

But the amendment, sponsored by Senator Robert W. Packwood, Republican of Oregon, was approved, 59 to 42. Later, some Democrats attempted an intricate parliamentary maneuver to kill the Packwood amendment but retain all other changes made by the Senate. This aroused a mini-filibuster and failed.

AMENDMENT CHANGED

When party leaders reached a compromise agreement on the campaign bill, it included a provision modifying the Packwood amendment so that no union or corporation would have to report an expenditure of less than $1,000 "in a calenadar year with respect to a particular candidate."

But when Senator Cranston proposed this amendment with perhaps a half-dozen senators on the floor, it merely exempted from reporting communications "expenditures less than $1,000," with no reference to candidates or time periods.

As a result, under the Cranston proposal, labor could have made 10 or 20 daily mailings in behalf of the same candidate without reporting any of these as long as each cost less than $1,000. A motion by Senator Packwood to table this amendment as creating a giant loophole failed, 49 to 36.

Then Senator Dale Bumpers, Democrat of Arkansas, proposed that the $1,000 floor on reporting apply "per candidate, per election," restoring the compromise agreement Senator Cranston opposed the amendment, but it passed.

The House version of the campaign bill does not include a requirement for reporting the political spending, and attempt to do so having been defeated in the House Administration Committee. The A.F.L.-C.I.O. is already on record as opposing a scheduled floor amendment similar to the Senate language.

Andrew J. Biemiller, legislative director of the labor federation, said it would oppose any amendment that requires reports of "a variety of communications limited to members and stockholders."

"This amendment," the labor lobbyist said, "is aimed squarely at preventing local unions from exercising their rights under the 1971 act by burdening them with excessive filing requirements relating to minor costs."

[Mr. WIGGINS addressed the Committee. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. MOORE).

(Mr. MOORE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to H.R. 12406 as I am strongly opposed to this bill for reasons expressed in the minority report and one additional one. Section 321(b) provides among other things that a corporate political action committee cannot solicit to be members of that committee any person other than its stockholders, executive officers, or their families. Executive officers are defined as salaried employees with policymaking or supervisory authority. This changes the existing law which allows a corporate political action committee to solicit not only those persons, but any employee of the corporation. The existing law has been approved by the Federal Elections Commission, the Justice Department, and the U.S. Supreme Court in the recent decision of McCarthy and Buckley against Valeo.

I believe this new language to be unconstitutional, unwise, and unfair. It makes an illogical distinction between types of employees of a corporation and treats them discriminatorily. Under the new language, a corporate political action committee could not solicit the large majority of its employees for no apparent rational reason. Whether an employee is paid by the hour, piece, or salary, and whether an employee supervises others or is supervised, he or she is no less an employee and has the same economic interests as all others working for the employer.

What then is the reason the current law is so radically altered in this bill? Since no hearings were held to develop evidence for the need for such, one can only conclude the obvious—"politics." The strongest and most effective coalition of political action committees in the Nation, those of labor unions, oppose any challenge to their current collective political dominance as the most powerful special interest group in American politics today. Certainly members of unions should be encouraged to participate in union political action committees, but this is not a valid reason to deny this right to other American workers.

Although of no legal significance, there is no evidence that labor unions are justified in fearing a loss of the political power of the "working man." The activities of a political action committee are determined by its membership. Employee—"working man"—members of such a committee should have the same interests and rights in any political action committee they choose to join, whether labor or place of employment related. Thus, it cannot be the concern for the political activities of the working man in general that causes labor union opposition, but the fear of increased competition or diminution of power of their own political action committees.

As a matter of fact, many members of unions might well choose to also join the political action committee of the corporation for which they work as well as that of their union. It should be pointed out that approximately 75 percent of America's total labor force does not belong to unions, and if they work for corporations and are not shareholders or executive officers, they cannot be solicited. This practically all but eliminates their right to participate in this type of political activity. This bill also prevents non-union employees of a corporation or employees of a corporation which has no union at all from being solicited if they are not shareholders or executive officers. Therefore, in an unconstitutional, unwise and unfair manner, only labor union political action committees can under this bill solicit employees who are not shareholders or executive officers. This is a severe political limitation.

The whole purpose in political action committees is to allow persons with like philosophical and/or economic interests to band together and to promote those interests through a political action committee. This is participation in our political system and certainly any participation in politics should be encouraged and not hindered. Our democracy needs greater, not less, participation by our citizenry. Political action committees can be justified only on this basis. They currently meet this need by encouraging citizens by the thousands to become more politically active. There should be no "political" hindrances on who can join and participate in such committees.

For these reasons and the ones expressed in other minority views, this bill should be defeated and the Federal Election Commission simply reconstituted.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I have no immediate requests for time by any Member who is presently prepared to use it, so I will reserve the balance of my time momentarily.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. That is all right for this side momentarily, but we would like to have the last speaker, so I will go ahead and yield time to other speakers. I have only one more request for time.

At this time, Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO).

(Mr. ANNUNZIO asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 12406. I want to congratulate and commend the members of the Committee on House Administration, and especially its chairman for the patience he exercised during the entire deliberations on the bill.

As I look around the Chamber this afternoon, I would like to point out that we had more Members present in the entire hearings which went on for 2 weeks, and more people present in that small room on the third floor of the Capitol dome where the Committee on House Administration held its sessions, so that we can put this thing into perspective as to where it belongs.

We are here this afternoon because the U.S. Supreme Court in its wisdom decided that certain sections of this act were not constitutional, and, consequently, we had to take up the ball that the Supreme Court threw at the committee once again.

The reason I am on my feet is because I am totally opposed to the public financing section of the bill, that is, the Burton amendment that will be offered this afternoon when we go into the 5-minute rule. It is unfortunate that more Members are not here on the floor, because I want to give them a little bit of the background of this particular amendment.

When we discussed the legislation originally in 1974, we discussed public financing only from the point of view of the checkoff system. That means that our constituents voluntarily checked off a dollar or $2 on the income tax form, which said, "Mr. Congressman, we want you to spend our money in order to publicly finance Presidential elections."

So, the committee decided that $20 million would be spent for the Democratic candidate and $20 million for the Republican candidate. In addition to that we allocated $2 million to each party for their party conventions. We got more information from the Internal Revenue Service and it was estimated that there would be approximately $60 million checked off for public financing. We added, and at that point we had $44 million spent under the checkoff. There was no money under general revenue. So we decided we could play around with $10 million more for the Presidential primaries. We set up a formula. The formula was very simple. There were $250 contributions or less with a total of $5,000 in each State, in 20 States, so a candidate would have to collect $100,000 in order to qualify for matching funds in the Presidential primaries.

The way it is going it looks as if we are going to spend that $10 million. The point is, we have no way of knowing. We are paying our taxes now in 1976 for 1975. We have no way of knowing how much money is going to be checked off in 1975.

I for one am not going to vote and I urge the few of the Members who are present this afternoon not to vote to raid the Treasury of the United States to finance the Socialist Party, the Communist Party, the Pro-abortion Party, the Anti-abortion Patry, or any other freak and kook who wants to run for office. We cannot use moneys that are paid in taxes to the Treasury of the United States to finance elections. We have not been elected to do that. But, we were authorized to spend the checkoff money. There is a big, big difference.

I was the original sponsor, as the people on the minority side know, of the amendment to self-destruct the Commission. That passed one day by a vote of 10 to 9. But the next day I reintroduced another amendment because I felt that we should give the Commission a chance. For that reason my amendment, which is section 409, simply states that at the close of business on March 31, 1977, if either House of the Congress by appropriate action determines that, such determination shall take effect pursuant to subsection (b), and the appropriate committee of each House of the Congress commencing on January 3, 1977—and in our case it will be the Election Commission—will begin to hold hearings and make a determination as to whether or not this Federal Election Commission should be continued, should not be continued, or whatever the recommendation is, and that recommendation will be brought to the full committee and to the floor of the House.

I want to say that as a member of that committee I will watch, as I have in the past, closely this checkoff system in public dollars, and in the event that there is not sufficient money for public financing, just as hard as I fought vigorously in that committee for public financing of the Presidential elections and Presidential primaries, I am going to fight against it.

So I want to urge under the 5-minute rule that every Member that is present this afternoon, so few of us, would go out and talk to the other Members as they walk into the Chamber and urge them to vote down special financing of congressional elections.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from New Jersey (Mrs. FENWICK).

Mrs. FENWICK. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might engage the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) in a colloquy concerning H.R. 11736. It has been brought to my attention that many feel that this bill, the so-called Frenzel-Mikva bill, includes provisions that would validate the actions of SUNPAC and other organizations. Is that the case?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. FENWICK. Indeed.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, H.R. 11736, which I hope to introduce at the proper time as an amendment in the nature of a substitute, provides for the reconstitution of the Federal Election Commission by Presidential appointment with the advice and consent of the Senate much as it is today, with the exception of that particular form and style of appointment. The terms will be the same kind of staggered terms and the bill deals with no more or no less, it is silent on the matter of SUNPAC or any other substantive matters that are before us in H.R. 12406.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. WALSH).

(Mr. WALSH asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the issue before us today is one which should be of the utmost concern to members of both political parties.

It is an attempt by the Democratic majority to turn what could be a simple, needed election reform bill into a mockery of muddled legislation. In the process, the entire two-party system is in jeopardy.

The bill before us, H.R. 12406, banishes all election reforms accomplished in the past.

Rather than reorganize the Federal Election Campaign Act, this bill seeks to make wholesale revisions of almost all existing election laws. Only two of the 58-page bill before us calls for election reform.

The FEC would be stripped of its independence if this bill is allowed to go through. Election laws will be changed in the middle of an election year. And the fundraising ability of party committees will be choked.

Mr. Chairman, I am concerned about the direction that all election reform is taking.

The action generated by various citizens' groups and even by various political organizations is, in my judgment, an effort to end the two-party system in this country.

Under the present restrictions of the FEC, the local political organization at the city or county level is almost totally precluded from playing any important role in the election of a Member of Congress. In order to subscribe financially to a candidate, local political parties must devise methods and establish committees, other than the existing city or county committee in order to make contributions.

This raises the question whether Congressmen should even run under a party label. If it was to be carried to its ultimate, critics would like to see the words "Democrats" and "Republicans" eliminated.

If this trend continues, we will see the proliferation of political parties similar to that which has occurred in Europe. This would mean an effective end to the two-party system in this country. Despite some problems in the past with that system, it has worked and it does work and it will work if we give it the opportunity.

It is that same system that has made this country so great.

To abandon it now would be a tragic mistake.

Congressmen will now have to go out and beg funds from constituents who agree with their views. They will become dependent on their contributors. Formerly when the contributors gave to the party, Congressmen enjoyed a certain amount of independence because they seldom knew who the individual contributors were since there were thousands.

Mr. Chairman, on March 24, 1976, the Syracuse, N.Y., Post-Standard published an editorial concerning these very problems of election reform. I think that editorial is extremely helpful in understanding the necessity to block passage of H.R. 12406 and I would like to share it with you:

Is the Federal Election Law part of a plot to break up the two-party system in this country?

Intentional or not, that is the effect it may have unless the public becomes aware of the damage it may cause in this year's Congressional elections.

Many members of Congress are already smarting under its restrictions but apparently are reluctant to speak out.

Elections are won or lost in the United States according to the support given individual nominees by party organizations, both with money and in well directed volunteer work during the campaign period and at the polls.

Yet local party committees are now forbidden to assist a Congressional candidate, duly endorsed and nominated, with more than $1,000 toward his campaign fund.

This puts on the incumbent Congressman or on an opponent trying to unseat him the very onerous burden of having to beg funds to pay the huge expenses of campaigning.

A Congressman who accepted nominations several terms back with the assurance that "the party" would finance his campaigns now finds himself being virtually forced to go out, hat in hand, to seek money from persons and organizations he may have "served" by his votes on important legislation.

If he has voted pro-labor much of the time, this is not too difficult for some Congressman. Unions do have legal means of showing their appreciation directly and indirectly.

But corporations are presently sharply restricted on the nominal amount they may contribute to any political cause or to a candidate, and business associations rarely hand funds over even to a favorite candidate.

So the law-maker finds himself driven toward a position of soliciting campaign contributions for possible future support.

Cocktail parties and benefit dinners may help an energetic candidate, but the number of such affairs is limited.

Party organizations as such have always collected campaign contributions to be allocated to nominees, but if there is a legal limit on the amount to be "invested" in a candidate, the party is placed in a futile position.

It is wrong for any candidate for public office at any level to be made to beg for money. The best type of nominees, even though they file lists of contributors in accordance with law, prefer not to be intimately concerned with the donors and the amounts they give. They believe this preserves their personal independence in office.

The doubtful "post-Watergate morality" of the Washington scene seems to be having exactly the opposite effect from the best intentions of reformers.

The Washington Star, in a March 22, 1976, editorial, referred to the Federal Election Commission legislation as a "bad piece of work." The newspaper said it agreed with Senator WILLIAM BROCK of Tennessee that the legislation was a "lousy, stinking, fraudulent bill."

It continues, in part:

The Democrats, particularly House Administration Committee Chairman Wayne Hays, haven't been able to resist loading the legislation with self-serving amendments. One would give organized labor an advantage in raising money for candidates—which means an advantage for Democrats since most of labor's campaign money goes to Democrats. Several amendments would curtail the independence of the Election Commission so that Congress could tell the commission how and where to enforce the election laws and when to lay off.

The editorial notes that—

Members of the House and Senate seized the opportunity to do major surgery on the 1974 Act and to insert amendments having nothing to do with the issue at hand.

The editorial continues:

If Congress persists in this foolishness, President Ford will have no alternative but to veto the bill. If that happens, the Congress will have no one to blame but itself for the chaos that will follow.

I favor election reform. But I feel such reform can only be accomplished through passage of a simple bill, instead of one which rips apart the very progress we have made in election reform.

I trust my fellow colleagues will vehemently rally against this bill.

Its effects could be disasterous to our political systems and to our country.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. THOMPSON).

(Mr. THOMPSON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 12406. There are admittedly some sections of it with which I am not happy, and I do not suppose that anyone who served on this committee and worked as hard as each of us did, is perfectly satisfied; neither am I.

I would, however, like to say that the chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Ohio, not only exhibited great patience and skill, but gave each and every Member a fair opportunity to express himself or herself.

I would like also to pay tribute to the Members on the minority side who spent much time and effort on this measure, although we ultimately disagreed on a number of points.

Mr. Chairman, there has been much talk about the so-called SUNPAC decision. The fact is that on November 30, 1971, Mr. Orval Hansen and I and others explained on the floor the reasons for amending title 18, section 610, United States Code. In explaining that amendment, I said the following:

What the gentleman's amendment will do is simple. It, in effect, incorporates the case law—meaning by that the United States against the United Auto Workers, 352 U.S. 567—into existing statutory law and would allow within a very limited area, already existing in the law, the expenditure of certain Treasury moneys, or corporate moneys, for the sole purpose of reaching either union members, or stockholders in the corporations . . .

That is on page 43385 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of November 30, 1971.

Consequently, as has been explained, the Commission, in Advisory Opinion No. 23, in what I considered to be a complete and absolutely erroneous interpretation of congressional intent, handed down the SUNPAC advisory opinion. This has been terribly distorted. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce, in a document which I shall make a part of the RECORD at the appropriate time, refers to the mention of SUNPAC in Buckley against Valeo, and states that the court said that the SUNPAC decision is now the law, or in other words, that that advisory opinion, A.O. 23, is a part of the decision.

No so. It is a footnote; it is simply dicta, and does not have the force of law.

The gentleman from Louisiana mentioned the proliferation of moneys and said that he would like the record straight with regard to moneys. I refer the gentleman to yesterday's RECORD, which shall be expanded upon. As of March 10, 1976, special interest groups had accumulated $16,400,000 for the 1976 political campaigns—$16,400,000 not the much smaller sum which he mentioned.

The New York Times story previously referred to was not the one to which the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BRADEMAS) and I refer.

We are referring to the New York Times article of Sunday, March 28, entitled, "Business Builds Its Political War Chest." That is in the Sunday New York Times, which I shall also put in the RECORD.

Yesterday 16 million shares of stock were traded on the New York Stock Exchange. Now, the intent of the gentleman from Idaho (Mr. HANSEN) and of myself, in November 1971, clearly to expand the law to give corporations a reasonable opportunity to raise political funds, using corporate moneys for the sole purposes of soliciting their stockholders and managerial employees. By no stretch of the imagination did we intend to allow corporations to solicit hourly wage, union employees for corporate political action committees. Quite to the contrary.

May I suggest that in the RECORD of tomorrow, where it is appropriate to include such materials, I shall put a complete documentation of the history of the Sun Oil decision and the results which have thus far arisen from it. I think that it is only reasonable that we understand the danger inherent in this advisory opinion, as it was handed down erroneously, in my judgment, by the Federal Election Commission.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI).

(Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I approach this subject with a qualified endorsement only because of the fact that in the years past I think we have all suffered some embarrassment with respect to reporting.

Mr. Chairman, in considering this legislation today, the House not only has an opportunity to correct the constitutional flaws in the 1974 election reform amendments, but also has the opportunity to correct other flaws in the legislation.

When the House considered the 1974 amendments to the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, I was somewhat concerned that we were establishing an administrative mechanism that would not only inundate candidates, committees, and civic organizations with burdensome accounting and recordkeeping requirements, but more importantly were developing a system with a myriad of intricacies that may result in citizens innocently violating the law. Operation of the law during the 1974 election has demonstrated that my original concerns were justified.

The cumbersome recordkeeping and accounting procedures required by the existing legislation accomplish the necessary function of organizing, for the purpose of public disclosure, information on political contributions. My experience during the past year leads me to the conclusion that simplification procedures should be developed to keep this burden to a minimum particularly for candidates and committees with a minimal amount of income and expenses in a given quarter. The provisions in this bill that would ease the quarterly reporting requirements in nonelection years will serve to markedly reduce the volume of paperwork.

I am more concerned, however, about the provisions in the existing law that provide harsh penalties for what may be innocent and often unknowing violations of its more technical requirements. In my opinion we have arrived at a very sorry state when a taxpayer becomes a criminal because he did not know that he must disclose certain information on the political materials he produced himself in his own garage; or that a local civic organization can with all good intentions endorse a candidate for Congress in its literature and in doing so find itself in violation of the law.

For this reason I applaud the provisions in the committee bill to decriminalize certain minor violations of existing law and substitute more appropriate civil penalties. More importantly, I applaud the conciliation process developed by the committee. The 30-day conciliation procedure will provide the necessary buffer to permit the Commission to initially enforce the act by informal methods before instituting court proceedings. This will help those who unknowingly violated the law to achieve voluntary compliance.

Another point that deserves commendation is the provision requiring that complaints of election law violations be signed, notorized and that the individual be notified before the FEC can initiate any investigation.

This provision will protect innocent people from being subjected to anonymous and unfounded charges of election law violations. Requiring that a complaint be filed in this manner, subject to the criminal code, will make the reporting of false accusations less likely. In the past, the FEC has wasted considerable amounts of time any money tracking down alleged violations on the strength of an unidentified complainant's accusations which in many cases have proved fallacious. Running for public office is replete with enough hazards of misrepresentation of views and issues without subjecting candidates to attacks that often prove groundless but only after the damage has been done.

Although I earlier noted my opposition to provisions which result in the creation of additional layers of bureaucratic regulation, I support the provision in the committee bill which would require the promulgation of additional regulations. The provision requiring the conversion of advisory opinions into regulations will help to standardize the advisory opinion process. Under present law inequities exist of which I am personally only too familiar.

Very soon after the enactment of the 1974 amendments I asked for an advisory opinion to clarify aspects of the new provisions relating to the acceptance of honorariums. In particular I wished to insure that it would be proper under certain circumstances to donate honorariums to charity. While somewhat dismayed by the rather narrow legal reasoning involved in the opinion, which essentially equated a donation by the sponsoring organization to a charity as an honorarium accepted by me even though such was not a prerequisite for my speech, I accepted it as the proper interpretation of the law.

What troubled me more than the ruling on my request, however, was the fact that on a subsequent request by another individual, the Commission chose to rule differently upon a virtually identical set of facts. Since individual advisory opinions under existing law are only operative with respect to the precise request received, a situation has developed where it is improper for me to suggest to a group that it make a charitable donation but it is acceptable for someone else to do so. Asking for a clarification bound me to a position that was later changed for everyone else. The new procedure in the committee bill will insure that such situations do not arise in the future and that advisory opinions will be handed down in a more uniform manner.

While these positive modifications incline me to support this legislation, I am deeply troubled by the public financing provisions that are being discussed for congressional campaigns.

It is clear that public financing favors incumbents. In any fundraising contest the incumbent has important advantages that virtually assure him of outsoliciting his challengers. A well-entrenched incumbent with a well-established contribution base will find it easier to qualify for matching funds. After reelection any surplus funds he might raise could then be put in the bank to give him a head-start in the next election. Public funding in this respect is just another advantage for the incumbent.

I am also concerned about the costs of public financing. Estimates range from $20 million to $40 million depending upon with whom you speak. My own computations indicate that the actual costs in the next Presidential election year are likely to be in excess of $40 million. I believe we must examine the implications of public financing more closely.

As the record shows, when the Election Reform Act was first considered by the House, I voted in favor of the public financing of Presidential campaigns. At that time I believed that it was necessary to experiment with that concept. I have watched with great interest the development of the program since the establishment of the Federal Election Commission. I am generally dissatisfied with the program thus far.

We are not yet in a position to objectively evaluate the Presidential campaign financing program. The establishment of public financing of congressional elections at this time is unwarranted and ill-advised. Based on what I have seen I am convinced that the public financing of congressional elections is not a good idea.

While I generally support the reforms which the House Administration Committee has reported, if the amendment to provide for the public financing of congressional elections is adopted, I will not be able to support the final passage of this otherwise essential legislation.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, in closing the debate, I want to express my appreciation to all the members of the committee for providing a quorum in the long and arduous hours we spent in marking up the bill. I wish to express my appreciation to the minority for its conduct during the markup. We tried to give the members of the minority every opportunity to offer their amendments and to debate them.

I am especially indebted to the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS), who has a flair for legal technicalities and whose precise explanations of what some of the amendments would do was convincing to many members of the committee, including myself. Although we are in opposite political parties, I have learned to rely on the gentleman's legal advice.

I believe that although there were sharp disagreements between the majority and the minority, in the end we came out with a bill which, although it still contains disagreements, will, under the rule we agreed upon to ask for and which the House overwhelmingly voted for, give the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS) and his associates the opportunity to offer the basic amendments about which there was sharp disagreement.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, if I can only get the chairman of the committee to rely on my political instinct rather than my legal ability, I will trade all that legal advice in exchange for his support.

Mr. Chairman, I intended during my remarks earlier to recognize the contribution of the chairman of our committee. I have told the gentleman from Ohio privately—and I take this occasion to mention it publicly—that at all times he conducted himself as chairman of the full committee with an evenhandedness and with courtesy to all the members, notwithstanding the emotional nature of the subject matter before our committee. The gentleman's conduct as chairman of the committee was in the highest traditions of the House, and I want to commend the gentleman for it.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS). I will say that I appreciate his remarks, and I am only sorry there are not more people in the Press Gallery to take note of them

Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is considered as having been read for amendment. No amendments to the bill shall be in order except the 13 categories of amendments, as specifically provided for under House Resolution 1115, but said amendments shall not be subject to amendment except those specifically provided for under said resolution.

The text of the bill is as follows:

H.R. 12406

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976".

TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION MEMBERSHIP

SEC. 101. (a)(1) The second sentence of section 309 (a)(1) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 473c(a)(1)), as so redesignated by section 105, hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Act", is amended to read as follows: "The Commission is composed of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, ex officio and without the right to vote, and 6 members appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.".

(2) The last sentence of section 309(a)(1) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(1)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows: "No more than 3 members of the Commission appointed under this paragraph may be affiliated with the same political party.".

(b) Section 309(a)(2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(2)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"(2)(A) Members of the Commission shall serve for terms of 6 years, except that of the members first appointed—

"(i) one shall be appointed for a term of 1 year;

"(ii) one shall be appointed for a term of 2 years;

"(iii) one shall be appointed for a term of 3 years;

"(iv) one shall be appointed for a term of 4 years;

"(v) one shall be appointed for a term of 5 years; and

"(vi) one shall be appointed for a term of 6 years;

as designated by the President at the time of appointment, except that of the members first appointed under this subparagraph, no member affiliated with a political party shall be appointed for a term that expires 1 year after another member affiliated with the same political party.

"(B) A member of the Commission may serve on the Commission after the expiration of his term until his successor has taken office as a member of the Commission.

"(C) An individual appointed to fill a vacancy occurring other than by the expiration of a term of office shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member he succeeds.

"(D) Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the Commission shall be filled in the same manner as in the case of the original appointment.".

(c)(1) Section 309(a)(3) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(3)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentences: "Members of the Commission shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. Any individual who is engaging in any other business, vocation, or employment at the time such individual begins to serve as a member of the Commission shall terminate or liquidate such activity no later than 1 year after beginning to serve as such a member.".

(2) Section 309(b) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(b)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) The Commission shall administer, seek to obtain compliance with, and formulate policy with respect to, this Act and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. The Commission shall have exclusive primary jurisdiction with respect to the civil enforcement of such provisions.

"(2) Nothing in this Act shall be construed to limit, restrict, or diminish any investigatory, informational, oversight, supervisory, or disciplinary authority or function of the Congress or any committee of the Congress with respect to elections for Federal office.".

(3) The first sentence of section 309(c) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437(c)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof the following ", except that the affirmative vote of 4 members of the Commission shall be required in order for the Commission to establish guidelines for compliance with the provisions of this Act or with chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or for the Commission to take any action in accordance with paragraph (6), (7), (8), or (10) of section 310(a)".

(d)(1) The President shall appoint members of the Federal Election Commission under section 309(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)), as so redesignated by section 105 and as amended by this section, as soon as practicable after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) The first appointments made by the President under section 309(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)) as so redesignated by section 105 and as amended by this section, shall not be considered to be appointments to fill the unexpired terms of members serving on the Federal Election Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(3) Members serving on the Federal Election Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act may continue to serve as such members until members are appointed and qualified under section 309(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)), as so redesignated by section 105 and as amended by this section, except that until appointed and qualified under this Act, members serving on such Commission on such date of enactment may, beginning on March 1, 1976, exercise only such powers and functions as may be consistent with the determinations of the Supreme Court of the United States in Buckley et al. against Valeo, Secretary of the United States Senate, et al. (numbered 75–436, 75–437) (January 30, 1976).

(e) The provisions of section 309(a)(3) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(3)), as so redesignated by section 105, which prohibit any member of the Federal Election Commission from being an elected or appointed officer or employee of the executive, legislative, or judicial branch of the Federal Government, shall not apply in the case of any individual serving as a member of such Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act.

CHANGES IN DEFINITIONS

(2) Section 301(e)(5) of the Act (2 U.S.C 431(e)(5)) is amended—

(A) in clause (E) thereof, by striking out "or" at the end thereof;

(B) in clause (F) thereof, by inserting "or" immediately after the semicolon at the end thereof; and

(C) by inserting immediately after clause (F) the following new clause:

"(G) a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value to a national committee of a political party or a State committee of a political party which is specifically designated for the purpose of defraying any cost incurred with respect to the construction or purchase of any office facility which is not acquired for the purpose of influencing the election of any candidate in any particular election for Federal office, except that any such gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value, and any such cost, shall be reported in accordance with section 304(b);".

(d)(1) Section 301(f)(4) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431(f)(4)) is amended—

(A) by striking out "or" at the end of clause (F) and at the end of clause (G);

(B) by inserting "or" immediately after the semicolon at the end of clause (H); and

(C) by inserting immediately after clause (H) the following new clause:

"(I) any costs incurred by a candidate in connection with the solicitation of contributions by such candidate, except that this clause shall not apply with respect to costs incurred by a candidate in excess of an amount equal to 20 percent of the expenditure limitation applicable to such candidate under section 320(b), except that all such costs shall be reported in accordance with section 304(b).".

(2) Section 301(f)(4) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431(f)(4)), as amended by paragraph (1), is further amended—

(A) by redesignating clause (F) through clause (I) as clause (G) through clause (J), respectively; and

(B) by inserting immediately after clause (E) the following new clause:

"(F) the payment, by any person other than a candidate or a political committee, of compensation for legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of the national committee of a political party, other than services attributable to activities which directly further the election of any designated candidate to Federal office, or for legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of a candidate or political committee solely for the purpose of ensuring compliance with the provisions of this Act, chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954;".

(e) Section 301 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (m) thereof, by striking out "and" at the end thereof;

(2) in paragraph (n) thereof, by striking out the period at the end thereof; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(o) 'Act' means the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, as amended by the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 and the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976;

"(p) 'independent expenditure' means an expenditure by a person expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate which is made without cooperation or consultation with any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate and which is not made in concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate; and

"(q) 'clearly identified' means (1) the name of the candidate appears; (2) a photograph or drawing of the candidate appears; or (3) the identity of the candidate is apparent by unambiguous reference.".

ORGANIZATION OF POLITICAL COMMITTEES

SEC. 103. Section 302 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 432) is amended by striking out subsection (e) and by redesignating subsection (f) as subsection (e).

REPORTS BY POLITICAL COMMITTEES AND CANDIDATES

SEC. 104. (a) Section 304(a)(1)(C) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(a)(1)(C)) is amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof the following: "except that, in any year in which a candidate is not on the ballot for election to Federal office, such candidate and his authorized committees shall only be required to file such reports not later than the tenth day following the close of any calendar quarter in which the candidate and his authorized committees received contributions or made expenditures totaling in excess of $10,000, and such reports shall be complete as of the close of such calendar quarter (except that any such report required to be filed after December 31 of any calendar year with respect to which a report is required to be filed under subparagraph (B) shall be filed as provided in such subparagraph)".

(b) Section 304(a)(2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(a)(2)) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) Each treasurer of a political committee authorized by a candidate to raise contributions or make expenditures on his behalf, other than the candidate's principal campaign committee, shall file the reports required under this section with the candidate's principal campaign committee.".

(c) Section 304(b) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(b)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (12);

(2) by redesignating paragraph (13) as paragraph (14); and

(3) by inserting immediately after paragraph (12) the following new paragraph:

"(13) in the case of an independent expenditure in excess of $100 by a political committee, other than an authorized committee of a candidate, expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, through a separate schedule (A) any information required by paragraph (5) stated in a manner which indicates whether the independent expenditure involved is in support of, or in opposition to, a candidate; and (B) under penalty of perjury, a certification whether such independent expenditure is made in cooperation, consultation, or concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate.".

(d) Section 304(e) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(e)) is amended to read as follows:

"(e)(1) Every person (other than a political committee or candidate) who makes contributions or independent expenditures expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, other than by contribution to a political committee or candidate, in an aggregate amount in excess of $100 during a calendar year shall file with the Commission, on a form prepared by the Commission, a statement containing the information required of a person who makes a contribution in excess of $100 to a candidate or political committee and the information required of a candidate or political committee receiving such a contribution.

"(2) Statements required by this subsection shall be filed on the dates on which reports by political committees are filed. Such statements shall include (A) the information required by subsection (b)(9), stated in a manner indicating whether the contribution or independent expenditure is in support of, or opposition to, the candidate; and (B) under penalty of perjury, a certification whether such independent expenditure is made in cooperation, consultation, or consent with, or at the request or suggestion of, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate. Any independent expenditure, including those described in subsection (b)(13), of $1,000 or more made after the fifteenth day, but more than 24 hours, before any election shall be reported within 24 hours of such independent expenditure.

"(3) The Commission shall be responsible for expeditiously preparing indices which set forth, on a candidate-by-candidate basis, all expenditures separately, including those reported under subsection (b)(13), made with respect to each candidate, as reported under this subsection, and for periodically issuing such indices on a timely preelection basis.".

REPORTS BY CERTAIN PERSONS

SEC. 105. Title III of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431 et seq.) is amended by striking out section 308 thereof (2 U.S.C. 437a) and by redesignating section 309 through section 321 as section 308 through section 320, respectively.

CAMPAIGN DEPOSITORIES

SEC. 106. The second sentence of section 308(a)(1) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437b(a)(1)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended by striking out "a checking account" and inserting in lieu thereof "one or more checking accounts, at the discretion of any such committee,".

POWERS OF COMMISSION

SEC. 107. (a) Section 310(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437d(a)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (8) thereof, by inserting "develop such prescribed forms and to" immediately before "make", and by inserting immediately after "Act" the following: "and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954";

(2) in paragraph (9) thereof, by striking out "and sections 608" and all that follows through "States Code" and inserting in lieu thereof "and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954"; and

(3) by striking out paragraph (10) and redesignating paragraph (11) as paragraph (10).

(b)(1) Section 310(a)(6) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437d(a)(6)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"(6) to initiate (through civil actions for injunctive, declaratory or other appropriate relief) defend (in the case of any civil action brought under section 313(a)(9)) or appeal any civil action in the name of the Commission for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this Act and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, through its general counsel;".

(2) Section 310 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437d), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) Except as provided in section 313(a)(9), the power of the Commission to initiate civil actions under subsection (a)(6) shall be the exclusive civil remedy for the enforcement of the provisions of this Act.".

ADVISORY OPINIONS

SEC. 108. (a) Section 312(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437f(a)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 312. (a) Upon written request to the Commission by any individual holding Federal office, any candidate for Federal office, any political committee, or the national committee of any political party, the Commission shall render an advisory opinion, in writing, within a reasonable time with respect to whether any specific transaction or activity by such individual, candidate, or political committee would constitute a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. No advisory opinion shall be issued by the Commission or any of its employees except in accordance with the provisions of this section.".

(b) Section 312(b) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437(b)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any person who relies upon any provision or finding of an advisory opinion in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (2)(A) and who acts in good faith in accordance with the provisions and findings of such advisory opinion shall not, as a result of any such act, be subject to any sanction provided by this Act or by chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

"(2)(A) Any advisory opinion rendered by the Commision under subsection (a) may be relied upon by (i) any person involved in the specific transaction or activity with respect to which such advisory opinion is rendered; and (ii) any person involved in any specific transaction or activity which is similar to the transaction or activity with respect to which such advisory opinion is rendered.

"(B) (i) The Commission shall, no later than 30 days after rendering an advisory opinion with respect to a request received under subsection (a), transmit to the Congress proposed rules or regulations relating to the transaction or activity involved if such transaction or activity is not subject to any existing rule or regulation prescribed by the Commission. In any such case in which the Commission receives more than one request for an advisory opinion involving the same or similar transactions or activities, the Commission may not render more than one advisory opinion relating to the transactions or activities involved.

"(ii) Any rule or regulation prescribed by the Commission under this subparagraph shall be subject to the provisions of section 315(c).".

(c) Section 315(c)(1) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438(c)(1)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting "or under section 312(b)(2)(B)" immediately after "under this section".

(d) The amendments made by this section shall apply to any advisory opinion rendered by the Federal Election Commission after October 15, 1974.

ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 109. Section 313 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437g), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"ENFORCEMENT

"SEC. 313. (a)(1) Any person who believes a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, has occurred may file a complaint with the Commission. Such complaint shall be in writing, shall be signed and sworn to by the person filing such complaint, and shall be notarized. Any person filing such a complaint shall be subject to the provisions of section 1001 of title 18, United States Code. The Commission may not conduct any investigation under this section, or take any other action under this section, solely on the basis of a complaint of a person whose identity is not disclosed to the Commission. Notwithstanding any other provisions of this Act, the Commission shall not have the authority to inquire into or investigate the utilization or activities of any staff employee of any person holding Federal office without first consulting with such person holding Federal office. An affidavit given by the person holding Federal office that such staff employee is performing his regularly assigned duties shall be a complete bar to any further inquiry or investigation of the matter involved.

"(2) The Commission, if it has resonable cause to believe that any person has committed a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, shall notify the person involved of such apparent violation and shall make an investigation of such violation in accordance with the provisions of this section.

"(3)(A) Any investigation under paragraph (2) shall be conducted expeditiously and shall include an investigation, conducted in accordance with the provisions of this section, of reports and statements filed by any complainant under this title, if such complainant is a candidate.

"(B) Any notification or investigation made under paragraph (2) shall not be made public by the Commission or by any other person without the written consent of the person receiving such notification or the person with respect to whom such investigation is made.

"(4) The Commission shall, at the request of any person who receives notice of an apparent violation under paragraph (2), afford such person a reasonable opportunity to demonstrate that no action shall be taken against such person by the Commission under this Act.

"(5)(A) If the Commission determines that there is reasonable cause to believe that any person has committed or is about to commit a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the Commission shall make every endeavor for a period of not less than 30 days to correct or prevent such violation by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion, and to enter into a conciliation agreement with the person involved, except that, if the Commission has reasonable cause to believe that—

"(i) any person has failed to file a report required to be filed under section 304(a)(1)(C) for the calendar quarter occurring immediately before the date of a general election;

"(ii) any person has failed to file a report required to be filed no later than 10 days before an election; or

"(iii) on the basis of a complaint filed less than 45 days but more than 10 days before an election, any person has committed a knowing and willful violation of this Act of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954;

the Commission shall make every effort, for a period of not less than one-half the number of days between the date upon which the Commission determines there is reasonable cause to believe such a violation has occurred and the date of the election involved, to correct or prevent such violation by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion, and to enter into a conciliation agreement with the person involved. A conciliation agreement, unless violated, shall constitute a complete bar to any further action by the Commission, including the bringing of a civil proceeding under subparagraph (B).

"(B) If the Commission is unable to correct or prevent any such violation by such informal methods, the Commission may, if the Commission determines there is probable cause to believe that a violation has occurred or is about to occur, institute a civil action for relief, including a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or any other appropriate order, including a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of $5,000 or an amount equal to the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, in the district court of the United States for the district in which the person against whom such action is brought is found, resides, or transacts business.

"(C) In any civil action instituted by the Commission under subparagraph (B), the court shall grant a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order, including a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater or $5,000 or an amount equal to the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, upon a proper showing that the person involved has engaged or is about to engage in a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

"(D) If the Commission determines that there is probable cause to believe that a knowing and willful violation subject to and as defined in section 328 has occurred or is about to occur, it may refer such apparent violation to the Attorney General of the United States without regard to any limitation set forth in subparagraph (A).

"(6)(A) If the Commission believes that there is clear and convincing proof that a knowing and willful violation of this Act or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, has been committed, any conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission under paragraph (5)(A) may include a requirement that the person involved in such conciliation agreement shall pay a civil penalty which shall not exceed the greater of (i) $10,000; or (ii) an amount equal to 200 percent of the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation.

"(B) If the Commission believes that a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has been committed, a conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission under paragraph (5)(A) may include a requirement that the person involved in such conciliation agreement shall pay a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of (i) $5,000; or (ii) an amount equal to the amount of the contribution or expenditure involved in such violation.

"(C) The Commission shall make available to the public (i) the results of any conciliation attempt, including any conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission; and (ii) any determination by the Commission that no violation of the Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, has occurred.

"(7) In any civil action for relief instituted by the Commission under paragraph (5), if the court determines that the Commission has established through clear and convincing proof that the person involved in such civil action has committed a knowing and willful violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the court may impose a civil penalty of not more than the greater of (A) $10,000; or (B) an amount equal to 200 percent of the contribution or expenditure involved in such violation. In any case in which such person has entered into a conciliation agreement with the Commission under paragraph (5)(A), the Commission may institute a civil action for relief under paragraph (5) if it believes that such person has violated any provision of such conciliation agreement. In order for the Commission to obtain relief in any such civil action, it shall be sufficient for the Commission to establish that such person has violated, in whole or in part, any requirement of such conciliation agreement.

"(8) In any action brought under paragraph (5) or paragraph (7), subpenas for witnesses who are required to attend a United States district court may run into any other district.

"(9)(A) Any party aggrieved by an order of the Commission dismissing a complaint filed by such party under paragraph (1), or by a failure on the part of the Commission to act on such complaint in accordance with the provisions of this section withn 90 days after the filing of such complaint, may file a petition with the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.

"(B) The filing of any petition under subparagraph (A) shall be made—

"(i) in the case of the dismissal of a complaint by the Commission, no later than 60 days after such dismissal; or

"(ii) in the case of a failure on the part of the Commission to act on such complaint, no later than 60 days after the 90-day period specified in subparagraph (A).

"(C) In any proceeding under this paragraph the court may declare that the dismissal of the complaint or the action, or the failure to act, is contrary to law and may direct the Commission to proceed in conformity with such declaration within 30 days, failing which the complainant may bring in his own name a civil action to remedy the violation involved in the original complaint.

"(10) The judgment of the district court may be appealed to the court of appeals and the judgment of the court of appeals affirming or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the district court shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

"(11) Any action brought under this subsection shall be advanced on the docket of the court in which filed, and put ahead of all other actions (other than other actions brought under this subsection or under section 314).

"(12) If the Commission determines after an investigation that any person has violated an order of the court entered in a proceeding brought under paragraph (5) it may petition the court for an order to adjudicate such person in civil contempt, except that if it believes the violation to be knowing and willful it may petition the court for an order to adjudicate such person in criminal contempt.

"(b) In any case in which the Commission refers an apparent violation to the Attorney General, the Attorney General shall respond by report to the Commission with respect to any action taken by the Attorney General regarding such apparent violation. Each report shall be transmitted no later than 60 days after the date the Commission refers any apparent violation, and at the close of every 30-day period thereafter until there is final disposition of such apparent violation. The Commission may from time to time prepare and publish reports on the status of such referrals.

"(c) Any member of the Commission, any employee of the Commission, or any other person who violates the provisions of subsection (a)(3)(B) shall be fined not more than $2,000. Any such member, employee, or other person who knowingly and willfully violates the provisions of subsection (a)(3)(B) shall be fined not more than $5,000.".

DUTIES OF COMMISSION

SEC. 110. (a)(1) Section 315(a)(6) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438(a)(6)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", and to compile and maintain a separate cumulative index of reports and statements filed with it by political committees supporting more than one candidate, which shall include a listing of the date of the registration of any such political committee and the date upon which any such political committee qualifies to make expenditures under section 320(a)(2), and which shall be revised on the same basis and at the same time as the other cumulative indices required under this paragraph".

(2) Section 315(a)(8) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438(a)(8)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", and to give priority to auditing and field investigating the verification for, and the receipt and use of, any payments received by a candidate under chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954".

(b) Section 315(c)(2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438(c)(2)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended—

(1) by inserting ", in whole or in part," immediately after "disapprove"; and

(2) by inserting immediately after the second sentence thereof the following new sentences: "Whenever a committee of the House of Representatives reports any resolution relating to any such rule or regulation, it is at any time thereafter in order (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. The motion is highly privileged and is not debatable. An amendment to the motion is not in order, and it is not in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to.".

(c) Section 315 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) In any proceeding, including any civil or criminal enforcement proceeding against any person charged with violating any provision of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, no rule, regulation, guideline, advisory opinion, opinion of counsel or any other pronouncement by the Commission or by any member, officer, or employee thereof (other than any rule or regulation of the Commission which takes effect under subsection (c)) shall be used against any person, either as having the force of law, as creating any presumption of violation or of criminal intent, or as admissible in evidence against such person, or in any other manner whatsoever.".

ADDITIONAL ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITY

SEC. 111. Section 407(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 456(a)) is amended by inserting immediately after "such title III," the following: "the Commission shall (1) make every endeavor for a period of not less than 30 days to correct such failure by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion; or (2) in the case of any such failure which occurs less than 45 days before the date of the election involved, make every endeavor for a period of not less than one-half the number of days between the date of such failure and the date of the election involved to correct such failure by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion, except that no action may be taken by the Commission with respect to any complaint filed with the Commission during the 5-day period immediately before an election until after the date of such election. If the Commission fails to correct such failure through such informal methods, then".

CONTRIBUTION AND EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS; PENALTIES

SEC. 112. (a) Title III of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431 et seq.), as amended by section 105, is further amended by striking out section 316, as so redesignated by section 105, by striking out section 320, as so redesignated by section 105, and by inserting immediately after section 319 the following new sections:

"LIMITATIONS ON CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

"SEC. 320. (a)(1) Except as otherwise provided by paragraphs (2) and (3), no person shall make contributions to any candidate with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $1,000 or to any political committee in any calendar year which exceed, in the aggregate, $1,000.

"(2) No political committee (other than a principal campaign committee) shall make contributions to (A) any candidate with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000; or (B) to any political committee in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000. Contributions by the national committee of a political party serving as the principal campaign committee of a candidate for the office of President of the United States shall not exceed the limitation imposed by this preceding sentence with respect to any other candidate for Federal office. For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'political committee' means an organization registered as a political committee under section 303 for a period of not less than 6 months which has received contributions from more than 50 persons and, except for any State political party organization, has made contributions to 5 or more candidates for Federal office. For purposes of the limitations provided by paragraph (1) and this paragraph, all contributions made by political committees established or financed or maintained or controlled by any corporation, labor organization, or any other person, including any parent, subsidiary, branch, division, department, or local unit of such corporation, labor organization, or any other person, or by any group of such persons, shall be considered to have been made by a single political committee, except that (A) nothing in this sentence shall limit transfers between political committees of funds raised through joint fundraising efforts; and (B) for purposes of the limitations provided by paragraph (1) and this paragraph, all contributions made by a single political committee established or financed or maintained or controlled by a national committee of a political party and by a single political committee established or financed or maintained or controlled by the State committee of a political party shall not be considered to have been made by a single political committee. In any case in which a corporation and any of its subsidiaries, branches, divisions, departments, or local units, or a labor organization and any of its subsidiaries, branches, divisions, departments, or local units establish or finance or maintain or control more than one separate segregated fund, all such separate segregated funds shall be treated as a single separate segregated fund for purposes of the limitations prescribed by paragraph (1) and this paragraph.

"(3) No individual shall make contributions aggregating more than $25,000 in any calendar year. For purposes of this paragraph, any contribution made to a candidate in a year other than the calendar year in which the election is held with respect to which such contribution was made is considered to be made during the calendar year in which such election is held.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) contributions to a named candidate made to any political committee authorized by such candidate to accept contributions on his behalf shall be considered to be contributions made to such candidate;

"(B)(i) expenditures made by any person in cooperation, consultation, or concert, with, or at the request or suggestion of, a candidate, his authorized political committees, or their agents shall be considered to be a contribution to such candidate;

"(ii) the financing by any person of the dissemination, distribution, or republication, in whole or in part, of any broadcast or any written, graphic, or other form of campaign materials prepared by the candidate, his campaign committees, or their authorized agents shall be considered to be an expenditure for purposes of this paragraph; and

"(C) contributions made to or for the benefit of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be contributions made to or for the benefit of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States.

"(5) The limitations imposed by paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection shall apply separately with respect to each election, except that all elections held in any calendar year for the office of President of the United States (except a general election for such office) shall be considered to be one election.

"(6) For purposes of the limitations imposed by this section, all contributions made by a person, either directly or indirectly, on behalf of a particular candidate, including contributions which are in any way earmarked or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to such candidate, shall be treated as contributions from such person to such candidate. The intermediary or conduit shall report the original source and the intended recipient of such contribution to the Commission and to the intended recipient.

"(b)(1) No candidate for the office of President of the United States who has established his eligibility under section 9003 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to condition for eligibility for payments) or under section 9033 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to eligibility for payments) to receive from the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate may make expenditures in excess of—

"(A) $10,000,000, in the case of a campaign for nomination for election to such office, except the aggregate of expenditures under this subparagraph in any one State shall not exceed twice the greater of 8 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State (as certified under subsection (e)), or $100,000; or

"(B) $20,000,000 in the case of a campaign for election to such office.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be expenditures made by or on behalf of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States; and

"(B) an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a candidate for the office of Vice President, if it is made by—

"(i) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for the purposes of making any expenditure; or

"(ii) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, or an agent of the candidate, to make the expenditure.

"(c)(1) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1976), as there become available necessary data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register the per centum difference between the price index for the twelve months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each limitation established by subsection (b) and subsection (d) shall be increased by such per centum difference. Each amount so increased shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) the term 'price index' means the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics; and

"(B) the term 'base period' means the calendar year 1974.

"(d)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law with respect to limitations on expenditures or limitations on contributions, the national committee of a political party and a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may make expenditures in connection with the general election campaign of candidates for Federal office, subject to the limitations contained in paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection.

"(2) The national committee of a political party may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of any candidate for President of the United States who is affiliated with such party which exceeds an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States (as certified under subsection (e)). Any expenditure under this paragraph shall be in addition to any expenditure by a national committee of a political party serving as the principal campaign committee of a candidate for the office of the President of the United States.

"(3) The national committee of a political party, or a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate for Federal office in a State who is affiliated with such party which exceeds—

"(A) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Senator, or of Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, the greater of—

"(i) 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State (as certified under subsection (e)); or

"(ii) $20,000; and

"(B) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner in any other State, $10,000.

"(e) During the first week of January 1975, and every subsequent year, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, of each State, and of each congressional district as of the first day of July next preceding the date of certification. The term 'voting age population' means resident population, 18 years of age or older.

"(f) No candidate or political committee shall knowingly accept any contribution or make any expenditure in violation of the provisions of this section. No officer or employee of a political committee shall knowingly accept a contribution made for the benefit or use of a candidate, or knowingly make any expenditure on behalf of a candidate, in violation of any limitation imposed on contributions and expenditures under this section.

"(g) The Commission shall prescribe rules under which any expenditure by a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President for use in 2 or more States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

"CONTRIBUTIONS OR EXPENDITURES BY NATIONAL BANKS, CORPORATIONS, OR LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

"SEC. 321. (a) It is unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress, to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election to any political office, or in connection with any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any political office, or for any corporation whatever, or any labor organization to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election at which Presidential and Vice Presidential electors or a Senator or Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress are to be voted for, or in connection with any primary election or political convention, or caucus held to select candidates for any of the foregoing offices, or for any candidate, political committee, or other person knowingly to accept or receive any contribution prohibited by this section, or any officer or any director of any corporation or any national bank, or any officer of any labor organization, to consent to any contribution or expenditure by such corporation, national bank, or labor organization, as the case may be, which is prohibited by this section.

"(b)(1) For purposes of this section the term 'labor organization' means any organization of any kind, or any agency or employee representation committee or plan, in which employees participate and which exists for the purpose, in whole or in part, of dealing with employers concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or contributions of work.

"(2) For purposes of this section, the term 'contribution or expenditure' shall include any direct or indirect payment, distribution loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money, or any services, or anything of value (except a loan of money by a national or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations and in the ordinary course of business) to any candidate, campaign committee, or political party or organization, in connection with any election to any of the officers referred to in this section, but shall not include (A) communications by a corporation to its stockholders and executive officers and their families or by a labor organization to its members and their families on any subject; (B) nonpartisan registration and get-out-the-vote campaigns by a corporation aimed at its stockholders and executive officers and their families; or by a labor organization aimed at its members and their families; and (C) the establishment, administration, and solicitation of contributions to a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes by a corporation or labor organization, except that (i) it shall be unlawful for such a fund to make a contribution or expenditure by utilizing money or anything of value secured by physical force, job discrimination, financial reprisals, or the threat of force, job discrimination, or financial reprisal, or by dues, fees, or other moneys required as a condition of membership in a labor organization or as a condititition of employment, or by moneys obtained in any commercial transaction; (ii) it shall be unlawful for a corporation or a separate segregated fund established by a corporation to solicit contributions from any person other than its stockholders, executive officers, and their families, for an incorporated trade association or a separate segregated fund established by an incorporated trade association to solicit contributions from any person other than the stockholders and executive officers of the member corporations of such trade association and the families of such stockholders and executive officers (to the extent that any such solicitation of such stockholders and executive officers, and their families, has been separately and specifically approved by the member corporation involved, and such member corporation has not approved any such solicitation by more than one such trade association in any calendar year, or for a labor organization or a separate segregated fund established by a labor organization to solicit contributions from any person other than its members and their families; (iii) notwithstanding any other law, any method of soliciting voluntary contributions or of facilitating the making of voluntary contributions to a separate segregated fund established by a corporation, permitted to corporations, shall also be permitted to labor organizations; and (iv) any corporation which utilizes a method of soliciting voluntary contributions or facilitating the making of voluntary contributions, shall make available, on written request, such method to a labor organization representing any members working for such corporation.

"(3) For purposes of this section the term 'executive officer' means an individual employed by a corporation who is paid on a salary rather than hourly basis and who has policymaking or supervisory responsibilities.

"CONTRIBUTIONS BY GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS

"SEC. 322. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person who enters—

"(1) into any contract with the United States or any department or agency thereof either for the rendition of personal services or furnishing any material, supplies, or equipment to the United States or any department or agency thereof or for selling any land or building to the United States or any department or agency thereof, if payment for the performance of such contract or payment for such material, supplies, equipment, land, or building is to be made in whole or in part from funds appropriated by the Congress, at any time between the commencement of negotiations for and the later of (A) the completion of performance under, or (B) the termination of negotiations for, such contract or furnishing of material, supplies, equipment, land, or buildings, directly or indirectly makes any contribution of money or other thing of value, or promises expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution to any political party, committee, or candidate for public office or to any person for any political purpose or use; or

"(2) to solicit any such contribution from any such person for any such purpose during any such period.

"(b) This section does not prohibit or make unlawful the establishment or administration of, or the solocitation of contributions to, any separate segregated fund by any corporation or labor organization for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, unless the provisions of section 321 prohibit or make unlawful the establishment or administration of, or the solicitation of contributions to, such fund.

"(c) For purposes of this section, the term 'labor organization' has the meaning given it by section 321.

"PUBLICATION OR DISTRIBUTION OF POLITICAL STATEMENTS

"SEC. 323. Whenever any person makes an expenditure for the purpose of financing any communication expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate through any broadcasting station, newspaper, magazine, outdoor advertising facility, direct mailing, or other similar type of general public political advertising, such communication—

"(1) if authorized by a candidate, his authorized political committees, or their agents, shall clearly and conspicously, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commission, state that such communication has been so authorized; or

"(2) if not authorized in accordance with paragraph (1), shall clearly and conspicuously, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commission, state that such communication is not authorized by any candidate, and state the name of the person that made or financed the expenditure for the communication, including, in the case of a political committee, the name of any affiliated or connected organization as stated in section 303(b)(2).

"CONTRIBUTIONS BY FOREIGN NATIONALS

"SEC. 324. (a) It shall be unlawful for a foreign national directly or through any other person to make any contribution of money or other thing of value, or to promise expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, in connection with an election to any political office or in connection with any primary election, convention, or caucus held to select candidates for any political office, or for any person to solicit, accept, or receive any such contribution from any such foreign national.

"(b) As used in this section, the term 'foreign national' means—defined by section 1(b) of the Foreign

"(1) a foreign principal, as such term is Agents Registration Act of 1938 (22 U.S.C. 611(b)), except that the term 'foreign national' shall not include any individual who is a citizen of the United States; or

"(2) an individual who is not a citizen of the United States and who is not lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as defined by section 101(a)(20) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(20)).

"PROHIBITION OF CONTRIBUTIONS IN NAME OF ANOTHER

"SEC. 325. No person shall make a contribution in the name of another person or knowingly permit his name to be used to effect such a contribution, and no person shall knowingly accept a contribution made by one person in the name of another person.

"LIMITATION ON CONTRIBUTIONS OF CURRENCY

"SEC. 326. (a) No person shall make contributions of currency of the United States or currency of any foreign country to or for the benefit of any candidate which, in the aggregate, exceeds $250, with respect to any campaign of such candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office.

"(b) Any person who knowingly and willfully violates the provisions of this section shall be fined in an amount which does not exceed the greater of $25,000 or 300 percent of the amount of the contribution involved.

"ACCEPTANCE OF EXCESSIVE HONORARIUMS

"SEC. 327. No person while an elected or appointed officer or employee of any branch of the Federal Government shall accept—

"(1) any honorarium of more than $1,000 (excluding amounts accepted for actual travel and subsistence expenses) for any appearance, speech, or article; or

"(2) honorariums (not prohibited by paragraph (1) of this section) aggregating more than $15,000 in any calendar year.

"PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS

"SEC. 328. Any person who knowingly and willfully commits a violation of any provision or provisions of this Act, other than the provisions of section 326, which involve the making, receiving, or reporting of any contribution or expenditure having a value in the aggregate, of $5,000 or more during a calendar year shall be fined in an amount which does not exceed the greater of $25,000 or 300 percent of the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, imprisoned for not more than one year or both.".

(b) Title III of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431 et seq.), as amended by section 105 and subsection (a), is further amended by inserting immediately after section 315 the following new section:

"FRAUDULENT MISREPRESENTATION OF CAMPAIGN AUTHORITY

"SEC. 316. No person, being a candidate for Federal office or an employee or agent of such a candidate shall—

"(1) fraudulently misrepresent himself or any committee or organization under his control as speaking or writing or otherwise acting for or on behalf of any other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof on a matter which is damaging to such other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof; or

"(2) participate in or conspire to participate in any plan, scheme, or design to violate paragraph (1).".

"SAVING PROVISION RELATING TO REPEALED SECTIONS

"SEC. 329. Except as otherwise provided by this Act, the repeal by the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976 of any provision or penalty or penalties shall not have the effect of releasing or extinguishing any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under such provision or penalty, and such provision or penalty shall be treated as remaining in force for the purpose of sustaining any proper action or prosecution for the enforcement of any penalty, forfeiture, or liability.".

PRINCIPAL CAMPAIGN COMMUNITIES

SEC. 114. Section 302(f) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 432(f)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Any occasional, isolated, or incidental support of a candidate shall not be construed as support of such candidate for purposes of the preceding sentence.".

TERMINATION OF AUTHORITY OF COMMISSION

SEC. 115. Title IV of the Act (2 U.S.C. 451 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"TERMINATION OF AUTHORITY OF COMMISSION

"SEC. 409. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act or any other provision of law, the authority of the Commission to carry out the provisions of this Act, and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, shall terminate at the close of March 31, 1977, if either House of the Congress by appropriate action determines that such termination shall take effect pursuant to subsection (b).

"(b) The appropriate committee of each House of the Congress shall, commencing January 3, 1977, conduct a review of the elections of candidates for Federal office conducted in 1976, the operation of chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 with respect to such elections, and the activities conducted by the Commission, and report to their respective Houses not later than March 1, 1977. Such report shall include a recommendation of whether the authority of the Commission shall be terminated on March 31, 1977, as set forth in subsection (a).

"(c) Nothing in this section shall affect any proceeding in any court of the United States on the date of the enactment of this section. The Attorney General of the United States shall have the authority to act on behalf of the United States in any such proceeding.".

(b) Section 591(e)(4) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting immediately before the semicolon the following: ", except that this subparagraph shall not apply (A) in the case of any legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of the national committee of a political party, other than any legal or accounting services attributable to any activity which directly further the election of any designated candidate to Federal office; or (B) in the case of any legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of a candidate or political committee solely for the purpose of insuring compliance with the provisions of this chapter, the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954".

(c) Section 591(f)(4) of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by redesignating clause (F) through clause (I) as clause (G) through clause (J), respectively; and

(2) by inserting immediately after clause (E) the following new clause:

"(F) the payment, by any person other than a candidate or a political committee, of compensation for legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of the national committee of a political party, other than services attributable to activities which directly further the election of any designated candidate to Federal office, or for legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of a candidate or political committee solely for the purpose of ensuring compliance with the provisions of this chapter, the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954;".

TITLE III—AMENDMENTS TO INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1954

ENTITLEMENT OF ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES TO PAYMENTS

SEC. 301. Section 9004 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to entitlement of eligible candidates to payments) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(d) EXPENDITURES FROM PERSONAL FUNDS.—In order to be eligible to receive any payment under section 9006, the candidate of a major, minor, or new party in an election for the office of President shall certify to the Commission, under penalty of perjury, that such candidate shall not knowingly make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with his campaign for election to the office of President in excess of, in the aggregate, $50,000. For purposes of this subsection, expenditures from personal funds made by a candidate of a major, minor, or new party for the office of Vice President shall be considered to be expenditures by the candidate of such party for the office of President.

"(e) DEFINITION OF IMMEDIATE FAMILY.—For purposes of subsection (d), the term 'immediate family' means a candidate's spouse, and any child, parent, grandparent, brother, or sister of the candidate, and the spouses of such persons.".

PAYMENTS TO ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES; INSUFFICIENT AMOUNTS IN FUND

SEC. 302. (a) Section 9006 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to payments to eligible candidates) is amended by striking out subsection (b) thereof and by redesignating subsection (c) and subsection (d) as subsection (b) and subsection (c), respectively.

(b) Section 9006(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to insufficient amounts in fund), as so redesignated by subsection (a), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "In any case in which the Secretary or his delegate determines that there are insufficient moneys in the fund to make payments under subsection (b), section 9008(b)(3), and section 9037(b), moneys shall not be made available from any other source for the purpose of making such payments.".

PROVISION OF LEGAL OR ACCOUNTING SERVICES

SEC. 303. Section 9008(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to limitation of expenditures) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) PROVISION OF LEGAL OR ACCOUNTING SERVICES.—For purposes of this section, the payment, by any person other than the national committee of a political party, of compensation to any person for any legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of the national committee of a political party shall not be treated as an expenditure made by or on behalf of such national committee with respect to the presidential nominating convention of the political party involved.".

REVIEW OF REGULATIONS

SEC. 304. (a) Section 9009(c)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to review of regulations) is amended—

(1) by inserting ", in whole or in part," immediately after "disapprove"; and

(2) by inserting immediately after the first sentence thereof the following new sentences: "Whenever a committee of the House of Representatives reports any resolution relating to any such rule or regulation, it is at any time thereafter in order (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. The motion is highly privileged and is not debatable. An amendment to the motion is not in order, and it is not in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to.".

(b) Section 9039(c)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to review of regulations) is amended—

(1) by inserting ", in whole or in part," immediately after "disapprove"; and

(2) by inserting immediately after the first sentence thereof the following new sentences: "Whenever a committee of the House of Representatives reports any resolution relating to any such rule or regulation, it is at any time thereafter in order (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. The motion is highly privileged and is not debatable. An amendment to the motion is not in order, and it is not in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to.".

ELIGIBILITY FOR PAYMENTS

SEC. 305. Section 9033(b)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to expense limitation; declaration of intent; minimum contributions) is amended by striking out "limitation" and inserting in lieu thereof "limitations".

QUALIFIED CAMPAIGN EXPENSES LIMITATION

SEC. 306. (a) Section 9035 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to qualified campaign expense limitation) is amended—

(1) in the heading thereof, by striking out "LIMITATION" and inserting in lieu thereof "LIMITATIONS";

(2) by inserting "(a) EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS.—" immediately before "No candidate";

(3) by inserting immediately after "States Code" the following: ", and no candidate shall knowingly make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with his campaign for nomination for election to the office of President in excess of, in the aggregate, $50,000"; and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) DEFINITION OF IMMEDIATE FAMILY.—For purposes of this section, the term 'immediate family' means a candidate's spouse, and any child, parent, grandparent, brother, or sister of the candidate, and the spouses of such persons.".

(b) The table of sections for chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by striking out the item relating to section 9035 and inserting in lieu thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 9035. Qualified campaign expense limitations.".

RETURN OF FEDERAL MATCHING PAYMENTS

SEC. 307. (a)(1) Section 9002(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (defining candidate) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The term 'candidate' shall not include any individual who has ceased actively to seek election of the office of President of the United States or to the office of Vice President of the United States, in more than one State.".

(2) Section 9003 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to condition for eligibility for payments) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) WITHDRAWAL BY CANDIDATE.—In any case in which an individual ceases to be a candidate as a result of the operation of the last sentence of section 9002(2), such individual—

"(1) shall no longer be eligible to receive any payments under section 9006; and

"(2) shall pay to the Secretary, as soon as practicable after the date upon which such individual ceases to be a candidate, an amount equal to the amount of payments received by such individual under section 9006 which are not used to defray qualified campaign expenses.".

(b)(1) Section 9032(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (defining candidate) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The term 'candidate' shall not include any individual who is not actively conducting campaigns in more than one State in connection with seeking nomination for election to be President of the United States.".

(2) Section 9033 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to eligibility for payments) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) WITHDRAWAL BY CANDIDATE.—In any case in which an individual ceases to be a candidate as a result of the operation of the last sentence of section 9032(2), such individual—

"(1) shall no longer be eligible to receive any payments under section 9037; and

"(2) notwithstanding the provisions of section 9038(b)(3), shall pay to the Secretary, as soon as practicable after the date upon which such individual ceases to be a candidate, an amount equal to the amount of payments received by such individual under section 9037 which are not used to defray qualified campaign expenses.".

TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

SEC. 308. (a) Section 9008(b)(5) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to adjustment of entitlements) is amended—

(1) by striking out "section 608(c) and section 608(f) of title 18, United States Code," and inserting in lieu thereof "section 320(b) and section 320(d) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971"; and

(2) by striking out "section 608(d) of such title" an inserting in lieu thereof "section 320(c) of such Act".

(c) Section 9035(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to expenditure limitations), as so redesignated by section 305(a), is amended by striking out "section 608(c)(1)(A) of title 18, United States Code," and inserting in lieu thereof "section 320(b)(1)(A) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971".

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that with the Speaker's approval I made a commitment to a great number of Members, including one total State delegation which has its State dinner scheduled tonight, it was agreed that we would not get into subsequent voting on amendments today.

We have finished general debate, and we will be ready to go into the amendment stage tomorrow as soon as the 1-minute speeches are out of the way. Under the rule, the bill will be ready for amendment at that time, and I will first offer a group of technical amendments upon which I believe there is no controversy.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS).

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. BOLLING, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 12406) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide that members of the Federal Election Commission shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

HOWARD GREENBERG LEAVES SMALL BUSINESS COMMITTEE, SEEKS RETIREMENT AFTER 40 YEARS OF GOVERNMENT SERVICE

(Mr. EVINS of Tennessee asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. EVINS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is with a sense of deep regret that I announce that Mr. Howard Greenberg, contract consultant with the House Small Business Committee, is leaving the committee and Government service at the end of this month after 40 years of outstanding and dedicated public service.

Mr. Greenberg has had a long and distinguished career in Government, having served in the executive branch and the legislative branch—for the past 7 years he served as executive director and consultant to the Small Business Committee.

Mr. Greenberg is generally recognized as one of the most informed and knowledgeable men in the Nation on matters affecting small business. Indeed, he was the first chief financial officer when the Small Business Administration was established in 1953, and Deputy Administrator of the Agency from 1966 to 1969.

Howard Greenberg is effective, efficient, and an able Administrator. He gets the job done—he knows how to make Government work. He is an outstanding example of a Federal career manager who made Government perform more efficiently and effectively wherever he served.

I hold Mr. Greenberg in the highest personal regard and esteem. From the lowest civil service grade in the executive branch he worked his way to a top supergrade position and consultant.

He has received many awards, including an award for distinguished service in the civil service and citations for outstanding service from small business associations and the Congress.

Howard Greenberg has dedicated a great part of his life to serving the Nation's small businessmen—and he has served them well, at SBA and with the House Small Business Committee. He has made substantial contributions to the improvement of the small business segment of our society and to the solution of many problems affecting independent business and the free enterprise system.

Certainly he leaves the committee and Government with my best wishes and my congratulations and commendation for a job well done—and I am sure the members of the Small Business Committee share my best wishes for Howard in his retirement. Good luck, Howard, we wish you the best in any future endeavors.

DUNCAN'S RESOLUTION OF DISAPPROVAL OF PROPOSED DEFERRAL OF BUDGET AUTHORITY FOR FOREST SERVICE

(Mr. DUNCAN of Oregon asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. DUNCAN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced a resolution in disapproval of the proposed deferral of budget authority in the amount of $278,657,000 for the Forest Service under the Impoundment Control Act. This money is authorized under the Federal Aid to Highways Act and is used for the construction of roads and trails in our national forests.

Along with my colleagues from the Pacific Northwest and northern California who cosponsored this resolution, I believe that efforts must be made to build and maintain access into our national forests. Construction of these roads is vital: First, to reach thousands of acres of insect infested areas to control the loss and salvage the bug-killed trees; second, to make available much needed recreation areas; third, to control forest fires, and fourth, to reach our timber supplies and in turn lower costs to the homebuilding industry throughout the country.

Although this deferral is in terms of the entire authorization of $278-million-plus, in effect it is a disapproval of only $20 million out of that amount. This is because the year is so far gone that the Forest Service, speaking by and through its Chief, has testified that they can usefully use only $10 million of this authority in the balance of fiscal 1976 and $10 million in the transition quarter. Although the total of $278 million would be available for commitment, in fact only $20 million can and would be committed.

I commend to the attention of my colleagues the report of the Chief submitted pursuant to the provisions of the Humphrey-Rarick bill, indicating the returns to the country at various levels of management and including the administration's backing of one such alternative. It requires increasing amounts of capital investment, much of which must go into roads. At comparatively small costs, this resolution of disapproval will enable the Nation to take the first small steps to fulfilling the commitment we made to the renewing of our ranges and forests.

I include the following tables:

HOUSE FLOOR DEBATES ON H.R. 12406 MARCH 31, 1976

that the warrior really means to hang up his sword and go down home to his beautiful country place near New Orleans. He, like no man before him, has fought for a stronger America and he has, many times over earned a gracious retirement.

EDDIE HÉBERT's imprint on our defense posture will stand for all time. His most notable accomplishment, the new Uniformed Services University of the Health Sciences will turn out thousands of physicians for our services in the decades ahead, and the myriad of other policies laid down by Chairman HÉBERT will continue as long as Americans demand the best possible defense for our country.

I will miss him as a strong and forthright colleague. Shirley and I will always hold EDDIE and his much-loved wife, Gladys, close to our hearts and happy in our memories.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I join his many friends and colleagues in paying tribute today to the Honorable F. EDWARD HÉBERT, one of Louisiana's most distinguished sons.

Most of us are happy to have had one successful career. EDDIE HÉBERT has had at least two. First, he was a distinguished Louisiana journalist and editor with a reputation as for honesty and accuracy that spread far beyond his native State.

Second, in the role we know him, he has served with distinction the people of his district and this Nation in the House of Representatives for the past 35 years.

As a Congressman, he has attracted notice almost from the outset of his career as a national legislator, both for his ability in the lawmaking process and for his capacity for inquiry into the working of the National Government.

He has stood for many years as a bulwark for strong national defense. In three national conflicts he has helped to provide our Armed Forces with the equipment, the support, and manpower needed to insure success.

We shall miss EDDIE HÉBERT, but we know he has richly deserved the fruits of retirement. Our best wishes go to him, his wife, and family on this occasion.

Mr. HÉBERT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the Members of the House who have been so kind to me this morning, and in particular the members of my own Louisiana delegation. I deeply appreciate all of the kind remarks and I hope I shall always command the respect of the Members.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of the retirement of the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. HÉBERT).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION FOR SUBCOMMITTEE ON CONSUMER PROTECTION AND FINANCE OF COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE TO SIT DURING 5-MINUTE RULE TODAY

Mr. VAN DEERLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the subcommittee on Consumer Protection and Finance of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may be permitted to sit during the 5-minute rule today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON STANDARDS OF OFFICIAL CONDUCT TO SIT DURING THE 5-MINUTE RULE TODAY

Mr. FLYNT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimouse consent that the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct may be permitted to sit this afternoon during the 5-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION FOR SUBCOMMITTEE ON ADMINISTRATIVE LAW AND GOVERNMENTAL RELATIONS OF COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY TO SIT DURING 5-MINUTE RULE TODAY

Mr. FLOWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the subcommittee on Administrative Law and Governmental Relations of the Committee on the Judiciary may sit during the 5-minute rule this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

WHY SILENCE ABOUT LEBANON?

(Mr. LEVITAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEVITAS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today because there has been too much silence on the tragedy that is unfolding on the eastern shore of the Mediterranean and that is the destruction of the ancient Chistian community of Lebanon.

Day after day as we hear the sad news reports and read sickening accounts in the papers and see the bloody photographs of destruction and death. We see the tragedy of a Christian community that has been there for years living in peace, harmony, and prospering, now being reduced to ashes by terrorism and by brute force.

When any group of people, no matter how small in number, is being attacked persecuted and oppressed, no other group is safe for long, no matter how large their number. We are, indeed, our brothers' keepers. Loss of the right to survive as a free person anywhere is a loss for each of us anywhere. We cannot be silent. For evil to prevail, Burke said, it requires only that good men do nothing, or remain silent.

I think the people of the world, particularly the people of the Western World have been silent far too long on this point. I think the time has come for us to speak out, to be heard and to give voice to the great anguish we feel for what is unfolding there.

Why has this Nation done nothing to save the lives and religious security of the hapless Christian community in Lebanon? Why have our leaders been quiet?

The destruction of Lebanon and the jeopardy of its Christian community by terrorists armed by radical Arab States is a blight on the conscience of the world. I cannot be silent about this. Can you?

(Mr. TREEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

[Mr. TREEN addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.]

CONGRESSMAN PEPPER HAS SUCCESSFUL HEART SURGERY

(Mr. FASCELL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, as you know, our distinguished colleague, CLAUDE PEPPER, has successfully undergone an operation for repair of a valve of his heart.

His physician, Dr. Thomas O. Gentsch, of the Miami Heart Institute, has pronounced the operation "a complete success," and I am pleased to report that CLAUDE is upon his feet and expects to be out of the Miami Heart Institute by the end of the week.

The operation, last Wednesday, corrected a deficiency in the valve between the left ventricle and the aorta, the main artery that carries blood from the heart to the rest of the body. A slight malformation in the valve apparently had existed from birth and was first detected in 1952 as a mild heart murmur. Due to the malformation, the flow of the blood gradually built up a deposit on the valve opening which restricted its size.

The operation enlarged the opening and replaced the deficient valve with an artificial heart valve. The operation was a relatively simple "repair job" which is routinely performed by heart surgeons throughout the world.

Dr. Gentsch said CLAUDE's heart muscle and arterial system are in good condition and the operation has eliminated the strain which has gradually been building up on the heart muscle over the last few years.

I am sure you all know how active

CLAUDE has always been. He wanted to get this restriction eliminated so he would not have to curtail his active schedule or risk a heart attack at some time in the future. He chose to undergo the operation and we all are very pleased that it has been so successful.

After he leaves the hospital he will gradually rebuild his strength, as is necessary in these cases. He expects to be back on a full schedule by the end of April and will be back with us here on the floor in his usually good form and good health.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The call was taken by electronic device, and the following Members failed to respond:

[Roll No. 146]

Alexander	Giaimo	Nix
Ambro	Guyer	Pepper
Andrews, N.C.	Harsha	Rangel
Archer	Hayes, Ind.	Rees
Ashley	Heckler, Mass.	Riegle
Barrett	Henderson	Rodino
Biester	Hinshaw	Sarbanes

Diggs	McKinney	White
Dingell	Macdonald	Wydler
Dodd	Moffett
Drinan	Moorhead, Pa.

The SPEAKER. On this rollcall 381 Members have recorded their presence by electronic device, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1976

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 12406) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide that members of the Federal Election Commission shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The motion was agreed to.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H.R. 12406, with Mr. BOLLING in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose on Tuesday, March 30, 1976, all time for general debate on the bill had expired. The bill is considered as having been read for amendment.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS).

AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MR. HAYS OF OHIO

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, as I advised on yesterday, I offer a group of technical amendments to this bill, on which I believe there is no controversy.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. HAYS of Ohio: Page 9, line 22, insert "and instering in lieu thereof a semicolon" immediately after "end thereof".

Page 12, line 15, strike out the period immediately after "candidate" and insert in lieu thereof "; and".

Page 14, line 21, insert a semicolon immediately after "Code".

Page 14, line 23, insert "; and " immediately after "1954".

Page 31, line 10, strike out "prescribed" and insert in lieu thereof "provided".

Page 32, line 3, strike out "campaign" and insert in lieu thereof "authorized political".

Page 38, line 21, strike out "contributions" and insert in lieu thereof "conditions".

Page 39, line 5, strike out "officers" and insert in lieu thereof "offices".

Page 40, line 12, strike out "calendar year," and insert in lieu thereof "calendar year),".

Page 58, line 8, strike out the comma immediately after "Code".

Page 58, line 13, strike out "305(a)" and insert in lieu thereof "306(a)".

Page 58, line 14, strike out the comma immediately after "Code".

Mr. HAYS of Ohio (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that these amendments may be considered en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, these amendments are strictly technical amendments. As I am sure the House is aware, once the bill was approved it was a matter of urgency in getting it rewritten and before the House so that we could move on it. I would say that these technical amendments are concurred in, or were written jointly by the minority counsel and committee council.

I believe there is no objection on the minority side to these technical amendments, such as including a comma where one should be, including a semicolon where one was not or putting in an "and" where we did not have one, and so on and so forth.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS).

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is correct. The technical amendments have been cleared by the minority. We agree to the technical amendments and urge their adoption.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS).

The amendments were agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FRENZEL

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FRENZEL: On page 15, beginning line 19, strike section 108 in its entirety.

(Mr. FRENZEL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, the section to be stricken by this amendment is the section on advisory opinions, beginning on page 15 and going through pages 16 and 17.

This section of the bill is central to the weakening of the independence of the Federal Elections Commission. The section does a number of things to the independence of the Commission by mandating that all advisory opinions must be approved by Congress.

Mr. Chairman, advisory opinions heretofore have been the only source of guidance for candidates, committees, parties and political participants. Congress has not yet approved any single regulation submitted to it by the Federal Elections Commission and, therefore, this particular section of the bill, which forces advisory opinions to later be put into the form of regulations which are subject to veto, means that we will have no guidance until we can get those advisories into the regulation form.

So far, the Federal Elections Commission has rendered about 140 advisory opinions. Some of them are very simple, and very specific. Others, however, are of a broad nature and involve as many as 2 dozen complex questions.

This section of the bill requires that the FEC put all opinions into regulation form and submit them to Congress.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS).

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman aware of the Long amendment which will be made in order if this amendment is defeated?

Mr. FRENZEL. I am aware of that.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. If the gentleman will yield further, would this cure any of the gentleman's troubles? I am disposed, if this amendment is defeated, to accept the Long amendment, because I realize that there are advisory opinions which could cover a specific matter which might not be of general applicability.

As the gentleman knows, the Long amendment would, on page 17, where it says, "The Commission shall, no later than 30 days after rendering an advisory opinion," insert the words, "of general applicability."

I wonder if that would make any difference to the gentleman?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I do intend to support the Long amendment if this one fails. But it does not cure all of the problems that I see with this section.

I thank the chairman, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS) for his interest.

Mr. Chairman, there has not been any controversy about any advisory opinion of which I am aware, with the exception of an advisory opinion No. 23, the SUNPAC decision.

In this bill, in another section, the SUNPAC decision is laid to rest anyway. So it seems to me that this particular section is a sort of overkill. It is an attempt to kill SUNPAC the second time and, in so doing, limit the ability of the Commission to render necessary guidance to participants in the political process. I think it is simply another way in which the Commission becomes subservient to Congress. It cannot take any significant action until it clears it with Congress.

The worst of it is that the congressional track record is so bad. We have disapproved two regulations, but we have not approved any of the other regulations that are before us, so everybody in the game of politics is traveling exclusively now on advisory opinions.

Mr. Chairman, this bill also provides that the advisory opinions must be made in the form of regulations and presented to Congress in 30 days. I think those of us who are familiar with the administrative procedures understand that that is impossible. The Commission must develop its advisory opinion. Having done so, it must then publish it in the Federal Register. At that point it has to schedule it for public hearings, hold the public hearings, and then rewrite the regulation. Then if it is satisfied, the Commission confirms it and sends it to Congress.

In my judgment, it is not reasonably possible for the Commission to do a good job of regulation-writing within the period required by this particular bill.

So, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that if we really believe in an independent elections commission with the ability to make some determinations which, no matter whether they are general or specific, are probably going to have to stand for 60 to 90 days at least, we ought to eliminate this section and vote for this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. FRENZEL was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, the problem here is that the Commission must make some regulations while we get waiting for Congress to approve them, and people have to be able to bank on them.

The advisory opinion section of the 1974 law was one that turned out to be particularly fortuitous. I did not vote for it, but it has been very helpful because we have had so much trouble putting these regulations in good form and getting approval by the Congress.

I would like to state further that the Senate has eliminated this provision from its bill. The Senate understood the controversy and understood the challenge to the Commission's independence. We must remember there are practically no independent commissions and practically no agencies of Government that must bring their regulations back to Congress for a veto.

I believe we would do ourselves and the general public a favor if we would vote for the amendment and strike this section on advisory opinions.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think there is one misconception that the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) left, although I am sure he did not mean to, and that is that, as he said, the Congress has a terribly bad track record on approving the regulations of this Commission and that they have already disapproved two and none is in existence.

Now, this is not the way it is. We disapproved two, and that was the judgment of the Congress. Anybody who wants to can criticize our judgment, but the fact remains that all the other regulations that have laid over the necessary 30 days and on which Congress took no action automatically became approved. In other words, what Congress has to do in order to disapprove a regulation is to take action itself. If it fails to do that within 30 legislative days, the regulation becomes effective.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think that any Member, when he understands this, really wants to give a commission the power to rewrite the law, either with an understanding of the legislative intent or without it. And I am unable to determine whether they understood the legislative intent or whether they just did not care. However, I do not think that we ought to subject ourselves, with the tradition of the division of powers, totally to a commission appointed by the Executive, who has unlimited ability to rewrite the laws by the form of regulation.

I am perfectly aware that this bill is not perfect, and I think we perhaps went a little too far on page 17 when we said that every advisory opinion should be rendered under the form of a regulation and sent up here.

The gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) has an amendment which has been made in order and which he will offer if this amendment is defeated, as I think it should be, and which, on page 17, line 4, will put in the words "of general applicability" after the words "advisory opinion." Therefore, if they issue an advisory opinion, it could only have effect in one district or in one area. They do not have to send it up.

Then he would strike the language on lines 9 through 14, which says:

> In any such case in which the Commission receives more than one request * * * the Commission may not render more than one advisory opinion.

Mr. Chairman, that troubles me a little bit, but maybe it is better to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) than not to. I am convinced that it is. I am convinced that we should have this section 108 in there because I think somebody ought to have the right, if it becomes a flagrant thing, of vetoing these regulations.

Mr. Chairman, neither the House nor the Senate will undertake lightly to veto a regulation. It has to be a regulation that is so onerous that one could easily convince a majority of one body or the other to do away with it.

In this Committee on House Administration, we only brought one regulation here before the Members to ask them to veto it, and the vote was pretty overwhelming to veto it.

Mr. Chairman, I think the Members of Congress who face the electorate every 2 years for judgment on their actions are far more competent to say whether a regulation is sensible or not, not a Commission which is appointed and which never goes to the electorate for any approval of any action it takes.

Mr. Chairman, I could stand here all afternoon and talk about commissions. I think the concept of handling the power of the President and the power of the Congress to a commission is what has gotten us into a lot of the trouble we are in. I think the fact that these commissions issue regulations which then have the force and effect of law is one of the reasons that the people of this country are fed up with Washington, because they are encompassed in such a torrent of redtape that in order to conduct the day-to-day business of a one-man operation, the man has to have an attorney and an accountant to advise him what to do.

Mr. Chairman, I am not talking about just the Federal Election Commission. I am talking about the entire plethora of commissions.

Somebody mentioned the Public Utilities Commission here yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. HAYS of Ohio was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I am trying to keep this debate short. I do not intend to ask for a lot of extra time.

As I was saying, somebody mentioned the Public Utilities Commission. We have a public utilities commission in the State of Ohio. They call it the PUCO, the Public Utilities Commission of Ohio.

I have said repeatedly that if I am ever Governor of Ohio, the first act I am going to ask the legislature to pass is one changing the name to the "Utilities Commission of Ohio" and taking the word "Public" out of it, because the utilities have owned it ever since it was created. The public interest is never considered, and that has been true under Democratic Governors and Republican Governors. Those are the only two kinds we have had. I think we had a Whig Governor at one time, but I do not think they had the PUCO at that time.

Mr. Chairman, I say to the Members that this Government, both State and National, is just commission ridden.

Mr. Chairman, all we are asking to do in section 108 is to have them submit their regulations of general applicability, if the Long amendment prevails, so that the Congress can have a final review on it.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Frenzel amendment be defeated.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

(Mr. WIGGINS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, we all understand that a bill regulating the conduct of elections is a very partisan-prone activity. Yet, there ought to be agreement in this Chamber that the bill which we write should reflect the public interest rather than one which reflects a jockeying for partisan advantage.

Mr. Chairman, if the Members agree with that statement, I will want to speak for a moment about where the public interest lies with respect to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL). The public interest, I think, demands that there be a statute which regulates the conduct of Federal elections. The public interest, I believe, requires that we create a body which is given the duty of supervising the day-to-day requirements of the law.

The public interest will be served if that body is independent and not dominated by any partisan interest. The public interest is served if the independent election commission is given authority to devise rules necessary to implement the act. Clearly, Members of the House, the rules which are promulgated should be fair, they should be objective and they should not reflect any partisan bias.

I hope at this point there has been no disagreement in this Chamber with what I have said. Assuming the Members agree, however, this is what this bill does to the agreed public interest: The independent commission cannot make a rule which has any force and effect at all unless this Congress ratifies it. Well, who amongst us will stand up and say that this Congress is a nonpartisan, nonobjective body? It is not, it is a very partisan institution. So when my friend speaks of the independence of the commission, understand that the procedure in the bill giving this Congress the right to veto rules and regulations or any part thereof is utterly destructive of the independence of the commission. When we vote on the Frenzel amendment, we will have an opportunity to stand up and be counted, yes or no, as to whether we support an independent commission.

It has been said that it is improper for any regulatory commission around this town to rewrite the law and I agree; but we all know or should know that no rule written by any regulatory commission is of any force or effect if it contravenes the law. All rules by the Federal Election Commission must be consistent with the statute which we pass or they are a nullity.

Let me pass for a moment from the public interest and speak to our narrower interests as candidates for reelection to the Congress. Unless this section is stricken, all advisory opinions heretofore rendered will be a nullity. Have any of the Members relied upon an opinion of the FEC? If they have, then I assure them that they can no longer rely upon the opinions rendered if this bill is passed because they are all nullified.

Can we as candidates for public office get any guidance whatsoever from the Commission unless we strike this section?

Let me tell the Members the way we would expect it to work. If we in our campaigns between now and November have a question about the propriety of certain acts which we may contemplate undertaking, the most logical thing in the world for us to do is to get on the phone and call the FEC and ask them for guidance. The purpose of this of course is to avoid violation of the law. Heretofore the FEC has responded to such requests or invitations by opinions of counsel. They have been very helpful. They have been helpful to me and I am sure they have been helpful to other Members in this Chamber.

If, however, this section is not stricken, what happens to the whole procedure of giving informal advice that candidates who seek to comply with the law have requested? I will tell the Members what will happen. Let me read to the Members from the committee report on page 3. It says as follows:

> In any case in which the Commission desires that an opinion of counsel shall have any operative effect on any person, the Commission must propose a regulation based on the opinion of counsel.

Let me tell the Members what that means.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. WIGGINS was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. WIGGINS. If one has an opinion of counsel, I can tell the Members right now that he cannot rely upon it because the Commission must propose that opinion in regulation form.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGINS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Is the gentleman saying now that we are going to narrow this down beyond the Commission and have some counsel that they appoint render opinions which have the force of law? The gentleman says if this is stricken, such things will be in order; if it is not, they will not.

On page 16 we say in the part the gentleman is seeking to strike at line 21:

> Any advisory opinion rendered by the Commission under subsection (a) may be relied upon by (i) any person involved in the specific transaction or activity with respect to which such advisory opinion is rendered; and (ii) any person involved in any specific transaction or activity which is similar . . .

And I will not read the rest of it. So we broaden it out.

Mr. WIGGINS. I agree that is the language of the bill, but I still ask my colleague to consider the practical effect. If one has an immediate problem in his campaign, it is not his purpose to seek a formal adivsory opinion from the Commission, which requires briefs and requires hearings and requires an affirmative vote of four members of the Commission. What he wants is an immediate answer to the problem, and I am telling the gentleman that under this procedure he cannot get it.

Even if, Mr. Chairman, the Commission takes one's request under advisement and renders an advisory opinion, should one rely upon that opinion, knowing full-well that it must be sent to Congress and it is capable of being rejected within 30 days?

Elections, Mr. Chairman, are very dynamic activities. One simply cannot wait 30 to 60 to 90 days to get an answer. Present procedure reflects one's personal interest as a candidate, I might say, and in my humble opinion reflects the public interest as well.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGINS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

But there is language in the bill, I will say to my friend, that if one gets an advisory opinion which is later put into regulation and overturned, he is still protected as though it had never been overturned if he relied upon it. So that really square proposition does not lie; does it?

Mr. WIGGINS. In my opinion the Federal Election Commission will understand the clear mandate of the bill to be that they should not issue an advisory opinion which shall be relied upon unless Congress has exercised its right to ratify it.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. If the gentleman will yield further, if the Long amendment is adopted, I do not think there will be any such interpretation by the Commission and, as I said earlier, I intend to support the Long amendment. So I think a lot of the arguments the gentleman is making will not lie if the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) is rejected and the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. LONG) is accepted.

Mr. JOHN L. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGINS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. JOHN L. BURTON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

We put into the bill that if an opinion is given, one can rely upon that, and even if it is overturned, if one in good faith relied upon that opinion, he is covered. So really what the gentleman is saying is not on all fours with the bill as it was recommended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. WIGGINS was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. WIGGINS. We have very carefully restricted the application of the advisory opinions to the individual to whom it was directed or to those who have substantially similar activities. When we are dealing as we are with a statute which is fraught with civil and criminal penalties, few amongst us are going to be so brave as to rely upon opinions directed to others.

In the remaining seconds of my time, Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss a final practical problem. We have had 140 or thereabouts advisory opinions heretofore rendered. If the same pace continues in the future—and there is every reason to believe that the pace would increase—140 rules are going to find their way to the Committee on House Administration where we are going to be forced to hold some sort of review and exercise judgment. Whatever that judgment may be, the regulation is going to come here for final resolution.

I will tell the Members, Mr. Chairman, that the House is not equipped to sit as an appellate court for the Federal Election Commission and conduct its normal legislative responsibility as well. The Frenzel amendment is a responsible amendment and should be supported.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGINS. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out that this section of the bill cancels all of the existing advisory opinions. And even if the Long amendment is adopted, those advisory opinions are gone and we will have to start all over, so instead of 140 advisories to review, we will actually have probably 280 to review in the committee.

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for the purpose of an announcement?

Mr. BRADEMAS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, after clearing with the Speaker and the leadership I would like to advise the House that we hope to make all the progress we can today on this bill, but I will move that the Committee rise at 4:30, at which time there will be brought up the petroleum reserves on some public lands, a conference report, and I guess that would be the end of business due to the reception which the King of Jordan is giving tonight, but we would continue on this bill until 4:30.

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Chairman, I am strongly opposed to the gentleman's amendment and strongly support the views expressed by the distinguished chairman of the committee.

Why did we have in the original statute a provision for review by Congress and possible veto of rules and regulations issued by the Commission? One of the reasons, I suggest, among others, is that we want to be sure that in the framing of rules and regulations, the Commission complied with the intent of Congress.

Members will recall that one of the original regulations which was vetoed was the so-called point-of-entry regulation which had to do with the appropriate place at which candidates and their committees would file their reports in connection with their campaigns. I had no particular quarrel in substance with the proposal of the Federal Election Commission that the reports should be initially filed with the Commission but my reason for strongly opposing that particular point-of-entry regulation had to do with the fact that the Commission openly and clearly defined the express intent of Congress in the statute. Now the Federal Election Commission ought not to be writing laws. That is a responsibility which the Constitution assigns to Congress.

In like fashion, Mr. Chairman, we saw in the Sun Oil opinion, how the Federal Election Commission resorted to the device of an advisory opinion to set forth what in effect was a rule and regulation of great consequence affecting the Federal electoral process, and the Commission did so by using the advisory opinion procedure in order to circumvent review and possible veto by either the House or the Senate.

So, I think that in just those two instances we have ample justification for insisting that advisory opinions of general applicability be submitted like rules or regulations for review and possible veto. I will strongly support, as will the chairman, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS), as he has indicated, the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) in that will have the effect of making clear that advisory opinions of general applicability will be the only advisory opinions that will be submitted for review and possible veto.

I am also supporting another provision of the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) to remove language in the bill which says that an advisory opinion on a given subject may be issued only once.

I would simply make two other points before I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. PHILLIP BURTON), and say that as I listened to the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS) I asked myself: Is there any other Federal regulatory agency which does what I hear the gentleman says he wants the Federal Election Commission to do, that is, ask for an informal telephone response to a question and then allow the questioner to rely on that response as a defense? It seems to me that we should realize that what the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) would do would be to put an immense power in the hands of a little group, to paraphrase the famous words, "of a little group of possibly willful men and women."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. BRADEMAS was allowed to proceed for an additional 2 minutes.)

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADEMAS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend our colleague in the well and associate myself with the gentleman's remarks and join with the gentleman in urging our colleagues to reject this proposal before us, so we can get to the proposal of the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), which deserves our support.

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. JOHN L. BURTON), a member of the Committee on House Administration.

Mr. JOHN L. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has hit the point. By use of an advisory opinion, which is outside of any regulation of the Federal Election Commission enacting a change in the law, that really supercedes provisions that go back to the Corrupt Practices Act when we prohibited from the giving of corporate funds and union election funds to Federal elections. The reason we included advisory opinions is because they have used it in place of regulations.

Mr. BRADEMAS. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. JOHN L. BURTON. And gives them the full force and effect of law and no one who voted the last time thought they were voting to permit someone to allow corporate funds or union treasury funds to be used in Federal elections.

Last, the point the gentleman makes that the arguments of the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS) were not on all fours is that someone can, if an opinion of general applicability is issued, rely on that in good faith and if subsequently that is vetoed, they have a defense if they stop the action they were taking, as they relied in good faith on the opinion.

So I say we should vote down the Frenzel amendment and adopt the Long amendment and we will have something that is good for the public and it will be good for us, because we are still Members of the public and I do not think we have to view it from a narrow self-interest base.

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York (Mr. BIAGGI).

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Chairman, I associate myself with the gentleman's remarks and I commend the gentleman for focusing attention on the very threat that this Commission presents. What it does, really, and the House should alert itself, not only in this instance, but in every instance where we pass legislation, the intent of which is invariably subverted by the objective. I would suggest that the Members henceforth be mindful of that subversion, because the will of the people is thwarted.

Mr. MATHIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not take the full 5 minutes, because 5 minutes is not necessary.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out what the gentlemen from California, Mr. JOHN L. BURTON and Mr. PHIL BURTON, and the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BRADEMAS) were saying, we are not giving to Congress the authority to veto any advisory opinion. We are reserving to this body the authority to veto any rule or regulation associated with that advisory opinion. If this section is stricken, we would also take out the subsection that provides additional protection to Members of Congress who are seeking election again or to candidates for public office.

We say here, if they act in good faith in accordance with the provisions and shall not as a result of any such act be subject to any sanctions provided by this act.

Mr. Chairman, I think that provision alone would make it worthwhile to support the committee provision and leave this section in the bill.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADEMAS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, that is a salutary change in the law, but it is effectively undermined by a later section of the law, which I will call to the attention of my colleagues. On page 28 of the bill it says that no advisory opinion shall be used against any person as having the force of law.

Accordingly, if one acts in good faith, one is morally secure, but one's attorney is not going to be able to inform the court of that moral security.

Mr. MATHIS. I would say to the gentleman from California that I am not sure I read that section on page 28 in that way, but, if so, I will certainly support an amendment at that time to clarify that particular position.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MATHIS. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. The gentleman will not have that opportunity because, under the rule, he will not be able to offer that amendment.

Mr. MATHIS. I am delighted to hear that, I would say to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Chairman, I would just like to point out that the language on page 28 that was the subject of the discussion a moment ago says that the opinion cannot be used against a person. The language does not say that the opinion cannot be used as a defense.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I am somewhat puzzled by the distinguished gentleman from California who supports this amendment when he indicates that rules and regulations, if they were in violation of the clear provisions of the act, could be stricken down by the courts.

Obviously, if the law is clear, there is no purpose for any rules and regulations. The only time that the Commission would have occasion to pass any rules and regulations would be where the law is not clear. Otherwise, there would be no need. If the law is silent, then obviously this body wants to be in a position to be advised as to what ruling or regulation has been made by the Commission where the law is silent on the subject, and have the opportunity to review it for a period of 30 days, If we then feel that it is inconsistent with the intent of Congress, then either House could veto it.

I know that when I was running for Congress just last year, I received a $2,500 contribution from the Democratic Party Telethon Committee, in front of television cameras and the public there attending. The day before the election, it was challenged by my distinguished Republican opponent who claimed the law limited such contributions to $1,000. I wrote to the Election Commission asking for an advisory opinion. It took about 3 months to get it. In the meantime, I return the $1,500 by which the $2,500 exceeded what my distinguished opponent said was the maximum that I could accept, but eventually we received an advisory that said that I could receive $1,000 of it for the primary election, $1,000 of it for the general election, and the other $500 to help pay off my debt left from the general election.

Well now, this was an advisory opinion. But if they pass rules and regulations, it will only be because, and would only be necessitated because, the law is silent on the subject. If the law is silent on the subject and the Commission passes regulations, certainly this body should be in a position to review any regulation adopted by the Commission, on which the Congress has been silent.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I would say that the gentleman made a good argument, but let me just advise the gentleman and the House that the law does not necessarily have to be silent. The law was specific on the point of entry, and they made a regulation totally contrary to what the law says. So, it even goes beyond what the gentleman is saying, and that is why this is here, to protect the House and the public.

Mr. ALLEN. I am in agreement with the way the bill is presently written, and I am opposed to the amendment that would permit the Election Commission without review by the Congress to adopt any kind of rules and regulations it sees fit, whether the law is silent or not.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to cut anybody off from speaking, but I am curious to know how Members want to speak on this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment end in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Members standing at the time the unanimous-consent request was granted will be recognized for 2½ minutes each.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. SNYDER).

(Mr. SNYDER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SNYDER. I rise, Mr. Chairman, in opposition to the amendment. I would just like to make the point to Members, particularly on my side of the aisle, that many of us are cosponsors of H.R. 9801 and similar legislation, which would establish a procedure very similar to what is in this bill for promulgated regulations of all the executive agencies.

Mr. Chairman, I think that one of the problems that we have in this country today is that we are being governed by regulations that are issued by agencies that are not at all in accordance with the intent of the laws as we have passed them in the Congress. Every day in our mail we get complaints from our constituents, who write in and say, "This regulation has been issued and that regulation has been issued, in regard to OSHA and all of the rest, and you know and we know that that is not what Congress meant." And, quite frankly, if there were some way to require this kind of a proposition be put into effect in regard to all of the agencies and all of the regulations, and make them all come back down here to the appropriate committee and have the Congress take a look at them to see if they were in accordance with the intent of what we meant when we passed the law, I think the country would be running a lot better. It would certainly minimize the "rule by regulation" that is causing all our people so much trouble and grief.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ECKHARDT).

(Mr. ECKHARDT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ECKHARDT. Mr. Chairman, I favor the Frenzel amendment. It eliminates the so-called congressional veto where an advisory opinion of the Commission is concerned. If it were possible under the rule, I would eliminate the congressional veto of any Commission rule. I think we have improvidently delegated too much power to the Commission in permitting it, by an interpretation of law given to a candidate, to in effect nullify positive provisions of law. By the overly restrictive rule which we adopted on this bill, that flaw cannot be corrected here today. It was for this reason primarily that I voted against the rule.

But the way to correct the flaw would properly have been to delineate carefully the Commission's authority—not to tie that authority to a yo-yo string so we can pull it back. The former process of discreet, final delegation is always the proper principle. I deplore the growth of the congressional veto technique because it always encourages loose delegation upon the assumption that the legislation can be pulled back for later revision.

But the legislative veto technique is particularly abhorrent in legislation which has peculiar application to the very persons who hold the veto power, the two Houses of Congress. It is as if securities legislation, making certain conduct of brokers, dealers and specialists criminal, were subject to veto by the New York Stock Exchange. Indeed, we have given members of exchanges certain self-governance, but not to this extent. Under the bill before us we can veto a general interpretation of law applicable to us and thus impel the Commission to follow another course in a matter in which we have a direct interest.

Whenever we retain in ourselves authority to review post-enactment application of legislation we tend to move from our legislative role toward an adjudicatory role. I oppose this trend generally but I oppose it particularly and vehemently when the adjudication is in our own case.

The flaw is an ugly deformity in an otherwise attractive bill—a deformity so gross that it will make me part company with my friends, the bill's supporters, unless the bill is improved by offsetting amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL).

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FRENZEL) there were—ayes 22, noes 51.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 134, noes 269, not voting 29, as follows:

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. LONG OF LOUISIANA

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LONG of Louisiana: On page 17, line 4, after the word "opinion" insert "of general applicability" and on page 17, line 9 strike out all after the word "Commission." through line 14.

(Mr. LONG of Louisiana asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my amendment in very simple language is to guarantee that if the Federal Election Commission issues an advisory opinion that has any general applicability, it has to put it in the form of a regulation and let the Congress review it.

My amendment is in two parts. The first part would allow individual candidates to still ask the FEC a specific question, to get advice from the FEC without their having to submit that advice to Congress for review. However, the Commission would still be required to submit all advisory opinions of any general applicability at all to Congress for review. This will allow a candidate in the middle of a campaign to get the information he needs without having to wait the 60 days that might be required for congressional review and at the same time reserve the right of Congress to review the proposed regulations in whatever form they might appear.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

May I say that I am prepared, as manager of the bill, to accept the gentleman's amendment, but I would like to make a little legislative history about the part he is striking out. The reason that was put in there—that language on line 14 through line 19—was because we have instances such as one which the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI) can detail where he asked for an advisory opinion and got an opinion, and 3 weeks later I believe it was the gentleman from Oregon, (Mr. ULLMAN) who asked the same question and got a totally contrary advisory opinion. So what we were trying to do was to keep them from issuing contradictory advisory opinions.

Will the gentleman say that if they issue two opinions on the same subject directly contravening each other, that that would be considered of general applicability?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I do not think,

Mr. Chairman, that in any way that could be considered as other than of general nature; that is, the second one, if it is in conflict with one that has been issued prior to that time. I would agree with the gentleman's statement that it would be one of general nature and subject to regulation and submission to the Congress for its review.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the minority side agrees with the Long amendment. I would like to state parenthetically, however, that the gentleman's amendment is a good one in that it improves the bill.

It does not, however, do nearly enough. It only means that the flaws that have been in this section have had a Band-Aid applied to them, but they have been by no means cured.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, my amendment seeks to make a couple of technical but very important changes in the committee bill.

It would allow the FEC to continue its rulemaking authority—it will allow Congress to continue to review FEC regulations in whatever form they might appear—and it will allow candidates out in the huskings to continue to get timely answers to their individual questions on an as-needed basis.

Many unanticipated problems have arisen with regard to so called advisory opinions. Under the present law the FEC is required to submit all proposel regulations to Congress for review. In order to circumvent this review procedure the FEC has resorted to issuing so-called advisory opinions in lieu of regulations, since those opinions do not presently require congressional review. Clearly this kind of activity is in direct contradiction of the intent of Congress.

In response to this practice the committee has rightfully asserted congressional review over these kinds of advisory opinions. I commend the chairman and the members of the House Administration Committee for recognizing this problem and seeking to solve it—and I support them in this effort.

However, in attempting to solve the larger problem, we have created yet another one. Suppose a candidate who is actively involved in a heated campaign needs the benefit of FEC expertise and advice on a particular question. Under the committee bill the candidate's request would go unanswered until the FEC formulated their response and submitted it to Congress for review. This process would take up to 60 days and the campaign might be over and the question moot. Under my amendment this type of individual specific request will be answered by the FEC without delay.

Another practical consideration is that the House of Representatives does not have the time—and should not take the time—to reviey these kinds of individual inquiries. Since the FEC was formed it has issued 520 advisory opinions, and 127 of these were issued since the first of this year. Our time is too limited to devout it to this kind of activity.

In fact, this amendment will in effect spell out the law as we have all believed it to be all along—my amendment would permit the FEC to provide timely advisory opinions to specific inquries but would at the same time put a stop to issuing what are actually regulations in the form of advisory opinions for the sole purpose of circumventing the will of Congress.

Along the same lines, the second part of my amendment would permit the FEC to give the same answers to the same questions from several individuals. What I mean by this is if a candidate in Louisiana and a candidate in Iowa ask the FEC what is basically the same question the Commission can answer both inquiries on an individual basis.

In summary: I believe that my amendment strikes a reasonable balance:

It allows the FEC to continue its rulemaking authority;

It will allow Congress to continue to review FEC regulations in whatever form they might appear; and

It will allow the candidates out in the huskings to continue to get timely answers to their individual questions.

I urge my colleagues to support my amendment.

Further explanation of the second part of the amendment—the portion which strikes the prohibition against multiple opinions on the same subject.

Under the committee bill every opinion would have to be reviewed. This necessitated a procedure to limit the total number of opinions because otherwise the Congress would spend all its time reviewing them. The committee's solution was to allow only 1 opinion on a subject.

Since the Long amendment would make only the generally applicable opinions reviewable, this limitation sufficiently cuts down the workload of the Congress and there is no longer a necessity to limit the number of opinions.

Mr. ECKHARDT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I favor this amendment because it narrows the area for the process which has ordinarily been described as the congressional veto.

I am against congressional veto as a general proposition. I think it invites too much delegation of authority and I think particularly the bill delegates too much authority in making an advisory opinion altogether insulate against prosecution, presuming one has received a favorable opinion. I think that is the real evil and I think it ought to be cured, but this may not be cured by amendment under the rule.

But at least the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) does knock out the provision by which Members of Congress may in effect veto a negative limited advisory opinion affecting their question. The only type of veto that may be had, as I understand it, under the Long amendment is, a general advisory opinion and not a specific one. Therefore I think the Long amendment improves the bill.

I may say I voted for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) but I do not think there is any conflict in a vote for the Frenzel amendment and also for the Long amendment, the Frenzel amendment have been more sweeping and having been defeated.

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ECKHARDT. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the gentleman from Louisiana on a very constructive amendment and hope that it is agreed to with strong support on both sides of the aisle.

(Mr. ECKHARDT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. LONG).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FRENZEL

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FRENZEL: Page 18, line 17, strike out "Notwithstanding any other provision of this".

Page 18, strike out line 18 through line 25.

(Mr. FRENZEL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, by agreement of the distinguished committee chairman we are attempting roughly to take the amendment made in order by the rule in the order that they appeared in the rule, but also including some when they apply to the same section, as we took the Long amendment. I hope that might help some of the Members follow the action here.

This particular amendment strikes language on page 18 which is known as the Mathis amendment, after its author, the distinguished gentleman from Georgia. This amendment deletes that language.

The language of the bill would prohibit the Federal Election Commission from investigating employees of any Member of Congress whether the Federal staff member is engaged in improper conduct, improper campaign activities, or for any reason without first consulting the office holder. If, after consultation, the office holder provides an affidavit for the Election Commission and says: "This employee is performing his regularly assigned duties," then the Federal Election Commission is obliged not to continue with its investigation. As a matter of fact the language says that:

An affidavit given by the person holding Federal office that such staff employee is performing his regularly assigned duties shall be a complete bar to any further inquiry or investigation of the matter involved.

And that investigation to begin with covers any of the utilization or activities of any staff employee of any person holding Federal office.

Therefore, if somebody on a Member's staff is under investigation by the Federal Election Commission for any purpose, under the broad language of this bill, and I assume this purpose could be receiving cash above the limits of the bill, perhaps receiving corporate money, then the Federal Election Commission must notify the Member. The Member provides the affidavit. The investigation must stop.

Now, there was a time in this Congress, and there will be times in the future, when we have been worried about executive privilege by Members in the other branch; but here is a case where we have granted the congressional privilege to all our employees to do whatever they favor without fear of investigation, as long as we swear that they are a full-time employee of ours.

Now, our affidavit does not have to say that the person was not doing anything wrong. It just has to say that that person is an employee performing regularly assigned duties.

Now I believe the amendment originally was intended to take care of a problem that Members were concerned if their staff were involved in their spare time or in their own time on political work, that they would be subject to investigation. As a matter of fact, I do not know of any law on the books that says our staff cannot work in volunteer political activity. Nobody working under any congressional Member is Hatched that I know of.

Therefore, this amendment is absolutely unnecessary. It simply looks to the public as though we are being self-serving and absolutely isolating all of our employees from any kind of investigation whatsoever. In my judgment, it is not necessary. It does not improve the bill. The protection that is given is not something that is needed. Because of the quite obvious interpretation that it will be self-serving, I think it should be eliminated.

Mr. JOHN L. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. JOHN L. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I will vote for the gentleman's amendment. We voted, I think, alike in the committee on this issue. I would just associate myself with the remarks of the gentleman as they pertain to documents and amendments.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for that contribution. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is fair to say that the gentleman from Minnesota in the gentleman's zeal to be righteous has slightly misconstrued what this amendment does. First, it does not restrict itself to employees and Members of Congress. The thing came about because the Federal Election Commission announced that it was going to have an investigation of Mr. Rogers Morton as to how he was spending his time. It does not have anything to do and it was not intended to have anything to do with any criminal activities. That is reserved for the Department of Justice, and no affidavit permitting Members is going to prevent any member of his staff from taking corporate bonds or cash or whatever.

Let me tell this House what we were trying to do. Everyone has a district office, or if they do not, they have a Washington office. Next September somebody calls a Member's office and the girl picks up the phone and this person says, "Where do I get some literature on Mr. Jones for Congress?"

Now, unless she hangs up the phone without opening her mouth, she could be subject to an investigation by the Federal Election Commission. Now, they have 142 employees, by last count. They are growing every day.

Mr. Chairman, there is an article in the paper today that says, "Election Panel Still Operating":

> Those who thought the Federal Election Commission might dissolve when the Supreme Court ruled that it was constituted illegally thought wrong.

It says further:

> Although the Commission lost some of its powers when a court delay of its ruling ran out March 22, it is continuing to function in a broad area and is continuing to grow.

It is continuing to grow. When the Chairman of the Commission said that he sent the investigators in to Mr. ROSE's district—you know, this town is as leaky as a sieve—the next morning one of his own staff came up to my office and said:

> This is not true, and I will lose my job if it is known I talked to you, but the chairman did order those people down into Mr. ROSE's district.

I said, "Why?" He said, "Because we have so many people down there we did not have anything for them to do and we thought this was useful make-work for them."

Now, it that staff member is telling me the truth—and I have not brought either he or the Chairman in and put them under oath; perhaps I should—if what he said is true, they are way overstaffed and you can just bet that your opponent is going to have somebody call your office and ask where he can get some literature. If the girl tells him, he is going to file a complaint with the Federal Election Commission and they are going to be in there.

You know, the challenger has it all on his side. I have three fellows running against me. Two of them are circulating literature, not a piece of which has any identification on it as to where it came from. It is a direct violation of this law. I am not going to file any charges against them because it would only draw attention to them, but you can bet that if it were I who was doing it, there would be charges filed and the Commission would have me in headlines in every paper in my district.

There is nothing in this that says you can exempt employees from a criminal violation. What it says, in effect, is that the Commission cannot come into your office and inquire of every one of your employees, "how many hours did you work today? Did you do any political work? Did you answer the phone and answer a political question?" And so on and so on and so on.

I do not think many Members of Congress—and I know the President does not because he got pretty worked up when his staff was subject to an investigation as to how they are spending every minute of the day—I do not think there is a Member in this House who would say that his staff does not work overtime every day, and to make a certification that they are putting in full time, which is a 40-hour week, would be something that any Member in this Congress could do because I doubt if any of us have any staff who are not putting in 50 hours a week. If they want to go to a county fair in the evening and hand out literature to help their bosses get re-elected because their jobs hinge on it, I do not think that some high-paid, $30,000 per year investigator, because he does not have anything else to do, should be coming around to Members' offices trying to find out what the staff is doing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

(By unanimous consent Mr. HAYS of Ohio was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, is it not a fact on which to state that this is a matter which deserves serious attention, but which properly belongs, in fact, under the rules of the House and under the existing law, in either the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct or in the Department of Justice where, if there is an abuse, it can be corrected?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. No question about it. If there is a criminal violation it belongs in the Department of Justice, and nothing in this paragraph prohibits the Department from making an investigation.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word, and I rise in support of the amendment.

(Mr. WIGGINS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, frankly, I have mixed emotions about the amendment. As explained by the chairman, the language in the bill performs a useful function. I am sure that it was the intention of our colleague from Georgia (Mr. MATHIS) when he offered the amendment in the committee. The difficulty, however, is that the language itself is rather sweeping. Perhaps even if the amendment is defeated, we can narrow its scope by legislative history, which the chairman has offered and which I shall offer.

As I understand the word "activities" on line 19, page 18 of the bill, the activities to which the bill is referring relates to conduct by a staff member which might have some beneficial effect in the campaign but which does not interfere with that staff member's performance of his regularly assigned duties.

I am sure the chairman agrees with me.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. If the gentleman will yield, yes, I completely agree with that interpretation.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGINS. I yield to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG).

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would like some direction and advice.

Suppose a Member—and I think we all probably have had this occur—receives a piece of mail from a constituent which talks about four or five legislative issues, and then all of a sudden they will say, "I sure support the President," or "I sure do not support the President," or, "I hope you get elected," or, "I hope you do not get elected." But it is all part of the overall letter. Either they are asking for help in a case before a Federal agency or they are talking about their position on legislation, or even asking a question. What do we do? Do we have to throw that letter in the wastebasket because it makes some reference to a political matter?

Mr. WIGGINS. May I say to the gentleman that the answer to that question is no. One does not have to throw the letter in the wastebasket. And the same answer, I believe, would be given if the letter were devoted entirely to the constituent's support of the gentleman's campaign. I would think if the letter is entirely in support of a Member's campaign, it ought to be answered by the campaign committee, rather than the gentleman's staff, but a response to a constituent on any subject by official staff is not illegal.

What we are getting at is the possible misuse of staff which might be employed for the purpose of making telephone calls on behalf of the officeholder.

Conduct of that sort is not insulated. But if a staff member were employed and performs his or her congressional duties, there is certainly no indication intended that that staff member also could not be supportive of a Member's campaign, on his or her own time.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGINS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS).

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would say that I concur again with the gentleman completely, and I would go further and point out that the Member must make an affidavit to that effect. An affidavit falls into the perjury laws. As I understand it—I depend on the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS) for my legal advice—but all the Member is saying is that that staff member in this affidavit worked full time, which I define to mean 40 hours a week. And if he wants to go out and campaign on Saturday and Sunday—because that is the day in my district that the ethnic groups have their political meetings—he can do it, and the Elections Commission cannot come in and subpena him in or subject to an investigation. But the member has to say he has worked full time. And I again say that means 40 hours a week. That is more than most of the bureaucrats downtown work. Most of our people work a good deal more than that.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, the reason I am supporting the amendment, notwithstanding this clarifying legislative history, is that the affidavit procedure on lines 22 through 25 is truly inartfully drafted. The affidavit simply must declare that the employee is performing regularly assigned duties. The affidavit in a more perfect statute ought to negate the charge. It ought to state that his employee is not engaged in the political activities which form the basis of the charge. A response that an employee is regularly employed may not be at all responsive to the charge against the employee. Because of this imperfection, I support the amendment.

Mr. NEDZI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGINS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. NEDZI).

Mr. NEDZI. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I note the gentleman used the words "working full time." That is not the provision in the bill.

Mr. WIGGINS. Let me clarify that.

Mr. NEDZI. There are such things as part-time employees, and I just feel that the legislative history should make that clear.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. WIGGINS was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I am grateful to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. NEDZI) for raising that point.

The Mathis amendment as originally proposed did use the words "40 hours per week," and it was amended in committee to use the language "regularly assigned duties."

Therefore, a part-time employee would not be barred from participation in political activities in his off-time.

Mr. LONG of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGINS. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. LONG of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, it has been my understanding that by "full time" we do not mean regular hours. Congressional employees are simply responsible for working full time in the sense they put in 40 hours a week, but this would not necessarily mean within the period from 9 to 5.

They are committed to all sorts of irregular hours, and sometimes they work at night. My employees work at night, they work all kinds of crazy hours, and that would enable them to have time during the day to engage in political activities.

Mr. WIGGINS. The words, "full time," do not appear in the statute.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I think that the chairman of the full committee, the distinguished gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS), has expressed it succinctly. Recently there arose a question about the participation of a member of a staff of the House in a Presidential primary. A question arose, and the question was referred to the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, which gave an opinion to our colleague to the effect that, as the chairman of the committee has stated, very few of us have any employees who work fewer than 40 hours a week. As a matter of fact, the great majority of them work longer than that.

There is one thing implicit in the rules, and that is that theoretically at least there is no such thing as part-time employees. A member of any Member's staff, notwithstanding the amount of pay, is considered to be an employee of the House.

The Committee on Standards of Official Conduct in a carefully worded opinion stated that it was a matter of discretion as to whether an employee of a Member's staff was working full time or not. There was no reference to the number of hours. Presumably, full time, as the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS), said, is 40 hours, and they are allowed to take vacations. A staff person should not be inhibited from the exercise of his or her right on his or her own time to devote time to political activity, including time on behalf of his or her employer, once the full-time work for the Government is completed. Whether it is or is not an election year, incidentally, is irrelevant.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has brought up the full-time matter, and perhaps the remarks I made about a 40-hour week were a little misleading because many Members, I am sure, employ people on a half-day basis. Ever since I have been here I have had college students on my staff or on the committee staff who worked a half-day and who were paid about half as much as a person who worked all day.

So that is why the language was changed in committee to state that this staff employee is performing his regularly assigned duties. While the law itself and the rules of the House make no provision for half-time or part-time employees, there are a lot of them here, and as long as they are putting in the time for which they are hired, they are protected if the employer says they are performing their assigned duties.

Mr. ECKHARDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ECKHARDT. Mr. Chairman, am I correct in assuming that what this means is that as long as an employee is performing his regularly assigned duties for the pay involved—"for the pay involved" is implied and assumed—and he is doing what he does all the time, whether it is half time, full time, or otherwise, for the money he would have received but for the election being in progress, then he is insulated from engaging in whatever activity he wants to engage in because he would have made the money anyway for the duties he is performing for his principal; is that correct?

Mr. THOMPSON. My response would be yes, that it is correct.

Mr. ECKHARDT. We cannot leave out the full-time provision because if I pay somebody for halftime and he does all his halftime work and he gets that money when an election is not going on and then he works the other halftime without getting any more money from the Government for me as a candidate, or if he helps me fill out my report forms or does anything else without taking any governmental pay, that is how it will work out; is that correct?

Mr. THOMPSON. We cannot work requirements out in halftime, I will assure the gentleman.

Mr. ECKHARDT. However, as long as he is performing the duties for the pay involved and those duties continue to occupy him in the same manner as if the election were not going on, he is all right; is that not correct?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. THOMPSON) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. THOMPSON was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS), the chairman.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I would say that I concur totally in the gentleman's interpretation. That is what the amendment is all about.

Mr. ECKHARDT. I thank the chairman.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, the fact is that whether this amendment is or is not adopted, it would confer on the Federal Election Commission no additional jurisdiction. The fact of the matter is that any abuse should properly be referred to the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct; and if there is a violation of law, to the Department of Justice.

Mr. MATHIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MATHIS. As the author of the amendment, Mr. Chairman, I would like to apologize to members of this committee for the fact that the language is not perfect; but I do think that what the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. THOMPSON), has said, what the distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS), has said, and what our friend, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ECKHARDT), has said should clarify that we are talking about employees who perform their duties in a regularly prescribed manner, whether it is 40 hours a week, 60 hours a week, or 10 hours a week.

We are doing this, Mr. Chairman, to keep the harassment from occurring that has occurred and, obviously, will occur again during an election year. This does provide, I say very frankly, some protection for others.

Mr. THOMPSON. This gentleman will state that the addition of the requirement of an affidavit I might be willing to subscribe to, but I consider it to be obnoxious.

Mr. MATHIS. If the gentleman will yield further, I would say to the gentleman that I apologize for that provision's being obnoxious to him.

Mr. THOMPSON. I did not mean that the gentleman's amendment was obnoxious. The gentleman simply meant to tighten the rule.

Mr. MATHIS. If the gentleman will yield further, that is exactly right.

I would point out to the members of the committee, Mr. Chairman, that the staff member is not signing the affidavit; the Federal officeholder is signing it and is subjecting himself to perjury laws if, in fact, he perjures himself in the affidavit.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, just let me say again that this is a provision that will never be aimed at anybody but incumbents by the Federal Election Commission.

I have an independent opponent. He went to file the other day 20 miles away. He is the mayor of a city. He was driven there in a city car, and four city employees accompanied him.

Does anyone think the Federal Election Commission is going out to check on that? Oh, no; and I am not going to ask them to because the more he travels around in city cars, the better it is for me.

I am just pointing out that the only people who will ever be investigated or harrassed are the incumbent Members of Congress, and one has to go out on a limb if they do it.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question: In the gentleman's judgment, whether or not this amendment is agreed to, is it not so that we are conferring no additional authority on the Federal Election Commission?

Mr. HAYS. I agree with the gentleman, but let me say that we do not have to confer it. They have already assumed it and started this practice which the language in the bill seeks to stop.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

(Mr. MOORE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS) that the Federal Election Commission probably has too many people on its staff, but that is probably true with every other agency of the Government. I also agree with the gentleman that there is nothing wrong with a member of a Congressman's staff, on his own time, working in any political endeavor since as he is not subject to the Hatch Act. I also feel very strongly that no member of my staff or the staff of any other Member of Congress should be using the Government's time, or not on his own time, to further the reelection of whoever he happens to be working for. The taxpayers who are paying the taxes for the money that is used for hiring these people did not do so to help continue people in public office.

But, Mr. Chairman, that has nothing to do with the amendment at hand. The amendment at hand simply gives Members of Congress or anybody holding Federal office a special protection that nobody else has. The first part of this particular section gives us all the protection anybody needs. I agree with the section requiring a formal sworn complaint before any investigation is undertaken but, if you are holding Federal office, you have additional protection. All a Federal official has to do is sign an affidavit and that stops the investigation right there dead in the water. Nobody else has got that kind of protection but us.

It seems to me that yesterday on the floor of the House in the general debate on this bill we heard a lot of talk about Watergate and coverups. This is without a doubt a coverup provision which is put in the law. It allows somebody to file a false affidavit or an affidavit based on incorrect information and suddenly it stops an investigation and covers up a possible election irregularity. This cannot be construed in any manner as election reform.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, can the gentleman from Louisiana conceive of a responsible person, be he an incumbent in office, or the President of the United States, or, with all due respect to our former distinguished colleague, Rogers Morton, signing a false affidavit or signing a faulty affidavit on penalty of perjury?

I know in the case of Mr. Calloway that the President did not have to sign an affidavit saying that he has complete and absolute trust in him. I would not say that of Mr. Morton, but I would say it of Mr. Calloway. Does the gentleman think that anybody here with any sense of reason would put their name, sign a false affidavit, in order to free a staff person to work on their political campaign?

I would suggest to the gentleman from Louisiana that that is patently ridiculous since the person signing the affidavit, the mere fact of signing it under the law subjects that person to perjury.

Mr. MOORE. If that is true, then we have no need for this protection.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, let me say to the gentleman from Louisiana that I think the gentleman may have made a misstatement and I do not believe he really wants to stand on that statement when he understands it. This does not stop any further inquiry or investigation by anybody but the Federal Election Commission. If the person is really violating the law and the person who brought the charges had any evidence, then that person has the authority to go to the Department of Justice and they have every right and authority in the world not only to continue the investigation about the employee, but also to investigate the fellow who signed the affidavit if he so falsely swore. All we are talking about here are the 142 employees downtown who do not have enough to do and are looking for make work.

Mr. MOORE. I agree with the chairman's analysis of the law but I do stand on my statement that Congress has given the Federal Election Commission, rightly or wrongly, the authority to look into violations of the Federal election law. If that is going to be the case and if they can investigate complaints of anybody else, then they certainly ought to be able to investigate complaints against persons in Federal office.

Mr. ECKHARDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ECKHARDT. Mr. Chairman, I was trying to clear a point the chairman made a moment ago. I suppose it was implied that after the word "involved" should be added "by Federal Elections Commission." It does not in anyway insulate further inquiry or investigation of the employee or of his principal by any other agency with respect to the question of whether or not the affidavit was falsely signed.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield to the chairman, the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I will say to the gentleman that the language would be better if those words were in there, and I will say to him for legislative history that the section should be interpreted as though after "involved" it says "by the Federal Election Commission." It does not bar any investigation by any branch of Government which has criminal authority or otherwise.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would just like to point out that our challengers will be people who are employed by corporations who may be involved with unions. Each of them will have friends.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. MOORE was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. FRENZEL. If the gentleman will yield further, those people who are challengers do not have the same immunity from investigation by the Federal Election Commission, and therein lies the problem. We have given ourselves a carte blanche immunity from the investigation of the Commission, when we ourselves have been told to investigate election irregularities. But every person who runs against us does not have that same insulation and, therefore, the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I conclude by saying that this is a very harmful provision that is going to subject every Member of this House of Representatives who votes against this amendment to justifiable criticism of building in a coverup procedure. I do not think that was the intention of the gentleman who offered the provision in committee and I do not think that is the intention of the chairman or any member of the committee, but that is exactly the way it is going to be interpreted, so I urge its rejection and passage of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MATHIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

(Mr. MATHIS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MATHIS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Just let me say to the gentleman who just spoke in favor of the amendment that I happen to know of a case in a neighboring State where the campaign is already underway, and one Member of this House has a prosecuting attorney running against him who has 37 employees, and every one of them is engaged in his campaign right now. The Federal Election Commission cannot go into that State and say "boo" because they have no jurisdiction over State or county employees. But if his secretary picks up a phone and answers a question as to where one can get some of his literature, these people have already arrogated unto themselves the right to come into your office and hold an investigation and query your employees.

What I am saying to the gentleman is—and he can answer it any way he wants to—if he wants a double standard, one for incumbents and one for nonincumbents, I mean a double standard against incumbents, that is what we are going to have unless this language stays in the bill.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MATHIS. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. MOORE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Naturally, I will agree with the gentleman that one using his State employees to campaign is wrong. It should not be done. I do not think that is the issue before us.

I would agree that I do not see anything wrong with an employee answering a question—we brought this up in committee—for someone who calls, as long as he puts in a day's work for a day's pay and expects it to come from the public.

This is a coverup procedure that is going to subject this House to unnecessary criticism.

Mr. MATHIS. Mr. Chairman, I am just more than a little bit resentful of my amendment being called a coverup procedure, because it was never in any way intended to be a coverup procedure. It is intended, Mr. Chairman, to be a device by which we can avoid harassment by the people downtown and the Federal Election Commission which, as every Member of this House ought to know by now, has evolved into a head-hunting organization, and the heads they are hunting are not the challengers, they are after the heads of the incumbent Members of Congress. I think it is time that we wake up and realize what is going on downtown and vote down the Frenzel amendment and keep this very important provision in this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. ECKHARDT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the Frenzel amendment.

(Mr. ECKHARDT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ECKHARDT. Mr. Chairman, I think the chairman of the committee has greatly limited the language that has been used in this bill, and I think much of the objection to it is taken out by the construction that he gives the language.

If I understand that, this section 313 in every place it deals with the subject matter talks about the Commission and what the Commission will do and what the Commission's powers are, so it does not, as the chairman has indicated, in its general sweep, deal with anything but the enforcement powers and investigatory powers of the Commission. I think that should be made clear.

And in that respect the clear implication would be as if the last sentence read, "An affidavit given by the person holding Federal office that such staff employee is performing his regularly assigned duties"—and as I understand it we might read in at that point "for the pay involved"—"shall be a complete bar to any further inquiry or investigation of the matter involved." That is, investigation by the Commission.

I understand that is the intent of it. Is that correct?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I would say that is the intent of the language perfectly described, that it would bar investigation by the Commission and it would be for regularly assigned duties if the person involved was performing those regularly assigned duties.

Mr. ECKHARDT. Under that construction I do not believe the chairman or the framer of this language can be accused of having been overly biased in favor of the incumbent, because a Congressman is peculiarly subject to the risk in the first place, not a challenger. Another person would be less likely to be subject to the risk, and this would be only a confining of the Commission's review authority to the only person who would commonly be subject to the review authority in the first place.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. That is correct. And if the gentleman will yield further, let me say unless some protective language is in this bill, if the challenger will use this device to file charges against his incumbent, be they true or false, and mostly they will probably be false, and the Commission in its eagerness will come in, then there will be an eight-column heading: "Congressman So-and-So Investigated by Federal Election Commission," and in the minds of half the people that is just the same as if he is convicted.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ECKHARDT. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I would go one step further and say when we file the affidavit to stop the investigation then we will have gone through the complete turnabout, and the other half of the public would be of the other opinion and then you have the same situation.

Mr. ECKHARDT. I am sorry this is under such a confined rule, but it is impossible to amend the bill in a way that would be wholly palatable to me and I think to much of the public because of the rule, but I shall vote for the amendment striking the language because I think most of the construction we have described here would be in effect even if the language were stricken.

The thing that does worry me about this section is the absolute acceptance of the Member's statement as irrefutable, that his employee was acting properly. I do not think that is necessary. I think that generally the Member's statement will be accepted, and if the Member can come up with reasonable proof, and he has the control of most of the evidence, supporting his position, I do not think he needs this special protection, and I would hope that the amendment would be passed, but at the same time I do not attack the language as an extensively unfair or partisan provision.

I would ask for an "aye" vote on the amendment.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ECKHARDT. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I just wish to observe that Members of Congress are not the only ones who have risks. For example, a corporate executive can be a candidate for Congress. It can be alleged his secretary is working on his campaign and he, of course, is not given the opportunity to refute that allegation by filing the affidavit. Accordingly it is a protection only for incumbents in that regard.

Mr. ECKHARDT. But it would be very difficult for his employee to be attacked under this act.

Mr. WIGGINS. A corporate employee, of course, if paid by a corporation could not contribute that time to a candidacy. It would be illegal, and a challenger might very well be a corporate executive.

Mr. ECKHARDT. Let me say to the gentleman I am in favor of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL).

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FRENZEL) there were—ayes 42, noes 40.

So the amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. JOHN L. BURTON

Mr. JOHN L. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHN L. BURTON: On Page 45, line 2, strike out the "." and insert in lieu thereof ", imprisonment for not more than one year, or both."

Mr. JOHN L. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, this is a technical amendment. When we adopted the amendment in the committee that I proposed, it stated the criminal liabilities and liabilities as far as gifts of moneys and cash to a candidate for public office, the fines were put in, but there was an omission of the fact that there could also be an imprisonment term for more than 1 year.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the amendment is acceptable to both sides, because it was the intent of the committee when we adopted my amendment, but the draftsmanship was not perfect. It is a stringent reform. It puts people in jail.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHN L. BURTON. I yield to the gentleman from minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for that statement. I do concur. We have made, under this title of the bill, criminal penalties in line only for willful violations that involve more than $5,000. The gentleman is simply providing a criminal penalty for this particular crime or violation of the law, which would be a contribution of more cash than allowed under the law. I think it is a good amendment and should be voted favorably.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHN L. BURTON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I support the gentleman's amendment, but I must say it is a classic example of the hyprocrisy that pervades so much of the bill before Congress. It is a crime to make cash gifts in excess of the limits, but it is not a crime to receive the cash. The poor donor, who is likely to be completely ignorant with respect to the statute, runs the risk of going to jail and the candidate who has every reason to know the provision of the law goes off scot free. I think that is somewhat unfair; but however, even given the unfairness of the situation, I do support the amendment.

Mr. JOHN L. BURTON. Well, the gentleman could have offered an amendment in the markup and got support for it.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHN L. BURTON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, let me say, we accept the gentleman's amendment, but I do not really feel so strongly about the poor donor who is just giving $150,000 in a black bag. I think he knew what he was doing and I think he knew what the law said and I think he knew he was violating it. Some of them have thrown themselves on the mercy of the court. I do not know of any of them in jail yet. Just the receivers have gone to jail. So I am not going to shed any crocodile tears for anyone that has $150,000 in a black bag and can deliver it to anybody. I suppose in fairness the taker ought to get a sentence, too; but I do not think we ought to let the donor off scot free.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. JOHN L. BURTON).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. CLEVELAND

Mr. CLEVELAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CLEVELAND: Page 44, line 21, strike out "$250" and insert in lieu thereof "$100".

Mr. CLEVELAND. Mr. Chairman, this is probably one of the most simple and easily understood of the amendments that will be offered today. The present law limits the amount of a cash donation to $100, and for some reason the committee, after a rather short discussion, adopted an amendment to raise that to $250.

Actually I was an original supporter of a proposal to limit the amount of cash for a contribution to $50. There were quite a few of us who felt that way 2 years ago when we enacted the basic legislation but $100 is what was agreed to by most of the members of the committee and by the Committee of the Whole. I am not at this time attempting to go back to my original position of limiting the amount of cash to $50.

My amendment simply will return the limitation on a cash contribution back to where it is now, which is $100. I think one might almost call this an "incumbent's protection measure," because—if that is good or bad I do not know following some of this debate—but it seems to me that a lot of the trouble people get into in campaigns comes about through the use of cash.

I think it is bad when somebody gives to a campaign and does not feel that he can write a check and be on the record although I do know there are some people who deal in cash and do not have a checking account.

Mr. MATHIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLEVELAND. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MATHIS. Is it the gentleman's understanding that if there is a $250 cash contribution given to his own campaign, that it also has to be reported?

Mr. CLEVELAND. The law requires that it be reported.

Mr. MATHIS. Is it a violation of the law if it not be reported?

Mr. CLEVELAND. The temptation remains. The temptation is there not to record it. I am sure the gentleman understands that there are mortals who sometimes fall subject to temptation. He may be so fortunate as not to be one of those mortals. The use of cash introduces an element of uncertainty. In fact, if we want to look at it another way, there are some people who might send a couple of hundred dollars over to the gentleman's campaign, because they want to support him and the fine record he has compiled here in Congress, and the courier might be light-fingered and perhaps only $100 would arrive. The temptations are all the way along the line with excessive use of cash.

I think anything we do to reduce these areas of temptations is constructive. I think that is why the House a year ago did adopt the $100 limitation. I think we should return to it now.

Mr. MATHIS. If the gentleman will yield further, I think the gentleman knows the reason why this amendment was offered in the first place, and that is because there are a number of Members who have said that they have fund raisers which call for tickets to sell for $100. If someone came in and wanted one ticket for himself and one for his wife, he would violate the law if he paid cash. There is no attempt to do anything underhanded, to subvert the law. I do not think there is any intent to do that.

Mr. CLEVELAND. If the gentleman will bear with me for a moment, if he buys a ticket for $100 and turns to his wife and hands her $100 and she buys the ticket——

Mr. MATHIS. I think the gentleman knows that there is a provision in the law that provides for criminal penalties for using another as a conduit for funds. One cannot give money for another.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I did not say he would do that. The spouse can then in turn purchase the ticket.

Mr. MATHIS. Mr. Chairman, I give up.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

(Mr. HAYS of Ohio asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, as manager of the bill, I guess one is obligated to try to preserve the integrity of the bill against amendments. I am just going to throw this one out to the House. The Members can do what they like about it. I am not going to shed much blood over it. In fact, none at all. I will give the history of it.

Mr. Chairman, somebody in the committee offered an amendment to raise it from $100 to $200, and they explained their amendment. I do not remember who it was now. But the person made the statement, among other things, that one-third of the people of the United States, as I said yesterday, do not have a checking account. And he said he had a personal experience in which he had a dinner for $100 a plate and he lost $200 because he would not take $200 for 2 tickets, which he would have duly reported, from this man. And he said to the man, "I cannot take $200. Write me a check." And he said, "Well, I am not going to write a check, because I have a joint checking account with my wife, and I do not want her to know who I am taking to dinner," or maybe it was, "I do not want her to know I am not taking her to dinner."

Somebody said something about $250. I do not know where the extra $50 came from, but the original idea was to make it possible to allow a person to take a person to dinner with cash. I understand they do things more frugally in New Hampshire. When I was in New Hampshire I was charged $10 for a meal that should not have cost over $2.50. But be that as it may, this is what the amendment is all about, and the Members can do whatever they like with it.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

(Mr. WIGGINS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I want to pose a practical problem. Let us suppose a Member of this body sponsors a fundraising dinner and the price per ticket is fixed at $150. Let us suppose that a Member mails out his invitations using whatever mailing list he has available to him, and he receives in response to his solicitation an answer in the mail requesting two tickets and three crisp $100 bills—$300. What is the Member's obligation under the circumstances?

First of all, the Member should understand that he is exposed to no criminal liability for accepting the cash. But anyone who is willing to make that kind of contribution to the Member and his candidacy is entitled, I think, to be protected by the Member.

I would think the Member would owe an obligation to get on the phone and find out whether or not the donor is purchasing a ticket for himself and his wife. If the answer is that he is using common funds belonging to himself and his wife, it would be fair to conclude that both the wife and the husband are making a separate and individual contribution of $150, and neither the husband or wife is exposed to a risk under the statute.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGINS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS).

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I just listened to the last part of that explanation, because someone was talking over here. Is the gentleman trying to make legislative history that if someone writes a check for $200 out of a joint account and he does take his wife, then he is not exposed to any prosecution?

Mr. WIGGINS. He writes a check?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Or pays cash, either one.

Mr. WIGGINS. If he pays cash, $200, or $300 if the bill is unamended, for himself and his wife, in my opinion that is not a violation.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. He could not pay cash for more than $200, could he, if this language is stricken out?

Mr. WIGGINS. The bill prohibits an individual contribution of more than $250 in cash.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. That is right.

Mr. WIGGINS. The legislative history I am trying to make is that a contribution of $500 in cash by a husband and wife can be viewed as a contribution of $250 from each of them.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will agree with that.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I will agree with that, and by the same token, if the amendment prevails, a contribution of $200 by a husband and wife would be construed as a contribution of $100 from each of them.

Mr. WIGGINS. The gentleman is correct.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us take the tough case, the one posed by the gentleman from Ohio. In that case, it is apparent the man is not taking his wife, but he is buying two tickets, one for himself and one for a friend. In that event, I believe the person who purchased the tickets and who paid the cash should be advised that his cash contribution is illegal. It would not be any more appropriate for a person to buy an extra ticket for someone else, if the aggregate amount of the purchase is in excess of the cash limitation, than it would be for him to buy a whole table and pay cash.

In other words, I think Members owe it to the people who come to their dinners to save them from possible criminal liability by advising them of the cash limitation and the possibility of a joint contribution by husband and wife, which right does not attach to strangers.

Mr. JOHN L. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I would just like to reinforce what the chairman of the committee said as to how this amendment got into the law. What happened was that I had the previous amendment to put in the criminal penalty for $100, and the gentleman from California raised the issue about this: What do we do when somebody comes up and peels off two $100 bills to get tickets for a fundraiser?

That started the process moving toward this: that in effect somebody could pay cash for tickets for husband and wife, and they figured, well, now, dinners cost $125 and, therefore, $250 will cover a husband and wife.

However, if the gentleman who raised the issue in the committee and got the price changed from $100 to $250 feels he made a mistake in raising the issue, I think I was right at that time in believing it was a mistake to raise the issue. Apparently the gentleman thinks the gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. CLEVELAND) has offered a good amendment, and I am glad the other gentleman from California realizes he made a mistake when he raised the issue in the first place that resulted in increasing the amount from $100 to $250.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. CLEVELAND).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I just wish to thank the chairman of the committee, the very distinguished gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS), for recognizing the frugality with which we conduct our affairs in the State of New Hampshire, and I hope that when he is dumping money into my opponent's campaign, he will be equally frugal.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, perhaps the gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. CLEVELAND) does not understand the kind of frugality I am talking about. There are two different kinds up in New Hampshire, and maybe the gentleman missed my point.

There is one kind of frugality in New Hampshire that they practice on themselves and among themselves, but then they drop that when they are practicing on outsiders. What I was pointing out is that their prices are not so frugal when it comes to tourists.

I made that point, and I will try to be frugal, I will say to the gentleman, when it comes to campaign time and when I find that they charge me four times as much as a meal is worth.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FRENZEL

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FRENZEL: Page 27, strike out line 7 through line 21.

And redesignate the following subsection accordingly.

Page 53, strike out line 8 and all that follows through page 54, line 15.

And redesignate the following sections accordingly.

Page 58, line 13, strike out "305" and insert in lieu thereof "304".

(Mr. FRENZEL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, this is rule No. (5), as made in order under the rule.

It strikes from the bill that section which has come to be called the "item veto." It deletes language which allows, under this bill, the House or the Senate, either one, by resolution, to veto regulations, in whole or in part.

Under the existing law, either House of Congress, by resolution, can disapprove any regulation sent to us under the law by the Federal Election Commission.

That procedure has not worked terribly well because, I think we should frankly say, partly because of the failure of the Commission and perhaps partly because of a failure of our own. Nevertheless, it is generally conceded that this disapproval process for regulations, at least until we develop some experience, ought to be maintained.

However, Mr. Chairman, this bill before us goes a good deal further. Instead of simply saying that we can veto a regulation or disapprove a regulation, this bill says that we can veto a regulation in whole or in part. Here, again, is another death blow at the independence of the Federal Election Commission because this bill gives the Congress the ability to take any part of a regulation and strike it down.

Under our Constitution we do not allow our Federal Executive an item veto of acts of Congress. Many States do not allow that kind of item veto. In almost no cases do we have a veto of regulations of independent commissions. In almost no cases do we have a veto of regulations which we allow the agencies to write.

My goodness, we are giving the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare carte blanche authority to write regulations. We let OSHA run around and regulate us without veto, but in this one, because it affects us, we have given ourselves not only the veto, but in this particular bill before us we have given ourselves an item veto. That means that anything we find that conflicts with our interest in any regulation can be stricken, and that matter can be disapproved while the rest of the regulation can be approved.

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. Mr. Chairman, first I would like to note that the committee report is perfectly clear.

It states, on page 8, the fourth item, as follows:

4. The provision in the amendment relating to congressional review of proposed regulations permitting disapproval in part reflects the current understanding and is intended to permit disapproval of discrete self-contained sections or subdivisions of proposed regulations and is not intended to permit the rewriting of regulations by piecemeal changes.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to submit to the gentleman that he is straining at a gnat. The Commission only has to come in with individual self-contained regulations, and this section then would have no application. It is only if the Commission comes in with a omnibus proposal, with 18 good provisions and 3 bad ones or 18 bad provisions and 3 good ones, no matter how one chooses to describe it. We are preventing omnibus take-it-all or leave-it-all kind of confrontations. If the Commission comes in, as the committee report makes absolutely clear, with a single, separate, self-contained regulation, this particular provision would have no applicability at all, because the problem the provision is designed to avoid, abuse by the Commission, will have been treated with by the Commission.

Mr. Chairman, following the commonsense thought that they are not going to get us in a position where we must swallow—or reject—everything.

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's yielding.

I only wish to say that I share the interpretation and the observations of the gentleman from California (Mr. PHILLIP BURTON), and I hope that the gentleman's amendment is passed.

Mr. ECKHARDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ECKHARDT. Mr. Chairman, I am merely asking here for information.

Why does the gentleman strike lines 11 through 21? It would seem to me that that just has to do with facilitating the process of any veto, or does the gentleman find that the general veto is covered somewhere else? That has not been made clear.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. FRENZEL was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. ECKHARDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ECKHARDT. I am simply asking about (2). It seems to me that it only provides a shorthand procedure for the veto resolution; and I am not sure that that would not apply to both the item veto and the veto of the entire submission, but I just want to find out whether the gentleman knows whether (2) should not stay in as necessary machinery with respect to the full veto. I do not know the answer to that.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I have the same opinion as the gentleman from Texas has that (2) applies to both the item veto and a full disapproval. The reason that my amendment seeks to strike it is that it was written by the Committee on House Administration and in my judgment whatever basis we have for disapproval or vetoes in this House should be a uniform one and should be drawn by the Committee on Rules, and become a part of the permanent rules of the House. But I think if we start putting these kind of rules all around we will scatter them far and wide apart and they simply do not belong there. We have had no trouble bringing these kind of resolutions to the floor of the House in the past. Therefore I thought it was extraneous in the Election Commission bill.

Mr. ECKHARDT. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, if I may proceed, I will try to be as brief as possible because I think in view of the startling lack of success I had with my amendment on the advisory provisions I am not completely sure that the committee will sustain this amendment.

I must say nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, that notwithstanding the language in the committee report, it will be quite easy for the committees of the House or the Senate to pick out subdivisions of the rules which are considered to be not in the interest of the Members. In my judgment this weakens the rule making authority of the Election Commission and is a vital part to its independence and, even though it does not allow the House to rewrite a single word or a number, as long as it applies to subdivisions and to separate sections I think it should be stricken from the bill.

I hope the committee will sustain my amendment.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL).

(Mr. HAYS of Ohio asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) has more amendments to this bill than all the rest of the Members of the House put together. I do not know exactly what motivates the gentleman, and I am not going to try to speculate, but he has now not only become the conscience of the committee, he has also become the conscience of the Committee on Rules. He is saying that we are usurping the power of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. Chairman, this bill was before the Committee on Rules and they granted it a rule. If they had wanted to have stricken this out, they could have done it right there and then.

There is a reason for this procedure being in this bill. It is not in there without a reason. The gentleman from California (Mr. PHILLIP BURTON) has just explained what it does and has described the extremely proscribed language in the report.

Why do we have this provision in about presenting it as a privileged, you might say, resolution? I will tell the Members why. On one of the regulations which we had been debating bringing up here for a veto, I thought that I had reached an agreement with the chairman of the Election Commission and that they would rewrite the resolution. I went home for the weekend and the chairman of the Election Committee delivered a letter to the Speaker saying that they would not rewrite it. We had until Tuesday in which to bring it up. So we had to go to the Committee on Rules in a Monday afternoon session, which was unusual, and get a rule and come here on Tuesday morning.

I just do not want the committee to be foreclosed from what the law says it can do by any trickery from downtown. I have found the Committee on Rules to be very cooperative. I have no objection to going before them. I do not believe I have ever been before them on anything that they have not granted me a rule on. But they did not find any objection to this, and it seems more than passing strange to me why the gentleman from Minnesota wants to deliver this Congress handcuffed and shackled to the Federal Election Commission. I do not know whether he envisions defeat and wants to be a member of it, or what is going on with him.

But I thought when we got four exmembers of Congress on that commission, we would have some understanding, and I have now about decided that what we have is kind of a love-hate relationship. They left the House. They got beat, so now they hate it. Maybe I am misreading it, but that is the way it appears to me in my dealings with them.

All we are trying to do here is take some precautions. As the gentleman from California (Mr. PHILLIP BURTON) said, if they come in with a regulation that encompasses 21 different items, and 19 of them are good, we do not have to veto the whole 19 to get at the 2. What I prefer having them do, and maybe we should have written language that way, is bring in a regulation that deals with one item. But we did not do that. We do not intend to rewrite the things here on the floor. We do not intend to take out a sentence. The language in the report speaks for itself. It is only when it deals with a different subject that we can veto one subject and let the other one go through.

Mr. JOHN L. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

(Mr. JOHN L. BURTON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. JOHN L. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California (Mr. PHILLIP BURTON) the elder, I think explained very succinctly what the in-whole-or-in-part provision does. It really lets us expedite approval of the actions or regulations. If they come up with a compound triple issue regulation, and one of those regulations may be without the purview of their authority, the whole regulation does not have to be vetoed and sent back if two of the regulations can be approved forthwith. So the whole procedure here is not to be able to say candidates for public office shall not be able to make cash in the amount of $2 million; strike out "not" and say that Members of Congress shall be able to take cash. For anybody to figure out that that is what this does does not make much sense or have much logic. It merely permits us to deal in a logical and expeditious way with regulations if they come up in a multi-issued source.

As far as the previous resolution, it is the same thing. It allows expedition to the floor of the House so the House can work its will on that amendment. That is all it does. God knows if the Committee on Rules did not think they were being circumvented—and we know they are fairly generous with their prerogatives, but occasionally they like to keep a tight rein—I do not think the House can feel that this provision of the law does something other than expedite the handling of that. If I thought that this language would permit us to take "shall not" and make it "shall," I could not support it. I do not know anyone who could.

This does not let us rewrite anything; it does not even let us change a complex sentence or even a compound sentence; but if there are three or four or five subsections that are different issues dealing with different subject matters, it allows the expeditious approval of those that are approved and the expeditious disapproval of those disapproved. Again, it just allows the House to work its will expeditiously.

The chairman of the committee or the members of the committee cannot sit in the room and start writing things out. The majority of the House can work its will, but this allows us to do it in an expeditious manner and in a manner that is consistent with even what the Federal Election Commission, I believe, understands the process should be.

So, I strongly oppose the amendment, because it does not do what my good friend, the gentleman from Minnesota, says. It does not let us rewrite anything; it merely lets the House work its will in an expeditious manner so that amendments that can be accepted can be accepted and those rejected, rejected. We do not have to reject the whole package if it is tied up like one of the Christmas trees that the other body sends over every time when we are dealing with a little matter of tax reform.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, if I may have the attention of the chairman of the committeee, the gentleman from Ohio, page 8 of the report deals specifically with the issue which is the subject of the Frenzel amendment.

Paragraph 4 on page 8 states the following:

> The provision in the amendment relating to congressional review of proposed regulations permitting disapproval in part reflects the current understanding and is intended to permit disapproval of discrete self-contained sections or subdivisions of proposed regulations and is not intended to permit the rewriting of regulations by piecemeal changes.

I am aware, of course, that the chairman signed the majority report, but I can ask the chairman now if that remains his intention?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. If the gentleman will yield. Absolutely. The gentleman from California (Mr. PHILLIP BURTON) perhaps—and he stepped out now—read that same section and in my speech I said I agreed, or thought I did, or thought I made clear, that paragraph 4 on page 8 is the intent of the committee.

If we need legislative history in this colloquy, to cement it down, the gentleman from California has my 100-percent endorsement that is exactly what we meant.

Mr. WIGGINS. As interpreted by legislative history, by agreement of the majority with which I also agree, I think that the problem to which our friend, the gentleman from Minnesota, spoke are largely diffused. There is clearly the need to deal with single regulations which may become compound and involve several subjects. This language would permit the excising of separate discrete provisions and, accordingly, I cannot support the gentleman's amendment in view of this explanation.

But I want to take just a moment to say that all of us should now be aware that we are dealing with a very complicated statute and a very complicated bill. It takes a special dedication, I think, Mr. Chairman, to have and to maintain an interest in legislation of this sort. I want to compliment the gentleman from Minnesota for his energy and his knowledge of this subject. We all recall that he played a major role in fashioning the bill in 1974, I believe it was, and he happens to be one of the few Members in this House who can speak from a background of knowledge. For that reason I think his contributions to the committee and to the House should not be, and I am sure were not intended to be, diminished by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, of course I did not mean to cast any reflections on the gentleman at all. I agree the gentleman knows a great deal about the subject and contributed a great deal in the committee. I think the gentleman, under my tutelage and the tutelage of the gentleman from California, has matured a lot and this time instead of having 150 amendments he had only 25. The gentleman is coming along. I like him and maybe now, if he has listened to our colloquy—I am not optimistic about this—but I hope that he might even want to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. MIKVA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word and I rise in mild support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in mild support of the amendment and strong support of the amendment's sponsor, because while

I have heard the colloquy and I am reassured, I still hope the conferees will find a different way to accomplish this end than is now in the bill; for this reason I take the floor at this time for a minute.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. If the gentleman will yield, if the gentleman's amendment prevails the conferees will not have any chance to be in favor of anything, so in my judgment the gentleman in the well ought to be in mild disapproval of the amendment.

Mr. MIKVA. Maybe when I am finished with this colloquy I might be.

I would say this to the chairman as well as to the members of the committee. I read the committee report and it is very clear, and I read the bill and it is very clear, and the bill very clearly says: "in whole or in part."

As I have understood the use of legislative history, and I admit I have been out of law school for a long time, we do not get to look at the committee report if the language of the bill is clear. I can only say to my colleagues at this point that I am glad we have this consensus of what we mean. That is not what we are saying. Unfortunately, the courts traditionally have said, "We look at what you say before we look at what you intended to say."

Mr. Chairman, I strongly support the purpose of what I understand this provision was intended to do. I think being multifarious in regulation drafting is an unfair thing to do.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MIKVA. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment fails, I wil attempt in conference, along with the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS) and others who will be in the conference committee, to write the language more clearly; but I have always understood that if there is any doubt about what the law says, the courts always look at the legislative intent.

Now, what we intend is only if there are substantial areas of difference. They sent up a regulation of disclosure which had 41 different areas. We might have agreed with 39 of them, but under the way the law is made, we had to turn the whole thing down or swallow the whole thing and the report was separate and distinct in the areas covered. What we are trying to say is that if the regulation is 95 percent good, we do not have to veto it in order to get rid of the bad parts.

Mr. MIKVA. Mr. Chairman, let me say, in the efforts to clean up the language by this amendment, I do withdraw my support, but I do hope we do it better in the conference than currently in the bill.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MIKVA. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I do thank the gentleman for this temporary mild support and I thank the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from California for their kind words.

Mr. ECKHARDT. Mr. Chairman I move to strike the requisite number of words. I rise in opposition to the amendment. I shall not take the 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I think it would be very mischievous to adopt an amendment that strikes item two. As much as I despise and abhor the legislative veto procedure, if we are going to it, we ought not to kill it by making it impossible. The thing is, if we are going to have only 30 days to veto these acts, we cannot depend upon a waiver from the Committee on Rules, or else we delegate total authority to the Committee on Rules to veto it or permit it. I think what we have pointed out is the bad part of offering this thing under such a limited rule. I would have preferred to have voted in favor of the first part of the amendment striking lines 7 through 10, but when we put in the package the striking of the only practical procedure by which the veto process can be worked, it seems to me that we are rolling into a single amendment two very different subject matters.

Mr. Chairman, I would recommend a no vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL).

The amendment was rejected.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WIGGINS

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WIGGINS: On page 45, line 19, strike "$50000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2500".

(Mr. WIGGINS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment to the section dealing with penalties for violation of the act. The new section contained in the bill represents a positive advance over current law, since it requires that violations be knowing and willful before penalties attach to those violations; however, it contains another provision which I think is unconscionable and ought to be amended.

On page 45, line 19—the Members have the bill before them—they will observe that the violation must exceed $5,000 before the possibility of any jail time accrues to the violator. If the violation is in an amount less than $5,000, there is the possibility of fines only. Now, this classification of violations of less than $5,000 and more than $5,000 is, in my opinion, an irrational one which is capable of mischief.

For example, the Members all know that it is illegal to accept a contribution from a corporation, and they all know that it is illegal to accept a contribution from a labor union. If one violates that proscription knowingly and willfully, but the amount of the violation is $4,500, one violates no penal—that is, one risks no jail time as the result of that violation.

I would think, members of the Committee, that there are certain egregious actions which fall beneath the $5,000 limitation which ought to expose the violator to the possibility of going to jail. Members should be assured that we are not talking about mandatory sentencing here.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGINS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, we discussed this amendment, as the gentleman knows, in the committee. We had quite a discussion on it, and there was not a unanimous position taken.

So far as I am concerned—and the chairman himself takes the same position—we have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. WIGGINS. I am pleased to hear that. I will simply wrap up my last sentence by saying that these are discretionary penalties only; they are not mandatory jail sentences. A court should not be denied the discretion of dealing harshly with a particularly egregious case.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FRENZEL AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WIGGINS

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FRENZEL as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. WIGGINS: Page 45, line 19, strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000".

(Mr. FRENZEL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I would just like the prospective amendment reread. My attention was diverted for a moment, and I am not certain of the line to which the amendment refers.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will rereport the substitute amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk reread the substitute amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON. I thank the chair.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, the rationale presented by the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS) in support of his amendment applies likewise to my own. Under this section of the bill, in order to qualify for a criminal penalty, an offense has to be committed in a willful and knowing manner and be over $5,000, or, as seems likely, the Wiggins amendment will be adopted and it must be over $2,500.

Now, what that means, of course, is that if one contributes $2,400 over the contribution limit, one will not be subjected to a criminal penalty. One would be subjected only to some kind of a civil penalty. A corporation, as I understand this section of the law, may contribute $2,400 to a campaign and not be subject to criminal penalties, but only subject to civil penalties.

It seems to me that it was a good thing in this bill to set up both a civil and criminal procedure. It was a good thing to set up a conciliation procedure, because our aim in this kind of a law is to encourage people to get into politics, not to be so afraid that they will stay out.

On the other hand, once we establish an offense or violation, it has to be a willful or knowing one. And once we establish a limitation, it should be a reasonable limitation. We should not say to Stuart Mott, for instance,

"If you want to contribute $2,400 or $4,900 more than you are allowed to under the law, we will only let you off with a civil penalty, there will be no danger of a criminal penalty."

This amendment offered by the gentleman from California is not severe at all. It is simply a matter of degree. His amendment is a good one. I think my amendment is a better one.

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from California (Mr. PHILLIP BURTON).

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, to eliminate any misconception or any political ambiguity, I am going to vote and urge my colleagues to vote for the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman for his support.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. BINGHAM). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS).

The amendment offered as a substitute for the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS), as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FRENZEL

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FRENZEL: On page 29, line 7, strike the word "by" and strike all of line 8.

(Mr. FRENZEL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment simply strikes the first part of section 112. That section has eliminated from the current law the provision that candidates for Federal office or for Congress must file their disclosure reports with their local secretaries of state. It strikes the first part of section 112 referring only to the secretaries of state.

That portion was put in the bill in an attempt to reduce unnecessary paperwork. However, it is felt by many people that the local press and local observers of the political scene find it much easier to get this information within the State than they do to pick it up from Washington or to have to come out here or to pick it up from an expensive wire service. So while I think the intention of this particular provision was pretty good, I think we are doing the concept of disclosure a disservice. Therefore we should pass this amendment which to reinstate this disclosure provision with the secretaries of state.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. THOMPSON).

Mr. THOMPSON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, without expressing an opinion for or against the amendment, is it not so that if this legislation becomes law, the laws of the several States relating to elections are preempted with respect to Federal elections by this law? Is that the gentleman's understanding?

Mr. FRENZEL. No. As I understand it, the law now provides for preemption of State law by the existing Federal elections law.

Mr. THOMPSON. If the gentleman will yield further, to put it another way, the existing law, as amended by what we are proposing here, does in fact preempt the State laws?

Mr. FRENZEL. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. THOMPSON. So the effect of this amendment would be perhaps that it provides availability of information on the local level, especially in the smaller States, and copies of our reports to the Federal Election Commission would be filed with the secretaries of state of the respective States?

Mr. FRENZEL. Yes, if this amendment is agreed to.

Mr. THOMPSON. If this amendment is agreed to. And it serves no purpose other than that, the secretaries of state not having any control at all over this?

Mr. FRENZEL. The gentleman is correct. The disclosure or the filing is informational in nature only.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by my colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL), not because I am interested in generating extra paperwork—I am not—but because I feel that as long as we are required to file as much detail as we are here with the Federal Election Commission and with the Clerk of the House, et cetera, it is just as helpful to file with the Secretary of State.

In many cases we are required to file some kind of a report with the county registrar of voters. That is true in California.

This merely is a duplication. This procedure will mean that we just duplicate what we file here. It also eliminates the belief that we are in any way trying to withhold information on a local level.

The State of California has a fair practice commission. They have recommended that those of us from California support the amendment offered by my colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL), and I favor his amendment because I think it is merely a duplication of what we are already filing anyway.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. (Mr. BINGHAM). The time of the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. FRENZEL was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to commend the gentleman for offering his amendment.

I found that the logistical problems involved in finding the reports that were filed in Washington were difficult for me the first time I ran, even though I am from a nearby State. I am sure the problem is intensified for those who are from States farther away than New Jersey.

Mr. Chairman, I support the gentleman's amendment, and I wish to commend him on the variety of the amendments he has offered, many of which I support. I think the gentleman is doing an excellent job in attempting to improve the bill.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his support.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have not opposed every amendment the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) has offered. I oppose this one strictly on the basis of an experience that happened to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. DEVINE) and myself as the result of filing with the Secretary of State.

I have talked with some secretaries of state about this, and they say that this is a bad thing. They have no procedure in the State law for handling it. I do not know how they file it. I suppose in some States they file it in file 13 because there is nothing in the law that says they have to preserve it.

At one time I was the victim of a press conference held by a certain individual representing an organization. That organization or at least the president of it, I should say, likes to compare himself to the Almighty. He went to Columbus, Ohio, and held a press conference, and he said that the chairman of the committee and the ranking member of the committee had failed on the first test to comply with the law.

I am not blaming the secretary of state for this, although he is no friend of mine or has not been in the past. I think he is a friend of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. DEVINE); at least he is from the same political party.

What happened apparently was that whoever received those reports did not know what to do with them. Whatever they should have done, they did not do it, and they did not have them there.

We got an ocean of bad publicity when the reports were there all the time.

The secretary later said that mine arrived a day late. With the U.S. mail the way it is, the U.S. Postal Corporation, I am happy it did not arrive a week late; but the papers the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. DEVINE) also got stuffed under some papers or dropped in the corner or something.

Mr. Chairman, this is just duplication. We talk about accessibility. There is not a daily newspaper in the United States that I know of, and I have quite a number of them in my district, some having a circulation of as little as 5,000, who do not subscribe to the AP or the UPI. At filing time either the AP or the UPI can get a copy of anybody's report, a xeroxed copy. If the paper out there requests it, they will put it on the wire. It is usually, perhaps, a lot more accurate, because it is a copy of the original, than is what they are going to get from the secretary of state.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is a matter of life or death with the Congress, but we just keep adding regulations which generate more paper.

Mr. Chairman, I had predicted, as the chairman of the Select Committee on Excess Paperwork, which former Speaker McCormack insisted I assume, after my futile experience with that in butting my head against the stonewall of bureaucracies, that if this country or this democracy is ever destroyed, it will not be by revolution. It will be drowned in a sea of reports and papers.

Mr. Chairman, this is just one little effort to cut down on a little bit of it in the 50 States.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, is there any place in this bill where we attempt to impose duties on State legislatures or State officials by virtue of the Federal law?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. No.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Generally when a person such as a secretary of state or comparable counterpart in other States has a duty to receive something for filing, that duty carries with it the obligation for safekeeping, for making copies, for making them available for public inspection, for doing all sorts of things.

It seems to me that if we are going to simply send some paper to a secretary of state, such as in my State of Michigan, and not call upon him to perform any duties with respect to safekeeping or public display or public access or other requirements, it is a vain and useless act.

It would seem to me that if, on the other hand, this amendment is intended to imply that the secretary of state in Michigan has the duty for safekeeping, the duty for filing, the duty for copying, and so forth, that that is an unconstitutional infringement on the power of the State legislature. I do not understand what it is. It is either a vain and useless act or it is a clear invasion of the province of the State constitutional authority, both in its constitution and in its legislative body.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. It is probably both, I will say to the gentleman; and it would probably be just as useful to put in here that we send a Christmas greeting.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. BINGHAM). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL).

The question was taken; and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 293, noes 111, not voting 28, as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, during general debate yesterday I addressed myself, on the basis of personal knowledge and intent, to the question of corporate and union contributions to candidates and political committees, and I stated that I would expand upon those remarks. My purpose here is to establish legislative history which is so clear that it cannot again be misinterpreted by the Federal Election Commission.

The Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976, H.R. 12406, specifically corrects the FEC's erroneous interpretation as set forth in advisory opinion No. 23, commonly referred to as SUNPAC. What follows is a background explanation, and appended matters relating directly to it. The material demonstrates the need for the proposed statutory correction of the FEC's mistake.

During debate on the amendment to the United States Code section, upon which section the FEC based its erroneous decision in SUNPAC, I stated the following:

> What the gentleman's amendment will do is simple. It, in effect, incorporates the case law into existing statutory law, and would allow within a very limited area, already existing in the Law, the expenditure of certain treasury moneys, or corporate moneys, for the sole purpose of reaching either union members, or stockholders in the corporation . . . (93 Record 43385).

The case law to which I refer in the above quotation is typified by United States v. U.A.W., 352 U.S. 567 (1957).

Innumerable other references during the debate on November 30, 1971, made it clear that business entities were to be allowed to solicit their stockholders using corporate treasury funds in order to create parity with unions, who by reason of the Supreme Court decision in U.S. against UAW cited above, were allowed to solicit their membership using union treasury funds.

The SUNPAC decision (A.O.–23) by the Federal Election Commission changed that law, and allowed business entities to solicit employees in addition to stockholders. By means of an advisory opinion, this independent, nonelected, six-member body usurped the legislative function of the Congress in general, and the House in particular. This unaccountable group of six persons drastically modified the equitable balance which had been the national policy established during the 92d Congress.

The Commission's misinterpretation of existing law has many undesirable facets. But the two most glaring problems created by the erroneous decision are: First, the proliferation of political action committees—PAC's; and second, the coercion inherent in the solicitation of employees by employers.

First, with respect to proliferation, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 29, 1976, lists the most recent PAC's, and shows the exponential growth in political action committees funded by both the business community and labor unions. It is true that PAC's provide an opportunity for some form of passive participation in the electoral process by contributors. It is a fact, however, that there were a multitude of such committees through which moneys were "laundered" during the Watergate affair, and that the sheer number of such committees provided the opportunity for nonaccountability, and the occasion for the abuses.

The exponential growth of corporate PAC's was occasioned by the SUNPAC advisory opinion, which purportedly legitimized extensive solicitation by the PAC's of corporate employees. Unions reacted to the corporate PAC proliferation by encouraging locals to set up PAC's, and we are now witnessing the seesaw effect of the wholly unnecessary and unjustifiable imbalance created by the Federal Election Commission.

Second, with respect to employee coercion, it is simply a fact that solicitations by an employer, no matter for what purpose, and no matter how well-intentioned, are psychologically coercive. The employee is going to be intimidated and coerced, because the entity soliciting the funds is, for all practical purposes, the same as, or closely related to the one which also gives the salary raises and promotions. This fundamental principle was a major reason for the particular balance established by section 610 in 1971, which the SUNPAC advisory opinion so drastically altered in 1975.

This bill corrects these two Commission-created problems. First, it reestablishes the congressionally determined balance between the interests of the business community and its stockholders, and the interests of the labor community and its membership. And I must say here that it seems ludicrous for the Congress to have to reestablish existing law just because an unelected six-member panel decided to "repeal" the law. Second, it places some rational organizational framework on the proliferation of PAC's by both business and labor, thus avoiding the anonymity of multi-PAC's, and lessening the chances for Watergate-type laundering and other abuses. This reaffirmation of congressional policy provides not only a means of correcting the Commission's most glaring mistake, but produces several affirmative and salutary results.

First, it allows an opportunity for reasonable oversight by the Commission—if there are too many PAC's and not enough investigators, then there is likely to be selective or no enforcement.

Second, it in no way limits the class of contributors, but only the class which may be solicited. This should have the effect of encouraging grassroots level participation by those who wish to participate, while protecting from coercion those who do not wish to participate.

Third, it does not limit the number of PAC's which a corporate or union entity—or its divisions, subdivision, subsidies, or locals—may establish, but only the amount which those PAC's, considered collectively, may contribute to a candidate or an earmarked political committee.

There is another area which needs substantial clarification. That is the significance of "dicta" in the Buckley against Valeo decision. I address the point because, on March 1, 1976, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States issued a memorandum which addressed itself to the Buckley against Valeo decision, and to the substance of this bill. The chamber took dicta, contained in explanatory footnotes of the Supreme Court decision, and elevated that dicta to a constitutional pronouncement of the right of corporations to solicit not only shareholders, but also employees.

First of all, dicta are merely, and I quote from Black's Law Dictionary, "opinions of a judge which do not embody the resolution or determination of the court, and are made without argument, or full consideration of the point, and are not the professed deliberate determinations of the judge himself." Second, the question of corporate solicitation of employees was not even before the Court.

The chamber's memorandum substantially misrepresents the Supreme Court's decision in Buckley. For example, the memorandum at page 2 states that certain provisions of the pending bill "are absolutely contrary to the Supreme Court's interpretation of the law to mean that corporate political action committees may solicit not only their shareholders, but also their employees." This is grossly misleading. The Court, in its discussion of limitations on political contributions by individuals, observed in a footnote that—

> Corporate and union resources . . . may be employed . . . to solicit contributions from employees, stockholders, and union members.

However this random comment is an example of dicta. It cannot by any stretch of the imagination be regarded as a decision of the Court with respect to solicitation rights of either corporations or unions, for such issues were not even before the Court in Buckley.

This kind of misleading analysis is repeated by the Chamber's memorandum in its discussion of multiple political committees sponsored by the same corporation or labor union. On page 4 of the memorandum, following a description of language in the pending legislation which the memorandum says would "prohibit companies from establishing separate PAC's for subsidiaries or divisions," the following statement appears:

> This is contrary to the Supreme Court's decision in Buckley v. Valeo, which held that corporations and labor organizations may establish multiple political committees . . .

It is true that the Court in the cited footnote observed that—

> The Act places no limit on the number of funds that may be formed through the use of subsidiaries or divisions of corporations. . . .

But this statement by no means constituted a decision of the Court, and again amounted only to an expository statement of the kind familiar to any reader of appellate court opinions.

It is the Sun Oil advisory opinion itself which gave rise to the current controversy over corporate solicitation. In that advisory opinion the FEC indicated its agreement with an interpretation of section 610 advanced by the Sun Oil Co., which interpretation many Members of the Congress regard as flatly contrary to the intent of the original legislation. In any event, neither the FEC's advisory opinion in Sun Oil, nor the Court's dicta in Buckley, can be stretched to the magnitude of a constitutional pronouncement. Both Sun Oil and, a fortiori, the dicta, involved statutory construction.

The Chamber thus first misreads the dicta to be decisions of the Court, and then misreads the alleged decisions to address a subject not even contemplated by the Court.

The following material relates to my statements above, and should be considered by the House for the purposes of debate of H.R. 12406:

[Common Cause, Mar. 10, 1976]

SPECIAL INTEREST GROUPS ACCUMULATE $16.4 MILLION FOR 1976 POLITICAL CAMPAIGNS, UP MORE THAN FORTY PERCENT OVER SIMILAR PERIOD IN 1974, COMMON CAUSE STUDY REVEALS

Special interest groups have accumulated $16.4 million for the 1976 political campaigns, according to a new study released by Common Cause. The $16.4 million political warchest—cash on hand as of January 1976—represents an increase of more than 40 percent over the $11.7 million held by interest groups at a similar early stage of the 1974 elections (February 28, 1974), the study revealed.

"The $16.4 million figure doesn't even begin to tell the story," according to Fred Wertheimer, Common Cause Vice President and Director of its Campaign Finance Monitoring Project. "In one of the most significant developments since the passage of the 1974 campaign finance law, 242 new political giving committees have been es special interest groups during th (See Appendix A for complete of these new interest group comi just begun their drive to accum for the 1976 elections. The new committees so far only $978,000 with $496,000 accu just one group, a new committee with the American Trial Lawye tion.

The study notes that the hug between funds available for old and those available for new comr change dramatically over the cou as the new committees carry out fundraising drives.

BUSINESS-RELATED COMMITT

Almost 75 percent of the 242 new committees have been formed by business-related interests, according to the study. One hundred and seven corporations and 22 banks have established new political committees in the last year, more than doubling the number of corporations and banks with registered committees prior to the 1974 elections. Seventeen oil companies have registered political action committees for the first time, including Atlantic Richfied Co., Cities Service Co., Standard Oil of California, Standard Oil of Ohio, Sun Oil Co. and Texaco. Prior to the 1974 elections, only one oil company, Union Oil of California, had registered a political committee.

Eight steel companies have registered funds for the first time, including ARMCO Steel Co., Lykes-Youngstown, National Steel Corp., Republic Steel Corp. and U.S. Steel.

Four major aerospace corporations—Grumman Corp., Lockheed Aircraft Corp., McDonnell Douglas Corp. and United Technologies (formerly United Aircraft) have also registered committees for the first time.

Other major corporations registering new political committees include American Express Co., Bristol-Myers Co., Continental Can Co., Dow Chemical Co., Litton Industries, Montgomery Ward & Co., Pan American Airlines, Pepsico Inc., R. J. Reynolds Industries and Sears, Roebuck & Co.

The remaining 25 percent of the new committees registering were sponsored by labor organizations and miscellaneous groups. Most of the 36 newly registered labor-related political committees represent additional committees formed by labor unions which already had one or more political committees prior to the 1974 elections. The Communication Workers of America, for example, registered 12 additional committees, and the Machinists registered four additional committees.

"Comprehensive public financing for the 1976 Presidential elections assures that the great bulk of all interest group contributions in 1976—new or old, business or labor, medical or dairy—are destined for the Congressional races," Wertheimer said. "These developments present one of the most compelling cases yet made on the need for Congressional public financing."

"They also demonstrate that it is essential for Congress to make clear that an organization cannot set up a number of political committees and thereby render meaningless the $5,000 limit on what an organization's political committee can give to a candidate. The need for this 'antiproliferation' legislation is strikingly demonstrated by just two [redacted] creates a labyrinthine plan with so many snares as to discourage individuals from seeking elective office."

"It changes the rules in the middle of the game."

"It makes the Federal Election Commission a mere subcommittee of Congress."

"Congress should only reconstitute the Commission at this time to meet the objections of the Supreme Court."

"We should extend public financing to all congressional elections."

These are examples of just some of the rhetoric currently in vogue.

If we had the luxury of debating and amending this bill for the next year, there would still be some critics who would be dissatisfied. But Congress must take action expeditiously or else chaos will result. The Committee on House Administration has spent much time and effort in drafting the legislation before us. The purpose of the bill is threefold: First, to reconstitute the Commission to meet the objections of the Supreme Court; second, to remedy the actions of the Commission which run counter to the intent of Congress; that is, the SUNPAC advisory opinion; and third, to amend the existing law to provide a more effective procedure of regulating Federal elections.

Notwithstanding what certain critics are saying, this bill represents the work product of the entire Committee on House Administration. Chairman HAYS has been unjustly criticized as having steamrollered his bill through the committee. This just is not so. Every member of the committee had a full opportunity to debate the bill and offer amendments. The bill before us today reflects the compromises reached on the many issues debated during the markup.

In the final analysis, the bill before us seeks to amend existing law to provide a procedure whereby maximum disclosure of the sources of funds and expenditures of a political campaign is available to the electorate. The purpose of the law should not be to establish a game where the candidate who unwittingly may deviate from the rules goes to jail. Instead, the thrust of the law should be to provide the voter with the maximum information about the respective candidates. The bill seeks to accomplish this by repealing certain sections of the criminal law and instead granting the Commission jurisdiction over all aspects of the electoral process, rather than dividing the jurisdiction between the Commission and the Department of Justice. The bill does provide for criminal sanctions for "knowing and willful violations," but, absent these instances, the main purpose of the bill is to seek to remedy any violations by conciliation, with a civil fine where deemed necessary by the Commission. In this manner the candidate whose negligence leads to a violation of the act is given an opportunity to rectify such error without the possibility of facing criminal proceedings. With such a system, how can it honestly be argued that the bill seeks to discourage challengers to the existing incumbents?

In striking down the limitations for both campaign expenditures as well as the so-called independent expenditures, the Supreme Court has limited the manner of regulating Federal elections. Absent complete Federal funding of elections, the only effective way of regulating election behavior relies on a full disclosure of the financial activities of the candidates. At the same time, in invalidating the limitations on "independent expenditures" the Court may have unwittingly created a very serious loophole. Accordingly, the bill does amend existing law to set forth certain requirements to assure that an "independent expenditure" is just that and not merely a subterfuge to get around the contribution limitations.

The action of the Commission in rendering its advisory opinion in the SUNPAC case necessitates two changes: First, an amendment which clearly spells out the congressional intent that Congress never intended the creation of corporation political action committees to pressure their employees to contribute, nor to allow the proliferation of such committees; and second, to provide a method where future actions of the Commission in rendering advisory opinions would be subject to congressional review.

The legislative history of the 1971 and 1974 laws is clear that Congress never intended to allow the SUNPAC situation. Therefore, the bill seeks to establish a balance between the activities of union and corporate political action committees by providing that contributions by a committee of a subsidiary of a union or corporation shall, for the purpose of the $5,000 limitation, be considered as having been given by the committee of the parent. Additionally, the bill provides that unions may only solicit their members and that corporations may only solicit their stockholders, executive officers and their families, an executive officer being defined as, "an individual employed by a corporation who is paid on a salary rather than an hourly basis and who has policymaking or supervisory responsibilities."

Furthermore, to prevent the Commission from going off on its own and rendering future advisory opinions not in accord with the intent of Congress, the bill provides that all future advisory opinions will have to be included in regulations and submitted for congressional review. This provision seems to have attracted much criticism, but as a practical matter it will only serve to require the Commission to consider issuing advisory opinions only with a certain degree of circumspection. And this is only proper, as advisory opinions should only be given when properly justified. Also, since such opinions should reflect the intent of Congress why should they not be published as a regulation to guide others who may be faced with a similar situation? The fact that congressional disapproval may come after the person seeking the opinion has already acted on it does not prejudice him as he is protected if he acted in good faith.

It may be argued that the number of advisory opinions will be limited, but to this I say that it is the job of Congress to legislate in as specific manner as possible and obviate the need for Commission regulations as much as possible. I do not think anyone wants to see the Federal Elections Commission compete with the Internal Revenue Service in issuing regulations and orders. If such were so, then I would agree with those who content the election law is loaded with traps so as to discourage challengers to the existing officeholders.

As far as the contention that the Commission is a mere subcommittee of the Congress, it must be admitted by such critics that, absent the provision on the review of advisory opinions, the Commission is subject to judicial and not congressional review with respect to its actions. But in the case of advisory opinions, it is certainly the right of Congress to prevent the usurpation of its legislative power by a congressionally created commission. A review of the regulations issued by such Commission is the only safeguard available to prevent such usurpation.

While some critics have suggested merely reconstituting the Commission, other have urged the extension of public financing to all congressional elections. For some the bill goes too far, while for others, the bill does not go far enough. To the latter, I say that to provide for an extension of public financing to congressional elections, without a review of the experience with this year's Presidential election would be premature. The possibility of a one issue candidate in House and Senate campaigns is indeed greater than in the Presidential election. And at this time we do not know how significant a problem we face in the Presidential election.

To those who argue for merely reconstituting the Commission, the amendments contained in the bill before us are necessary to carry out the intent of Congress and provide a procedure for full discloseure of a candidate's financial activities while at the same time preventing the usurpation of the legislative power of Congress by the Federal Election Commission.

I urge my colleagues to give their full support to this bill.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Chairman, the primary objective of regulating campaign practices should be to insure the public interest, to remove corruption and special interest influence, and to enable candidates to compete more equitably for public office.

The Federal Election Campaign Acts of 1971 and 1974, as initial steps, provided much needed focus on the problem of developing an equitable means for the regulation of campaign procedures. And I think that most people agree that the Federal Election Commission has been a significant and valuable innovation in regulating the electoral process. But the January 30, 1976 Supreme Court decision in BUCKLEY against Valeo—regarding unconstitutional expenditure limitations and the violation of the separation of powers doctrine in the appointment of members of the Federal Election Commission—has renewed interest in altering Federal election law. The new bill, H.R. 12406, from the Committee on House Administration, contains many constructive changes. But it also contains numerous regressive measures which would reduce the independence of the Federal Election Commission and impede its very ability to function.

A provision of H.R. 12406 which provides the most obvious reduction in the independent authority of the Federal Election Commission is the clause concerning the advisory opinion process. Under this section, all advisory opinions issued by the Commission would have to be converted into regulations within 30 days and sent to Congress, where either House would have an additional 30 days to disapprove, and thus nullify, the opinion. Not only could either House nullify an opinion, but either could nullify a regulation in "whole or in part." Thus, if I read the provision correctly, item vetoes of sections or even words are allowed. Through a process of selective editing, Congress could write its own regulations or reverse the Commission's intent.

Several other provisions of the proposed amendments in H.R. 12406 also inhibit the Federal Election Commission from making its own decisions on investigating possible violations of the elections law. One provision removes the Commission's authority to "inquire into or investigate the activities or staff employees of Federal officeholders" without consulting the officeholder. The Commission could then be barred from any further injury if the officeholder signed an affadavit that the staff person is performing "regularly assigned duties." This is an invitation for abuse. The analogy of the fox guarding the henhouse comes to mind. This provision grants virtual "exclusive privilege" to Members of Congress.

Other provisions which represent a serious retreat from refom include: An increase in the threshold for criminal penalties for a knowing and willful violation from $1,000 to $5,000; the removal of a jail penalty for a knowing and willful violation of the limits on cash contributions; an increase in the allowable cash contributions from $100 to $250; the removal of the present requirement for disclosure filings with secretaries of State—a provision local press depend upon to inform the public; and the provision allowing for one-House termination of the Federal Elections Commission. Each of these constitutes renewed opportunity for the corrupt, the practitioners of the expedient, and self-serving special interests to do their own thing.

A major point of controversy with respect to H.R. 12406 lies in the section concerning the prohibition of corporate political action committees from soliciting contributions from nonmanagement employees of corporations. The bill permits corporations to solicit contributions from stockholders, executives and their families. Many contend that corporations should be allowed to solicit their employees in the same manner that labor organizations can solicit all of their members. On the surface, the arguments seem valid and equitable. However, upon closer inspection, it is clear that the owners of the firm, its stockholders—which, of course, include employees who own stock—are those who have a direct interest in the firm's political activities, just as employees who are union members have an interest in the political activities of their union.

Nor, interestingly enough, does this corporation/stockholders union/employees parity give numerical advantage to representatives of employees. American Telephone & Telegraph, for example, has some 2.9 million stockholders, but only 999,796 employees. The New York Stock Exchange Review of 1974 further reveals that there are some 31 million stockholders in the United States today and that the ratio among major corporate concerns with respect to volume of stockholders versus employees is approximately 3 to 2. All in all, the provision now in the bill appears equitable and symmetrical with respect to the rights and privileges of solicitation for funds by corporations and unions.

In sum, if Congress ties the hands of the Federal Election Commission so that it cannot provide quick, understandable answers to candidates and the public respecting compliance with the law, or if the vital oversight and investigatory responsibilities of the Commission are circumscribed by procedures weighted in favor of incumbents, then the American public can come to no other conclusion than that Congress has no intention of creating a commission that can adequately enforce the law and serve the public interest.

We must reform the political process. Congress must take the initiative to restore public confidence in the electoral process. H.R. 12406 is an essential piece of legislation, but it needs some important improvements to safeguard the independence of the Commission and to strengthen the financial, reporting, investigatory, and penalties provisions of the bill.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FRENZEL

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FRENZEL: Page 39, line 6 strike out everything after the comma beginning with the words "but shall not" up to and including the words "except that" on line 15 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "but shall not include—

"(A) communications by a corporation to its stockholders and executive officers and their families or by a labor organization to its members and their families on any subject, except that expenditures for any such communication on behalf of a clearly identified candidate must be reported with the Commission in accordance with section 304(e) of the Act;

"(B) nonpartisan registration and get-out-the-vote campaigns by a corporation aimed at its stockholders and executive officers and their families, or by a labor organization aimed at its members and their families, except that expenditures for any such campaigns must be reported with the Commission pursuant to section 304(e) of the Act;

"(C) the establishment, administration, and solicitation of contributions to a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes by a corporation or labor organization: 'except that'."

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment because there is language read in that was not in the rule. I had agreed not to make this point of order, but I cannot depend on who is going to offer an amendment with the messages I get from the other side.

Therefore, in order to teach them a lesson, I intend to make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio makes a point of order that the amendment as read by the Clerk includes language that was not in the rule.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee is correct that there is an extra phrase put into the amendment that was read by the Clerk that was not in the printed rule. It was my opinion that the Committee on Rules intended to print this amendment, my amendment, as was read.

But, in view of the point of order being raised by the chairman of the committee—and I am sorry that he has done this—I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment. I would like to present the amendment again, and the Clerk has it in the form in which it appeared in the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, in order that we can clear up what is going on, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. BOLLING, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 12406) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide that members of the Federal Election Commission shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have permission to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous matter on the bill, H.R. 12406, Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

AMENDING CHAPTER 33 OF TITLE 44, UNITED STATES CODE

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill (S. 3060) to amend chapter 33 of title 44, United States Code, to change the membership and extend the life of the National Study Commission on Records and Documents of Federal Officials, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am not going to object, but I take the time only to ask the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BRADEMAS) to explain the bill, which the minority does concur in.

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BRADEMAS).

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Speaker, the bill as amended was approved by the Subcommittee on Printing on March 11, 1976, by a vote of 3 to 0—one Member voting present—and by the Committee on House Administration on March 25, 1976, by voice vote.

The bill provides for a 1-year extension of the National Study Commission on Records and Documents of Federal Officials—hereinafter referred to as the "Public Documents Commission"—from March 31, 1976, to March 31, 1977.

Title II of the Presidential Recordings and Materials Preservation Act, which became law on December 19, 1974, established the Public Documents Commission. The Commission was charged with the responsibility of studying the problems involved in the ownership and disposition of records and documents of all Federal officials and recommending appropriate legislation and rules.

The membership of the Commission includes two Members of the House of Representatives; two Senators; three appointees of the President, selected from the public on a bipartisan basis; the Librarian of Congress; one appointee each of the Chief Justice of the United States, the White House, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Defense, the Attorney General and the Administrator of General Services; and three other representatives, one each, appointed by the American Historical Association, the Society of American Archivists, and the Organization of American Historians.

The first meeting of the Commission was held on December 15, 1975, at the call of the Chairman, Herbert Brownell, the former Attorney General of the United States.

The extension of time is necessitated by the fact that substantial delays occurred in the appointment of the Commission members. The three Commissioners chosen by the President by and with advice and consent of the Senate—including Chairman Brownell—were not confirmed by the Senate until early November 1975. Once confirmed and designated Chairman, Mr. Brownell moved quickly to convene the Commission and to begin the search for a staff director but the statutory deadline was scarcely 5 months away and, obviously, no longer realistic.

Chairman Brownell requested that the Subcommittee on Printing consider two amendments to the bill. The first amendment involves a change in a way one of the members of the Commission is to be chosen. At present, the Commission is to include "one Justice of the Supreme Court, appointed by the Chief Justice." Since the Commission is charged with studying the problems relating to the disposition of the papers of members of the Federal judiciary, a Justice of the Supreme Court was included as a member of the Commission. However, Chief Justice Burger advised the Commission that because of the likelihood that litigation concerning the constitutionality of the Presidential Recordings and Materials Preservation Act would reach the Supreme Court the appointment of a Supreme Court Justice to sit on the Commission would be improper.

The Chief Justice suggested to the Commission that he would prefer to be authorized to appoint another member of the Federal judiciary to the Commission, if that would be acceptable to the Congress. It is the consensus of the Commission that the judiciary should be represented, as Congress intended, and that the Chief Justice's suggestion is sound. Consequently, the amendment suggested by Chairman Brownell would amend the relevant subsection to include on the Commission "one member of the Federal judiciary appointed by the Chief Justice of the United States." The possible candidates would include all circuit or district judges, inactive or senior status.

The second amendment is of a technical nature. At present the act provides that:

While away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of service for the Commission, members of the Commission shall be allowed travel expenses in the same manner as persons employed intermittently in the service of the Federal Government are allowed expenses under section 5703(b) of title 5, United States Code.

Because of a 1975 amendment, the provision governing travel expenses for a person employed intermittently in Government service as an expert or consultant is now section 5703 rather than section 5703(b). Accordingly, this amendment would simply substitute "5703" for 5703(b) in the proper subsection of the Presidential Recordings and Materials Preservation Act.

Mr. Speaker, I have tried to explain what the bill does, and I am grateful to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) for allowing me to do so.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for yielding.

Could my colleague, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BRADEMAS), tell us how much the annualized cost of this authorization is?

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from California will yield, there is no additional authorization provided for in this bill. However, a sum of $110,000 has been advanced to the Commission from the White House Unanticipated Needs Fund. The bill simply allows the Commission to have 1 more year in which to complete its work because it has not been able to do any work before this time.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. I appreciate that, but what is the annualized cost of this Commission?

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Speaker, the total estimated cost of the entire work of the Commission through September 30, 1976 is $350,000.

Mr. Speaker, let me also refer the gentleman to that part of the bill which reads as follows:

While away from their homes or regular places of business in performance of services for the Commission, members of the Commission shall be allowed travel expenses in the same manner as persons employed intermittently in the service of the Federal Government are allowed expenses. Under section 5703(b) of title 5, U.S. Code, except for per diem, subsistence shall be paid only to those members of the Commission who are not full-time officers or employees of the United States or Members of the Congress.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my colleague's answer. It is nice to know this is not a budget busting commission.

Mr. Speaker, if my colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) will yield further, are there any nongermane amendments in this bill that is now before us?

Mr. BRADEMAS. No.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my colleague's direct answers.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would just like to point out, as the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BRADEMAS) has already explained to us, that this legislation was unanimously requested by the Commission itself after it discovered they had very little time to carry out their activities in light of the fact that the Supreme Court has not decided on a very basic issue involved with regard to the Nixon papers.

Mr. MEZVINSKY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MEZVINSKY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my support of the bill. I think this is a reasonable step to take.

The Commission has work to do, and really what we are trying to say here is that it will not cost any more money but it will allow the Commission to go on and do the job it has to do.

Mr. Speaker, I am very glad I can support the bill, and I appreciate the gentleman's yielding.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I thank all the Members, especially the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BRADEMAS), for their contributions, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 3060

An act to amend chapter 33 of title 44, United States Code, to change the membership and extend the life of the National Study Commission on Records and Documents of Federal Officials, and for other purposes

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That chapter 33 of title 44, United States Code, is amended as follows:

(a) Section 3318 of chapter 33 is amended—

(1) by deleting subsection (a)(1)(E) in its entirety and submitting in lieu thereof the following:

"(E) one member of the Federal judiciary appointed by the Chief Justice of the United States."; and

(2) by deleting "section 5703(b) of title 5, United States Code" from subsection (e)(2), and substituting in lieu thereof "section 5703 of title 5, United States Code".

(b) Section 3322 of chapter 33 is amended by deleting "March 31, 1976" and substituting in lieu thereof "March 31, 1977".

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table,

A similar House bill (H.R. 11628) was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING AND DIRECTING AD HOC SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE OUTER CONTINENTAL SHELF TO TRANSMIT FINDINGS AND REPORT TO THE HOUSE

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 1121) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 1121

Resolved, That, notwithstanding section 4(a) of House Resolution 412 of the 94th Congress, adopted April 22, 1975, and House Resolution 977 of the 94th Congress, adopted January 26, 1976, the ad hoc Select Committee on the Outer Continental Shelf is authorized and directed to transmit its findings and report to the House on such matter as may have been referred to it and on which it has acted as soon as practicable, but not later than May 4, 1976.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE—SOCIALIST WORKERS 1974 NATIONAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE, ET AL., VERSUS HON. W. PAT JENNINGS, ET AL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

WASHINGTON, D.C.,
March 24, 1976.

HON. CARL ALBERT,
The Speaker, U.S. House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I have, in the case of Socialist Workers 1974 National Committee and others, against Edmund L. Henshaw, the Clerk of the House of Representatives and others, (Civil Action No. 74-1338), been served with Plaintiffs Second Interrogatories to Federal Defendants and Plaintiffs' Request for Production of Documents, said pleadings requesting the Clerk of the House of Representatives to answer such interrogatories in writing and to produce certain documents in the possession and under the control of the House of Representatives.

House Resolution 29 of January 14, 1975, and the rules and practices of the House of Representatives indicate that no official of the House may, either voluntarily or in obedience to a subpoena duces tecum, produce such papers without the consent of the House being first obtained. It is further indicated that he may not supply copies of certain of the documents and papers requested without such consent.

The Plaintiffs' Second Interrogatories and Request for Production are attached herewith, and the matter is presented for such action as the House in its wisdom may see fit to take.

With kind regards, I am

Sincerely,

EDMUND L. HENSHAW, Jr.,
Clerk, U.S. House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the interrogatories will be printed.

There was no objection.

The interrogatories are as follows:

HOUSE FLOOR DEBATES ON H.R. 12406 APRIL 1, 1976

well as materially. Their apartment is cold and damp and not fit for human living. But they can't afford to live in a better one.

"Dear friends, if at all possible, please help us to come together. Help our children join their parents.

"From the depth of our hearts we wish for you the best of health and success."

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1976

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 12406) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide that members of the Federal Election Commission shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS).

The motion was agreed to.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H.R. 12406, with Mr. BOLLING in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose on Wednesday, March 31, 1976, the bill had been considered as having been read for amendment.

Are there further amendments?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WIGGINS

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WIGGINS: Page 39, line 6 strike out everything after the comma beginning with the words "but shall not" up to and including the words "except that" on line 15 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "but shall not include—

"(A) communications by a corporation to its stockholders and executive officers and their families or by a labor organization to its members and their families on any subject, except that expenditures for any such communication on behalf of a clearly identified candidate must be reported with the Commission in accordance with section 304(e) of the Act;

"(B) nonpartisan registration and get-out-the-vote campaigns by a corporation aimed at its stockholders and executive officers and their families, or by a labor organization aimed at its members and their families, except that expenditures for any such campaigns must be reported with the Commission pursuant to section 304(e) of the Act;

"(C) the establishment, administration, and solicitation of contributions to a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes by a corporation or labor organization: "except that."

(Mr. WIGGINS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I urge the Members to pay careful attention to the explanation of this amendment. If adopted, it will close a major loophole in the present statute and will represent a clear reform of our campaign laws.

Section 321 is that portion of the proposed statute which makes it illegal for national banks, corporations, and labor unions to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any Federal election. For purposes of the prohibition, contributions and expenditures are defined broadly to include all manner of payments of anything of value, including services to a candidate, committee, or political party.

So far, so good.

Exempted from this broad proscription, however, are three major categories of corporation and union expenditures.

First, corporations and labor unions may use their treasury funds to communicate with their stockholders and executive officers and their families, and with their members and their families on any subject.

This first major exemption was included in the law to protect the first amendment rights of both corporations and labor unions to communicate to those who are closely identified with their interests. But it has been clearly and unmistakenly documented that this "communication" exemption has been used by labor unions to pour millions of dollars into campaigns for the specific purpose of insuring the election or defeat of particular candidates. These expenditures are unreported and come directly from union dues—not the voluntary contributions of union members.

This is how it works. A union or group of unions may endorse a particular candidate for Congress. Admittedly, this is their right. The unions will thereupon communicate their endorsement, and the reasons therefor, by one or more mass mailings to their members. The mailings may include a campaign-style brochure of their favored candidate and a stinging denunciation of his opponent. Frequently, many separate unions will combine their efforts so as to achieve blanket coverage immediately before an election.

Since such communications are deemed to be legitimate union business, the mailings are often transmitted under a nonprofit, federally subsidized, mailing permit.

All of this is done, mind you, with treasury funds of the unions and is not reported at all.

The second major exemption permits corporations and unions to conduct nonpartisan registration and get-out-the-vote campaigns aimed at stockholders and executive officers and their families, and union members and their families. This exemption has also been used, primarily by labor unions, to circumvent the nominal proscription against labor treasury money being used for partisan political activity.

The formula is simple. Registration and get-out-the-vote efforts need not be conducted statewide, or even districtwide. The effort is focused upon those precincts most likely to produce the maximum number of votes for the candidates or political party favored by the union. Workers, paid directly from the union treasury, search out and register union members to vote, with a high degree of assurance that the new registrant will vote "right."

Get-out-the-vote campaigns involve even more flagrant abuses. Large phone bank operations are established on election day to call the faithful to the polls. Transportation is provided.

Anyone among us who honestly believes that these massive efforts are conducted, or are even intended to be conducted, on an evenhanded, nonpartisan basis must also honestly believe in the tooth fairy.

And all of this, of course, is paid for directly out of the union treasury and is not required to be reported at all.

Finally, both corporations and unions may utilize their own funds to establish, administer, and solicit voluntary contributions into a separate segregated fund. This is the exemption authorizing the creation of PAC's—political action committees. Although much attention has been focused upon PAC's, it is evident to all knowledgeable persons that the segregated political funds represent only the tiny tip of an enormous and hidden iceberg. The heavy money is spent directly by the unions and is not reported at all.

My amendment does not remove any exemption now enjoyed by a corporation or a labor union. All of the practices which I have described may continue if my amendment is adopted.

It makes only two changes in present law: First, if a corporation or union communication is on behalf of a clearly identified candidate, the cost of the communication must be reported in the same manner as all other political expenditures; and second, the amount expended by a corporation or union for nonpartisan registration and get-out-the-vote campaigns must be reported to the Federal Election Commission.

A communication urging the defeat of a candidate, is understood to be a communication on behalf of his opponent or opponents.

My amendment is a disclosure requirement only, posing no greater burden upon others who seek to influence a Federal election by the expenditure of money.

I can conceive of no rational, objective, nonpartisan basis for opposing this amendment. A similar amendment was adopted in the Senate with bipartisan support.

But, I am told, the unions are lobbying strenuously against its adoption. There can be only one explanation for such opposition: Union leaders desire to hide from the public view the magnitude of their influence on Federal elections.

If they are successful in their efforts, it will be convincing evidence to me that their hidden funds have been spent wisely, not only to purchase elections, but to influence the legislative process in a manner contrary to the public interest as well.

I urge adoption of the amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGINS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

In other words, what the gentleman has told the committee is that the effect of his amendment would be to require the reporting of these so-called interior communications by corporations and unions, but even though the cost of one of those communications amounted to, say, $100,000, the cost of communicating an adverse recommendation with respect to a political candidate, it would not be subject to the limitations that otherwise are contained in the law with respect to political contributions?

Mr. WIGGINS. That is true.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. There is no restriction in that regard; they could continue to expend any amount. The only requirement is that it be reported in connection with section 304(e) of the act?

Mr. WIGGINS. That is true. The amounts, Mr. Chairman, that we are talking about run into the millions of dollars. Such expenditures should be reported. The impact of this money on the election process is significant, and the notion that these expenditures should remain hidden from public view is contrary to the public interest.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. If the gentleman will yield further, I certainly congratulate him on his amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

(Mr. THOMPSON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. THOMPSON. This is, Mr. Chairman, an interesting, intricate, and, in my considered opinion, deceptive amendment. I do not mean to imply that my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from California, is in any way trying to be deceitful. I think—a splendid lawyer even though he is—he just offered a major misinterpretation of the law in this instance.

The amendment would require that corporations and labor unions report to the Federal Election Commission the costs of internal communications made by a labor union to its members, or a corporation to its stockholders, in behalf of a clearly identified candidate; and nonpartisan voter registration and get-out-the-vote drives aimed by a labor union at its members, or a corporation at its stockholders.

First, I might point out that there is no threshold in this amendment and that all expenditures, no matter how minimal, have to be reported. The amendment would have the following effects: First, a labor union which distributed mimeographed "Don't Forget to Vote" messages to its members would have to report the cost of the paper to the FEC, no matter how minimal the cost.

A labor union or a corporation official who called a few friends on company phones asking for support of candidate x would have to report the phone expense, presumably a pro rata share of the monthly phone bill.

Third, a corporation or labor union which included any kind of voter information in a newsletter would have to report that expense.

Note that the amendment appears also to have some holes in it. First, only nonpartisan voter registration and get-out-the-vote drives appear to be covered by the amendment. A corporation or a labor union could do all of the partisan things that it wanted to without having to report anything so long as it stayed away from the mention of a particular candidate.

Second, only communications on behalf of a clearly identified candidate are covered, unlike the truth-in-advertising provision of the independent expenditures section, which covers expenditures on behalf of or against a candidate. "Or against" is carefully eliminated from this amendment. Thus, a corporation or labor union could communicate with its stockholders or members without limit against a candidate without having to report anything. Note carefully the way that the law is written now probably would not require reporting any of this kind of activity under the independent expenditures section, which runs only to communications to the general public.

In addition—and this is the part that rather amazes me—the loopholes in the amendment present some very definite first amendment questions, for to require that even the most minimal communications within a group must be reported to the government gives rise to legal questions involving free speech and freedom of association.

If the likely effect of the amendment is analyzed in terms of real world conditions, it can easily be seen that the intent of the amendment is not so much to create reporting requirements but to make activity of this kind so difficult as to discourage it entirely.

This is what the court referred to as a "chilling effect" on free speech and association, and as such its constitutionality is highly doubtful.

Mr. Chairman, the fact is that the real intent of this amendment would be such as to inhibit enormously the rather limited facilities and activities of organized labor unions which do not have computers to the extent they are owned by large corporations. The large corporations will not mind the requirement that the one exception to the general rule need not to be reported. That of course falls on the unions and corporations. The large corporations will not mind that at all. They have the computers and organization necessary to handle the task but the smaller unions do not.

On its surface the amendment before the House appears to be a proposal to further the purpose of the Federal election law by requiring increased disclosure. In fact it is carefully constructed to favor the big corporations and to stop internal communication on political issues and registration and get out the vote campaigns by local labor unions. I therefore rise in opposition to the amendment.

The 1974 law requires the reporting of "expenditures" as that term is defined in the act of over $100. There are several exceptions to this reporting requirement. There is an exception for unpaid time volunteered to a candidate. There is an exception for editorials broadcast by a newspaper or radio or television station. There is an exception for internal communications by any corporation.

One factor ties all of these exceptions together. It is that the value of these activities is extremely difficult to compute. How does a candidate estimate the value of time of volunteers? How does a newspaper allocate the proportion of its costs attributable to an editorial? How does a union allocate the costs of a meeting, a few minutes of which are devoted to discussion of the reasons why the union has endorsed a candidate? Answering these questions is difficult in the extreme as a theoretical matter and even harder to deal with as a practical matter.

Nevertheless, the amendment before the House makes one exception to the general rule that such costs need not be reported—that exception falls on unions and corporations. The large corporations will not mind this requirement. They have the cost accountants and the computers necessary to handle the task. But, local unions do not. Those behind this amendment are well aware of these facts. It is their expectation that the result will be that only large corporations will engage in such internal communication because they will be the only ones who can deal with the reporting burdens that the amendment would impose on this exercise of a first amendment right. I would have thought that 2 short years after Watergate would be too soon for such a power-grab by the managers of the Gulf Oil Corp. and their colleagues who are presently before the Securities and Exchange Commission for various violations of law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. THOMPSON was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. JOHN L. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. JOHN L. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I am really shocked that the other side of the House would come in with an amendment that would have the Government further intruding into the private affairs of small enterprises. We know about the problems with OSHA and with EPA, and to have the other side now come in with an amendment that would have the Federal Elections Commission looking into the books of these small businesses is something I cannot comprehend.

I agree with the gentleman's statement.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is not the small businesses that concern the gentleman from New Jersey nearly so much as it is the enormity of the task of reporting and the need for sophisticated computer operations in order to be able to make those reports.

There is a very definite first amendment problem. I would have thought that 2 short years, to use the words of my friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS), after Watergate or Camelot, as he has added to that definition, would be rather too soon to repose with the managers of the huge oil companies and their colleagues this right which comes at a time when they are before another Federal commission on charges of violations of law.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield to my chairman.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to my friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS), on this Camelot business and the Watergate business, I do not know whether his definition is going to fly, because I have a CB radio in my car and I listen a lot to the truckers, and when they say: "What is your destination?" I do not know if the gentleman knows what this town is called by the truckers. They call it "Watergate City."

Mr. THOMPSON. It is not Camelot City.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. It is not Camelot City, but Watergate City.

It took me a while to figure out what they meant when they said "Shaky Town," but that is San Francisco, I finally found out.

Mr. VANDER JAGT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

(Mr. VANDER JAGT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. VANDER JAGT. Mr. Chairman, at the very heart of campaign reform was the desire to limit the impact that special interest groups could have on the outcome of congressional elections, so that no special interest group would have an undue influence on the decisions made by the winning candidate later on. This bill that we are considering, taken together with other legislation on the books, does just the opposite. It is a very precise means to use campaign reform legislation to deliver a very, very special advantage to one very special, special interest group, namely, big labor.

I think it is instructive to note what happened on the Senate floor. The printed bill the Senate was considering gave our two great political parties, our two Senate campaign committees and our two House campaign committees the right to contribute $20,000 to each of the congressional candidates, rather than the $5,000 that all other interest groups are limited to.

Now, I think that was a step in the right direction. What is the purpose of putting a limit on what a group can contribute to a candidate? It is to limit the influence that that group will have on that candidate later on.

I do not believe that any of us can be unduly influenced by the party that we represent. We run under the banner of that party. We run on the platform of that party. I do not believe that any political party should be limited to what it can do to help one of its political candidates. But the Senate was erroneously informed that there was bipartisan support on this side for taking the House campaign committees—and only our committees—back to the $5,000 from the $20,000. And that is what the Senate did.

Now, what is the purpose of keeping our campaign committees down and limiting them, as the chairman properly stated that he was doing in response to press criticism that implied the contrary. What is the purpose of limiting our two great political parties and limiting all special interest groups, except one, to pigmy size? Limiting everyone except labor to pigmy size makes giant labor all the bigger. It makes labor's impact all the more disproportionate. It leaves giant labor—and only giant labor—free to lope unfettered across the political landscape—unregulated, unchecked, and unreported.

The Democratic leadership should receive labor's medal of the year award for the brilliant way they are slipping through special advantage for big labor. They have focused the attention of the press on the dispute of how many people can be solicited in a plant and by whom. That is like arguing about how many peas we can solicit for the peashooter that we are limited to by law while labor continues to be able to fire its cannons without any regulations or any reporting whatsoever.

How does it happen that labor can campaign apart from the law? Labor can conduct in effect a campaign totally outside the scope of all campaign laws. Their campaigns are exempted from campaign reform! Thats what they did in New Hampshire. That was a test-tube campaign. There were not two campaigns for Senator in New Hampshire. There were three, two were regulated, one was not. There was Wyman for Senate, DURKIN for Senate, and labor for DURKIN for Senate. In fact, labor probably spent more to send DURKIN to the Senate than the Durkin campaign spent to send DURKIN to the U.S. Senate. What did they spend their money on under this so-called educational or communication exemption. Labor spent it bringing bus loads of "volunteers" from out-of-State to campaign for DURKIN. They spent it on telephone banks to call people to get them to vote for DURKIN. And they spent it on professional campaign teams. They spent it on "non political" literature. "Nonpolitical" that's a laugh. Tens of thousands of leaflets like the one I hold here, flooded the State of New Hampshire it pictures the candidate and says:

Send a fighter to the U.S. Senate.

Under the law, that is not political. That is not campaigning. That is educational. So it does not count. What does it say?

John Durkin is for placing a lid on inflation, while Wyman helped create it.

That is not political, gentlemen. That is educational, and therefore, it does not count.

John Durkin is for tax justice. Wyman is against it.

That is not political. That is educational under the law.

Listen to this:

This time, lets be sure. Vote for John Durkin for U.S. Senate on September 16.

Under the law, that is not political. That is not campaigning. That is educational. That is ridiculous.

Is it any wonder that the majority would like to keep all this hidden in a deep dark secret corner? It so blatantly favors one special interest group that it practically guarantees that that one special interest will have undue influence over the political process. It is a raw political power play to stack the deck in favor of labor and labor's handpicked candidates.

If I were in the majority, I would not want to let the sunshine in on that, either. Of course, the majority doesn't want public disclosure about that! I do not think we are asking very much in this amendment. We are not asking that the situation be corrected. We are not asking that labor be regulated. We are not asking that labor be limited. All we are asking is that labor, like everybody else in America, report what it spends to impact on the outcome of an election. I do not think that that is asking too much. If this body can't bring itself to vote for fair elections, if this body can't bring itself to vote for equal treatment for all special interest groups, if this body can't vote for sunshine and public disclosure, which is the basis of all meaningful campaign reform, then this body will have demonstrated that that one special interest group already has an undue influence on the decisions of this body. And that will be sad indeed.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to my friend, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. VANDER JAGT), that the gentleman from Michigan and I appear on the same program frequently. I have almost got his speech memorized.

I wish the gentleman would get a new version so that it would not be quite so repetitious. I guess he really felt that defeat in New Hampshire badly because, talking about politics, the Republican filibuster in the Senate would not let the Senate make a decision but wanted to send it back to New Hampshire. When it got back to New Hampshire, the people made a decision, and apparently the gentleman is unhappy with that.

As far as the amendment is concerned, you know, I am not going to worry too much about the corporations, but just let me tell how it would affect them. I have got a coporation in my district that has absolutely been bugging me for a year to come out and go through their plant. I never really had time to do it, and I will not know any more after I go through the plant than I did before because I do not understand the technicalities of what they manufacture, bu I have agreed to go.

But, if this amendment becomes part of the law, the man who escorts me through the corporation will have to determine the cost of his time while he was escorting me through and file a report with the FEC. Maybe when I tell them that they will not want me.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WIGGINS. That is not a communication as understood under the law, and will not be reported if this amendment is adopted.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Well, if the gentleman says so, that is legislative history, and I guess I will have to go.

What about a management meeting, if a corporation officer asks his colleagues to work for the election of a candidate does that have to be reported?

Mr. WIGGINS. If he in fact works for him, of course, on company time, the law would be violated.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. If he just gets up in a meeting and asks the question, would that particular 5 minutes have to be reported? I think so.

Mr. WIGGINS. I do not believe so. I do not believe so. No expenditure has been made. There is a present understanding of that statute which has existed for many years as to what constitutes a communication, and it is that understanding which is intended to be perpetuated by my amendment.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Well, I think it is fair of the gentleman to interpret his amendment, and if my examples do not lie in his judgment within the purview of the amendment, that is good.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. THOMPSON. The chairman has made reference to the establishment of legislative history. Legislative history, I respectfully say to my friend from California, which he is attempting to make, distorts the actual existing law. He is attempting to change the existing law, and in the examples which he cited under his amendment, the time of that person taking the gentleman from Ohio, if he is a candidate, through the plant, would clearly have to be reported minute by minute.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Well, I think the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. VANDER JAGT) really put his finger on what his amendment seeks to do, and that is to inhibit labor. Let me tell you what it does do, and this might be of some interest to you; I do not know.

The Sierra Club, which has the "dirty dozen" list and which I understand wants to spend $100,000, it is not touched. It does not have to report; it is not a corporation or a labor union. Common Cause does not have to report; it is neither a corporation nor a labor union. The National Rifle Association—I read in the press, I do not know if it is true or not, that they have more influence around here than anybody—does not have to report.

If that is the way you want it, what about the National Right to Life Committee? They do not have to report.

Mr. WIGGINS. If the gentleman will yield further, as the gentleman knows, we define independent expenditures in the bill, and at the chairman's suggestion, we required that all such independent expenditures be reported. The illustration speaks to independent expenditures made by such an organization, such expenditures must be reported under the bill.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Except if they communicate with their members they are not covered.

Mr. WIGGINS. I am telling the gentleman that if he feels that the adoption of this amendment creates some special benefit for those organizations which communicate with their members on various subjects, he is in error. If those organizations communicate to their members or the public on behalf of a clearly identified candidate, under our definition of independent expenditure they must report.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. In communicating with their members?

Mr. WIGGINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Then if that is true, why the amendment at all?

Mr. WIGGINS. Because under existing law, corporations or labor unions are exempt from the duty to report the cost of communications which would otherwise be independent expenditures.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I think my interpretation is correct, that if these people are communicating with their members, that they do not have to report it. And maybe we will require a Supreme Court case on that, do not know.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for the defeat of the amendment.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. MOORE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I want to see if I can find out how many speakers there are.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to get through with this bill today, if I can.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment cease in 20 minutes.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, if those Members who wish to speak on the amendment will rise, it will give me a better understanding of what the demands are on the time.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to speak.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, further reserving the right to object, can we generally agree that we will not transfer time?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. There are only 2 people standing over here, so I think the Members will have to decide that for themselves.

Mr. WIGGINS. There are 5 Members standing. Under the normal rule, that would take 30 minutes. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS) has asked to confine the time to 20 minutes.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I will agree to 30 minutes.

Mr. WIGGINS. All right.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment cease in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Members standing at the time the unanimous consent request was granted will be recognized for approximately 2½ minutes each.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I thought I had been recognized for 5 minutes. I was on the floor and I was in the well and I had been recognized for 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. MOORE) is recognized for 5 minutes, without regard to the 30-minute time limit. The remaining time will be worked out.

Mr. MOORE. I thank the Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will allocate the remaining time.

The gentleman from Louisiana is recognized for 5 minutes.

(Mr. MOORE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I was not in the Congress when all of the election laws were passed, but I ran for Congress under them and I am now a member of the committee which drafted these amendments to them. I am trying to understand them.

It seems to me that, as the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. VANDER JAGT) said a few moments ago, about the only way we can justify all of this paper shuffling we go through is to let the public know just who is giving money and help to a candidate, so the public can then determine whether or not the candidate is subject to undue influence during the election and after he is elected.

Mr. Chairman, if this is the reason we have these laws then, I submit that these laws we presently have and the bill that is before us gives us only half-truths, half the information, and is a sham.

Due to the fact that political "communications" can be made by unions and corporations for or against a candidate, and neither the amount nor on whose behalf they were made has to be reported, we find out that a great deal of money which is being spent on behalf of candidates to get them elected or defeated by corporations and labor unions are not public knowledge, thus defeating the purpose of the laws. I believe the public has the right to know. I believe union members whose dues are being used for political purposes have a right to know. I believe the shareholders of a corporation whose funds are being spent have a right to know.

As an example, if we look at the 1968 Presidential election according to Washington Post reporters Haynes Johnson and Nick Kotz, 4.6 million voters were registered by COPE; 55 million pieces of literature were distributed by them; another 60 million were passed out at local union halls; 638 city phone banks were established, with 8,055 telephones and 24,611 people manning them; canvassers numbered over 72,000 people, and on election day some 94,000 people were working at the expense of COPE all for the benefit of a particular candidate.

None of this was reported. No one has any idea how much that cost, or what candidate got it, and a union member does not know what it cost him in dues.

As another example let us look at the Durkin senatorial campaign and see what was done there. We heard a moment ago the statement that more money was spent there by the unions on behalf of DURKIN than he spent himself. As a matter of fact, the best figures my staff could come up with in researching this matter through people connected with the campaign showed that $151,900 in union dues was spent by the unions on behalf of Mr. DURKIN and never reported to the members of the union or to the public, in addition to the $90,000 in cash they gave him. And this is just in the one special election; it does not include the earlier primary or general elections.

That totals $242,000, and if we take out the union's cash contributions to Mr. DURKIN'S campaign, his campaign only spent $105,000 in the special election yet the unions spent $151,900 on his behalf or almost 50 percent more than be spent himself.

Mr. Chairman, I do not say this is wrong. We ought to encourage people to be involved in politics, to give money, to help and work for candidates, but we also ought to see that special interest groups efforts are reported because the public has the right to know.

There is no difficulty involved in reporting as if they are sophisticated enought to run an organization like COPE, they are sophisticated enough to know how to report what they are doing; who for, and what it cost.

There are no constitutional problems either. What there is, is a political problem. This is another coverup; it is another sham; another effort to shield special interests from the public's view and only tell half the story of what is really going on.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the Members to vote for this amendment and take away this coverup and hiding of important political facts from the public. How easy it is not to contribute to but spend on behalf of a candidate and thereby make a mockery of the election laws. Members of a union, shareholders of a corporation, and the public have the right to know the full picture which will reveal for the first time where the biggest bulk of special interest support is going and its extent. There can be no defensible objection to this amendment but only special interest cover up politics.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman made a big point that none of these things are reported; yet he reeled off statistics involving the unions. If they are not reporting these figures, where did the gentleman get the figures?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, we had to dig for them. Members of the public and members of the union should not have to do what I had to do to get them.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. SMITH of Iowa). The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. STEIGER).

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to yield my time to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL).

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, I object. I believe we established that we would not yield our time to one another.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, in that event I will reclaim my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. STEIGER).

(Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS), Mr. Chairman, is, of course, not a new amendment. It was adopted in the other body; it is known there as the Packwood amendment. It is a perfectly rational, reasonable, not unconstitutional, and not unclear exercise of the authority of the Congress to make sure that items that are expended in the campaign under the guise of a nonpartisan label ought to be listed. That kind of a contribution that is available now to a corporation or to a labor union ought to be made public.

The public ought to have the opportunity to make a judgment about the extent to which either a corporation or a labor union decides to use funds for promoting a particular candidate or cause. That is all the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS) does.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is sensible, I think it ought to be adopted, and I hope we will vote "aye" when the time for that vote comes.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANDERSON).

(Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time merely out of a desire to reply to the argument that was made by my friend and colleague, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. THOMPSON), that somehow the amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS) suffers from a grave constitutional disability and that to adopt this amendment is going to have, to use his words, a chilling effect.

When the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS) was explaining his amendment, I took a moment or two to elicit from him the clear response that all his amendment would accomplish is simply to require disclosure, and nothing more.

There is no limitation whatever on the amount that could be spent. He went on to suggest that millions and millions of dollars could be expended on communications of this type, and the only requirement of his amendment is to demand and require that under the law they be disclosed.

Mr. Chairman, I have read the opinion in Buckley against Valeo which the Supreme Court handed down on the 30th of January of this year. It is true that they used that expression "chilling effect," but nowhere in that opinion did they use that phrase to describe any part of the law that dealt with the disclosure features of the 1974 Campaign Act. They used that approach to refer to certain limitations that had been made upon spending, not upon disclosure.

Then the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. THOMPSON), in a well-known oratorical device, tries to resort to what I would have to call a reductio ad absurdum by suggesting that some group, some labor union would be required to report the price of the paper that they use in simply sending out a simple flyer to get out the vote.

Mr. Chairman, I would have thought that the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. THOMPSON), above all Members of this body, was more familiar than that with the kind of communications that a union sends out to its members. I can assure him, if he is not already well aware of the fact, that they do not simply stop there. They go on to indicate precisely the candidates that ought to be supported and the candidates that ought to be defeated.

Mr. Chairman, this is an expenditure for a political purpose. The American people have made it perfectly clear that they want disclosure. They want campaign expenditures reported to a responsible body of the Federal Government, and I think that that is all we are asking for in this amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS).

Without it, Mr. Chairman, this bill is sadly deficient. I strongly urge the adoption of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL).

(Mr. FRENZEL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I think that the Wiggins amendment may be the most important amendment to this bill that we will consider. Without it, we will leave enormous sums of money which are now being spent to elect and defeat candidates totally undisclosed. And, we will have made a sham of our entire disclosure laws for election financing.

Mr. Chairman, I, too, would like to talk about the discussion of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. THOMPSON), who said that one would have to report every scrap of paper.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment clearly refers to section 403(e), which requires the reporting of contributions and expenditures only of over $100.

It was also said that when something is published in a union newspaper, it would have to be disclosed and prorated. Under section 301 of the act, any kind of statements in newpapers or periodicals of regular circulation are exempt from reporting. Under the act the payment of a monthly phone bill comes under the personal exemption. Everybody knows that the tour guide taking a Member of Congress through a corporation certainly would not come under this act.

Mr. Chairman, the Wiggins amendment clearly says that it has to be a communication on behalf of a clearly identified candidate, so what we are hearing today is a mass of red herrings poured over a most necessary amendment which will provide one thing:

It will provide disclosure. Remember, we are not talking about disclosure of COPE moneys. We are not talking about political action committee voluntary contributions. We are talking about involuntary contributions, involuntary dues money paid to unions. And we are talking about corporate funds that belong to all the stockholders on the part of corporations.

Mr. Chairman, if the Members want to know exactly what we are talking about, we are talking about communications such as I hold in my hand. Here is one in favor of the most recently elected Member of Congress, a NYSUT brochure telling all about him to all union members in the 39th Congressional District.

It says:

Dear Brother and Sister Members:

Your New York State AFL–CIO, representing more than two million union men and women workers, has endorsed Mayor Stanley N. Lundine for Congress in the 39th District.

Then the letter goes on to say that for these reasons they encourage and they recommend a vote for Lundine for Congress.

Now, that is wonderful. It is nice to have friends. On the other hand, how many tens of thousands of these went out into the district in direct support of a congressional candidate?

That is perfectly legal of course, but would it not be nice to know what the unions were willing to spend on that particular candidate?

In addition, it is all fun when only the unions are doing it, but I must remind all the Members on that side of the aisle that, under the law, the corporations have exactly the same rights. I heard from the Stock Exchange this morning and they said that there are some 25 million individual shareholders in the United States. So, what is sauce for the goose is likely to be sauce for the gander.

It seems to me that the very least all of us can do is to make sure that these funds are at least identified. My personal preference would be to make them illegal because they are not volunteered moneys, they are corporate funds and they are union treasury moneys.

In fact, there is so much money in this one particular treasury that they did not use a stamp for the Lundine mailing, which was a nonprofit organization stamp financed by every taxpayer in the United States. They had so much money in the treasury that they stuck it into an envelope and paid for a 13 cent stamp so we know they spent about 20 cents a letter.

And we have not yet counted the phone bank. You hire a phone bank for the union or for a corporation and you can call all the stockholders or all the union members, and you can spend literally tens of thousands of dollars or, as in the New Hampshire example, hundreds of thousands of dollars which was not reported. No one would deny that this spending is definitely part of the political process.

So, please do not be confused by the thought that there is some constitutional problem here. We have put restriction on every participant in the political process, political parties, candidates, committees, harmless bystanders, independent committees. The only people we have exempted so far are corporations and unions. It is about time we stopped that. Let us adopt the Wiggins amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. DENT) is recognized for 5 minutes to close the debate.

(Mr. DENT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, this is a peculiar amendment. It clearly says what it wants to do, it just wants labor to report what they spend in their educational programs. Who is going to decide what is educational and what is not educational? They say it is not educational if they identify the candidate. Well, labor and the corporations have the courage to at least say when they identify a candidate, they say they are for or against that candidate. But what do we do when an article like the one that was printed in a local paper lately by another political organization, labeled TRIM, and prints their view of your record. This is new organization. We were finally able to identify it. It is the political arms of the Right to Work group. They did not identify a candidate and say that they are in favor of him or against him or that they want people to vote against him or to vote for him. But they have put pictures in the free news items, very proudly displayed, I thought, in a nice quiet part of the paper, right next to the obituaries.

They said:

Your Member of Congress had six key votes.

And they said:

On the six key votes he voted wrong on three. Not voting on another. Our organization rated these votes as to what they thought was good for the public.

One of the votes was consumerism. I was rated as wrong because I voted right for consumerism. They said I voted for foreign aid. They were against that. But I voted against foreign aid. They were wrong in both instances. But do you think that anybody in my home district did not know whom they wanted defeated?

I go to the large department stores during my campaigns, at their request, and they have me come in either an hour early before the store opens or an hour after the store is closed and they have all of their employees there. They are not endorsing me, they do not have to report that they spend money if they spend any. It is the corporation's money if they do they have the whole group of employees before me and they let me talk to them. As managers they recognize it is good practice to allow candidates present their views.

If we continue the course were following in the legislation on the floor these public spirited businesses will be forced to stop these public affairs seminars.

I go to production plants, I meet with the inspectors and executives of those plants. They serve a lunch. Sometimes they serve a drink. It is perfectly all right; I enjoy it very much. But that is an expenditure in favor of somebody. We cannot draw these lines as clearly as we are trying to make them. Who is going to say what is purely a meeting with these public officials. They never try to influence anybody. It is really an information meeting. The ADA gave me a bad rating in the State of Pennsylvania. On that rating they have praised those who have 100 percent record for their views. They do not say anything about me, but they have got me on the bottom part of the preferred candidates. If you are at the top, you are good, and when you are on the bottom, you are bad. Does anybody think anyone is fooled as to whom they want defeated?

On legislation dealing with welfare. They may rate a candidate 65 percent in favor of their welfare views. That educational, or is it political propaganda? TRIM, I understand, means tax reduction immediately mandated, or something like that. Circulars that we get from Common Cause, for instance give out ratings.

They do not have to report but it is intended and often does influence an election.

Our friend, the gentleman from Illinois, has the top rating. Is this a campaign contribution or is it educational? I am running against someone, and I am on the bottom of the rating. Are they for me or for my opponent. You know well enough who they favor for election.

Is it all right for them to say, "We favor this Congressman because he stands behind us; he is for our views even if its contrary to his own district's welfare. They are a great Common Cause, but I cannot find the cause they label common. I never heard them come in and plead and die for the minimum wage worker to get him a reasonable wage rate. That is a common cause for the little people. I never heard of this organization coming out in favor of voting for payments for compensation for a black-lung miner who has worked in the mine for 30, 40, or 50 years. What is their common cause? Their common cause is measured by how we obey the dictates of Common Cause. And when they send out their circulars and criticize an incumbent because he does not vote with them, it is a political gesture intended to influence the election. Is there any question as to whom they want defeated?

So we are going to have to include everybody who mentions a name of a Congressman in any kind of a rating that they put out, because that rating many times is worse than an outright indictment of the candidate, because on the same issue I have been rated as being right by some organizations, but on the same vote it has been decided that I was wrong by others. So if we are going to do anything and do it honestly, make everybody report.

I will go along with real sunshine not the adulterated kind that only lets the light in on their issues and turns out the lights on issues for all the people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, on that I demand a recorded vote.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FRENZEL

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FRENZEL: On page 47, begininng line 5, strike section 114 in its entirety.

(Mr. FRENZEL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment strikes section 114. When it is disposed of, I intend to offer an amendment to strike section 115. After that, I do not intend to offer my substitute made in order by the rule, but, rather, reserve it for the minority as part of the motion to recommit. That at least is the present intention, and we think it will save some time.

Mr. Chairman, this striking of section 114 simply removes an unnecessary feature from the bill. Under the present law, a campaign committee may only make expenditures on behalf of the single candidate for which it was formed. The bill, in section 114, says that—

Any occasional, isolated, or incidental support of a candidate shall not be construed as support of such candidate for purposes of the preceding sentence.

That is what I want to strike. What the bill will allow is for any of us who have a campaign committee to be able to make transfers from that campaign committee to some other candidate. What this section will do is to delude some people who think they are contributing to a particular candidate's campaign and not let them know that some of that money is going to be transferred to somebody else.

In other words, it lets some of our stronger candidates solicit money and transfer it to some of the weaker ones who are not being able to raise the money itself. It is a sort of revenue sharing between the attractive candidates and the weaker candidates.

I do not think it needs a lot of discussion. It is not a terribly important amendment. But what the language of the bill does in this case is to weaken the intent of the reforms of 1974, and it is a retrenchment from that reform.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. BAUMAN).

Mr. BAUMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I read in the public press from time to time that certain Members of the majority party in a leadership status have campaign coffers that they fill from various sources and then dole out to other Members of the majority party. This seems to be a sort of circuitous way of getting the funds from the original donor to the ultimate recipient.

But apparently there attaches to it a certain obligation on the part of the receiving Member of the majority party.

I assume the gentleman's amendment would address this sort of double contribution which may even play a part in future elections for party leadership posts on the majority side.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. BAUMAN) makes a good point which I did not raise. There may be some obligation incurred by the weaker candidate to the stronger candidate. That is obviously possible. That provides an extra reason why we should certainly remove this section. We would thereby remove any of the suspicion that one candidate may be carrying others into the Congress with him or her for whatever reasons.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the adoption of my amendment.

[Mr. HAYS of Ohio addressed the Committee. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL).

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FRENZEL) there were—ayes 39, noes 76.

So the amendment was rejected.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FRENZEL

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FRENZEL: On page 47, beginning line 11, Strike Section 115 in its entirety.

(Mr. FRENZEL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, this is another amendment which, in my judgment, is essential to the integrity and the independence of the Federal Election Commission.

Section 115, which appears on page 47 and half of page 48 in the printed bill, provides that the Election Commission can be put out of business by a vote of either House after March 31, 1977.

Mr. Chairman, when the Supreme Court decision was announced, it was suggested that it might be a good idea to reconstitute the Election Commission and have some kind of self-destruct feature which would force the Congress to take another full look at the election law.

Since we have decided to review the whole election law, 58 pages of new and revised and recodified law, there does not exist much reason for destruction any more, other than to cow the Election Commission.

Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is not adopted, the bill will allow the destruction by either House of the Election Commission next year. It means, of course, that if the Election Commission does not do what we want it to do, it is under threat of extinction.

Mr. Chairman, this is a very simple amendment. I think the section in the bill is very simple, and I am not going to belabor it. It is just a question of whether we want an independent Commission which can count on existence or whether we want a Commission that depends for its very existence on its ability to be nice to Congress.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I request and urge that the amendment be adopted.

[Mr. HAYS of Ohio addressed the Committee. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.]

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

(Mr. WIGGINS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, in the debate over my amendment several minutes ago, the question was raised as to the constitutionality of the duty to report. I viewed that concern as being unfounded, but I wish to assure the Members that there is a real constitutional problem with the section of the bill which this amendment seeks to strike.

Mr. Chairman, this Commission is created by an act of Congress. It takes the House and the Senate acting together, with the President of the United States adding his signature, to create the Commission.

What we have here, Mr. Chairman, is a bill which permits the Commission to be disbanded upon the action of one House of Congress. We cannot repeal laws by the action of one House of Congress. It takes the Congress and the President to repeal a statute. Yet, we have here what purports to be an attempt to grant to either House, by something called appropriate action, the right to determine that the Commission shall cease to exist on March 31, 1977. Otherwise it will continue.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that a statute can delegate to the House of Representatives the responsibility of the Senate, nor can the House delegate to the Senate its responsibility, nor can both of them deny the President the right to act on a law. This provision should be stricken in order to save at least this portion of the bill from constitutional attack.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

(Mr. THOMPSON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I will not take all of my 5 minutes.

The gentleman from Washington (Mr. MCCORMACK) I understand has a question which relates to each and every one of us and which I think should be made clear in the record.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from New Jersey for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I received yesterday in the mail a letter from the Public Disclosure Commission in my State of Washington which reads as follows:

Some time ago you received from this office a copy of a memorandum to me from Assistant Attorney General James M. Vache in which he informally opined on the extent to which the Federal Elections Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 would supersede and pre-empt the State's Open Government Law (Initiative 276). The substance of that memorandum was reviewed by the Public Disclosure Commission at its March 16, 1976 meeting. The discussion concluded with a motion in which the Commission has expressed its doubt that the Federal law can supersede or pre-empt this state law. Enclosed herewith is a news release giving the content of the Commission's motion.

The desired Attorney General's Opinion has been formally requested. We look forward to an early response.

The Public Disclosure Commission then said:

The Commission is in doubt as to the effect of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1974, particularly paragraph 453 of that act relating to its implementation upon the State's public disclosure law. Therefore, until this doubt is removed by receiving a definitive Attorney General's opinion from its counsel, the Commission expects that all incumbents, candidates and political committees supporting and/or opposing incumbents and candidates for such Federal office will voluntarily continue to report under the more exacting provisions of RCW 42.17—among the Nation's first effective public disclosure law.

My question to the gentleman from New Jersey is: Since the opinion of any attorney general could impact upon every Member of the Congress from every State, what is the actual status of the public law, with respect to preemption by the Federal Election Campaign Act of laws of the various States?

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, in response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Washington, let me state that it astounds me really that such an interpretation could come the gentleman's way. Section 453 of the 1974 act which was retained in this act, 2 U.S. Code, section 453, has a specific effect on State law. The precise language of section 453 follows: "The provisions of this chapter and the rules prescribed under this chapter supersede and preempt any provision of State law with regard to elections to Federal office." Nothing could be more clear.

Further, there is in case law a whole body of history which would support this specific section.

In a colloquy with the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) on yesterday, that gentleman and I agreed that this law does indeed preempt all State laws.

Mr. KAZEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. KAZEN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I would say that my attorney general in Texas ruled exactly the opposite of what your attorney general ruled. He held that this law did supersede State law. We do not have to comply with the State law as far as the entire election code is concerned. We do have to comply with those provisions of State law governing the placing of our names on the ballot, filing fees and deadlines, things of that kind, but not with provisions in the State code concerning reporting of contributions expenditures, campaign committees and other such matters.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I believe that the chairman of the committee has a comment to make and I yield to the gentleman from Ohio for that purpose.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I understood that the attorney general of the State of Washington had not as yet ruled?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is correct.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I will tell you what an attorney general's opinion is worth. I was one time in the senate in Ohio and was also the mayor of the village of Flushing. One of my political opponents got the attorney general of Ohio, who was then a Republican, to rule that I could not hold both offices. He argued the law, and he sent me a nasty letter. I replied and I said, "I received both of your letters and," I said, "Let me give you my opinion, and my opinion is that your opinion isn't worth the paper it is written on. Get a court order." That is the last I heard from him.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

(At the request of Mr. McCORMACK, and by unanimous consent, Mr. THOMPSON was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. McCORMACK. I want to make it clear that the attorney general of the State of Washington has issued a tentative opinion agreeing that the Federal law preempts State laws. What has happened is that the State public disclosure commission has chosen to ignore this tentative opinion by the attorney general.

Mr. THOMPSON. The gentleman from New Jersey can state that the gentleman from Washington in turn can ignore the State agency's letter. It is perfectly clear that the Federal law preempts the laws of the 50 States with respect to Federal elections.

Mr. McCORMACK. If the gentleman will yield further, I want to observe that yesterday we in this body accepted an amendment to the bill requiring that we file copies of our campaign finance statements as required by Federal law, with our respective secretaries of State. I voted for that. I think it is appropriate.

Mr. THOMPSON. Copies of the statements or reports of the candidates will be filed with the secretaries of state. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Frenzel amendment. As the sponsor of this particular section, section 409 on page 47, I would like to inform the Members of the House that originally my amendment provided for the disestablishment of the Commission commencing with March 31 of 1977, and the next day I reintroduced this section which passed the committee by a sizable vote. The reason that this is a good section is because we hear so much conversation about oversight. All we are saying in the amendment—and it has nothing to do with the independency of the Commission—is that either the Election Committee or the House Committee or the Committee on Rules on the Senate side, commencing with the date of January 3, 1977, conduct a study of the work of the entire Commission as to all the various aspects of the law, including public financing, contributions and limitations, and that the Election Committee responsible for this law report to the full committee its findings, and then the full committee would report to the House its particular findings, and the Senate would have that same responsibility.

I feel it is a good section, and I urge my colleagues to vote down the Frenzel amendment. What we need in the House is more oversight of the actions that involve the future of each and every one of the Members of this House.

Mr. MIKVA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment because, while I strongly favor the oversight doctrine that my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois, has suggested, this is more than oversight. I am in favor of the Committee on House Administration, and the Senate Rules Committee, doing all they can to review how this Commission functions and what ought to be straightened out and what ought not be straightened out. This provision does more than that. Whether it is constitutional or not, it is clearly a deviation from normal policy to say that either House, either this House or the other body, has the power to totally repeal an act of Congress that has been signed by the President. I think it is very bad policy. I think it will be construed as an interference with the independence of the Commission, whether it is intended to be or not.

I think the notion of going through all of the travail and tribulation that we have gone through to reestablish the Commission, and then to say that on March 31, 1977, less than 5 months after the next election, either House can have the opportunity to drop the hatchet and wipe it out, is a suggestion that the Commission had better toe the line and do what we think they ought to do, or else we are going to put them out of business.

I am particularly concerned about how this will be perceived. We ought to have learned a long time ago that laws are not only what they say and do but what they appear to be. I think this kind of a device, if allowed to remain in the law, will be the single most telltale sign that the Congress really did not have its heart in election reform and did not really want to set up an independent, efficient, self-sustaining commission.

I can only say to my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois, that if the Commission does not work out, then the way to get rid of this Commission is the same way we ought to get rid of any other regulatory agency—by a repeal or revision of the law. The repeal or revision ought to pass both Houses of Congress and be signed by the President.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MIKVA. I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO).

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois, yielding.

I have the highest regard for his legal opinion as to the constitutionality of this section, just as I have the highest regard for the opinion of the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS). The Supreme Court has already ruled. They have declared that this Commission constituted the way it was in the old law was unconstitutional. And the world did not come to an end. We are still doing business. The candidates have received their money up to this date, and if this section is taken to court and they find it unconstitutional, that is our job in the Congress: to take care of it. That is what we will do. We will take act as we are doing today.

In the meantime I want the gentleman to know I firmly, firmly believe that this House should have oversight because this particular law does affect each and every one of us and does affect our personal future. The least little complaint can destroy us and we should have the oversight.

Mr. MIKVA. I think the oversight is independent of destruction, and if we are going to repeal the law which set up this Commission it ought to be done in a bicameral body by both Houses and by the President rather than in this shortcut procedure which I think is unwise.

I urge support of the Federal amendment.

Mr. MATHIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MIKVA. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MATHIS. Mr. Chairman, is not our distinguished friend, the gentleman from Illinois, the author of a bill to provide for an expiration date on all agencies?

Mr. MIKVA. Yes; and under my bill any agency which has been in existence for 10 years ought to go out of business unless the Congress or the President affirm that it should remain. We do not provide that the House can put it out of existence by itself. That is an important difference.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MIKVA. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman might as well save the paper his bill is printed on. That is never going to happen. If he wants to get a bill out that will pass he could say the agencies will go out of business unless both Houses and the President say that they ought to stay in business.

Mr. MIKVA. But there is a great deal of difference between 5 months and 10 years, and that difference ought to be perceived.

I will say we ought to vote for the Frenzel amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

Messrs. McKINNEY, RANGEL, EARLY, SPENCE, O'NEILL, McCORMACK, SKUBITZ, and CARR changed their vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. PHILLIP BURTON

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PHILLIP BURTON: Page 58, after line 16, insert the following new sections:

SEC. 309. CONGRESSIONAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN FUND.

(a) Subtitle H of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new chapter:

"Chapter 97—CONGRESSIONAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN FUND

"SEC. 9051. SHORT TITLE.

"This chapter may be cited as the 'Congressional Election Campaign Fund Act'.

"SEC. 9052. DEFINITIONS.

"For purposes of this chapter—

"(1) the term 'authorized committee' means, with respect to a candidate for Federal office, any political committee which is authorized in writing by such candidate to incur expenses to further the nomination for election or election of such candidate. The authorization shall be addressed to the treasurer of such political committee, and a copy of the authorization shall be filed by such candidate with the Commission. Any withdrawal of any authorization shall also be in writing and shall be addressed and filed in the same manner as the authorization;

"(2) the term 'candidate' means an individual who seeks election to Federal office. For purposes of this paragraph an individual is considered to seek election if he/she (a) takes the action necessary under the law of a State to qualify for election; (b) receives contributions or incurs campaign expenditures; or (c) gives his/her consent for any other person to receive contributions or to incur campaign expenditures on his/her behalf;

"(3) the term 'Commission' means the Federal Election Commission;

"(4) the term 'contribution' means a gift of money made (a) by a written instrument which identifies the person making the contribution by full name or (b) in cash up to $100: Provided, That the candidate and his/her authorized committees maintain and file reports in the form prescribed by the Commission, which show the date and amount of each such contribution and the full name and mailing address of the person making such contribution; but does not include a subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or a contribution of products or services or anything else of value;

"(5) the term 'eligible candidate' means a candidate for election to Federal office who is eligible under Section 9053, to receive payments under this title;

"(6) the term 'Federal office' means the Federal office of Senator or Representative;

"(7) the term 'general election' means any regularly scheduled or special election held for the purpose of electing a candidate to Federal office;

"(8) the term 'matching payment period' means the period beginning on January 1 of each general election year for Federal races and ending on the date on which such general election is held: Provided, That for purposes of a special election held to elect a candidate to Federal office, 'matching payment period' means the period beginning on the day after the incident occurred which created a vacancy in the Federal office being sought and ending on the day in which the special election is held;

"(9) the term 'qualified campaign expenses' means only those expenses incurred by a candidate, or by his/her authorized committee in connection with his/her campaign for general election which are for the use of—

"(i) broadcasting stations to the extent that they represent direct charges for air time;

"(ii) newspapers, magazines, and outdoor advertising facilities to the extent that they represent direct charges for advertising space;

"(iii) direct mailings;

"(iv) telephones to the extent that they represent lease and use charges for equipment, and telegrams;

"(v) rental of campaign headquarters: Provided, That the funds are not used to pay rent to the candidate, a relative of the candidate, or a business entity in which the candidate or relatives of the candidate have a 10-percent or greater ownership interest; and

"(vi) brochures, buttons, signs, and other printed campaign material: Provided, That the term 'qualified campaign expense' shall not include any payment which constitutes a violation of any law of the United States. For purposes of this paragraph, an expense is incurred by a candidate or by an authorized committee if it is incurred by a person specifically authorized in writing by the candidate or committee, as the case may be, to incur such expense on behalf of the candidate or committee.

"(10) the term 'Representative' means a Member of the House of Representatives, and the Delegates from the District of Columbia, Guam, and the Virgin Islands;

"(11) the term 'State' means each State of the United States, the District of Columbia, Guam, and the Virgin Islands;

"(12) the term 'voting age population' means the voting age population certified under section 320(e) of the Act; and

"(13) the term 'non-Federal office' means all offices other than those Federal offices as defined in paragraph (4) of this section.

"SEC. 9053. ELIGIBILITY FOR PAYMENTS.

"(a) To be eligible to receive any payments under section 9057 for use in connection with his/her general election campaign, a candidate shall certify to the Commission—

"(1) that the candidate is the nominee of a political party for election to Federal office of Representative or is otherwise qualified on the ballot as a candidate in the general election for such office and the candidate and his/her authorized committees have received contributions in connection with that campaign which, in the aggregate, exceed 10 percent of the total amount he/she may spend in the general election under section 9055;

"(2) that the candidate is the nominee of a political party for election to the Federal office of Senator or is otherwise qualified on the ballot as a candidate in the general election for such office and the candidate and his/her authorized committees have received contributions in connection with that campaign which, in the aggregate, exceed 10 percent of the total amount he/she may spend in the general election under section 9055;

"(3) that the candidate and his/her authorized committees will not incur qualified campaign expenses in excess of the limitations on such expenses under section 9054, and expenditures in excess of the limitations on such expenditures under section 9055;

"(4) that the candidate is seeking election to a specific Federal office.

"(b) In determining the amount of contributions received for purposes of subsection (a) and of section 9054—

"(1) no contribution from any person to a candidate or his/her authorized committees shall be taken into account to the extent that it exceeds $100 when added to the amount of all other contributions made by that person to or for the benefit of that candidate in connection with his/her general election campaign;

"(2) no contribution from any person to a candidate or his/her authorized committees shall be taken into acount unless it is dated and received during the matching payment period.

"SEC. 9054. ENTITLEMENT TO PAYMENTS.

"Every candidate who is eligible to receive payments under section 9053 in connection with his/her general election campaign is entitled to payments under section 9057 in an amount equal to the aggregate contributions received by such candidate in connection wih such campaign: Provided, That the total amounts of payments to which a candidate is entitled under this subsection may not exceed 50 percent of the sum of the expenditure limitation applicable to such candidate for the specific campaign under section 9055(d)(1) plus the fundraising allowance provided in section 9055(d)(2).

"SEC. 9055. LIMITATIONS.

"(a) Funds received by a candidate or his/her authorized committees under this chapter shall be used only for qualified campaign expenses incurred for the period beginning on the date on which the nominating process is complete in the candidate's State for the Federal office being sought, and ending on the day of the general election, or in the case of a special election beginning on the day after the incident occurred which created a vacancy in the Federal office being sought and ending on the day on which the special election is held.

"(b) No candidate or his/her authorized committees shall be entitled to receive any funds under section 9054 until the candidate and at least one opponent qualified for the ballot under State law as candidates for the general election.

"(c) All payments received under this chapter shall be deposited at a National or State bank in a separate checking account which contains only those funds received under this chapter. No expenditures of any payments received under this chapter shall be made except by checks drawn on this separate checking account at a National or State bank. The Commission may require such reports on the expenditures of these funds as it deems appropriate.

"(d)(1) No candidate for the office of Representative or Senator who receives payments from the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate under section 9057 may make expenditures in excess of—

"(A) in the case of any campaign for general election by a candidate for the office of Senator or by a candidate for the office of Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, the greater of—

"(i) 12 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State (as certified under section 320(e)); or

"(ii) $150,000;

"(B) $70,000, in the case of any campaign for general election by a candidate for the office of Representative in any other State, Delegate from the District of Columbia, or Resident Commissioner; or

"(C) $15,000, in the case of any campaign for general election by a candidate for the office of Delegate from Guam or the Virgin Islands.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) An expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate if it is made by—

"(i) an authorized committee or any agent of the candidate for the purposes of making any expenditure; or

"(ii) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, or an agent of the candidate, to make the expenditure.

"(B) Expenditure does not include any costs incurred by a candidate in connection with the solicitation of contributions by such candidate, except that this clause shall not apply with respect to costs incurred by a candidate in excess of an amount equal to 20 percent of the expenditure limits set forth in paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(C)(i) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1976) as there becomes available necessary data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register the per centum difference between the price index for the 12 months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each limitation established in paragraph (1) shall be increased by such per centum difference. Each amount so increased shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

"(ii) For purposes of paragraph (i)—

"(I) the term 'price index' means the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics; and

"(II) the term 'base period' means calendar year 1974.

"(e)(1) No candidate for the office of Representative or Senator who receives payments from the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate under section 9057 may make expenditures from his/her personal funds, or the personal funds of his/her immediate family in the case of any campaign for general election in excess of, in the aggregate—

"(A) $35,000 in the case of a candidate for the office of Senator or for the office of Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative; or

"(B) $25,000 in the case of a candidate for the office of Representative.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection, 'immediate family' means a candidate's spouse and any child, parent, grandparent, brother, or sister of the candidate, and the spouses of such persons.

"(3) No candidate or his/her immediate family may make loans or advances from their personal funds in connection with his/her campaign for general election unless such loan or advance is evidenced by a written instrument fully disclosing the terms and conditions of such loan or advance.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection, any such loan or advance shall be included in computing the total amount of such expenditure only to the extent of the balance of such loan or advance outstanding or unpaid.

"(f) Notwithstanding any other provision of this chapter, no amount more than the sum of the allowable expenditure limit for a candidate in a given general election race plus the additional fundraising allowance, which are set forth in subsection (e) of this section, shall be paid under this chapter to all eligible candidates in that given election.

"(g) The Secretary of the Treasury shall make distribution of the funds provided under section 9054(a) in the same sequence in which the initial and subsequent certifications are received pursuant to section 9056.

"Sec. 9056. Certification by commission

"(a) INITIAL CERTIFICATION.—Not later than 10 days after a candidate establishes his/her eligibility under section 9053 to receive payments under section 9057, the Commission shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment to such candidate under section 9057 payment in full of amounts to which such candidate is entitled under section 9054. The Commission shall make such additional certifications as may be necessary to permit candidates to receive payments for contributions under section 9057, and in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Commission shall make such certifications in the same sequence in which the candidates have made submissions to the Commission regarding contributions received within the meaning of section 9052(4).

"(b) FINALITY OF DETERMINATIONS.—Initial certifications by the Commission under subsection (a), and all determinations made by it under this chapter are final and conclusive, except to the extent they are subject to examination and audit by the Commission under section 9058 and judicial review under section 9060.

"SEC. 9057. PAYMENTS TO ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF ACCOUNT.—The Secretary shall maintain in the Presidential Election Campaign Fund established under section 9006(a), in addition to any account which he maintains under such section and section 9037, a separate account to be known as the Congressional Election Payment Account. The Secretary shall deposit into such account, for use by candidates who are eligible to receive payments under section 9053, the amount available after the Secretary determines that adequate amounts are available for payments under sections 9006(c), 9008(b)(3), and 9037(b).

"(b) Notwithstanding subparagraphs (a), in each of the 2 years following a Presidential election, the Secretary shall deposit into the Congressional Election Payment Account that portion of the annual amounts designated by taxpayers under section 6096 that equals the excess above 25 percent of the total amount made available in the last Presidential election in allocating funds under section 9006. The moneys in this Payment Account shall remain available without fiscal limitation.

"(c) PAYMENTS FROM THE CONGRESSIONAL ELECTION PAYMENT ACCOUNT.—Upon receipt of a certification from the Commission under section 9056, but not before the beginning of the matching payment period, the Secretary or his delegate shall, within 10 days after receiving such certification or after the beginning of the matching payment period, whichever is later, transfer the amount certified by the Commission from the account to the candidate. The Secretary shall make distribution of the funds available under subsection (a) in the same sequence in which the initial and subsequent certifications are received under section 9056.

"SEC. 9058. EXAMINATION AND AUDITS: REPAYMENTS.

"(a) After each general election, the Commission is authorized to conduct an examination and audit of the campaign contributions raised for purposes of obtaining matching funds and the qualified campaign expenditures made by all candidates for Federal office who received payments under this chapter.

"(b)(1) If the Commission determines that any portion of the payments made to an eligible candidate under section 9057 was in excess of the aggregate amount of the payments to which the recipient was entitled, it shall so notify that recipient, and the recipient shall pay to the Secretary of the Treasury an amount equal to the excess amount.

"(2) If the Commission determines that any portion of the payments made to a candidate under section 9057 for use in a general election campaign was used for any purpose other than for qualified campaign expenses in connection with that campaign, the Commission shall so notify the candidate and the candidate shall pay an amount equal to three times that amount to the Secretary.

"(3) Amounts received by a candidate under this chapter may be retained for 60 days after the general election for the purpose of liquidating all obligations to pay qualified campaign expenses which were incurred for the period beginning with the day on which the candidate's nominating process was completed and ending on the day on which the general election is held. After the 60-day period following the election, all remaining Federal funds not yet expended on qualified campaign expenses shall be promptly repaid by the candidate to the Payment Account.

"(4) If the Commission determines that any candidate who has received funds under this chapter is convicted of violating any provision of this chapter, the Commission shall notify the candidate and the candidate shall pay to the Secretary of the Treasury the full amount received under this chapter.

"(c) No notification shall be made by the Commission under subsection (b) with respect to a campaign more than 2 years after the day of the election to which the campaign related.

"(d) All payments received by the Secretary under subsection (b) shall be deposited by him in the Congressional Election Payment Account.

"SEC. 9059. REPORTS TO CONGRESS, REGULATIONS.

"(a) The Commission shall, as soon as practicable after the close of each calendar year, submit a full report to the Senate and House of Representatives setting forth—

"(1) the qualified campaign expenses (shown in the detail the Commission deems necessary) incurred by each candidate and his/her authorized committees who received payments under section 9057;

"(2) the amounts certified by it under section 9056 for payment to each candidate and his/her authorized committees; and

"(3) the amount of payments, if any, required from that candidate under section 9058, and the reasons for each payment required. Each report submitted pursuant to this section shall be printed as a House or Senate document and made available in sufficient numbers for the general public.

"(b) REGULATIONS.—

"(1) The Commission is authorized to prescribe regulations to carry out the provisions set forth in this chapter. The Commission, before prescribing any such regulation, shall transmit a statement with respect to such regulation to the Senate and to the House of Representatives in accordance with the provisions of this subsection. Such statement shall set forth the proposed regulation and shall contain an explanation and justification of such regulation.

"(2) If either such House does not, through appropriate action, disapprove the proposed regulation set forth in such statement no later than 30 legislative days after the receipt of such statement, then the Commission may prescribe such regulation. The Commission may not prescribe any such regulation which is disapproved by either such House under this paragraph.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'legislative days' does not include any calendar day on which both Houses of the Congress are not in session.

"SEC. 9060. PARTICIPATION BY COMMISSION IN JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.

"(a) APPEARANCE BY COUNSEL.—The Commission is authorized to appear in and defend against any action instituted under this section, either by attorneys employed in its office or by counsel whom it may appoint without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and whose compensation it may fix without regard to the provisions of chapter XX of subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title.

"(b) RECOVERY OF CERTAIN PAYMENTS.—The Commission is authorized, through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a), to institute action in the district courts of the United States to seek recovery of any amounts determined to be payable to the Secretary or his delegate as a result of an examination and audit made under section 9058.

"(c) INJUNCTIVE RELIEF.—The Commission is authorized through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a) to petition the courts of the United States for such injunctive relief as is appropriate to implement any provision of this chapter.

"(d) APPEAL.—The Commission is authorized on behalf of the United States to appeal from and to petition the Supreme Court for certiorari to review judgments or decrees entered with respect to actions in which it appears pursuant to the authority provided in this section.

"SEC. 9061. JUDICIAL REVIEW.

"(a) REVIEW OF AGENCY ACTION BY THE COMMISSION.—Any agency action by the Commission made under the provisions of this chapter shall be subject to review by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit upon petition field in such court within 30 days after the agency action by the Commission for which review is sought.

"(b) REVIEW PROCEDURES.—The provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, apply to judicial review of any agency action, as defined in section 551(13) of title 5, United States Code, by the Commission.

"SEC. 9062. UNLAWFUL USE OF PAYMENTS.

"It shall be unlawful for any person who receives payment under this chapter or to whom any portion of such payment is transferred, knowingly and willfully to use, or authorize the use of, such payment or such portion for any purpose other than for the specific purposes authorized by this chapter.

"SEC. 9063. FALSE STATEMENTS.

"It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully with intent to deceive to (a) furnish any false, fictitious, or fraudulent evidence, books, or sworn material testimony to the Commission under this chapter or to (b) include in any evidence, books, or information so furnished any misrepresentation of a material fact, or to falsify or conceal any evidence, books, or information relevant to a certification by the Commission or an examination and audit by the supervisory officer under section 9058.

"SEC. 9064. KICKBACKS AND ILLEGAL PAYMENTS.

"It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully to give or accept any kickback or make any illegal payment in connection with any payments received under this chapter or in connection with any expenditures of payments received under this chapter.

"SEC. 9065. PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS.

"Any knowing and willful violation of any provision of this chapter is punishable by a fine of not more than $25,000, or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.".

SEC. 310. If any provision of this title, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the title and the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 311. The amendments made by this Act apply with respect to elections which are held after January 1, 1978.

SEC. 312. At every place in the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976 where the words "Chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954" are used, substitute the words "Chapter 95, 96, or 97 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954".

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I just wish to ask this of the gentleman from California: This amendment comprises exactly the text of H.R. 12780?

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BAUMAN. With no changes in it?

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. No changes at all.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. PHILLIP BURTON).

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman this: This is on the matter of public financing for Members of the House and Senate? Is that right?

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that all the Members know the issues and all the Members probably know how they will vote, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto conclude at 3 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto finish at 3 p.m.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS).

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HAYS of Ohio) there were—ayes 93, noes 48.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 200, noes 187, not voting 45, as follows:

Mr. RUSSO and Mr. KEMP changed their vote from "aye" to "no."

So the motion was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The CHAIRMAN. With the permission of the Committee, the Chair would like to make a brief statement.

The Committee has just limited the time on this amendment and all amendments thereto to 3 o'clock. The gentleman from California (Mr. PHILLIP BURTON) had been recognized for 5 minutes. That will leave approximately 6 minutes to be allocated.

The precedents provide under chapter 29, section 31, of Deschler's Procedures that the Chair has discretion in distributing the time. Due to the obvious impossibility of satisfying all Members the Chair proposes to allocate 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS) and 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS), whereby they may yield time.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. PHILLIP BURTON).

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, since the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. STEIGER) was made to put the people on that side of the aisle in this predicament by having an unnecessary rollcall, I will try to be magnanimous and ask unanimous consent that the time be extended to 3:15, instead of 3 o'clock.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, it was not the gentleman from Wisconsin that put us in this predicament, but the gentleman that made the motion, the distinguished chairman of the committee.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my request.

Mr. BAUMAN. Good; it is a good thing the gentleman did.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California (Mr. PHILLIP BURTON) is now recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. Mr. Chairman, as we all know, this is the proposal to extend to congressional general elections the voluntary money in the election trust fund, limit the matching up to $100 per contribution for the general election—effective January 1, 1978. The provisions extend only to the general elections only.

In order to qualify as a candidate eligible for matching funds, one must raise $10,000 in hundred-dollar amounts or less. A candidate need not accept the funding, even though eligible; but a candidate who does accept the matching funds are then subject to the identical expenditure limits that were a part of the statute prior to the Supreme Court decision a few months ago.

Mr. Chairman, this matter has been discussed by a great number of our colleagues.

There are two pending amendments, one of which will be withdrawn and the other amendment by the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. WIRTH), that provided a simplified pro rata matching mechanism, is acceptable to me.

Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from New York (Mr. SOLARZ).

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from California for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, as our colleagues may know, I had originally planned to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from California to extend the principle of public financing from general elections to primaries as well. In view of the fact that a great majority of the seats in the House, and a substantial number of the seats in the Senate, are effectively under the control of one party, it seemed to me that public financing should be available for primaries too. However, after the Executive Board of the Democratic Study Group came out against it the other day on the grounds that, in the unlikely event my amendment were adopted, it might compromise the prospects for the passage of the Burton amendment itself, I came to the conclusion that, however dim the chances were for my amendment originally, they were virtually nonexistent now.

I certainly have no desire to require any of my friends from the DSG, or some of the other progressive precincts in the House, to compromise their good government credentials because of essentially tactical considerations. So, on the theory that the great Chinese philosopher, John F. Kennedy, was right when he said "A journey of a thousand miles begins with a single step," I will refrain from offering my amendment this afternoon.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 seconds.

I oppose the amendment and I want to give the Members seven quick reasons why it would be a bad law:

First, Senator LLOYD M. BENTSEN, JR., $511,022.61.

Second, Senator FRANK CHURCH, $231,380.78.

Third, Former Senator Fred Harris, $493,278.50.

Fourth, Ellen McCormack, $169,043.90.

Fifth, Terry Sanford, $246,388.32.

Sixth, Governor Milton J. Shapp, $278,010.60.

Seventh, R. Sargent Shriver, $264,582.74.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I want to tell the Members why I basically oppose this amendment, and why I think they might really want to vote against it when I am finished.

About 30 States permit people to go to the election without going through a primary by getting a few signatures on a petition and paying the filing fee. My State is one. I can be purely objective about this because it will not apply to elections and to my plan to run for something else in 1978, so I can be purely objective. They want a Democratic governor in Ohio. But what we could have if this becomes law, we could have 25 or 35 candidates running in every district, and I can tell you that in my district you would have them because I know 25 or 30 people who would figure out some way to get that matching money and keep it, like the seven reasons the gentleman from California mentioned. We could have a Congressman sitting in this House with literally 15 percent of the vote that was cast in the district.

If you want to destroy our two-party system, if you want to fragment the American system, 200 years of which we are celebrating; if you want to destroy it, this is a good way to start and is all you have to do, my friends.

Take a look at what has happened in Italy—and we are all worried about that. It has happened because of a multiparty system, and the only way they can vote against the Government, because it is a coalition, is to vote Communist.

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I will yield the rest of my time because the gentleman is going to use it anyway.

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. The gentleman from California anticipated the gentleman's possible criticism, and if the gentleman had read the provision of the bill, the gentleman would know that there is an absolute limit in each congressional district. If there are 45 candidates running in the gentleman's district, the most money anybody can get, if they raise $10,000 in $100 contributions or less, is $2,000.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I have 45 people in my district who would do it for $2,000.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL).

(Mr. FRENZEL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I too have more than seven good reasons to oppose public financing for Congressional elections. I endorse the statement of our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Ohio, and I am glorying in the fact that I am now finally in agreement with him on an important issue in this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Burton amendment which would provide public financing for congressional elections.

I am not going to discuss the usual objections to public financing, but I will list them in passing:

First. Under publicly financed systems, the old, otherwise-unconstitutional expense limitations are reinstated, and challengers are placed totally at the mercy of incumbents. No wonder Members of Congress often favor public financing. It is another self-protection scheme.

Second. Federal financing schemes inhibit private contributions. It will reduce the amount of participation in Federal elections, because people can say that they are participating through the Federal contribution.

Third. Public financing strikes down the "market test" of the popularity of any candidate. Candidates do not have to be attractive. They only need a cause and a few friends and they become a federally propped up candidate.

Fourth. Public financing causes unexciting elections with lowered voter turnouts, because it attracts lots of candidates who are not really serious. In a large field, of course, the incumbent stands out, and the advantages are increased.

Fifth. Public financing represents an unnecessary waste of the taxpayers' money. We have established the section of a check-off, but no taxpayer is donating 1 cent more in income taxes for public financing. Most taxpayers do not check-off, and in America a majority is supposed to rule.

Sixth. The taxpayers' money is certified for candidates by the Federal Elections Commission. Since the FEC has been reduced to the status of a sort of subcommittee of House Administration, guess who is going to get the favorite treatment—the incumbent or the challenger? Giving control of financing, the lifeblood of elections, to the bureaucracy would be foolish even if the FEC were totally independent. The people may never regain control of their own elections.

Seventh. Party responsibility will wither under public financing. Candidates can thumb their noses at their parties, since they can get their money from somebody else, the beleaguered taxpayer.

Eighth. More money will be spent on elections. Most of the big money is spent on the most hotly contested 50 or 60 congressional elections. The onset of free money will create an "amateur night" in every congressional district. Members who have not been opposed before will surely attract opponents under this system.

Nine. Minor party candidates, independents and third parties are always had under public financing schemes. Despite the best efforts, nobody yet has devised a public financing scheme fair to independents.

That is the horrible list, but today I want to talk about other aspects.

Firts, we are in the middle of a Presidential public financing experiment. No matter how poorly that is working out, it should neither be terminated nor extended until we have the experience of a full campaign behind us. Therefore, the Burton amendment, in addition to its other failings, is premature.

Second, public financing was supposed to be a means of purifying the election process. Has anyone noticed any purer spending in the Presidential elections this year? Money is all the same color, whether it comes from the taxpayers or from private sources. And it is buying the same crummy old campaign gimmicks. I do not see any improvement in the balloons, emery boards or bumper stickers. In short, public financing has not cleaned up anything.

Next, the people are more than a little upset with the use of their money for private political candidates. It was bad enough when every squirrel in the cage announced for Presidency this year. Fourteen candidates have qualified for Federal funds; 134 candidates are seeking the presidency. Many candidates who should have been eliminated in early primaries have been propped up by the Federal money and stayed in when they should have sunk from sight. Others have temporarily sunk from sight retaining their Federal funds and are currently enjoying the use of those funds even when they are not bona fide candidates. Anyone who wants to extend this kind of misery to the congressional political campaigns does not have much respect for the taxpayer's dollar or their patience. And remember, two-thirds of the taxpayers do not check off and have apparently voted against this system.

Additionally, Federal financing of elections is an expensive overhead item. The FEC now employs about 135 people. That is slightly less than the Clerk, the GAO and the Secretary of the Senate employed for the last election, but it is many more people than would be needed without public financing.

In testimony before a House Appropriations subcommittee, Commission members indicated that its staff might have to be increased to as many as 500 additional people, if congressional public financing were to be added. As a matter of fact, during the first 8 months of the commission's existence, 17,000 man days were spent solely on the public financing aspect of the law. It is far and away the most expensive part of the FEC operation. If you want to see the FEC grow in personnel and expenses, by all means vote for public financing for congressional elections.

Mr. Chairman, there are many more reasons to be opposed to public financing of congressional elections, but there is not time enough to toll the dreadful litany. It is better that we simply vote down this proposition and be prepared to analyze the results of this year's Presidential public financing after we have had the experience.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. McCLORY).

(Mr. McCLORY asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McCLORY. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to all allocations of public funds for political campaigns including the campaigns of candidates for President.

Mr. Chairman, on October 10, 1974, Members of the House of Representatives recorded an historic vote. By 365 to 24, they approved landmark legislation designed to improve dramatically and fundamentally the way in which Americans elect their Presidents.

I was one of those voting "aye" for the conference report that day which enacted amendments to the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971. Among the most far reaching of those amendments was public support through tax dollars of primary and general campaigns for Presidential candidates.

I said in part, then, Mr. Chairman, to—Let public financing achieve in practice the lofty goals which its advocates forecast, before extending it to all Federal campaigns.

Mr. Chairman, today we are debating further amendments to the Federal Election Campaign Act. The time is several months after the beginning of the primary elections. The initial field of candidates was large. It was, in fact, somewhat of a mob scene at the starting gate.

Now the drop-outs have begun, and yet some of their "campaigns"—and I put that word in quotes—go on, even though their headquarters are shuttered, their staffs dismissed, their volunteers gone. They go on, we are told, so as not to betray those delegates who have voted for them. They also continue, we learn, so that additional Federal moneys may be collected to ease campaign debts. As recently as March 22, I understand, payments were authorized by the Federal Election Commission to three such candidates.

One such candidate left the hustings with one pledged delegate, according to the latest Congressional Quarterly figures. So did another. A third numbers 11 delegates behind him, now that he no longer is running. These 3 gentlemen among them boast a total of 13 delegates, far behind the uncommitted tally of 39, yet little more than a week ago they continued to receive Federal payments for what only by the most torturous definition of the language can be called "campaigns."

Another candidate, also receiving Federal tax moneys, is for all practical purposes a one-issue candidate. What that issue is makes no difference here. That is not the question.

So as we consider these new amendments, my misgivings about our actions of more than 2 years ago grow.

Have tax dollars led to a meaningless proliferation of the primaries? Have we made it too seductively simple for persons without the remotest chance of achieving their party's Presidential nomination to have a primary fling for purposes of prestige or national recognition or whatever reason may lie close to their heart?

Have we played into the hands of the longshot bettors as long as the citizenry will help hedge the bets? Have we, without intent and with high purpose, helped mock a political system already under such close and pessimistic scrutiny by the American people?

I fear we erred, although I voted not only for the conference version of the amendments, but also for the House version which passed August 8, 1974.

Mr. Chairman, in my view, it has not worked as we hoped it would. The public financing portion of the amendments were designed to help eliminate abuses in national political campaigns which then dominated the news and the conscience of the country and the Congress.

Other provisions of those amendments passed in 1974 I still firmly support. But Mr. Chairman, I think that taxpayer support of candidacies already has proven unworkable. The Congress, in voting for morality, for integrity, and for lofty goals, appears to have reaped chaos.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Idaho (Mr. SYMMS).

(Mr. SYMMS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. Chairman, the public is sick and tired of Congress continually voting itself more and more favors. During the last 3 years we have increased our salaries, voted more money of office allowances, for more postal patron mailings, and for staff salary and also increases, and now this under a gag rule, an outrage.

Federal financing of campaigns, with equal and fixed spending limits, is a blantant move toward self-perpetuation of the Government and more specifically of incumbents. When equal amounts of money are given to an incumbent and to a challenger the incumbent has the advantage of the free postal patron mailings, the advantage of more news coverage, etc. Also, consider the effects of newspaper editorial policy under these circumstances. Oftentimes the only way a candidate can counter unfavorable editorials and newspaper endorsements is to buy advertising. Furthermore, the use of more paid advertising is the only way a nonincumbent challenger can overcome the various advantages granted an incumbent. In summary, when incumbent legislators are making laws governing the intricacies of political campaigns they are naturally going to make subtle provisions that work to their advantage. This is the self-perpetuation aspect. How can the people change the policies of Government when the Government makes the rules as to how it is to be done?

Related to the second point is the question of the federal system. It would seem that if laws are to be made governing the election of U.S. Senators and Representatives and Presidential electors, then these laws should be made by the States; not the Federal Government. Under the Constitution the States are given the responsibility of governing elections and making election laws. Senators and Representatives are chosen to represent the people of a particular State in the National Congress; therefore, the people of that State should determine how this is to be done—consistent with the U.S. Constitution.

Another very important question is: Do we have the right, through taxpayer supported Government financing, to force an individual to contribute to a candidate or to a cause to which he does not subscribe? Second, who is going to determine which candidate is qualified to receive funds? What about independent or "minority party" candidates? It seems that public financing actually closes the system to the average man rather than opening the system as Common Cause would have us believe. The only way to open up the system is to allow free expression in a free society. I urge a no vote.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, having no further requests for time, I indicate my own opposition to the amendment.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WIRTH TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. PHILLIP BURTON

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WIRTH to the amendment offered by Mr. PHILLIP BURTON: Page 14, immediately after section 9057(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as added by the amendment offered by Mr. Phillip Burton, insert the following:

"(d) IMITATION.—The Commission shall, not later than April 1 of each election year, determine whether the amount of moneys in the Congressional Election Payment Account will be sufficient to make all payments to which candidates will be entitled under this chapter during such election year. If the Commission determines the amount of moneys in the Payment Account will not be sufficient, the Commission shall ratably reduce the maximum amounts to which candidates are entitled under this chapter by a fraction, the numerator of which shall be the sum of moneys then in the Payment Account and moneys estimated to be deposited in the Payment Account before the general election, and the denominator of which shall be the sum of the estimated amounts to which all candidates whom the Commission determines are likely to seek payments under subsection (c) would be entitled under this chapter if the moneys in the Payment Account were sufficient. The Commission, no later than 15 days after June 1, August 1, and October 1 of each year in which a general election for Federal office is held, shall complete a review of (1) the amount of moneys in the Payment Account and the estimated amount of moneys which will be deposited in the Payment Account before the general election involved; and (2) the number of candidates whom the Commis- this chapter if the moneys in the Payment under subsection (c). Such review shall apply to the 60-day period ending June 1, August 1, or October 1, as the case may be. If the Commission determines, upon conducting such review, that additional moneys are available for payments under this chapter during such election year, such payments as may have been reduced in accordance with the second sentence of this subsection shall be increased on the same basis as they were reduced.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. BAUMAN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I have heard the Clerk read the amendment, and that was not the amendment that was printed in the RECORD of March 29, 1976.

Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment on the grounds that it violates the rule that the House passed.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. WIRTH) desire to be heard?

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Chairman, it is the same amendment that was printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. BAUMAN) advise the Chair in what respect he considers it different?

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Chairman, rule XXIII, clause 6, says, in part:

Material placed in the RECORD pursuant to this provision shall indicate the full text of the proposed amendment, the name of the proponent Member, the number of the bill to which it will be offered and the point in the bill or amendment thereto where the amendment is intended to be offered, and shall appear in a portion of the RECORD designated for that purpose.

Mr. Chairman, on page H2500, of the March 29 RECORD, to which the rule specifically makes mention, this particular Wirth amendment appears as the beginning line with the page blank. Immediately after subsection 9057(c) there is no page 14 designated, and the Clerk just read page 14.

Mr. Chairman, it is not the same amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has examined the situation. To the best of his knowledge, there are no precedents. Under the circumstances, it would have been difficult if not impossible for the gentleman to have had the page number which he printed his amendment in the RECORD, and the Chair believes that the omission of the page number alone does not keep the amendment from being in substantial compliance with the rule. In all other respects, the amendment printed in the RECORD does indicate the point at which the amendment is to be inserted into the amendment of the gentleman from California.

The Chair overrules the point of order.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. WIRTH) for 5 minutes in support of his amendment.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Chairman, has the amendment been read?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The Clerk will complete the reading of the amendment.

Mr. WIRTH (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, in view of the fact that there was one minor change apparently made in the amendment, can the gentleman assure us that the amendment is the same in all respects as it appears on page H2500 of the RECORD?

Mr. WIRTH. If the gentleman will yield, I can assure the gentleman from Maryland that the amendment is the same.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is a man of great integrity and I accept his word.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I do so for the purpose of making a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that it is 3 o'clock, if the amendment is not read, will the gentleman be able to explain it?

The CHAIRMAN. It has been printed in the RECORD, and under the rule the gentleman will have 5 minutes to explain his amendment.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

(Mr. WIRTH asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Chairman, as I think all of the Members know, under the Burton public financing bill, funds for public financing would not come out of general revenue. They would come out of the voluntary checkoff fund established on the first page of everybody's income tax return. The amount of money in this fund has grown every year, and the best estimate made by the Treasurer and by the Library of Congress is that in any given year approximately 30 percent of the income tax returns filed will have checked off the public financing box. That will raise every year something in the neighborhood of $30 million to $45 million.

Against that, were this amendment to be agreed to, in each 4 years we would be paying for one Presidential election, 66 senatorial elections, and 870 congressional elections. In each election year that would come to approximately $38 million which would have to be in the Treasury.

The purpose of this amendment is to assure that if there is not enough money in the fund to cover that $38 million each year, a method is established for allocating that money or what money does exist in the voluntary fund fairly across each one of the candidates. Mine is a technical amendment to the Burton approach. It goes directly to the voluntary nature of this and the fair distribution of the voluntary checkoff funds.

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIRTH. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I commend the gentleman for anticipating the possible problem, and I think this is in our best traditions.

I think the gentleman would also like to assure our colleagues that this leaves completely undisturbed the current priorities in the current law. This in no way affects one way or the other the matching in the Presidential primaries that he mentions or the general election matters; it only assures that no public funds will be used in any way, only the voluntary checkoff money, and that if there is not enough, there will be a proration among the various contestants.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is absolutely correct.

Again it is important to underline that in our examination of the Burton proposal we see that there is no general fund money to be allocated to election funds. All the money which will be allocated comes from voluntary checkoffs from millions of American taxpayers, who, as I am, are sick and tired of a world in which a few special interests are able to purchase politicians and then have an undue effect on political outcomes. We are all tired of having that happen.

Mr. Chairman, it is important that we all understand the reasons for voting for public financing: public financing would reduce the dependence of congressional candidates on wealthy givers and special interest money by providing incentive—50-percent matching funds—for candidates to seek a large number of small, $100 or less, contributions.

Public financing would equalize access to public office for all candidates by placing a reasonable ceiling, approximately $100,000 in the House, on the amount that could be spent by candidates who seek public financing. In Buckley against Valeo the Supreme Court made clear that the only constitutional way to place a ceiling on campaign spending is to make eligibility for matching funds contingent on adherence to spending limits. Without a public financing provision, we will continue to have unchecked spending in House and Senate campaigns.

The system would be totally voluntary. The only money that could be used to finance congressional races would be dollars voluntarily checkedoff on income tax returns. If the congressional checkoff account should not have enough money to cover all races, general revenues could not be used. A candidate's decision to seek public financing would also be completely voluntary. Candidates who choose not to seek public financing could spend as much money as they want.

There would be little potential for abuse. Each House candidate would have to raise at least 10 percent of the general spending limit—approximately $10,000—in order to qualify for Federal matching funds. This threshold would prevent frivolous candidates from receiving Federal funds. Since public financing would be available in general elections only, the specter of a dozen candidates receiving matching funds in a single race would also be eliminated.

Matching payment money could only be spent for qualified campaign expenditures such as broadcast air time, advertising, direct mail and telephone costs. Any person who knowingly and willfully misused Federal matching funds would be subject to criminal prosecution.

Lastly, and perhaps most importantly, public financing would not begin until the 1978 congressional elections. This should underscore the fact that public financing is not an "incumbents' bill" but rather a measure to eliminate the influence of big money, put challengers and incumbents alike on equal footing, and encourage greater public participation in the electoral process.

The Burton amendment is a modified version of H.R. 9100, the Burton-Anderson public financing bill, which more than half the Members of the House have cosponsored.

Following is a summary of the major provisions of the Burton amendment:

SUMMARY

1. Coverage: General elections only, beginning with 1978 congressional elections. Provides public funds only for candidates, and not for political party campaign committees.

2. Public funds: Limited to funds derived from voluntary dollar tax checkoff on income tax returns. No use of general revenue funds.

3. Matching amount: Contributions to candidates of up to $100 per person would be matched with funds derived from the voluntary dollar checkoff.

4. Spending limits: Candidates who accept public financing would be subject to the same overall spending limits and limits on a candidate's own personal funds, originally enacted in the 1974 campaign finance law. The Supreme Court in Buckley against Valeo held that in providing public funds for campaign Congress could condition the availability of such funds on agreeing to campaign spending limits. (For the 1978 Congressional elections, the general election spending limit would be approximately $100,000).

5. Eligibility threshold: Each candidate would have to raise at least 10 percent of the applicable spending limit in amounts of $100 or less per contribution to be eligible for any public funds.

6 Matching payment limit: A candidate could not receive more than 50 percent of his/her applicable spending ceiling in public funds. In addition, all candidates in a given race could not receive public funds totaling more than 100 percent of the applicable spending ceiling in the race.

7. Qualified expenditures: Matching payment money would be limited to qualified campaign expenditures including such items as broadcast air time; newspaper magazine, and billboard advertising space; direct mail; and telephone costs.

8. Matching payment period: Only funds raised after January 1st of the general election year would be eligible for matching. Matching funds received by candidates have to be placed in a special account, may be spent only for general election purposes and no actual disbursements may be made until the candidate and at least one opponent are certified for the general ballot.

The executive committee of the New Members Caucus voted unanimous to support a public financing bill (H.R. 12123). Most of the provisions of this bill have been adopted in the Burton amendment.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield so I may ask a question?

Mr. WIRTH. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment requires a ratable reduction, so the money is equally distributed to those qualified; is that correct?

Mr. WIRTH. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BAUMAN. So the more candidates, Independents, Republicans or Democrats, who file for Congress, the lesser the amounts will be to those who are qualified?

Mr. WIRTH. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BAUMAN. Then this will encourage nearly everyone in the United States to file, will it not, if they would like to receive some extra money from the U.S. Treasury.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman will find that is not true if he will read the Burton proposal. In order to be eligible, one must qualify for general elections only, and one must be a valid candidate for Federal office.

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIRTH. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. Mr. Chairman, one must raise $10,000 in order to qualify for amounts of $100 or less.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it would probably be odd to accept this amendment, because I think it would point up the absurdity of the whole situation. The gentleman from Colorado (Mr. WIRTH) has made a calculation which I think is totally invalid, and that is that there would only be 830 or so—actually I suppose 870 is the right number—candidates for Congress every 2 years.

I can guarantee that if this amendment becomes law, there will be more like 15,000 candidates for Congress every 2 years. This is only the foot in the door, and then when they cannot get enough money from the voluntary check-offs, they will look for more. People more and more are getting fed up with the Senators and others who are dropping off some free money that they run on. They are getting fed up with this sort of thing. There will be fewer people checking off, and the next Congress will be asked to appropriate money out of general revenues, and that is the way these things usually go.

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman knows full well that I joined with the gentleman last year in opposing any general fund use. I believed the voluntary check-off would provide the money, and it has.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to understand that this is money from the general fund. It is money that would be in the general fund if we had not decided to mark it off, because they do not pay it.

The situation is completely misunderstood because everybody thinks this is public financing. The only real public financing is when an individual says, "I want to help you in your campaign. Here is a check for $10, $100, or $1,000."

Mr. Chairman, that is public financing. What we are doing and have been doing is taking it out of the general fund, where it should be, to pay the education bill, to pay for the social security structure, and so forth that we have in this country, and not to give it to politicians in any way, shape, or form.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, somebody did not get to read far enough, but the thing that really upsets me more than anything is the fact that this grade B unemployed movie actor from California got $1,679,124.19.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, the bill we are considering today goes to the very core of our political system—the question of campaign financing.

The campaign finance issue was addressed head on by the 93d Congress. The American public clamored for campaign reform and the Congress responded in passage of the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974. That legislation established an overall ceiling for candidate spending, set limits on individual and group contributions, created an independent Federal Elections Commission to administer and monitor Federal campaigns and provided for public financing of Presidential campaigns.

I voted for that bill because it adequately filled a void in defining the atmosphere in which political campaigns should be conducted in this Nation. I also support the bill presented for debate today as I believe it adequately addresses the objections which the Supreme Court has made with regard to the composition of the membership of an independent Federal Election Commission, as well as refining the 1974 law.

I have always subscribed to the belief that a wide base of financial support is consistent with the principles of representative government embodied in our Constitution.

A viable Federal Election Commission is imperative, in my estimation, if we are to reduce the corrupting influence of big money in politics and insure an atmosphere that fosters widespread participation in our election process.

H.R. 12406 reconstitutes the Federal Election Commission—FEC—to be composed of six members appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. No more than three Commission members of the same political party.

Any major action initiated by FEC would require an affirmative vote of four of the six Commission members. The bill empowers the Commission to initiate investigations, bring judicial actions, and issue advisory opinions. In every case, the Commission must give due and advance notice to parties under investigation or subject to Commission action. Detailed appeals procedures are also included in the bill's provisions.

The Congress, under the terms of the bill, could veto, in toto, or item by item, advisory opinions issued by the Commission.

H.R. 12406 requires the FEC to enter into conciliation with apparent violators of all but criminal proceedings. The bill redefines a criminal violation as any "knowing or willful" violation which involves the "making, receiving, or reporting" of any contribution or expenditure having an aggregate value of greater than $5,000 during a calendar year. All other election law violators would be noncriminal or civil violations.

The bill eases expenditure reporting and contribution requirements in nonelection years and gives the Congress the option to abolish the Commission after 1 year.

The bill further states that locals of a union and subsidiaries of a corporation are to be treated as part of the parent corporation with respect to the $5,000 limitation on contributions to any one candidate or political committee.

While the bill does not alter the ability of corporations and labor unions to organize political action committees, it does prohibit corporations from soliciting contributions from other than stockholders, executive officers and their families. Labor unions are allowed to solicit contributions from their members.

With regard to Presidential candidates, the bill makes ineligible for matching funds any candidate who spends more than $50,000 of his or his immediate family's personal funds.

It also stipulates that, should the Secretary of the Treasury determine that no moneys exist in the checkoff fund to make payments to candidates, no moneys would be made available to make such payments from other sources. And, candidates ceasing to actively campaign may receive no further matching funds and must return to the Treasury remaining funds not used for legitimate expenditures in closing out the campaign.

I believe that amendment to this bill to make the financing of congressional elections the responsibility of the U.S. Treasury is not in the best interest of the American people.

It is estimated that Federal financing for congressional elections will cost between $20 to $25 million in 1976 alone. And while proponents may argue that sufficient moneys will be available through the checkoff fund, we have no firm assurance that the checkoff fund will be able to meet even the demands of Presidential candidates for matching funds, much less a drain on the Treasury for congressional campaigns.

Perhaps the most disturbing shortcoming of a proposal to publicly finance congressional campaigns is that it will force taxpayers to support candidates with whom they disagree.

I believe we need to await the outcome of our first experience with Federal financing of campaigns to see if public financing of Presidential campaigns has a positive effect on the electoral process.

Democracy, as an institution, is in jeopardy throughout the world. We need look no further than France or Spain or India to see this trend. It is more important now than ever before for individuals to become involved in their choice.

A law with teeth in it to govern the conduct of political campaigns in this country is in the best interest of every American taxpayer and voter.

I urge my colleagues to support the committee bill.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe public financing of congressional campaigns will improve our candidates, political education, or citizen participation, and I rise in opposition to this amendment.

I believe there are several reasons to oppose it.

First, let us face it, despite the fact that this is financing from the voluntary checkoff, it will appear to many people that Congress is voting money from the public treasury to finance our own reelection campaigns. With the present standing of Congress in the eye of the public, we do not need that kind of misunderstanding.

Second, the result of public financing of general election congressional campaigns will be more campaign inflation. More TV and radio ads, more bumper stickers, more billboards. I have seen no evidence that the matching funds in the Presidential primaries have been used to increase voter education. They have been used for the traditional campaign practices, and allowing more money to be spent for these things in congressional campaigns may increase name recognition, but I do not see it increasing voter knowledge.

As far as this amendment removing influence of contributors, I doubt that will be the case. First, under the Supreme Court ruling a candidate need not accept the ceiling and matching funds. Second, matching funds alone will not handle all the spending.

We still have contribution limits; we still have disclosure of contributions and spending. Let us leave the facts to the citizens through disclosure, and let them decide. They do not need public matching funds to make that decision.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I recently took a poll of my area on this question. The results showed 28 percent favored public funding of congressional campaigns; 71 percent opposed it; and 1 percent was undecided. Even more important than the numbers, though, were the comments of the respondents. They showed that the people are tired of a multitude of candidates and messages. They are tired of year-round campaigning. With this amendment the scramble for funds will start just after the primary with more ads, billboards, and campaigning being assured.

We are already turning off more people to the political system than we are turning on to politics. In my poll the people are saying they want fewer frills, shorter campaigns, and less money being spent on politics. This amendment furthers none of those goals.

I urge a "no" vote.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I must rise in strong opposition to the Burton public financing amendment which we are considering at this time. In the 93d Congress I voted against the public financing of congressional elections. Since that time, many rationalizations have been put forth to justify this concept. I have found none to be convincing. The amendments before us today embody an overeager attempt to implement public financing before its impact can be anticipated. It is a classic case of putting the cart before the horse.

I personally feel that public financing is an ill-fated experiment. Should public financing be adopted, we are in effect saying that we are willing to learn by our mistakes. This particular mistake would cost our taxpayers millions upon millions of their hard-earned dollars without improving the quality of elections.

I have heard many estimates of the cost of financing congressional campaigns with public moneys. Last Tuesday, during the general debate on this bill, I suggested that my own computations indicate that in the next general election year the costs of the program may be well in excess of the $40 million dollars some point to as an upper cost ceiling.

If we assume that each incumbent and his major party opposition candidate qualifies for only $35,000 of the matchable $45,000—or 75 percent—and that there will be only two single issue or fringe party candidates in each district who qualify for half that much, or $17,500—39 percent—the proposal will cost the taxpayers $45,675,000.

If the amendment is adopted and the benefits of public financing are extended to include primary elections the costs will go absolutely out of sight.

The legislation also provides for a cost-of-living escalator, which will increase my estimates even further. While some may argue that these figures are high and that my assumptions are incorrect, the fact remains that we do not have any model on which to base our cost estimates. Therefore, one set of assumptions is just as valid as another. Those who argue in this area are just supporting the contentions I made on Tuesday that we just do not have enough information, study and analysis of the Presidential public financing program that would allow us to make an intelligent and informed decision today on extending the program to include congressional elections.

Mr. MEZVINSKY. Mr. Chairman, continued abuses of the election laws, attempts to coerce contributions and support, and the frenzy of spending serve as emphatic statements that our campaign laws need to be seriously revised.

Since the January 30 decision of the Supreme Court, Congress has been given another opportunity to enact meaningful campaign reform laws. The legislation before us today goes beyond reconstituting the Federal Elections Commission, as mandated by the Supreme Court, and addresses other issues such as corporate political action committees, the structure of candidates' campaign committees, and limitations of cash contributions. All of these are important measures but do not reach the core of campaign reform—eliminating money as the operative element of the political system.

My friend and colleague, the gentleman from California, has offered an amendment today which will help us meet that goal. His amendment, carefully drafted to preserve free speech and civil liberties guaranteed by the Supreme Court ruling, can finally put a lid on spending in an arena where spending has been king. Under this proposal a candidate will have a choice—either to accept a spending limit with matching funds for small contributions or to spend as much money as can be raised with no Federal contribution. Although I believe that a vast majority of candidates will accept matching contributions, I think it is equally important that a candidate have the right to select whichever course he chooses to take.

If this amendment is adopted, candidates will be forced to rely less on their money-raising talents and must instead focus on their appeal to the public. We have accepted this concept in our Presidential campaigns and should be able to accept it in congressional races where the issue and impact of money is even more important.

This public financing proposal is both fiscally and philosophically sound. There will be no additional dollar investment by the public. Under this plan, funding will be limited to funds that are already now being collected in the income tax checkoff system. Each campaign is strictly limited and dollar ceilings are set.

I believe that, at a time when our political process is so widely criticized, we must be willing to accept this reform, if only as an experiment in good government. Congress must make certain that American voters have a chance to choose their representatives on the most important factor of all—their worth to hold public office. I urge my colleagues to support this effort.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Chairman, the methods used to finance congressional political campaigns have been a subject of considerable controversy and heated debate during the last decade.

The central question is the degree to which large donations from limited numbers of people should be permitted to influence the political process. We have already limited the maximum amount an individual can spend on one campaign. We must now decide whether or not to go a step further in curbing the distorting impact of powerful special interests on the political process by introducing matching funds checked off for that purpose by the public—a reform we have already made with respect to Presidential campaigns.

In recent years, an increasing gap has emerged between the realities of running for public office and the vision of the democratic electoral process originally intended. In 1972, 18 wealthy individuals supplied the Committee to Re-Elect the President with nearly $7.5 million in personal contributions. The experiences of 1972 taught us that public disclosure alone is insufficient. The electoral process must be purged of the very source of distorting influences and pressures—big money. The special interests are not prone to parting with their money out of the goodness of their hearts; if they provide a large contribution to a political candidate, it is due to anticipation of something of greater value in return. If there is a single problem which is more responsible than any other for the inability or unwillingness of Washington to serve the interests of the ordinary American and the public interest, it is this: The undue influence of powerful, but narrow, self-serving special interests. The system itself needs to be changed. Public financing is needed, and it is needed now.

The principal objectives of a system of public financing are widely agreed upon:

It should liberate candidates from the special interests and from the onerous and degrading task of raising money in large contributions.

It should prevent one candidate from gaining an artificial advantage over opponents because he is able to raise more money through large contributions or due to incumbency.

It should put all serious candidates in a position to effectively communicate with voters.

The Burton amendment—which is similar to a bill I introduced jointly with Congressman McHUGH early last year—proposes the kind of equitable changes we need in congressional campaigns.

We cannot limit reforms to the Presidential aspirants, leaving our own House literally in disorder. It is imperative that Congress take immediate action so that future campaign years will not see abuses similar to those from which the Nation suffered in 1972. Let us take the unique opportunity which this elections bill offers us today to remove from the political process the corrupting effect of large special interest money—money which has been so responsible for the suspicion and distrust with which so many Americans now regard their own democratic process. Now is the time to take the initiative to provide for the kind of electoral system that eliminates back room favoritism, opens the front door to all Americans, and conforms to and serves the public interest.

The Burton amendment provides financial assistance on a matching fund basis beginning in 1978. It provides funding from the voluntary income tax checkoff as is presently done for the presidential campaign. The proposal would impose spending limitations for candidates accepting public financing—approximately $90,000 for House candidates and 12 cents per voter for Senate candidates. Candidates could not receive more than half the applicable ceiling in matching funds. To qualify, a candidate would be required to raise 10 percent of the applicable limit in contributions of $100 or less, and only contributions of $100 or less would be matched with corresponding Federal funds.

In considering various reform measures, we must not lose sight of our objectives: to allow for fair competition between the best people for any national office; to insure an informed electorate with a maximum of public participation in the political process; and ultimately to reenforce the faith and confidence of the electorate. The Burton amendment is a vital step in this direction.

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. Mr. Speaker, inserted below are copies of letters from various organizations in support of my amendment to H.R. 12406 to provide congressional public financing on a matching fund basis for general elections:

INTERNATIONAL UNION, UNITED AUTOMOBILE, AEROSPACE & AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENT WORKERS OF AMERICA—UAW

March 26, 1976.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: The UAW urges most strongly that you support H.R. 12406 to reconstitute the Federal Election Commission to meet the constitutional deficiencies which prompted the recent Supreme Court decision. As reported by the House Administration Committee, the bill also contains loophole closing provisions necessitated by the Court's decision.

It is our understanding that an amendment will be offered during consideration of H.R. 12406 to authorize public financing in congressional campaigns. For many years, the UAW has favored public financing, and we urge you to vote for the amendment when it is offered next week.

As reported, the bill's principal objective is to reconsttiute the Commission consistent with constitutional requirements. It would also restore more equal treatment of labor union and corporate political activities as clearly set forth in the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971. In its advisory opinion in the so-called SUNPAC matter, the FEC deviated sharply from congressional intent regarding political activity of labor unions and corporations. H.R. 12406 simply would restore the intent of Congress that such activities be treated fairly and equally. The bill also prohibits proliferation of political committees by both corporations and labor unions.

H.R. 12406 is well drafted, equitable and essential legislation. Time is of the essence; the FEC must be reconstituted if chaos is to be avoided in the Presidential campaign.

We believe H.R. 12406 at this time is an essential step. The adoption of the public financing amendment would constitute another positive step in the continuing effort to achieve meaningful campaign reform.

H.R. 12406 deserves your enthusiastic support; we hope you will vote for it and against weakening amendments. Your consideration of the UAW position on this major legislation will be appreciated.

Sincerely,

STEPHEN I. SCHLOSSBERG,
General Counsel.

DICK WARDEN,
Legislative Director.

PUBLIC CITIZEN,

March 30, 1976.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: The House will soon consider H.R. 12406, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976, which reconstitutes the Federal Election Commission and makes some needed reforms in existing federal election law.

We strongly support the amendment for public financing of congressional campaigns to be offered by Mr. Phillip Burton of California. This proposal, originally introduced last year as a separate bill with 220 co-sponsors, provides for federal matching funds for candidates to the House of Representatives. These funds would be available in general elections only, would match only small contributions, and would be tied to the candidate's acceptance of a spending limitation. Federal funds could never account for more than one-half of the funds spent by a candidate. Based on the successful provision for federal funding of Presidential candidates, matching funding for Congressional candidates would not start until the Congressional elections of 1978, to avoid the possibility of injecting confusion into this year's races

Public financing of campaigns was upheld by the Supreme Court in Buckley v. Valeo. The Court accepted the strong arguments in favor of public financing of presidential campaigns. Surely the same arguments support the constitutionality of public financing of Congressional campaigns.

Public financing of Congressional campaigns will serve three salutory purposes. First, it will release candidates from the stranglehold which fat cat and special interest contributors often have on them. The practice of exchanging commitments on specific issues for large cash contributors can be put to an end. Candiates will have to seek support from the people in their district, not just to those who might give large contributions. Second, public fundng can relieve some of the burden of raising funds. Congressional candidates frequently complain about the amount of time they must spend in raising money. Time spent in this way is time taken from discussing the issues with the voters. By reducing the need to raise funds, public funding can refocus campaigns on the crucial issues of the day. Third, public funding, tied as it is to limitations on expenditures, can equalize the amount spent by each candidate for office. If all the candidates in a particular race for Congress accept federal funds, all will be subject to the same spending limitation. Although candidates will still have the option of refusing federal money and spending unlimited amounts to seek election, this system of federal matching funds provides a strong incentive to accede to limitations on expenditures.

We strongly urge you to support the Burton public financing amendment to H.R. 12406.

Sincerely yours,

JOAN CLAYBROOK.

SUPPORT FOR THE FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AND PUBLIC FINANCING
STEELWORKERS LEGISLATIVE APPEAL,
Washington, D.C., March 31, 1976.

We urge your support for HR--12406, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments as reported by the House Administration Committee, and for the Burton amendment to provide public financing of congressional campaigns.

In addition to reconstituting the Federal Election Commission, the impact of the committee bill is the equalization of treatment of corporate and union political activities, the prevention of employer macing, and the strengthening of FEC procedures as necessary to make its regulatory function effective. It is appropriate that Congress address those issues in conjunction with the reconstitution of the Commission, and we oppose all amendments designed to weaken or strike those important sections.

Furthermore, we strongly oppose any provisions similar to the so-called Packwood amendment which are specifically designed to cripple local union political activities through onerous and discriminatory reporting requirements.

The committee bill would breathe new life into a key component of Congress' most recent political reform effort, as well as establish important new reforms. But Congress must dealize that true, comprehensive reform will not be possible until we begin to lessen the importance of private money in the political process. That is the thrust of the Burton amendment to establish public financing of congressional elections, and we urge your support of it.

COMMON CAUSE,
Washington, D.C., March 23, 1976.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: When the House considers H.R. 12406, Representative Philip Burton will introduce an amendment to provide for public financing of Congressional campaigns. We strongly urge your support for this key proposal.

The Burton amendment is essentially the same legislation cosponsored in this Congress by more than 200 House Members. It is also very similar to the public financing proposal debated and narrowly defeated by the House in 1974. In the last Congress, the Senate twice passed a comprehensive Congressional public financing measure.

The absence of Congressional public financing is the vital mising link in our campaign finance laws. In upholding the constitutionality of Presidential public financing, the Supreme Court said, ". . . Congress was legislating for the general welfare—to reduce the deleterious influence of large contributions on our political process, to facilitate communication by candidates with the electorate, and to free candidates of the rigors of fundraising." The same arguments hold true for Congressional public financing.

Recent Common Cause studies have revealed the dangerous growth of special interest money in Congressional campaigns. When Congress in 1974 provided public financing for Presidential races, one might have predicted a marked increase in the special interest money flowing to Congressional races—and that is precisely what is going to happen. As of January 1976, special interest groups already had $16 million cash on hand, more than 40 percent above the amount held at a similar stage in 1974.

It is essential that we move to a system of financing Congressional campaigns that is less dependent on special interest money, and more dependent on small private donations. Public financing is the means of accomplishing that transition. The Burton proposal would establish a matching system for Congressional candidates in the general election. Candidates could not receive public funds unless they were able to raise a threshold amount of small contributions. There would be an overall limit on the total amount of public funds that could go to candidates in any one race. Public funds would be matched against small private contributions of up to $100 each. The public funds could only be derived from voluntary funds checked off by taxpayers on thier income tax returns.

The evidence to date clearly establishes that the matching system is working well at the Presidential level. Adoption of the Burton amendment would provide the same historic breakthrough for Congressional campaign financing that the 1974 Act has provided for Presidential campaign financing. We urge you to vote for this crucial legislation.

Sincerely,

JOHN W. GARDNER,
Chairman.

PREFERENTIAL MOTION OFFERED BY MR. BAUMAN

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BAUMAN moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken.

(Mr. BAUMAN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have a great deal of affection and respect for the gentleman from California (Mr. PHILLIP BURTON), who has offered this amendment. I certainly admire his use of power and his ability to present his case as he has in this instance in his usual articulate manner.

I sympathize with his desire to provide public funding to enhance the ranks on his side of the aisle. Two-thirds of the membership is really not enough to do what he wants to do in the House of Representatives, apparently. I must say that I think he does a political disservice to the Members on his side of the aisle, particularly those in marginal districts. How can they go home and explain a vote for this amendment?

Mr. Chairman, this Congress has raised its own salaries, has tied its pay to the cost-of-living index, has increased the number of its staff, has increased its stationery allowance 24 percent, has increased its district office allowance 43 percent and has increased its telecommunications allowance. Its office staff allowance has been increased, in overall funding, by $32,000 per office. It has increased the number of office staff members from 16 to 18. It has given itself two newsletters annually, which cost $5,000 to print.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I wonder whether he has used all of that himself?

Mr. BAUMAN. No, this gentleman has turned back many of these allowances the gentleman from New Jersey has made possible.

Mr. THOMPSON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Chairman, all of these additional allowances added together mean that in 2 years the cost of maintaining one Member of Congress has gone from $376,000 to $488,000, up 30 percent. In the last 20 years, while the United States has increased its population only 30 percent, the dollar has gone down in value 83 percent, and the cost of running the Congress has increased by about 560 percent. And now we come to the Burton amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in my calculation, if this amendment is adopted, we will be subtracting from the Treasury every 2 years $30,550,000 if there are just two congressional candidates who qualify in each district. There will probably be at least three or four candidates who qualify in each district so that we can add to that an additional sum, as well as funding for elections in the other body.

I think it will be difficult for any of us to go back and explain to our constituencies why we were willing to vote ourselves campaign funds on top of what we already have received. We have gone literally from the ballot box to the cash box, and it will be the congressional hand that will be in that cash box if this amendment passes.

Mr. Chairman, I regret that the gentleman from California (Mr. PHILLIP BURTON) has seen fit to offer this amendment and I urge its rejection.

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield

Mr. BAUMAN. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

As the gentleman well knows, this bill is drafted in such a manner that it cannot be considered to be self-serving. No incumbent Member of this House can receive $1 of that matching money until the electorate decides to send that money back. We are not changing the rules in any way.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Chairman, one of the country newspapers on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, the Talbot Banner of Easton, Md., the other day summed up my view, as follows:

In our view, the spectacle of a small army of presidential candidates running around the country on the taxpayer's dollar in this election year has soured the public already to the concept of Federal financing of political campaigns. The thought of an even larger army of subsidized congressional candidates is, frankly, nauseating.

Mr. Chairman, this is not just the Burton amendment, it is the nauseating amendment.

Mr. JOHN L. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAUMAN. I yield to the other distinguished gentleman from California.

Mr. JOHN L. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would only say this: If the public is so fed up, why are the checkoff moneys in the Treasury for the 1975 taxes double the estimates?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAUMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

It was said that about 30 percent of the public checkoff, and it does not cost any of them a single dime. This means that 70 percent of the public do not want the "dumb" thing.

Mr. JOHN L. BURTON. If the gentleman will yield further, it is up double what it was, as everybody knows.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Chairman, I hope both amendments are soundly defeated.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. BAUMAN) to strike the enacting clause.

(Mr. HAYS of Ohio asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I almost never read the horoscopes, but last night I happened to turn to that page and read my horoscope for today and it said, "You had better stay in bed."

You know, I had this thing defeated and then my friend the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. BAUMAN) had to get up to support me. And I just beg of you, I beg of you to act like he had not talked and go ahead and vote it down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. BAUMAN).

The preferential motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. WIRTH) to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. PHILLIP BURTON).

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BAUMAN), there were—ayes 74, noes 87.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. PHILLIP BURTON).

The question was taken.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 121, noes 274, not voting 37, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Eckhardt for, with Mr. Krueger against.

Mr. Rodino for, with Mr. Stratton against.

Mrs. Chisholm for, with Mr. Hébert against.

Mr. Clay for, with Mr. Breaux against.

Mr. Nix for, with Mr. Burke of Massachusetts against.

Mr. RINALDO and Mr. EMERY changed their vote from "aye" to "no."

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

(Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I have, with one exception, not participated in the debate on this bill; yet, I recognize I bear some of the responsibility for the fact this bill is here. I was one of those who joined as a plaintiff with former Senator McCarthy, Senator BUCKLEY, the New York Civil Liberties Union, Human Events, the Mississippi Republican Party and the Libertarian Party in bringing this suit against the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1974.

The Supreme Court decision in Buckley versus Valeo, which is the reason we have spent these days debating this bill, quite clearly and forthrightly enunciated some of the principles all of us ought to pay more attention to, but my regret is that in the debate of this bill we once again, I am afraid, are seeing the House head down the road of attempting to restrain the first amendment rights of the American people. If this bill passes in its present form, Mr. Chairman, we are once more asking for another set of plaintiffs to bring a suit against a bill passed by the Congress.

Obviously, I hope this bill does not pass in its present form. Obviously, if it does, my hope is that the President will have enough wisdom and, yes, enough courage to veto the bill. This bill is a bad bill; not just because of the reasons that are enunciated so clearly in the views expressed by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL), but let me suggest two thoughts to the Members concerned about the rights and privileges of those we have the honor to represent.

Section 109 of the bill—take a look at section 109, page 19, lines 12 through 16, and also page 26, lines 5 through 11. The Members will see in those sections an obvious restriction on the ability of an individual to freely express his or her views. That is, no investigation shall be made public; that is to say, if a candidate knows his or her opponent is under investigation, he cannot say so. That, I think, is clearly a restriction on the speech of an individual.

Section 112 of the bill on page 32, Mr. Chairman, is another inhibition. It says that if an individual independently spends, on his own, money for "the dissemination, distribution or republication, in whole or in part, of any broadcast or any written, graphic or other materials" prepared by the candidate, he can spend no more than $1,000. The Supreme Court said we cannot write such a law. If there were any one message in the Buckley versus Valeo decision, it was that we cannot—cannot, underlined—by an act of Congress inhibit the ability of the American people to spend money freely in elections.

Thus, Mr. Chairman, the motion to recommit ought to be adopted. That will give this body a chance to hold its head high, to say that we really do believe in the constitutional rights we have sworn to uphold. If the motion fails, we will have done a disservice to the Constitution, to ourselves, and to our constituents.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the bill and all amendments thereto, including pro forma amendments, close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Members standing at the time the unanimous-consent request was granted will be recognized for 3⅓ minutes each.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. ROUSSELOT).

(Mr. ROUSSELOT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this bill. I think the debate has now convinced me thoroughly that it is bad legislation.

In January of this year, the Supreme Court held, in a significant and important decision, that the Federal Elections Commission—FEC—was unconstitutionally structured under current law for the purpose of administering Federal election financing. The Court gave Congress 30 days, and subsequently another 20 days, to restructure the FEC along prescribed constitutional lines. Regretfully, instead of acting, Congress has turned the Supreme Court decision into a field day for undoing much-needed election reform. And they have accomplished this feat—appropriately and timely enough—in the middle of a Presidential and congressional election year.

Mr. Speaker, I personally fully acknowledge the need for thorough, well-considered and thought-out amendments and improvements to the present law—reforms that will not only meet the specifications identified by the recent Supreme Court decision—but that will guarantee the proper and prudent administration of Federal elections in the future. The bill that is now being considered, however, goes wildly beyond these purposes and amounts to a shoddily prepared bag of dirty tricks.

Only the first two pages of H.R. 12406 address the task assigned by the Court of restructuring the FEC. The remaining 56 pages of the bill, more than reconstituting the Federal Elections Commission, promote the establishment of an "Incumbent Protection Agency." Among the most offensive provisions of the bill are those which:

First. Further corrode a campaign law which is already biased toward the protection of incumbents;

Second. Give special advantage to labor union political action committees while denying the rights of political expression to the vast majority of workers—70 million—in this country who are unorganized; and Third. Make dozens of other changes which serve to weaken or otherwise negate the legitimate reforms accomplished in the 1974 act.

It is very unfortunate that this Congress, which has so self-righteously identified itself as the reform Congress, above the Watergate morality and with an anticorruption backlash, would enact such a measure which has been so craftly put together by and solely for the incumbent. They have done it without hearings or consultation with outside experts, witnesses or challengers.

In an editorial that appeared in the March 9 edition of the Washington Star, columnist James J. Kilpatrick has colorfully summed up the problems associated with the heavily biased election reform legislation and calls the whole process that brought about H.R. 12406 a "sorry performance." I include the Kilpatrick editorial at this point in the RECORD and respectfully commend it to my colleagues for their consideration:

[From the Washington Star, Mar. 9, 1976]

MAKING A POOR CAMPAIGN LAW EVEN WORSE

(By James J. Kilpatrick)

Everyone who spends time in a kitchen knows about the leftover problem. Now and then you can do something pretty good with the remains of a leftover roast. But if what you start with is leftover hash, that's what you end with, too. This is the problem Congress faces with the Federal Election Campaign Act.

In January the Supreme Court made hash of that act. Toward the end of its long opinion, the Court toyed briefly with the idea of throwing out the law altogether. Unfortunately, prudence and custom prevailed. The Court made a deferential bow to the supposed wisdom of the House and Senate, and threw the hash back in their laps.

Now a couple of short-order chefs—Wayne Hays in the House and Howard Cannon in the Senate—are doing a dirty apron job. They are about to make bad matters worse, and the lamentable prospect is that they have the votes to prevail. In the months after Watergate, Congress went through great spasms of morality; now the convulsions have subsided, and the Congress is quite itself again. Election reform is a bore.

Under the terms of the Supreme Court's opinion, the most urgent problem had to do with the Federal Election Commission that had been created by the 1974 act. Under the law, the six members were to be named by the House and Senate. No way, said the Court. The Constitution plainly vests such appointive power in the President. If the commission were to survive beyond a 30-day grace period (later extended by 20 days), the commission would have to be reconstituted.

If the Congress had wanted to proceed along rational lines, a two-page bill could have been whipped up to accomplish that and nothing more. Everything else could have been left for later action. But few persons ever have charged the Congress with rational behavior. Any such simple procedure would have reflected poorly on the congressional capacity for the devious.

What we have, therefore—what we had a few days ago, at least—is a 46-page bill that is technically by "Mr. Hays of Ohio," but is more truly the prose composition of Mr. Meany of the AFL–CIO. The key provision of this interesting work of art is intended to nullify an even-handed ruling of the commission pursuant to the original act. The purpose is to restore to organized labor the political clout that Mr. Meany conceives as rightfully his.

Under the original law, as the commission decreed in response to an inquiry from the Sun Oil Co., unions and corporations were to be treated equally. Unions could solicit their members for political contributions. Corporations similarly could solicit their employes.

Under the Hays-Meany revision, unions naturally could continue to solicit their members and their families, but a corporation could communicate politically only with "its stockholders and executive officers and their families." The term "executive officer" would be defined to include only those salaried persons with both policymaking and supervisory responsibilities.

The Senate Rules Committee met on a recent afternoon for what is known as a "mark-up session." Remarkably, the committee was not marking up its own bill, for it had none; it was marking up the Hays-Meany House bill, copies of which had been thoughtfully provided. Over the vehement protests of Republicans Robert Griffin and Hugh Scott, Chairman Cannon guided the steamroller down its appointed path. The Democrats had five votes, the Republicans only four, and as the old story tells us, that do make a difference.

The revised provisions represent a sorry performance by too many high-handed cooks. It is a case of hashes to hashes, and crust to crust. Scott predicts a veto if the Hays-Meany bill passes, but so much money is riding upon the commission's continued existence that a veto might well be overridden. "Making law is like making baloney," says Sen. Griffin. "It takes a strong stomach to watch either process."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL).

(Mr. FRENZEL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, as I have previously stated in this Committee, I am not going to move the substitute H.R. 11736, which was made in order in the rule and is therein numbered 4, for the reason that that amendment will be offered as a part of the motion to recommit.

We have come to this determination because we think it is unnecessary and wasteful of time to debate this matter twice. We think the matter can be settled in the vote on the motion to recommit.

Mr. Chairman, I do, however, want to say that this bill has 73 cosponsors, and a total of about 100 Members have signed this bill or others very much like it. It calls for a simple reconstitution of the Federal Elections Commission on a constitutional basis, as suggested by the Supreme Court. It is a 3-page bill.

What we have before us is a 58-page monster.

This bill simply does what is necessary now. It does not change the rule in the middle of the stream. It does not recodify the election code. It does not reduce the independence of the Election Commission. It does not have any self-serving Congressional favoritism in it. In fact, it does nothing except reconstitute the Election Commission, as was suggested by the administration and as was suggested by Common Cause, by the League of Women Voters and by other interested political observers.

Mr. Chairman, I think we can save ourselves lots and lots of trouble if we support the motion to recommit and vote against this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS).

(Mr. HAYS of Ohio asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to use the entire three minutes. I just want to reply briefly to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. STEIGER). I do not think, really, if the Members stop to think about what he said, that he needs much reply.

Mr. Chairman, there is an old saying that politics makes strange bedfellows. That was quite a bedfull the gentleman was in bed with.

If the Members listened to what he said, he mentioned the Mississippi Democratic Party, human events, ex-Senator McCarthy was a nice fellow, he does not know where he was running from or where he was going.

If the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. STEIGER) and some others of the same ilk do not like this bill, he can file another lawsuit. He has lots of money, as I understand it, and I know of no better way to get rid of it than to share the wealth among lawyers. They lobbied the no-fault insurance to death over in the Senate because they thought there was not enough business for it. And if the gentleman wants to share some of his wealth with them, that is okay with me.

Mr. Chairman, I will speak to the motion to recommit at the proper time. I understand each side has 5 minutes.

I do not propose to take any more time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. ABZUG. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 12406—the Federal Election Campaign Amendments of 1976—a measure whose passage is vital to the political health of our country.

While we all recognize the necessity for reconstituting the Federal Election Commission, so that it can continue disbursing matching funds to Presidential candidates this year, there are a number of important reforms in this bill that go beyond the 1976 elections.

This bil would limit the proliferation of political committees by either corporations or trade unions, requiring that only one political committee—with a limitation of $5,000 per candidate—could be organized under the organization's aegis.

It should be noted that abuses in the creation of PAC's has been exclusively corporate in nature, and that these practices which were exposed in the last few years are a blight on our national political life.

In contrast the contributions of labor—particularly the AFL-CIO COPE fund have been clearly reported and tied to the trade union's identified issue—positions whch are both known and publicized to its members and the public.

Given that fact, I do find it strange that some of my colleagues are suggesting that these trade unions be required to report all their expenditures on internal communications to their own members.

I would remind my colleagues that there are no such requirements for the many lobbying groups which communicate with this Congress and their own membership.

I question why the labor movement should be required to report every phone call made or newsletter mailed, involving political issues or candidates.

In view of the inequity of this proposal, I urge my colleagues to vote against this requirement.

There are a number of other flaws in this legislation which should be corrected, if we are to produce a significant reform bill. I believe that it is not in the public interest to eliminate the requirement that candidates file reports in their own State, with the secretary of state. Citizens should have the right to easy access to this information and its storage, only in Washington, places a burden on the private citizens, journalists or organizations who wish to inspect the report.

The increase in the ceiling on cash contributions opens the door again to potential error or abuse. I favor maintenance of the $100 cash ceiling.

The special procedure for handling complaints against congressional employees promulgates a double standard of justice and should be deleted. The intent of the law is to insure fair and proper treatment—not special privilege for Members of this House and their staff.

Finally, I wish to point out the importance of coming to grips with the issue of public financing of congressional races. In 1975 over 200 Members of this House have gone on record in support of this concept, yet we have made no progress on this important issue.

The same concerns which motivated our support for public subsidization of Presidential campaigns hold true for congressional races. In fact, it is at that level where public financing would make the most difference in freeing public servants of special interest influence. There is some evidence that more corporate money is flowing into congressional races this year because of the limitations on contributions to the Presidential candidate, making it all the more important that we take action now which will at least cover the 1978 elections.

As a founder of the National Women's Political Caucus, I have watched and encouraged the efforts of women all over this country to use their leadership talent in the political arena.

One of the greatest obstacles to the emergence of more women candidates—and more minority candidates—and more youthful candidates—is the burden of financing a properly organized campaign.

Women are not part of the corporate establishment.

The woman who does not have independent means or a wealthy family is at a particular disadvantage in attempting to enter the political system—although clearly all of us who are not wealthy suffer from the fact that the cost of campaigning has become excessive for all who are not millionaires.

If we are serious in our stated commitment to opening the political process to all groups in our society then we must institute a supervised system of public financing which begins to equalize political opportunity.

I believe that this measure is not only desirable but necessary to change the climate of American public opinion. Most of you, I am sure, have noted with concern the falling off of the voter figures in recent elections and the apathetic attitude toward the political process which has become more pronounced.

The aftermath of Watergate has left the American people profoundly distrustful of politicians and wary of even the most dedicated public servants.

The restoration of confidence in our own political system requires that we make it possible for citizens to compete for office without the prerequisite of individual wealth or corporate identification. We cannot allow special interest money to continue to dominate our political life for that pattern has only served to destroy belief in our system and its leaders.

Mr. BADILLO. Mr. Chairman, within a few minutes the House will vote on the final passage of H.R. 12406, the Federal Elections Campaign Act Amendments of 1976. I shall vote for the measure—we must continue the life of the Election Commission—I shall do so with deep reluctance and disappointment.

When this legislation was first proposed I, and a number of others, thought that it represented a step in the right direction. Although by no means perfect, it was capable of improvement and a number of excellent amendments were being prepared. I was particularly impressed by the one advanced by the gentleman from California (Mr. BURTON) which proposed to extend public financing to congressional elections.

The Burton proposal, originally cosponsored by more than 200 Members of the House, sought to establish a system of matching public financing for congressional general elections starting with 1978. It proposed to provide funds for candidates, not political parties, and would have limited monies spent strictly to funds derived from voluntary dollar tax checkoffs on income tax returns. No use of general revenues was contemplated or proposed.

If stipulated that contributions to candidates of up to $100 per person would be matched by funds derived from the voluntary checkoff program; imposed overall spending limits, as well as limits on a candidate's own personal fund expenditures similar to the ceilings set in the 1974 campaign finance law; and mandated that participating candidates raise at least 10 percent of the applicable spending limit in amounts of $100 or less per contribution in order to be eligible for public funding.

It barred a candidate from receiving more than 50 percent of his or her applicable spending limit from public funds; it placed strict restrictions on the use of such funds which could be expended only for such expense items as broadcasting, air-time, newspaper, magazine and billboard advertising space, and direct mail and telephone costs.

Only funds raised after January 1 of a general election year would have been eligible for matching.

Mr. Chairman, this was a good amendment. We all know that public financing of our Presidential and congressional elections is imperative. Without such financing we can look forward to increased corruption in our political life, and a de facto disenfranchisement of our rank and file citizens as powerful and wealthy interest groups utilize their all too ample resources to elect candidates pledged to guard their interests.

The public is aware of this danger and its determination to guard against it is amply demonstrated by the overwhelming support it gave to the checkoff system of earmarking a portion of its Federal taxes for the public financing of Presidential elections. But safeguarding the integrity of Presidential elections is not enough. We must make sure that the representatives of the people on all levels of government are indeed representative. It is for this reason that we needed the Burton amendment.

Unfortunately, that amendment, although originally cosponsored by more than 200 Members, went down to defeat 121 to 274 just a few moments ago. I am deeply disturbed by this vote and believe that it constituted a disservice to all those in our Nation who trusted us in Congress to safeguard their interests and assure clean, representative politics.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further amendments, under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOLLING, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 12406) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide that members of the Federal Election Commission shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 1115, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT OFFERED BY MR. WIGGINS

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. WIGGINS. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WIGGINS moves to recommit the bill (H.R. 12406) to the Committee on House Administration with instructions to report the same to the House forthwith with the following amendment: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. The provisions of this Act may be cited as the "Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976".

FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION MEMBERSHIP

SEC. 2. (a) Section 310(a)(1) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(1)) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 310. (a)(1) There is established a commission to be known as the Federal Election Commission. The Commission is composed of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, ex officio and without the right to vote, and 6 members appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. No more than 3 members appointed by the President may be affiliated with the same political party.".

(2) Subparagraph (B) and subparagraph (E) of section 310(a)(2) ofthe Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(2)(B), 437c(a)(2)(E)) each are amended by striking out "of the members appointed under paragraph (1)(B)".

(3) Subparagraph (C) and subparagraph (F) of section 310(a)(2) of such Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(2)(C), 437c(a)(2)(F)) each are amended by striking out "of the members appointed under paragraph (1)(C)".

SEC. 2. (a) The terms of the persons serving as members of the Federal Election Commission upon the enactment of this Act shall terminate upon the appointment and confirmation of members of the Commission pursuant to this Act.

(b) The persons first appointed under the amendments made by the first section of this Act shall be considered to be the first appointed under section 310(a)(2) of the Act 2 U.S.C. 437(a)(2), as amended herein, for purposes of determining the length of terms of those persons and their successors.

(c) The provision of section 310(a)(3) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(3)) forbidding appointment to the Federal Election Commission of any person currently elected or appointed as an officer or employee in the executive, legislative, or judicial branch of the Government of the United States, shall not apply to any person appointed under the amendments made by the first section of this Act solely because such person is a member of the Commission on the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 3. It is the sense of Congress that the importance of the Federal Election Commission and the orderly implementation of Federal election campaign laws in this election year require that the appointments authorized by the amendments made by this Act be made as soon as possible after the enactment of this Act.

Mr. WIGGINS (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the motion to recommit be dispensed with and that it be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS) for 5 minutes in support of his motion to recommit.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, the motion to recommit contains the text of H.R. 11736, which was introduced in this House by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MIKVA), along with 73 of their colleagues as cosponsors.

All the motion to recommit does is to reconstitute the Commission on a constireconstitute the Commission on a constitutional basis and no more. It is best, I believe, that this House go to conference with the Senate with a bill that works a minimum change in the law. This will, in my opinion, give the House conferees the maximum flexibility in dealing with the Senate bill.

Mr. Speaker, I want the Members to know what this body hath wrought over the last several days. It has produced a bill which makes each one of us vulnerable to the charge that we do not support an independent Election Commission, because the bill that the committee approved is clearly devastating to the independence of the Commission.

The bill which we have reported out contains a clear bias in favor of organized labor. That may not trouble some of the Members, but we are all going to have to stand up and take a position on whether we believe in fairness in our election laws. If we do, if we are going to take that position in public, then we cannot defend the bias in this bill in favor of union expenditures.

Moreover, there was little debate during our consideration of this bill in committee about the PAC language. The bill takes the position that union members belong to the union for purposes of solicitation of funds and that executives and stockholders belong to a corporation for purposes of soliciting funds. A limitation on the right to solicit is a direct affront to the right to participate in political activity. It is contrary, in my opinion, to the first amendment, and it will produce a legal challenge to the bill which the Members have supported this afternoon in committee.

Given the infirmities in the bill, given the effect it has on the independence of this Commission, and given the bias contained in the bill in favor of one strong political faction, the better part of wisdom now is simply to meet the mandate of the Supreme Court and reconstitute the Commission. That is all we should do.

If you vote for the motion to recommit, that will be the effect of your action—action, I might say, which has been supported, as the Chairman has noted, by so-called strange bedfellows, including myself, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MIKVA), Common Cause at one time, the League of Women Voters, and assorted others.

I have the highest regard for all of them. I only observe that it is a strange congregation assembled under the covers of one bed.

Mr. MIKVA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGINS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MIKVA. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to my colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS), that I supported the original bill with the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) because at that time there was great concern that we would get no Commission at all.

There has been and continues to be opposition to the Commission. I think the committee has done a good job on the bill. I think the Committee of the Whole House has done a better job. Many of the amendments supported by my colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS), and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) have been adopted, with much help from this side of the aisle. I think there is a sufficient bill here with which to go to conference.

Mr. Speaker, I intend to vote against the motion to recommit and to support the bill. I think we have a better bill than I had reason to hope was possible, and it ought to be supported.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MIKVA), I can only say there was a time when the gentleman from Illinois supported the very bill which I offer without change as a motion to recommit.

Mr. Speaker, each Member's vote is going to be understood and should be understood as his personal commitment to fair and objective elections and to an independent commission to interpret the laws regulating that election. Each Member is going to be asked to stand up and be recorded in just a moment on those two issues. I trust that each Member will do the correct thing. In my judgment, that is to vote for the motion to recommit and simply reconstitute the Commission.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion to recommit.

(Mr. HAYS of Ohio asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, for 3 days the House has worked on this bill. Although my views did not prevail in every instance, I think we have come out with a product which is workable and which is fair and which will permit the conferees to go to conference with a Senate bill which is, perhaps, more of a monster than this one, to use the words of someone on the other side.

Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of respect for my friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS). I respect his legal judgment. He and I work amicably together in committee, and I am sorry that I have to oppose him on this.

However, he makes a big thing about an independent commission and says that all his bill does is reconstitute an independent commission.

Mr. Speaker, what his bill does is to reconstitute the part that the court threw out, that the Commission can hand out the dollars, and it leaves it totally free to do whatever it wants to do to Members of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, we can bet our bottom dollar that there will never be any supervision of the executive elections because the Commission is totally appointed by the President and will be, in my judgment, three Republicans and three House Democrats. I might say to the minority that when the situation changes next January 20, it will be perhaps three Democrats and three House Republicans, as they come out.

Mr. Speaker, do the Members believe what I am saying? Let me give some evidence. We had two Members in this House who, I believe inadvertently and unknowingly, took some corporate funds from the Gulf Oil Co. One was our colleague from Oklahoma who got $1,000. The other one was our colleague from Pennsylvania on the other side, who got $6,000.

Our colleague from Oklahoma was prosecuted on an information charge but with respect to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, they allowed the statute of limitations to run. The Deputy Attorney General, who is also from Pennsylvania and also from Pittsburgh according to the press said:

> He is a friend of mine. I could not prosecute him.

That is the kind of independent Justice Department that we have.

The gentleman says we would have an independent commission if this thing were set up and the President could appoint it and the Commission were left intact to do whatever it wanted, without any supervision, with almost no oversight, and without any restraints. Mr. Speaker, I think the people on my side know what we would be handing ourselves by doing that, and I do not think the Members on our side want to do it.

You on the minority do not want to do it because this is a shifting political scene. No one has said that a commission should be a headhunting or witch-hunting commission, it can be independent as all commissions are under legislative oversight. That is the way we have constructed this bill. I ask the Members to vote down the motion to recommit.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I think the most honest, decent and cleanest way to deal with this whole mess at this late stage in the game—and it has been a most cynical game in my opinion—is to vote for the Frenzel substitute and put a strong and independent Federal Election Commission back on its feet.

The Supreme Court gave us a very simple task to perform back on January 30, and that was to reconstitute the Federal Election Commission so that all of the commissioners would be appointed by the President, subject to confirmation by the Senate. A bill to comply with that simple mandate was introduced on February 5 by Congressmen FRENZEL and MIKVA. It only runs three pages. On February 9, 4 days later, I introduced House Resolution 1027, an emergency rule to discharge the bill from the House Administration Committee so that this House could meet the 30-day deadline set by the Court. The Supreme Court has since extended that deadline by 20 days, and still we have failed to meet it.

The original strategy of the opponents of the FEC was to simply let that deadline lapse and shift its authority to distribute Presidential matching payments to the GAO. When that strategy came under heavy fire from the public and press, a miraculous conversion supposedly occurred somewhere on the road between here and Miami, and those who got religion turned back to the basic text of our Federal election law and began to revise and extend and extend. What finally emerged was a 58-page apocrypha. The revelatory source of these new writings is of questionable authorship. But one thing is clear: they spelled apocalypse for the Federal Election Commission, in no less than three ways. First, if they were accepted, the FEC would be virtually reduced to being an arm of the Congress—the regulators would become the captives of the regulated, contrary to our original intentions and the mandate of the Supreme Court. Second, these writings were purposely designed to be veto bait, thus furthering the cause of dooming the FEC. And third, the new devices thrown into this bill clearly invited another challenge in the courts, again jeopardizing the future existence of the FEC. In short, this bill was a triple boobytrap for the FEC.

Mr. Speaker, while we have managed somewhat in the past 2 days to clean up this bill a little, that triple boobytrap remains essentially intact. I think it is most appropriate that we should be culminating this debate on April Fool's Day because this bill is an April Fool's joke of the first magnitude if ever there was one.

But I suspect that when all is said and done, we will not have fooled the American people, and we will only have made ourselves look foolish. The joke will be on us. We have taken a very simple task and made it extremely complex. Some of the complex aspects of this bill are well intentioned, but they nevertheless contribute to the dead weight we have thrown around the neck of the FEC in this legislation. And now we are being cynically asked to throw it in the water to see if it floats.

Mr. Speaker, I would submit that at this point there is only one way to keep this package from sinking, and that is to throw off the dead weight and adopt the Frenzel substitute for a straight reconstitution of the FEC. Oh, it will be said that this would defeat the enactment of the few features of this bill which actually do make necessary improvements in the election law. But I would submit that those redeeming provisions are already in the bipartisan leadership compromise bill passed by the other body. The soundest and most expeditious way we can now insure a speedy and reasonable conference report would be to send a sturdy, bare bones bill to conference in the first place.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to recommit.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes appear to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 153, noes 246, not voting 33, as follows:

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks, and include extraneous matter, on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill (S. 3065) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for its administration by a Federal Election Commission appointed in accordance with the requirements of the Constitution, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 3065

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976".

TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION MEMBERSHIP

SEC. 101. (a)(1) The second sentence of section 309(a)(1) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(1)), as redesignated by section 105 (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Act"), is amended to read as follows: "The Commission is composed of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, ex officio and without the right to vote, and eight members appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate:".

(2) The last sentence of section 309(a)(1) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(1)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows: "No more than three members of the Commission appointed under this paragraph may be affiliated with the same political party, and at least two members appointed under this paragraph shall not be affiliated with any political party.".

(b) Section 309(a)(2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(2)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"(2)(A) Members of the Commission shall serve for terms of eight years, except that of the members first appointed—

"(i) two of the members, not affiliated with the same political party, shall be appointed for terms ending on April 30, 1977,

"(ii) two of the members, not affiliated with the same political party, shall be appointed for terms ending on April 30, 1979,

"(iii) two of the members, not affiliated with the same political party, shall be appointed for terms ending on April 30, 1981, and

"(iv) two of the members, not affiliated with the same political party, shall be appointed for terms ending on April 30, 1983.

"(B) An individual appointed to fill a vacancy occurring other than by the expiration of a term of office shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member he succeeds.

"(C) Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the Commission shall be filed in the same manner as in the case of the original appointment.".

(c)(1) Section 309(b) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(b)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) The Commission shall administer, seek to obtain compliance with, and formulate policy with respect to, this Act and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. The Commission shall have exclusive and primary jurisdiction with respect to the civil enforcement of such provisions.

"(2) Nothing in this Act shall be construed to limit, restrict, or diminish any investigatory, informational, oversight, supervisory, or disciplinary authority or function of the Congress or any committee of the Congress with respect to elections for Federal office.".

(2) The first sentence of section 309(c) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(c)), as redesignated (e)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof the following: ", except that the affirmative vote of five members of the Commission shall be required in order for the Commission to establish guidelines for compliance with the provisions of this Act or with chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or for the Commission to take any action in accordance with paragraph (6), (7), (8), or (10) of section 310(a)".

(d) The last sentence of section 309(f)(1) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(f)(1)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the period the following: "without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service or the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates".

(e)(1) The President shall appoint members of the Federal Election Commission under section 309(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)), as redesignated by section 105 and as amended by this section, as soon as practicable after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) The first appointments made by the President under section 309(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437(a)), as redesignated by section 105 and as amended by this section, shall not be considered to be appointments to fill the unexpired terms of members serving on the Federal Election Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(3) Members serving on the Federal Election Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act may continue to serve as such members until a majority of the members of the Commission are appointed and qualified under section 309(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)), as redesignated by section 105 and as amended by this section. Until a majority of the members of the Commission are appointed and qualified under the amendments made by this Act, members serving on such Commission on the date of enactment of this Act may exercise only such powers and functions as are consistent with the determinations of the Supreme Court of the United States in Buckley et al. against Valeo, Secretary of the United States Senate, et al. (numbered 75-436, 75-437) January 30, 1976.

(f) The provisions of section 309(a)(3) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(3)), as redesignated by section 105, which prohibit any individual from being appointed as a member of the Federal Election Commission who is, at the time of his appointment, an elected or appointed officer or employee of the executive, legislative, or judicial branch of the Federal Government, shall not apply in the case of any individual serving as a member of such Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(g)(1) All personnel, liabilities, contracts, property, and records determined by the Director of the Office of Management and Budget to be employed, held, or used primarily in connection with the functions of the Federal Election Commission under title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 as such title existed on January 1, 1976, or under any other provision of law are transferred to the Federal Election Commission as constituted under the amendments made by this Act to the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, personnel engaged in functions transferred under paragraph (1) shall be transferred in accordance with applicable laws and regulations relating to the transfer of functions.

(B) The transfer of personnel pursuant to paragraph (1) shall be without reduction in classification or compensation for one year after such transfer.

(3) All laws relating to the functions transferred under this Act shall, insofar as such laws are applicable and not amended by this Act, remains in full force and effect. All orders, determinations, rules, advisory opinions, and opinions of counsel made, issued, or granted by the Federal Election Commission before its reconstitution under the amendments made by this Act which are in effect at the time of the transfer provided by paragraph (1) shall continue in effect to the same extent as if such transfer had not occurred.

(4) The provisions of this Act shall not affect any proceeding pending before the Federal Election Commission at the time this section takes effect.

(5) No suit, action, or other proceeding commenced by or against the Federal Election Commission or any officer or employee thereof acting in his official capacity shall abate by reason of the transfer made under paragraph (1). The court before which such suit, action, or other proceeding is pending may, on motion or supplemental petition filed at any time within twelve months after the date of enactment of this Act, allow such suit, action, or other proceeding to be maintained against the Federal Election Commission if the party making the motion or filing the petition shows a necessity for the survival of the suit, action, or other proceeding to obtain a settlement of the question involved.

(6) Any reference in any other Federal law to the Federal Election Commission, or to any member or employee thereof, as such Commission existed under the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 before its amendment by this Act shall be held and considered to refer to the Federal Election Commission, or the members or employees thereof, as such Commission exists under the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 as amended by this Act.

CHANGES IN DEFINITIONS

SEC. 102. (a) Section 301(a)(2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431(a)(2)) is amended by striking out "held to' and inserting in lieu thereof "which has authority to".

(b) Section 301(e)(2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431(e)(2)) is amended by inserting "written" immediately before "contract".

(c) Section 301(e)(4) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431(e)(4)) is amended by inserting after "purpose" the following: ", except that this paragraph shall not apply in the case of legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of the national committee of a political party (unless the person paying for such services is a person other than the employer of the individual rendering such services), other than services attributable to activities which directly further the election of a designated candidate or candidates to Federal office, nor shall this paragraph apply in the case of legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of a candidate or political committee solely for the purpose of insuring compliance with the provisions of this Act or chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (unless the person paying for such services is a person other than the employer of the individual rendering such services), but amounts paid or incurred for such legal or accounting services shall be reported in accordance with the requirements of section 304(b)".

(2) by redesignating paragraph (13) as paragraph (14); and

(3) by inserting immediately after paragraph (12) the following new paragraph:

"(13) in the case of expenditures in excess of $100 by a political committee other than an authorized committee of a candidate expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, through a separate schedule (A) any information required by paragraph (9), stated in a manner which indicates whether the expenditure involved is in support of, or in opposition to, a candidate; and (B) under penalty of perjury, a certification whether such expenditure is made in cooperation, consultation, or concert, with, or at the request or suggestion of, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate; and".

(4) Section 304(b) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(b)) is further amended by inserting immediately after paragraph (14) the following new paragraph:

"(15) when committee treasurers and candidates show that best efforts have been used to obtain and submit the information required by this subsection, they shall be deemed to be in compliance with this subsection.".

(d) Section 304(e) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(e)) is amended to read as follows:

"(e)(1) Every person (other than a political committee or candidate) who makes contributions or expenditures expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, other than by contribution to a political committee or candidate, in an aggregate amount in excess of $100 within a calendar year shall file with the Commission, on a form prepared by the Commission, a statement containing the information required of a person who makes a contribution in excess of $100 to a candidate or political committee and the information required of a candidate or political committee receiving such a contribution.

"(2) A corporation, labor organization, or other membership organization which explicitly advocates the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate through a communication with its stockholders or members or their families shall, notwithstanding the provisions of section 301(f)(4)(C), report such expenditures in excess of $1,000 per candidate per election under paragraph (1) to the extent that they are directly attributable to such communications.

"(3) Any person who makes a contribution in response to a solicitation under section 321(b)(3)(B) which, when added to all other contributions made by him to the same recipient during the calendar year, exceeds $100 shall report to the recipient the total amount of such contributions made to such recipient for that year. Paragraph (4) does not apply to reports under this paragraph.

"(4) Statements required by this subsection shall be filed on the dates on which rreports by political committees are filed. Such statements shall include (A) the information required by subsection (b)(9), stated in a manner indicating whether the contribution or expenditure is in support of, or opposition to, the candidate; and (B) under penalty of perjury, a certification whether such expenditure is made in cooperation, consultation, or concert, with, or at the request or suggesting of, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate. Any expenditure, including but not limited to those described in subsection (b)(13), of $1,000 or more made after the fifteenth day, but more than forty-eight hours, before any election shall be reported within forty-eight hours of such expenditure.

"(5) The Commission shall be responsible for expeditiously preparing indices which set forth, on a candidate-by-candidate basis, all expenditures separately, including but not limited to those reported under subsection (b)(13), made with respect to each candidate, as reported under this subsection, and for periodically issuing such indices on a timely preelection basis.".

REPORTS BY CERTAIN PERSONS

SEC. 105. Title III of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431–441) is amended by striking out section 308 thereof (2 U.S.C. 437a) and by redesignating section 309 through section 321 as section 308 through section 320, respectively.

POWERS OF COMMISSION

SEC. 106. (a) Section 310(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437(a)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (8) thereof, by inserting "develop such prescribed forms and to" immediately before "make", and by inserting immediately after "Act" the following: "and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954";

(2) in paragraph (9) thereof, by striking out "and sections 608" and all that follows through "States Code" and inserting in lieu thereof "and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954"; and

(3) by striking out paragraph (10) and redesignating paragraph (11) as paragraph (10).

(b)(1) Section 310(a)(6) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437d(a)(6)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"(6) to initiate (through civil actions for injunctive, declaratory, or other appropriate relief), defend (in the case of any civil action brought under section 313(a)(9)), or appeal any civil action in the name of the Commission for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this Act and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, through its general counsel;".

(2) Section 310 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437d), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by adding at the end theroef the following new subsection:

"(e) Except as provided in section 313(a)(9), the power of the Commission to initiate civil actions under subsection (a)(6) shall be the exclusive civil remedy for the enforcement of the provisions of this Act.".

ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 107. Section 313 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437g), as redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"ENFORCEMENT

"SEC. 313. (a)(1) Any person who believes a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, has occurred may file a complaint with the Commission. Such complaint shall be in writing, shall be signed and sworn to by the person filing such complaint, and shall be notarized. Any person filing such a complaint shall be subject to the provisions of section 1001 of title 18, United States Code. The Commission may not conduct any investigation under this section, or take any other action under this section, solely on the basis of a complaint of a person whose identity is not disclosed to the Commission.

"(2) The Commission, upon receiving a complaint under paragraph (1), or if it has reason to believe that any person has committed a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, shall notify the person involved of such alleged violation and shall make an investigation of such alleged violation in accordance with the provisions of this section.

"(3) Any investigation under paragraph (2) shall be conducted expeditiously and shall include an investigation, conducted in accordance with the provisions of this section, of reports and statements filed by any complainant under this title, if such complainant is a candidate. Any notification or investigation made under paragraph (2) shall not be made public by the Commission or by any other person without the written consent of the person receiving such notification or the person with respect to whom such investigation is made.

"(4) The Commission shall afford any person who receives notice of an alleged violation under paragraph (2) a reasonable opportunity to demonstrate that no action should be taken against such person by the Commission under this Act.

"(5)(A) If the Commission determines that there is reason to believe that any person has committed or is about to commit a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the Commission shall make every endeavor to correct or prevent such violation by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion, and to enter into a conciliation agreement with the person involved. A conciliation agreement, unless violated, shall constitute an absolute bar to any further action by the Commission with respect to the violation which is the subject of the agreement, including bringing a civil proceeding under paragraph (B) of this section.

"(B) If the Commission is unable to correct or prevent any such violation by such informal methods, the Commission may, if the Commission determines there is probable cause to believe that a violation has occurred or is about to occur, institute a civil action for relief, including a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or any other appropriate order, including a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of $5,000 or an amount equal to the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, in the district court of the United States for the district in which the person against whom such action is found, resides, or transacts business.

"(C) In any civil action instituted by the Commission under paragraph (B), the court shall grant a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order, including a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of $5,000 or an amount equal to the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, upon a proper showing that the person involved has engaged or is about to engage in a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

"(D) If the Commission determines that there is probable cause to believe that a knowing and willful violation under section 328(a), or a knowing and willful violation of a provision of chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, has occurred or is about to occur, it may refer such apparent violation to the Attorney General of the United States without regard to the limitations set forth in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph.

"(6)(A) If the Commission believes that there is clear and convincing proof that a knowing and willful violation of the Act or chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has been committed, any conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission under paragraph (5)(A) may include a requirement that the person involved in such conciliation agreement shall pay a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of (i) $10,000; or (ii) an amount equal to 300 percent of the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation.

"(B) If the Commission believes that a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has been committeed, a conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission under paragraph (5)(A) may include a requirement that the person involved in such conciliation agreement shall pay a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of (i) $5,000; or (ii) an amount equal to the amount of the contribution or expenditure involved in such violation.

"(7) The Commission shall make available to the public the results of any conciliation attempt, including any conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission, and any determination by the Commission that no violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has occurred.

"(8) In any civil action for relief instituted by the Commission under paragraph (5), if the court determines that the Commission has established through clear and convincing proof that the person involved in such civil action has committed a knowing and willful violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the court may impose a civil penalty of not more than the greater of (A) $10,000; or (B) an amount equal to 300 percent of the contribution or expenditure involved in such violation. In any case in which such person has entered into a conciliation agreement with the Commission under paragraph (5)(A), the Commission may institute a civil action for relief under paragraph (5) if it believes that such person has violated any provision of such conciliation agreement. In order for the Commission to obtain relief in any such civil action, it shall be sufficient for the Commission to establish that such person has violated, in whole or in part, any requirement of such conciliation agreement.

"(9) In any action brought under paragraph (5) or paragraph (8) of this subsection, subpenas for witnesses who are required to attend a United States district court may run into any other district.

"(10)(A) Any party aggrieved by an order of the Commission dismissing a complaint filed by such party under paragraph (1), or by a failure on the part of the Commission to act on such complaint in accordance with the provisions of this section within ninety days after the filing of such complaint, may file a petition with the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.

"(B) The filing of any action under subparagraph (A) shall be made—

"(i) in the case of the dismissal of a complaint by the Commission, no later than sixty days after such dismissal; or

"(ii) in the case of a failure on the part of the Commission to act on such complaint, no later than sixty days after the ninety-day period specified in subparagraph (A).

"(C) In such proceeding the court may declare that the dismissal of the complaint or the action, or the failure to act, is contrary to law and may direct the Commission to proceed in conformity with that declaration within thirty days, failing which the complainant may bring in his own name a civil action to remedy the violation complained of.

"(11) The judgment of the district court may be appealed to the court of appeals and the judgment of the court of appeals affirming or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the district court shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

"(12) Any action brought under this subsection shall be advanced on the docket of the court in which filed, and put ahead of all other actions (other than other actions brought under this subsection or under section 314).

"(13) If the Commission determines after an investigation that any person has violated an order of the court entered in a proceeding brought under paragraph (5), it may petition the court for an order to adjudicate that person in civil contempt, or, if it believes the violation to be knowing and willful, it may instead petition the court for an order to adjudicate that person in criminal contempt.

"(b) In any case in which the Commission refers an apparent violation to the Attorney General, the Attorney General shall respond by report to the Commission with respect to any action taken by the Attorney General regarding such apparent violation. Each report shall be transmitted no later than sixty days after the date the Commission refers any apparent violation, and at the close of every thirty-day period thereafter until there is final disposition of such apparent violation. The Commission may from time to time prepare and publish reports on the status of such referrals.".

PROHIBITION ON CONVERSION OF CONTRIBUTIONS TO PERSONAL USE

SEC. 107A. Section 317 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 439a) is amended by inserting after "other lawful purpose" the following: ", except that no such amount may be converted to any personal use".

DUTIES OF COMMISSION

SEC. 108. (a) Section 315(a)(6) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438(a)(6)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", and to compile and maintain a separate cumulative index of reports and statements filed with it by political committees supporting more than one candidate, which shall include a listing of the date of the registration of any such political committee and the date upon which any such political commitee qualifies to make expenditures under section 320, and which shall be revised on the same basis and at the same time as the other cumulative indices required under this paragraph".

(b) Section 315(c)(2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438(c)(2)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by striking out "30 legislative days" in the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "30 calendar days or 15 legislative days, whichever is later,".

ADDITIONAL ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITY

SEC. 109. Section 407 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 456) is repealed.

CONTRIBUTION AND EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS; OTHER LIMITATIONS

SEC. 110. Title III of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431-455) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" before "No" in section 318 (2 U.S.C. 439b), as redesignated by section 105 of this Act;

(2) by adding the following new subsection at the end of section 318 (2 U.S.C. 439b), as redesignated by section 105 of this Act:

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no Senator, Representative, Resident Commissioner, or Delegate shall mail as franked mail under section 3210 of title 39, United States Code, any general mass mailing when such mailing is mailed at or delivered to any postal facility less than sixty days prior to the date of any primary or general election in which such Senator, Representative, Resident Commissioner, or Delegate is a candidate for Federal office. For purposes of this subsection the term 'general mass mailing' means newsletters and similar mailings of more than five hundred pieces the content of which is substantially identical and which are mailed to or delivered to any postal facility at the same time or several different times.";

(3) by striking out section 320 (2 U.S.C. 441), as redesignated by section 105 of this Act; and

(4) by inserting after section 319 (2 U.S.C. 439c), as redesignated by such section 105, the following new sections:

"LIMITATIONS ON CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

"SEC. 320. (a)(1) No person shall make contributions—

"(A) to any candidate and his authorized political committees with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $1,000;

"(B) to any political committee established and maintained by a political party, which is not the authorized political committee of any candidate, in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $25,000; or

"(C) to any other political committee in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000.

"(2) No multi-candidate political committee shall make contributions—

"(A) to any candidate and his authorized political committees with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000;

"(B) to any political committee established and maintained by a political party, which is not the authorized committee of any candidate in any calendar year, which, in the aggregate, exceed $25,000; or

"(C) to any other political committee in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $10,000.

The limitations on contributions contained in paragraph (2) do not apply to transfers between and among political committees which are national, State, district, or local committees (including any subordinate committee thereof) of the same political party. For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'multi-candidate political committee' means a political committee which has been registered under section 303 for a period of not less than six months, which has received contributions from more than fifty persons, and, except for any State political party organization, has made contributions to five or more candidates for Federal office.

"(3) For purposes of the limitations under paragraphs (1) and (2), all contributions made by political committees established, financed, maintained, or controlled by any person or persons, including any parent, subsidiary, branch, division, department, affiliate, or local unit of such person, or by any group of persons, shall be considered to have been made by a single political committee, except that (A) nothing in this sentence shall limit transfers between political committees of funds raised through joint fundraising efforts; (B) this sentence shall not apply so that contributions made by a political party through a single national committee and contributions by that party through a single State committee in each State are treated as having been made by a single political committee; and (C) a political committee of a national organization shall not be precluded from contributing to a candidate or committee merely because of its affiliation with a national multicandidate political committee which has made the maximum contribution it is permitted to make to a candidate or a committee.

"(4) No individual shall make contributions aggregating more than $25,000 in any calendar year. For purposes of this paragraph, any contribution made to a candidate in a year other than the calendar year in which the election is held with respect to which such contribution was made, is considered to be made during the calendar year in which such election is held.

"(5) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) contributions to a named candidate made to any political committee authorized by such candidate to accept contributions on his behalf shall be considered to be contributions made to such candidate;

"(B)(i) expenditures made by any person in cooperation, consultation, or concert, with, or at the request or suggestion of, a candidate, his authorized political committees, or their agents, shall be considered to be a contribution to such candidate;

"(ii) the financing by any person of the dissemination, distribution, or republication, in whole or in part, of any broadcast or any written, graphic, or other form of campaign materials prepared by the candidate, his campaign committees, or their authorized agents shall be considered to be an expenditure for purposes of this paragraph; and

"(C) contributions made to or for the benefit of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be contributions made to or for the benefit of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States.

"(6) The limitations imposed by paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection (other than the annual limitation on contributions to a political committee under paragraph (2)(B)) shall apply separately with respect to each election, except that all elections held in any calendar year for the office of President of the United States (except a general election for such office) shall be considered to be one election.

"(7) For purposes of the limitations imposed by this section, all contributions made by a person, either directly or indirectly, on behalf of a particular candidate, including contributions which are in any way earmarked or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to such candidate, shall be treated as contributions from such person to such candidate. The intermediary or conduit shall report the original source and the intended recipient of such contribution to the Commission and to the intended recipient.

"(b)(1) No candidate for the office of President of the United States who is eligible under section 9003 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to condition for eligibility for payments) or under section 9033 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 relating to eligibility for payments) to receive payments from the Secretary of the Treasury may make expenditures in excess of —

"(A) $10,000,000, in the case of a campaign for nomination for election to such office, except the aggregate of expenditures under this subparagraph in any one State shall not exceed the greater of 16 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State (as certified under subsection (e)), or $200,000; or

"(B) $20,000,000 in the case of a campaign for election to such office.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be expenditures made by or on behalf of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States; and

"(B) an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a Vice Presidential candidate, if it is made by—

"(i) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for the purposes of making any expenditure; or

"(ii) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, or an agent of the candidate, to make the expenditure.

"(c)(1) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1976), as there become available necessary data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register the percent difference between the price index for the twelve months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each limitation established by subsection (b) and subsection (d) shall be increased by such percent difference. Each amount so increased shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) the term 'price index' means the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics; and

"(B) the term 'base period' means the calendar year 1974.

"(d)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law with respect to limitations on expenditures or limitations on contributions, the national committee of a political party and a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may make expenditures in connection with the general election campaign of candidates for Federal office, subject to the limitations contained in paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection.

"(2) The national committee of a political party may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of any candidate for President of the United States who is affiliated with such party which exceeds an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States (as certified under subsection (e)). Any expenditure under this paragraph shall be in addition to any expenditure by a national committee of a political party serving as the principal campaign committee of a candidate for the office of the President of the United States.

"(3) The national committee of a political party, or a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate for Federal office in a State who is affiliated with such party which exceeds—

"(A) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Senator, or of Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, the greater of—

"(i) 2 cents multipled by the voting age population of the State (as certified under subsection (e)); or

"(ii) $20,000; and

"(B) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner in any other State, $10,000.

"(e) During the first week of January 1975, and every subsequent year, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, of each State, and of each congressional district as of the first day of July next preceding the date of certification. The term 'voting age population' means resident population, eighteen years of age or older.

"(f) No candidate or political committee shall knowingly accept any contribution or make any expenditure in violation of the provisions of this section. No officer or employee of a political committee shall knowingly accept a contribution made for the benefit or use of a candidate, or knowingly make any expenditure on behalf of a candidate, in violation of any limitation imposed on contributions and expenditures under this section.

"(g) The Commission shall prescribe rules under which any expenditure by a candidate for Presidential nomination for use in two or more States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

"(h) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, amounts totaling not more than $20,000 may be contributed to a candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to the United States Senate during the year in which an election is held in which he is such a candidate, by the Republican or Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, or the national committee of a political party, or any combination of such committees.

"CONTRIBUTIONS OR EXPENDITURES BY NATIONAL BANKS, CORPORATIONS, OR LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

"SEC. 321. (a) It is unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress, to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election to any political office, or in connection with any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any political office, or for any corporation whatever, or any labor organization to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election at which Presidential and Vice Presidential electors or a Senator or Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, Congress are to be voted for, in connection with any primary election or political convention, or caucus held to select candidates for any of the foregoing offices, or for any candidate, political committee, or other person to accept or receive any contribution prohibited by this section, or for any officer or any director of any corporation or any national bank or any officer of any labor organization to consent to any contribution or expenditure by the corporation, national bank, or labor organization, as the case may be, prohibited by this section.

"(b)(1) For the purposes of this section 'labor organization' means any organization of any kind, or any agency or employee representation committee or plan, in which employees participate and which exist for the purpose, in whole or in part, of dealing with employers concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or conditions of work. As used in this section and in section 12(h) of the Public Utility Holding Company Act (15 U.S.C. 791(h)), the phrase 'contribution or expenditure' shall include any direct or indirect payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money, or any services, or anything of value (except a loan of money by a national or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations and in the ordinary course of business) to any candidate, campaign committee, or political party or organization, in connection with any election to any of the offices referred to in this section; but shall not include communications by a corporation to its stockholders and executive or administrative personnel and their families or by a labor organization to its members and their families on any subject; nonpartisan registration and get-out-the-vote campaigns by a corporation aimed at its stockholders and executive or administrative personnel and their families, or by a labor organization aimed at its members and their families; or the establishment, administration, and solicitation of contributions to a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes by a corporation or labor organization, or by a membership organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock.

"(2) It shall be unlawful—

"(A) for such a fund to make a contribution or expenditure by utilizing money or anything of value secured by physical force, job discrimination, financal reprisals, or the threat of force, job discrimination, or financial reprisal; or by dues, fees, or other moneys required as a condition of membership in a labor organization or as a condition of employment, or by moneys obtained in any commercial transaction;

"(B) for an employee to solicit a subordinate employee;

"(C) for any person soliciting an employee for a contribution to such a fund to fail to inform such employee of the political purposes of such fund at the time of such solicitation; and

"(D) for any person soliciting an employee for a contribution to such a fund to fail to inform such employee, at the time of such solicitation, of his right to refuse to so contribute without any reprisal.

"(3)(A) Except as provided in subparagraphs (B) and (C), it shall be unlawful—

"(i) for a corporation, or a separate segregated fund established by a corporation, to solicit contributions to such a fund from any person other than its stockholders and their families and its executive or administrative personnel and their families, and

"(ii) for a labor organization, or a separate segregated fund established by a labor organization, to solicit contributions to such a fund from any person other than its members and their families.

"(B) It shall not be unlawful under this section for a corporation, a labor organization, or a separate segregated fund established by such corporation or such labor organization, to make two written solicitations for contributions during the calendar year from any stockholder, officer, or employee of a corporation or the families of such persons. A solicitation under this subparagraph may be made only by mail addresse to the stockholder, officer, or employee at his residence, and shall be so designed that the corporation, labor organization, or separate segregated fund conducting such solicitation cannot determine who makes a contribution as a result of such solicitation and who does not.

"(C) This paragraph shall not prevent a membership organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock, or a separate segregated fund established by a membership organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock, from soliciting contributions to such a fund from members of such organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock.

"(4) Notwithstanding any other law, any method of soliciting voluntary contributions or of facilitating the making of voluntary contributions to a separate segregated fund established by a corporation, permitted to corporations, shall also be permitted to labor organizations.

"(5) Any corporation that utilizes a method of soliciting voluntary contributions or facilitating the making of voluntary contributions, shall make available, on written request and at a cost sufficient only to reimburse the corporation for the expenses incurred thereby, that method, to a labor organization representing any members working for that corporation.

"(6) For purposes of this section, the term 'executive or administrative personnel' means individuals employed by a corporation who are paid on a salary, rather than hourly, basis and who have policymaking or supervisory responsibilities.

"(7) For purposes of this section, the term 'stockholder' includes any individual who has a legal or vested beneficial interest in stock, including, but not limited to, an employee of a corporation who participates in a stock bonus, stock option, or employee stock ownership plan.

"CONTRIBUTIONS BY GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS

"SEC. 322. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person—

"(1) who enters into any contract with the United States or any department or agency thereof either for the rendition of personal services or furnishing any material, supplies, or equipment to the United States or any department or agency thereof or for selling any land or building to the United States or any department or agency thereof, if payment for the performance of such contract or payment for such material, supplies, equipment, land, or building is to be made in whole or in part from funds appropriated by the Congress, at any time between the commencement of negotiations for and the later of (A) the completion of performance under, or (B) the termination of negotiations for, such contract or furnishing of material, supplies, equipment, land, or buildings, directly or indirectly to make any contribution of money or other thing of value, or to promise expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, to any political party, committee, or candidate for public office or to any person for any political purpose or use; or

"(2) knowingly to solicit any such contribution from any such person for any such purpose during any such period.

"(b) This section does not prohibit or make unlawful the establishment or administration of, or the solicitation of contributions to, any separate segregated fund by any corporation or labor organization for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, unless the provisions of section 321 prohibit or make unlawful the establishment or administration of, or the solicitation of contributions to, such fund. Each specific prohibition, allowance, and duty applicable to a corporation, labor organization, or separate segregated fund under section 321 applies to a corporation, labor organization, or separate segregated fund to which this subsection applies.

"(c) For purposes of this section, the term 'labor organization' has the meaning given it by section 321.

"PUBLICATION OR DISTRIBUTION OF POLITICAL STATEMENTS

"SEC. 323. Whenever any person makes an expenditure for the purpose of financing communications expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate through broadcasting stations, newspapers, magazines, outdoor advertising facilities, direct mails, and other similar types of general public political advertising, such communication—

"(1) if authorized by a candidate, his authorized political committees or their agents, shall clearly and conspicuously, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commission, state that the communication has been authorized; or

"(2) if not authorized by a candidate, his authorized, political committees, or their agents, shall clearly and conspicuously, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commission, state that the communication is not authorized by any candidate, and state the name of the person who made or financed the expenditure for the communication, including, the case of a political committee, the name of any affiliated or connected organization required to be disclosed under section 303(b)(2).

"CONTRIBUTIONS BY FOREIGN NATIONALS

"SEC. 324. (a) It shall be unlawful for a foreign national directly or through any other person to make any contribution of money or other thing of value, or to promise expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, in connection with an election to any political office or in connection with any primary election, convention, or caucus held to select candidates for any political office; or for any person to solicit, accept, or receive any such contribution from a foreign national.

"(b) As used in this section, the term 'foreign national' means—

"(1) a foreign principal, as such term is defined by section 1(b) of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938 (22 U.S.C. 611(b)), except that the term 'foreign national' shall not include any individual who is a citizen of the United States; or

"(2) an individual who is not a citizen of the United States and who is not lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as defined by section 101(a)(20) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(20)).

"PROHIBITION OF CONTRIBUTIONS IN NAME OF ANOTHER

"SEC. 325. No person shall make a contribution in the name of another person or knowingly permit his name to be used to effect such a contribution, and no person shall knowingly accept a contribution made by one person in the name of another person.

"LIMITATION ON CONTRIBUTION OF CURRENCY

"SEC. 326. No person shall make contributions of currency of the United States or currency of any foreign country to or for the benefit of any candidate which, in the aggregate, exceed $100, with respect to any campaign of such candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office.

"FRAUDULENT MISREPRESENTATION OF CAMPAIGN AUTHORITY

"SEC. 327. No person who is a candidate for Federal office or an employee or agent of such a candidate shall—

"(1) fraudulently misrepresent himself or any committee or organization under his control as speaking or writing or otherwise acting for or on behalf of any other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof on a matter which is damaging to such other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof; or

"(2) willfully and knowingly to participate in or conspire to participate in any plan, scheme, or design to violate paragraph (1).

"PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS

"SEC. 328. (a) Any person, following the enactment of this section, who knowingly and willfully commits a violation of any provision or provisions of this Act which involves the making, receiving, or reporting of any contribution or expenditure having a value in the aggregate of $1,000 or more during a calendar year shall be fined in an amount which does not exceed the greater of $25,000 or 300 percent of the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, imprisoned for not more than one year, or both. A willful and knowing violation of section 321(b)(2), including such a violation of the provisions of such section as applicable through section 322(b), is punishable by a fine of not more than $50,000, imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both. In the case of a knowing and willful violation of section 325 or 326, the penalties set forth in this section shall apply to a violation involving an amount having a value in the aggregate of $250 or more during a calendar year. In the case of a knowing and willful violation of section 327, the penalties set forth in this section shall apply without regard to whether the making, receiving, or reporting of a contribution or expenditure of $1,000 or more was involved.

"(b) A defendant in any criminal action brought for the violation of a provision of this Act, or of a provision of chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, may introduce as evidence of his lack of knowledge of or intent to commit the offense for which the action was brought a conciliation agreement entered into between the defendant and the Commission under section 313 which specifically deals with the act or failure to act constituting such offense and which is still in effect.

"(c) In any criminal action brought for a violation of a provision of this Act, or of a provision of chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the court before which such action is brought shall take into account, in weighing the seriousness of the offense and in considering the appropriateness of the penalty to be imposed if the defendant is found guilty, whether—

"(1) the specific act or failure to act which constitutes the offense for which the action was brought is the subject of a conciliation agreement entered into between the defendant and the Commission under section 313,

"(2) the conciliation agreement is in effect, and

"(3) the defendant is, with respect to the violation for which the defense is being asserted, in compliance with the conciliation agreement.".

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 111. Section 319 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 439c), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following sentence: "There are authorized to be appropriated to the Federal Election Commission $8,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, $2,000,000 for the period beginning July 1, 1976, and ending September 30, 1976, and $8,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1977.".

SAVING PROVISION

SEC. 112. Except as otherwise provided by this Act, the repeal by this Act of any section or penalty shall not have the effect to release or extinguish any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under such section or penalty, and such section or penalty shall be treated as remaining in force for the purpose of sustaining any proper action or prosecution for the enforcement of any penalty, forfeiture, or liability.

TITLE IV—COMMISSION TO STUDY PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATING PROCESS

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 401. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to improve the system of nominating candidates for election to the office of the President of the United States by studying such system in a broad manner never before attempted in the two-hundred-year history of this Nation.

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION

SEC. 402. (a) There is established the Bicentennial Commission on Presidential Nominations (hereinafter referred to as the "Commission").

(b) The Commission shall be composed of twenty members to be appointed as follows:

(1) six members shall be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, on the recommendation of the majority and minority leaders, of whom at least two shall be Members of the Senate and at least two shall be elected or appointed State officials;

(2) six members shall be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, of whom at least two shall be Members of the House and at least two shall be elected or appointed State officials;

(3) six members shall be appointed by the President; and

(4) two members shall be the chairman of the two national political parties and shall serve as ex officio members.

(c) At no time shall more than three members appointed under paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of subsection (b) be individuals who are of the same political affiliation.

(d) A vacancy in the Commission shall not affect its powers, and shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made, subject to the same limitations with respect to party affiliations as the original appointment.

(e) Twelve members shall constitute a quorum, but a lesser number may conduct hearings. The Chairman of the Commission shall be selected by the members from among the members, other than ex officio members.

FUNCTIONS OF THE COMMISSION

SEC. 403. (a) The Commission shall make a full and complete investigation with respect to the Presidential nominating process. Such investigation shall include but not be limited to a consideration of—

(1) the manner in which States conduct primaries for the expression of a preference for the nomination of candidates for election to the office of President of the United States and caucuses for the selection of delegates to the national nominating conventions of political parties;

(2) State laws and the rules of national political parties which govern the participation of voters and candidates in such primaries and caucuses;

(3) the financing of campaigns for the nomination of candidates for election to the office of the President of the United States;

(4) the relationship between candidates for election to the office of the President of the United States and the news media, including how candidates achieve public recognition and whether such candidates should be guaranteed access to the television media;

(5) the interrelationship of the elements described in paragraphs (1) through (4) of this section;

(6) alternative nominating systems, including but not limited to a national or regional primary system for the expression of a preference for the nomination of candidates for election to the office of President of the United States and variations on the present nominating system;

(7) the manner in which candidates are nominated for election to the office of Vice President of the United States; and

(8) the extent to which State laws and the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 promote or retard independent candidacies for election to the office of President.

(b) The Commission shall submit to the President and to the Congress such interim reports as it deems advisable, and not later than one year after the enactment of this title, a final report of its study and investigation based upon a full consideration of alternatives to our current Presidential nominating system, including an analysis of the strengths and weaknesses of all such alternatives studied, together with its recommendations as to the best system to establish for the 1980 Presidential elections. The Commission shall cease to exist sixty days after its final report is submitted.

POWERS AND ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SEC. 404. (a) The Commission may, in carrying out the provisions of this title, sit and act at such times and places, hold such hearings, take such testimony, request the attendance of such witnesses, administer oaths, have such printing and binding done, and commission studies by any Federal agency or executive department, as the Commission deems advisable.

(b) Per diem and mileage allowances for witnesses requested to appear under the authority conferred by this section shall be paid from funds appropriated to the Commission.

(c) Subject to such rules and regulations as may be adopted by the Commission, the Chairman shall have the power to—

(1) appoint and fix the compensation of an executive director, and such additional staff personnel as may be necessary, without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and without regard to chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title relating to classification in General Schedule pay rates, but at such rates not in excess of the maximum rate for GS-18 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of such title; and

(2) procure temporary and intermittent services to the same extent as is authorized by section 3109 of title 5, United States Code, but at rates not to exceed $100 a day for individuals.

COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS

SEC. 405. (a) Members of the Commission who are otherwise employed by the Federal Government shall serve without compensation but shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in carrying out the duties of the Commission.

(b) Members of the Commission not otherwise employed by the Federal Government shall receive per diem at the maximum daily rate for GS-18 of the General Schedule when they are engaged in the performance of their duties as members of the Commission and shall be entitled to reimbursement for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in carrying out the duties of the Commission.

TIMELINESS OF APPOINTMENTS

SEC. 406. It is the sense of the Congress that the appointments of individuals to serve as members of the Commission be completed within ninety days after the enactment of this title.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 407. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title.

TITLE V—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

USE OF FRANKED MAIL BEFORE ELECTIONS

SEC. 501. Section 3210(a)(5)(D) of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out "28" and inserting in lieu thereof "60".

FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE OF FEDERAL OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

SEC. 502. (a) Each person referred to in subparagraph (b) herein shall file annually with the Comptroller General of the United States on or before Februrary 15 of each year a full and complete report of net worth as of the end of the preceding calendar year, such report to consist of a statement of assets (and of their reasonable market value) owned by him, or jointly by him and his spouse, and of liabilities owed by him, or jointly by him and his spouse, together with a full and complete statement of income for the preceding calendar year, such statement of income to consist of a list of the identity of each source of income and a list of the amount paid by each source of income to him, or jointly to him and his spouse, during the preceding calendar year, except that in lieu of such statement of income, each individual referred to in subparagraph (b) may file with the Comtproller General of the United States a copy of such person's Federal income tax report for such calendar year.

(b) The provisions of this section shall apply to any person who as an officer or employee of the United States within the executive, legislative, or judicial branch of the Government of the United States received compensation at a gross annual rate in excess of $25,000 during the year 1976 or any subsequent year. The provisions of this section also apply to any individual not described in the preceding sentence who is a candidate within the meaning of section 301(b) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(b)), except that the report required by subsection (a) shall be filed within thirty days after the date on which he becomes a candidate within the meaning of such section, and on each February 15 thereafter so long as he is such a candidate.

(c) The report required by this section shall be in such form and shall contain such information as the Comptroller General may prescribe in order to meet the provisions of this section. Notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, all reports filed under this section shall be maintained by the Comptroller General as public records, open to inspection by members of the public, and copies of such records shall be furnished upon request at a reasonable fee. Any report filed under this section shall be retained by the Comptroller General for a period of five years.

(d) All reports required hereunder shall be certified as being correct by the person filing the same and shall be duly sworn to and properly notarized.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. HAYS OF OHIO

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HAYS of Ohio moves to strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill (S. 3065) and to insert in lieu thereof the provisions of H.R. 12406, as passed, as follows:

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976".

TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION MEMBERSHIP

SEC. 101. (a)(1) The second sentence of section 309(a)(1) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 473c(a)(1)), as so redesignated by section 105, hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Act", is amended to read as follows: "The Commission is composed of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, ex officio and without the right to vote, and 6 members appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.".

(2) The last sentence of section 309(a)(1) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(1)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows: "No more than 3 members of the Commission appointed under this paragraph may be affiliated with the same political party.".

(b) Section 309(a)(2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(2)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"(2)(A) Members of the Commission shall serve for terms of 6 years, except that of the members first appointed—

"(i) one shall be appointed for a term of 1 year;

"(ii) one shall be appointed for a term of 2 years;

"(iii) one shall be appointed for a term of 3 years;

"(iv) one shall be appointed for a term of 4 years;

"(v) one shall be appointed for a term of 5 years; and

"(vi) one shall be appointed for a term of 6 years; as designated by the President at the time of appointment, except that of the members first appointed under this subparagraph, no member affiliated with a political party shall be appointed for a term that expires 1 year after another member affiliated with the same political party.

"(B) A member of the Commission may serve on the Commission after the expiration of his term until his successor has taken office as a member of the Commission.

"(C) An individual appointed to fill a vacancy occurring other than by the expiration of a term of office shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member he succeeds.

"(D) Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the Commission shall be filled in the same manner as in the case of the original appointment.".

(c)(1) Section 309(a)(3) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(3)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentences: "Members of the Commission shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. Any individual who is engaging in any other business, vocation, or employment at the time such individual begins to serve as a member of the Commission shall terminate or liquidate such activity no later than 1 year after beginning to serve as such a member.".

(2) Section 309(b) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(b)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) The Commission shall administer, seek to obtain compliance with, and formulate policy with respect to, this Act and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. The Commission shall have exclusive primary jurisdiction with respect to the civil enforcement of such provisions.

"(2) Nothing in this Act shall be construed to limit, restrict, or diminish any investigatory, informational, oversight, supervisory, or disciplinary authority or function of the Congress or any committee of the Congress with respect to elections for Federal office.".

(3) The first sentence of section 309(c) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437(c)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof the following ", except that the affirmative vote of 4 members of the Commission shall be required in order for the Commission to establish guidelines for compliance with the provisions of this Act or with chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or for the Commission to take any action in accordance with paragraph (6), (7), (8), or (10) of section 310(a)".

(d)(1) The President shall appoint members of the Federal Election Commission under section 309(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)), as so redesignated by section 105 and as amended by this section, as soon as practicable after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) The first appointments made by the President under section 309(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)) as so redesignated by section 105 and as amended by this section, shall not be considered to be appointments to fill the unexpired terms of members serving on the Federal Election Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(3) Members serving on the Federal Election Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act may ocntinue to serve as such members until members are appointed and qualified under section 309(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)), as so redesignated by section 105 and as amended by this section, except that until appointed and qualified under this Act, members serving on such Commission on such date of enactment may, beginning on March 1, 1976, exercise only such powers and functions as may be consistent with the determinations of the Supreme Court of the United States in Buckley et al. against Valeo, Secretary of the United States Senate, et al. (numbered 75-436, 75-437) (January 30, 1976).

(e) The provisions of section 309(a)(3) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(3)), as so redesignated by section 105, which prohibit any member of the Federal Election Commisison from being an elected or appointed officer or employee of the executive, legislative, or judicial branch of the Federal Government, shall not apply in the case of any individual serving as a member of such Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(d) The amendments made by this section shall apply to any advisory opinion rendered by the Federal Election Commission after October 15, 1974.

ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 109. Section 313 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437g), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"ENFORCEMENT

"SEC. 313. (a)(1) Any person who believes a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, has occurred may file a complaint with the Commission. Such complaint shall be in writing, shall be signed and sworn to by the person filing such complaint, and shall be notarized. Any person filing such a complaint shall be subject to the provisions of section 1001 of title 18, United States Code. The Commission may not conduct any investigation under this section, or take any other action under this section, solely on the basis of a complaint of a person whose identity is not disclosed to the Commission.

"(2) The Commission, if it has reasonable cause to believe that any person has committed a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, shall notify the person involved of such apparent violation and shall make an investigation of such violation in accordance with the provisions of this section.

"(3)(A) Any investigation under paragraph (2) shall be conducted expeditiously and shall include an investigation, conducted in accordance with the provisions of this section, of reports and statements filed by any complainant under this title, if such complainant is a candidate.

"(B) Any notification or investigation made under paragraph (2) shall not be made public by the Commission or by any other person without the written consent of the person receiving such notification or the person with respect to whom such investigation is made.

"(4) The Commission shall, at the request of any person who receives notice of an apparent violation under paragraph (2), afford such person a reasonable opportunity to demonstrate that no action shall be taken against such person by the Commission under this Act.

"(5)(A) If the Commission determines that there is reasonable cause to believe that any person has committed or is about to commit a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the Commission shall make every endeavor for a period of not less than 30 days to correct or prevent such violation by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion, and to enter into a conciliation agreement with the person involved, except that, if the Commission has reasonable cause to believe that—

"(i) any person has failed to file a report required to be filed under section 304(a)(1)(C) for the calendar quarter occurring immediately before the date of a general election;

"(ii) any person has failed to file a report required to be filed not later than 10 days before an election; or

"(iii) on the basis of a complaint filed less than 45 days but more than 10 days before an election, any person has committed a knowing and willful violation of this Act of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954;

the Commission shall make every effort, for a period of not less than one-half the number of days between the date upon which the Commission determines there is reasonable cause to believe such a violation has occurred and the date of the election involved, to correct or prevent such violation by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion, and to enter into a conciliation agreement with the person involved. A conciliation agreement, unless violated, shall constitute a complete bar to any further action by the Commission, including the bringing of a civil proceeding under subparagraph (B).

"(B) If the Commission is unable to correct or prevent any such violation by such informal methods, the Commission may, if the Commission determines there is probable cause to believe that a violation has occurred or is about to occur, institute a civil action for relief, including a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or any other appropriate order, including a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of $5,000 or an amount equal to the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, in the district court of the United States for the district in which the person against whom such action is brought is found, resides, or transacts business.

"(C) In any civil action instituted by the Commission under subparagraph (B), the court shall grant a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order, including a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater or $5,000 or an amount equal to the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, upon a proper showing that the person involved has engaged or is about to engage in a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

"(D) If the Commission determines that there is probable cause to believe that a knowing and willful violation subject to and as defined in section 328 has occurred or is about to occur, it may refer such apparent violation to the Attorney General of the United States without regard to any limitation set forth in subparagraph (A).

"(6)(A) If the Commission believes that there is clear and convincing proof that a knowing and willful violation of this Act or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, has been committed, any conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission under paragraph (5)(A) may include a requirement that the person involved in such conciliation agreement shall pay a civil penalty which shall not exceed the greater of (i) $10,000; or (ii) an amount equal to 200 percent of the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation.

"(B) If the Commission believes that a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or Chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has been committed, a conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission under paragraph (5)(A) may include a requirement that the person involved in such conciliation agreement shall pay a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of (i) $5,000; or (ii) an amount equal to the amount of the contribution or expenditure involved in such violation.

"(C) The Commission shall make available to the public (i) the results of any conciliation attempt, including any conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission; and (ii) any determination by the Commission that no violation of the Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, has occurred.

"(7) In any civil action for relief instituted by the Commission under paragraph (5), if the court determines that the Commission has established through clear and convincing proof that the person involved in such civil action has committed a knowing and willful violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the court may impose a civil penalty of not more than the greater of (A) $10,000; or (B) an amount equal to 200 percent of the contribution or expenditure involved in such violation. In any case in which such person has entered into a conciliation agreement with the Commission under paragraph (5)(A), the Commission may institute a civil action for relief under paragraph (5) if it believes that such person has violated any provision of such conciliation agreement. In order for the Commission to obtain relief in any such civil action, it shall be sufficient for the Commission to establish that such person has violated, in whole or in part, any requirement of such conciliation agreement.

"(8) In any action brought under paragraph (5) or paragraph (7), subpenas for witnesses who are required to attend a United States district court may run into any other district.

"(9)(A) Any party aggrieved by an order of the Commission dismissing a complaint filed by such party under paragraph (1), or by a failure on the part of the Commission to act on such complaint in accordance with the provisions of this section within 90 days after the filing of such complaint, may file a petition with the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.

"(B) The filing of any petition under subparagraph (A) shall be made—

"(i) in the case of the dismissal of a complaint by the Commission, no later than 60 days after such dismissal; or

"(ii) in the case of a failure on the part of the Commission to act on such complaint, no later than 60 days after the 90-day period specified in subparagraph (A).

"(C) In any proceeding under this paragraph the court may declare that the dismissal of the complaint or the action, or the failure to act, is contrary to law and may direct the Commission to proceed in conformity with such declaration within 30 days, failing which the complainant may bring in his own name a civil action to remedy the violation involved in the original complaint.

"(10) The judgment of the district court may be appealed to the court of appeals and the judgment of the court of appeals affirming or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the district court shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

"(11) Any action brought under this subsection shall be advanced on the docket of the court in which filed, and put ahead of all other actions (other than other actions brought under this subsection or under section 314).

"(12) If the Commission determines after an investigation that any person has violated an order of the court entered in a proceeding brought under paragraph (5) it may petition the court for an order to adjudicate such person in civil contempt, except that if it believes the violation to be knowing and willful it may petition the court for an order to adjudicate such person in criminal contempt.

"(b) In any case in which the Commission refers an apparent violation to the Attorney General, the Attorney General shall respond by report to the Commission with respect to any action taken by the Attorney General regarding such apparent violation. Each report shall be transmitted no later than 60 days after the date the Commission refers any apparent violation, and at the close of every 30-day period thereafter until there is final disposition of such apparent violation. The Commission may from time to time prepare and publish reports on the status of such referrals.

"(c) Any member of the Commission, any employee of the Commission, or any other person who violates the provisions of subsection (a)(3)(B) shall be fined not more than $2,000. Any such member, employee, or other person who knowingly and willfully violates the provisions of subsection (a)(3)(B) shall be fined not more than $5,000.".

DUTIES OF COMMISSION

SEC. 110. (a)(1) Section 315(a)(6) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438(a)(6)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", and to compile and maintain a separate cumulative index of reports and statements filed with it by political committees supporting more than one candidate, which shall include a listing of the date of the registration of any such political committee and the date upon which any such political committee qualifies to make expenditures under section 320(a)(2), and which shall be revised on the same basis and at the same time as the other cumulative indices required under this paragraph".

(2) Section 315(a)(8) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438(a)(8)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", and to give priority to auditing and field investigating the verification for, and the receipt and use of, any payments received by a candidate under chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954".

(b) Section 315(c)(2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438(c)(2)), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended—

(1) by inserting ", in whole or in part," immediately after "disapprove"; and

(2) by inserting immediately after the second sentence thereof the following new sentences: "Whenever a committee of the House of Representatives reports any resolution relating to any such rule or regulation, it is at any time thereafter in order (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. The motion is highly privileged and is not debatable. An amendment to the motion is not in order, and it is not in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to.".

(c) Section 315 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438), as so redesignated by section 105, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) In any proceeding, including any civil or criminal enforcement proceeding against any person charged with violating any provision of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, no rule, regulation, guideline, advisory opinion, opinion of counsel or any other pronouncement by the Commission or by any member, officer, or employee thereof (other than any rule or regulation of the Commission which takes effect under subsection (c)) shall be used against any person, either as having the force of law, as creating any presumption of violation or of criminal intent, or as admissible in evidence against such person, or in any other manner whatsoever.".

ADDITIONAL ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITY

SEC. 111. Section 407(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 456(a)) is amended by inserting immediately after "such title III," the following: "the Commission shall (1) make every endeavor for a period of not less than 30 days to correct such failure by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion; or (2) in the case of any such failure which occurs less than 45 days before the date of the election involved, make every endeavor for a period of not less than one-half the number of days between the date of such failure and the date of the election involved to correct such failure by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion, except that no action may be taken by the Commission with respect to any complaint filed with the Commission during the 5-day period immediately before an election until after the date of such election. If the Commission fails to correct such failure through such informal methods, then".

CONTRIBUTION AND EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS; PENALTIES

SEC. 112. (a) Title III of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431 et seq.), as amended by section 105, is further amended by striking out section 320, as so redesignated by section 105, and by inserting immediately after section 319 the following new sections:

"LIMITATIONS ON CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

"SEC. 320. (a)(1) Except as otherwise provided by paragraphs (2) and (3), no person shall make contributions to any candidate with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $1,000, or to any political committee in any calendar year which exceed, in the aggregate, $1,000.

"(2) No political committee (other than a principal compaign committee) shall make contributions to (A) any candidate with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000; or (B) to any political committee in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000. Contributions by the national committee of a political party serving as the principal campaign committee of a candidate for the office of President of the United States shall not exceed the limitation imposed by the preceding sentence with respect to any other candidate for Federal office. For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'political committee' means an organization registered as a political committee under section 303 for a period of not less than 6 months which has received contributions from more than 50 persons and, except for any State political party organization, has made contributions to 5 or more candidates for Federal office. For purposes of the limitations provided by paragraph (1) and this paragraph, all contributions made by political committees established or financed or maintained or controlled by any corporation, labor organization, or any other person, including any parent, subsidiary, branch, division, department, or local unit of such corporation, labor organization or any other person, or by any group of such persons, shall be considered to have been made by a single political committee, except that (A) nothing in this sentence shall limit transfers between political committees of funds raised through joint fundraising efforts; and (B) for purposes of the limitations provided by paragraph (1) and this paragraph, all contributions made by a single political committee established or financed or maintained or controlled by a national committee of a political party and by a single political committee established or financed or maintained or controlled by the State committee of a political party shall not be considered to have been made by a single political committee. In any case in which a corporation and any of its subsidiaries, branches, divisions, departments, or local units, or a labor organization and any of its subsidiaries, branches, divisions, departments or local units establish or finance or maintain or control more than one separate segregated fund, all such separate segregated funds shall be treated as a single separate segregated fund for purposes of the limitations provided by paragraph (1) and this paragraph.

"(3) No individual shall make contributions aggregating more than $25,000 in any calendar year. For purposes of this paragraph, any contribution made to a candidate in a year other than the calendar year in which the election is held with respect to which such contribution was made is considered to be made during the calendar year in which such election is held.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) contributions to a named candidate made to any political committee authorized by such candidate to accept contributions on his behalf shall be considered to be contributions made to such candidate;

"(B)(i) expenditures made by any person in cooperation, consultation, or concert, with, or at the request or suggestion of, a candidate, his authorized political committees, or their agents shall be considered to be a contribution to such candidate;

"(ii) the financing by any person of the dissemination, distribution, or republication, in whole or in part, of any broadcast or any written, graphic, or other form of campaign materials prepared by the candidate, his authorized political committees, or their authorized agents shall be considered to be an expenditure for purposes of this paragraph; and

"(C) contributions made to or for the benefit of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be contributions made to or for the benefit of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States.

"(5) The limitations imposed by paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection shall apply separately with respect to each election, except that all elections held in any calendar year for the office of President of the United States (except a general election for such office) shall be considered to be one election.

"(6) For purposes of the limitations imposed by this section, all contributions made by a person, either directly or indirectly, on behalf of a particular candidate, including contributions which are in any way earmarked or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to such candidate, shall be treated as contributions from such person to such candidate. The intermediary or conduit shall report the original source and the intended recipient of such contribution to the Commission and to the intended recipient.

"(b)(1) No candidate for the office of President of the United States who has established his eligibility under section 9003 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to condition for eligibility for payments) or under section 9033 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to eligibility for payments) to receive payments from the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate may make expenditures in excess of—

"(A) $10,000,000, in the case of a campaign for nomination for election to such office, except the aggregate of expenditures under this subparagraph in any one State shall not exceed twice the greater of 8 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State (as certified under subsection (e)), or $100,000; or

"(B) $20,000,000, in the case of a campaign for election to such office.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be expenditures made by or on behalf of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States; and

"(B) an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a candidate for the office of Vice President, if it is made by—

"(i) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for the purposes of making any expenditure; or

"(ii) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, or an agent of the candidate, to make the expenditure.

"(c)(1) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1976), as there become available necessary data from the Bureau of Labor Statitics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register the per centum difference between the price index for the twelve months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each limitation established by subsection (b) and subsection (d) shall be increased by such per centum difference. Each amount so increased shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) the term 'price index' means the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average over a calendar year of the Consumer of Labor Statistics; and

"(B) the term 'base period' means the calendar year 1974.

"(d)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law with respect to limitations on expenditures or limitations on contributions, the national committee of a political party and a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may make expenditures in connection with the general election campaign of candidates for Federal office, subject to the limitations contained in paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection.

"(2) The national committee of a political party may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of any candidate for President of the United States who is affiliated with such party which exceeds an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States (as certified under subsection (e)). Any expenditure under this paragraph shall be in addition to any expenditure by a national committee of a political party serving as the principal campaign committee of a candidate for the office of the President of the United States.

"(3) The national committee of a political party, or a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate for Federal office in a State who is affiliated with such party which exceeds—

"(A) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Senator, or of Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, the greater of—

"(i) 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State (as certified under subsection (e)); or

"(ii) $20,000; and

"(B) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner in any other State, $10,000.

"(e) During the first week of January 1975, and every subsequent year, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, of each State, and of each congressional district as of the first day of July next preceding the date of certification. The term 'voting age population' means resident population, 18 years of age or older.

"(f) No candidate or political committee shall knowingly accept any contribution or make any expenditure in violation of the provisions of this section. No officer or employee of a political committee shall knowingly accept a contribution made for the benefit or use of a candidate, or knowingly make any expenditure on behalf of a candidate, in violation of any limitation imposed on contributions and expenditures under this section.

"(g) The Commission shall prescribe rules under which any expenditure by a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President for use in two or more States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

"CONTRIBUTIONS OR EXPENDITURES BY NATIONAL BANKS, CORPORATIONS, OR LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

"SEC. 321. (a) It is unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress, to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election to any political office, or in connection with any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any political office, or for any corporation whatever, or any labor organization to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election at which Presidential and Vice Presidential electors or a Senator or Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress are to be voted for, or in connection with any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any of the foregoing offices, or for any candidate, political committee, or other person knowingly to accept or receive any contribution prohibited by this section, or any officer or any director of any corporation or any national bank, or any officer of any labor organization, to consent to any contribution or expenditure by such corporation, national bank, or labor organization, as the case may be, which is prohibited by this section.

"(b)(1) For purposes of this section the term 'labor organization' means any organization of any kind, or any agency or employee representation committee or plan, in which employees participate and which exists for the purpose, in whole or in part, of dealing with employers concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or conditions of work.

"(2) For purposes of this section, the term 'contribution or expenditure' shall include any direct or indirect payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money, or any services, or anything of value (except a loan of money by a national or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations and in the ordinary course of business) to any candidate, campaign committee, or political party or organization, in connection with any election to any of the offices referred to in this section, but shall not include (A) communications by a corporation to its stockholders and executive officers and their families or by a labor organization to its members and their families on any subject; (B) nonpartisan registration and get-out-the-vote campaigns by a corporation aimed at its stockholders and executive officers and their families, or by a labor organization aimed at its members and their families; and (C) the establishment, administration, and solicitation of contributions to a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes by a corporation or labor organization, except that (i) it shall be unlawful for such a fund to make a contribution or expenditure by utilizing money or anything of value secured by physical force, job discrimination, financial reprisals, or the threat of force, job discrimination, or financial reprisal, or by dues, fees, or other moneys required as a condition of membership in a labor organization or as a condition of employment, or by moneys obtained in any commercial transaction; (ii) it shall be unlawful for a corporation or a separate segregated fund established by a corporation to solicit contributions from any person other than its stockholders, executive officers, and their families, for an incorporated trade association or a separate segregated fund established by an incorporated trade association to solicit contributions from any person other than the stockholders and executive officers of the member corporations of such trade association and the families of such stockholders and executive officers (to the extent that any such solicitation of such stockholders and executive officers, and their families, has been separately and specifically approved by the member corporation involved, and such member corporation has not approved any such solicitation by more than one such trade association in any calendar year, or for a labor organization or a separate segregated fund established by a labor organization to solicit contributions from any person other than its members and their families; (iii) nothwithstanding any other law, any method of soliciting voluntary contributions or of facilitating the making of voluntary contributions to a separate segregated fund established by a corporation, permitted to corporations, shall also be permitted to labor organizations; and (iv) any corporation which utilizes a method of soliciting voluntary contributions or facilitating the making of voluntary contributions, shall make available, on written request, such method to a labor organization representing any members working for such corporation.

"(3) For purposes of this section the term 'executive officer' means an individual employed by a corporation who is paid on a salary rather than hourly basis and who has policymaking or supervisory responsibilities.

"CONTRIBUTIONS BY GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS

"SEC. 322. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person who enters—

"(1) into any contract with the United States or any department or agency thereof either for the rendition of personal services or furnishing any material, supplies, or equipment to the United States or any department or agency thereof or for seling any land or building to the United States or any department or agency thereof, if payment for the performance of such contract or payment for such material, supplies, equipment, land, or building is to be made in whole or in part from funds appropriated by the Congress, at any time between the commencement of negotiations for and the later of (A) the completion of performance under, or (B) the termination of negotiations for, such contract or furnishing of material, supplies, equipment, land, or buildings, directly or indirectly to make any contribution of money or other thing of value, or to promise expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, to any political party, committee, or candidate for public office or to any person for any political purpose or use; or

"(2) to solicit any such contribution from any such person for any such purpose during any such period.

"(b) This section does not prohibit or make unlawful the establishment or administration of, or the solicitation of contributions to, any separate segregated fund by any corporation or labor organization for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, unless the provisions of section 321 prohibit or make unlawful the establishment or administration of, or the solicitation of contributions to, such fund.

"(c) For purposes of this section, the term 'labor organization' has the meaning given it by section 321.

"PUBLICATION OR DISTRIBUTION OF POLITICAL STATEMENTS

"SEC. 323. Whenever any person makes an expenditure for the purpose of financing any communication expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate through any broadcasting station, newspaper, magazine, outdoor advertising facility, direct mailing, or other similar type of general public political advertising, such communication—

"(1) if authorized by a candidate, his authorized political committees, or their agents, shall clearly and conspicuously, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commission, state that such communication has been so authorized; or

"(2) if not authorized in accordance with paragraph (1), shall clearly and conspicuously, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commission, state that such communication is not authorized by any candidate, and state the name of the person that made or financed the expenditure for the communication, including, in the case of a political committee, the name of any affiliated or connected organization as stated in section 303(b)(2).

"CONTRIBUTIONS BY FOREIGN NATIONALS

"SEC. 324. (a) It shall be unlawful for a foreign national directly or through any other person to make any contribution of money or other thing of value, or to promise expressly or implicitly to make any such contribution, in connection with an election to any political office or in connection with any primary election, convention, or caucus held to select candidates for any political office, or for any person to solicit, accept, or receive any such contribution from any such foreign national.

"(b) As used in this section, the term 'foreign national' means—

"(1) a foreign principal, as such term is defined by section 1(b) of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938 (22 U.S.C. 611(b)), except that the term 'foreign national' shall not include any individual who is a citizen of the United States; or

"(2) an individual who is not a citizen of the United States and who is not lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as defined by section 101(a)(20) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(20)).

"PROHIBITION OF CONTRIBUTIONS IN NAME OF ANOTHER

"SEC. 325. No person shall make a contribution in the name of another person or knowingly permit his name to be used to effect such a contribution, and no person shall knowingly accept a contribution made by one person in the name of another person.

"LIMITATION ON CONTRIBUTIONS OF CURRENCY

"SEC. 326. (a) No person shall make contributions of currency of the United States or currency of any foreign country to or for the benefit of any candidate which, in the aggregate, exceed $100, with respect to any campaign of such candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office.

"(b) Any person who knowingly and willfully violates the provisions of this section shall be fined in an amount which does not exceed the greater of $25,000 or 300 percent of the amount of the contribution involved, imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

"ACCEPTANCE OF EXCESSIVE HONORARIUMS

"SEC. 327. No person while an elected or appointed officer or employee of any branch of the Federal Government shall accept—

"(1) any honorarium of more than $1,000 (excluding amounts accepted for actual travel and subsistence expenses) for any appearance, speech, or article; or

"(2) honorariums (not prohibited by paragraph (1) of this section) aggregating more than $15,000 in any calendar year.

"PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS

"SEC. 328. Any person who knowingly and willfully commits a violation of any provision or provisions of this Act, other than the provisions of section 326, which involves the making, receiving, or reporting of any contribution or expenditure having a value, in the aggregate, of $1,000 or more during a calendar year shall be fined in an amount which does not exceed the greater of $25,000 or 300 percent of the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.".

(b) Title III of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431 et seq.), as amended by section 105 and subsection (a), is further amended by inserting immediately after section 315 the following new section:

"FRAUDULENT MISREPRESENTATION OF CAMPAIGN AUTHORITY

"SEC. 316. No person, being a candidate for Federal office or an employee or agent of such a candidate shall—

"(1) fraudulently misrepresent himself or any committee or organization under his control as speaking or writing or otherwise acting for or on behalf of any other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof on a matter which is damaging to such other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof; or

"(2) participate in or conspire to participate in any plan, scheme, or design to violate paragraph (1).".

SAVINGS PROVISION RELATING TO REPEALED SECTIONS

SEC. 113. Title III of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431 et seq.), as amended by section 105 and section 112, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SAVING PROVISION RELATING TO REPEALED SECTIONS

"SEC. 329. Except as otherwise provided by this Act, the repeal by the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976 of any provision or penalty or penalties shall not have the effect of releasing or extinguishing any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under such provision or penalty, and such provision or penalty shall be treated as remaining in force for the purpose of sustaining any proper action or prosecution for the enforcement of any penalty, forfeiture, or liability.".

PRINCIPAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEES

SEC. 114. Section 302(e)(1) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 432(e)(1)), as so redesignated by section 103, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Any occasional, isolated, or incidental support of a candidate shall not be construed as support of such candidate for purposes of the preceding sentence.".

"Sec. 9035. Qualified campaign expense limitations.".

RETURN OF FEDERAL MATCHING PAYMENTS

SEC. 307. (a)(1) Section 9002(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (defining candidate) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The term 'candidate' shall not include any individual who has ceased actively to seek election to the office of President of the United States or to the office of Vice President of the United States, in more than one State.".

(2) Section 9003 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to condition for eligibility for payments) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) WITHDRAWAL BY CANDIDATE.—In any case in which an individual ceases to be a candidate as a result of the operation of the last sentence of section 9002(2), such individual—

"(1) shall no longer be eligible to receive any payments under section 9006; and

"(2) shall pay to the Secretary, as soon as practicable after the date upon which such individual ceases to be a candidate, an amount equal to the amount of payments received by such individual under section 9006 which are not used to defray qualified campaign expenses.".

(b)(1) Section 9032(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (defining candidate) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The term 'candidate' shall not include any individual who is not actively conducting campaigns in more than one State in connection with seeking nomination for election to be President of the United States.".

(2) Section 9033 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to eligibility for payments) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) WITHDRAWAL BY CANDIDATE.—In any case in which an individual ceases to be a candidate as a result of the operation of the last sentence of section 9032(2), such individual—

"(1) shall no longer be eligible to receive any payments under section 9037; and

"(2) notwithstanding the provisions of section 9038(b)(3), shall pay to the Secretary, as soon as practicable after the date upon which such individual ceases to be a candidate, an amount equal to the amount of payments received by such individual under section 9037 which are not used to defray qualified campaign expenses.".

TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

SEC. 308. (a) Section 9008(b)(5) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to adjustment of entitlements) is amended—

(1) by striking out "section 608(c) and section 608(f) of title 18, United States Code," and inserting in lieu thereof "section 320(b) and section 320(d) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971,"; and

(2) by striking out "section 608(d) of such title" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 320(c) of such Act".

(b) Section 9034(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to limitations) is amended by striking out "section 608(c)(1)(A) of title 18, United States Code" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 320(b)(1)(A) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971".

(c) Section 9035(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to expenditure limitations), as so redesignated by section 306(a), is amended by striking out "section 608(c)(1)(A) of title 18, United States Code" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 320(b)(1)(A) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971".

Amend the title so as to read "An Act to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide that members of the Federal Election Commission shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and for other purposes."

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H.R. 12406) was laid on the table.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 606. ATLANTIC CONVENTION

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 1085 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 1085

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 606) to call an Atlantic Convention. After general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on International Relations, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the joint resolution for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the joint resolution to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California (Mr. SISK) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANDERSON), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

(Mr. SISK asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 1085 provides for consideration of House Joint Resolution 606 to create an Atlantic Convention delegation. This is a simple 1-hour open rule with time equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on International Relations.

House Joint Resolution 606 creates an 18-member delegation to organize and participate in a convention of North Atlantic Treaty parliamentary democracies as well as any other parliamentary democracies which the convention might wish to invite. The purpose of the convention is to explore the possibility of arriving at some common goal to create greater unity among the Atlantic nations.

Resolutions to create a delegation and to call an Atlantic Convention have been introduced in a number of Congresses since 1949. In the 94th Congress, 110 Members sponsored or cosponsored House Joint Resolution 606 and its companion measures indicating a broad bipartisan support.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to adopt House Resolution 1085 so that we may proceed to consideration of House Joint Resolution 606.

Mr. Speaker, I had hoped, of course, that we might go ahead and adopt this rule rather quickly and permit the Committee on International Relations to discuss the merits of the bill. However, I have had some requests for time; and therefore, apparently there will be some discussion. I would hope that we can stay away from the merits of the bill, though, and discuss procedure because really that is all we have involved at this particular point, which is whether or not the House should have the opportunity to actually discuss this Atlantic Convention issue.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

(Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, in view of the late hour, it is with some reluctance that I undertake to discuss the substantive nature of the resolution which would be made in order under House Resolution 1085, namely, the joint resolution calling for an Atlantic Convention. However, I have been informed that there may be an effort to defeat the rule, which would make it impossible, of course, for us to undertake a more thorough discussion of the question.

There, Mr. Speaker, in a few minutes I would hope to explain why I think we should today adopt the rule which makes in order consideration of House Joint Resolution 606, which provides for the convening of an Atlantic Convention.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 1085 is a simple 1-hour open rule making in order House consideration of House Joint Resolution 606 which provides for the convening of an Atlantic Convention.

Mr. Speaker, I have been a longtime supporter and cosponsor of the Atlantic Convention resolutions authored by my good friend and colleague from Illinois (Mr. FINDLEY), in the past four Congresses. In this Congress, the resolution has been cosponsored by 110 Members of this body.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution has had rough sledding in past Congresses mainly because there has been considerable misunderstanding and misinformation about what it would do. Contrary to some reports spread about this resolution, the delegates to the Atlantic Convention could not barter away our sovereignty or enter into any binding agreements with other parties to the convention. The language of the resolution is quite explicit in this regard, and I quote:

> The convention's recommendations shall be submitted to the Congress for action under constitutional process.

Moreover, the resolution makes quite clear that our delegates will not be acting in an official capacity for the U.S. Government in the sense that they will be acting under instructions from the President or State Department. To quote from the relevant provision:

> All members of the delegation shall be free from official instructions, and free to speak and vote individually in the convention.

So I think it should be quite clear from any objective reading of the resolution that this will be a purely advisory and recommendatory body, and that any recommendations which flow from the Convention must be submitted to the Congress under normal constitutional processes and procedures.

What then is the purpose of this resolution and the Atlantic Convention it authorizes our participation in? Essentially it is to bring together delegates from North Atlantic Treaty parliamentary democracies and other democracies to explore the possibility of agreement on transforming our present relationship "into a more effective unity based on Federal or other democratic principles." The Convention would be convened to draft a declaration embodying this goal, a timetable for its attainment, and to propose a commission or other means to facilitate this transition.

Mr. Speaker, the question naturally arises, is there a need for such an Atlantic Convention? I think there clearly is. I read with interest an article in last Saturday's New York Times by Drew Middleton based on an interview with Gen. Alexander M. Haig, the commander of allied forces in Europe. General Haig expressed concern about Soviet expansionist policies and said the "important objective" is to develop a Western consensus and "hopefully to achieve some corrective action and policies with respect to these global events." General Haig went on to say, and I quote:

> To the degree that the United States is perceived as unreliable or hibernated, its understandable that West Europeans should grope for some other framework, some other structure to provide what they perceive to be their essential security needs.

The general added that the West cannot indulge in competitive arrangements but needs, and I quote:

> The collective resources of the entire Atlantic community to meet this growing global Soviet threat.

Mr. Speaker, I think the Atlantic Convention proposed by this resolution can assist in that goal of bringing the Western democracies into closer unity to preserve and protect those cherished democratic principles which we commonly hold.

Mr. Speaker, our former U.N. Ambassador, Mr. Moynihan, often expounded on the shrinking number of democratic nations around the world and the fact that democracy is under attack today. The remaining democratic nations are having significant internal problems as well. I am reminded of a report by the Trilateral Commission's Task Force on the Governability of Democracies which was released in May of last year. The task force concluded that the democratic political systems in the trilateral regions—Europe, United States, Japan—have "entered a more difficult and uncertain phase, particularly in Europe and the United States. The demands on democratic government have grown, while the capacity of democratic government seems to have shrunk." In short, these democratic nations are becoming increasingly ungovernable. The task force recommended seven "arenas for action" in strengthening our political systems and securing their democratic foundations. One of these recommendations was the "creation of new institutions for the cooperative promotion of democracy" so that democratic countries could "learn from each other's experience how to make democracy function more effectively in their societies." To quote from the task force report:

> Such mutual learning experiences are familiar phenomena in the economic and military fields; they must also be encouraged in the political field.

Mr. Speaker, I think the proposed Atlantic Convention and the recommendations which flow from it can help to perform this function of achieving the cooperative promotion of democracy which is under stress from without and from within. I find it difficult to comprehend that there are those who oppose this resolution on the grounds that it is somehow going to weaken our democracy or reduce our sovereignty. If anything, it should bring about the opposite effect of helping to shore up and strengthen western democratic institutions and thereby increase their abilities to resist totalitarian advances and to govern themselves more effectively.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, while I appreciate that this resolution is no panacea for solving the problems of Western democracies, I do think it is an important first step in that direction and a very worthwhile undertaking. I strongly support the resolution and urge its adoption.

Mr. Speaker, I support the resolution and I hope, therefore, that the Members will adopt the rule so that not only the author of the resolution, my friend, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. FINDLEY), but his cosponsors as well may have the opportunity of an hour of general debate to further explain their rationale in support of this proposition.

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. KAZEN).

(Mr. KAZEN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KAZEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

94TH CONGRESS } HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES { REPORT
2d Session } { No. 94-1057

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1976

APRIL 28, 1976.—Ordered to be printed

Mr. HAYS of Ohio, from the committee of conference, submitted the following

CONFERENCE REPORT

[To accompany S. 3065]

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3065) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for its administration by a Federal Election Commission appointed in accordance with the requirements of the Constitution, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the text of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976".

TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION MEMBERSHIP

SEC. 101. (a)(1) The second sentence of section 309(a)(1) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(1)), as redesignated by section 105 (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Act"), is amended to read as follows: "The Commission is composed of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, ex officio and without the right to vote, and 6 members appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.".

57-006 O

(2) The last sentence of section 309(a)(1) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(1)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows: "No more than 3 members of the Commission appointed under this paragraph may be affiliated with the same political party.".

(b) Section 309(a)(2) of theAct (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(2)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"(2)(A) Members of the Commission shall serve for terms of 6 years, except that of the members first appointed—

"(i) two of the members, not affiliated with the same political party, shall be appointed for terms ending on April 30, 1977;

"(ii) two of the members, not affiliated with the same political party, shall be appointed for terms ending on April 30, 1979; and

"(iii) two of the members, not affiliated with the same political party, shall be appointed for terms ending on April 30, 1981.

"(B) A member of the Commission may serve on the Commission after the expiration of his term until his successor has taken office as a member of the Commission.

"(C) An individual appointed to fill a vacancy occurring other than by the expiration of a term of office shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member he succeeds.

"(D) Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the Commission shall be filled in the same manner as in the case of the original appointment.".

(c)(1) Section 309(a)(3) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(3)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentences: "Members of the Commission shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. Any individual who is engaging in any other business, vocation, or employment at the time such individual begins to serve as a member of the Commission shall terminate or liquidate such activity no later than 1 year after beginning to serve as such a member.".

(2) Section 309(b) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(b)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) The Commission shall administer, seek to obtain compliance with, and formulate policy with respect to, this Act and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. The Commission shall have exclusive primary jurisdiction with respect to the civil enforcement of such provisions.

"(2) Nothing in this Act shall be construed to limit, restrict, or diminish any investigatory, informational, oversight, supervisory, or disciplinary authority or function of the Congress or any committee of the Congress with respect to elections for Federal office.".

(2) The first sentence of section 309(c) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(c)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof the following: ", except that the affirmative vote of 4 members of the Commission shall be required in order for the Commission to establish guidelines for compliance with the provisions of this Act or with chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or for the Commission to take any action in accordance with paragraph (6), (7), (8), or (10) of section 310(a)".

(d) The last sentence of section 309(f)(1) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(f)(1)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the period the following: "without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service".

(e)(1) The President shall appoint members of the Federal Election Commission under section 309(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)), as redesignated by section 105 and as amended by this section, as soon as practicable after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) The first appointments made by the President under section 309 (a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)), as redesignated by section 105 and as amended by this section, shall not be considered to be appointments to fill the unexpired terms of members serving on the Federal Election Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(3) Members serving on the Federal Election Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act may continue to serve as such members until new members are appointed and qualified under section 309 (a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)), as redesignated by section 105 and as amended by this section, except that until appointed and qualified under this Act, members serving on such Commission on such date of enactment may, beginning on March 23, 1976, exercise only such powers and functions as may be consistent with the determinations of the Supreme Court of the United States in Buckley et al. against Valeo, Secretary of the United States Senate, et al. (numbered 75-436, 75-437) January 30, 1976.

(f) The provisions of section 309(a)(3) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c (a)(3)), as redesignated by section 105, which prohibit any individual from being appointed as a member of the Federal Election Commission who is, at the time of his appointment, an elected or appointed officer or employee of the executive, legislative, or judicial branch of the Federal Government, shall not apply in the case of any individual serving as a member of such Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(g)(1) All personnel, liabilities, contracts, property, and records determined by the Director of the Office of Management and Budget to be employed, held, or used primarily in connection with the functions of the Federal Election Commission under title III of the Act as such title existed on January 1, 1976, or under any other provision of law, are transferred to such Commission as constituted under the amendments made by this Act to the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), personnel engaged in functions transferred under paragraph (1) shall be transferred in accordance with applicable laws and regulations relating to the transfer of functions.

(B) The transfer of personnel pursuant to paragraph (1) shall be without reduction in classification or compensation for 1 year after such transfer.

(3) All laws relating to the functions transferred under this Act shall, insofar as such laws are applicable and not amended by this Act, remain in full force and effect. All orders, determinations, rules, and opinions made, issued, or granted by the Federal Election Commission before its reconstitution under the amendments made by this Act which are in effect at the time of the transfer provided by paragraph (1), and which are consistent with the amendments made by this Act, shall continue in effect to the same extent as if such transfer had not occurred. Any rule or regulation proposed by such Commission before the date of the enactment of this Act shall be prescribed by such Commission only if, after such date of enactment, the rule or regulation is submitted to the Senate or the House of Representatives, as the case may be, in accordance with the provisions of section 315(c) of the Act (as redesignated by section 105), and it is not disapproved by the appropriate House of the Congress.

(4) The provisions of this Act shall not affect any proceeding pending before the Federal Election Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(5) No suit, action, or other proceeding commenced by or against the Federal Election Commission or any officer or employee thereof acting in his official capacity shall abate by reason of the transfer made under paragraph (1). The court before which such suit, action, or other proceeding is pending may, on motion or supplemental petition filed at any time within 12 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, allow such suit, action, or other proceeding to be maintained against the Federal Election Commission if the party making the motion or filing the petition shows a necessity for the survival of the suit, action, or other proceeding to obtain a settlement of the question involved.

(6) Any reference in any other Federal law to the Federal Election Commission, or to any member or employee thereof, as such Commission existed under the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 before its amendment by this Act shall be held and considered to refer to the Federal Election Commission, or the members or employees thereof, as such Commission exists under the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 as amended by this Act.

CHANGES IN DEFINITIONS

(c) Section 302 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 432) is amended by striking out subsection (e) and by redesignating subsection (f) as subsection (e).

(d) Section 302(e)(1) of the Act, as redesignated by subsection (c), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Any occasional, isolated, or incidental support of a candidate shall not be construed as support of such candidate for purposes of the preceding sentence.".

REPORTS BY POLITICAL COMMITTEES AND CANDIDATES

SEC. 104. (a) Section 304(a)(1) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(a)(1)) is amended by adding at the end of subparagraph (C) the following new sentence: "In any year in which a candidate is not on the ballot for election to Federal office such candidate and his authorized committees shall only be required to file such reports not later than the tenth day following the close of any calendar quarter in which the candidate and his authorized committees received contributions or made expenditures, or both, the total amount of which, taken together, exceeds $5,000, and such reports shall be complete as of the close of such calendar quarter; except that any such report required to be filed after December 31 of any calendar year with respect to which a report is required to be filed under subparagraph (B) shall be filed as provided in such subparagraph.".

(b) Section 304(a)(2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(a)(2)) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) Each treasurer of a political committee authorized by a candidate to raise contributions or make expenditures on his behalf, other than the candidate's principal campaign committee, shall file the reports required under this section with the candidate's principal campaign committee."

(c) Section 304(b) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(b)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (12);

(2) by redesignating paragraph (13) as paragraph (14);

(3) by inserting immediately after paragraph (12) the following new paragraph:

"(13) in the case of an independent expenditure in excess of $100 by a political committee, other than an authorized committee of a candidate, expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, through a separate schedule (A) any information required by paragraph (9), stated in a manner which indicates whether the independent expenditure involved is in support of, or in opposition to, a candidate; and (B) under penalty of perjury, a certification whether such independent expenditure is made in cooperation, consultation, or concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate; and"; and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "When committee treasurers and candidates show that best efforts have been used to obtain and submit the information required by this subsection, they shall be deemed to be in compliance with this subsection.".

(d) Section 304(e) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(e)) is amended to read as follows:

"(e)(1) Every person (other than a political committee or candidate) who makes contributions or independent expenditures expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, other than by contribution to a political committee or candidate, in an aggregate amount in excess of $100 during a calendar year shall file with the Commission, on a form prepared by the Commission, a statement containing the information required of a person who makes a contribution in excess of $100 to a candidate or political committee and the information required of a candidate or political committee receiving such a contribution.

"(2) Statements required by this subsection shall be filed on the dates on which reports by political committees are filed. Such statements shall include (A) the information required by subsection (b)(9), stated in a manner indicating whether the contribution or independent expenditure is in support of, or opposition to, the candidate; and (B) under penalty of perjury, a certification whether such independent expenditure is made in cooperation, consultation, or concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate. Any independent expenditure, including those described in subsection (b)(13), of $1,000 or more made after the fifteenth day, but more than 24 hours, before any election shall be reported within 24 hours of such independent expenditure.

"(3) The Commission shall be responsible for expeditiously preparing indices which set forth, on a candidate-by-candidate basis, all expenditures separately, including those reported under subsection (b)(13), made with respect to each candidate, as reported under this subsection, and for periodically issuing such indices on a timely pre-election basis.".

REPORTS BY CERTAIN PERSONS

SEC. 105. Title III of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431 et seq.) is amended by striking out section 308 thereof (2 U.S.C. 437a) and by redesignating section 309 through section 321 as section 308 through section 320, respectively.

CAMPAIGN DEPOSITORIES

SEC. 106. The second sentence of section 308(a)(1) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437b(a)(1)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by striking out "a checking account" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "a single checking account and such other accounts as the committee determines to maintain at its discretion".

POWERS OF COMMISSION

SEC. 107. (a) Section 310(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437d(a)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (8) thereof, by inserting "develop such prescribed forms and to" immediately before "make", and by inserting immediately after "Act" the following: "and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954";

(2) in paragraph (9) thereof, by striking out "and sections 608" and all that follows through "States Code;" and inserting in lieu thereof "and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954; and"; and

(3) by striking out paragraph (10) and redesignating paragraph (11) as paragraph (10).

(b)(1) Section 310(a)(6) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437d(a)(6)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"(6) to initiate (through civil actions for injunctive, declaratory, or other appropriate relief), defend (in the case of any civil action brought under section 313(a)(9)), or appeal any civil action in the name of the Commission for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this Act and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, through its general counsel;".

(2) Section 310 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437d), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) Except as provided in section 313(a)(9), the power of the Commission to initiate civil actions under subsection (a)(6) shall be the exclusive civil remedy for the enforcement of the provisions of this Act.".

ADVISORY OPINIONS

SEC. 108. (a) Section 312(a) of the Act and section 312(b) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437f(a), 437f(b)), as redesignated by section 105, are amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 312. (a) The Commission shall render an advisory opinion, in writing, within a reasonable time in response to a written request by any individual holding Federal office, any candidate for Federal office, any political committee, or the national committee of any political party concerning the application of a general rule of law stated in the Act or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or a general rule of law prescribed as a rule or regulation by the Commission, to a specific factual situation. Any such general rule of law not stated in the Act or in chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 may be initially proposed by the Commission only as a rule or regulation pursuant to the procedures established by section 315(c). No opinion of an advisory nature may be issued by the Commission or any of its employees except in accordance with the provisions of this section.

"(b)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any person who relies upon any provision or finding of an advisory opinion in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (2) and who acts in good faith in accordance with the provisions and findings of such advisory opinion shall not, as a result of any such act, be subject to any sanction provided by this Act or by chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

"(2) Any advisory opinion rendered by the Commission under subsection (a) may be relied upon by (A) any person involved in the specific transaction or activity with respect to which such advisory opinion is rendered; and (B) any person involved in any specific transaction or activity which is indistinguishable in all its material aspects from the transaction or activity with respect to which such advisory opinion is rendered.".

(b) The Commission shall, no later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, conform the advisory opinions issued before such date of enactment to the requirements established by section 312(a) of the Act, as amended by subsection (a) of this section. The provisions of section 312(b) of the Act, as amended by subsection (a) of this section, shall apply with respect to all advisory opinions issued before the date of the enactment of this Act as conformed to meet the requirements of section 312(a) of the Act, as amended by subsection (a) of this section.

ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 109. Section 313 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437g), as redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"ENFORCEMENT

"SEC. 313. (a)(1) Any person who believes a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has occurred may file a complaint with the Commission. Such complaint shall be in writing, shall be signed and sworn to by the person filing such complaint, and shall be notarized. Any person filing such a complaint shall be subject to the provisions of section 1001 of title 18, United States Code. The Commission may not conduct any investigation under this section, or take any other action under this section, solely on the basis of a complaint of a person whose identity is not disclosed to the Commission.

"(2) The Commission, upon receiving a complaint under paragraph (1), and if it has reason to believe that any person has committed a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or, if the Commission, on the basis of information ascertained in the normal course of carrying out its supervisory responsibilities, has reason to believe that such a violation has occurred, shall notify the person involved of such alleged violation and shall make an investigation of such alleged violation in accordance with the provisions of this section.

"(3)(A) Any investigation under paragraph (2) shall be conducted expeditiously and shall include an investigation, conducted in accordance with the provisions of this section, of reports and statements filed by any complainant under this title, if such complainant is a candidate.

"(B) Any notification or investigation made under paragraph (2) shall not be made public by the Commission or by any person without the written consent of the person receiving such notification or the person with respect to whom such investigation is made.

"(4) The Commission shall afford any person who receives notice of an alleged violation under paragraph (2) a reasonable opportunity to demonstrate that no action should be taken against such person by the Commission under this Act.

"(5)(A) If the Commission determines that there is reasonable cause to believe that any person has committed or is about to commit a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the Commission shall make every endeavor for a period of not less than 30 days to correct or prevent such violation by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion, and to enter into a conciliation agreement with the person involved, except that if the Commission has reasonable cause to believe that—

"(i) any person has failed to file a report required to be filed under section 304(a)(1)(C) for the calendar quarter occurring immediately before the date of a general election;

"(ii) any person has failed to file a report required to be filed no later than 10 days before an election; or

"(iii) on the basis of a complaint filed less than 45 days but more than 10 days before an election, any person has committed a knowing and willful violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954;

the Commission shall make every effort, for a period of not less than one-half the number of days between the date upon which the Commission determines there is reasonable cause to believe such a violation has occurred and the date of the election involved, to correct or prevent such violation by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion, and to enter into a conciliation agreement with the person involved. A conciliation agreement, unless violated, shall constitute a complete bar to any further action by the Commission, including the bringing of a civil proceeding under subparagraph (B).

"(B) If the Commission is unable to correct or prevent any such violation by such informal methods, the Commission may, if the Commission determines there is probable cause to believe that a violation has occurred or is about to occur, institute a civil action for relief, including a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or any other appropriate order, including a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of $5,000 or an amount equal to the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, in the district court of the United States for the district in which the person against whom such action is brought is found, resides, or transacts business.

"(C) In any civil action instituted by the Commission under subparagraph (B), the court may grant a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order, including a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of $5,000 or an amount equal to the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, upon a proper showing that the person involved has engaged or is about to engage in a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

"(D) If the Commission determines that there is probable cause to believe that a knowing and willful violation subject to and as defined in section 329, or a knowing and willful violation of a provision of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has occurred or is about to occur, it may refer such apparent violation to the Attorney General of the United States without regard to any limitation set forth in subparagraph (A).

"(6)(A) If the Commission believes that there is clear and convincing proof that a knowing and willful violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, has been committed, a conciliation agreement entered into by the Commismission under paragraph (5)(A) may include a requirement that the person involved in such conciliation agreement shall pay a civil penalty which shall not exceed the greater of (i) $10,000; or (ii) an amount equal to 200 percent of the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation.

"(B) If the Commission believes that a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has been committed, a conciliation agrement entered into by the Commission under paragraph (5)(A) may include a requirement that the person involved in such conciliation agreement shall pay a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of (i) $5,000; or (ii) an amount equal to the amount of the contribution or expenditure involved in such violation.

"(C) The Commission shall make available to the public (i) the results of any conciliation attempt, including any conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission; and (ii) any determination by the Commission that no violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has occurred.

(7) In any civil action for relief instituted by the Commission under paragraph (5), if the court determines that the Commission has established through clear and convincing proof that the person involved in such civil action has committed a knowing and willful violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the court may impose a civil penalty of not more than the greater of (A) $10,000; or (B) an amount equal to 200 percent of the contribution or expenditure involved in such violation. In any case in which such person has entered into a conciliation agreement with the Commission under paragraph (5)(A), the Commission may institute a civil action for relief under paragraph (5) if it believes that such person has violated any provision of such conciliation agreement. In order for the Commission to obtain relief in any such civil action, it shall be sufficient for the Commission to establish that such person has violated, in whole or in part, any requirement of such conciliation agreement.

"(8) In any action brought under paragraph (5) or paragraph (7), subpenas for witnesses who are required to attend a United States district court may run into any other district.

"(9)(A) Any party aggrieved by an order of the Commission dismissing a complaint filed by such party under paragraph (1), or by a failure on the part of the Commission to act on such complaint in accordance with the provisions of this section within 90 days after the filing of such complaint, may file a petition with the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.

"(B) The filing of any petition under subparagraph (A) shall be made—

"(i) in the case of the dismissal of a complaint by the Commission, no later than 60 days after such dismissal; or

"(ii) in the case of a failure on the part of the Commission to act on such complaint, no later than 60 days after the 90-day period specified in subparagraph (A).

"(C) In any proceeding under this paragraph the court may declare that the dismissal of the complaint or the action, or the failure to act, is contrary to law and may direct the Commission to proceed in conformity with such declaration within 30 days, failing which the complainant may bring in his own name a civil action to remedy the violation involved in the original complaint.

"(10) The judgment of the district court may be appealed to the court of appeals and the judgment of the court of appeals affirming or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the district court shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

"(11) Any action brought under this subsection shall be advanced on the docket of the court in which filed, and put ahead of all other actions (other than other actions brought under this subsection or under section 314).

"(12) If the Commission determines after an investigation that any person has violated an order of the court entered in a proceeding brought under paragraph (5) it may petition the court for an order to adjudicate such person in civil contempt, except that if it believes the violation to be knowing and willful it may petition the court for an order to adjudicate such person in criminal contempt.

"(b) In any case in which the Commission refers an apparent violation to the Attorney General, the Attorney General shall respond by report to the Commission with respect to any action taken by the Attorney General regarding such apparent violation. Each report shall be transmitted no later than 60 days after the date the Commission refers any apparent violation, and at the close of every 30-day period thereafter until there is final disposition of such apparent violation. The Commission may from time to time prepare and publish reports on the status of such referrals.

"(c) Any member of the Commission, any employee of the Commission, or any other person who violates the provisions of subsection (a)(3)(B) shall be fined not more than $2,000. Any such member, employee, or other person who knowingly and willfully violates the provisions of subsection (a)(3)(B) shall be fined not more than $5,000.".

DUTIES OF COMMISSION

SEC. 110. (a)(1) Section 315(a)(6) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438(a)(6)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", and to compile and maintain a separate cumulative index of reports and statements filed with it by political committees supporting more than one candidate, which shall include a listing of the date of the registration of any such political committee and the date upon which any such political committee qualifies to make expenditures under section 320(a)(2), and which shall be revised on the same basis and at the same time as the other cumulative indices required under this paragraph".

(2) Section 315(a)(8) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438(a)(8)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", and to give priority to auditing and field investigating of the verification for, and the receipt and use of, any payments received by a candidate under chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954".

(b) Section 315(c) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438(c)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended—

(1) by inserting immediately after the second sentence of paragraph (2) the following new sentences: "Whenever a committee of the House of Representatives reports any resolution relating to any such rule or regulation, it is at any time thereafter in order

(even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. The motion is highly privileged and is not debatable. An amendment to the motion is not in order, and it is not in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to."; and

(2) by adding the following new paragraph at the end thereof:

"(5) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'rule or regulation' means a provision or series of interrelated provisions stating a single separable rule of law.".

ADDITIONAL ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITY

SEC. 111. Section 407 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 456) is repealed.

CONTRIBUTION AND EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS; OTHER LIMITATIONS

SEC. 112. Title III of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431–441) is amended—

(1) by striking out section 320 (2 U.S.C. 441), as redesignated by section 105; and

(2) by inserting immediately after section 319 (2 U.S.C. 439c), as redesignated by section 105, the following new sections:

"LIMITATIONS ON CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

"SEC. 320. (a) (1) No person shall make contributions—

"(A) to any candidate and his authorized political committees with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $1,000;

"(B) to the political committees established and maintained by a national political party, which are not the authorized political committees of any candidate, in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $20,000; or

"(C) to any other political committee in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000.

"(2) No multicandidate political committee shall make contributions—

"(A) to any candidate and his authorized political committees with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000;

"(B) to the political committees established and maintained by a national political party, which are not the authorized political committees of any candidate, in any calendar year, which, in the aggregate, exceed $15,000; or

"(C) to any other political committee in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000.

"(3) No individual shall make contributions aggregating more than $25,000 in any calendar year. For purposes of this paragraph, any contribution made to a candidate in a year other than the calendar year in which the election is held with respect to which such contribution is made, is considered to be made during the calendar year in which such election is held.

"(4) The limitations on contributions contained in paragraphs (1) and (2) do not apply to transfers between and among political committees which are national, State, district, or local committees (including any subordinate committee thereof) of the same political party. For purposes of paragraph (2), the term 'multicandidate political committee' means a political committee which has been registered under section 303 for a period of not less than 6 months, which has received contributions from more than 50 persons, and, except for any state political party organization, has made contributions to 5 or more candidates for Federal office.

"(5) For purposes of the limitations provided by paragraph (1) and paragraph (2), all contributions made by political committees established or financed or maintained or controlled by any corporation, labor organization, or any other person, including any parent, subsidiary, branch, division, department, or local unit of such corporation, labor organization, or any other person, or by any group of such persons, shall be considered to have been made by a single political committee, except that (A) nothing in this sentence shall limit transfers between political committees of funds raised through joint fundraising efforts; (B) for purposes of the limitations provided by paragraph (1) and paragraph (2), all contributions made by a single political committee established or financed or maintained or controlled by a national committee of a political party and by a single political committee established or financed or maintained or controlled by a State committee of a political party shall not be considered to have been made by a single political committee; and (C) nothing in this section shall limit the transfer of funds between the principal campaign committee of a candidate seeking nomination or election to a Federal office and the principal campaign committee of that candidate for nomination or election to another Federal office if (i) such transfer is not made when the candidate is actively seeking nomination or election to both such offices; (ii) the limitations contained in this Act on contributions by persons are not exceeded by such transfer; and (iii) the candidate has not elected to receive any funds under chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. In any case in which a corporation and any of its subsidiaries, branches, divisions, departments, or local units, or a labor organization and any of its subsidiaries, branches, divisions, departments, or local units establish or finance or maintain or control more than one separate segregated fund, all such separate segregated funds shall be treated as a single separate segregated fund for purposes of the limitations provided by paragraph (1) and paragraph (2).

"(6) The limitations on contributions to a candidate imposed by paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection shall apply separately with respect to each election, except that all elections held in any calendar year for the office of President of the United States (except a general election for such office) shall be considered to be one election.

"(7) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) contributions to a named candidate made to any political committee authorized by such candidate to accept contributions on his behalf shall be considered to be contributions made to such candidate;

"(B) (i) expenditures made by any person in cooperation, consultation, or concert, with, or at the request or suggestion of, a candidate, his authorized political committees, or their agents, shall be considered to be a contribution to such candidate;

"(ii) the financing by any person of the dissemination, distribution, or republication, in whole or in part, of any broadcast or any written, graphic, or other form of campaign materials prepared by the candidate, his campaign committees, or their authorized agents shall be considered to be an expenditure for purposes of this paragraph; and

"(C) contributions made to or for the benefit of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be contributions made to or for the benefit of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States.

"(8) For purposes of the limitations imposed by this section, all contributions made by a person, either directly or indirectly, on behalf of a particular candidate, including contributions which are in any way earmarked or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to such candidate, shall be treated as contributions from such person to such candidate. The intermediary or conduit shall report the original source and the intended recipient of such contribution to the Commission and to the intended recipient.

"(b)(1) No candidate for the office of President of the United States who is eligible under section 9003 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to condition for eligibility for payments) or under section 9033 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to eligibility for payments) to receive payments from the Secretary of the Treasury may make expenditures in excess of—

"(A) $10,000,000, in the case of a campaign for nomination for election to such office, except the aggregate of expenditures under this subparagraph in any one State shall not exceed the greater of 16 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State (as certified under subsection (e)), or $200,000; or

"(B) $20,000,000 in the case of a campaign for election to such office.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be expenditures made by or on behalf of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States; and

"(B) an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a vice presidential candidate, if it is made by—

"(i) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for purposes of making any expenditure; or

"(ii) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, or an agent of the candidate, to make the expenditure.

"(c)(1) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1976), as there become available necessary data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register the percent difference between the price index for the 12 months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each limitation established by subsection (b) and subsection (d) shall be increased by such percent difference. Each amount so increased shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) the term 'price index' means the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics; and

"(B) the term 'base period' means the calendar year 1974.

"(d) (1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law with respect to limitations on expenditures or limitations on contributions, the national committee of a political party and a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may make expenditures in connection with the general election campaign of candidates for Federal office, subject to the limitations contained in paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection.

"(2) The national committee of a political party may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of any candidate for President of the United States who is affiliated with such party which exceeds an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States (as certified under subsection (e)). Any expenditure under this paragraph shall be in addition to any expenditure by a national committee of a political party serving as the principal campaign committee of a candidate for the office of President of the United States.

"(3) The national committee of a political party, or a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate for Federal office in a State who is affiliated with such party which exceeds—

"(A) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Senator, or of Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, the greater of—

"(i) 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State (as certified under subsection (e)); or

"(ii) $20,000; and

"(B) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner in any other State, $10,000.

"(e) During the first week of January 1975, and every subsequent year, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, of each State, and of each congressional district as of the first day of July next preceding the date of certification. The term 'voting age population' means resident population, 18 years of age or older.

"(f) No candidate or political committee shall knowingly accept any contribution or make any expenditure in violation of the provisions of this section. No officer or employee of a political committee shall knowingly accept a contribution made for the benefit or use of a candidate, or knowingly make any expenditure on behalf of a candidate, in violation of any limitation imposed on contributions and expenditures under this section.

"(g) The Commission shall prescribe rules under which any expenditure by a candidate for presidential nomination for use in 2 or more States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

"(h) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, amounts totaling not more than $17,500 may be contributed to a candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to the United States Senate during the year in which an election is held in which he is such a candidate, by the Republican or Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, or the national committee of a political party, or any combination of such committees.

"CONTRIBUTIONS OR EXPENDITURES BY NATIONAL BANKS, CORPORATIONS, OR LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

"SEC. 321. (a) It is unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress, to make a contribition or expenditure in connection with any election to any political office, or in connection with any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any political office, or for any corporation whatever, or any labor organization, to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election at which presidential and vice presidential electors or a Senator or Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, Congress are to be voted for, or in connection with any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any of the foregoing offices, or for any candidate, political committee, or other person knowingly to accept or receive any contribution prohibited by this section, or any officer or any director of any corporation or any national bank or any officer of any labor organization to consent to any contribution or expenditure by the corporation, national bank, or labor organization, as the case may be, prohibited by this section.

"(b)(1) For purposes of this section the term 'labor organization' means any organization of any kind, or any agency or employee representation committee or plan, in which employees participate and which exists for the purpose, in whole or in part, of dealing with employers concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or conditions of work.

"(2) For purposes of this section and section 12(h) of the Public Utility Holding Company Act (15 U.S.C. 79l(h)), the term 'contribution or expenditure' shall include any direct or indirect payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money, or any services, or anything of value (except a loan of money by a national or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations and in the ordinary course of business) to any candidate, campaign committee, or political party or organization, in connection with any election to any of the offices referred to in this section, but shall not include (A) communications by a corporation to its stockholders and executive or administrative personnel and their families or by a labor organization to its members and their families on any subject; (B) nonpartisan registration and get-out-the-vote campaigns by a corporation aimed at its stockholders and executive or administrative personnel and their families, or by a labor organization aimed at its members and their families; and (C) the establishment, administration, and solicitation of contributions to a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes by a corporation, labor organization, membership organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock.

"(3) It shall be unlawful—

"(A) for such a fund to make a contribution or expenditure by utilizing money or anything of value secured by physical force, job discrimination, financial reprisals, or the threat of force, job discrimination, or financial reprisal; or by dues, fees, or other moneys required as a condition of membership in a labor organization or as a condition of employment, or by moneys obtained in any commercial transaction;

"(B) for any person soliciting an employee for a contribution to such a fund to fail to inform such employee of the political purposes of such fund at the time of such solicitation; and

"(C) for any person soliciting an employee for a contribution to such a fund to fail to inform such employee, at the time of such solicitation, of his right to refuse to so contribute without any reprisal.

"(4)(A) Except as provided in subparagraphs (B), (C), and (D), it shall be unlawful—

"(i) for a corporation, or a separate segregated fund established by a corporation, to solicit contributions to such a fund from any person other than its stockholders and their families and its executive or administrative personnel and their families, and

"(ii) for a labor organization, or a separate segregated fund established by a labor organization, to solicit contributions to such a fund from any person other than its members and their families.

"(B) It shall not be unlawful under this section for a corporation, a labor organization, or a separate segregated fund established by such corporation or such labor organization, to make 2 written solicitations for contributions during the calendar year from any stockholder, executive or administrative personnel, or employee of a corporation or the families of such persons. A solicitation under this subparagraph may be made only by mail addressed to stockholders, executive or administrative personnel, or employees at their residence and shall be so designed that the corporation, labor organization, or separate segregated fund conducting such solicitation cannot determine who makes a contribution of $50 or less as a result of such solicitation and who does not make such a contribution.

"(C) This paragraph shall not prevent a membership organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock, or a separate segregated fund established by a membership organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock, from soliciting contributions to such a fund from members of such organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock.

"(D) This paragraph shall not prevent a trade association or a separate segregated fund established by a trade association from soliciting contributions from the stockholders and executive or administrative personnel of the member corporations of such trade association and the families of such stockholders or personnel to the extent that such solicitation of such stockholders and personnel, and their families, has been separately and specifically approved by the member corporation involved, and such member corporation does not approve any such solicitation by more than one such trade association in any calendar year.

"(5) Notwithstanding any other law, any method of soliciting voluntary contributions or of facilitating the making of voluntary contributions to a separate segregated fund established by a corporation, permitted by law to corporations with regard to stockholders and executive or administrative personnel, shall also be permitted to labor organizations with regard to their members.

"(6) Any corporation, including its subsidiaries, branches, divisions, and affiliates, that utilizes a method of soliciting voluntary contributions or facilitating the making of voluntary contributions, shall make available such method, on written request and at a cost sufficient only to reimburse the corporation for the expenses incurred thereby, to a labor organization representing any members working for such corporation, its subsidiaries, branches, divisions, and affiliates.

"(7) For purposes of this section, the term 'executive or administrative personnel' means individuals employed by a corporation who are paid on a salary, rather than hourly, basis and who have policymaking, managerial, professional, or supervisory responsibilities.

"CONTRIBUTIONS BY GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS

"SEC. 322. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person—

"(1) who enters into any contract with the United States or any department or agency thereof either for the rendition of personal services or furnishing any material, supplies, or equipment to the United States or any department or agency thereof or for selling any land or building to the United States or any department or agency thereof, if payment for the performance of such contract or payment for such material, supplies, equipment, land, or building is to be made in whole or in part from funds appropriated by the Congress, at any time between the commencement of negotiations for and the later of (A) the completion of performance under; or (B) the termination of negotiations for, such contract or furnishing of material, supplies, equipment, land, or buildings, directly or indirectly to make any contribution of money or other things of value, or to promise expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution to any political party, committee, or candidate for public office or to any person for any political purpose or use; or

"(2) knowingly to solicit any such contribution from any such person for any such purpose during any such period.

"(b) This section does not prohibit or make unlawful the establishment or administration of, or the solicitation of contributions to, any separate segregated fund by any corporation, labor organization, membership organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, unless the provisions of section 321 prohibit or make unlawful the establishment or administration of, or the solicitation of contributions to, such fund. Each specific prohibition, allowance, and duty applicable to a corporation, labor organization, or separate segregated fund under section 321 applies to a corporation, labor organization, or separate segregated fund to which this subsection applies.

"(c) For purposes of this section, the term 'labor organization' has the meaning given it by section 321(b)(1).

"PUBLICATION OR DISTRIBUTION OF POLITICAL STATEMENTS

"SEC. 323. Whenever any person makes an expenditure for the purpose of financing communications expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate through any broadcasting station, newspaper, magazine, outdoor advertising facility, direct mailing, or any other type of general public political advertising, such communication—

"(1) if authorized by a candidate, his authorized political committees, or their agents, shall clearly and conspicuously, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commission, state that the communication has been authorized; or

"(2) if not authorized by a candidate, his authorized political committees, or their agents, shall clearly and conspicuously, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commission, state that the communication is not authorized by any candidate, and state the name of the person who made or financed the expenditure for the communication, including, in the case of a political committee, the name of any affiliated or connected organization required to be disclosed under section 303(b)(2).

"CONTRIBUTIONS BY FOREIGN NATIONALS

"SEC. 324. (a) It shall be unlawful for a foreign national directly or through any other person to make any contribution of money or other thing of value, or to promise expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, in connection with an election to any political office or in connection with any primary election, convention, or caucus held to select candidates for any political office; or for any person to solicit, accept, or receive any such contribution from a foreign national.

"(b) As used in this section, the term 'foreign national' means—

"(1) a foreign principal, as such term is defined by section 1(b) of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938 (22 U.S.C. 611 (b)), except that the term 'foreign national' shall not include any individual who is a citizen of the United States; or

"(2) an individual who is not a citizen of the United States and who is not lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as defined by section 101(a)(20) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(20)).

"PROHIBITION OF CONTRIBUTIONS IN NAME OF ANOTHER

"SEC. 325. No person shall make a contribution in the name of another person or knowingly permit his name to be used to effect such a contribution, and no person shall knowingly accept a contribution made by one person in the name of another person.

"LIMITATION ON CONTRIBUTION OF CURRENCY

"SEC. 326. No person shall make contributions of currency of the United States or currency of any foreign country to or for the benefit of any candidate which, in the aggregate, exceed $100, with respect to any campaign of such candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office.

"FRAUDULENT MISREPRESENTATION OF CAMPAIGN AUTHORITY

"SEC. 327. No person who is a candidate for Federal office or an employee or agent of such a candidate shall—

"(1) fraudulently misrepresent himself or any committee or organization under his control as speaking or writing or otherwise acting for or on behalf of any other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof on a matter which is damaging to such other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof; or

"(2) willfully and knowingly participate in or conspire to participate in any plan, scheme, or design to violate paragraph (1).

"ACCEPTANCE OF EXCESSIVE HONORARIUMS

"SEC. 328. No person while an elected or appointed officer or employee of any branch of the Federal Government shall accept—

"(1) any honorarium of more than $2,000 (excluding amounts accepted for actual travel and subsistence expenses for such person and his spouse or an aide to such person, and excluding amounts paid or incurred for any agents' fees or commissions) for any appearance, speech, or article; or

"(2) honorariums (not prohibited by paragraph (1) of this section) aggregating more than $25,000 in any calendar year.

"PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS

"SEC. 329. (a) Any person, following the date of the enactment of this section, who knowingly and willfully commits a violation of any provision or provisions of this Act which involves the making, receiving, or reporting of any contribution or expenditure having a value in the aggregate of $1,000 or more during a calendar year shall be fined in an amount which does not exceed the greater of $25,000 or 300 percent of the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both. In the case of a knowing and willful violation of section 321(b)(3), including such a violation of the provisions of such section as applicable through section 322(b), of section 325, or of section 326, the penalties set forth in this section shall apply to a violation involving an amount having a value in the aggregate of $250 or more during a calendar year. In the case of a knowing and willful violation of section 327, the penalties set forth in this section shall apply without regard to whether the making, receiving, or reporting of a contribution or expenditure of $1,000 or more is involved.

"(b) A defendant in any criminal action brought for the violation of a provision of this Act, or of a provision of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, may introduce as evidence of his lack of knowledge of or intent to commit the offense for which the action was brought a conciliation agreement entered into between the defendant and the Commission under section 313 which specifically deals with the act or failure to act constituting such offense and which is still in effect.

"(c) In any criminal action brought for a violation of a provision of this Act, or of a provision of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the court before which such action is brought shall take into account, in weighing the seriousness of the offense and in considering the appropriateness of the penalty to be imposed if the defendant is found guilty, whether—

"(1) the specific act or failure to act which constitutes the offense for which the action was brought is the subject of a conciliation agreement entered into between the defendant and the Commission under section 313;

"(2) the conciliation agreement is in effect; and

"(3) the defendant is, with respect to the violation involved, in compliance with the conciliation agreement.".

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 113. Section 319 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 439c), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following sentence: "There are authorized to be appropriated to the Commission $6,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, $1,500,000 for the period beginning July 1, 1976, and ending September 30, 1976, and $6,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1977.".

SAVINGS PROVISION

SEC. 114. Except as otherwise provided by this Act, the repeal by this Act of any section or penalty shall not have the effect of releasing or extinguishing any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under such section or penalty, and such section or penalty shall be treated as remaining in force for the purpose of sustaining any proper action or prosecution for the enforcement of any penalty, forfeiture, or liability.

TITLE III—AMENDMENTS TO INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1954

ENTITLEMENT OF ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES TO PAYMENTS

SEC. 301. (a) Section 9004 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to entitlement of eligible candidates to payments) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(d) EXPENDITURES FROM PERSONAL FUNDS.—In order to be eligible to receive any payment under section 9006, the candidate of a major, minor, or new party in an election for the office of President shall certify to the Commission, under penalty of perjury, that such candidate will not knowingly make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with his campaign for election to the office of President in excess of, in the aggregate, $50,000. For purposes of this subsection, expenditures from personal funds made by a candidate of a major, minor, or new party for the office of Vice President shall be considered to be expenditures by the candidate of such party for the office of President.

"(e) DEFINITION OF IMMEDIATE FAMILY.—For purposes of subsection (d), the term 'immediate family' means a candidate's spouse, and any child, parent, grandparent, brother, half-brother, sister, or half-sister of the candidate, and the spouses of such persons.".

(b) For purposes of applying section 9004(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as added by subsection (a), expenditures made by an individual after January 29, 1976, and before the date of the enactment of this Act shall not be taken into account.

PAYMENTS TO ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES; INSUFFICIENT AMOUNTS IN FUND

SEC. 302. (a) Section 9006 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to payments to eligible candidates) is amended by striking out subsection (b) thereof and by redesignating subsection (c) and subsection (d) as subsection (b) and subsection (c), respectively.

(b) Section 9006(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to insufficient amounts in fund), as redesignated by subsection (a), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "In any case in which the Secretary or his delegate determines that there are insufficient moneys in the fund to make payments under subsection (b), section 9008(b)(3), and section 9037(b), moneys shall not be made available from any other source for the purpose of making such payments.".

PROVISION OF LEGAL OR ACCOUNTING SERVICES

SEC. 303. Section 9008(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to limitation of expenditures) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

> "(4) PROVISION OF LEGAL OR ACCOUNTING SERVICES.—For purposes of this section, the payment, by any person other than the national committee of a political party (unless the person paying for such services is a person other than the regular employer of the individual rendering such services) of compensation to any individual for legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of the national committee of a political party shall not be treated as an expenditure made by or on behalf of such committee with respect to its limitations on presidential nominating convention expenses.".

REVIEW OF REGULATIONS

SEC. 304. (a) Section 9009(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to review of regulations) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (2) thereof, by inserting immediately after the first sentence thereof the following new sentences: "Whenever a committee of the House of Representatives reports any resolution relating to any such rule or regulation, it is at any time thereafter in order (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. The motion is highly privileged and is not debatable. An amendment to the motion is not in order, and it is not in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to."; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'rule or regulation' means a provision or series of interrelated provisions stating a single separable rule of law.".

(b) Section 9039(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to review of regulations) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (2) thereof, by inserting immediately after the first sentence thereof the following new sentences: "Whenever a committee of the House of Representatives reports any resolution relating to any such rule or regulation, it is at any time thereafter in order (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. The motion is highly privileged and is not debatable. An amendment to the motion is not in order, and it is not in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to."; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'rule or regulation' means a provision or series of interrelated provisions stating a single separable rule of law.".

QUALIFIED CAMPAIGN EXPENSE LIMITATION

SEC. 305. (a) Section 9035 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to qualified campaign expense limitation) is amended—

(1) in the heading thereof, by striking out "LIMITATION" and inserting in lieu thereof "LIMITATIONS";

(2) by inserting "(a) EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS.—" immediately before "No candidate";

(3) by inserting immediately after "States Code" the following: ", and no candidate shall knowingly make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with his campaign for nomination for election to the office of President in excess of, in the aggregate, $50,000"; and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) DEFINITION OF IMMEDIATE FAMILY.—For purposes of this section, the term 'immediate family' means a candidate's spouse, and any child, parent, grandparent, brother, half-brother, sister, or half-sister of the candidate, and the spouses of such persons.".

(b) The table of sections for chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by striking out the item relating to section 9035 and inserting in lieu thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 9035. Qualified campaign expense limitations.".

(c) Section 9033(b)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to expense limitation; declaration of intent; minimum contributions) is amended by striking out "limitation" and inserting in lieu thereof "limitations".

(d) For purposes of applying section 9035(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended by subsection (a), expenditures made by an individual after January 29, 1976, and before the date of the enactment of this Act shall not be taken into account.

RETURN OF FEDERAL MATCHING PAYMENTS

SEC. 306. (a)(1) Section 9002(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (defining candidate) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The term 'candidate' shall not include any individual who has ceased actively to seek election to the office of President of the United States or to the office of Vice President of the United States, in more than one State.".

(2) Section 9003 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to condition for eligibility for payments) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) WITHDRAWAL BY CANDIDATE.—In any case in which an individual ceases to be a candidate as a result of the operation of the last sentence of section 9002(2), such individual—

"(1) shall no longer be eligible to receive any payments under section 9006, except that such individual shall be eligible to receive payments under such section to defray qualified campaign expenses incurred while actively seeking election to the office of President of the United States or to the office of Vice President of the United States in more than one State; and

"(2) shall pay to the Secretary or his delegate, as soon as practicable after the date upon which such individual ceases to be a candidate, an amount equal to the amount of payments received by such individual under section 9006 which are not used to defray qualified campaign expenses.".

(b)(1) Section 9032(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (defining candidate) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The term 'candidate' shall not include any individual who is not actively conducting campaigns in more than one State in connection with seeking nomination for election to be President of the United States.".

(2) Section 9033 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to eligibility for payments) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) TERMINATION OF PAYMENTS.—

"(1) GENERAL RULE.—Except as provided by paragraph (2), no payment shall be made to any individual under section 9037—

"(A) if such individual ceases to be a candidate as a result of the operation of the last sentence of section 9032(2); or

"(B) more than 30 days after the date of the second consecutive primary election in which such individual receives less than 10 percent of the number of votes cast for all candi- dates of the same party for the same office in such primary election, if such individual permitted or authorized the appearance of his name on the ballot, unless such individual certifies to the Commission that he will not be an active candidate in the primary involved.

"(2) QUALIFIED CAMPAIGN EXPENSES; PAYMENTS TO SECRETARY.—Any candidate who is ineligible under paragraph (1) to receive any payments under section 9037 shall be eligible to continue to receive payments under section 9037 to defray qualified campaign expenses incurred before the date upon which such candidate becomes ineligible under paragraph (1).

"(3) CALCULATION OF VOTING PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of paragraph (1)(B), if the primary elections involved are held in more than one State on the same date, a candidate shall be treated as receiving that percentage of the votes on such date which he received in the primary election conducted on such date in which he received the greatest percentage vote.

"(4) REESTABLISHMENT OF ELIGIBILITY.—

"(A) In any case in which an individual is ineligible to receive payments under section 9037 as a result of the operation of paragraph (1)(A), the Commission may subsequently determine that such individual is a candidate upon a finding that such individual is actively seeking election to the office of President of the United States in more than one State. The Commission shall make such determination without requiring such individual to reestablish his eligibility to receive payments under subsection (a).

"(B) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1)(B), a candidate whose payments have been terminated under paragraph (1)(B) may again receive payments (including amounts he would have received but for paragraph (1)(B)) if he receives 20 percent or more of the total number of votes cast for candidates of the same party in a primary election held after the date on which the election was held which was the basis for terminating payments to him.".

(c) The amendments made by this section shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3065) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for its administration by a Federal Election Commission appointed in accordance with the requirements of the Constitution, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House amendment to the text of the bill struck out all of the Senate bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House with an amendment which is a substitute for the Senate bill and the House amendment. The differences between the Senate bill, the House amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

SHORT TITLE

The Senate bill, the House amendment, and the conference substitute provide that this legislation may be cited as the "Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976".

AMENDMENTS TO FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION MEMBERSHIP

Senate bill

Section 101 of the Senate bill amended the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (hereinafter in this statement referred to as the "Act") to provide that the Federal Election Commission (hereinafter in this statement referred to as the "Commission") is to consist of the Secretary of the Senate, the Clerk of the House, both ex officio and without the right to vote, and 8 members appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. No more than 3 members of the Commission at any time may be affiliated with the same political party, and at least 2 members shall not be affiliated with any party.

The bill provided for 8-year terms for members with the terms of 2 members, not affiliated with the same political party, expiring every 2 years, beginning in 1977, so that members are not reappointed in an election year. Vacancies are filled only for the remainder of the term during which the vacancy occurred. Reappointment is to be made in the same manner as the appointment.

Section 101(c)(1) provided that the Commission has exclusive and primary jurisdiction with respect to the civil enforcement of the Federal Election Campaign Act and of the provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 relating to the public financing of presidential elections. This section also recited a reservation of congressional prerogatives reserved to the Congress under the Constitution.

Section 101(c)(2) provided that the Commission may not establish guidelines, initiate civil actions, render advisory opinions, make regulations, conduct investigations, or report apparent violations of law without an affirmative vote of 5 members of the Commission.

Section 101(d) of the Senate bill exempted Commission staff appointments from the provisions of title 5, United States Code, relating to the competitive service, classification, and General Schedule pay rates. This provision maintained the present exempt status of Commission appointments.

Section 101(e) related to the appointment of new members. It urged the expeditious appointment of new members, provided that the first appointments to the new Commission are not appointments to fill unexpired terms, provided that the terms of all the present members end when a majority of the new members are appointed and qualified, and gave statutory recognition to the limited power of the reconstituted Commission under the decision of the Supreme Court in Buckley v. Valeo (Nos. 75-436, 75-437, January 30, 1976).

Section 101(f) permitted the present members to be appointed to the new Commission by waiving the prohibition against the appointment of individuals to the Commission presently holding Federal office.

Section 101(g) of the Senate bill was designed to facilitate the transition between the Commission as presently constituted and the Commission as reconstituted by the Senate bill by providing for the transfer of personnel, liabilities, contracts, property, and records employed, held, or used primarily in connection with the functions of the Commission as presently constituted. It provided that the transfer of personnel from the old Commission to the new Commission would be without reduction in classification or compensation for one year after such transfer. Thus, no person's salary or position would be reduced solely because of the transfer. This provision does not bar a dismissal or reduction in salary by the Commission for reasons other than the transfer. This section also preserved all actions, suits, and other proceedings commenced by or against the Commission or any officer or employee thereof acting in his official capacity. It also preserved all orders, determinations, rules, advisory opinions, and opinions of counsel made, issued, or granted by the Commission before its reconstitution.

House amendment

Section 101(a)(1) amended section 309(a)(1) of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105 of the House amendment, to provide that the Commission is composed of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives ex officio and without the right to vote, and 6 members appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Section 101(a)(2) amended section 309(a)(1) of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105 of the House amendment, to provide that no more than 3 members of the Commission appointed by the President may be affiliated with the same political party.

Section 101(b) amended section 309(a) of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105, by rewriting paragraph (2). Section 309(a)(2)(A) provides that members of the Commission shall serve for terms of 6 years, except that members first appointed shall serve for staggered terms as designated by the President. In making such designations, the President may not appoint an individual affiliated with any political party for a term which expires 1 year after the term of another member affiliated with the same political party.

Section 309(a)(2)(B) provides that a member of the Commission may serve after the expiration of his term until his successor has taken office.

Section 309(a)(2)(C) provides that an individual appointed to fill a vacancy occurring other than by the expiration of a term of office may be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member he succeeds.

Section 309(a)(2)(D) provides that a vacancy in the Commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

Section 101(c)(1) amended section 309(a)(3) of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105 of the House amendment, to provide that members of the Commission shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. Members are given 1 year to terminate or liquidate any such activities.

Section 101(c)(2) amended section 309 of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105 of the House amendment, by rewriting subsection (b). Section 309(b)(1) requires the Commission to administer and formulate policy regarding the Act and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. The Commission is given exclusive primary jurisdiction regarding the civil enforcement of such provisions.

Section 309(b)(2) provides that the provisions of the Act do not limit, restrict, or diminish any investigatory, informational, oversight, supervisory, or disciplinary authority or function of the Congress or any committee of the Congress regarding elections to Federal office.

Section 101(c)(3) of the House amendment amended section 309(c) of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105 of the House amendment, to require an affirmative vote of 4 members of the Commission in order for the Commission to establish guidelines for compliance with the Act or with chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or for the Commission to take any action under (1) section 310(a)(6) of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105 of the House amendment, relating to the initiation of civil actions; (2) section 310(a)(7) of the Act, relating to the rendering of advisory opinions; (3) section 310(a)(8) of the Act, relating to prescribing forms and to rule-making authority; or (4) section 310(a)(10) of the Act, relating to investigations and hearings.

Section 101(d)(1) provided that the President shall appoint members of the Commission as soon as practicable after the date of the enactment of the House amendment. Subsection (d)(2) provided that the first appointments made by the President shall not be considered appointments to fill the unexpired terms of members serving on the Commission on the date of the enactment of the House amendment.

Subsection (d)(3) provided that members of the Commission serving on the date of the enactment of the House amendment may continue to serve as such members until members are appointed and qualified under section 309(a) of the Act, as amended by the House amendment, except that, beginning on March 1, 1976, they may exercise only such powers and functions as may be consistent with the determinations of the Supreme Court of the United States in Buckley v. Valeo.

Section 101(e) provided that members serving on the Commission on the date of the enactment of the House amendment shall not be subject to the provisions of section 309(a)(3) of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105 of the House amendment, which prohibit any member of the Commission from being an elected or appointed officer or employee of any branch of the Federal Government.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except as follows:

1. The provision relating to the staggered terms for members of the Commission first appointed is the same as the Senate bill, except that the provision relating to the expiration of terms on April 30, 1983, is omitted from the conference substitute.

2. With regard to the provision relating to members of the Commission engaging in any other business, vocation, or employment, the conferees agree that the requirement is intended to apply to members who devote a substantial portion of their time to such business, vocation, or employment activities. The conferees, however, do not intend the requirement to apply to the operation of a farm, for example, if a substantial portion of time is not devoted to such operation. The conferees further agree that the members of the Commission are expected to engage in their service on the Commission on a full-time basis, in order to prevent any conflicts of interest on the part of such members. It is the expectation of the conferees, for example, that members of the Commission would not participate in full-time law practices while serving on the Commission. The purpose of the 1-year period included in the conference substitute is to give members an opportunity to liquidate participation in such business, vocation, or employment activities.

3. The conference substitute provides that personnel of the Commission may be appointed without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, relating to the competitive service. Such personnel, however, are made subject to the classification and pay provisions of title 5, United States Code. The conferees agree that the Commission, in transmitting its budget requests to the Congress, would be required to include information relating to the number of persons employed by the Commission, the job descriptions of such persons, and grade classifications assigned to such persons for congressional review.

4. The conference substitute changes the provision of the House amendment relating to the authority of current members of the Commission to continue to serve on the Commission. The conference substitute clarifies that this provision will continue the authority of such current members until new members of the Commission are appointed and qualified. The conference substitute also provides that such current members may exercise only such powers and functions as may be consistent with Buckley v. Valeo beginning on March 23, 1976, rather than on March 1, 1976, as provided by the House amendment. The conference substitute makes such change in the date in order to conform to the extension granted by the Supreme Court regarding the expiration of the authority of the Commission to perform executive functions.

5. The conference substitute adopts the transfer provisions of the Senate bill except that the orders, determinations, rules, and opinions of the Commission made before its reconstitution under the amendments made by the conference substitute remain in effect if they are consistent with such amendments. The conferees agree that if any portion of an order, determination, rule, or opinion of the Commission is invalid under such amendments, the Commission must conform such portion to such amendments as required under section 108(b) of the conference substitute. The conference substitute also provides that any rule or regulation proposed by the Commission before the amendments made by the conference substitute take effect must be submitted to the Congress under the procedures described in section 315 of the Act, as added by the conference substitute.

6. Regarding the provision of the conference substitute which gives the Commission exclusive primary jurisdiction with respect to the civil enforcement of Federal election laws, the conferees agree with the discussion of the term "exclusive primary jurisdiction" included in the report of the Committee on House Administration (see page 4 of House Report No. 94–917).

Changes in Definitions in Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971

A. ELECTION

Senate bill

Section 102(a) of the bill amended the definition of "election" in section 301(a)(2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431(a)(2)), relating to nominating conventions and caucuses, by changing "held to nominate a candidate" in present law to "which has authority to nominate a candidate.".

House amendment

Section 102(a) of the House amendment amended section 301(a)(2) of the Act to provide that the term "election" includes any caucus or convention of a political party which has authority to nominate a candidate.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment and the Senate bill.

B. CONTRIBUTION

Senate bill

Section 102(b) of the Senate bill amended the definition of "contribution" in section 301(e)(2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431(e)(2)) where it says "contribution means a contract, promise, or agreement, expressed or implied, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution" by inserting the word "written" before the word "contract".

Section 102(c) amended the definition of "contribution" to exclude legal and accounting services rendered to or on behalf of the national committee of a political party (unless the person paying for such services is a person other than the employer of the individual rendering such services) which do not directly further the candidacy of a particular candidate. Also excluded are such services rendered to or on behalf of any candidate or political committee for the purpose of complying with the requirements of the Act and chapters 95 and 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (unless the person paying for such services is a person other than the employer of the individual rendering such services). The section requires the latter amounts paid or incurred to be reported and disclosed but permits them to be ignored in determining contribution and expenditure limitations.

Section 102(d) transferred from section 591(e)(1) of title 18, United States Code, the exception from the definition of contribution, for limitation purposes, a loan of money by a bank in the ordinary course of business. Such a loan would be required to be reported, however, as in existing law. Section 102(f)(3) did the same with respect to the definition of expenditure.

The Senate bill also provided that the $500 ceiling on activities under section 301(e)(5) of the Act would apply to activities by any person, rather than by any individual. The effect of this amendment would be to include partnerships, committees, associations, corporations, labor organizations, and other organizations or groups, as well as individuals, under the terms of the provision.

House amendment

Section 102(b) amended section 301(e)(2) of the Act to provide that a contract, promise, or agreement to make a contribution must be in writing in order to be considered a contribution. The House amendment also struck the phrase "expressed or implied" from section 301(e)(2), in order to conform to the requirement that the agreement be in writing.

Section 102(c)(1) amended section 301(e)(4) of the Act to provide that the definition of contribution shall not apply to (1) legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of the national committee of a political party, other than legal or accounting services attributable to any activity which directly furthers the election of a designated candidate for Federal office; or (2) legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of a candidate or political committee for the sole purpose of ensuring compliance with the Act, chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Subsection (c)(2) added a new clause (G) to section 301(e)(5) of the Act. Clause (G) provides that the term contribution shall not include a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value to a national committee or a State committee of a political party which is for the sole purpose of defraying any cost incurred for the construction or purchase of any office facility which is not acquired for the purpose of influencing the election of any candidate in any particular election for Federal office. Clause (G) requires that any such gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value, and any such cost, must be reported in accordance with section 304(b) of the Act.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except as follows:

1. The conference substitute includes a modified version of the provision of the Senate bill which provides that legal or accounting services are considered contributions if the person paying for the services is a person other than the "regular" employer of the individual rendering the services.

2. The conference substitute follows the Senate bill in requiring the reporting of such services when they are rendered to a candidate.

3. The conference substitute includes the amendment made by the Senate bill exempting bank loans made in the regular course of business from the definition of contributions except for reporting purposes.

4. The conference substitute includes the amendment made by the Senate bill to the limitation on certain exempt activities by individuals so that limit would apply to all persons rather than just to individuals.

5. The conference substitute provides that the term "contribution" does not include any honorarium within the meaning of section 328 of the Act, as amended by the conference substitute.

C. EXPENDITURE

Senate bill

Section 102(f) amended the definition of "expenditure" to exclude certain fund-raising costs and payments for legal and accounting services (under the circumstances discussed above). The exclusion of some fund-raising costs for purposes of the limits on expenditures by publicly financed presidential candidates conforms to present law and was made necessary by the transfer of the provisions setting forth those limits to the Act. Section 102(f) also excluded from the definition of "expenditure" for limitation purposes partisan activity designed to encourage individuals to register to vote, or to vote, conducted by the national committee of a political party, or a subordinate committee thereof, or the State committee of a national party. Such activity would, however, be required to be reported.

House amendment

Section 102(d)(1) amended section 301(f)(4) of the Act by adding a new clause (I). Clause (I) provides that the term "expenditure" does not include any costs incurred by a candidate in connection with any solicitation of contributions by the candidate. Clause (I) does not apply, however, to costs incurred by a candidate in excess of an amount equal to 20 percent of the applicable expenditure limitation under section 320(b) of the Act. All costs incurred by a candidate in connection with the solicitation of contributions shall be reported in accordance with section 304(b).

Subsection (d)(2) amended section 301(f)(4) of the Act by adding a new clause (F). Clause (F) provides that the term "expenditure" does not include the payment, by any person other than a candidate or a political committee, of compensation for (1) legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of the national committee of a political party, other than legal or accounting services attributable to any activity which directly furthers the election of a designated candidate for Federal office; or (2) legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of a candidate or political committee for the sole purpose of ensuring compliance with the Act, chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill, except that (1) the provision of the Senate bill relating to legal or accounting services is modified by the conference substitute to provide that legal or accounting services are considered expenditures if the person paying for the services is a person other than the "regular" employer of the individual rendering the services; and (2) the exclusion for partisan registration and get-out-the-vote activity is not retained in the conference substitute, resulting in no change in existing law.

D. OTHER DEFINITIONS

Senate bill

Section 102(g) of the Senate bill amended section 301 of the Act to define the term "Act" to mean the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, as amended by the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 and the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976.

House amendment

Section 102(e) amended section 301 of the Act by adding the following new definitions:

1. The term "Act" was defined to mean the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, as amended by the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 and the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976.

2. The term "independent expenditure" was defined to mean any expenditure by a person which expressly advocates the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, which is made without cooperation or consultation with any candidate, or any authorized committee or agent of the candidate, and which is not made in concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, any candidate, or any authorized committee or agent of the candidate.

3. The term "clearly identified" was defined to mean (a) the name of the candidate involved appears; (b) a photograph or drawing of the candidate appears; or (c) the identity of the candidate is apparent by unambiguous reference.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment. The conferees agree, with respect to the definition of the term "independent expenditure", that advocacy of the election or defeat of a candidate or a general request for assistance in a speech to a group of persons by itself should not be considered to be a "suggestion" that such persons make an expenditure to further such election or defeat. The definition of the term "independent expenditure" in the conference substitute is intended to be consistent with the discussion of independent political expenditures which was included in Buckley v. Valeo

Organization of Political Committees

Senate bill

Subsections (a) and (b) of section 103 of the Senate bill amended section 302 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 432(b)) to reduce the accounting and recordkeeping requirements applicable to political committees by requiring that records be kept only on contributions in excess of $100, instead of in excess of $10.

Section 103(c) struck out section 302(e) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 432(e)) which requires that notice of unauthorized activities by political committees be disclosed on the literature and advertisements circulated by those committees. The subject is covered by a new section 323 of the Act added by section 110 of the Senate bill.

House amendment

Section 103 of the House amendment amended section 302 of the Act by striking out subsection (e), relating to a requirement that political committees raising contributions or making expenditures on behalf of a candidate without being authorized to do so by the candidate must indicate this lack of authority on any campaign literature and campaign advertisements. Section 323 of the Act, as added by the House amendment, contains a similar provision.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill except that the conference substitute changes the recordkeeping requirements so that political committees must keep records only for contributions of $50 or more.

The conferees agree that where a political committee is not required to record the identity of the contributor of a particular contribution, and it does not do so, and if, as a result, such committee has no knowledge that this particular contribution, when aggregated with other contributions from the same contributor, amounts to over $100, the committee is not required to report the identity of such contributor under section 304 of the Act. If, however, a committee has knowledge of a contribution, the full reporting requirements of section 304 of the Act must be complied with.

Reports by Political Committees and Candidates

Senate bill

Section 104(a) of the Senate bill amended the reporting and disclosure provisions of section 304(a)(1) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(a)(1)) to provide that, in nonelection years, a candidate and his authorized committees must file quarterly reports only for quarters in which an aggregate of more than $5,000 in contributions, expenditures, or a combination thereof is received or spent. This provision does not affect the obligation to file year-end reports in nonelection years.

Section 104(b) amended section 304(a)(2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(a)(2)) to require that only political committees authorized by a candidate must file their reports with the candidate's principal campaign committee.

Section 104 (c) amended section 304(b) of the Act—

(1) to add a new requirement that political committees which are not authorized candidates' committees which make expenditures in excess of $100 to advocate expressly the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate report to the Commission whether the expenditure was intended to advocate the election or the defeat of a candidate and to certify to the Commission, under penalty of perjury, that the expenditure was not made in cooperation, consultation, or concert with a candidate's campaign nor was it made in response to a request or suggestion by the candidate or his agent; and

(2) to provide that when committee treasurers and candidates show that best efforts have been used to comply with the reporting requirements the treasurers and candidates are considered to have complied with the requirements of the Act.

Section 104(d) amended section 304(e) of the Act—

(1) to conform the independent expenditure reporting requirement contained in that subsection to the requirements of the Constitution set forth in Buckley v. Valeo with respect to the express advocacy of election or defeat of clearly identified candidates;

(2) to require corporations, labor organizations, and membership organizations which spend more than $1,000 per candidate per election to advocate the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate in communications with their stockholders or members or their families to report the expenditures to the Commission;

(3) to require a person whose contributions exceed a total of $100 during the calendar year to a separate segregated fund as a result of the special twice yearly solicitation by mail permitted under section 321 of the Act (as amended by the Senate bill) to notify the recipient when the total amount of his contributions exceeds $100; and

(4) to require the Commission to prepare and periodically issue indices of expenditures reported under section 304(e) on a candidate-by-candidate basis.

House amendment

Section 104(a) amended section 304(a)(1)(C) of the Act to provide that in any year in which a candidate is not on the ballot for election to Federal office, the candidate and his authorized committees must file a report not later than the tenth day after the close of any calendar quarter in which the candidate and his authorized committees received contributions or made expenditures which aggregate a total of more than $10,000. Each report must be complete as of the close of the calendar quarter, except that any report which must be filed after December 31 of any calendar year in which a report must be filed under section 304(a)(1)(B) shall be filed as provided in section 304(a)(1)(B).

Section 104(b) amended section 304(a) of the Act by rewriting paragraph (2). Paragraph (2) provides that each treasurer of a political committee authorized by a candidate to raise contributions or make expenditures on behalf of the candidate, other than the principal campaign committee of the candidate, must file reports with the principal campaign committee of the candidate (rather than with the Commission).

Section 104(c) amended section 304(b) of the Act by adding a new paragraph (13). Paragraph (13) requires each report to include, in the case of an independent expenditure in excess of $100 by a political committee, other than an authorized committee of a candidate, expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, through a separate schedule (1) any information required by section 304(b)(9), stated in a manner which indicates whether the independent expenditure is in support of, or in opposition to, a candidate; and (2) under penalty of perjury, certification whether the independent expenditure is made in cooperation, consultation, or concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of the candidate. If such expenditure is made with such cooperation, consultation, or concert, or as a result of such request or suggestion, it no longer would qualify as an independent expenditure.

Section 104(d) amended section 304 of the Act by rewriting subsection (e). Subsection (e)(1) requires every person (other than a political committee or a candidate) who makes independent expenditures of more than $100 in a calendar year to file a statement with the Commission containing the information required of a person who makes contributions of more than $100 to a candidate or political committee and the information required of a candidate or political committee receiving such a contribution.

Subsection (e)(2) provides that statements required by subsection (e) must be filed on dates for the filing of reports by political committees. The statements must include (1) the information required by section 304(b)(9), stated in a manner which indicates whether the contribution or independent expenditure is in support of, or in opposition to, a candidate; and (2) under penalty of perjury, certification whether the independent expenditure is made in cooperation, consultation, or concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, a candidate or any authorized committee or agent of the candidate.

Any independent expenditure, including independent expenditures described in section 304(b)(13), of $1,000 or more which is made after the fifteenth day, but more than 24 hours, before any election must be reported within 24 hours of the independent expenditure.

Subsection (e)(3) requires the Commission to prepare indices regarding expenditures made with respect to each candidate. The indices must be issued on a timely preelection basis.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except as follows:

1. With respect to quarterly reports in nonelection years, the conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill.

2. The conference substitute replaces the provision of the Senate bill relating to corporations, labor organizations, and other membership organizations issuing communications to their stockholders and members with an amendment to section 301(f)(4)(C) of the Act which—

(a) requires reporting of such communications devoted to express advocacy of the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate;

(b) provides that the cost of a communication will not be reportable if the communication is primarily devoted to subjects other than the advocacy of the election or defeat of a candidate; and

(c) applies only to costs which exceed $2,000 per election.

With respect to determining whether a communication is covered by this provision, the conferees intend that communications dealing primarily with subjects other than the express advocacy of the election or defeat of a candidate would not be covered. An editorial advocating the election or defeat of a candidate which appears in a regularly published newsletter which deals primarily with other subjects would not be a covered communication. This exclusion is designed to eliminate the difficult allocation problems that would otherwise have been presented. For the same reason, the conference substitute requires the reporting only of costs directly attributable to the express advocacy of the election or defeat of a candidate. The paper, stamps, etc. for a mimeographed covered communication would be reportable but not a share of the membership organization's building, mimeograph machine, etc., expenses.

The distribution of a reprint of the type of editorial described above would be a covered communication. Further, a special edition of a newsletter which primarily advocates the election or defeat of candidates would not be exempt from reporting.

The conferees also intend that the $2,000 limit on excluded communications would apply without regard to the number of candidates mentioned in the communication. If, for example, a communication refers to 3 candidates and the cost of the communication is $3,000, the person making the communication would not be permitted to allocate the cost on the basis of the number of candidates mentioned in the communication. Since the communication cost more than $2,000 it would be reported regardless of the number of candidates mentioned in the communication.

3. The conference substitute includes the provision of the Senate bill which stated that political committee treasurers and candidates would be considered to be in compliance with reporting requirements if they demonstrate that their best efforts have been used to obtain required information.

Reports by Certain Persons

Senate bill

Section 105 of the Senate bill amended ttitle III of the Act by striking out section 308, relating to reports by certain persons.

House amendment

Section 105 of the House amendment amended title III of the Act by striking out section 308, relating to reports by certain persons.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment and the Senate bill.

Campaign Depositories

Senate bill

No provision.

House amendment

Section 106 amended section 308(a)(1) of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105 of the House amendment, to provide that it is within the discretion of political committees to maintain one or more checking accounts at banks which they designate as campaign depositories.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except that it provides that political committees may maintain a single checking account and such other accounts as they may desire at banks which they designate as campaign depositories. It is the intent of the conferees that the term "such other accounts", as it appears in the conference substitute, includes checking accounts, savings accounts, certificates of deposit, and other accounts.

POWERS OF COMMISSION

Senate bill

Section 106 of the Senate bill amended section 310 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437d) and added to the Commission's powers of authority to formulate general policy, prescribe forms and regulations, the power to bring civil actions to enforce the provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 relating to public financing of presidential elections. This section also provides that, with the exception of actions brought by an individual aggrieved by an action by the Commission, the power of the Commission to initiate civil actions is the exclusive civil remedy for the enforcement of the provisions of the Act.

House amendment

Section 107(a) amended section 310(a) of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105 of the House amendment, by combining paragraph (10) with paragraph (8). Paragraph (10) relates to the authority of the Commission to develop forms for the filing of reports.

Section 107(b)(1) amended section 310(a) of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105 of the House amendment, by rewriting paragraph (6). Paragraph (6) gives the Commission authority to initiate, defend, and appeal civil actions.

Subsection (b)(2) amended section 310 of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105 of the House amendment, by adding a new subsection (e) which provides that the civil action authority of the Commission is the exclusive civil remedy for enforcing the Act, except for actions which may be brought under section 313(a)(9) of the Act, as added by the House amendment.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment and the Senate bill.

ADVISORY OPINIONS

Senate bill

No provision.

House amendment

Section 108(a) amended section 312 of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105 of the House amendment, by rewriting subsection (a).

Subsection (a) provides that the Commission shall render a written advisory opinion upon the written request of any individual holding a Federal office, any candidate for Federal office, any political committee, or any national committee of a political party. Any such advisory opinion must be rendered within a reasonable time after the request is made and shall indicate whether a specific transaction or activity would constitute a violation of the Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. Subsection (a) prohibits the Commission or any of its employees from issuing any advisory opinion except in accordance with the provisions of section 312.

Section 108(b) amended section 312 of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105, by rewriting subsection (b). Subsection (b)(1) provides that any person who relies on an advisory opinion and who acts in good faith in accordance with the advisory opinion may not be penalized under the Act or under chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 as the result of any such action.

Subsection (b)(2) provides that an advisory opinion may be relied upon by (1) any person involved in the transaction or activity with respect to which the advisory opinion is rendered; and (2) any person involved in any similar transaction or activity.

The Commission is required to transmit to the Congress proposed rules and regulations based on an advisory opinion of general applicability if the transaction or activity involved is not already covered by any rule or regulation of the Commission. Any rule or regulation which the Commission proposes under subsection (b) is subject to the congressional review procedures of section 315(c) of the Act.

Section 108(c) made a conforming amendment to section 315(c)(1) of the Act.

Section 108(d) provided that the amendments made by section 108 apply to any advisory opinion rendered by the Commission after October 15, 1974.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except as follows:

1. The conference substitute provides that an advisory opinion shall relate to the application of a general rule of law which is stated in the Act or chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or which already has been prescribed as a rule or regulation, to a specific fact situation.

2. The conference substitute provides that general rules of law may be initially proposed by the Commission only as rules and regulations subject to congressional review and disapproval and not through the advisory opinion procedure.

3. Thus, under the conference substitute, if the request for an advisory opinion does not state a specific fact situation and if such request would necessarily require the Commission to state a general rule of law which is not set forth in a prescribed rule or regulation, the Commission could not issue the opinion requested.

4. While the rules just stated govern all opinions of an advisory nature, these provisions do not preclude the distribution by the Commission of other information consistent with the Act.

5. The conference substitute provides that a person involved in a transaction or activity other than a transaction or activity with respect to which an advisory opinion has been rendered may rely upon such advisory opinion only if the transaction or activity in which such person is involved is indistinguishable in all its material aspects from the transaction or activity with respect to which the advisory opinion was rendered.

6. The provision of the House amendment which required the Commission to submit advisory opinions of general applicability to the Congress as proposed rules and regulations is not included in the conference substitute.

7. The provision of the House amendment which made the amendments applicable to any advisory opinion rendered after October 15, 1974, is not included in the conference substitute. Section 101(g)(3) of the conference substitute requires that advisory opinions in effect on the date of the enactment of the conference substitute must be conformed to amendments made by the conference substitute. (See the discussion of section 101(g)(3) of the conference substitute in this statement.)

8. The conference substitute provides that the Commission shall, no later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of the conference substitute, conform advisory opinions in effect before such effective date to the requirements established by the amendments made by the conference substitute. The provisions of section 312(b) of the Act, as added by the conference substitute, relating to good faith reliance upon advisory opinions, will apply to advisory opinions in effect before the date of the enactment of the conference substitute after such advisory opinions have been conformed in accordance with the requirements of the conference substitute.

Enforcement

Senate bill

Section 107 of the Senate bill amended the enforcement provisions of section 313 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437g). Under the amendments made by section 107 of the Senate bill the Commission can investigate a complaint only if the complaint is signed and sworn to by the person filing the complaint and the complaint is notarized. The Commission may not conduct any investigation solely on the basis of an anonymous complaint. The Commission must conduct all investigations expeditiously and afford the person who receives notice of the investigation a reasonable opportunity to show that no action should be taken against such person by the Commission.

If, after investigation, the Commission determines that there is reason to believe a violation of the Act or of the public financing provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has been committed, or is about to be committed, it is required to make every endeavor to correct or prevent the violation by informal methods prior to instituting any civil action.

If the Commission enters into a conciliation agreement with a person, it is prohibited from bringing a civil action or recommending prosecution to the Justice Department with respect to that violation as long as the conciliation agreement is not violated. If the Commission is unable to correct the violation informally, it is authorized to bring a civil action. The Commission may refer a violation directly to the Attorney General without going through the voluntary compliance procedure if it determines there is probable cause to believe that a knowing and willful violation involving the making, receiving, or reporting of any contribution or expenditure having a value in the aggregate of $1,000 or more in any calendar year has occurred or that a knowing and willful violation of the public financing provisions of the Internal Revenue Code has occurred.

The Commission is authorized, as part of a conciliation agreement, to require that a person pay a civil penalty of $10,000 or 3 times the amount involved, whichever is greater, when it believes there is clear and convincing proof that a knowing and willful violation has occurred. The Commission is further authorized to require the payment of a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of $5,000 or an amount equal to the amount of the contribution or expenditure involved if it believes a violation has been committed.

The Commission is required to make public the results of any conciliation attempt as well as the provisions of any conciliation agreement.

In any civil action brought by the Commission where the Commission establishes through clear and convincing proof that the person involved in the action committed a knowing and willful violation of law, the court is authorized to impose a civil penalty of $10,000 or 3 times the amount of the contribution or expenditure involved, whichever is greater. The court is also authorized to impose a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of $5,000 or an amount equal to the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved where the violation is not a knowing and willful violation. The Commission may institute a civil action if it believes there has been a violation of any provision of a conciliation agreement.

A person aggrieved by the Commission's dismissal of his complaint, or by the Commission's failure to act on the complaint within 90 days after it was filed, may petition the United States District Court for the District of Columbia for relief. The petition must be filed with the court within 60 days after the dismissal of the complaint or within 60 days after the end of the 90-day period during which no action was taken. The court may direct the Commission to proceed on the complaint within 30 days after the court's decision. If the Commission fails to take action within that period, the complainant may bring an action to remedy the violation complained of.

House amendment

Section 109 of the House amendment amended title III of the Act by rewriting section 313, as so redesignated by section 105 of the House amendment.

Section 313(a)(1) permits any person who believes that the Act or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has been violated to file a written complaint with the Commission. The complaint must be notarized and signed and sworn to by the person filing the complaint. The person shall be subject to the provisions of section 1001 of title 18, United States Code (relating to false or fraudulent statements).

The Commission is prohibited from conducting any investigation, or taking any other action, solely on the basis of an anonymous complaint.

Subsection (a)(2) provides that, if the Commission has reasonable cause to believe that a person has violated the Act or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the Commission is required to notify the person and to conduct an investigation of the violation.

Subsection (a)(3) requires the Commission to conduct any investigation expeditiously and to include in the investigation an additional investigation of any reports and statements filed with the Commission by the complainant involved, if the complainant is a candidate for Federal office. Subsection (a)(3) prohibits the Commission and any person from making public any investigation or any notification made under subsection (a)(2) without the written consent of the person receiving the notification or the person under investigation.

Subsection (a)(4) requires the Commission, upon request, to permit any person who receives notification under subsection (a)(2) to demonstrate that the Commission should not take any action against such person under the Act.

Subsection (a)(5) requires the Commission to seek to correct or prevent any violation of the Act by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion during the 30-day period after the Commission determines there is reasonable cause to believe that a violation has occurred or is about to occur. The Commission also is required to seek to enter into a conciliation agreement with the person involved in such violation. If, however, the Commission has reasonable cause to believe that—

(1) a person has failed to file a report required under section 304(a)(1)(C) of the Act for the calendar quarter ending immediately before the date of a general election;

(2) a person has failed to file a report required to be filed no later than 10 days before an election; or

(3) on the basis of a complaint filed less than 45 days but more than 10 days before an election, a person has committed a knowing and willful violation of the Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954;

the Commission shall seek to informally correct the violation and to enter into a conciliation agreement with the person involved for a period of not less than one-half the number of days between the date upon which the Commission determines that there is reasonable cause to believe a violation has occurred and the date of the election involved.

Any conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission and a person involved in a violation shall constitute a complete bar to any further action by the Commission, unless the person involved violates the conciliation agreement.

Subsection (a)(5) also provides that the Commission may institute a civil action for relief if the Commission is unable to correct or prevent a violation by informal methods and if the Commission determines there is probable cause to believe that the violation has occurred or is about to occur. The relief sought in any civil action may include a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or any other appropriate order, including a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of $5,000 or an amount equal to the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in the violation. The civil action may be brought in the district court of the United States for the district in which the person against whom the action is brought is found, resides, or transacts business.

The court involved shall grant the relief sought by the Commission in a civil action brought by the Commission upon a proper showing that the person involved has engaged or is about to engage in a violation of the Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Subsection (a)(5) also permits the Commission to refer an apparent violation to the Attorney General of the United States if the Commission determines that there is probable cause to believe that a knowing and willful violation subject to and as defined in section 328 of the Act has occurred or is about to occur. In order for such a referral to be made, the violation or violations must involve the making, receiving, or reporting of any contribution or expenditure having a value, in the aggregate, of $1,000 or more during a calendar year. The Commission is not required to engage in any informal conciliation efforts before making any such referral.

Subsection (a)(6) permits the Commission to include a civil penalty in a conciliation agreement if the Commission believes that there is clear and convincing proof that a knowing and willful violation of the Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has occurred. The civil penalty may not exceed the greater of (1) $10,000; or (2) an amount equal to 200 percent of the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in the violation. If the Commission believes that a violation has occurred which is not a knowing and willful violation, the conciliation agreement may require the person involved to pay a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of (1) $5,000; or (2) an amount equal to the amount of the contribution or expenditure involved in the violation.

Subsection (a)(6) also requires the Commission to make available to the public (1) the results of any conciliation efforts made by the Commission, including any conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission; and (2) any determination by the Commission that a person has not committed a violation of the Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Subsection (a)(7) permits a court to impose a civil penalty greater than that permitted by subsection (a)(5) in any civil action for relief brought by the Commission if the court determines that there is clear and convincing proof that a person has committed a knowing and willful violation of the Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. The civil penalty may not exceed the greater of (1) $10,000; or (2) an amount equal to 200 percent of the contribution or expenditure involved in the violation.

In any case in which a person against whom the court imposes a civil penalty has entered into a conciliation agreement with the Commission, the Commission may bring a civil action if it believes that the person has violated the conciliation agreement. The Commission may obtain relief if it establishes that the person has violated, in whole or in part, any requirement of the conciliation agreement.

Subsection (a)(8) provides that subpenas for witnesses in civil actions in any United States district court may run into any other district.

Subsection (a)(9) permits any party to file a petition with the United States District Court for the District of Columbia if the party is aggrieved by an order of the Commission dismissing a complaint filed by the party or by a failure on the part of the Commission to act on the complaint within 90 days after the complaint is filed. The petition must be filed (1) in the case of a dismissal by the Commission, no later than 60 days after the dismissal; or (2) in the case of a failure on the part of the Commission to act on the complaint, no later than 60 days after the initial 90-day period.

The court may declare that the dismissal or failure to act is contrary to law and may direct the Commission to take any action consistent with the declaration no later than 30 days after the court makes the declaration. If the Commission fails to act during the 30-day period, the party who filed the original complaint may bring in his own name a civil action to remedy the violation involved.

Subsection (a)(10) provides that any judgment of a district court may be appealed to the court of appeals. Any judgment of a court of appeals which affirms or sets aside, in whole or in part, any order of the district court shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

Subsection (a)(11) provides that any action brought under subsection (a) shall be advanced on the docket of the court involved and put ahead of all other actions, other than actions brought under subsection (a) or under section 314.

Subsection (a)(12) permits the Commission to petition a court for an order to adjudicate a person in civil contempt if the Commission determines after an investigation that the person has violated an order of the court entered in a proceeding brought under subsection (a)(5). If the Commission believes that the violation is a knowing and willful violation, the Commission may petition the court for an order to adjudicate the person in criminal contempt.

Section 313(b) requires the Attorney General to report to the Commission regarding apparent violations referred to the Attorney General by the Commission. The reports must be transmitted to the Commission no later than 60 days after the date of the referral, and at the close of every 30-day period thereafter until there is final disposition. The Commission may from time to time prepare and publish reports relating to the status of such referrals.

Section 313(c) imposes a penalty against any member of the Commission, any employee of the Commission, or any other person who reveals the identity of any person under investigation in violation of section 313(a)(3)(B). Any such member, employee, or other person is subject to a fine of not more than $2,000 for any such violation. If the violation is knowing and willful the maximum fine is $5,000.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except as follows:

1. The conference substitute provides that the Commission may investigate a violation only if it receives a properly verified complaint and it has reason to believe a violation has occurred, or if the Commission, based on information obtained in the normal course of carrying out its duties under the Act, has reason to believe a violation has occurred. The conferees agree that any person, including a member or employee of the Commission, may file a verified complaint, and agree also that the Commission may not react solely to an anonymous source for the purpose of instituting an investigation of an alleged violation of the Act or of chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

2. The conference substitute follows the Senate bill with respect to affording a person against whom a complaint has been made an opportunity to show that no action should be taken.

3. The conferees agree that if the Commission reaches an agreement with any person regarding an alleged violation, such agreement should be made available to the public immediately so that the 30-day conciliation period, otherwise required by the Act, is immediately terminated.

4. The conference substitute makes the referral procedures for knowing and willful violations applicable to violations of chapters 95 and 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

5. The conferees agree that a conciliation agreement shall be a complete bar to any further action by the Commission only with respect to any violation which is a subject of the conciliation agreement.

6. The conferees' intent is that a violation within the meaning of section 313(c) occurs when publicity is given to a pending investigation, but does not occur when actions taken in carrying out an investigation lead to public awareness of the investigation.

Conversion of Contributions to Personal Use

Senate bill

Section 107A of the Senate bill amended section 317 of the Act to provide that excess contributions received by a candidate, and amounts contributed to an individual to support his activities as a Federal office holder, which, under existing law, may be used for certain purposes, may not be converted to any personal use.

House amendment

No provision.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, resulting in no change in existing law.

Duties of Commission

Senate bill

Section 108(a) of the Senate bill amended section 315(a)(6) of the Act to require the Commission to maintain a separate cumulative index of multicandidate political committee reports and statements to enable the public to determine which political committees are qualified to make $5,000 contributions to candidates or their authorized committees.

Section 108(b) amended present law to provide for a 15-legislative-day or 30-calendar-day period, whichever is later, during which a proposed rule or regulation must be disapproved, as set forth in 2 U.S.C. 438(c)(2).

House amendment

Section 110(a)(1) amended section 315(a)(6) of the Act, as so redesignated by section 105 of the House amendment, to require the Commission to compile and maintain a separate cumulative index of reports and statements filed by the political committees supporting more than one candidate. The index must include a listing of the date of registration of such political committees and the date upon which such political committees qualify to make expenditures under section 320(a)(2) of the Act. The Commission was required to revise the index on the same basis and at the same time as other cumulative indices required under section 315(a)(6).

Section 110(a)(2) amended section 315(a)(8) of the Act to require the Commission to give priority to auditing and conducting field investigations requiring the verification for, and the receipt and use of, any payments received by a candidate under chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Section 110(b) amended section 315(c)(2) of the Act to provide that the Congress may disapprove proposed rules and regulations of the Commission in whole or in part. The amendment also provided that, whenever a committee of the House of Representatives reports any resolution relating to a proposed rule or regulation of the Commission, it is in order at any time (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. The motion is highly privileged and is not debatable. An amendment to the motion is not in order, and it is not in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to. Although the motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution is not debatable, debate may be conducted with respect to the contents of the resolution.

Section 110(c) amended section 315 of the Act by adding a new subsection (e). Subsection (e) provides that, in any civil or criminal proceeding to enforce the Act or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, no rule, regulation, guideline, advisory opinion, opinion of counsel, or any other pronouncement by the Commission or by any member, officer, or employee of the Commission may be used against the person against whom the proceeding is brought. No such rule, regulation, guideline, advisory opinion, opinion of counsel, or other pronouncement (1) shall have the force of law; (2) may be used to create any presumption of violation or of criminal intent; (3) shall be admissible in evidence against the person involved; or (4) may be used in any other manner. The provisions of subsection (e) do not apply to any rule or regulation of the Commission which takes effect under section 315(c).

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except as follows:

1. The conference substitute provides that, for purposes of reviewing regulations proposed by the Commission, the Congress may disapprove any provision or series of interrelated provisions which states a single separable rule of law.

The conferees agree that this provision does not give the Congress the power to revise proposed regulations by disapproving a particular word, phrase, or sentence, but only gives each House of the Congress the power to determine which proposed regulations of the Commission constitute distinct regulations which can only be disapproved in whole. This provision is intended to permit disapproval of discrete self-contained sections or subdivisions of proposed regulations and is not intended to permit the rewriting of regulations by piecemeal changes.

2. The conference substitute does not include the provision in the House amendment which makes rules, regulations, guidelines, advisory opinions, opinions of counsel, and other Commission pronouncements inapplicable in any civil or criminal proceeding, thereby resulting in no change in existing law.

Additional Enforcement Authority

Senate bill

Section 109 of the Senate bill repealed section 407 of the Act, relating to additional enforcement authority.

House amendment

Section 111 amended section 407(a) of the Act to establish conciliation procedures regarding the enforcement of section 407. The amendment provided that, if a candidate for Federal office fails to file a report required by title III of the Act, the Commission shall (1) make every effort for a period of not less than 30 days to correct the failure by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion; or (2) in the case of any failure to file which occurs less than 45 days before the date of an election, make every effort to correct the failure by informal methods for a period of not less than one-half the number of days between the date of the failure and the date of the election.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill.

Mass Mailings as Franked Mail

Senate bill

Section 110 of the Senate bill amended section 318 of the Act, as redesignated by section 105 of the Senate bill, to provide that Members of the Congress are prohibited from mailing as franked mail any general mass mailing less than 60 days before an election. The term "general mass mailing" was defined to mean newsletters and similar mailings of more than 500 pieces with similar content mailed at the same time or different times.

Section 501 of the Senate bill amended section 3210(a)(5)(D) of title 39, United States Code, to change the 28-day provision relating to franked mass mailings before an election to 60 days.

House amendment

No provision.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, resulting in no change in existing law.

CONTRIBUTION AND EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS; OTHER PROHIBITIONS; PENALTIES

A. LIMITATIONS ON CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

Senate bill

Section 110 of the Senate bill added a new section 320 to the Act relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures. The text of this section is substantially similar to the provisions presently contained in section 608 of title 18, United States Code, which is transferred to the Act by this section, with some changes in the law to provide additional limitations on certain contributions by persons and by political committees.

(1) A person (as defined in the Act), including a political committee which does not qualify for the $5,000 contribution limit as a multicandidate political committee, may not contribute more than $1,000 per election to any candidate for Federal office. As under present law, earmarked contributions, and contributions made to a candidate's authorized political committees, are considered to be contributions to that candidate rather than contributions to that committee. A person also may not make contributions to any political committee established and maintained by a political party, which is not the authorized political committee of any candidate, which in the aggregate exceed $25,000 in a calendar year. A person is further prohibited from making contributions to any other political committee which in the aggregate exceed $5,000 in a calendar year.

(2) A political committee which has been registered as such for at least 6 months, which has received contributions from more than 50 persons, and which has made contributions to 5 or more candidates for Federal office, defined as a "multicandidate political committee", may contribute a total of $5,000 to a Federal candidate and his authorized political committee in any election campaign. A multicandidate political committee may not make contributions to any political committee established and maintained by a political party, which is not the authorized committee of any candidate, which in the aggregate exceed $25,000 in a calendar year. A multicandidate political committee is further prohibited from making contributions to any other political committee which in the aggregate exceed $10,000 in a calendar year. (The above limitations on contributions by multicandidate political committees do not apply to transfers between and among political committees which are national, State, district, or local committees of the same political party.)

(3) The section contains a provision establishing a rule which treats, for purposes of the foregoing limitations, as a single political committee, all political committees which are established, financed, maintained, or controlled by a single person or group of persons. This rule, however, does not apply to transfers of funds between political committees raised in joint fundraising efforts. It would also not apply so that contributions made by a political party through a single national committee and contributions by that party through a single State committee in each State are treated as having been made by a single political committee. The above rule, which is intended to curtail the vertical proliferation of political committee contributions, would not preclude, however, a political committee of a national organization from contributing to a candidate or committee merely because of its affiliation with a national multicandidate political committee which has made the maximum contribution it is permitted to make to a candidate or a committee.

(4) As in existing law, an individual may not make contributions totaling more than $25,000 during any calendar year.

(5) This section also establishes rules for determining when a contribution made to a political committee is considered to be a contribution to a candidate, and when certain expenditures shall be considered to be contributions to a candidate, and subject to the limitations of the Act.

(6) The remaining provisions of this section transfer into the Act those provisions of 18 U.S.C. 608 which imposed expenditure limitations on presidential candidates, conditioning their application, in accordance with the Supreme Court's decision in Buckley v. Valeo, upon the acceptance of public financing. The expenditure limitations on national and State committees of political parties in 18 U.S.C 608(f) are also transferred into the Act.

(7) A final provision in new section 320 of the Act permits the Republican or Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, or the national committee of a political party, or any combination of such committees, notwithstanding any other provision of the Act, to contribute amounts totaling not more than $20,000 to a candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to the United States Senate during the year in which an election is held in which he is such a candidate.

House amendment

Section 112(a) amended title III of the Act by striking out section 320, as so redesignated by section 105 of the House amendment, and by adding new sections 320 through 328.

Section 320(a)(1) prohibits any person from making contributions (1) to any candidate in connection with any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $1,000; or (2) to any political committee in any calendar year which exceed, in the aggregate, $1,000.

Subsection (a)(2) prohibits any political committee (other than a principal campaign committee) from making contributions to (1) any candidate in connection with any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000; or (2) any political committee in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000. Contributions by the national committee of a political party serving as the principal campaign committee of a presidential candidate may not exceed the limitation described in the preceding sentence with respect to any other candidate for Federal office.

The term "political committee" was defined to mean an organization which (1) is registered as a political committee under section 303 of the Act for a period of not less than 6 months; (2) has received contributions from more than 50 persons; and (3) except for any State political party organization, has made contributions to 5 or more candidates for Federal office.

Subsection (a) (2) also provides that, for purposes of the limitations provided by subsection (a) (1) and subsection (a) (2), all contributions made by political committees which are established, financed, maintained, or controlled by any corporation, labor organization, or any other person (including any parent, subsidiary, branch, division, department, or local unit of such corporation, labor organization, or any other person), or by any group of such persons, shall be considered to have been made by a single political committee, except that (1) the amendment made by the House amendment does not limit transfers between political committees of funds raised through joint fundraising efforts; and (2) for purposes of the limitations provided by subsection (a) (1) and subsection (a) (2), all contributions made by a single political committee which is established, financed, maintained, or controlled by a national committee of a political party and by a single political committee established, financed, maintained, or controlled by the State committee of a political party, shall not be considered to have been made by a single political committee.

Subsection (a) (2) also provides that, in any case in which a corporation and any of its subsidiaries, branches, divisions, departments, or local units, or a labor organization and any of its subsidiaries, branches, divisions, departments, or local units establish, finance, maintain, or control more than one separate segregated fund, all such funds shall be treated as a single separate segregated fund for purposes of the limitations provided by subsection (a) (1) and subsection (a) (2).

Subsection (a) (3) prohibits any individual from making contributions which, in the aggregate, exceed $25,000 in any calendar year. Any contribution which is made to a candidate in a year other than the calendar year in which the election involved is held, is considered to be made during the calendar year in which the election is held.

Subsection (a) (4) provides that (1) any contribution to a named candidate which is made to any political committee authorized by the candidate to accept contributions on behalf of the candidate shall be considered to be contributions made to the candidate; (2) any expenditure which is made by any person in cooperation, consultation, or concert, with, or at the request or suggestion of, a candidate or any authorized political committee or agent of the candidate shall be considered to be a contribution to the candidate; (3) any expenditure to finance publication of any campaign broadcast or any other campaign materials prepared by a candidate or any authorized political committee or agency of the candidate shall be considered to be a contribution to that candidate; and (4) contributions made to a vice presidential nominee shall be considered to be contributions to the presidential nominee of the party involved.

Subsection (a) (5) provides that the contribution limitations established by subsection (a) (1) and subsection (a) (2) shall apply separately to each election, except that all elections in any calendar year for the office of President (except a general election for such office) shall be considered to be one election.

Subsection (a) (6) provides that all contributions made by a person on behalf of a particular candidate, including contributions which are earmarked or directed through an intermediary or conduit to such candidate, shall be treated as contributions from the person involved to the candidate. The intermediary or conduit is required to report the original source of the contribution and the intended recipient of the contribution to the Commission and to report the original source of the contribution to the intended recipient. This provision is identical to existing law.

Section 320(b)(1) prohibits any candidate for the office of President who has established his eligibility to receive payments under section 9003 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 or under section 9033 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 from making expenditures in excess of (1) $10,000,000, in the case of a campaign for nomination for election to the office of President; or (2) $20,000,000 in the case of a campaign for election to the office of President. In the case of campaigns for nomination, the aggregate of expenditures in any one State may not exceed twice the greater of (1) 8 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State; or (2) $100,000.

Subsection (b)(2) provides that (1) expenditures made by a vice-presidential nominee shall be considered to be expenditures made by the presidential nominee of the same political party; and (2) an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate if it is made by (A) a committee or agent of the candidate authorized to make expenditures; or (B) any person authorized or requested by the candidate or an authorized committee or agent of the candidate to make the expenditure involved.

Section 320(c)(1) provides that, at the beginning of each calendar year (beginning in 1976), as there become available necessary data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Commission the percentage difference between the price index from the 12-month period preceding the calendar year and the price index for the base period. The term "price index" is defined to mean the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average), and the term "base period" is defined to mean the calendar year 1974. Each limitation established by section 320(b) and section 320(d) shall be increased by such percentage difference.

Section 320(d)(1) provides that the national committee of a political party and a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may make expenditures in connection with the general election campaign of candidates for Federal office.

Subsection (d)(2) provides that the national committee of a political party may not make expenditures in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate for the office of President which exceed an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States. Any expenditures under subsection (d)(2) are considered as an addition to expenditures by a national committee of a political party which is serving as the principal campaign committee of a candidate for the office of President.

Subsection (d)(3) provides that the national committee of a political party and that the State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may each make expenditures in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate for Federal office in any State which do not exceed (1) in the case of candidates for election to the office of Senator (or of Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative), the greater of (A) 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State; or (B) $20,000; and (2) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner in any other State, $10,000.

Section 320(e) requires the Secretary of Commerce, during the first week of January 1975, and each subsequent year, to certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, of each State, and of each congressional district, as of the first day of July next preceding the date of certification. The term "voting age population" was defined to mean resident population, 18 years of age or older.

Section 320(f) prohibits candidates and political committees from knowingly accepting any contribution or knowingly making any expenditure in violation of section 320. Subsection (f) also prohibits any officer or employee of a political committee from knowingly accepting a contribution made to a candidate, or knowingly making an expenditure on behalf of a candidate in violation of section 320.

Section 320(g) requires the Commission to prescribe rules under which expenditures by a candidate for presidential nomination for use in 2 or more States shall be attributed to the expenditure limits of such candidate in each State involved. The attribution shall be based on the voting age population in each State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by the expenditure.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill with regard to limitations on contributions by any person and by any multicandidate political committee, except as follows:

1. Each person may contribute not more than $20,000 in a calendar year to the political committees established and maintained by a national political party and which are not authorized political committees of candidates.

2. A multicandidate political committee may contribute only $15,000 in a calendar year to the political committees established and maintained by a national political party (other than authorized candidates' committees) and $5,000 in a calendar year to any other political committee.

The conferees' decision to impose more precisely defined limitations on the amount an individual may contribute to a political committee, other than a candidate's committees, and to impose new limits on the amount a person or a multicandidate committee may contribute to a political committee, other than candidates' committees, is predicated on the following considerations: first, these limits restrict the opportunity to circumvent the $1,000 and $5,000 limits on contributions to a candidate; second, these limits serve to assure that candidates' reports reveal the root source of the contributions the candidate has received; and third, these limitations minimize the adverse impact on the statutory scheme caused by political committees that appear to be separate entities pursuing their own ends, but are actually a means for advancing a candidate's campaign. The conferees also determined that it is appropriate to set a higher limit on contributions from persons to political committees of national political parties in order to allow the political parties to fulfill their unique role in the political process. In this connection, the term "political committee established or maintained by a national political party" includes the Senate and House Campaign Committees.

The conferees also agree that the same limitations on contributions that apply to a candidate shall also apply to a committee making expenditures solely on behalf of such candidate.

The conference substitute is the same as the provision of the House amendment which states that segregated funds established or controlled by a corporation and its subsidiaries or by a labor organization and its local organizations are considered to be one segregated fund.

The anti-proliferation rules established by the conference substitute are intended to prevent corporations, labor organizations, or other persons or groups of persons from evading the contribution limits of the conference substitute. Such rules are described as follows:

1. All of the political committees set up by a single corporation and its subsidiaries are treated as a single political committee.

2. All of the political committees set up by a single international union and its local unions are treated as a single political committee.

3. All of the political committees set up by the AFL–CIO and all its State and local central bodies are treated as a single political committee.

4. All the political committees established by the Chamber of Commerce and its State and local Chambers are treated as a single political committee.

5. The anti-proliferation rules stated also apply in the case of multiple committees established by a group of persons.

These anti-proliferation rules, however, permit political committees which solicit contributions in their joint names, and on the understanding that the money collected through that joint fundraising effort will be divided among the participating committees, to make such a division. In adddition, for the purpose of these rules, contributions to a candidate or to a political committee by the political committees of a national committee of a political party or by the political committees of a State committee of a political party are treated separately and are not regarded as contributions by one committee.

The conference substitute provides that the limitations on contributions under section 320 do not limit transfer of funds between the principal campaign committee of a candidate for nomination or election to a Federal office and the principal campaign committee of the same candidate for nomination or election to another Federal office if the transfer is not made when the candidate is actively seeking nomination or election to both such offices, the transfer would not result in a violation, for any person who has contributed to both such committees, of the limitations on contributions by a person to such a principal campaign committee, and the candidate has not accepted any public campaign financing funds.

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment with regard to applying contribution limitations to each separate election.

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment and the Senate bill with regard to an overall limitation of $25,000 on contributions by an individual in a calendar year and with regard to defining "contribution".

This definition distinguishes between independent expressions of an individual's views and the use of an individual's resources to aid a candidate in a manner indistinguishable in substance from the direct payment of cash to a candidate.

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment and the Senate bill with regard to contributions made through intermediaries.

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment and the Senate bill regarding limitations on expenditures by a candidate who is eligible to receive public campaign financing funds, except that the conference substitute uses the language of the Senate bill with regard to the eligibility requirement.

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment and the Senate bill with regard to political party expenditures on behalf of the party's candidates. This limited permission allows the political parties to make contributions in kind by spending money for certain functions to aid the individual candidates who represent the party during the election process. Thus, but for this subsection, these expenditures would be covered by the contribution limitations stated in subsections (a) (1) and (a) (2) of this provision.

The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill with regard to contributions by the Republican or Democratic senatorial campaign committee, except that the amount of such contributions is limited to $17,500 per candidate.

It is the conferees' intent that the additional calendar year contribution limitations imposed by section 320 of the Act shall apply in the first instance to the period beginning on the date of the enactment of the conference substitute and extending through December 31, 1976. Thereafter, of course, the term "calendar year" will be accorded its normal meaning.

B. CONTRIBUTIONS OR EXPENDITURES BY NATIONAL BANKS, CORPORATIONS, OR LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

Senate bill

Section 610 of title 18, United States Code, prohibiting contributions by corporations and labor organizations, was transferred by the Senate bill from title 18 to the Act as new section 321 of the Act. The following changes from existing law are noted:

(1) The penalty provisions are removed from the section and replaced by a general penalty provision contained in a new section 328 of the Act which includes a separate provision making it a felony to violate the anticoercion provisions of this section. Violations of this section would also be subject to the civil enforcement powers of the Commission and the courts under the Senate bill.

(2) Corporations are prohibited from soliciting contributions from persons who are not stockholders, executive or administrative personnel, or the families of such persons, and labor organizations are prohibited from soliciting contributions from persons other than members of the organization and their families. The term "executive or administrative personnel" is defined as individuals who are paid by salary rather than on an hourly basis, and who have policymaking or supervisory responsibilities. The term "stockholder" is defined to include any individual who has a legal, vested, or beneficial interest in stock, including, but not limited to, employees of a corporation who participate in a stock bonus, stock option, or employee stock ownership plan.

(3) Corporations, labor organizations, or separate segregated funds of such corporation or labor organization may in addition to (2) above, make 2 written solicitations for contributions during a calendar year from any stockholder, officer, or employee of a corporation or the families of such persons. Such solicitations may be made only by mail to such person's residence and designed so that the corporation, labor organization, or separate segregated fund conducting such solicitation cannot determine who makes a contribution as a result of such solicitation and who does not.

(4) A membership organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock or a separate segregated fund established by such organizations may solicit contributions to such a fund from members of such organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock.

(5) Any method of soliciting voluntary contributions or of facilitating the making of voluntary contributions to a separate segregated fund permitted to corporations shall also be permitted to labor organizations.

(6) A corporation which uses any particular method for soliciting or facilitating the making of voluntary contributions to a separate segregated fund is required to make that method available to a labor organization representing employees of that corporation upon written request and at a cost sufficient only to reimburse the corporation for the expenses incurred thereby.

House amendment

Section 321(a) of the Act, as added by the House amendment, makes it unlawful for any national bank or any Federal corporation to make any contribution or expenditure in connection with (1) any election to any political office; or (2) any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any political office. Subsection (a) also prohibits any corporation or labor organization from making a contribution or expenditure in connection with (1) any general election for Federal office; or (2) any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any Federal office.

Subsection (a) also prohibits any candidate, political committee, or other person from knowingly accepting or receiving any contribution which is prohibited by section 321. It is also unlawful for any officer or director of a corporation or national bank, or any officer of a labor organization, to consent to any contribution or expenditure which is prohibited by section 321.

Section 321(b)(1) defines the term "labor organization" to mean any organization or any agency or employee representation committee or plan in which employees participate and which exists for the purpose of dealing with employers regarding grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or conditions of work.

Subsection (b) (2) defines the term "contribution or expenditure" to include any payment or other distribution of money, services, or anything of value (except a lawful loan by a national or State bank in the ordinary course of business) to any candidate, campaign committee, or political party or organization, in connection with any election to any Federal office.

Such term, however, does not include—

(1) communications on any subject by a corporation to its stockholders and executive officers and their families, or by a labor organization to its members and their families;

(2) nonpartisan registration and voting campaigns conducted by a corporation with respect to its stockholders and its executive officers and their families, or by a labor organization with respect to its members and their families; and

(3) the establishment, administration, and solicitation of contributions to a separate segregated fund to be used for political purposes by a corporation or labor organization, except that—

(A) it is unlawful for such a fund to make a contribution or expenditure through the use of money or anything of value secured by (i) physical force; (ii) job discrimination; (iii) financial reprisal; (iv) the threat of force, job discrimination, or financial reprisals; (v) dues, fees, or other moneys required as a condition of membership in a labor organization or as a condition of employment; or (vi) moneys obtained in any commercial transaction;

(B) it is unlawful for a corporation or a separate segregated fund established by a corporation to solicit contributions from any person other than stockholders and executive officers of such corporation and their families, for an incorporated trade association or a separate segregated fund established by such an association to solicit contributions from any person other than the stockholders and executive officers of the member corporations of such trade association and the families of stockholders and executive officers (to the extent that any such solicitation has been separately and specifically approved by the member corporation involved, and such member corporation has not approved any such solicitation by more than one such trade association in any calendar year), or for a labor organization or a separate segregated fund established by a labor organization to solicit contributions from any person other than the members of the labor organization and their families;

(C) any method of soliciting voluntary contributions, or of facilitating the making of voluntary contributions, to a separate segregated fund established by a corporation which may be used by a corporation also may be used by labor organizations; and

(D) a corporation which uses a method of soliciting voluntary contributions or facilitating the making of voluntary contributions shall make such method available to a labor organization representing any members who work for the corporation, upon written request by the labor organization.

The House amendment was intended to acknowledge the use by corporations of various methods, such as check-off systems, to solicit voluntary contributions or to facilitate the making of such contributions to separate segregated political funds. If a corporation uses such a method, the House amendment extended the same right to labor organizations. The House amendment, however, also would permit a corporation to allow a labor organization to use a method even though the corporation has chosen not to use such method. The House amendment also intended to authorize such methods notwithstanding any other provision of law.

In any instance in which a corporation uses a method (such as the use of computer data) to solicit voluntary contributions or to facilitate the making of contributions to separate segregated political funds, the House amendment also was intended to require that the corporation make such method available to a labor organization if the labor organization represents members who work for the corporation, and the labor organization makes a written request for the use of the method involved. The labor organization would be required to reimburse the corporation for any expense incurred in connection with the use of the method by the labor organization.

Subsection (b)(3) defines the term "executive officer" to mean an individual employed by a corporation who is paid on a salary rather than an hourly basis and who has policymaking or supervisory responsibilities.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except as follows:

1. The conference substitute follows the Senate bill in applying the definition of the term "contribution or expenditure" contained in section 321 to section 791(h) of the Public Utility Holding Company Act.

2. The conference substitute follows the Senate bill in using the term "executive or administrative personnel" throughout section 321 rather than "executive officer". The conference substitute defines that term to mean an employee who is paid on a salary, rather than hourly, basis and who has policymaking, managerial, professional, or supervisory responsibilities. The term "executive or administrative personnel" is intended to include the individuals who run the corporation's business, such as officers, other executives, and plant, division, and section managers, as well as individuals following the recognized professions, such as lawyers and engineers, who have not chosen to separate themselves from management by choosing a bargaining representative; but is not intended to include professionals who are members of a labor organization, or foremen who have direct supervision over hourly employees, or other lower level supervisors such as "strawbosses".

3. The conference substitute follows the Senate bill in requiring that when a corporation solicits its executive and administrative personnel as permitted by subsection (b)(4)(B), for a contribution to a separate segregated fund, the employee being solicited must be informed at the time of the solicitation of the political purposes of the fund and that he may refuse to contribute.

4. The conference substitute follows the Senate bill in permitting under certain circumstances written solicitations by corporations and labor organizations of stockholders, executive or administrative personnel, members of labor organizations, and other employees (and their families) of a corporation. It is the conferees' intent that in order to assure the ananymity of those who do not wish to respond or who wish to respond with a small contribution the mail solicitations shall be conducted so that an independent third person, who acts as fiduciary for the separate segregated fund, receives the return envelopes, keeps the necessary records, and provides the fund only with information as to the identity of individuals who make a single contribution of over $50 or multiple contributions that aggregate more than $100. The conference substitute follows the House amendment with regard to the solicitation by a trade association of stockholders and executive or administrative personnel (and their families) of a member corporation of such trade association. The conference substitute contains the provision of the Senate bill permitting a membership organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock, or a separate segregated fund established by such organizations, to solicit contributions to such a fund from members of such organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock. In light of the fact that subsection (b)(4)(D) governs solicitations by a trade association of the stockholders and executive or administrative personnel of a member corporation, the term "membership organization" in subsection (b)(4)(C) is not intended to include a trade association which is made up of corporations.

The conferees' intent is also noted with regard to the following additional points:

1. Subparagraphs (B) and (C) of section 301(f)(4), and subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 321(b)(2), which were added to the law at different times, overlap in that both make exceptions to the term "expenditure" for internal communications and for nonpartisan registration and get-out-the-vote activity. The dual reference to internal communications is intended to permit corporations to write, or call, or address their stockholders and executive or administrative personnel and their families (and unions to reach their members and their families in the same ways), to communicate a partisan or nonpartisan political message, subject only to the reporting requirement added by the conference substitute and already discussed. (The conferees agree that section 301(f)(4)(C), as amended by the conference substitute, makes reporting requirements applicable to certain communications which are not expenditures under this section but which expressly advocate the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate.) The conferees' intent with regard to the interrelationship between sections 301(f)(4)(B) and 321(b)(2)(B) which permit such activities as assisting eligible voters to register and to get to the polls, so long as these services are made available without regard to the voter's political preference, is the following: these provisions should be read together to permit corporations both to take part in nonpartisan registration and get-out-the-vote activities that are not restricted to stockholders and executive or administrative personnel, if such activities are jointly sponsored by the corporation and an organization that does not endorse candidates and are conducted by that organization; and to permit corporations, on their own, to engage in such activities restricted to executive or administrative personnel and stockholders and their families. The same rule, of course, applies to labor organizations.

2. With regard to subparagraphs (B) and (C) of section 321 (b) (3), which provide certain protections to employees solicited by their employer, it is intended that the general rule inherent in the plan of the entire section—that unions insofar as they are employers, stand in the same shoes as corporations—shall apply. In addition, while the conference substitute permits corporations in connection with an overall solicitation of stockholders to solicit employee-stockholders, such a solicitation would, of course, have to be in conformity with the requirements of subparagraphs (B) and (C) of section 321(b) (3). The same rule, of course, applies to labor organizations in the solicitation of their members.

3. The conferees agree that subsections (b) (4) (B) and (b) (6), taken together, require a corporation to make available to the labor organization any method utilized by such corporation to make the written solicitation of employees and of stockholders who are not employees. However, if the corporation does not desire to relinquish or disclose to the labor organization the names and addresses of individuals to be solicited, it is the conferees' intent that an independent mailing service shall be retained to make the mailing for both the corporation and the labor organization. Finally, it is intended that in a situation in which there are several labor organizations, rather than one, with members at a single corporation, the unions as a group shall have no greater right to make solicitations than a single union would. It is the conferees' intent that corporations and labor organizations are entitled to utilize such method solely for a mail solicitation for contributions to their separate segregated fund and not for any other purpose.

4. Subsection (b) (5), as opposed to (b) (6), merely eliminates any legal impediment to the use by a labor organization of any method permitted by law to a corporation with regard to the solicitation of its stockholders and executive or administrative personnel, or with regard to facilitating the making of contributions by stockholders and executive and administrative personnel, and does not automatically make such methods available to unions.

5. The conference substitute does not define the term "stockholder". It is intended that in this regard the normal concepts of corporate law shall be controlling.

C. CONTRIBUTIONS BY GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS

Senate bill

The prohibitions against contributions by government contractors contained in 18 U.S.C. 611 were transferred to the Act as new section 322, absent the existing penalty provisions, which are replaced by the penalty and enforcement provisions under new sections 313 and 328 of the Act. Each specific prohibition, allowance, and duty applicable to a corporation, labor organization, or separate segregated fund under section 321 is made applicable to a corporation, labor organization, or separate segregated fund to which section 322(b) applies.

House amendment

Section 322(a) of the Act, as added by the House amendment, makes it unlawful for any person who enters into certain contracts with the United States to make any contribution, or to promise to make any contribution, to any political party, committee, or candidate for public office, or to any person for any political purpose or use, or to solicit any such contribution from any such person. The prohibition applies during the period beginning on the date of the commencement of negotiations for the contract involved and ending on the later of (1) the completion of performance under the contract; or (2) the termination of negotiations for the contract.

The prohibition applies with respect to any contract with the United States or any department or agency of the United States for (1) the performance of personal services; (2) furnishing any materials, supplies, or equipment; or (3) selling any land or building. The prohibition, however, applies only if payment under the contract is to be made in whole or in part from funds appropriated by the Congress.

Section 322(b) provides that section 322 does not prohibit the operation of a separate segregated fund by a corporation or labor organization for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, unless the provisions of section 321 prohibit the operation of such fund.

Section 322(c) defines the term "labor organization" by giving it the same meaning as in section 321.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill, except the conference substitute makes it clear that the provisions of section 322 (c) of the Act, as added by the conference substitute, also apply to membership organizations, cooperatives, and corporations without capital stock.

D. PUBLICATION OR DISTRIBUTION OF POLITICAL STATEMENTS

Senate bill

Section 323 of the Act, as added by the Senate bill, provides that, whenever a person makes an expenditure to finance a communication which advocates the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate through a broadcasting station, newspaper, magazine, outdoor advertising facility, direct mailing, or other type of general public political advertising, such communication (1) if authorized by a candidate or an authorized political committee or agent of a candidate, shall state that such communication has been so authorized; or (2) if not authorized by a candidate, or an authorized political committee or agent of a candidate, shall state (A) that the communication is not so authorized; and (B) the name of the person making or financing the expenditure for the communication, including (in the case of a political committee) the name of any affiliated organization as stated in section 303(b) (2) of the Act.

House amendment

Section 323 of the Act, as added by the House amendment, provides that, whenever a person makes an expenditure to finance a communication which advocates the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate through a broadcasting station, newspaper, magazine, outdoor advertising facility, direct mailing, or other type of general public political advertising, such communication (1) if authorized by a candidate or an authorized political committee or agent of a candidate, shall state that such communication has been so authorized; or (2) if not authorized by a candidate, or an authorized political committee or agent of a candidate, shall state (A) that the communication is not so authorized; and (B) the name of the person making or financing the expenditure for the communication, including (in the case of a political committee) the name of any affiliated organization as stated in section 303(b)(2) of the Act.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment and the Senate bill.

E. CONTRIBUTIONS BY FOREIGN NATIONALS

Senate bill

Section 324(a) of the Act, as added by the Senate bill, makes it unlawful for a foreign national to make any contribution in connection with (1) any election to any political office; or (2) any primary election, convention, or caucus held to select candidates for any political office. It is also unlawful for any person to solicit, accept, or receive any such contribution from a foreign national.

Section 324(b) defines the term "foreign national" to mean (1) a foreign principal, as defined by section 1(b) of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, except that the term "foreign national" does not include any individual who is a citizen of the United States; or (2) an individual who is not a citizen of the United States and who is not lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as defined by section 101(a)(20) of the Immigration and Nationality Act.

Section 324 incorporates the provisions of 18 U.S.C. 613, replacing the criminal penalties under section 613 with the penalty and enforcement provisions under sections 313 and 328 of the Act, as added by the Senate bill.

House amendment

Section 324(a) of the Act, as added by the House amendment, makes it unlawful for a foreign national to make any contribution in connection with (1) any election to any political office; or (2) any primary election, convention, or caucus held to select candidates for any political office. It is also unlawful for any person to solicit, accept, or receive any such contribution from a foreign national.

Section 324(b) defines the term "foreign national" to mean (1) a foreign principal, as defined by section 1(b) of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, except that the term "foreign national" does not include any individual who is a citizen of the United States; or (2) an individual who is not a citizen of the United States and who is not lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as defined by section 101 (a) (20) of the Immigration and Nationality Act.

Section 324 is the same as section 613 of title 18, United States Code, except that the penalties were omitted in order to conform with section 328 of the Act. The House amendment eliminated section 613 of title 18, United States Code.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment and the Senate bill.

F. PROHIBITION OF CONTRIBUTIONS IN NAME OF ANOTHER

Senate bill

Section 325 of the Act, as added by the Senate bill, prohibits any person from (1) making a contribution in the name of another person; (2) knowingly permitting his name to be used to make such a contribution; and (3) knowingly accepting a contribution made by one person in the name of another person.

Section 325 incorporates the provisions of 18 U.S.C. 614, replacing the criminal penalties under section 614 with the penalty and enforcement provisions under sections 313 and 328 of the Act, as added by the Senate bill.

House amendment

Section 325 of the Act, as added by the House amendment, prohibits any person from (1) making a contribution in the name of another person; (2) knowingly permitting his name to be used to make such a contribution; and (3) knowingly accepting a contribution made by one person in the name of another person.

Section 325 is the same as section 614 of title 18, United States Code, except that the penalties were omitted in order to conform with section 328 of the Act. The House amendment eliminated section 614 of title 18, United States Code.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment and the Senate bill.

G. LIMITATION ON CONTRIBUTIONS OF CURRENCY

Senate bill

Section 326 of the Act, as added by the Senate bill, incorporates the provisions of 18 U.S.C. 615 (relating to the prohibition of contributions in currency in excess of $100) replacing the criminal penalties contained in section 615 with the penalty and enforcement provisions under sections 313 and 328 of the Act, as added by the Senate bill.

House amendment

Section 326(a) of the Act, as added by the House amendment, prohibits any person from making contributions of currency of the United States or of any foreign country to any candidate which, in the aggregate, exceed $100, with respect to any campaign of the candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office.

Section 326(b) provides that any person who knowingly and willfully violates section 326 shall be fined in an amount which does not exceed the greater of $25,000 or 300 percent of the amount of the contribution involved, imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill.

H. ACCEPTANCE OF EXCESSIVE HONORARIUMS

Senate bill

The Senate bill eliminated provisions relating to the acceptance of excessive honorariums.

House amendment

Section 327 of the Act, as added by the House amendment, prohibits any person who is an elected or appointed officer or employee of any branch of the Federal Government from accepting (1) any honorarium of more than $1,000 (excluding amounts accepted for actual travel and subsistence expenses) for any appearance, speech, or article; or (2) honorariums aggregating more than $15,000 in any calendar year.

Section 327 is the same as section 616 of title 18, United States Code, except that the penalties were omitted in order to conform with section 328 of the Act. The House amendment eliminated section 616 of title 18, United States Code.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except as follows:

1. The limitation on an honorarium for any appearance, speech, or article is $2,000.
2. The limitation on the total amount of honorarium in any calendar year is $25,000.
3. The conference substitute provides that, in calculating the amount of an honorarium, actual travel and subsistence expenses for the spouse of the person involved, or an aide of such person, shall not be included. Any amount paid or incurred for agents' fees or commissions also shall not be included.

I. FRAUDULENT MISREPRESENTATION OF CAMPAIGN AUTHORITY

Senate bill

Section 327 of the Act, as added by the Senate bill, incorporates the provisions of 18 U.S.C. 617 (relating to the prohibition of fraudulent misrepresentation of campaign authority), replacing the criminal penalties contained in section 617 with the penalty and enforcement provisions under sections 313 and 328 of the Act, as added by the Senate bill.

House amendment

Section 112(b) of the House amendment amended title III of the Act by adding a new section 316. Section 316 prohibits any candidate for Federal office, or any employee or agent of the candidate from (1) fraudulently misrepresenting himself (or any committee or organization under his control) as acting for or on behalf of any other candidate or political party regarding a matter which is damaging to such other candidate or political party; or (2) participating in, or conspiring to participate in, any plan to violate section 316.

Section 316 is substantially the same as section 617 of title 18, United States Code, except that the penalties were omitted in order to conform with section 328 of the Act. The House amendment eliminated section 617 of title 18, United States Code.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill.

J. PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS

Senate bill

Section 328 of the Act, as added by the Senate bill, provides that, upon enactment of the bill, a knowing and willful violation of the Act, as amended, which involves the making, receiving, or reporting of any contribution or expenditure having a value in the aggregate of $1,000 or more in any calendar year is punishable by a fine not in excess of $25,000 or 3 times the amount involved, whichever is greater, and imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both the fine and imprisonment. In the case of a knowing and willful violation of section 325 or 326, the above penalties shall apply to a violation involving an amount having a value in the aggregate of $250 or more during a calendar year. In the case of a knowing and willful violation of section 327, the penalties of this section 328 shall apply without regard to whether the making, receiving, or reporting of a contribution of $1,000 or more was involved.

In addition, a willful and knowing violation of section 321(b)(2) of the Act, as added by the Senate bill (involving coercion or undue influence by corporations or labor organizations), is punishable by a fine of not more than $50,000, imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both.

Section 328(b) provides that in any criminal action brought for a violation of a provision of the Act, as amended, or of the public financing provisions of the Internal Revenue Code that the defendant may introduce as evidence of his lack of knowledge or intent to commit the offense a conciliation agreement entered into with the Commission which is still in effect and being complied with. Such a conciliation agreement is also required to be taken into account in weighing the seriousness of the offense and in considering the seriousness of the penalty to be imposed if the defendant is found guilty.

House amendment

Section 328 of the Act, as added by the House amendment, provides that any person who knowingly and willfully violates any provision or provisions of the Act (other than section 326) which involves the making, receiving, or reporting of any contribution or expenditure having a value, in the aggregate of $1,000, or more during any calendar year shall be fined in an amount which does not exceed the greater of $25,000 or 300 percent of the amount of the contribution or expenditure involved, imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill, except that the penalty is the same for all knowing and willful violations of the Act and such penalty applies to a violation of section 321(b)(3) only if an amount of $250 or more in a calendar year is involved.

Savings Provision Relating to Repealed Provisions

Senate bill

Section 112 of the Senate bill provided that the repeal by the Senate bill of any section or penalty does not release or extinguish any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under such penalty or section.

House amendment

Section 113 of the House amendment amended title III of the Act by adding a new section 329. Section 329 provides that the repeal by the House amendment of any provision or penalty shall not have the effect of releasing or extinguishing any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under the provision or penalty. The provision or penalty shall be treated as remaining in force for the purpose of sustaining any action or prosecution for the enforcement of the penalty, forfeiture, or liability.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill.

Principal Campaign Committees

Senate bill

No provision.

House amendment

Section 114 of the House amendment amended section 302(f) of the Act to provide that, with respect to the designation of political committees as principal campaign committees, any occasional, isolated, or incidental support of a candidate shall not be construed as support of such candidate for purposes of section 302.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

Authorization of Appropriations

Senate bill

Section 111 of the Senate bill provided an authorization of $8,000,000 for fiscal year 1976, $2,000,000 for the period beginning July 1, 1976, and ending September 30, 1976, and $8,000,000 for fiscal year 1977.

House amendment

No provision.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute provides an authorization of $6,000,000 for fiscal year 1976, $1,500,000 for the transition period, and $6,000,000 for fiscal year 1977.

Technical and Conforming Amendments

The Senate bill and the House amendment included various technical and conforming amendments to the Act. These amendments are incorporated in the conference substitute.

AMENDMENTS TO TITLE 18, UNITED STATES CODE

Repeal of Certain Provisions

Senate bill

Section 201(a) of the Senate bill amended chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, by striking out section 608 (relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures), 610 (relating to contributions or expenditures by national banks, corporations, or labor organizations), 611 (relating to contributions by Government contractors), 612 (relating to publication or distribution of political statements), 613 (relating to contributions by foreign nationals), 614 (relating to prohibition of contributions in name of another), 615 (relating to limitations on contributions of currency), 616 (relating to acceptance of excessive honorariums), and 617 (relating to fraudulent misrepresentation of campaign authority).

Section 201(b) made conforming amendments to the table of sections for chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code.

House amendment

Section 201(a) of the House amendment amended chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, by striking out section 608 (relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures), 610 (relating to contributions or expenditures by national banks, corporations, or labor organizations), 611 (relating to contributions by Government contractors), 612 (relating to publication or distribution of political statements), 613 (relating to contributions by foreign nationals), 614 (relating to prohibition of contributions in name of another), 615 (relating to limitations on contributions of currency), 616 (relating to acceptance of excessive honorariums), and 617 (relating to fraudulent misrepresentation of campaign authority).

Section 201(b) made conforming amendments to the table of sections for chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment and the Senate bill.

Changes in Definitions

Senate bill

No provision.

House amendment

Section 202(a) of the House amendment made a conforming amendment to section 591 of title 18, United States Code, based upon the amendment made by section 201(a) of the House amendment.

Section 202(b) amended section 591(e)(4) of title 18, United States Code, to provide that the term "contribution" does not apply (1) in the case of any legal or accounting services rendered to the national committee of a political party, other than any such services attributable to any activity which directly furthers the election of any designated candidate to Federal office; or (2) in the case of any legal or accounting services rendered to a candidate or political committee solely for the purpose of ensuring compliance with the Act, chapter

29 of title 18, United States Code, or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Section 202(c) amended section 591(f)(4) of title 18, United States Code, to provide that the term "expenditure" does not include the payment, by any person other than a candidate or political committee, of compensation for legal or accounting services rendered (1) to the national committee of a political party, other than services attributable to activities which further the election of a designated candidate to Federal office; or (2) to a candidate or political committee solely for the purpose of ensuring compliance with the Act, chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except that the conference substitute includes a modified version of the provision of the Senate bill which provides that legal or accounting services are considered contributions if the person paying for the services is a person other than the "regular" employer of the individual rendering the services. The conference substitute includes this provision of the Senate bill with respect to the definition of the terms "contribution" and "expenditure" in section 301 of the Act and in section 591 of title 18, United States Code.

AMENDMENTS TO INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1954

Entitlement of Eligible Candidates to Payments

Senate bill

Section 301 of the Senate bill amended the public financing provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 by prohibiting a presidential candidate who accepts public funds from expending more than $50,000 from his own personal funds or the funds of his immediate family in connection with his campaign. The term "immediate family" was defined to mean a candidate's spouse, and any child, parent, grandparent, brother, half-brother, sister, or half-sister of the candidate, and the spouses of such persons. Expenditures made by an individual after January 29, 1976, and before the date of enactment of the Senate bill shall not be taken into account in applying the limitation under such Code.

House amendment

Section 301 of the House amendment amended section 9004 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 by adding new subsections (d) and (e). Subsection (d) provides that, in order to be eligible to receive payments under section 9006, a candidate of a major, minor, or new party for election to the office of President must certify to the Commission that the candidate will not knowingly make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with his campaign for election to the office of President, in excess of an aggregate amount of $50,000. Expenditures made by a vice presidential nominee shall be considered to be expenditures made by the presidential nominee of the same political party.

Subsection (e) defines the term "immediate family" to mean the spouse of a candidate, and any child, parent, grandparent, brother, or sister of the candidate, and the spouses of such persons.

Section 306(a) amended section 9035 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide that any candidate seeking Federal matching funds in connection with a campaign for nomination for election to the office of President may not knowingly make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with his campaign which exceed an aggregate amount of $50,000. Section 306(a) also amended section 9035 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 by adding a new subsection (b) which defines the term "immediate family" to mean the spouse of a candidate, and any child, parent, grandparent, brother, or sister of the candidate, and the spouses of such persons.

Section 306(b) made a conforming amendment to the table of sections for chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except as follows:

1. The conference substitute follows the Senate bill with respect to the definition of the term "immediate family". The conference substitute does not in any way disturb the $1,000 contribution limit applicable to all individuals, including the immediate family of a candidate.

2. The conference substitute includes the provision of the Senate bill which states that expenditures made by an individual after January 29, 1976, and before the date of the enactment of the conference substitute, shall not be taken into account in applying the limitation regarding the expenditure of personal funds.

INSUFFICIENT AMOUNTS IN PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN FUND

Senate bill

Section 302 of the bill amended section 9006 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 by striking out subsection (b). Subsection (b) provides that any moneys remaining in the Presidential Election Campaign Fund after a presidential election shall be transferred to the general fund of the Treasury.

House amendment

Section 302(a) of the House amendment amended section 9006 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 by striking out subsection (b). Subsection (b) provides that any moneys remaining in the Presidential Election Campaign Fund after a presidential election shall be transferred to the general fund of the Treasury.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as House amendment and the Senate bill.

INSUFFICIENT AMOUNTS IN PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN FUND

Senate bill

No provision.

House amendment

Section 302(b) of the House amendment amended section 9006(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as so redesignated by section

302(a) of the House amendment, to provide that, in any case in which the Secretary of the Treasury determines that there are not sufficient moneys in the Presidential Election Campaign Fund to make payments under section 9006(b), section 9008(b)(3), and section 9037(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, moneys shall not be made available from any other source for the purpose of making payments.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

PROVISION OF LEGAL OR ACCOUNTING SERVICES

Senate bill

The Senate bill provided that payment for legal or accounting services shall not be treated as an expenditure by the national committee of a political party in connection with its presidential nominating convention unless the person paying for such services is a person other than the employer of the individual rendering the services.

House amendment

Section 303 of the House amendment amended section 9008(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 by adding a new paragraph (4). Paragraph (4) provides that any payment by a person other than the national committee of a political party of compensation to any person for legal or accounting services rendered to the national committee of a political party shall not be treated as an expenditure made by the national committee with respect to the presidential nominating convention of the political party involved.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute includes a modified version of the Senate bill which provides that legal or accounting services are considered contributions if the person paying for the services is a person other than the "regular" employer of the individual rendering the services.

REVIEW OF REGULATIONS

Senate bill

Section 303 of the bill amended the public financing provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 relating to congressional review of regulations promulgated under such provisions, to provide for a 15-legislative-day or 30-calendar-day period, whichever is later, during which a proposed rule or regulation can be disapproved.

House amendment

Section 304(a) of the House amendment amended section 9009(c)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide that the Congress may disapprove proposed rules and regulations of the Commission in whole or in part. The amendment also provided that, whenever a committee of the House of Representatives reports any resolution relating to a proposed rule or regulation of the Commission, it is in order at any time (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. The motion is highly privileged and is not debatable. An amendment to the motion is not in order, and it is not in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to.

Although the motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution is not debatable, debate may be conducted with respect to the contents of the resolution.

Section 304(b) made an identical amendment to section 9039(c)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except as follows:

The conference substitute provides that, for purposes of reviewing regulations proposed by the Commission, the Congress may disapprove any provision or series of interrelated provisions which states a single separable rule of law.

The conferees agree that this provision does not give the Congress the power to revise proposed regulations by disapproving a particular word, phrase, or sentence, but only gives each House of the Congress the power to determine which proposed regulations of the Commission constitute distinct regulations which can only be disapproved in whole. This provision is intended to permit disapproval of discrete self-contained sections or subdivisions of proposed regulations and is not intended to permit the rewriting of regulations by piecemeal changes.

RETURN OF FEDERAL FUNDS

Senate bill

Section 306 of the Senate bill amended section 9037 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide that a candidate receiving Federal matching funds in connection with his presidential primary campaign may not continue to receive matching funds if he fails to receive 10 percent or more of the votes cast in 2 consecutive primaries. The Senate bill provided that the eligibility of a candidate to receive matching funds may be reinstated if the candidate receives 20 percent or more of the votes cast in a presidential primary held after the candidate's payments were terminated.

The Senate bill provided that this provision would take effect on the date of the enactment of the Senate bill.

House amendment

Section 307(a)(1) of the House amendment amended section 9002(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide that the term "candidate" does not include any individual who has ceased actively to seek election to the office of President or to the office of Vice President in more than one State.

Section 307(a)(2) amended section 9003 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 by adding a new subsection (d). Subsection (d) provides that, in any case in which an individual ceases to be a candidate for the office of President or Vice President as a result of the operation of the last sentence of section 9002(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (which is added by the amendment made by section 307(a)(1) of the House amendment), such individual (1) shall no longer be eligible to receive any Federal payments; and (2) shall pay to the Secretary of the Treasury, as soon as practicable after the date upon which the individual ceases to be a candidate, an amount equal to the amount of payments received by the individual which are not used to defray qualified campaign expenses.

Section 307(b) made amendments to section 9032(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 and to section 9033 of such Code which are substantially similar to the amendments made by section 307(a). The amendments made by section 307(b) relate to the receipt of Federal matching payments in presidential primary elections.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute includes both the provisions of the House amendment and the Senate bill. The conference substitute provides that an individual who has ceased to be an active candidate, or an individual who is ineligible to receive payments because he has failed to receive at least 10 percent of the votes cast in 2 consecutive primaries, may continue to receive Federal payments only in order to defray qualified campaign expenses which were incurred while such individual was a candidate.

The conference substitute also provides that an individual who becomes ineligible to receive matching payments under section 9033(c)(1)(A) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as added by the conference substitute, subsequently may reestablish his eligibility to receive such payments. The Commission is given authority to determine that any such individual is a candidate upon a finding that such individual is actively seeking election to the office of President of the United States in more than one State. The Commission is required to make such determination without requiring such individual to resubmit written agreements under section 9033(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

The conferees agree that the provision of the conference substitute relating to the ineligibility of inactive candidates to receive matching payments is intended to provide that a candidate will remain eligible for such payments only so long as he maintains a good faith, multistate campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to the office of President. A candidate should not be considered to be actively seeking nomination or election if he curtails his campaign activities to such an extent that it is reasonable to conclude that he no longer intends to engage in activity necessary to secure the nomination or win the election involved.

Technical and Conforming Amendments

The Senate bill and the House amendment made various technical and conforming amendments to the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. The conference substitute incorporates these technical and conforming amendments.

OTHER PROVISIONS

Commission To Study Presidential Nominating Process

Senate bill

The Senate bill established a Bicentennial Commission on Presidential Nominations to review the manner in which presidential primary elections are conducted, and to report to the Congress its findings.

House amendment

No provision.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, resulting in no change in existing law.

FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE OF FEDERAL OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

Senate bill

The Senate bill provided that any Federal officer or employee receiving compensation at a gross annual rate exceeding $25,000, and any candidate for Federal office, must file financial disclosure reports to the Comptroller General of the United States. The Senate bill provided that the financial disclosure statement must include (1) an indication of the net worth of the person making the filing; (2) a statement of the assets and liabilities of such person; and (3) a statement of income identifying each source of income (or a copy of such person's Federal income tax statement).

House amendment

No provision.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, resulting in no change in existing law.

HOUSE AND SENATE FLOOR DEBATES ON CONFERENCE REPORT

House of Representatives

MONDAY, MAY 3, 1976

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, the Reverend Edward G. Latch, D.D., offered the following prayer:

By this all men will know that you are My disciples, if you have love for one another.—John 13: 35.

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, who art ever seeking to lead Thy children in right paths, grant Thy light and Thy truth unto the Members of this House of Representatives that they may be given wisdom to know Thy ways, courage to walk in them, and strength to continue until their life's end.

Bless our land and the people who live on it. By Thy grace heal our national wounds, forgive our misdoings, renew our minds, and give us the spirit to trust Thee more fully and to love one another more sincerely. So shall we make our Nation good in her greatness and great in her goodness.

In the spirit of the Master we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Without objection, the Journal stands approved.

There was no objection.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Consent Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

CHANGING THE MEMBERSHIP OF THE NATIONAL ARCHIVES TRUST FUND BOARD

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 10374) to amend section 2301 of title 44, United States Code, to change the membership of the National Archives Trust Fund Board.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

H.R. 10374

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 2301 of title 44, United States Code, is amended by deleting the first sentence and substituting in lieu thereof the following sentence:

"The National Archives Trust Fund Board shall consist of the Archivist of the United States, as Chairman, and the chairman of the House of Representatives Committee on Government Operations and the chairman of the Senate Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.".

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEE WITHHOLDING FOR TAXES IMPOSED BY CERTAIN NONINCORPORATED LOCAL GOVERNMENTS

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 10572) to amend title 5 of the United States Code to provide that the provisions relating to the withholding of city income or employment taxes from Federal employees shall apply to taxes imposed by certain nonincorporated local governments.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

H.R. 10572

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) paragraph (1) of section 5520(c) of title 5, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(1) 'city' means any unit of general local government—

"(A) which—

"(i) is classified as a municipality by the United States Bureau of the Census, or

"(ii) is a town or township which, in the determintaion of the Secretary of the Treasury, (I) possesses powers and performs function comparable to those associated with municipalities, (II) is closely settled, and (III) contains within its boundaries no incorporated places as defined by the United States Bureau of Census; and

"(B) within the political boundaries of which five hundred or more persons are regularly employed by all agencies of the Federal Government; and".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on the date of the of enactment of this Act.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That paragraph (1) of section 5520(c) of title 5, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(1) 'city' means any unit of general local government which—

"(A) is classified as a municipality by the Bureau of the Census, or

"(B) is a town or township which, in the determination of the Secretary of the Treasury—

"(i) possesses powers and performs functions comparable to those associated with municipalities,

"(ii) is closely settled, and

"(iii) contains within its boundaries no incorporated places, as defined by the Bureau of the Census, within the political boundaries of which 500 or more persons are regularly employed by all agencies of the Federal Government; and".

SEC. 2. The amendment made by the first section of this Act shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. This concludes the call of the Consent Calendar.

UNITED STATES SHOULD PURCHASE SURPLUS GRAIN TO CREATE FOOD BANK

(Mr. WEAVER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, according to the Washington Post, the CIA is scheduled to release today a study of weather and food production in the world, which warns that there will be political and economic upheavals beyond comprehension because of critical food shortages caused by adverse weather which will reduce crop production and cause worldwide starvation.

Mr. Speaker, it is time for the United States to create a strategic U.S. grain reserve. The time is running out, as the CIA report so clearly indicates.

Mr. Speaker, I plan to introduce a bill requiring the Government to purchase massive amounts of surplus grain and oil seeds and deposit them in the food bank. The food bank would have the double purpose of propping grain prices in times of surplus and assuring future food supplies.

Today we are selling grain to the Soviets, at prices often below the cost of production. Instead, the Government should purchase this grain and hold it for our own security or for higher prices abroad or for humanitarian relief which, considering the CIA report, will be essential before long.

PROHIBITING MEMBERS OF CONGRESS FROM BEING REIMBURSED FOR ANYTHING BUT COACH CLASS AIRLINE FARES

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, as the sponsor of House Resolution 560 to prohibit Members of Congress from being reimbursed for anything but coach class airline fares, I take more than a passing interest in who sits where on airplanes. On my way into Washington Sunday I saw Admiral Rickover on my flight sitting happily in the coach section with the rest of us.

Many important personages take the approach that the higher their status the more tax dollars should be expended on their care and feeding. That is one reason everyone's tax bill is so high.

Rickover believes otherwise, and I want to commend him for his thrifty attitude.

So I am always curious as to who is riding in first class and who is riding in tourist class. Yesterday I had more than an interesting event occur when I observed Admiral Rickover, who has always been one of my great heroes, climb aboard the plane and go back to the tourist section with the rest of us. I really want to commend the admiral because I think he sets a good example for all of us to follow and also set an example for when the taxpayers do their additions.

MAJOR LOOPHOLE IN CAMPAIGN REFORM BILL

(Mr. PEYSER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Speaker, although I am in favor of campaign spending reform legislation, today I will attempt to amend the campaign reform bill due to a major loophole in the legislation. The loophole enables Senate campaign committees to contribute $17,500 to their candidates in a primary election.

My experience with the Republican National Senate Committee has convinced me that the public is being deceived by the manner in which these funds are solicited and dispersed, and I will move to defeat that kind of action by the Congress. What we have provided by this legislation is a way that Senate incumbents can get their hands on money that the public contributes in good faith, only to be deceived.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 3065, FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1976

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Senate bill (S. 3065) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for its administration by a Federal Election Commission appointed in accordance with the requirements of the Constitution, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Without objection, a call of the House is ordered.

There was no objection.

The call was taken by electronic device, and the following Members failed to respond:

The SPEAKER. On this rollcall 335 Members have recorded their presence by electronic device, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 3065, FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1976

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement.

The Clerk read the statement.

(For conference report and statement see proceedings of the House of April 28, 1976.)

Mr. HAYS of Ohio (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the statement be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS) is recognized for 30 minutes.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and to include extraneous material on the conference report under consideration, and that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, it is not my desire to bore the Members with a long dissertation on the conference report, but I feel an obligation to explain the basic—what seems to me the basic—outlines of the report. I propose to take about 10 minutes to do that, and then to yield to the other side, and then, lastly, to take time to answer Members' questions or to engage in whatever colloquy is necessary.

Mr. Speaker, the basic outlines of the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976 were conceived in this body, and as chairman of the House conferees I am pleased to be able to report that the conference substitute is faithful to the House bill in all major respects. In submitting the conference report to you, I shall first briefly outline the major compromises arrived at by the conferees; then, since these compromises relate only to certain relatively narrow points, for the Members' convenience, I shall, in summary form, restate the essential outline of the bill; and, finally, I shall detail a few technical points that are of particular importance.

The conference substitute provision reconstituting the Commission is the same as the bill that passed the House except that two of the Commission's six members are to be appointed every other year rather than one Commissioner being appointed each year, and, except that detailed provisions governing the transfer of functions from the old Commission to the new Commission are included. The most important of these provisions is one assuring that only those rules and regulations consistent with these amendments will have continuing effect.

The conference substitute contains two amendments of substance to the definitional sections of the present law that were not contained in the bill as it passed the House. First, the provision of legal and accounting services to a national political party in connection with such party activities as a convention, or to a political committee or candidate in order to comply with the requirements of the act are excluded from the terms "contribution" and "expenditure" so long as the compensation received by the lawyer or accountant is paid by his regular employer.

Mr. Speaker, as I have said previously on dissertations on the Federal Election Campaign Act, it is a little like the Duke of Devonshire when he was presenting the budget of Queen Victoria, and looked up halfway through to find a number of the Members asleep. He said, "Damn boring, isn't it?" I suppose the same could be said about this, except that what I am putting in the RECORD now may be used by a lot of Members to refer to when the persons handling their campaign funds are asking them questions about what is legal and what is not.

Mr. Speaker, second, the exclusion of communications by a membership organization to its members and of a corporation to its stockholders from the term "expenditure" is qualified by requiring the reporting of the cost of communications which expressly advocate the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, other than those included in a communication primarily devoted to another subject, if the total amount spent in connection with an election is over $2,000.

The central purpose of this provision is to reach internal communications which are similar to the campaign literature put out by a candidate and his authorized committee. It follows that the provision does not reach editorials in union or corporate newspapers or similar statements made in the course of other activities. The Senate bill contained a more onerous reporting requirement which would have covered insubstantial costs and which in addition would have created serious accounting difficulties. The conference substitute is designed to pinpoint the major area of concern expressed by the proponents of the Senate provision while eliminating the defects I have just noted.

The provisions relating to the organization of political committees and to the act's reporting requirements contained in the bill that passed the House are unchanged except that the House conferees accepted the Senate proposal which requires political committees to keep records only as to contributions of over $50, rather than as to contributions of over $10 as required by present law; and accepted also the Senate provision that relieves political committees which receive and expend a total of less than $5,000 in a quarter from the off-year reporting requirements. The conferees also eased the burdens placed on candidates and political committee treasurers by including in the conference substitute the Senate provision stating the commonsense rule that candidates and treasurers are to be considered to have complied with the recordkeeping and reporting requirements of the act if they have used their best efforts to obtain and submit all required information.

The House conferees struck what I believe to be a statesmanlike compromise on the much-debated subject of the Federal Election Commission's authority to announce generally applicable principles of law through advisory opinions. That compromise permits the Commission to issue advisory opinions that are not reviewable by Congress but provides that those opinions shall be limited to applying to specific concrete factual situations generally applicable principles stated in the act itself or in rules and regulations which have survived congressional scrutiny. The paramount authority of Congress to prevent the Commission from disregarding legislative intent is therefore assured while the Commission's ability to respond promptly to legitimate requests for guidance concerning the meaning of the law as applied to particular facts is preserved. In this subject area, as when the Congress delineates the scope of authority accorded the courts in cases arising from an administrative agency, it is difficult, if not impossible, to do more than state the congressional mood. For, there is no bright line between the announcement of a general principle and the application of such a principle to a particular factual situation. But any fair-minded person will instantly grasp the message of the provision regarding advisory opinions. That provision announces the congressional determination that the Commission is to rely exclusively on its rulemaking authority to elaborate the meaning of the basic provisions of the law, and is to utilize its authority to render advisory opinions only to answer the residual questions created by unique circumstances that can never be fully anticipated in drafting generally applicable rules but which, because of the infinite variety of possible factual situations, inevitably arise.

With the exception of three narrow points, the provisions spelling out the civil enforcement authority granted to the Commission, and the criminal enforcement authority granted to the Department of Justice contained in the bill as it passed the House remain unchanged.

First, in conformity with the understanding stated in House Report No. 94-917, the conference substitute contains explicit statutory language permitting the Congress to veto a provision or interrelated series of provisions proposed by the Commission which state a single, separable rule of law. The statement of the managers makes it plain that this veto power does not include the authority to revise proposed regulations by disapproving a particular rule, phrase or sentence contained in a proposed rule or regulation.

Second, the House conferees agreed to delete the provision which, under certain circumstances, would have precluded the Commission and the courts from relying on properly prescribed rules and regulations.

Finally, the House conferees also agreed to the Senate proposal to delete the provision in the present law permitting the disqualification of candidates who have not filed reports.

The basic contribution limitations stated in the conference substitute represent an accommodation between the Senate bill and the House amendments. The conference substitute permits an individual or other person to contribute a maximum of $1,000 per election to a candidate; $20,000 per year to the political committees of a national political party; and $5,000 per year to any other political committee. The limitations on multicandidate committees are $5,000 per election to a candidate; $15,000 per year to the political committees of a national political party; and $5,000 per year to any other political committee. In addition, the conference substitute retains the provision applicable only to contributions by the senatorial campaign committees to candidates for the Senate, which states a $17,500 contribution limit in a calendar year.

The so-called antiproliferation rules contained in the bill as it passed the House are modified in two respects: To permit unlimited transfers between the political committees of a single political party; and to permit the transfer of funds between the principle campaign committees of an individual running for two separate Federal offices.

The extent to which corporations and unions may engage in political activity created perhaps the greatest amount of controversy. In this area, as in the others I have already described, the conference substitute follows the basic outline of the House amendments. However, certain provisions of the Senate bill which were designed to meet the objection that corporations had been unduly restricted were modified and included in the conference substitute.

First the general rules applicable to all other corporations are extended to the companies regulated by the Public Utility Holding Company Act.

Second, the individuals with whom a corporation may communicate on political subjects, reached through registration and get-out-the-vote drives, and solicited for contributions to a political fund was broadened to include professional employees who are not represented by a bargaining agent and supervisory employees other than foremen who directly supervise rank-and-file employees.

Third, the conference substitute includes a requirement that any person soliciting an employee for a contribution to a political fund must advise that employee that the money will be used for a political purpose and that he is free not to make a contribution.

Fourth, the conference substitute includes the Senate provision permitting membership organizations, cooperatives, and corporations without capital stock to solicit their members for contributions to a political fund.

Finally, the conferees agreed to a provision permitting corporations to solicit their stockholders and all their employees by mail twice a year, in a manner which assures the anonymity of those who do not choose to contribute or contributes $50 or less. A labor organization representing any employee of that corporation or its subsidiaries, branches, divisions, and affiliates is granted a correlative right subject to the understanding that the corporation has the choice of either providing the union with the necessary mailing list or retaining a third person to make the mailing.

Aside from the question concerning the maximum amount that a person may contribute to a political committee in cash, the provisions in the Senate bill and the House amendment which recodify the provisions formerly contained in paragraphs 611–617 of title 18, United States Code, were essentially the same. The conference substitute follows the Senate bill in providing that cash contributions over $100 are prohibited. With regard to the former 18 United States Code paragraphs 611 and 617, the conference substitute utilizes the language contained in the Senate bill.

The conference substitute makes the following changes in the provisions stating the act's criminal penalties:

As in the House amendment, the basic rule is that knowing and willful violations relating to the making, receiving, or reporting of contributions or expenditures where the amount involved is $1,000 or more is punishable by a fine not in excess of $25,000 or three times the amount involved, or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

However, the threshold amount for criminal violations: of the prohibition on coercive solicitation of contributions to a corporate or union political fund, of the prohibition on the making of contributions in the name of another, and of the prohibition on contributions in currency, is $250. Finally, knowing and willful violations of the ban on fraudulent misrepresentation of compaign authority are punishable as a crime without regard to the amount involved.

The conferees effected one change of substance to the prohibition in the bill as it passed the House concerning the public financing of Presidential elections.

The conference substitute provides that an individual cannot continue to receive matching funds if he fails to secure 10 percent or more of votes cast in two consecutive primaries.

As is often the case, the Senate took this occasion to deal with a number of extraneous subjects and the House conference refused to accept the Senate proposals. Thus, the provisions in the Senate bill relating to mass mailings, to a commission to study the Presidential nominating process, and to financial disclosure by Federal officers and employees are not contained in the conference substitute.

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Speaker, am I correct in saying that it is the intent of the conferees that a Presidential candidate who has suspended his active candidacy may continue to receive matching payments for the purpose of deferring debts incurred prior to the suspension of his active candidacy, and that in such a situation the 30-day limit would not apply?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. That is correct.

Mr. Speaker, that would have meant 400,000 employees. I am reliably informed; and 400,000 reports are not—I repeat—are not contained in the conference substitute.

But the House conferees did agree to an authorization for the Commission of $6 million for fiscal year 1976, $1.5 million for the transition period and $6 million for fiscal year 1977.

Mr. Speaker, I know that several Commissioners are sitting in the gallery; and although we are not allowed to address the gallery, I hope they will understand that they will not be able to come back for separate money, because as far as this chairman is concerned, they will not get it since it is not within the budget.

Finally, the House conferees insisted that the prohibition on honorariums contained in the present law, which was repealed by the Senate bill, be retained, and we insisted that it be retained—and this is the trading point—we agreed to an amendment which increased the net amount that may be received on a single occasion to $2,000, and the total net amount which may be received in 1 year to $25,000.

Mr. Speaker, if I had been thinking properly, we probably would have made that not $25,000, but set the ceiling at half of 1-year's salary. I think that might have gotten the message to the Senate even better than the $25,000 limitation.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. The provisions of the conference substitute I have just detailed are based upon the following basic judgments.

First, that the proper response to the Supreme Court's decision in Buckley against Valeo was to reconstitute the Federal Election Commission in a manner which permits the President to appoint all six voting members subject to Senate confirmation.

Second, that the Commission should be accorded the independent powers necessary to enforce the law promptly and efficiently but subject to effective safeguards to assure that the Commission does not thwart the legislative will, or disregard the congressional determination that speedy settlement of complaints is preferable to the time-consuming and expensive process of litigation. The relevant provisions are those regarding advisory opinions, review of regulations, and the mandatory conciliation procedure embody these judgments.

Third, having reconstituted the FEC, it was deemed appropriate to centralize the authority to deal with complaints alleging on any theory that a person is entitled to relief because of conduct regulated by this act, other than complaints directed to the Attorney General and seeking the institution of a criminal proceeding in the Commission. Having taken that step, it has also been deemed appropriate to provide a system of civil sanctions for all violations except for substantial violations committed with a specific wrongful intent, for which criminal penalties are preserved.

Fourth, the Supreme Court did not simply overturn the method of selecting the Commission. It also ruled that a central feature of the regulatory scheme of the 1974 act—that dealing with independent expenditures—impermissibly intruded on the right of individuals and groups to use their resources to state their own views on political matters. That ruling required extensive revisions in the act's reporting requirements and in the provisions regulating contributions. In essence what has been done is to provide added reporting and disclosure concerning independent expenditures; and to sharpen the line between such expenditures and activity—such as reproducing a candidate's materials—which is the effective equivalent of making a direct contribution. In line with the distinction it drew between the making of independent expenditures and the making of contributions, the Court upheld the overall $25,000 limitation the 1974 act imposed on the amount an individual may contribute to political committees in 1 year. That limitation was intended to apply to contributions to political committees that made their own contributions to candidates and to political committees that utilize their resources to make expenditures supporting or opposing particular candidates. For in neither case is the right of an individual or group to state its own views inhibited, and in both a failure to regulate the right to provide a third person with added resources would perpetuate the evils against which the Congress legislated in 1971 and again in 1974. Thus, the scope of the additional contribution limitations imposed by the conference substitute is intended to be coextensive with the scope of the $25,000 limitation on contributions by an individual. Yet another major step to strengthen the contribution limitation provisions is the one that assures that closely connected entities cannot defeat the contribution limitations stated in the bill. To achieve this objective the complex and amorphous control criteria embodied in the 1974 act are replaced by a far simpler formal relations test whose meaning is spelled out in detail in the conference report.

The final major feature of the conference substitute is the elaborate compromise which protects rank and file employees from the coercive pressure inherent in direct solicitation by their employer to a corporate political fund. The accommodation reached grants corporations the right to use treasury money for such solicitations but conditions that right by imposing appropriate safeguards to assure that reprisals cannot be taken against an employee who does not contribute or who refuses to contribute as much as management wishes him to give.

Turning now to the narrow technical aspects of the conference substitute, there are several points that it is appropriate to underline.

It is intended that the grant to the Federal Election Commission of exclusive primary jurisdiction should be read generously. While that phrase is one utilized in other areas of the law, and as such has been accorded different meanings at different times and in different circumstances, the intent of this legislation is to centralize administration in the FEC to the maximum possible extent. By the same token it is our intent that the same rules apply whether the complaint concerns political activities by an individual, a corporation, or a membership organization such as a union.

Perhaps the most important phrase used in the enforcement section is "knowing and willful." As explained in House Report No. 94-917, that phrase refers to actions taken with full knowledge of all the facts and a recognition that the action is prohibited by law.

As all those who have followed this legislation know, two of the most controversial issues have been the extent to which corporations and membership organizations, including unions, should be required to report internal political communications, and the extent to which corporations should be allowed to solicit contributions from employees. With regard to the provision added to paragraph 301(f)(4) to settle the first of these disputed issues I wish to make it clear that when a single occasion is devoted to communications on a variety of subjects, even those relating to politics, the costs are reportable only if the major portion of the time—or in the case of a publication, the space—is devoted to advocating the election or defeat of a candidate. It should also be noted that while the $2,000 threshold figure is per election and not per candidate, it is also on a per organization basis. If several organizations finance a single covered communication, they are each chargeable only with the amount they have spent. Each corporation and union is only responsible for the amount of money it actually spends. As to the provisions of the new paragraph 321 dealing with corporate solicitations of employees, it should be noted that as indicated in the conference report, a corporation can directly solicit employees who also own stock—stockholder employees—only as part of an overall solicitation of stockholders and by and only utilizing staff methods as employed in soliciting nonemployee stockholders. This rule provides the necessary minimum measure of protection to employees who happen also to own a few shares of their corporate stock but who would, of course, be subject to employer coercion if they could be singled out and treated differently from the nonemployee stockholders. I would also emphasize that the House conferees refused to accept the broad and artificial definition of stockholder contained in the Senate bill. Like the rule I have just noted, this action was predicated on our determination to provide maximum protection for employees. And, for the same reason, the House conferees were not amenable to including a narrow definition of the term solicitation. Just as we left the definition of the term stockholder to the general corporate law, we determined that any action could fairly be considered a request for a contribution should be treated as a solicitation.

Mr. ULLMAN. I rise to ask a question concerning the interrelationship between the Federal Election Campaign Act and section 527(f) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, which imposes a tax on otherwise tax-exempt entities if they engage in certain political activities. Can you advise me as to whether the bill before us broadens the scope of the terms political "contribution" and "expenditure" for the purposes of the Election Campaign Act? I raise this question because both the Federal Election Campaign Act and section 527(f) of the Internal Revenue Code are designed to deal with activities designed to influence the political process.

Section 610 of title 18 of the United States Code, which I understand is to become section 321 of the Federal Election Campaign Act, was understood by the tax-writing committees as permitting three specified types of expenditures by labor unions and trade associations.

First, section 610 specifically permitted labor unions and trade assocations to spend money for internal communications with members, stockholders, and their families—but not to the general public—which might involve support of particular candidates.

Second, section 610 specifically permitted labor unions and trade associations to spend money to conduct nonpartisan registration and get-out-the-vote campaigns aimed at their members, stockholders, and families.

Third, section 610 specifically permitted labor unions and trade associations to spend money to establish, administer, and solicit contributions to separate segregated funds to be used for political purposes.

The tax-writing committees, in connection with enactment of section 527 of the Internal Revenue Code, understood that those particular categories of expenditures would be subject to tax under sectin 427, when made by labor unions exempt under section 510(c)(5) of the Internal Revenue Code or when by trade associations exempt under section 510 (c)(6) of the Internal Revenue Code.

It was our intention, in order to promore uniformity and simplicity of regulation, that the tax law match the then existing Campaign Act restrictions.

I am concerned as to whether the statute before us is changing the campaign laws so that, in this respect, they will no longer match the tax laws.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. The proposed amendments to the Federal Election Campaign Act agreed to by the conferees do not broaden the class of activities which are considered to constitute a political "contribution" or "expenditure."

Mr. ULLMAN. Thank you for your comments. I am pleased to have this confirmation that the changes made by the Campaign Act now before the House in this area are not substantial. Since the tax laws on this point are not amended by the Campaign Act, this will result in some small differences between the tax law and the Campaign Act, but I am confident that this small difference will not create significant problems in the administration of these two laws.

Mr. Speaker, I have a summary of several pages, 26 items long, which I have already received permission to include with my remarks; and I submit that at this point.

The summary follows:

SUMMARY

To summarize, and to place those individual provisions in context, S. 3065, as amended in the conference substitute now provides in general:

1. That the six appointed commissioners shall be named by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate to serve staggered six-year terms and that no more than three members be from the same Party (the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House shall continue as ex-officio nonvoting members of the Commission).

2. The present commissioners will serve until new commissioners are appointed. Upon appointment, commissioners must terminate any outside employment within one year of confirmation.

3. Major actions by the Commission including initiation of civil suits, referral of criminal violations to the Justice Department, the establishment of guidelines or forms, and the issuance of advisory opinions would require an affirmative vote of four of the six commissioners.

4. Political committees are required to keep detailed records only for contributions in excess of $50. The demonstration of best efforts to obtain and submit required information by a treasurer of a political committee or candidate will be deemed compliance with reporting requirements. In non-election years, quarterly reports need only be filed if contributions and expenditures were in excess of $5,000 in such quarter.

5. The value of legal and accounting services to a national party or to a candidate or to a political committee are not considered as contributions or expenditures if the person paying for the services is the regular employer of the individual rendering the services.

6. Advisory opinions shall relate to the application of a general rule of law, which is stated in the Act or which has already been prescribed as a rule or regulation, to a specific factual situation. General rules of law may be initially proposed by the Commission only as rules or regulations subject to congressional review and not through the advisory opinion procedure.

7. Anyone involved in a transaction or activity which is indistinguishable in its material aspects from a transaction or activity upon whch an advisory opinion has been rendered may rely upon that advisory opinion.

8. Any person may file a written, signed, and notarized complaint with the Commission. The Commission may not act upon an anonymous complaint.

9. If the Commission determines that a person has committed or is about to commit a civil violation of Federal election law, it must for a period of up to 30 days try to correct such violation by informal methods of conciliation, conference, and persuasion. Complaints filed less than 45 days but not more than 10 days before an election will be subject to a conciliation period of not less than one-half the number of days remaining in the election period. Unless a conciliation agreement is violated, the Commission will be barred from any further action. All conciliation agreements and determinations by the Commission will be made public immediately so that the 30-day conciliation period is terminated.

10. If the Commission is unable to settle an apparent violation of this act through conciliation, it may bring a civil action. The commssion will have exclusive primary jurisdiction over civil actions to enforce the law.

11. The bill establishes a judicial appeals procedure for any person aggrieved by an order of the Commission dismissing his or her complaint or by the Commission's failure to act.

12. When the Commission has probable cause to believe that certain classes of knowing and wilful offenses have been committed which are subject to fines up to $25,000 and imprisonment up to one year, it may refer such apparent violations to the Attorney General for appropriate action.

13. Any FEC member of staff employee who discloses that an individual is being investigated by the Commission, without the written consent of the person being investigated, is subject to fine.

14. After prescribing rules and regulations the Commission will be required to transmit such rules or regulations to each House of Congress. For the purpose of reviewing regulations either House may disapprove any provision or series of interrelated provisions which states a single separable rule of law within 30 legislative days after submission.

15. Whenever a committee of the House of Representatives reports any resolution relating to a proposed rule or regulation of the Commission, it is in order at any time to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. The motion is highly privileged and is not debatable. An amendment to the motion is not in order, and is not in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to. Although the motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution is not debatable, debate may be conducted with respect to the contents of the resolution.

16. No person is permitted to contribute more than $1,000 per election to a candidate or his authorized committee; more than $5,000 per year to any other political committee; or more than $20,000 per year to a political committee established and maintained by a national political party. However, the overall limitation of $25,000 on the total contribution an individual may make is retained in the Conference Substitute.

17. No multi-candidate political committee would be permitted to contribute more than $5,000 per election to any candidate or his authorized committee; more than $5,000 per year to any other political committee; or more than $15,000 per year to the political committee established and maintained by a national political party.

18. Locals of a union, subsidiaries of a corporation, and other similarly structured groups are treated as part of the parent with respect to the $5,000 limitation on contributions to any one candidate or political committee.

19. Corporations are prohibited from soliciting contributions from anyone other than their stockholders, executive and administrative personnel and their families. Labor organizations are prohibited from soliciting contributions from nonmembers. A single trade association may only solicit funds from stockholders and executives and administrative personnel of member corporations (and their families). A membership organization, cooperative or corporation without capital stock or their separate segregate fund may solicit contributions from their members. However, a corporation or labor organization may make two written solicitations during the calendar year from any stockholder, executive or administrative personnel, or employee of a corporation. The solicitation is to be addressed to the residence and must state the political purpose and the person's right to refuse to contribute without any reprisal.

20. Corporations, labor organizations and other membership organizations must report costs of communications devoted to the express advocacy of the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, other than those contained in communications primarily devoted to other subjects, whose cost exceeds $2,000.

21. Anyone making independent exepnditures for the benefit of candidates for Federal office must file reports containing information comparable to that required of political committees.

22. Whenever an expenditure is made financing a communication that advocates the election or defeat of a candidate, such communication must be clearly identified as authorized by a political candidate or committee, or if not authorized by a candidate or committee, it must clearly identify the person making or financing the expenditure.

23. Honorariums are limited to $2,000 for each occurrence and $25,000 per calendar year excluding amount of travel and subsistence expenses for spouse or aide and agents' fees.

24. No person seeking the Presidency would be eligible for federal funds if more than $50,000 of his own funds or of the funds of his immediately family is spent.

25. If the Secretary of the Treasury determines there are insufficient monies in the dollar check-off fund to make payments to candidates, no monies would be available to make such payments from other sources.

26. Candidates who cease to campaign actively for the Presidency, or who fail to receive 10% or more of the vote cast in two consecutive primaries in which they are actively campaigning, would no longer be eligible to receive federal funds. In either case, a former candidate must return to the Treasury Department all funds received that are not being used to defray qualified campaign expenses.

Mr. Speaker, I had better end my remarks here and let the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS) take some time.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

(Mr. WIGGINS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Speaker and Members, election control laws are in their nature very partisan. I suppose that there will be strongly partisan Members of this body who will find that this conference report does not meet the partisan standards which they have set for acceptability. I say that with respect to both Democratic and Republican Members.

I want all the Members to know that this bill, dealing as it does, with an exceptionally emotional subject having partisan overtones has not been written by the AFL–CIO, nor has it been written by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, nor was it drafted in the Democratic Caucus, and, quite obviously, it was not drafted in the Republican conference either.

This bill, partisan in nature with respect to its subject matter, deals, in my opinion, fairly with the subject and attempts to reconcile strongly held views by the AFL–CIO, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, and Republican and Democratic groups. It reconciles these views fairly in my opinion and in a way which furthers the public interest.

Since this work was completed, I have been subjected to questions and comments by our colleagues, both for and against the conference report. Some of our friends in this Chamber do not believe there should be an election commission at all, and if you find yourselves in that category, you must vote against the conference report because we reconstituted the election commission.

Some Members of the body believe there ought to be an election commission, but are fundamentally opposed to public financing in any of its aspects. If you find yourselves in that position, I suppose you must vote against the conference report because public financing is continued with respect to Presidential candidates.

Parenthetically, Mr. Speaker, I also am opposed to public financing for the Presidential races and all others but a personal sense of fairness requires that I support the conference report. The time to deal with the issue of public financing is not in midelection when hundreds of thousands of dollars have already been dispensed. Fairness dictates that we postpone the ultimate resolution of the question of public financing until after the present election is over. Early in the next Congress, we should readdress this issue. Accordingly, those, who like me oppose public financing, still, out of fairness, ought to support this conference report.

Some have urged a simple reconstitution of the Commission and nothing more. That too is a position which I supported originally, but early on I came to the conclusion that any bill reported by this Congress must address itself to SUNPAC because the majority, for reasons which are plain, feels that the SUNPAC Advisory could not stand without modification. I believe any bill coming out of this Congress is going to have to deal with SUNPAC.

Second, the majority feels quite strongly that SUNPAC would not have occurred but for the abuse by the Commission of its powers to issue advisory opinions. Whether we like it or not, that issue is going to have to be dealt with in any bill approved by this Congress.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGINS. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. THOMPSON. This Member of the majority who has studied the rule on SUNPAC, which is Advisory Opinon 223, does not feel that way. The genesis I feel for SUNPAC is the Federal Election Commission's misinterpretation, and a clear misinterpretation, of the legislative intent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

The issue of advisories, and the issue of the Sun Oil Advisory in particular, will not go away by urging a simple reconstitution. This Congress is going to deal with those issues, now or later.

Mr. Speaker, in my remaining 30 seconds, let me say that we have dealt with both of those highly volatile, emotional, and, yes, partisan subjects, fairly and in a way which furthers the public interest.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge that, unless there is some conceptual opposition to the Commission under any circumstances, we vote for the conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL).

(Mr. FRENZEL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WIGGINS. I understand that. The gentleman has made that clear in earlier discussions on the floor.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I intend to support the conference committee report on S. 3065, the Federal Election Campaign Act amendments. I voted against the House bill when it was passed. I am not wholly satisfied with the conference committee report, but I am impressed that it is a great improvement over either the House or the Senate version and represents a good faith practical effort on the part of the conferees to produce a bill that will not unreasonably mess up our election laws, but will solve the problem of the Supreme Court decision.

I congratulate the House conferees, including the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, chairman of the House Administration Committee, with whom I have had and still have sharp disagreements on election laws, for producing what I think is about as good a bill as could possibly have come out of the two versions presented to the conferees.

After the House bill was passed, I criticized the following features in it: First, it reduced the independence of the Election Commission; second, it made unnecessary changes in the law in the middle of an election period; third, it created self-serving incumbent-protection devices; fourth, it reduced disclosure requirements and maintained existing loopholes; and fifth, it gave special fundraising preferences to union PAC's over their corporate counterparts.

Some of these flaws remain, but the conference committee tried to deal with each of them and in a number of instances made some notable improvements.

The worst remaining flaw is the attack on the independence of the FEC. The advisory opinion section is still bad, although it has been improved somewhat. The veto in whole or in part is still bad, but it has also been improved over the House version. If we were considering these features apart in a separate bill, I would certainly vote against it.

Many of the unnecessary changes in the law are still in it. There is still a great problem, because these suggestions are going to become law without proper hearings by our committee. That means we will have trouble with those parts of the law and with regulations which have to be drawn to help us make them work. Members of this House will criticize the FEC in the future for interpretation of these law changes, particularly with respect to the new civil processes, but I hope that those of us who are here now will remember that it is our vote.

On the positive side, it should be said that the conciliation process is a good idea, even if it has not had proper hearing. The emphasis on conciliation is good, and there should be less incentive on the part of potential political activists to decide that the law is too harsh for their own political participation.

The Bill is still self-serving. It still provides for the conversion of excess contributions to personal use, for occasional transfers between committees, for outrageous increases in allowable honoraria, for audit of Presidential candidates before congressional candidates. In the overall, however, these are not nearly as important factors as in the need for us to reconstitute the FEC.

In the field of disclosure, the conference committee did some of its best work. The acceptance of the Packwood-Wiggins amendment on disclosure of union and corporate communications to members, employees, and stockholders is a terribly important feature. The reporting requirements during off-election years have been improved.

The conferees also did good work on the old chapter 610 now section 321. This part of the conference report defined to eliminate the SUNPAC decision, advisory opinion 23 of the FEC, was the last thing the conference committee settled. Philosophically, I find the settlement offensive, but from a practical standpoint, I believe that both unions, corporations and more importantly, their members, employees, and stockholders, will be able to participate responsibly in the political process. The conference version is better than the House or Senate bills. I do not believe that it will thwart any reasonable attempt at nonpartisan, good-Government type activities on the part of either unions or corporations.

The particularly thorny problem of making one party's lists available to another party was solved in a responsible way. Perhaps without that final compromise, there would have been no bill.

Because I desperately want the FEC to be reconstituted, I commend those responsible especially for the last compromise, but generally for their work on the whole bill.

Mr. Speaker, even though the bill has many flaws, some of which I have pointed out here, I do not believe there is any flaw so significant in the bill that it needs to be vetoed. I would still prefer simple reconstitution of the FEC. That is obviously not a political possibility. Nor is there a good possibility to improve section 321 or the advisory opinion section after veto. Therefore, I intend to vote for the conference report as a responsible and practical compromise, and I urge Members of the House to do the same.

Mr. Speaker, there is one particular section that has concerned many Members. That is section 321 dealing with the SUNPAC decision. It has caused some concern because some of our large corporations who conduct nonpartisan good-government-type information and educational activities are afraid that they may be restricted in some way. The Sears Roebuck Co. is one example of companies who are concerned.

In reading section 321, which was the old section 610, and in looking at the committee report, Mr. Speaker, I find no restriction on educational good government activities conducted by corporations which seek to inform and to educate their employees. Just because that kind of activity is not specifically exempted under this law, as an expenditure, I see no reason why any corporation should worry that such activity is illegal or subject to restrictions.

I do not believe such conduct is prohibited nor defined as an expenditure either expressly or implicitly in the law, or in conference report.

Mr. JOHN L. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. JOHN L. BURTON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Then it is the gentleman's feeling that there is nothing in the conference report that would in any way prevent a company, say, like Sears Roebuck from having a Good Government Day where they invite various officials and elected officials into their stores to talk to their employees on a nonpartisan good government basis?

Mr. FRENZEL. I certainly do not. It seems to me this bill expands the possibilities for unions and corporations rather than contracts the possibilities.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS).

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

I share the views expressed by the gentleman in the well that the traditional good government activities conducted by the Sears corporation which permits candidates to come in before their employees to speak on issues of importance to the candidates in a forum setting is neither a contribution by the corporation nor by a political action committee organized by it, nor an expenditure by either. In my opinion such activities are not prohibited by this act. Such activities may continue if this bill is adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI). The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Minnesota 1 additional minute.

Mr. JOHN L. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the gentleman from Minnesota would yield to the chairman of the committee to find out if the chairman agrees with the statements made by the gentleman from California.

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS).

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the statement, of course always bearing in mind that these arrangements must be equitable and nonpartisan.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGINS. I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. ROUSSELOT).

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the remarks of both my colleague, the gentleman from California and my colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota. Nobody who is opposed to this bill said that the good citizenship programs were in jeopardy. The concern was that it is understood by the way the conference report is written that the get-out-the-vote program may be sidetracked because of hazy language. The Members have just argued on a point that was never at issue. So to try to imply that Sears-Roebuck and other corporations, and it is not just large corporations, are concerned about the get-out-the-vote program, I would point out this bill was not considered a total attack on the good government programs.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, let me inform the gentleman that the right of corporations to engage in nonpartisan get-out-the-vote efforts is expanded under this bill and not limited in any way. Whatever rights Sears had under the old law remain in existence and are in fact expanded since their get-out-the-vote efforts can be directed at Executive personnel as well as stockholders.

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGINS. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Speaker, I commend the gentleman in the well and the gentleman from California (Mr. ROUSSELOT) for their comments with respect to the issue raised by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL). There is nothing in the conference report which makes unlawful any good government activity which is permissible under present law.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BRADEMAS).

(Mr. BRADEMAS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on S. 3065, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976.

Mr. Speaker, I would first like to pay a word of tribute to the distinguished chairman of the House Administration Committee, the gentleman from Ohio, WAYNE L. HAYS, for his leadership on this important legislation, as well as to other members of the committee, particularly the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. THOMPSON); the chairman of the Elections Subcommittee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. DENT); the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. MATHIS); the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. DAVIS); and the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS).

Mr. Speaker, this measure revises and makes improvements in the landmark campaign reform legislation passed by Congress in 1974.

In addition to reconstituting the Federal Election Commission to meet the requirements set down by the Supreme Court in Buckley against Valeo, the conference report closes some of the loopholes left by the Court's decision in that case, applies "truth in advertising" requirements to so-called independent expenditures, and clarifies the political activities permitted to corporations and labor unions.

Mr. Speaker, rather than merely restate all of the details of the bill, which are well described in the conference report, I would like to make several observations about what the bill does and does not do.

First, Mr. Speaker, the bill transfers to the President the right to nominate, and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint, the six voting members of the Federal Election Commission. In other respects, however, the makeup of the Commission will remain essentially unchanged. The Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate will continue to serve on the Commission, ex officio. The Clerk and Secretary will not have the right to vote, but otherwise will be accorded all of the other rights, including participation in Commission meetings, which belong individually to the six Presidentially appointed Commissioners.

This arrangement, I should add, does not violate the decision of the Supreme Court in the above mentioned case, for it is in the act of voting that the Commissioners collectively exercise the administrative powers granted to the Commission by the statute, powers which the Court said may only be exercised by officers of the executive branch.

The conference report also leaves unchanged requirements of the act with respect to the point of entry for reports required to be filed by candidates for Federal office. Reports shall continue to be filed with the Clerk of the House or the Secretary of the Senate, according to the office being sought by the candidate involved.

Mr. Speaker, the conference report makes no change in the provisions of current law governing the promulgation by the Commission of rules and regulations. The conference report makes clear, however, that the Commission is not permitted to use the advisory opinion procedure to circumvent the requirement that proposed rules and regulations be submitted for congressional review. Advisory opinions may be issued only with respect to specific fact situations, and, even more important, the Commission may not issue any advisory opinion which has the effect of stating a general rule of law not previously stated in either the act or a regulation which has survived the congressional review process. The prohibition applies to all opinions of an advisory nature rendered by either the Commission or its employees, including opinions of the Commission's general counsel. This would not, of course, prevent the Commission from providing information of a routine nature to candidates and the general public.

The enforcement powers of the Commission are in no way weakened, and, indeed, are strengthened.

The Commission is given exclusive primary jurisdiction over all enforcement actions, and it may continue to conduct its own litigation, including litigation in the Supreme Court.

Mr. Speaker, one of the effects of the Supreme Court's decision in Buckley against Valeo was to nullify the $1,000 ceiling on independent expenditures made by an individual or group. Independent expenditures are expenditures which are made on behalf of a candidate without his authorization or against a candidate's opponent without the authorization of the candidate.

The effect of this ruling by the Supreme Court would allow individuals or special interest groups to spend unlimited amounts on behalf of a specific candidate, or against specific candidates.

In order to close this loophole, the conferees agreed to accept the House provision requiring that any independent expenditure must be in fact independent. The conference report, in complete accord with the guidelines of the Supreme Court, specifies that independent expenditures must be made without the cooperation or the suggestion of any candidate. Otherwise, the contribution limits elsewhere in the bill of $1,000 by an individual or $5,000 by a group will apply.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, the bill requires that an individual or any committee making independent expenditures for or against a candidate must report all such expenditures to the Federal Election Commission on the same basis as a political committee, that is to say, on a regular and cumulative basis.

The bill also requires that billboards, television advertisements, and other similar public announcements financed by independent expenditures, and which advocate the election or defeat of a candidate, must include a conspicuous statement identifying the person making the expenditure.

I believe that these "truth in advertising" requirements for independent expenditures will both help prevent sharp practices and further reduce the corrupting influence of big money in Federal elections.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the conference report resolves, I believe fairly, one of the most controversial issues involved in this legislation—the respective activities allowed the corporations and labor unions in Federal elections.

I might say first, Mr. Speaker, that essential to an understanding of these provisions of the conference report is that we have not sought to change the rules laid down by the 1971 and 1974 election laws with respect to corporate and labor union political activities.

Rather, the current controversy has arisen solely because the Federal Election Commission, through the advisory opinion process, has sought to change the rules notwithstanding the clearly articulated intent of Congress.

In 1971 Congress recognized that corporations and labor unions had legitimate and sometimes competing interests in the outcome of Federal elections. Congress therefore allowed such organizations to establish separate, segregated political funds for the purpose of making contributions, subject to the limitations of the act on contributions, to candidates for Federal office.

Moreover, Congress sought to establish a balance between the political activities allowed to corporations and labor unions in order that the extent of political activities carried on by either kind of entity might not burgeon so as completely to overwhelm the activities of the other.

Congress specifically did not allow either corporations or labor unions to cross-solicit contributions from each other's respective constituencies. Because the rationale for allowing a corporation to play a role in Federal elections was the legitimate interests of its owners and management, Congress restricted the solicitation rights of a corporation to its stockholders and managerial employees. And because the rationale for allowing labor unions to play a role in Federal elections was the legitimate interests of its members, Congress restricted the solicitation rights of a labor union to its members.

Mr. Speaker, this system worked well for a number of years, until last winter when a majority of the members of the Federal Election Commission arrogated to themselves the right to change the rules.

In December, 1975 in an advisory opinion issued at the request of the Sun Oil Co., the Commission announced that it would allow a corporation to solicit all of its employees, including wage and hourly workers, organized and nonorganized.

Corporate managers were not slow to respond. Literally hundreds of corporations have established new political action funds since the Sun Oil opinion was issued, and many of them have already accumulated very large amounts of cash.

Mr. Speaker, the action of the Federal Election Commission in this matter has turned the statute on its head. For the Commission has given corporations large and small the green light to go ahead to solicit everyone they can possibly reach. Moreover, by deciding the question via the advisory opinion route, rather than proposing its interpretation of the law as a proposed regulation, the Commission effectively circumvented the review process Congress carefully designed to curb precisely this kind of administrative abuse.

It is therefore grossly misleading to suggest that the inclusion in this bill of provisions clarifying the political activities permitted to corporations and labor unions is an attempt to "change the rules" in midstream.

On the contrary, what the conference committee has done is to restore the rules which governed Federal elections from 1971 until the Commission's Sun Oil decision last December.

We have, moreover, done so in a manner that is fair and evenhanded.

A labor union, like a corporation, may establish only one political committee, so that the limitations the act imposes on contributions may not be avoided.

Similarly, a labor union, like a corporation, must report voter registration and get-out-the-vote expenditures made on behalf of a specific candidate in excess of $2,000 per election.

And a labor union, like a corporation, may solicit contributions from the nonorganized employees of a company only twice a year, and then only by mail.

Mr. Speaker, if the word "fairness" implies a balancing of rights, this bill represents an equitable balance between the rights of corporations and labor unions. It is the product of deliberation, negotiation and compromise.

It is a good bill supported by members of the conference committee of both parties.

It is strongly supported by Common Cause, which has been a vigorous champion of campaign reform.

It will bring to an end the hiatus in Federal matching funds which during the last month has hampered candidates for President in both parties.

I urge all Members to cast their vote in favor of the reasonable provisions embodied in this bill in order that we might send it to the President without further delay.

And I would then urge the President to sign the measure into law. A veto would be most irresponsible on his part. We must have clean elections in this country.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADEMAS. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

(Mr. THOMPSON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman and I would like to associate myself with the gentleman's remarks. Having been one of those who engaged in a colloquy to establish the rules in 1971, I felt very strongly about the misinterpretations of the Commission in handing down SUNPAC. I must say that the final solution arrived at by the conference, thanks to the chairman, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS), the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS), the gentleman in the well and others, it seems to me an eminently fair solution to this difficult problem.

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from South Dakota (Mr. PRESSLER).

(Mr. PRESSLER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. Speaker, the Federal Election Commission Act amendments conference report has today been voted on by this body. The first time we in the House voted on these amendments, I cast a "no" vote because I was opposed to certain aspects of the bill which I felt harmed our Federal election process rather than made it more accountable. However, I today cast an "aye" vote, because certain changes in the conference committee were made in the bill which made it more acceptable and I feel strongly that we must act on this legislation to insure the orderly continuation of the electoral system presently in force.

These changes included deleting a House provision, which had required the FEC to submit all future advisory opinions to the Congress as regulations for congressional approval as well as any advisory opinions issued after October 15, 1974. In addition, the conference report does provide for more equal solicitation by corporate and union political action committees. Both groups—corporate and labor—must report carefully all expenditures in communicating to their members in regard to helping or defeating candidates.

I am not fully satisfied with this legislation; but it has been changed sufficiently in the House-Senate conference to cause me to vote "aye."

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. RHODES).

(Mr. RHODES asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I recently received a statement from the President, as follows: "The President as previously stated favors a simple reconstitution of the Federal Election Commission consistent with the Supreme Court decision. However, the President will carefully review the congressional approach and make a decision consistent with the orderly and responsible conduct of the election process."

I think any fair interpretation of this statement is that the President has not made up his mind whether he would sign this bill or whether he would not.

I would like to state, however, that the reason we are here is that the Supreme Court found that parts of the act of 1974 were unconstitutional; mainly, the part dealing with the way the Federal Election Commission was put together. It seems to me, and I expressed myself in this manner at that time, that it would have been much wiser on the part of the House and of the Senate to reconstitute the Commission as the Supreme Court required and not to go into the nuts and bolts of the election law during an election year. It seems to me there is much to be gained by having some idea just what sort of law we operate under in this election. It seems to me we should not change the rules as we cross the stream. It does not serve any good purpose.

I recognize that this bill has as one of its main thrusts the idea of trying to do away with the SUNPAC decision of the FEC.

I can understand why some of the gentlemen on my right would want to do that, because it does guarantee the right of free speech for a corporation and allows the corporation actually to ask its own employees to contribute funds for political purposes. Personally, I do not see anything bad about free speech. When the first amendment is brought up in other contexts, I think most people, both on my right and on my left, support the application of it liberally so that all people can let other people know how they feel on matters like this.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCFALL). The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the distinguished minority leader.

Mr. RHODES. I ask the question, why would not the board of directors and management of a corporation be under the same types of rules and have the same privilege of communication as other people?

I congratulate the committee on this—the committee has tried to take away some of the unfair tilt of the 1974 law toward organized labor. Nevertheless the tilt, if this bill becomes law, would still be very strongly pro-union and anti-business, and it will be very strongly pro-Democratic and very strongly pro-incumbent. Therefore, I find myself unable to support this bill.

Again, I congratulate the Members who worked on this. They worked hard, they worked long, and I think they came up with a bill which is much better than the one we started out with, but even so the tilt is still there, the bias is still there, and I cannot support it.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. PEYSER).

(Mr. PEYSER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Speaker, while I support and now will vote for this bill, I must say that I take very strong exception to one section of the bill, and I do not quite understand how it even worked its way into the program at all. This deals with the section on page 13 which says that the Senate committee, the Senate campaign committees will be authorized to give $17,500 to senatorial candidates in their primary and general elections.

My own experience in this area in dealing with my own party, the Republican National Senate Committee, clearly shows that these committees operate arbitrarily, discriminatorily and, in cases, deceptively. These funds are used strictly to protect incumbents. In reality, they are the antithesis of campaign reform, and I am very surprised the conferees allowed this to become part of the bill. It seems to me that we should be protecting the public against what we know to be the misuse of funds.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEYSER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I assume the gentleman is saying all these things, these bad things, about the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, and not about the Democratic committee. I do not know what they do or how they do it, but the Democratic committee does not operate that way.

Mr. PEYSER. I say to the chairman, I have stated it very plainly about who I am speaking right now. I cannot say what the Democratic committee does, but I was going to ask the chairman a question as to the reason why this section (h) on page 18 ever became part of this act, because I do not think it refers to anything we have discussed in the House.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Well, it refers to the fact that we have placed a prohibition of $5,000 on these committees, and the Senate simply would not buy it. Under the rules of comity, in order to get a bill, I had to let them more or less set the limits on their campaign committee, but on the House committees we retained the original $5,000. I would have been a lot happier if we retained it all up and down the line.

Mr. PEYSER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from New Jersey (Mrs. FENWICK).

(Mrs. FENWICK asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. FENWICK. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for yielding to me. I think all of us who care very much about election reform were bitterly disappointed with the House bill when it left the House, particularly as it limited disclosure. I voted against it, but I am now persuaded that this bill, although still imperfect, deserves support.

The gentleman from Indiana, who was in the well earlier, said very clearly that we must have clean elections; and, indeed, we must. We are not going to get them if we continue to clip the wings of the Federal Election Commission, if we continue to restrict its powers. But neither will we help reform without a Commission.

Mr. Speaker, there are several clauses in this bill which has come from the conference with which I do not agree. But I do not think we can stand here, crying for election reform, urging election reform, and voting against every bill that comes down the pike with at least some election reform in it.

This bill at least re-establishes the Commission; it contains some election reform, and I, therefore, intend to reverse my previous vote and support it.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. VANDER JAGT).

(Mr. VANDER JAGT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. VANDER JAGT. Mr. Speaker, if I could have the attention of the distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS), I take this time in order to clarify some of the language in this bill as it relates to contribution limitations.

I believe the language is clear, but because it is a long and complex bill I just want the legislative intent to be crystal clear for any future interpreters.

The present law allows an individual to give all or any part of his annual $25,000 limit to a multicandidate committee. This bill changes this in the following way:

If an individual wishes to contribute to a multicandidate committee, such as a corporate or union political action committee, he may give up to $5,000 to each such committee. However, his aggregate contribution still may not exceed his $25,000 annual limit. An individual may use his entire annual limit by contributing to the committees established or maintained by a national political party, but no more than $20,000 may be given to any one such committee.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, that is correct. No more than $20,000 to any one.

Mr. VANDER JAGT. An individual under both present law and this bill may not contribute more than $1,000 per candidate per election.

Unlike individuals, qualified multicandidate committees under present law do not have an annual $25,000 limit. This remains the case in S. 3065. Likewise, such a committee may not contribute more than $5,000 per election to any one candidate or to committees which operate exclusively on behalf of that candidate.

So there is no change there.

S. 3065 does make a substantial change in the amounts which multicandidate committees may transfer to other multicandidate committees. As I read the bill the restrictions would be as follows:

A multicandidate committee may transfer to any other multicandidate committee $5,000 per year. However, if the recipient of this transfer is a committee established and maintained by a national political party, then the limit would be $15,000 per year. Any number of these transfers to various party committees may be made by the same multicandidate committee.

Is that correct?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. That is correct.

Mr. VANDER JAGT. I thank the gentleman.

Finally, on this section, if all committees which are involved in the transfer are national, State, district or local committees—including any subordinate committee thereof—of the same political party, then none of the limitations apply.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. That is correct.

Mr. VANDER JAGT. I note with great interest that the conference report states that the term "political committee established and maintained by a national political party" includes the Senate and House campaign committees. Since I am the chairman of the National Republican Congressional Committee, and since the gentleman from Ohio is the chairman of the Democratic National Congressional Committee, I wish the RECORD to clearly indicate that, although our respective committes are categorized as "established and maintained by a national political party" for purposes of sections 320(a)(1)(B) and 320(a)(2)(B), that is not necessarily the fact of the matter, except for the purposes of those two sections and those two sections alone. For all other purposes, our committees are creations of the representatives of the two political parties which have been elected to the House. Speaking for my committee, I can state unequivocally that the Republican Congressional Committee is not maintained by, nor is it in any way subordinate to the Republican National Committee.

However, it is clearly the conferees' intent that the House and Senate Campaign Committees are each entitled to receive up to $20,000 from an individual and up to $15,000 from any multicandidate committees.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that I agree with him. No matter how these committees are created, for the purposes of the law they are considered to be created that way and, therefore, they come under broader restrictions than any restrictions they might otherwise come under.

Mr. VANDER JAGT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

For the purposes of section 320(a)(1)(B) and section 320(a)(2)(B) that I cited, our committees are considered to be created in that way but they are not considered to be created in that way under any other sections?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. VANDER JAGT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. BEDELL).

Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Speaker, as the chairman of the committe knows, I have been working to try to get legislation which would prohibit political candidates from converting political contributions to personal use. Such a provision was contained in the Senate bill, but it was deleted in conference because of objections by the House committee.

I would like to know whether the gentleman generally supports the concept that we should not let political candidates convert political contributions to personal use.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I think that general concept would be supported by the House. There were real problems in working out the details in conference, especially in cases where a Member was retiring and had a fund which he accumulated. The fund may have been accumulated about 2 years ago, and the question was: What do you do with it? It might be thought almost impossible to prorate it back to the individual contributors, especially since some of them have no records as to whether they contributed, for instance, another $10, and pending further study, we just could not come up with an acceptable provision.

I do not fault the general idea, and I think that some day we will be able to work something out in this area.

Mr. BEDELL. The gentleman believes the idea has merit if we could get a proper provision drafted?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. That is right.

Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY).

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, as some Members know, I have not been especially happy with the section of this bill which increases the honorarium limitation for Members of the Senate.

I simply want to take this opportunity to announce that in the future I intend to publish two lists in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. One will be a list of the Members of Congress who vote against a pay raise and then accept it. The second list will be of those Members of Congress who vote against a pay raise and then in that calendar year received more in outside speaking fees than the amount of that pay raise.

Mr. Speaker, I think that will eliminate a lot of phony talk by some Members of Congress and, in particular, some Members of the Senate who are singing "Sweet Holy Jesus" on the issue when in actuality they are playing hypocritical games.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING).

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the distinguished committee chairman for a little further explanation on the multicandidate committee. As I understand it, there is no limit on the number of multicandidate committees that could be created, but if they are created under the control of or their organization is instigated by a national committee, they will all be treated as one committee; is that true?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Is there anything in this bill which defines what constitutes control or instigation by a national committee? I ask that because I can see how they might be suggesting the formation of many multicandidate committees and yet actually avoid the limitations on contributions.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I think the intent is pretty clear that they shall be the single source of reporting. I do believe there is an unclear area there. We will just have to see how it works, and if it is abused, perhaps we can remedy it later on.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Would it be the intent of this conference report that if there is any participation by a national committee in the formation of a multicandidate committee, that would constitute sufficient control for the purposes of this bill?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. ROUSSELOT).

(Mr. ROUSSELOT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the conference report to accompany S. 3065, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments. The Federal Election Campaign Act of 1974 was enacted, supposedly, to let the public know who is giving money and help to a candidate and to prevent violations of the public trust by individuals who would use financial aid to unduly influence or coerce an elected official. The campaign law has, since 1974, become the instrument for the creation of a commission which has issued numerous regulations and requirements involving pages of forms and reports to be completed by the various candidates for public office. I do not oppose disclosure of campaign contributions or expenditures, but I do question whether or not the Federal Election Campaign Act provides fair and impartial treatment for all candidates and their supporters.

The conference report before us today does not resolve these inequities, nor does it improve the campaign law. The Congress has not, through these amendments in S. 3065, dealt effectively with the inequities in the 1974 Act. The conferees failed to resolve the basic favoritism in the law toward labor bosses. The voice has been taken away from business in the political arena—and not just big business. Why do labor and business not have the same rights to involve themselves in political activities? The vast majority of American workers—86 million or more—are not members of labor unions—approximately 18 million union members. Certainly they desire fair and equal treatment under the law. This conference report does not provide this equal treatment.

I urge my colleagues to consider the ramifications of this legislation which has been hastily written to make us all appear free of any taint of "Watergate." We owe our constituents more than the mere appearance of virtue and candor. I shall vote against the conference report to accompany S. 3065.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. DEVINE).

(Mr. DEVINE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DEVINE. Mr. Speaker, I intend to vote against this conference report, and at the proper time will make a motion to recommit without instructions.

I am concerned about the public financing provisions generally, as has been demonstrated by all of the early Presidential candidates. I am concerned about what appears to be a balance in favor of the organized labor slush funds.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that John Gardner and his Common Cause organization have presumed to position themselves between the public and the Congress. They presume to speak for the public and to tell the Congress what we ought to do, and they position themselves between the Congress and the public by telling the public what a bad job Congress is doing.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that a simple motion to recommit to permit this bill to go back to committee and report it back to reconstitute the Commission under the Supreme Court guidelines would be in the public interest. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I will submit a motion to recommit at the proper time.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. O'BRIEN).

(Mr. O'BRIEN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, with due respect for the distinguished leadership of the House in the conference, and I doubt that we could have gotten better, I oppose the report.

Let me tell the Members why as quickly as I can. There is a church near London on whose cornerstone is carved this extraordinary bit of tribute:

> In the year 1653 when all things sacred in the kingdome were either profaned or demolished, this church built by Sir Richard Shirlye, whose singular praise it was to do the best things in the worst of times.

Mr. Speaker, while these may not truly be termed the worst of times for the U.S. Congress, if the reputation of the legislative branch of the Federal Government is the sole criteria, certainly there have been better ones. Hardly a day passes that I do not read in the paper, see on television, or hear on the radio, some commentary or editorial demeaning and degrading the quality of the Congress. Some of that negative and frequently vicious criticism is unavoidable, but an appreciable amount of it can be laid at the doorstep of the Capitol for our own ineptitude, negligence and willingness to cut corners to suit our convenience.

Just a year ago, according to a Harris survey, only 18 out of each 100 persons interviewed had confidence in the U.S. Congress. As recently as 2 months ago we lost one-half of the 18. Put another way, 91 out of 100 Americans have lost their faith and trust in the Congress.

What bothers me most about this situation can be summed up rather briefly: A reputation once damaged is not easily restored, and restoration takes time—a very long time—and the reputation of this distinguished body—which in my opinion is the finest legislative body in the world—is at its very lowest.

But once in a great while there comes an opportunity to take a dramatic step toward restoration of congressional character, a step that would go a long way toward bringing public recognition of the quality that is truly present here in the Capitol. Such an opportunity is presented to us in the form of the 1976 amendments to the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1974, particularly the House version thereof. As one of our colleagues eloquently stated in a recent interview published in the local paper: "The times call for uncommon honesty" and uncommon honesty is exactly what is called for in the House version, and in particular section 103 of the House amendments.

And unless we in the House really fight to enforce our will and compel the Senate to yield, we will have lost this critical opportunity and further degrade our stature and diminish our prestige.

I direct your attention to section 103 (a) which changes the recordkeeping requirements to allow political committees to accept contributions of less than $50 without having to record one iota of information about the contributor. This is a loophole that would allow a donor to make a series of $49 contributions without having them reported. The conference committee's bill set up a three-tiered system for reporting contributions. The political committees would be required to file full reports of contributions over $100 with the FEC.

They would maintain their own internal records of contributions between $50 and $100, and would have to report any aggregation of these contributions exceeding $100 to the FEC. But the committees would not have to record any information about contributions less than $50, whether they are anonymous or not.

We must all ask ourselves what was the original intent of the Federal Election Campaign Act? In my estimation, Congress intended that candidates for Federal political offices be insulated from pressures which may be exerted by large financial contributors by placing a ceiling on the amount which an individual may contribute to a political committee. This bill sets that limit at $1,000. The original legislation also sought to disclose the source of political contributions by requiring campaign committees to keep records of all contributions in excess of $10.

The proponents of the change allowing anonymous contributions of up to $50 insist that campaign committees have been shackled with paperwork and time-consuming verification procedures for minimal contributions. I will agree that recordkeeping is a complicated task, but I cannot go along with the notion that it is an unnecessary, burdensome task. Do not we all keep records of who our contributors are for future campaign reference? Are we willing to forego keeping records on the $30 or $40 contributor and risk running into difficulties later on when we discover that he or she has contributed more than $100, and thus must be reported to the FEC?

These are basic questions which we, as participants in this highly complicated election process must face everyday. Are you really going to realize a net reduction in paperwork from this provision? Are the national campaign committees, with their automated data storing banks really going to benefit? I assert that this paperwork is fixed to a large degree and that the only real gain which we may all achieve is that we just will not have to be as accurate as has been hitherto required.

Now let us examine the possibility for fraud which this provision opens. The FEC, in an opinion of counsel, let us accept contributions of less than $10 without having to fully identify the contributor by name, address, and occupation. This is a sensible sum, a typical donation, given both through the mails and at "pass the hat" affairs. But $50 contributions represent a different situation entirely. It would take only 21 anonymous contributions for an individual to effectively escape the $1,000 limitation on personal contributions stipulated in section 320 of this same act. There is absolutely nothing in this bill which protects a candidate from excessive padding of his campaign coffers in this way. Again, we must ask ourselves, are we abiding by the original intent of Federal election and campaign reform—disclosure of the source of contributions a candidate receives?

I urge all my colleagues in the House to consider the ramifications of this provision and to question whether this conference report addresses the campaign excesses of the past and provides a mechanism for avoiding any future excesses.

If the 94th Congress wishes to leave an epitaph not unlike that of Sir Richard Shirley, it should defeat the conference report and insist upon one that does not overlook what campaign reform is all about—namely, disclosure.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. STEIGER).

(Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I regretfully find myself in the position of having to oppose this conference report.

The effect of it, if passed and signed, would be, one, to further inhibit the ability of the Commission to do its work, and two, to further favor incumbents over challengers.

Perhaps most serious, Mr. Speaker, it also puts Congress in the posture of discouraging the American people from fully participating in the political process.

In at least two ways, the conference bill places a chill on the participation of the citizen in our elections. First, it sets a ridiculously low threshold on the amount a citizen can spend—no more than $100—without personally filing a report to the authorities. Certainly this provision serves to discriminate against the individual who prefers to exercise his or her political rights through independent expenditures. It also enables incumbent officeholders to easily spot all constituents who may be spending modest sums to aid the candidacy of an opponent. I can see no other reason for this specially designated threshold of $100.

The conference bill also violates the first amendment rights of the private citizen by saying one may not finance the distribution or republication in whole or in part of any campaign ad or other materials used by a candidate or the candidate's agents, without it falling under the contribution limits. This provision clearly violates the spirit of the Supreme Court's decision of January 30.

I feel it necessary to remind my colleagues of the most important ruling in that decision. The Court said:

> The First Amendment denies government the power to determine that spending to promote one's political views is wasteful, excessive, or unwise. In the free society ordained by our Constitution it is not the government but the people—individually as citizens and candidates and collectively as associations and political committees—who must retain control over the quantity and range of debate on public issues in a political campaign.

Mr. Speaker, the conference report fails to heed that ruling. It is a bad bill.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TREEN).

(Mr. TREEN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TREEN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's yielding.

I asked for the time for the purpose of asking whether or not the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS) or the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS) would be kind enough to respond to a grave concern which I have about a conference report provision having to do with eligibility for matching Federal funds for Presidential candidates.

Under the bill—as agreed to by the conference—if a Presidential candidate receives less than 10 percent of the primary vote in two consecutive elections, he cannot thereafter receive any matching funds. As I understand it, in some States a candidate can be placed on the primary ballot whether he wants it or not. Also, how is one to determine what a "primary" is for the purposes of this provision? On Saturday, Presidential primary contests for delegates were conducted in Texas and Louisiana. But, there was no statewide primary vote in either State on which to determine the percentages obtained by the various candidates.

I just think it grossly unfair, and repugnant to our notions about election opportunity, to withhold matching funds if a candidate fails to receive more than 10 percent of the vote in two successive primaries. I will vote against the conference report because of this fundamental inequity.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCFALL). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume in order to make a quick response to the statement just made by the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TREEN). He contends the elimination on some Presidential candidates is inequitable. Equities are not absolutes. They are balanced. We balanced the equities here and resolved the problem of candidates receiving public money who have failed to demonstrate any national following over a period of time. Our solution may be imperfect, but it is not bad.

Mr. Speaker, we are going to vote in just a moment. I believe an affirmative vote on this conference report is a blow for better election laws. What we have tendered for your approval today is better legislation than the 1974 act. It is a better bill than the 1971 act. I urge an "aye" vote on the conference report.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. DENT), the chairman of the Subcommittee on Elections.

(Mr. DENT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, it has been a long time since we started talking about this legislation in our subcommittee, and the subcommittee has had many hours and many days of hearings. I can honestly say that this is not a good bill. It is not a bad bill, but it is a fair bill, considering how many experts there are in this particular field of endeavor legislatively. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS) stated on the floor that there were 435 experts, but that when we got to conference we found out there were 535 experts and some of the 100 experts in the other body were equally an expert, or they thought they were.

No group can write this kind of legislation without having some parts of it that may be contested, debated, and probably changed in future laws. But the real thrust of this legislation is to try to put together something that will give us an opportunity to be able to run without harassment and hopefully with some idea being built up in the minds of the people of these United States that Congress is an important body, that its Members, in general, are good, honest citizens, and that the brush that has been painted with so broadly may now be narrowed down to those amongst us who may be at fault.

So the legislation tries to limit the best it can the kind of contributions that one can get and the amount that one can get. I for one have a very sincere opinion that we will never be able to have real election law enforcement until we can find some way to prohibit the use of excessive funds.

Our committee can give the Members example after example, by chapter and by verse of campaigns where half a million dollars was spent between two opponents trying to get a seat in the Congress of the United States. That does not do Congress any good.

There is another phase we will have to get into and I am sorry we could not do too much about it, and that is concerning the FEC, and it is significant in view of the fact that in all the campaigns that my attention has been directed to that my attention was also called to the fact that a great number of violations were committed by the media on equal time and on fair treatment and all those sort of things, such as when a candidate will be given an hour's time on the so-called Public Service Broadcasting System and then the interrogator will direct questions to that candidate, questions that we know that that candidate had no knowledge of whatsoever, and would have had no idea what the question was all about except by preparation before the so-called Public Service Broadcast went on.

I merely point out these items to the Members that the Congress will have to be dealing with in the future, and I think that perhaps these changes can be made, but at least, in my humble opinion, this may be my last primary.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS of OHIO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to briefly answer the statement made by the distinguished minority leader when he said that this was changing the rules in the middle of the game. Let me say that at any time the Commission issues a new rule that that is changing the rules, or introducing something new. As a matter of fact, any time the Congress passes a new law that changes anything that is in the present law, then that is changing the rule in the middle of the game for somebody. So if we adopted that theory, and carried it out to its ultimate end, we would never pass any legislation at all—and maybe that would be a good thing. I am not here to argue that, but its application to this particular legislation alone in my judgment just does not lodge.

Mr. DENT. I thank the gentleman.

We need not go to sleep and believe that this is a last effort. We will be changing the rules again and again and again as the problems come up that always do when we put into action any piece of legislation.

I want to say to the gentlewoman from New Jersey that we did not in any way, in my opinion anyway—and I believe the members of the conference and the members of both committees that have tangled with this problem for a long time know—cut down or made the Commission less effective. Perhaps we ought to look in every one of our jurisdictions and the committees that we serve on. Something that is becoming a great issue in America today is the rampant runaway activities of the bureaus and the agencies created within them. We may not realize it, but today one of the issues in the last campaign that just came through was the issue of bureaucracy, as if every individual Member in this Congress has something he can say collectively to the bureaucrats. We cannot do it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this conference report on the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976. While many of us would have preferred the cleaner, quicker and more orderly route of simply reconstituting the Federal Election Commission along the lines suggested by the Supreme Court, I would suggest we can no longer afford the luxury of that opinion unless we want to start from scratch and risk throwing the whole present campaign process into total jeopardy and confusion.

In reviewing this conference report, I am impressed by the extent to which the legislation adopted by the House has been even further improved. I think our conferees are to be commended on presenting us with a report which should be acceptable to an overwhelming majority in both Houses and to the President. Our earlier fears about attempts to undermine the independence of the FEC have been, for the most part, allayed by changes made in the House and in conference to restore the FEC to full strength. The bill before us today is a far different animal than the gutted and defanged campaign watchdog which originally emerged from the House Administration Committee.

Mr. Speaker, no one, including myself, is totally happy with every aspect of this bill. That is the nature of any compromise. But I think we have to judge this final package on the basis of two criteria: First, does it give the FEC sufficient independence and authority to carry out its original mandate; and second, does it permit the full spectrum of interested individuals and groups sufficient freedom and flexibility to participate in and contribute to the American electoral process. I think this conference report addresses both criteria in the affirmative.

Mr. Speaker, a third factor involved in our decision today is what impact any further delay on this necessary legislation will have on the present ongoing campaigns. While it is regrettable that we must be legislating under the pressure of Supreme Court deadlines and in the very midst of an election campaign, it is nevertheless a matter over which we have no control and for which we have no alternative. That is not to say the Congress could not have dealt with this in a more expeditious fashion; I think we could have accomplished the most pressing mandate—simple reconstitution—in a much shorter time period than 3 months. But that is no longer what is at issue here. What is at issue is whether the Congress and the President can now bring this matter to a final resolution without further distorting the present campaign and without further contributing to public doubts and cynicism about our real intentions. We erected a very intricate and precise mechanism for partial public financing of Presidential primary campaigns in the 1974 Federal election reform law. Candidates have planned their campaigns on the basis of that source of funding. Any attempt to block putting that financing mechanism back on track now, no matter how well-intentioned or justified, would be perceived by the public as playing the most dangerous game of politics with our political process—the very type of games we attempted to outlaw with these Watergate reforms in the first place.

Mr. Speaker, I urge this House to give its overwhelming approval to this conference report, just as I have urged the President to sign it when it reaches his desk.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT OFFERED BY MR. DEVINE

Mr. DEVINE. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the conference report?

Mr. DEVINE. In its present form, most assuredly, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DEVINE moves to recommit the conference report on the bill, S. 3065, to the committee of conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to recommit.

There was no objection.

The motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 291, nays 81, not voting 60, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 9721, AUTHORIZING APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE INTER-AMERICAN DEVELOPMENT BANK AND THE AFRICAN DEVELOPMENT BANK

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 9721) to provide for increased participation by the United States in the Inter-American Development Bank, to provide for the entry of nonregional members and the Bahamas and Guyana in the Inter-American Development Bank, to provide for the participation of the United States in the African Development Fund, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and request a conference with the Senate thereon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. REUSS, GONZALEZ, STEPHENS, and TSONGAS, Mrs. BOGGS, and Mr. JOHNSON of Pennsylvania, and Mr. HYDE.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 7656, BEEF RESEARCH AND INFORMATION ACT

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 7656) to enable cattle producers to establish, finance, and carry out a coordinated program of research, producer and consumer information, and promotion to improve, maintain, and develop markets for cattle, beef, and beef products, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of April 15, 1976.)

Mr. FOLEY (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the statement be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished vice chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and chairman of the House conferees, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. POAGE).

(Mr. POAGE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, the matter life of the permit, which in my amendment here would be a life of 10 years.

The Secretary presently could do that. They do not, as a matter of practice, but they could do it, I believe, under present law.

This would say they can issue a 10-year permit and then these rules would apply.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. President, I am strongly opposed to this amendment. I believe it is unnecessary from the standpoint of the grazing permittees and would be unfortunate from the standpoint of the public interest. As I understand the reason for this amendment it is to provide greater security to grazing permittees. However, I am at a loss to understand why such permittees presently do not have such security. The Taylor Grazing Act has perhaps the strongest preference rights language of any statute dealing with permits for use of public lands. Owners of base ranches have almost an assured right to permits and thereafter have preference rights for each renewal. I have not found in my tenure as chairman of the Environment and Land Resources Subcommittee any significant number of incidents demonstrating of a lack of security in grazing permits.

In addition, I would point out to my colleagues that the Taylor Grazing Act permits, although it does not require, 10-year permits. The language of the Cannon amendment requires 10-year permits but also would allow cancellation or termination of those permits during their life for a number of reasons. I cannot see any significant differences between the Cannon amendment and existing law in so far as providing additional security to permittees.

However, until the Department of the Interior completes the task of preparing allotment management plans for its grazing lands, I believe any permit statute provision requiring lengthier terms for permits should not be enacted. Upon the completion of the allotment management plans, when the range has been adequately planned and allotments have been established on the true capability of the range, I believe we can properly consider lengthier permit terms.

Subsection (d) of the permit would require the payment to a permittee for the authorized improvements on permit land whenever a permit is canceled in whole or in part. To a large extent this would be nothing more than double accounting. In effect the formula for computing grazing fees already takes into account improvements on the land and is adjusted therefor. In addition, the permittee depreciates those improvements in the payment of taxes. Both the administration and environmentalists are opposed to this provision in that it is regarded as the first step towards making the permits a right rather than a privilege requiring compensation whenever a permit is terminated or canceled.

Mr. President, this entire provision is found in the House version of the BLM Organic Act. It is in that form opposed by both the administration and environmental communities. Yet the amendment before us today does not even include several safeguard provisions found in the House version. For example, it would not permit the establishment of shorter permit terms when "it will be in the best interest of sound land management." In addition it would not tie permits to either the land use planning of the BLM or the requirements of allotment management plans.

Mr. President, I would hope we would not adopt the amendment of the Senator from Nevada. I cannot imagine greater security than is now given permittees under the Taylor Grazing Act. I know that when ranches change hands they have fee land and permit and, the purchaser takes into consideration and raises the purchase price because of the permit land, even though the permits are on a year-to-year basis.

Frankly, I believe the present scheme offers the flexibility and offers the security required. I would hope that we do not change the system at the present time.

I am also very fearful that if the amendment of the Senator from Nevada is adopted, the administration will veto the bill, as the administration opposes his position. I am very anxious to get on with improving the rangelands. For the reasons stated, I hope we will not adopt the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Nevada.

I yield the floor.

Mr. METCALF. Will the Senator yield for a unanimous consent request on a different matter?

Mr. HASKELL. I yield.

ORDER FOR EXTENSION OF TIME FOR FILING COMMITTEE REPORTS ON S. 713

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, on April 14, 1976, on behalf of the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, I filed a favorable report on S. 713, the Deep Seabed Hard Minerals Act. Pursuant to a unanimous consent agreement made upon introduction of S. 713, the bill was then jointly referred to the Committees on Armed Services, Commerce, and Foreign Relations for 30 days.

Under that agreement, the bill would have to be returned to the Senate Calendar on May 14, 1976. However, I have been informed that the chairman of the respective committees are agreed that this time agreement would not allow their committees adequate time for fair and adequate consideration of this important piece of legislation. Consequently, it has been requested that the original unanimous consent agreement, concerning referral of S. 713 to the three committees, be changed to allow them until June 2, 1976, to consider S. 713. Mr. President, the Senate Interior Committee has no objection to this extension of time.

Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the period for rereferral of S. 713 to the Committees on Armed Services, Commerce, and Foreign Relations be extended until June 2, 1976.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

NATIONAL RANGELANDS POLICY ACT OF 1976

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2555) to establish a national rangelands rehabilitation and protection program.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order at this time to ask for the yeas and nays on the Cannon amendment, the McClure amendment, and on final passage with a single show of hands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I call for the yeas and nays on all three, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that while there would be a 15-minute limitation on the first rollcall vote, the next two votes, and incidentally, they will be in rapid succession, be limited to 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. For the further information of the Senate, it is anticipated that without question following the disposal of this bill, if not before, we will take up the conference report on the Federal Election Commission.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the vote on the Cannon and McClure amendments the Senate then go to the committee amendment as amended and then to the third reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That third reading will be immediately followed by a rollcall vote on final passage and that rule XII be waived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

VITIATION OF ORDER FOR ROLLCALL VOTE ON FINAL PASSAGE—S. 2555

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, after talking with the interested Members, I ask unanimous consent that the order entered for a rollcall vote on final passage be vitiated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS SUBJECT TO THE CALL OF THE CHAIR

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess subject to the call of the chair. I make that request because if, before 3:30, the Federal Election Commission conference report comes over from the House of Representatives, it would be the leaders' intention at that time, with Senator CANNON in attendance and Senator HATFIELD in attendance, to call up that conference report.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 2:41 p.m., recessed, subject to the call of the Chair; whereupon, at 2:49 p.m. the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. HELMS).

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1976—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the conference report on the Federal Election Commission be called up at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so orderd.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on S. 3065 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HELMS). The report will be stated by title.

The second assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3065) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for its administration by a Federal Election Commission appointed in accordance with the requirements of the Constitution, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by a majority of the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

(The conference report is printed in the RECORD of April 28, 1976, beginning at page H3576.)

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

ORDER FOR VOTE TO OCCUR ON CANNON AMENDMENT AT 3:30 P.M. FOLLOWED BY THE VOTE ON McCLURE AMENDMENT

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the Cannon amendment occur at the hour of 3:30 p.m., followed by a vote on the McClure amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1976—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate continued with the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3065) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for its administration by a Federal Election Commission appointed in accordance with the requirements of the Constitution, and for other purposes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, in order that Senators may be notified that the conference report on the Federal Election Commission bill is pending, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Claudia Ingram of my staff be accorded the privilege of the floor during the course of debate on the conference report on the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Ed Hall of the committee staff be accorded the privilege of the floor during consideration of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the consideration of this bill, Andrew Gleason, Larry Smith, Barbara Conroy, Karleen Millnick, and James Schoener have the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the consideration of this bill, Bob Perkins, of Senator BROCK's staff, and Debbie Roberts, of my staff, have the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Peggy Parish and Bill Cochrane have the privilege of the floor during the consideration of this measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, on March 24, 1976, the Senate passed S. 3065 by a vote of 55 to 28 amending the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971. On April 1, 1976, the House of Representatives adopted amendments to S. 3065 which the Senate subsequently disagreed to on April 5, asking for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. Senators HOWARD CANNON, CLAIBORNE PELL, ROBERT C. BYRD, MARK HATFIELD, and HUGH SCOTT represented the Senate at the ensuing conference.

The conferees, after meeting on April 7, 8, 12, 13, 27, and 28, 1976, recommend that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House and agree to the amended text of S. 3065, as approved by the conferees and set forth in the report of the conference. The report of the conferees was approved by the House of Representatives today.

The details of the amendments agreed to by the conferees are set forth in the conference report and I will not attempt to review all of them at this time. Many of the matters which were debated and voted upon on the Senate floor are retained in the conference substitute. Some, however, met with strong disagreement from the House conferees and a compromise satisfactory to the conferees on both sides was reached.

S. 3065 as amended in conference represents a fair compromise of the differences of both Houses of Congress. It is also legislation which reaffirms the commitment of the Congress to the improvement of our electoral process, the very foundation of our democratic system of government.

This legislation remedies the constitutional defects which the Supreme Court found to exist in the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974, and thus creates an independent six-member commission appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to administer, interpret, and enforce the Federal election campaign laws of our country.

This legislation also addressed other matters necessitated by the Supreme Court's decision by codifying a number of the Court's interpretations of the campaign finance laws, and filling gaps and vacuum areas resulting from the Court's having voided virtually all limitations on the expenditure of funds in election campaigns.

The conference substitute requires, as did both the Senate bill and House amendments, political committees and persons to report independent expenditures in excess of $100 in a calendar year expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate. Such a reporting requirement was upheld by the Supreme Court and is present in a less definitive form in existing law. In addition, the Federal Election Commission will be required to prepare and issue current indices which will enable the public and other candidates to know how much money is being spent on behalf of particular candidates.

With regard to reporting requirements, S. 3065 as it passed the Senate required corporations, labor organizations, and other membership organizations to report expenditures directly attributable to communications to stockholders and members, explicitly advocating the election or defeat of clearly identified candidates in excess of $1,000 per candidate per election.

The House amendment did not contain a similar provision. The conference substitute retains the principal of such reports, not required under existing law, and provides that the cost of such communications devoted to express advocacy of the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate shall be reported if such costs exceed $2,000 per election.

However, the cost of a communication will not be reportable if the communication is primarily devoted to subjects other than the advocacy of the election or defeat of a candidate. In adopting this substitute, the conferees agreed upon certain guidelines which are set forth in the conference report.

The conferees accepted the provisions of the Senate bill setting a $5,000 threshold for waiving quarterly reports of contributions and expenditures of candidates in nonelection years. The House amendment had a $10,000 figure. The conferees also adopted the Senate proposal that committee treasurers and candidates who demonstrate that best efforts have been used to obtain and submit information will be deemed in compliance with the reporting requirements of the act. The conference bill further provides that records need only be kept as to the identity of contributors in excess of $50.

The conference substitute combines many of the enforcement provisions contained in both the Senate bill and the House amendment, giving the Federal Election Commission expanded and more varied civil enforcement powers. As these are described in detail in the conference report I will not discuss them at this time. However, I would welcome any questions my colleagues might have with respect to these enforcement provisions.

The conferees agreed to a modification of the advisory opinion procedures of the Commission. An advisory opinion may be requested by any Federal officeholder, any candidate for Federal office, any political committee, or the national committee of any political party, concerning the application of a general rule of law stated in the act, or the application of a general rule of law prescribed by the Commission as a rule or regulation, to a specific factual situation. Section 108(a) of the conference bill prohibits the Commission from proposing general rule of law in any form other than as a rule or regulation pursuant to the congressional review procedures of the act. General rulemaking was never intended to be the function of the advisory opinion process. This section clarifies the intent of the Congress in this respect, and requires the Commission to conform their prior advisory opinions to these provisions within 90 days of enactment.

The conference bill prohibits opinions of an advisory nature other than pursuant to the advisory opinion procedure. The bill also expands those who would be able to rely upon an advisory opinion to include any person involved in any specific transaction or activity which is indistinguishable in all its material aspects from the transaction or activity with respect to which the advisory opinion is issued.

The conference substitute amends the procedure for congressional review of Commission rules and regulations by clarifying that Congress may disapprove any provision or series of interrelated provisions which state a single separable rule of law. The proposal in the Senate bill shortening the review time was deleted by the conferees, thus retaining the 30-legislative-day period of existing law.

With respect to limitations on contributions, the conference substitute is a fair compromise between the Senate bill and the House amendment. A person, as defined in the act, will be subject to the existing limitation of $1,000 per election per Federal candidate. As under present law, earmarked contributions and contributions made to a candidate's authorized political committees are considered to be contributions to that candidate. A person may also not make contributions to any political committee established and maintained by a national political party which in the aggregate exceed $20,000 in a calendar year. A person is further prohibited from making contributions to any other political committee which in the aggregate exceed $5,000 in a calendar year. Individuals would still be subject to the $25,000 aggregate limitation on all contributions in a calendar year in existing law.

A multicandidate political committee, as defined in the act, may contribute a total of $5,000 to a Federal candidate and his authorized political committee in any election campaign. A multicandidate political committee would be limited to an aggregate of $15,000 in a calendar year which it could give to any political committee of a national political party and to an aggregate of $5,000 in a calendar year it could give to any other political committee. These latter limitations, however, would not apply to transfers between political committees of the same political party.

The provisions permitting the Republican or Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committees and the national committee of a political party to make a contribution of $20,000 to a candidate to the Senate in a calendar year was amended to reduce this amount to $17,500.

The other provisions of the Senate bill and the House amendment relating to limitations on contributions and certain expenditures were similar and are reflected in the conference substitute.

The conference substitute also contains a fair compromise between the Senate bill and the House amendment pertaining to the solicitation by corporations and labor organizations of voluntary contributions to separate segregated funds. It follows the structure of the Senate bill, permitting corporations to solicit voluntary contributions from stockholders and executive or administrative personnel, and labor organizations to solicit their members. The conference bill would clarify the definition of executive or administrative personnel to include individuals employed by a corporation who are paid on a salary, rather than hourly, basis and who have policymaking, managerial, professional, or supervisory responsibilities. In addition to the above, corporations and labor organizations would be able to solicit all employees and stockholders twice a year in writing by mail to their residences with the proviso that the solicitation be designed so that the party making the solicitation cannot determine who makes a contribution of $50 or less as a result of such solicitation and who does not make such a contribution.

The conference bill adopted the House provisions giving trade associations rights to solicit stockholders and executive or administrative personnel of member corporations.

The conference report, at page 63, states as follows:

> The conference substitute follows the House amendment with regard to the solicitation by a trade association of stockholders and executive or administrative personnel (and their families) of a member corporation of such trade association. The conference substitute contains the provision of the Senate bill permitting a membership organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock, or a separate segregated fund established by such organizations, to solicit contributions to such a fund from members of such organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock. In light of the fact subsection (b)(4)(D) governs solicitations by a trade association of the stockholders and executive or administrative personnel of a member organization, then the term "membership organization" in subsection (b)(4)(C) is not intended to include a trade association which is made up of corporations.

A question has come up as to the purpose of the phrase "the term 'membership organization' in subsection (b)(4)(C) is not intended to include a trade association which is made up of corporations."

First of all, this language was included to preclude a trade association, which is also a membership organization, and which desires to solicit the stockholders and employees of a member corporation, from avoiding the limitations of 321(b)(4)(D), which limit such solicitation to stockholders and executive or administrative personnel of the member corporation, and further provides that the member corporation must consent to such solicitation and only give its consent to one trade association in a calendar year.

Second, it applies only to trade associations with corporate members and is intended to regulate the solicitation of the stockholders and executive or administrative personnel of such corporate members. A trade association which is a membership organization may, of course, solicit its other members, such as individuals, partnerships, et cetera under 321(b)(4)(C).

In most other respects the provisions of the Senate bill related to corporate and labor union political action committees were retained, except the definition of stockholder, which was omitted, leaving the interpretation of this term to general corporate law.

The conference bill contains limitations on honorariums, increasing the existing limit per speech from $1,000 to $2,000 and the yearly aggregate from $15,000 to $25,000. In addition, actual travel and subsistence expenses for the recipient of the honorariums and spouse or aide as well as amounts paid or incurred for any agent's fees or commissions are explicitly excluded from the honorarium limitations.

Finally, the conference bill includes the provisions of both the Senate bill and the House amendment pertaining to the termination of matching funds for inactive Presidential primary campaigns and the return of excess public funds not used to defray qualified campaign expenses.

In conclusion, this legislation corrects many of the defects, inequities, and inconsistencies in the campaign finance laws which the Congress and others have observed since passage of the 1974 amendments. It clearly reflects the original intent of the Congress in 1971 and 1974, and at the same time, restructures the campaign finance laws, both to give the Federal Election Commission more extensive and flexible civil enforcement and regulatory powers, as well as to provide for a more balanced and equitable operation of these laws.

Mr. President, as this legislation has been extensively debated in both Houses of the Congress, it is now of critical importance that the Senate act expeditiously to approve the report of the conferees.

I would be happy to yield to any questions or comments on any part of the conference report after first yielding to the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD).

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President that a brief summary that I have had prepared here citing the key provisions of the proposed Federal Election Campaign Act amendments as reported by the Senate and House conference, be reprinted at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KEY PROVISIONS OF PROPOSED FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1976, S. 3065, AS REPORTED BY SENATE-HOUSE CONFERENCE, APRIL 28, 1976

1. Reconstitution of Federal Election Commission:

Composed of 6 members, no more than 3 of whom may be affiliated with the same political party, plus the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House, ex officio, without the power to vote.

4 members to take major action.

Members may not engage in any other business, vocation or employment. One year to terminate such activity.

All outstanding proposed rules and regulations must be submitted to Congress for review after effective date of Act.

2. Definitional Changes:

Contract or promise to pay must be in writing to be a contribution.

Legal and accounting services rendered to national committee and to candidate to assure compliance with Act, are not contributions or expenditures.

Contribution does not include gifts, etc., to national or state committees of political party designated for construction or purchase of office facilities not used for campaign purposes. Must be reported, however.

3. Recordkeeping and Reporting:

Detailed records required only for contributions in excess of $50 rather than in excess of $10.

Demonstration of best efforts by political committee treasurer or candidate will be deemed compliance with reporting requirements.

In non-election years, candidates need file quarterly reports only if contributions or expenditures or both were in excess of $5,000 in any quarter.

Reporting required for independent expenditures in excess of $100 in support of, or in opposition to, a candidate.

Reporting of cost of communications to stockholders and members by corporations, labor unions, and other membership organizations advocating election or defeat of candidate in excess of $2,000 per election.

4. Powers of Commission:

Commission given primary exclusive jurisdiction for civil enforcement of the Act, and the public financing provisions of the Internal Revenue Code.

5. Advisory Opinions:

Advisory opinions shall relate to the application of a general rule of law stated in the Act or prescribed by rule or regulation, to a specific factual situation.

General rule of law may be initially proposed only as rules and regulations subject to Congressional review and disapproval. General rules of law may not be stated through advisory opinion procedures.

Advisory opinions may be relied upon by person involved in transaction or activity of advisory opinion and person involved in transaction or activity, indistinguishable in all its material aspects from transaction or activity of advisory opinion.

6. Congressional Review of Regulations:

In reviewing regulations proposed by the Commission, the Congress may disapprove any provision or series of interrelated provisions which states a single separable rule of law.

7. Enforcement:

New detailed enforcement procedures involve: notarizing complaints; notifying persons involved of alleged violations; conducting expeditious investigations; providing an opportunity for a person under investigation to rebut; requiring the Commission to correct violations by informal methods of conciliation; giving the Commission power to bring civil action when conciliation fails; imposing of civil fines by a court or by the Commission as a condition to a conciliation agreement; giving the Commission power to refer a criminal violation which is knowing and willful directly to Attorney General without conciliation.

8. Contributions and Expenditures Limitations:

Persons may contribute to a candidate and his authorized political committee up to $1,000 in the aggregate per election; up to $20,000 in a calendar year to a political committee of a national political party; up to $5,000 to any other political committee in a calendar year.

Multicandidate political committees may contribute to a candidate and his authorized political committees, up to $5,000 in the aggregate per election; up to $15,000 in a calendar year to a political committee of a national political party; up to $5,000 in a calendar year to any other political committee.

Limitations regarding committee contributions do not apply to transfers between national, state, district, or local committees of the same political party.

Provisions to curtail vertical proliferation of contributions by political committees.

Republican or Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committees or the national committee of a political party, or any combination of such committees, may contribute up to $17,500 to a candidate for the Senate in an election year.

Expenditure limits retained; for Presidential candidates who accept public funds; and for national and state committees of political parties.

9. Transfer of a Number of Title 18 Criminal Provisions Related to Federal Elections to the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

10. Contributions by Corporations and Labor Organizations:

General solicitation of contributions by corporations is limited to stockholders, and executive or administrative personnel and their families.

The term "executive or administrative personnel" means individuals employed by a corporation who are paid on a salary rather than on an hourly basis, and who have policy-making, managerial, professional or supervisory responsibilities.

General solicitation by labor unions is limited to union members and their families.

Both corporations and unions may twice during a year solicit by mail all employees, officers, stockholders, union members, and their families.

Trade associations may solicit stockholders and executive or administrative personnel of member corporations with limitation of one trade association per corporation.

11. Honorarium Limitations:

$2,000 limitation for any appearance, speech, or article, and $25,000 total calendar year limitation.

Actual travel and subsistence expenses for recipient and spouse or aide, as well as amounts paid or incurred for any agent's fees or commissions are excluded from the limitations.

12. Criminal Penalties:

Criminal penalty for a knowing and willful violation of the Act which involves the making, receiving, or reporting of any contributions or expenditures having a value in the aggregate of $1,000 or more during a calendar year. For certain sections, the amount involved is less.

Fine up to $25,000 or 300% of contribution or expenditure involved, imprisonment for up to 1 year, or both.

A conciliation agreement may be used as evidence of the defendant's lack of intent or knowledge to commit the offense in a criminal action brought with respect to the specific act, or failure to act, which is the subject of the conciliation agreement.

13. Termination of Payments for Lack of Demonstrable Support and Return of Funds:

A Presidential candidate loses eligibility to receive public matching funds if he receives less than 10% of his party's votes cast for all Presidential candidates in two successive primaries in which he authorized his name to be placed on the ballot, or in which he failed to certify that he was not an active candidate.

Candidates who cease to actively seek nomination or election in one or more states must return public funds not used for qualified campaign expenses.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the Federal Election Commission has been without operating authority for almost 6 weeks. Presidential candidates who entered the 1976 Presidential primaries with the understanding that Federal matching funds would be available to them if certain criteria were met soon found themselves without matching funds in the middle of some important races. One can only speculate whether the absence of Federal funds truly served as a setback to their respective campaigns. One need not speculate, however, which Presidential candidates were hampered by the lack of funds, since the results in Saturday's Texas primary showed that the Republican Presidential race is still very much alive.

The Supreme Court and the President of the United States urged the Democratic-controlled Congress to enact a simple bill providing for the reconstitution of the Federal Election Commission. The enactment of such a bill would have taken only a few hours instead of weeks. Such a bill would have permitted the steady flow of matching funds to Presidential candidates of both parties. However, the majority part of the Congress seized upon the Supreme Court decision in Buckley against Valeo as an opportunity to remake the election laws in a manner more to their party's liking.

Mr. President, I originally supported the concept of enacting a bill providing for the simple reconstitution of the Federal Election Commission. Upon seeing that a simple reconstitution was impossible, I worked toward getting the best possible bill through the Senate, and through the Senate-House conference. Considering the fact that the minority party does have rights, but not the votes, I believe the best possible bill from a Democratic-controlled Congress has been achieved. There are provisions in the conference bill which are not to my liking. But I am realistic enough to believe the Republican Party had better take what it can get when it is the minority party. Mr. President, I urge my Republican colleagues to study this measure very carefully, and then consider whether there is any possibility of getting a better bill from this Congress. I believe that once they have taken such a prospect into consideration, they will decide to vote in favor of the adoption of this conference bill.

Mr. President, I would have liked to have signed my name to a conference report providing for the simple reconstitution of the commission. But it was the will of the majority party not to take this road. After weeks of debate and consideration, the Senate has the opportunity to vote on a measure to reestablish the Federal Election Commission. While this measure somewhat weakens the commission, I suggest to my colleagues that if we are to have any type of independent watchdog machinery in operation for the November elections then we had better support this measure. If we do not, if the Senate rejects the conference bill, there is no way of knowing how much more time will be required to formulate a new bill, if one is formulated at all.

Therefore, I urge the support of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. PACKWOOD. I wonder if the chairman or Senator HATFIELD would respond to a few questions? I ask them for clarification of my own mind.

Mr. President, we have changed this bill on union reporting for money spent specifically advocating the election or defeat of a specific candidate from $1,000 per individual election to $2,000 aggregate, as I understand it.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator is correct.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Then we said specifically in the law, and the report says on page 63:

> The conferees agreed that section 301(f)(4)(C), as amended by the conference substitute, makes reporting requirements applicable * * *

I assume there, because there is no other reference to reporting requirements, that we are talking about section 304(f) of the same reporting requirement that all other political campaigns have to report, under the same timetables and all of that, once the threshold is reached. I realize there is no reporting until we reach the threshold. Then they follow the same reporting requirements that everybody else follows?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, provided they come within that limitation.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. The $2,000.

Mr. PACKWOOD. They must qualify both in terms of the substance of what they are doing and the $2,000 threshold.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator is correct.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Once they reach that, the FEC makes them report just like everybody else has to report.

Now, I am curious——

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point? I think the chairman is correct, but I think that ought to be further clarified. That matter was not specifically discussed, so this assumption, I think, is a reasonable assumption, but if the chairman thinks I am wrong I would like to be corrected. It is my recollection that this question which the Senator has just addressed himself was never specifically debated in the committee.

Mr. PACKWOOD. That is the reason I asked it because I come to the same conclusion the Senator and the chairman come to because I do not know what other conclusion you reach because it makes reference to reporting, and there is only one reporting law we are talking about, and there are no other reporting regulations one is required to meet. So I assume there is no——

Mr. HATFIELD. There is no legislative history, to my knowledge, that would give this other interpretation.

Mr. CANNON. There was initially no reporting requirement for that provision at all.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Right.

Mr. CANNON. The Supreme Court said they had the right to communicate with their members, and the Senator offered the amendment, as I recall——

Mr. PACKWOOD. Right.

Mr. CANNON. Which the Senate adopted. We required reporting for amounts over $1,000. The conference changed that to the amount of $2,000, but a cumulative amount, so it would apply even though it might have been for several candidates, and you would not separate it out. For example, if you had three candidates and $3,000 total expenditure even though the expenditure for each candidate might be $1,000, it is the cumulative figure of $2,000 which would trigger the reportng requirement.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Then, on the trade association and the requirement that a business can only be solicited by one trade association, in what manner does the corporation give that assent? Can they file a letter once a year and say that X Trade Association can solicit it or how does it work?

Mr. CANNON. We do not prescribe here what the manner of consent ought to be. I would assume that perhaps the FEC would prescribe a rule that would apply generally to all trade associations.

The purpose there was that if you had a number of organizations that belonged to a number of different trade associations they would not be subjected to a barrage of solicitations. But the corporation can say, This trade association we belong to, is the one designated which can make the solicitation under the provisions of the act.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I understand the barrage and I agree with it.

Can a corporation that is a conglomerate, that has totally unrelated subsidiaries, can those subsidiaries be solicited by different trade associations so long as it is only one trade association soliciting each one?

Mr. CANNON. A similar provision was proposed and rejected in conference which would have allowed divisions, if there were divisions, to be solicited by a separate trade association. This would not be permitted under the conference bill.

Mr. PACKWOOD. So that the parent corporation then has to make an election as to which trade association, even though they may have substantially diverse interests in their subsidiaries——

Mr. CANNON. I am sorry, I did not get that last statement.

Mr. PACKWOOD. So the situation is you have got a parent corporation and it owns a bakery, it owns a real estate company, it owns an automobile distributorship. That automobile distributorship, if they made an option, the parent corporation, to solicit, say, the bakers trade association can solicit them; they could not say they want the bakers trade association to solicit the bakers organization and the automobile dealers association to solicit their automobile division, no crossover. I am not suggesting that one trade association representing the bakers could solicit the automobile dealers or vice versa, but the Senator is saying that the corporation has to make an election, and only one trade association can solicit, period.

Mr. CANNON. Well, if it is just simply a separate corporation which is a subsidiary of a parent organization, that might be a situation there where they could elect to be solicited by their own trade association, completely unrelated from a conglomerate head. It would appear that a separate corporate organization, could designate its own trade association. But if it is simply a branch of a parent organization, then the one-time solicitation would apply.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Did we stick pretty much to the same definition of managerial, executive personnel that we had in the Senate bill as it passed?

Mr. CANNON. If the Senator will turn to page 62 of the conference report, I think it is reasonably close. I think it is a little more specific. This is explained at subparagraph 2 at the bottom of the page:

> 2. The conference substitute follows the Senate bill in using the term "executive or administrative personnel" throughout section 321 rather than "executive officer". The conference substitute defines that term to mean an employee who is paid on a salary, rather than hourly, basis and who has policy-making, managerial, professional, or supervisory responsibilities. The term "executive or administrative personnel" is intended to include the individuals who run the corporation's business, such as officers, other executives, and plant, division, and section managers, as well as individuals following the recognized professions, such as lawyers and engineers, who have not chosen to separate themselves from management by choosing a bargaining representative; but is not intended to include professionals who are members of a labor organization, or foremen who have direct supervision over hourly employees, or other lower level supervisors such as "strawbosses".

Mr. PACKWOOD. That definition sounds—although there is no reference to it here—very much like the wage and hour-fair labor standards definition of executive-administrative professional. Does the chairman know if the conference had that in mind in coming toward this conclusion?

Mr. CANNON. It was discussed It was an attempt to follow it somewhat, but it was not necessarily intended to say that this is the provision in the Fair Labor Standards Act.

I think we were trying to use terms that had a general, commonly recognized meaning, so that it would eliminate any confusion, though not to specifically tie it into the Fair Labor Standards Act as such.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I might ask the chairman this, and I will read from the hearings of the conference. This is Congressman BRADEMAS asking the question:

So if Joe Smith, candidate, has a problem, he wants information, he can write or get in touch with the Commission and say would you please give me this information, and the Commission is able under this understanding to say here is the answer to your question, here is the information you want.

That is a distinct situation, however, from the issuance of an advisory opinion, the power to issue which is defined by numbers 1 through 3 here.

Of course, I am getting to the situation where a candidate can write or call the Commission and get that kind of opinion from them.

Mr. CANNON. If the Senator will turn to page 44 of the committee report:

4. While the rules just stated govern all opinions of an advisory nature, these provisions do not preclude the distribution by the Commission of other information consistent with the Act.

We very clearly prescribed how and under what terms and conditions the commission could issue an advisory opinion. It had to be the application of a general rule of law stated in the act, or set forth in a prescribed rule or regulation, to a specific factual situation.

But here, we wanted to make it clear that the Commission has other responsibilities under the act.

I would interpret from what the Senator read that the Commission could make known that kind of information under its general powers under the act, and it would not constitute an advisory opinion.

Mr. HATFIELD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Yes.

Mr. HATFIELD. I would agree with the interpretation given by the chairman, but I think it ought to have one or two further comments made about it.

The chairman has said that an advisory opinion has set forth a criterion, and then he cited those other sections, but I think it has to be borne in mind that under no circumstances can the commission give an opinion based upon a hypothetical circumstance or situation. They may be able to cite a certain law or a certain regulation existing already in a known fact situation, which would be the closest to that they could come.

But as far as taking a hypothetical circumstance and rendering some kind of advice and counsel, I do not think the chairman implied that, but I would certainly want the record clear. My understanding is that the commission is precluded from doing that very thing, even beyond the advisory opinion rule it might be planning.

Mr. PACKWOOD. This is exactly the point.

Again, let me read something Chairman HAYS said:

I think 4 takes care of a good deal of your problem, while the rules just stated govern all opinions of an advisory nature—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The chair would interrupt the Senator.

NATIONAL RANGELANDS POLICY ACT OF 1976

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2555) to establish a national rangelands rehabilitation and protection program.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of S. 2555, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nevada. The yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE), the Senator from Maine (Mr. HATHAWAY), the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON), the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. MONTOYA), the Senator from California (Mr. TUNNEY), the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. WILLIAMS), and the Senator from Michigan (Mr. PHILIP HART) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) and the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. DURKIN) are absent on official business.

I also announce that the Senator from Maine (Mr. MUSKIE) is absent because of illness.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) would vote "no."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from New York (Mr. BUCKLEY), the Senator from Utah (Mr. GARN), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS) is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 40, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 160 Leg.]

So Mr. CANNON'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCLURE and Mr. MOSS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. MOSS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I might proceed to present a message from the House and the appointment of conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, the unanimous-consent request is agreed to.

The Senator from Utah is recognized.

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET, 1977

Mr. MOSS. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on Senate Concurrent Resolution 109.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HANSEN) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 109) setting forth the congressional budget for the U.S. Government for the fiscal year 1977 and revising the congressional budget for the transition quarter beginning July 1, 1976, as follows:

Strike out all after the resolving clause, and insert:

That the Congress hereby determines and declares, pursuant to section 301(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, that for the fiscal year beginning on October 1, 1976—

(1) the recommended level of Federal revenues is $363,000,000,000, and the amount by which the aggregate level of Federal revenues should be decreased is $14,800,000,000;

(2) the appropriate level of total new budget authority is $454,071,000,000;

(3) the appropriate level of total budget outlays is $415,435,000,000;

(4) the amount of the deficit in the budget which is appropriate in the light of economic conditions and all other relevant factors is $52,435,000,000; and

(5) the appropriate level of the public debt is $713,710,000,000, and the amount by which the temporary statutory limit on such debt should accordingly be increased (over amounts specified in section 3(5) for the transition quarter) is $67,510,000,000.

SEC. 2. Based on allocations of the appropriate level of total new budget authority and of total budget outlays as set forth in paragraphs (2) and (3) of the first section of this resolution, the Congress hereby determines and declares pursuant to section 301 (a) (2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 that, for the fiscal year beginning on for a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill (S. 2555), as amended, was passed as follows:

S. 2555

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "National Rangelands Policy Act of 1976".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS, PURPOSE, AND DEFINITIONS.—

(a) The Congress finds that—

(1) despite increased efforts and expenditures of the Bureau of Land Management and individual users of the western public rangelands, many areas of the rangelands are producing less than their potential, a condition which threatens the livelihood of such users and the economic stability of neighboring communities, present levels of meat production, the quality and availability of scarce western water supplies, United States obligations to Mexico concerning the salinity level of the Colorado River, the maintenance of wildlife habitat, and the viability of flood prevention programs;

(2) the rangelands will remain in an unsatisfactory condition and some areas may decline further under present management levels; and

(3) this condition can be corrected by a national commitment to a program of improved management of the rangelands, a program which would provide the additional benefits of increased soil and watershed stability; protection of water quality and maintenance of present water production levels; expansion of the forage resource and a consequent rise in livestock production; enhancement, protection, and maintenance of wildlife habitat; reduced flood danger; and economic stabilization of communities and individuals dependent on such lands.

(b) The Congress hereby finds a necessity for, and declares a national commitment to, the rehabilitation and protection of the rangelands. It is the purpose of this Act to establish a program to identify the current rangeland conditions and trends; to plan and effect actions to correct deficiencies in such lands; and to restore such lands to, and maintain them in, as full productive capacity as feasible.

(c) For the purpose of this Act—

(1) "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior; and

(2) "rangelands" means lands administered by the Secretary through the Bureau of Land Management on which there is domestic livestock grazing, or other lands so administered which the Secretary determines may be suitable for domestic livestock grazing.

SEC. 3. RANGELANDS INVENTORY.—The Secretary shall develop within five years of the date of enactment of this Act, and maintain on a continuing basis thereafter, a comprehensive and appropriately detailed inventory of all rangelands. This inventory shall identify the resources of and deficiencies in the rangelands and shall be kept current so as to reflect changes in conditions.

SEC. 4. RANGELANDS REHABILITATION AND PROTECTION PROGRAM.—The Secretary shall develop, maintain, revise as necessary, and implement a rangelands rehabilitation and protection program for the improved management of the rangelands, which shall have as its purpose the correction of the deficiencies in the rangelands as inventoried pursuant to section 3 and the rehabilitation of such lands within thirty years of enactment of this Act. Thereafter, such program shall provide for the maintenance of, or improvement in, the productive capacity of such lands achieved at the conclusion of such period in a manner consistent with the protection and enhancement of resource values identified by this Act and with the multiple use, sustained yield concept of land management. Such program shall include plans for the various areas of the rangelands, which plans specify the actions, and the schedule thereof, to be undertaken on such areas within said thirty-year period. Such plans may identify areas of the rangelands which, because of their small relative size, minor resource value, scattered land ownership, or other reasons, are unsuitable for the improved management required by this Act and provide for appropriate management of such lands to arrest further decline in, and protect the multiple use values of, such lands.

SEC. 5. RANGELANDS MANAGEMENT.—The Secretary shall manage the rangelands in accordance with the rangelands rehabilitation and protection program.

SEC. 6. PARTICIPATION OF STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS, USERS, AND THE PUBLIC.—The Secretary, by regulation, shall establish procedures, including public hearings or meetings where appropriate, to give State and local governments, users of the rangelands, and the public adequate notice and an opportunity to comment upon the rangelands rehabilitation and protection program during its preparation and implementation.

SEC. 7. RANGELANDS REPORT.—The Secretary shall prepare a rangelands report no later than two years after the enactment of this Act and at five year intervals thereafter. Such report shall be made available to the public and submitted to the Congress no later than one hundred and twenty days after the close of the appropriate fiscal year. The report shall include, in appropriate detail, an analysis of the condition of the rangelands, the implementation of the rangelands rehabilitation and protection program, and the advances made in meeting the purpose of this Act.

SEC. 8. AUTHORIZATIONS.—There are hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purpose of this Act additional funds over and above amounts already appropriated to the Bureau of Land Management in fiscal year 1976 for livestock management, soil and water, and wildlife, as follows: an increase of $10,000,000 in fiscal year 1977; additional increases of $5,000,000 per year each and every year in fiscal years 1978, 1979, and 1980; and increases of $500,000 per year each and every year from fiscal year 1981 through and including fiscal year 2006. Any increased amounts as authorized herein not appropriated in one or more years shall be authorized for appropriation in any subsequent year.

SEC. 9. CONSTRUCTION OF LAW.—Nothing in this Act shall be construed to diminish the authority of the Secretary under any existing provision of law.

SEC. 10. RANGELAND IMPROVEMENT WORK.—The Secretaries of Agriculture and Interior are authorized and directed to develop regulations permitting the payment of up to 50 percent of the amount due the Federal Government from grazing permittees in the form of range improvement work.

SEC. 11. DURATION OF GRAZING LEASES.—(a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, permits and leases for domestic livestock grazing on (1) lands within the purview of the Taylor Grazing Act (43 U.S.C. 315) and the Act of August 28, 1937 (43 U.S.C. 1181a–1181j) or (2) lands within the national forest or administered in connection therewith, shall be issued for a term of five years. Such permits or leases shall be issued subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior, in the case of such permits or leases under his jurisdiction, or the Secretary of Agriculture, in the case of such permits or leases under his jurisdiction, deems appropriate and consistent with applicable Federal law, including the authority of the Secretary concerned to cancel, suspend, or modify a grazing permit or lease, in whole or in part, pursuant to the terms and conditions thereof, or to cancel or suspend a grazing permit or lease for any violation of a grazing regulation or of any term or condition of such grazing permit or lease: Provided, That such terms and conditions shall provide that, except in cases of emergency, no permit or lease shall be canceled under this subsection without two years' prior notification.

(b) Permits or leases may be issued by the Secretary concerned for a period shorter than ten years where the Secretary concerned determines that—

(1) the land is pending disposal; or

(2) the land will be devoted to a public purpose prior to the end of ten years.

(c) So long as (1) the permittee or lessee is in compliance with the rules and regulations issued and the terms and conditions in the lease specified by the Secretary concerned, and (2) the permittee or lessee accepts the terms and conditions to be included by the Secretary concerned in the new permit or lease, the holder of the expiring permit or lease shall be given first priority for receipt of the new permit or lease.

(d) Whenever a permit or lease for grazing domestic livestock is canceled in whole or in part, in order to devote the lands covered by the permit or lease to another public purpose, including disposal, the permittee or lessee shall receive from the United States a reasonable compensation for the adjusted value, to be determined by the Secretary concerned, of his interest in authorized permanent improvements placed or constructed by the permittee or lessee on lands covered by such permit or lease, but not to exceed the fair market value of the terminated portion of the permittee's or lessee's interest therein.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill, as amended, was passed.

Mr. CANNON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to make technical and clerical corrections in the engrossment of S. 2555.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 10 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business this afternoon it stand in adjournment until the hour of 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET UNTIL 12 NOON TOMORROW

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that all committees may meet until 12 noon tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR THE RECOGNITION OF SENATOR GOLDWATER TOMORROW

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that after the two leaders or their designees have been recognized tomorrow morning, after the usual courtesies, that the distinguished Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER) be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1976—CONFERENCE REPORT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of the conference report on S. 3065. The clerk will report the conference report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Conference report on S. 3065, an act to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I believe when the unanimous-consent order came into effect at 3:30 I was in the midst of a question to the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON) and the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) concerning—I want to use the words carefully, I do not want to say advisory opinions, but concerning—advice that can be given by the Federal Election Commission to a candidate who writes in trying to seek some direction from the Federal Election Commission as to whether or not a candidate can or cannot do a certain thing.

I wonder if I might pose the question again and have the Senator from Nevada answer. Is it permissible under this conference report language for a candidate who has not yet undertaken a particular action—in this sense it is a hypothetical action, and a candidate is seeking advice—who has not yet taken an action, to contact the Commission and ask the Commission's opinion and get an answer from the Commission as to whether or not the contemplated action is permissible under the law?

Mr. CANNON. If the question relates to a specific factual situation, which it could well do even though it is prospective, and relates to the application of a general rule of law stated in the act, or in chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code, or if it has already been prescribed as a rule or regulation, he could be so advised.

Mr. PACKWOOD. That is perfect. What we have is the Commission cannot make new law on this information, advisory opinion, but to the extent of existing law, or they have already issued, which has gone through Congress and been approved, the Commission is free to offer its advice to that extent.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator is correct.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I thank the chairman very much.

Mr. CANNON. For the benefit of Senators, I would like to announce that there will be no further rollcall votes this evening.

Mr. WEICKER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HANSEN). The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I rise to comment on the matter before us and the matters that are not before us.

Specifically, we have a piece of legislation concerned with our Federal election process and, most specifically, concerned with the financing of Presidential campaigns.

Time and again, the comment has been made, this legislation is Watergate reform, which brings me to the purpose of my discussion this evening and for the days that follow.

The legislation that is Watergate reform legislation is not, in two instances, even out of committee, never mind on the floor of the U.S. Senate.

The third instance, even though it is out of committee, it has not been discussed on the floor of the U.S. Senate.

I would like to read, if I might, the recommendations of the Watergate Committee on this business of public financing on page 572, article numbered 7:

7. The committee recommends against the adoption of any form of public financing in which tax moneys are collected and allocated to political candidates by the Federal Government.

The Select Committee opposes the various proposals which have been offered in the Congress to provide mandatory public financing of campaigns for Federal office. While recognizing the basis of support for the concept of public financing and the potential difficulty in adequately funding campaigns in the midst of strict limitations on the form and amount of contributions, the committee takes issue with the contention that public financing affords either an effective or appropriate solution. Thomas Jefferson believed "to compel a man to furnish contributions of money for the propagation of opinions which he disbelieves and abhors, is sinful and tyrannical."

The committee's opposition is based like Jefferson's upon the fundamental need to protect the voluntary right of individual citizens to express themselves politically as guaranteed by the first amendment. Furthermore, we find inherent dangers in authorizing the Federal bureaucracy to fund and excessively regulate political campaigns.

The abuses experienced during the 1972 campaign and unearthed by the Select Committee were perpetrated in the absence of any effective regulation of the source, form, or amount of campaign contributions. In fact, despite the progress made by the Federal Elections Campaign Act of 1971, in requiring full public disclosure of contributions, the 1972 campaign still was funded through a system of essentially unrestricted, private financing.

What now seems appropriate is not the abandonment of private financing, but rather the reform of that system in an effort to vastly expand the voluntary participation of individual citizens while avoiding the abuses of earlier campaigns.

Now I cite this passage because I think it points out very clearly how soon we forgot the matters which came to our attention as a Senate and the American people not so many years ago.

To have this measure come on the floor and to have it argued as being worthy of passage, because it is Watergate reform is absolutely incorrect. It is not true. If we want Watergate reform, that is what we have not done.

I will state exactly what those measures are. They are the legislation presently bottled up by a combination of Rules and other Senate committees called oversight of CIA, FBI. I understand the Rules Committee has a bill coming forth on the floor of the Senate on May 10 which is nowhere near the legislation passed by the Senate Government Operations Committee. In fact, it is another study committee. But certainly the congressional oversight of the intelligence community needs correction and yet we have not acted on it in 3 years.

Privacy of individual tax returns. That is what is commonly known as the Weicker-Litton bill. It has had hearings both before Ways and Means and the Finance Committees. It is still bottled up in the Finance Committee. It has not come to the attention of the Senate. That is a Watergate reform.

Last, the Watergate reform bill itself, which encompasses full financial disclosure by elected officials, the establishment of a Department of Governmental Corruption in the Justice Department, the criteria by which a special prosecutor would be selected, and the creation of a Congressional Office of Legal Counsel. That is Watergate reform, and, as I say, that bill has not yet come to the Senate floor.

So let us understand then why it is that this Senator is more than a little upset as to the priorities of the Congress of the Untied States.

Apparently when it comes to political campaigns, apparently when it comes to getting a hand in the taxpayers' pockets, there is a great urgency about our actions. There is an intensity that associates with our actions as, indeed, there are self interests that need to be served, and we do so under the guise or within the Trojan horse of campaign reform, Watergate reform.

But when it comes to keeping our mind on the business of the United States, specifically its Constitution, specifically its political and governmental systems, then that legislation just moves at a very slow pace.

I suppose the question that came to my mind is, what do we do about it? Between a combination of the bureaucracies here, none of which want to relinquish any authority or power, the senatorial committees, none of which want to go ahead and relinquish any power, the executive branch of Government, which would just as soon see this whole thing fade away into the mist, the matter of reform is almost dead.

It seems to me, the last chance is to have the American people focus on our actions and to demand that we do pay attention to the priorities of the Nation rather than priorities of self.

It is my hope in the next several days there will be a demand from the American people that every Member of this body go on record as to whether or not he favors oversight of our law enforcement intelligence community, whether he favors strict regulations protecting taxpayer privacy, whether the systems be put into place to assure that many of the abuses of Watergate do not occur again.

That is the nature of this exercise. I freely admit I think the basic legislation itself is wrong and I am against it, but I am not here to go ahead and filibuster that. I will vote against it.

At no time will we have such a contrast as between the priorities of the Congress and the priorities of the Nation as when we have before us the reform legislation, unattended, and the campaign legislation which has all the interest and procedures behind it.

As I said, I am not asking, Mr. President, that the Senate pass the matters that I have referred to. I just want an up-and-down vote. If we do not have the up-and-down vote before the Fourth of July, it is dead. It is not only dead for the year 1976, it is dead forever. It will not be voted on in any manner, shape, or form.

All I can say, we have already just taken a look at oversight legislation. I remember everybody felt that in order to have effective intelligence, law enforcement agencies accountability was necessary. Every Senator came before the committee, before his local media, and said, "Yes, we have to have some form of oversight."

The administration sent them up by the droves, even the Secretary of State and the Director of the CIA himself said that we have to have some sort of oversight.

That was months ago when the heat was on. Now, as I stand on this floor this evening, there is no push at all from the executive branch of Government and, indeed, it seems to be the political thing to do, to go back to the status quo.

At this time, Mr. President, if I may, I would like to read the address which I gave just this past Saturday at the University of Virginia Law School on the occasion of Law Day.

(Mr. HELMS assumed the Chair at this point.)

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I read these comments made on Saturday because I think they best describe, after long thought, the principles that are involved in the discussion for the next several days:

Rights and liberties are a great challenge to every American generation.

But as we celebrate Law Day 1976 we seem to have forgotten that without excellence of procedures, rights and freedoms are going nowhere but out.

For every great right you enjoy as an American citizen, I can show how the key to that right is grounded in sound procedure.

Trial by jury.

The right to counsel.

Search warrant procedures before the invasion of one's home and private papers.

Innocent until proved guilty.

Rules of evidence that protect from hearsay and innuendo.

Due process.

I submit that procedure as much as substance upholds our government of laws. What is disheartening as we celebrate our bicentennial is that one of the most critical of all procedures—oversight of government by the elected—is being dropped from democracy's manual.

The media, the public, and most of our leaders are all too willing to say that sensational revelations ad successful prosecutions are enough.

I know they are not.

The work of reform in the sense of procedures that protect our institutions and constitution has yet to advance one iota.

First and foremost is the need for genuine oversight procedures by the Congress. We need these to challenge and discipline the conduct of unelected officials, especially in the abuse-prone areas of secret government.

There should be a place for an American citizen to go when his own government turns against him—specifically, an Office of Official Corruption in the Justice Department. There should be full financial disclosure by all elected officials. Rigid procedures for protecting taxpayer privacy should be precisely legislated.

If some of these ideas sound vaguely familiar, they should. They are the important side of the crimes and abuses of the 1970's. They address the real issues of Watergate, of the Agnew case, of the misuse of the IRS, and of abuses of secret agencies such as the FBI and CIA.

Every one of these concepts is contained in legislation that is before the Congress this very minute—has been before the Congress for three years. And right now not one of them faces the prospect of becoming a reality.

As we revel in the prosperity of our first two hundred years, we are abandoning the protections that must be in place if there is to be value to a tricentennial.

Have we not learned the lesson of history, ancient and modern, that a system of government that depends on the good intentions and faith of men in power will, in the long run, be less reliable and more subject to abuse than a system of laws, which depends on independent standards secured by ongoing institutions?

Have we failed to learn the companion lesson of history, that no system of government and justice can, or should, survive if it comes to depend for its continued effectiveness on citizens' abdication of their basic rights in response to the blackmail of societal or personal selfishness—no matter whether that selfishness is apathy, bigotry, laziness or self-imposed ignorance?

No democratic system worth preserving should have to fear that its people will become aware of what their government is doing, and thereby exercise their right to control its conduct.

In the whirlwind of revelations, we seem to have missed the point, that there has been a common thread to the drama of recent years. That ever-recurring theme has been the failure of institutions and procedures.

Let us review the record.

My individual views in the Senate Watergate Report began with the observation that "Watergate was not a whodunit."

I went on to explain that Watergate was "a documented, proven attack on laws, insti the failure of institutions and procedures.

The report then proceeded to enumerate 189 separate violations of the Constitution. As I stated at the time, "every major substantive part of the Constitution was violated, abused, and undermined during the Watergate period."

The important facts were not a break-in at Democratic Headquarters. Rather, they were such items as "an executive branch that approved a master intelligence plan (known as the Huston Plan) containing proposals that were specifically identified by that executive branch as illegal."

How did the executive get away with it?

Simple. Nobody was looking, particularly in the Congress.

Over and over again, the record established with facts governmental abuse of our laws, systems and ideals. I was frankly amazed by a recent New York Times editorial which, commenting on the Church Committee report, stated, "It contains few disclosures that were not in the public domain. Thus the Committee did little to enrich the foundation of fact and public understanding required to achieve the legislative remedies which it found necessary and desirable."

You've got to be kidding. Three years of fact upon fact upon fact, Watergate Committee, Church Committee, House Judiciary Committee, Woodward and Bernstein, Special Prosecutors, SEC reports, Grand Juries, trials, press investigations and revelations, kiss and tell books, the Schlesinger report, Rockefeller Commission. Ladies and gentlemen, story-telling time in the USA had best give way to law-making.

And that is why I stand on my feet this evening and will tomorrow, and for as many days as it is possible to do so, to get us to do the business that will put matters aright in this country. No one else has the power to do that except this body along with the House and the executive branch of Government—

The incredible is that nothing has changed legally.

Except some of my colleagues have the gall to come in here and propose, as the great reform of the national nightmare of the past 3 years, Federal financing of Presidential campaigns with the intonation that, after that is through with, will have Federal financing of senatorial campaigns and congressional campaigns.

How did they ever get our priorities so screwed up?

There is still no effective oversight mechanism. There is still no independent prosecutor. There is still no financial disclosure by government officials. There is still no procedure to protect your tax return information from being misused.

Before Watergate there was the explanation of ignorance for the state of our government affairs. But now we know.

So, no more excuses of ignorance. No more speculations as to what it is that everyone is doing.

Very frankly, that knowledge that we now possess holds us to a higher standard of responsibility. If we do not do anything the alternative, de facto, is a nation in the gutter.

There are two ways our laws are made in this country: De jure, through the legislative legal processes, and de facto, as a matter of doing.

Before these abuses were laid out on the table, it would have been impossible to establish them as custom or as law. However, with everyone's full knowledge, these matters go uncorrected, it is only a matter of time before they then become the policies, laws, and customs of this Nation.

Maybe they are already there after 3 years. Maybe they are already that.

I noticed that many of the things that were spoken of in the years past and have been laughed off by inaction. They are starting to creep into acceptance by the American people as a part of our political processes and governmental processes.

The Church and Pike committees have clearly documented its use by the CIA and the FBI. What do the findings of these investigations tell us about oversight procedures?

Begin with money. The House investigations tell us that some $10 billion is spent each year on spy activities and related expenses. Senate committee estimates are reported closer to $9.7 billion.

That comes to about 16 percent of all controllable expenditures by the Federal Government each year—in other words, 16 percent of the money left over after automatic spending, such as social security.

How closely did oversight scrutinize this huge chunk of funds? The answer is almost unbelievable. The investigations reveal, as just one example, that a few years ago the CIA could find literally nobody in Congress—a Congressman, Senator, or staffer—who would even listen to a budget presentation.

For years, J. Edgar Hoover told absolutely nobody in Congress what he spent on intelligence. Until last year, the executive branch had never even totaled up what we spend on domestic intelligence.

Why is the Congress surprised, then, when they discover waste and duplication in secret agency spending. Duplications alone are estimated to have cost an average of $1 to $2 billion a year for the last 10 years.

The response to these findings is even more bizarre. In an effort to get some type of compromise on setting up a new oversight committee, it has been proposed that the budget authority be taken away from the new committee and left in the hands of those who have ignored their responsibility for years.

That is not oversight. That is "blindsight."

It is my understanding that in the proposal of the Rules Committee on oversight, the proposal does little more than to set up another study committee. No budgetary authority is given to the committee, and its duration is limited. It would be comprised of the members of the various Senate committees that have not been doing their job over the past year.

It woud have investigatory or subpena authority. It would have no legislative or budget authority. It would in effect, be a study commission.

What a testament to the impotence of this Congress and more specifically the Senate and more specifically the Rules Committee.

The House investigation revealed that just last year the United States finally ended its participation in a secret war in the Mid-East.

In 1972, Dr. Kissinger and the President, against the advice of the CIA and State Department, authorized the CIA to give massive military aid to the Kurds, who were fighting for their independence in Iraq.

You may never have heard of the Kurds, but tens of thousands of people died with your weapons. You were not told, much less asked, about it. Even more important, Congress was not told, for almost a year after our intervention.

That is no oversight. It is hindsight. So, now that we have learned about the failure of oversight to keep us appraised of such rudimentary events as wars, what do we do? We investigate those people in the House that brought you the bad news. And we cite this as a good example of how Congress cannot be trusted with oversight.

The Senate committee revealed that we tried to assassinate foreign leaders who disagreed with us. What the Senate did not tell you was that the chairmen of the two oversight committees in Congress were fully briefed about these plans at least 3 years ago

They launched no investigation.

Why? Probably because the entire contingent of full-time staff support for CIA oversight committees in both Houses of Congress consisted of one person—and he was retired intelligence official.

Note the urgency when it comes to financing of Presidential campaigns, the rush to grab for the money and the incredible staffing, both as to the members and those who assist them on the Federal Election Commission. But when it comes to the business of oversight of the Intelligence and the Law Enforcement Committee, there is one staff member in both Houses.

That is not oversight. It is "weaksight."

As a final example, we have the case of the Italian elections. For years, the Communists have been gaining power because they offer one simple thing—relief from the debilitating corruption of Italian politics.

So, what does the U.S. Ambassador and Secretary of State offer in response? An attempt to buy the 1972 election for $10 million.

Not so smart, you say. It does not make sense that our Congress—leaders of the world's greatest democracy—would approve of that, because sooner or later, it is bound to catch up with us.

Well, do not be surprised, because Italy is just a classic example of the "shortsight" that the old committees have applied to oversight.

The fact is that too often recently we have tried to buy, bribe, coerce, or connive our way to short-term successes throughout the world regardless of the means necessary to achieve this.

Congress did not worry about its shortsight because they knew that the true story would never be told.

You see the overseers—those who now insist that no change is needed—had arranged it so they could not tell you the truth even if they wanted to.

That is right. They had adopted a system of classification of secrets that was controlled entirely by the executive. As of January 1, 1976, for example, there were 15,466 persons in the executive branch who could classify information. There was nobody in Congress, nobody, who could declassify.

Keep in mind that not a single classifying official in the executive branch is elected. Those officials charged with oversight are elected. I would say that is democracy turned upside-down.

Certainly it is not oversight. It is "foolsight."

Would not any wrongdoer have loved going before the oversight committees of the Congress, instead of the committees of Mr. Ervin and Mr. Rodino? How different history would have been.

One thing emerges clearly. We know for sure what we do not have. Call it what you will—blindsight, hindsight, weaksight, shortsight, or foolsight—we do not have oversight.

Oh, yes,, but we do have time to go ahead and make sure that Federal money is made available for the campaigns of the various Presidential candidates. The creation of an effective system to oversee the intelligence community is essential to the well-being of the Nation. It does not make any difference in the election sense. The Nation has done rather well in 200 years. But the Nation is not doing very well in the areas to which I have referred. But they can wait—as they waited last year and the year before and the year before that; and, on the basis of what apparently is coming out of the Rules Committee, as we will wait for the future.

My last hope, then, is not in the Senate of the United States. It is not in the House of Representatives. It is not with the President of the United States. It is not with the agencies. It is with the people of this country. The ball is in their court.

Let me say it very simply: You are not going to get any greater ethics or any greater excellence or any better solutions devised in the Oval Office, on the floor of the Senate, or on the floor of the House than you will get in the voting booths of this country. One is a reflection of the other.

The American people have been spectators in this process for too long, and the time has come now for them to express themselves as to what is important in their minds. Is it somebody's political campaign, or is it the Constitution of this country, under which their children are going to have to live? Is it the governmental and political systems of this country which have done so well by all of us, or is it an additional bumper sticker or campaign button that is important? That is what this debate is about. Let the Senators go on record as to where their priorities lay.

On this business of people expressing themselves, I recall that as I was growing up in the Northeast, it was the thing to do to point the finger at southern Senators and blame them for a lack of civil rights laws. It was those southern Senators, using rule XXII, who were to blame for the lack of civil rights laws in this Nation. Oh, no. It was not that easy. The Nation, itself, did not want civil rights laws—North and South. When the Nation finally got hold of its conscience and demanded action, it got action, regardless of rule XXII. That is what the Nation is going to have to do right now, if they want to go ahead and put this aright.

The game is only half over, and most all have picked up and gone home. Maybe "out to lunch" would be more descriptive.

What irony.

Because when this Nation was founded, we made much of the idea that we were to be "a government of laws and not of men."

Yet, as we approach the 200-year mark, nobody is asking what we have learned from two centuries of American laws at work.

We sell trinkets. We organize parades.

But is anyone concerned with the emerging dominance of men over laws in this country?

Perhaps it is because it is so easy to nod approval when some Fourth of July orator pays homage to "our government laws," with noobdy ever having to explain what it really means.

The explanation is basic. People who founded this Nation wanted protection from men in power. And they wanted accountability, secured through institutions and procedures.

That is why they wrote into the Constitution that "a regular Statement and Account of the Receipts and Expenditures of all public Money shall be published from time to time." Would they not be surprised to learn that 16 percent of our controllable spending is never published?

Maybe a government of laws sounds too academic. But there are some very practical things happening because good systems of law are not in place to protect us from man-made abuses and neglect.

Ten billion dollars spent without scrutiny is not academic.

Being on an enemies list is not academic.

Participation in the killing of thousands of Kurds is not academic.

Tax audits as political retaliation is not academic.

Buying an Italian election is not academic.

Overthrowing a freely elected government in Chile is not academic.

The problems are neither academic nor over. You say, we remember what went wrong from Watergate to the CIA, and nobody would try it again. You say, the President has issued Executive orders to prevent a reoccurrence.

This gets to the heart of the matter.

We are a nation of laws, not memories.

We are a nation of laws, not executive orders.

To view the national nightmares of the 3 years past as thrills and entertainment fails our children who will pay the price in their liberties. Those nightmares were: First, real; and second, our mistakes.

It is we who should pay the price. In law. Today.

Those were the comments I made 2 days ago in this first of the areas I have been discussing—the matter of oversight. They clearly show the history of abuse.

As we stand on the floor of the Senate this evening, each Senator would have to tell his constituents that, despite that record of abuses and despite the principles that are expounded, no action has been forthcoming from the Senate, from the Congress of the United States.

I recall when Senator MANSFIELD appeared before the Committee on Government Operations and testified as to oversight. He said:

> When the oligarchs in the Senate got through with me, we only had 28 votes.

He has been having this battle for 20 years. Again I quote Senator MANSFIELD:

> They were able to win because they had the hierarchs in the Senate in their pockets, and they were just loathe to change, as the CIA was to face up to change.

For 20 years he has waged that battle. I suppose I have no right to complain. For me it has been only a 3-year battle.

However, what should be of great concern to every American, aside from the constitutional principle, which I have mentioned, is that which is being proposed here in the way of accountability. Accountability would provide more effective intelligence-gathering, more effective law enforcement. There is a direct relationship between effectivenes and accountability. Without accountability the trouble starts.

Mr. President, to review where we stand on these various matters, let me insert in the RECORD at this time, a rundown as to the various pieces of legislation: Senate Resolution 400, which is intelligence oversight; the Watergate Reform Act, S. 495; and the tax privacy bill.

First, as to intelligence oversight, this legislation was introduced more than 20 years ago by Senator MANSFIELD.

In September of 1974, together with Senator BAKER, I introduced a measure calling for a joint congressional oversight committee.

In January of 1975, the Senate Government Operations Committee, responding to current pressures, reported legislation to create a permanent standing committee on intelligence. The resolution was simultaneously referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and the Committee on Rules and Administration.

The Rules Committee will report Senate Resolution 400 today. As reported, the Rules Committee proposes a Senate select committee on intelligence. The committee will be composed of 11 members—8 from Appropriations, Armed Services, Foreign Relations, and Judiciary, and 3 members at large. The select committee would have only oversight, investigatory and subpena authority but not legislative or budget authority.

I should like to read at this time an explanation of the action of the Rules Committee on this legislation:

> The Committee on Rules and Administration has given careful and due consideration to the establishment in the Senate of a Standing Committee on Intelligence Activities, as proposed by Senate Resolution 400. In the Committee's judgment the creation of such a standing committee at this time would be precipitate.

Twenty years for Senator MANSFIELD, 3 years for Senator WEICKER, and everything in between on this very subject, and it is going to be precipitate—let me repeat:

> The Committee on Rules and Administration has given careful and due consideration to the establishment in the Senate of a Standing Committee on Intelligence Activities, as proposed by Senate Resolution 400. In the Committee's judgment the creation of such a standing committee at this time would be precipitate and unwise, and constitute an overreaction to the recently disclosed and certainly undesired illegal and unauthorized activities within certain agencies of the Federal intelligence community.

It is an overreaction because all we want to do is to have Congress—in this case the Senate of the United States—perform the duties imposed upon it by the Constitution of the United States.

Nowhere in that document is an exemption given to any agency of Government from the accountability procedures of oversight by the Congress, nowhere.

No one has asked that the secrets of the CIA, in the sense of names and addresses and locations of agents or sources be revealed; none of that is asked by Senate Resolution 400. Senate Resolution 400 is an expression that oversight, in this instance, is of such importance that it has to be a primary function, not a secondary function, of some other committee, but a primary function of a Senatorial committee.

I will grant the best motives to my colleagues as to why it is they did not do their job over the last 20 years. It was specifically because they were too busy doing other things. As everybody knows, the oversight function in the sense of the FBI and CIA was a secondary function of the Armed Services Committee, or a secondary function of the Foreign Relations Committee. So again, granting them the best of motives or the best of excuses, I will accept that they did not perform their duties because there were other duties that were their primary function.

But that is no help to the people of the country. They are the ones who have to go ahead and live with these agencies. They are the ones who have to live with the abuses of these agencies.

I think that every one of us would agree that certainly we want an effective intelligence-gathering agency, and certainly we all want effective law enforcement. But there is no reason why we have to choose between that and the Constitution of the United States. That is the scare tactic that has been bandied about this town for the last several months.

I believe we can have intelligence-gathering and law enforcement and it can be constitutional, but not if there is no oversight procedure. That, in effect, is what is imposed on us by the Constitution. But, de facto, we have managed to shunt it aside, and when I read a comment that it is an overreaction to merely ask that we perform these legislative duties, imposed on us by the Constitution, I find incredible.

It goes on in this report, which we will all be reading:

> The Committee on Rules and Administration feels that the creation of any new standing committee of the Senate is a very serious undertaking.

You bet your last $2 bill it is. Far more serious, however, I would say are the unattended-to abuses of the past several years:

> The Committee on Rules and Administration feels that the creation of any new standing committee of the Senate is a very serious undertaking and should not be engaged in, if at all, until all implications of the action are thoroughly explored over a considerable period of time. In this Committee's judgment the time frame for such an important determination has not been available, especially in view of the Senate's direction to this Committee to report Senate Resolution 400 by April 30, 1976.

I realize that sometimes we get out of touch with reality around this place, but to make a statement like that in a Senate report—let me enumerate once again what we are talking about.

We are talking about the Schlesinger report, we are talking about the Rockefeller Commission report, we are talking about the Church committee report, we are talking about the House Intelligence Committee report. I might add that the Hoover Commission report of 1955 on the same matters and also made very similar recommendations. These are the ones specifically that gear-in on this subject—never mind the Watergate or the House Judiciary reports, which are specific. And then somebody has the gall to make that kind of a statement. Maybe they are right, maybe they are right on that committee. Maybe the American people are going to go ahead and forget:

Two other factors have influenced the Committee's position in this respect. First, it would certainly appear unwise to rush into the creation of a new Standing Committee on Intelligence Activities before the Members of the Senate had an opportunity to study and digest the findings of the present Select Committee to Study Governmental Operations With Respect to Intelligence Activities, whose final report is in the process of being released. Secondly, since the Senate has just created a new Select Committee to Study the Senate Committee System, with a mandate to report to the Senate by February 28, 1977, it would certainly appear logical that any proposal to create a Standing Committee on Intelligence Activities should receive consideration by that Select Committee in conjunction with its overall study of committee jurisdictions.

I just hope the American people are listening to these reports and these words—delay after delay after delay; postponement after postponement after postponement, but not when it comes to people's political funding, not when it comes to political funding. Oh, that is urgent, that receives the highest priority. How ridiculous.

I know, Mr. President, that it is not going to be physically possible for me to forever delay the Federal Election Commission legislation. It is not my intention to do that, but I just do not think that ever before have the reverse priorities of Congress been in sharper focus than at this time, when the most serious legislative matters are put on the back burner and the ones that serve our own partisan interests have become a No. 1 priority.

Leaving the intelligence oversight for a minute and moving on to a status report of the other legislation, the Watergate Reform Act, that is S. 495, was introduced by Senator ERVIN and the members of the Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities in December of 1974. The bill was voted to be reported by the Government Operations Committee on April 9, 1976. A detailed report is being prepared and the committee expects to report the bill to the Senate on Monday, May 10. There undoubtedly will be a referral to at least one other committee, maybe two.

On the matter of tax privacy, in the 93d Congress over 18 months ago the Weicker-Litton bill was introduced to protect the confidentiality of tax returns. Since that time this legislation has received strong editorial support and has been sponsored by over half the House and over one-third of the Senate Members. Extensive Senate hearings have been held by the Finance Committee and the House Ways and Means Committee.

Congressman LITTON and I have testified on the following days: April 28, 1975, before the Senate Finance Committee on administration of the IRS Code; on July 10, 1975, before the House Ways and Means Subcommittee on the IRS; January 28, 1976, before the full Ways and Means Committee; on March 14, 1976, before the Privacy Commission.

Bills are still pending before the Senate Finance Committee and the House Ways and Means Committee. The Finance Committee has begun 5 weeks of markup sessions on tax reform legislation, and the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation staff has prepared a background paper on tax privacy.

There is a possibility that the Finance Committee may take it up before the end of May. However, there is a fear of the staff that the privacy issue will be laid aside because it is too controversial and there is not enough time to consider it.

So there you have the status report as to the real Watergate reform not the Federal Election Campaign Act amendments that is referred to in the Rules Committee by the chairman and others as being Watergate reform when, indeed the Watergate Committee specifically recommended against public financing. There is the status.

I ask unanimous consent at this time that there be printed in the RECORD at this point an editorial of the Washington Post of Sunday, May 2, 1976.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A FAILURE OF OVERSIGHT

A slender Senate Rules Committee majority threatens to make a farce out of the Senate intelligence inquiry by (1) launching a tame—and utterly redundant—inquiry of its own and (2) blocking establishment of an effective permanent intelligence oversight committee. Offhand, we can think of no greater triumph of pettiness over public interest in recent time. The Rules majority, led by Chairman Howard Cannon (D-Nev.), speaks for the standing committees (especially Armed Services and Appropriations). The first thing to remember about these committees is that they did a lackadaisical and inept job of oversight in the past. The next thing to know is that they remain pretty much the captives of the agencies they are supposed to oversee, and that they do not wish to yield any of their responsibilities and perogatives to a new oversight panel. To recite these failings and frailties is to demonstrate the magnitude of what has—or, more accurately, has not—been done.

The temporary Senate intelligence committee, which went out of business with its reports on foreign and domestic intelligence last week, is under some criticism for failing to time its biggest investigatory explosions for the period in which the oversight issue would be the first order of business in Congress. But come, now. Who can forget the earlier stark and stunning committee reports on official U.S. efforts to solve diplomatic problems with other nations by murdering their leaders or toppling their governments? Even the foreign-intelligence report issued last Tuesday, whose contents the committee negotiated out with the executive branch in order to avoid stalemate and gain consensus, had a full complement of abuses crying to be corrected by meaningful oversight. The CIA, for instance, was revealed to have bent to White House and Pentagon pressure and doctored a crucial intelligence report bearing on Soviet strategic intentions. The extent of loose and in some cases nonexistent policy control over covert actions was detailed as never before.

One could go on. The point is that the need for effective oversight has been proven beyond any serious question. To restore oversight to the very panels whose inadequacy has been so thoroughly demonstrated is an exercise in the unthinkable. Intelligence oversight is not the primary business of any of these committees, anyway. They all have plenty to do without keeping an exclusive lock on a responsibility they have discharged so poorly in the past. The whole effort to put intelligence under the rule of law is in the balance. This effort requires not just establishment of a new oversight committee but passage of comprehensive new legislation to define and delimit the tasks of intelligence. The committee issue, however, is rightly seen as a crucial test case.

Wittingly or not, the Senate barons balking committee change are handmaidens of executive abuse and patsies for executive power. Is this really the role that men like John Stennis and James Eastland, for instance, believe that a U.S. senator should play? The full Senate should reject the Rules Committee caprice when the matter comes to the floor in May, and construct oversight machinery that offers some hope of preventing recurrence of the abuses that the Church committee has so carefully and persuasively catalogued.

(At this point Mr. FORD assumed the chair.)

Mr. WEICKER. I would say that editorial states it rather well, Mr. President. It lays before the U.S. Senate the issue in very clear terms.

I do not want to take overly much time because I am sure we will have another go at it when we actually do get the legislation before us.

I feel that this is not the substance of what we are supposed to be discussing here. We are supposed to be discussing the FEC conference report, but they are inextricably wound.

All the time and attention that is paid to that agency and that principle could well be used in furthering the reform legislation denied this country for so long.

I think, Mr. President, what I will do at this time is read the individual views appearing in that Watergate report. As I stated earlier, many of the matters have gone uncorrected. It is the reason why I stand here before the Senate this evening.

I might add, this report was written before I had any knowledge of tapes or what was on those tapes. So it all had to be constructed or reconstructed. Here it is in May of 1976, this report was issued in June 1974, and nothing in that report has been refuted by either subsequent tapes or testimony, or whatever we have:

A STILLNESS

In the early 1970's, several independent events took place in the United States of America. On the surface they appeared to lack a common bond.

In June of 1969, a Louis Harris poll found that 25 percent of all Americans felt they had a moral right to disregard a victim's cry for help. Over the next several years, this mood took the form of countless incidents of looking the other way when men and women were assaulted and murdered in full view of entire neighborhoods.

On May 1, 1970, at Kent State University in Ohio, a group of students who refused an order to disperse were fired upon by the National Guard, killing William Schroeder, Sandy Scheuer, Jeffrey Miller, and Allison Krause, and wounding nine others. Ten days later, at Jackson State University in Mississippi, police who had been called in to protect firemen from violence, opened a 28-second fusillade into and around a dormitory, killing Phillip Gibbs and James Earl Green, and wounding 12 others.

During 1971, a decision was reached by the administration to conduct the President's reelection campaign with a special committee totally separate and insulated from the political party which would renominate that President.

In early 1972, a young radio reporter in Miami stood outside a supermarket trying to get people to sign a copy of the Bill of Rights. Seventy-five percent refused, many saying it was Communist propaganda.

In February of 1972, it was revealed that International Telephone & Telegraph had allegedly offered a campaign contribution of $400,000 in return for the Justice Department dropping an antitrust suit against ITT. The suit was dropped on Presidential order, but when the Attorney General was questioned about the President's role by a Senate committee in March, he lied.

On June 17, 1972, burglars employed by the Committee to Re-Elect the President were arrested inside the headquarters of the Democratic National Committee with bugging equipment and large sums of cash.

In December of 1972, having failed to obtain congressional approval for a reorganization of the Cabinet, the administration moved autonomously to establish three or four "supersecretaries" and to place various executive office employees in key sub-Cabinet posts. The obvious goal was to create a White House-directed network of decision-making and reporting quite apart from the formal Cabinet structure which remained subject to congressional scrutiny.

In February of 1973, the White House held a peace-with-honor reception to celebrate the end of the Vietnam war. Only those Congressmen who had supported the President's Vietnam policies were invited, implying that those who had questioned our involvement in Vietnam were either against peace or were dishonorable.

Some of these incidents were matters of life and death and were well publicized. Others were matters of principle and were little noticed at the time.

In each instance a significant outrage had taken place.

What was common to all?

In each instance no one complained.

A constitutional stillness was over the land.

THE UPROAR

American decency, idealism, honesty and reverence for the Constitution that some had thought bought off has been stirring and reasserting itself for many months now.

Yes, a few still cry treason when questions are asked.

A few still espouse the end as justifying the means.

A few still goggle at an American title rather than the title of American.

But it was only yesterday, June 17, 1972 to be specific, that today's few were part of a large American majority.

Why the turnaround?

The truth!

Because Frank Wills discovered taped doors at the Watergate, America's doors didn't close in all our faces.

CONSTITUTIONAL DEMOCRACY IN THE ERA OF WATERGATE

For this Senator, Watergate is not a whodunit.

It is a documented, proven attack on laws, institutions, and principles.

The response to that attack was and is a Nation of laws at work, determining whether men shall prevail over the principles of a constitutional democracy. It has been and will be the testing of a great experiment in government begun some 200 years ago.

Laws, institutions, and principles were squarely before this committee, to be debated, probed and documented, in order to assert remedies and reassert time-honored concepts. Guilt or innocence was not an issue. This was a fact-finding body; it was a legislative body; and those duties go to the heart of what Watergate was all about.

In keeping with the committee's duties, this is a report of facts and evidence, leading to legislative recommendations. To document the abuse of laws, institutions, and principles, the facts and evidence are presented, first, as they bear on the basis of our laws, the Constitution; second, as they relate to the institutions of our Government; and third, as they affect the principles of our political system.

I. THE CONSTITUTION

One of the most disturbing facts about the testimony presented to this committee is that so much of it went relentlessly to the heart of our Constitution.

To appreciate what happened to the Constitution, it is useful to divide the seven articles and 26 amendments into substantive versus procedural provisions. The substantive sections lay out rights, powers, and duties. The procedural areas address somewhat more technical and administrative matters. The important point is that the essence and strength of the Constitution springs from its substantive areas, primarily the first three articles, the first 10 amendments and the 14th amendment.

Evidence presented to this committee can and will demonstrate that every major substantive part of the Constitution was violated, abused, and undermined during the Watergate period.

It is a record built entirely on the words of the participants themselves. Tragically, it focuses on the most prodigious article of the Constitution, article II, which sets out the powers and duties of the Executive. It includes the most significant individual rights guaranteed by the first 10 amendments, our Bill of Rights. And it encompasses the Fifth and 14th amendments' guarantees of due process of law, the foundation of our system of justice.

A. The Executive

Of all the issues confronting the Constitutional Convention at Philadelphia, the nature of the Presidency ranked as one of the most important. Indeed, the resolution of that issue is often cited as one of the most significant actions taken.

Most State constitutions prior to that time had weak executives and strong legislatures. The decision to create a President, as opposed to plural administrators, was a reluctant recognition of the advantages of a strong executive.

Nevertheless, the convention took steps to contain presidential power. Only after deciding the method of selecting a President, his term, mode of removal, and powers and duties did the convention agree to the concept of a strong President.

This bit of history, indicating that the delineation of the President's office and powers preceded the creation of his position in the constitutional scheme, is quite important. It demonstrates that Executive power is to be exercised within the framework of the Constitution, and particularly, within the guidelines of article II, which lays out the powers and duties of that office.

This is much of what Watergate is all about, and it bears a close look at article II.

The issue at stake is the exercise of potentially awesome Presidential power. As to that issue, article II contains two points of significance. First, its opening words state: "The executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America." This grant of Executive authority, with no words of limitation, has, from the time of Jefferson, been the basis for expanding the Presidential office and activities.

However, the initial broad authority is offset by a second significant factor, the enumeration of Executive powers later in article II. These declare in part that the President is to be Commander-in-Chief, make treaties, appoint ambassadors and other officers, grant pardons, and take care that the laws are faithfully executed.

It is worth noting that experience has eventually placed limits on the general powers. The President has been allowed, as a practical matter, to exercise those additional powers that fall naturally within his range of activities.

The important point, however, is that no President has been, or can be, allowed to conduct the executive branch in conflict with the Constitution taken as a whole, and certainly not in conflict with express sections of the Constitution, such as the Bill of Rights, or article I (the legislature) or article III (the judiciary). This then is the proper context for examining facts.

Article II of the Constitution, by which the Presidency was created, was violated from beginning to end by Watergate.

There is massive evidence of misuse of the awesome general powers that reside in the executive department.

There is equal evidence documenting abuses of the enumerated duties.

1. GENERAL POWERS AND DUTIES

The facts show an executive office that approved a master intelligence plan containing proposals that were specifically identified as illegal, that proposed setting up a private intelligence firm with a "black bag" or breaking and entering capability as secret investigative support for the White House, that set up its own secret police, that used its clandestine police force to violate the rights of American citizens, that hired a private eye to spy on its enemies, including their personal lives, domestic problems, drinking habits, social activities and sexual habits.

That circulated an enemies list, that developed plans to "use the available Federal machinery to screw our political enemies, that knew of an illegal break-in connected with the Ellsberg case and concealed that fact rather than report it to appropriate authorities, that used a Presidential increase in milk support prices to get $5,000 from the milk producers to pay for the Ellsberg break-in, that recruited persons for that break-in on the false pretense of national security, that offered the presiding judge in the Ellsberg trial the FBI Directorship at a clandestine meeting in the midst of the trial, that ordered a warrantless wiretap on a news columnist's telephone, that wiretapped 17 newsmen and government officials in an operation that was outside proper investigative channels.

That suggested firebombing the Brookings Institute, that set up an Intelligence Evaluation Committee outside the legitimate intelligence community to disseminate information that should have been restricted to individual agencies, that used the Secret Service to wiretap the President's brother, that kept $350,000 in left-over 1968 campaign funds in a safe in the Chief of Staff's office, that used most of those funds as hush money for the Watergate burglars, that approved a large contribution from the milk producers association after being told it was meant to gain access to and favors from the White House.

That received and passed on information about an IRS audit of one of the President's friends, that arranged for a tax attorney for the friend, that contacted the IRS as well as the Justice Department in a number of other tax cases involving friends of the President, that planned and possibly carried out a break-in at the office of a Las Vegas publisher, that suggested a break-in at the apartment of the man who attempted to assassinate Governor Wallace, that contemplated a break-in at the Potomac Associates offices, that tried to rewrite history by making up bogus State Department cables to falsely connect the Kennedy administration with the assassination of President Diem, that attempted to get reporter William Lambert to use the phony cables in a story, that tried to plant false stories connecting the President's opponent with communist money and the crimes alleged in the Ellsberg case.

That installed an elaborate system of taping conversations between the President and his staff or visitors, that told Federal investigators to stay out of the Ellsberg matter, that undertook a clandestine operation to hide a key witness in the ITT case in a Denver hospital where she was interrogated by Howard Hunt in disguise, that authorized and funded from within the White House a dirty tricks operation including scurrilous literature, late night telephone campaigns and advertising designed to offend local interests, seemingly sponsored by Democratic candidates, and physical disruptions directed against Presidential opponents, that planted spies, hecklers, and pickets in the Muskie and Humphrey campaigns, that participated in discussions of a campaign against Democrats to include prostitutes, mugging, kidnapping, bugging, and burglary.

That pressed for adoption of Liddy's Watergate plan, that was told of the authorization and budget for Liddy's plan, that believed it had received transcripts of illegal wiretaps and never reported that crime, that was warned of the planned break-in at the Watergate and did nothing to stop it, that knew the full scope of Liddy's activities shortly after the Watergate arrests and kept those facts from proper authorities, that shredded Watergate evidence in the Chief of Staff's files, that tried to use one of its executive branch agencies as a "cover" for the Watergate operation.

That was the scene of meetings at which high officials plotted to use the power and influence of the Presidency to cover up crimes and obstruct justice, that saw advisers invoke the power of the Presidency to use an FBI Director in ways that would eventually cause him to resign, that used the President's fundraising powers to collect illegal corporate contributions, to raise funds to finance a crime, and to collect bribes for a criminal case.

That discussed using the President's clemency prerogatives as early as July 1972, to keep the lid on Watergate and other crimes, while misleading the American people by calling Watergate a third-rate burglary, that made offers of clemency for improper purposes, that announced, in a Presidential statement, a Dean investigation clearing the White House, when there had in fact been a coverup not an investigation and the President had never, ever talked to Dean about Watergate, that discussed, in the oval office, unethical out-of-court contacts with the presiding judge in one of the Watergate civil suits, that purposely lied to the FBI and a Federal grand jury, that encouraged campaign officials to commit perjury and plead the fifth amendment to obstruct justice.

That used the President's personal attorney and White House staff to pay criminal hush money, and to pay for a private eye operating out of the White House, that used its influence to get raw FBI files for improper purposes, that prevailed upon the FBI not to interview certain witnesses, that used patriotic concern for the Presidency to pressure defendants to plead guilty in a criminal case.

That used its influence to get special treatment for high officials before a Federal grand jury, that plotted to cover up the Segretti story and denounced in the harshest terms those who uncovered the story, that noted "it would assuredly be psychologically satisfying to cut the innards from Ellsberg and his clique," that obstructed congressional investigations of Watergate and related matters, that filed Watergate countersuits for the distorted purposes of using subpena powers to delve into the financial and sexual activities of political opponents, that made numerous misleading or false statements about Watergate to the American people.

That failed to promptly inform proper authorities about knowledge of crimes involving White House officials, that forced the resignation of a Special Prosecutor, Attorney General, and Deputy Attorney General when their Watergate prosecution took an independent position, that suggested using the Attorney General's powers to keep a Republican opponent off the primary ballot in Florida, that used the Executive's authority over the media's regulatory agencies to intimidate the media, that ordered a personal tax audit, surveillance by an FBI agent and Secret Service agents, an an antitrust action, all in response to a newspaper article about one of the President's friends.

That tried to punish foundations with views different than White House policy by pressuring the IRS to review their tax-exempt status, that set up a program to insure that Government contracts, grants, and loans would, as a matter of Government policy, be political rewards, that treated the Presidential pardon as a political tool, that used its power over the tax-collection agency to gather intelligence on and harass political opponents, that issued instructions to hire a shaggy person with a McGovern button, to sit in front of the White House, and counter demonstrators at the funeral of J. Edgar Hoover, that infiltrated as Quaker vigil in front of the White House, that used the agency that is supposed to guard the President to spy on the President's political opponent, that ordered 24-hour surveillance of a political opponent, that used the departments to dredge up potentially embarassing information on Presidential contenders, and then leaked it to the press, that used White House influence to obtain CIA equipment for the Ellsberg break-in, that used its entrustment with our national security to convince four Cubans to burglarize a political party.

That ordered an FBI investigation of an unfriendly newsman to harass him, that proposed leaking confidential FBI files to embarrass the producer of a satirical movie, that used its control of important Watergate evidence and the privilege known as executive privilege to aid those supporting the President and to deprive or delay those in opposition, that made plans to eliminate professionals in government service who placed their professional responsibilities above questionable White House political demands, that participated actively and formally in a campaign organization while drawing White House staff salaries, that ran secret letter-writing campaigns against Republican Senators, and that generally emasculated the Republican Party.

That . . . all of that . . . violated the concept of executive power in article II of the Constitution. Extensive as the record is, it represents only selected examples.

The important point is that it is certainly not what our Founding Fathers had in mind when they envisioned the Presidency.

2. ENUMERATED POWERS AND DUTIES

The enumerated powers and duties of the President's office are set forth beginning with section 2 of article II. That section grants the President direct power over Cabinet officers. Much testimony before this committee demonstrated how those officers were used on behalf of the President's office.

For example, an Attorney General, for a significant period of time, ran the President's reelection campaign while still in office at the Justice Department. His reason for this role was that, "it is very, very difficult to turn down a request by the President of the United States," even though the Attorney General himself later testified that he felt such a role in politics while still in office was wrong. As an illustration of the extent of that role, memos from CRP, such as one entitled "Grantsmanship," suggesting an effective method of "insuring that political considerations" be used in Federal programs, were sent to the Attorney General from May 1, 1971, onward. At one point, it was even suggested that the Attorney General wield the power of his office to keep a Republican contender off the primary ballot in Florida. That campaign role also included an extraordinary meeting in the Attorney General's very office, to review plans for bugging, mugging, burglary, prostitution, and kidnaping.

Another Attorney General was placed in the awkward position of being asked immediately after the Watergate break-in to help get Mr. McCord out of jail before he was identified. He was soon thereafter warned of White House concern with a too aggressive FBI investigation. He was then asked to provide raw FBI Watergate files, improperly, to the White House. That same Attorney General was later used as a secret contact with this committee's investigation of Watergate, and was then removed from office in an apparent connection with the Watergate affair. He eventually became the first Attorney General in history convicted of a crime, for his testimony about Presidential interference in an antitrust case involving a major contributor.

A third Attorney General was forced to resign his office when he backed the special prosecutor's procedure for obtaining Watergate evidence from the White House.

An Assistant Attorney General was also asked to provide raw FBI Watergate files, again improperly, to the White House, and was later told by the President not to investigate the Ellsberg break-in. A Deputy Attorney General was forced to resign when he backed the special prosecutor's decisions in the Watergate case. An Assistant Attorney General gave confidential Justice Department and FBI intelligence information to the President's reelection campaign, at the direction of the White House.

Three Attorneys General, a Deputy Attorney General, and two Assistant Attorneys General. And all this was done on behalf of the Presidency, which has a constitutional responsibility to "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed."

With respect to other Cabinet officers, a Secretary of Commerce with all the authority as to corporate affairs that goes with that position, was placed in charge of raising funds for the President's reelection, including, as it turns out, a number of illegal corporate contributions. A Secretary of Treasury met with a milk producers association and supported their request for higher price supports. After the President granted higher support prices, the milk producers arranged for him to be offered at least $10,000 in cash for his personal use, a transaction for which he has been criminally indicted. . . .

And I think the RECORD should point out, of which he was absolved, declared not guilty.

ESTO '76—ESTONIAN SALUTE TO THE AMERICAN BICENTENNIAL

Mr. BEALL. Mr. President, from July 5 to 11, 1976, Estonians from all around the world will gather in Baltimore for their second worldwide festival—ESTO '76. The theme of this festival will be "The Estonian Salute to Our Bicentennial." ESTO '76 will help to preserve Estonian customs and traditions while, at the same time, highlighting Estonian contributions to the growth of this great Republic.

Mr. President, on February 24, the 58th anniversary of Estonian Independence, I discussed the history of Estonia and its forcible incorporation into the Soviet Union during World War II. At that time I included in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD information on the ESTO '76 activities. I have subsequently become aware that President Ford has agreed to serve as an honorary patron of the ESTO '76 Salute to the American Bicentennial. On February 19, 1976, the President issued a statement "To Americans of Estonian Ancestry" and I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that this Presidential document be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Presidential document follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, D.C., February 19, 1976.

To Americans of Estonian ancestry:

I am delighted to accept the high honor of Honorary Patron of ESTO '76—The Estonian Salute to America's Bicentennial.

As we celebrate the birth of freedom in America, your Estonian Festival calls attention to the remarkable contributions of millions of talented and hard-working immigrants from all over the world to building America into the great nation we know today.

In recalling the fortitude of our founding fathers, we must also rededicate ourselves to making America the same stronghold for men and women of individual spirit and energy it was in 1776—the cradle of liberty.

I am keenly aware of your great anxiety concerning your homeland, families and friends who have been and are still profoundly affected by East-West political developments in Europe. Last summer, just before departing for Helsinki, and before that in February of 1975, I met with your leaders to discuss these concerns and to emphasize that the accord I would sign in Helsinki was neither a treaty nor a legally binding document.

The Helsinki agreements, I pointed out, were political and moral commitments aimed at lessening tensions and opening further the lines of communication between the peoples of East and West.

I further stated that your understandable concern about the effect of the Helsinki declarations on the Baltic nations was groundless.

I can assure you that the United States has never recognized the Soviet incorporation of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania and is not doing so now. Our official policy of nonrecognition is not affected by the results of the European Security Conference.

It is the policy of the United States—and it has been my policy ever since I entered public life—to support the aspirations for freedom and national independence of the peoples of Eastern Europe by every proper and peaceful means.

Finally, I indicated that there is included in the Declaration of Principles on Territorial Integrity the provision that no occupation or acquisition of territory in violation of international law will be recognized as legal.

In our White House meeting, I said this is not to raise the hope that there will be any immediate change in the map of Europe, but rather to emphasize that the United States has not abandoned and will not compromise this long-standing principle.

At the conference itself, I told the participants from the countries of the East that:

"We will spare no effort to ease tensions and to solve problems between us, but it is important that you recognize the deep devotion of the American people and their government to human rights and fundamental freedoms."

I assure each of you that this nation will be vigilant regarding detente. This nation will strive to maintain a safer and saner relationship with our competitors. At the same time, the relaxation of tensions can be implemented only on the basis of mutual concessions within the context of an American defense that is second to none. We will safeguard and advance our vital interests and security.

As we commemorate the 200th anniversary of our revolution, more and more Americans are mindful of their bi-national heritage. In this regard, I was especially pleased to learn that your community is preparing for a worldwide Estonian Festival in conjunction with our Bicentennial.

Your contributions to this nation are recognized and appreciated. I know you will continue to enrich our country's heritage with your art, your architecture, your music and the individual contributions of your many talented individuals.

I commend you for your continued contributions to our national legacy, to our durable system of representative government. Today, I salute you for your struggle on behalf of all human freedom.

GERALD R. FORD.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF POSITION ON VOTES

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the RECORD of yesterday shows that I was necessarily absent during rollcall votes 160, 161, and 162. However, I was attending a meeting of the Board of Visitors of the Naval Academy, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that the permanent RECORD indicate that I was absent on official business during those rollcall votes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1976—CONFERENCE REPORT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of the unfinished business, the conference report on S. 3065, which the clerk will state.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Conference report on S. 3065, an Act to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

Mr. WEICKER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A TIMETABLE FOR SENATE CONSIDERATION OF AND FINAL ACTION ON LEGISLATION DEALING WITH WATERGATE REFORM, INTELLIGENCE OVERSIGHT AND TAX PRIVACY

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a resolution to establish a timetable for Senate consideration of and final action on legislation dealing with Watergate reform, intelligence oversight and tax privacy be considered at this time by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

S. RES. 437

Whereas, over three years of congressional fact-finding have documented that the intelligence community, law enforcement agencies and the Internal Revenue Service have violated the constitutional rights of Americans;

Whereas, these public disclosures of illegal and unconstitutional activities have bred a public distrust in our government leaders and institutions;

Whereas, public and private organizations have recommended expedited action on pending reforms of our law enforcement and tax collection agencies;

Whereas, this is a government of laws;

Whereas, it is essential for this Congress to take the necessary steps to protect future generations against threats to their freedoms and liberties guaranteed by the Constitution;

Whereas, the integrity of, and the public confidence in, the institutions of government can only be restored by corrective legislative action;

Whereas, it is essential that the Congress establish a timetable to consider intelligence oversight, Watergate reform and tax privacy legislation to insure statutory and procedural safeguards are enacted prior to the adjournment of the 94th Congress;

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Senate make every effort to reach by July 2 a final passage vote on Watergate reform, tax privacy and intelligence oversight legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WEICKER. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I believe the word "make" in the resolve clause should be "shall."

Mr. WEICKER. "shall make" or "should make".

I believe it should be worded "should".

I ask that the resolution be so modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be so modified.

The resolution, as modified, is as follows:

S. Res. 487

Whereas, over three years of congressional fact-finding have documented that the intelligence community, law enforcement agencies and the Internal Revenue Service have violated the constitutional rights of Americans;

Whereas, these public disclosures of illegal and unconstitutional activities have bred a public distrust in our government leaders and institutions;

Whereas, public and private organizations have recommended expedited action on pending reforms of our law enforcement and tax collection agencies;

Whereas, this is a government of laws;

Whereas, it is essential for this Congress to take the necessary steps to protect future generations against threats to their freedoms and liberties guaranteed by the Constitution;

Whereas, the integrity of, and the public confidence in, the institutions of government can only be restored by corrective legislative action;

Whereas, it is essential that the Congress establish a timetable to consider intelligence oversight, Watergate reform and tax privacy legislation to insure statutory and procedural safeguards are enacted prior to the adjournment of the 94th Congress;

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Senate should make every effort to reach by July 2 a final passage vote on Watergate reform, tax privacy and intelligence oversight legislation.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be voted upon at the hour of 2 p.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, it is my understanding that will be a yea and nay vote, a rollcall vote.

ORDER FOR VOTE ON FEDERAL CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1976—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask uanimous consent that the vote on agreeing to the Federal Election Commission conference report occur not later than the hour of 4 p.m. this afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, but I only indicate that the span of time following the vote on the Weicker resolution has been requested particularly to protect Senators BROCK and ALLEN—and perhaps other Senators, of whom we are not aware—who we know wish to speak on the conference report before we vote on it.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATOR ALLEN AT 1:30 P.M.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) be recognized at approximately the hour of 1:30 p.m. this afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, might I inquire of the majority and minority leaders as to whether or not it is their understanding, as it is my understanding, that at 1 p.m. we shall proceed to the debate on this resolution?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is correct.

Mr. WEICKER. With a final passage vote at 2 p.m., and that the yeas and nays will be ordered?

Mr. MANSFIELD. They will be ordered in the meantime.

Mr. WEICKER. They will be ordered in the meantime.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is on the Weicker resolution.

Mr. WEICKER. That is correct.

Mr. MANSFIELD. And then we will have the final vote on the conference report no later than 4 p.m. this afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does that conclude the unanimous-consent requests, or was that in the form of an inquiry?

Mr. MANSFIELD. No; I shall still make some additional requests.

LEADERSHIP RESPONSE TO COMMUNICATION FROM SENATOR WEICKER

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, first, I ask unanimous consent that the leadership response to a communication from Senator WEICKER, contained on page S6152 of the RECORD under date of April 29, 1976, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LEADERSHIP RESPONSE TO COMMUNICATION FROM SENATOR WEICKER

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a letter from our distinguished colleague, the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WEICKER), and it is my understanding that the distinguished Republican leader has received a communication of a similar nature.

For the information of Senator WEICKER and the Senate, it is the intention of the joint leadership to call up the conference report on the Federal Election Commission as soon as possible after the House faces up to its responsibility on Monday next, as I understand the situation.

Personally I am unhappy that we have not been able to consider the conference report on FEC before this, but I am sure the reasons for not being able to do so are thoroughly understandable.

The Senate has also agreed to take up the Intelligence Oversight Committee matter on the 10th of next month, and it is my understanding that the assistant majority leader received permission from the Senate last night that it would be the pending order of business on that day, so that there is that assurance that this particular piece of legislation, S. 400, will be taken up at that time.

The distinguished Senator from Connecticut is also interested in Watergate reform and tax privacy legislation. He has urged the leadership to make every effort to guarantee a vote on final passage of these, as well as the other two proposals which I have already mentioned, before the July 4 recess.

It has always been the intention of the leadership to endeavor to do that and we will do our best to see that the wishes of the distinguished Senator from Connecticut are adhered to. But we can do nothing on Watergate reform and tax privacy legislation until those issues are reported out of committee. It is our hope that we will be able to dispose of all these matters well before the Fourth of July recess and we will jointly make every effort to do so.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. If the distinguished majority leader will yield on that point. I have already assured the distinguished Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WEICKER) to the same effect, that the measures in which he is interested that are out of committee will be acted upon. We hope that those in committee will be promptly reported. I would like to see, as the distinguished majority leader has said, action before the July recess, and I think we are both anxious, on both side of the aisle, to cooperate with the distinguished Senator from Connecticut.

I do want to stress the importance of the Federal Election Commission Act. I think that whatever we do, we should do very promptly here, and whatever the President does, he should do very promptly, so that the intent of Congress under the previous act with regard to matching funds legislation can be borne in mind and the effect of any action which would delay it should also be borne carefully in mind.

The conference report is, in my judgment, better than the Senate bill. It is infinitely better than the House bill. It still has its flaws.

It has one aspect which ought to be worth noting, and that is, it is not entirely satisfactory to either labor or management and, I suppose, the conference being made up as it was, it would not have been possible to achieve as an ideal.

But, certainly, progress was made and, certainly, serious and concerned efforts were devoted by the committees and by the conference, and there was no effort in the conference to delay this action whatsoever. Those who watched the open sessions of that conference should affirm, I think, that the conference, while it argued vigorously over many different points, did not indulge in any delaying tactics.

So the sooner we can act on this measure, the better.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, it is my understanding, to recapitulate, that the Senate has agreed that a vote on the Weicker resolution will occur at the hour of 2 p.m., that the vote on final passage of the conference report will occur not later than 4 p.m., and that the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) will be recognized at approximately 1:30 p.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF PRESIDENTIAL VETO OF H.R. 9803

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, for the information of the Senate, if the House of Representatives this afternoon overrides the child care bill (H.R. 9803), vetoed by the President of the United States, after talking with the acting Republican leader, it is the joint leadership's suggestion that if the veto is overridden the Senate will proceed to the consideration of H.R. 9803 at 1 p.m. tomorrow afternoon and vote on the veto at 2 p.m. tomorrow afternoon. I make that in the form of a unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL 1 P.M.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess until 1 p.m. today.

There being no objection, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. STEVENSON).

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, if the Senator from Connecticut will yield to me, I should like to suggest the absence of a quorum without his losing his right to the floor.

Mr. WEICKER. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR CERTAIN BILLS TO BE HELD AT THE DESK

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when H.R. 10374, H.R. 12168, H.R. 13035, and H.R. 12018 are received, they be held at the desk pending further disposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Also, under the same stipulation, H.R. 12216.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I suggest the absence of a quorum, under the same conditions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A TIMETABLE FOR SENATE CONSIDERATION OF AND FINAL ACTION ON LEGISLATION DEALING WITH WATERGATE REFORM, INTELLIGENCE OVERSIGHT AND TAX PRIVACY

The Senate continued with the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 437) to establish a timetable for Senate consideration of and final action on legislation dealing with Watergate reform, intelligence oversight and tax privacy.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, first let me express my appreciation to Senator MANSFIELD and Senator SCOTT, both for their supportive words of last week and for allowing the immediate consideration of this resolution (S. Res. 437) now before the Senate.

Why this resolution?

Because it parts the curtain of official silence behind which reform has been stalled to death by the Executive, the Congress, and the bureaucracy.

If there is to be no oversight, no Watergate reform, and no tax privacy, then let it be so voted in full view of the Nation.

As matters now stand, people believe one or all of the following:

We have acted.

Action is imminent.

Reform is guaranteed.

The FEC bill takes care of all problems.

Everybody does it so why get into a flap.

Our memories will keep us free.

President Ford's Executive orders have corrected all abuses.

Of course, none of the above is correct.

I do not doubt for a minute that some or all of the legislation mentioned in the resolution will pass if the Senate has to go public.

However, I cannot win a shadowboxing contest with the President, with the Directors of the CIA and FBI or with the empire-preservers of the Senate.

When this resolution is agreed to, an important step in defense of our Constitution will have been taken.

Laws, not memories. Executive orders or waiting games, are our business. Nobody will benefit politically today from legislation that essentially relates to the condition of the American spirit.

But our children tomorrow will have something better than we received and that is reward enough.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER AUTHORIZING REQUEST FOR YEA-AND-NAY VOTES TODAY

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order during the next half-hour or so to ask for the yeas and nays on the Weicker resolution and on agreeing to the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1976—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate continued with the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3065) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for its administration by a Federal Election Commission appointed in accordance with the requirements of the Constitution, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I wonder if the distinguished manager of the bill would respond to two or three questions that I have in mind with regard to the conference report.

Mr. CANNON. I will be delighted to.

Mr. ALLEN. As I understand the conference report, in the matter of solicitation by a corporation or a labor organization or separate segregated funds set up by either of these concerns, there is a group of persons that the labor organization can solicit at any time, they being the members of the labor organization; and there is a group that the corporation or the segregated funds set up by the corporation can solicit at any time, they being the officers and executive or administrative personnel, and the executive or administrative personnel include those who are paid on a salary rather than an hourly basis and who have policymaking, managerial, professional, or supervisory authority.

Then there is another group as to each of these entities that can be solicited only twice a year.

As to the labor organization, it would be those that the corporation can solicit at any time and, of course, that would include employees who were not members of organizations, and the corporation or the separate segregated fund for political purposes of the corporation can solicit twice a year from the employees in addition to those that they can solicit at any time.

Is that correct?

Mr. CANNON. The Senator is correct, with the further proviso as to the method of solicitation.

Mr. ALLEN. That is correct. That has to be in writing.

Mr. CANNON. In writing, by mail.

Mr. ALLEN. To go back to a trustee.

Mr. CANNON. To the residence of the party, and designed in such a fashion that it cannot be ascertained who makes a contribution of $50 or less and who does not make such a contribution.

Mr. ALLEN. That is the way the Senator from Alabama understands it.

Now, an amendment which I offered on the floor and which was accepted by the manager of the bill, the distinguished Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON), amendment No. 1496, was adopted by the Senate and agreed to in the conference.

This amendment was made necessary by the fact that there are certain types of corporations or organizations that do not have stockholders. This amendment appears on page 19 of the conference report and is in section 321(b)(2)(C), starting with the third line from the bottom of the page:

> This paragraph shall not prevent a membership organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock, or a separate segregated fund established by a membership organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock, from soliciting contributions to such a fund from members of such organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock.

So if the members of such an organization, who, not being stockholders, still make up the corporation, would solicitations by such an organization of its members fall into the first category that I enumerated as to who may be solicited by a corporation or a labor organization or a separate segregated fund set up by one of these? Would they come in the class that could be solicited at any time?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, the Senator is correct, that the provisions of section 321 (b)(2)(C), and later, on page 19 section 321(b)(4)(C) would permit, for example, a mutual life insurance company or a separate segregated fund established by such an organization to solicit contributions for such a fund from its members. So any type of an organization that had members, though not categorized as stockholders, and so on, would be covered under that provision.

Mr. ALLEN. And could solicit at any time?

Mr. CANNON. They could solicit at any time, just as a corporation and its separate segregated fund can solicit certain classes at any time, and a labor union can solicit its members at any time.

Mr. ALLEN. So a membership corporation such as a State Farm Bureau Federation, the Grange, or the National Farmers Organization could solicit their members?

Mr. CANNON. Yes. If they are corporations they could solicit their membership.

Mr. ALLEN. And REA cooperatives could solicit their members at any time?

Mr. CANNON. Yes. That is my understanding of the intent of the Senator's amendment and of the language we have drafted in the report.

Mr. ALLEN. I appreciate the answers from the chairman. I am glad he mentioned specifically a mutual life insurance company, such as, I would understand, Metropolitan, Mutual of New York or Equitable. Any mutual life insurance company would be able to solicit its policyholders since they are the group that make up the corporation?

Mr. CANNON. If the policyholders are members within the definition of that type of an organization, then they could be solicited under that provision of the law.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter dated April 5, 1976, from Mr. Remmel H. Dudley, vice president, Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., here in Washington, be printed in the RECORD. I have shown the manager of the bill a copy of the letter.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

METROPOLITAN LIFE,
Washington, D.C., April 5, 1976.

Re Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976—S. 3065.

Senator JAMES B. ALLEN,
Dirksen Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR ALLEN: In debating the above bill, the Senate on March 18, 1976 adopted your Amendment No. 1496, to bring "membership organizations, cooperatives, or corporations without capital stock" within the Act.

As you know, a mutual life insurance company has no stockholders. As we read the language of your amendment we are of the opinion that a mutual life insurance company would, therefore, be included. This interpretation was confirmed last week by your Legislative Assistant, Mr. Gentry. Indeed, Mr. Gentry told me other insurance companies had made a similar inquiry and had been assured it was your intent to include such companies.

To avoid any misunderstanding, and to make this perfectly clear, we wonder if it would be possible for the Conference Committee to include in its report a specific reference to mutual life insurance companies. While the language as it exists in your amendment is reasonably clear, such specific reference would preclude any question, and would be consistent with your intent. If this is not feasible, perhaps during debate on the conference bill you could make this point clear in a coloquy.

We appreciate your interest in including these organizations in your Amendment No. 1496.

With most cordial regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

REMMEL H. DUDLEY,
Vice President.

Mr. ALLEN. This letter is an inquiry from a vice president of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., saying that their attorneys construe this amendment to cover a mutual life insurance company. The answer that the chairman has made is that such an operation would be covered by this amendment and would permit a mutual life insurance company to solicit policyholders. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, that is correct.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the chairman.

I have one further inquiry. The manager of the bill was kind enough to indicate approval here in the Chamber and to offer to accept an amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama having to do with disclosure by Members of the House and Senate and all Federal employees making in excess of $25,000 per year of their assets, liabilities and net worth each year, I believe on April 15 of each year, provided they had an income in excess of $25,000 a year. There was a yea and nay vote in the Senate on this amendment and it was adopted overwhelmingly. I note this amendment is not carried forward in the conference report. I know that the conferees on the part of the Senate would have sought to express the will of the Senate in the conference report and have this amendment adopted. I would just like to inquire of the manager of the bill, who was the chairman of the conference, as to what happened to this amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I say to the Senator that the members of the other body were unwilling to accept the Senate position on that matter and it finally came down to a question of whether we were able to get a bill agreed upon without that provision or whether we would not get a bill. So the Members of the Senate conferees reluctantly receded from their position in their desire to get such a bill.

I may say just as a matter of passing concern that in my own State of Nevada the legislature last term adopted a similar provision with respect to State officeholders, both elective and appointive, quite similar to this. The matter was tested in our supreme court just within the last week and was held unconstitutional. I have not read the decision yet so I am not prepared to comment on it, but it was a matter of passing concern.

Mr. ALLEN. Was it unconstitutional as against the Nevada constitution or the U.S. Constitution?

Mr. CANNON. I cannot say that. All I can say is that I received the telephone information that the Nevada Supreme Court held that such a provision was unconstitutional and threw it out. I will advise the Senator after I have a chance to read the opinion.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the distinguished Senator from Nevada. I recall when I offered the amendment the Senator modified the amendment by adding, as being subject to the amendment, not only Members of the House and Senate, but candidates for those offices. I thought that was a very constructive amendment.

Mr. CANNON. That is right. As the amendment was adopted here it referred to candidates for Federal office and it included also members of the executive and the judicial branch. So it would cover all three branches of the Government equally. I may say this is an amendment that the Senate has acted upon on several occasions before and we have been unable, up to the present time, to get the House to agree.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the distinguished Senator. I do realize in a conference committee one has to give and take on these issues. I regret that the conferees were unable to have that amendment carried forward as part of the conference report.

I thank the distinguished Senator for accommodating me by answering these questions I had in mind.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, in my explanation of the conference report and in various discussions with my colleagues in the Chamber, I have referred to a number of instances where the conference substitutes changes the present law. There are still other instances, such as the discussion at page 63 of the conference report of the relationship between section 301(f) and section 321, relating to communications and nonpartisan activities, where the conferees have attempted to clarify the law.

I think it is important to emphasize, however, that there has been no intent to make changes in existing law or legislative history by silence.

It is understood that where the conference bill has not changed existing law or where the conferees have not attempted to clarify various provisions, the legislative history of the 1971 act and the 1974 amendments will be controlling.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR YEAS AND NAYS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays with a single show of hands on the Weicker resolution and on agreeing to the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered on the Weicker resolution and on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFCER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today it stand in adjournment until 12 noon tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE ON THURSDAY, MAY 6, 1976

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday, after the two leaders or their designees are recognized under the standing order, Mr. PROXMIRE be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATOR GOLDWATER ON THURSDAY, MAY 6, 1976

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, following the recognition of Mr. PROXMIRE on Thursday, Mr. GOLDWATER be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF S. RES. 406

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, upon the disposition of the pending conference report, the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar Order No. 718, Senate Resolution 406, a resolution with reference to the importance of sound relations with the Soviet Union.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF S. 2679

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, upon the dispositon of Senate Resolution 406, the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar Order No. 716, S. 2679, a bill to establish a Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A TIMETABLE FOR SENATE CONSIDERATION OF AND FINAL ACTION ON LEGISLATION DEALING WITH WATERGATE REFORM, INTELLIGENCE OVERSIGHT AND TAX PRIVACY

The Senate continued with the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 437) to establish a timetable for Senate consideration of and final action on legislation dealing with Watergate reform, intelligence oversight and tax privacy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed to vote on Senate Resolution 437, as modified. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BIDEN), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY), and the Senator from California (Mr. TUNNEY) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. DURKIN), and the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) are absent on official business.

I also announce that the Senator from Maine (Mr. MUSKIE) is absent because of illness.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY), and the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) would each vote "yea."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS) is necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS) is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 91, nays 0, as follows:

So the resolution (S. Res. 437) as modified, was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 437

Whereas, over three years of congressional fact-finding have documented that the intelligence community, law enforcement agencies, and the Internal Revenue Service have violated the constitutional right of Americans;

Whereas these public disclosures of illegal and unconstitutional activities have bred a public distrust in our Government leaders and institutions;

Whereas public and private organizations have recommended expedited action on pending reforms of our law enforcement and tax collection agencies;

Whereas this is a Government of laws;

Whereas it is essential for this Congress to take the necessary steps to protect future generations against threats to their freedoms and liberties guaranteed by the Constitution;

Whereas, the integrity of, and the public confidence in, the institutions of government can only be restored by corrective legislative action;

Whereas, it is essential that the Congress establish a timetable to consider intelligence oversight, Watergate reform, and tax privacy legislation to insure statutory and procedural safeguards are enacted prior to the adjournment of the Ninety-fourth Congress;

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Senate should make every effort to reach, by July 2, a final passage vote on Watergate reform, tax privacy, and intelligence oversight legislation.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1976—CONFERENCE REPORT

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STAFFORD). The Senate will now return to the unfinished business, the conference report on the Federal Election Commission on which, by unanimous consent, there will be a final vote before 4 p.m.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, may I say to my colleagues while the agreement is that we will have a vote before 4 p.m. I anticipate that the vote probably could come within the next 15 minutes.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I am not so sure we can make that 15-minute timetable. I do not intend to take much longer than that myself, but there may be other Members who wish to speak on the matter before us.

Mr. President, sometime ago I called the amendments to the Federal Election Campaign Act "a deceit, a sham, and a fraud on the American public." Since then, there have been many changes in those amendments; unfortunately, they are still a "deceit, a sham, and a fraud on the American public."

In their haste to make the Federal Election Commission a congressional protection agency, the conference committee bill strips the Federal Election Commission of almost all of its advisory authority.

In fact, the bill itself states that the Commission and none of its employees can issue "opinions of an advisory nature" unless Congress has first specifically approved the general rule of law to be discussed.

What this means is that candidates will probably be forced to go this entire election cycle without the guidance of advisory opinions. Every challenger will be required to face a law so complicated I doubt if it will be fully understood before it is changed again in ensuing years.

Even the old law was difficult to understand—with the benefit of advisory opinions. Let me give an example. My staff has noted three recent campaign filings by challengers. Each of these three individuals filed reports on April 10. And, each of them apparently violated the law in doing so.

I am certain that these violations—some sizable, some minor—were not intentional. But I find it quite distressing that all three of these gentlemen are lawyers, two have been active in politics for some time, and all have professed a commitment to follow the law.

Yet, despite their good intent and knowledge, they all apparently violated it. One person accepted a contribution in the form of a loan that is far in excess of the legal limit of $1,000. Another filed a report for his committee but did not file one for himself. Finally, the third filed two identical reports, one for himself and one for his committee.

These examples are being repeated all across the country. With a self-contradictory law, every candidate could be in the same boat unknowingly, unintentionally, and while sincerely trying to fulfill his ethical commitment to his constituency. Yet, what is Congress doing about this? Are we moving to make it easier for persons to comply with the law? Absolutely not. This bill makes it almost impossible for anyone not directly involved with the legislation to understand it and virtually impossible for those who wrote the law to understand it. The reduction of the advisory opinion power of the commission will make the system function less efficiently. The result will be more confusion, chaos, and a renewed suspicion about the intent of Congress as it writes its own reelection code.

Of course, in the rush to pass this legislation Congress has not overlooked its own best interest. For example, a new loophole was created to allow honorariums to be funneled into compaign activity. Not only was the honorarium limit increased to $25,000 per year, at the same time honorariums were exempted from the definition of contribution. Because a person may contribute an unlimited amount to his own campaign, funds for a speech given to a Senator can flow directly into his campaign—even if they are corporate funds. Clearly this is an incumbent protection feature.

As one would expect, the conference committee failed to impose any restraint on the use of the congressional franking privilege.

I say to my colleagues that the Senate has acted time and again to extend the limit on the frank to 60 days prior to an election, but unfortunately we were unable to sustain that posture with the House.

While the frank can be an important tool in the fight against apathy and misinformation, it is clearly susceptible to misuse during the closing days of a campaign. An amendment to increase the number of days before an election when the frank cannot be used was deleted. Thus, incumbent access to free mailing privileges is protected up to 28 days before an election.

Even sections of the conference report designed to help challengers—if there are any—are troublesome. Take the change in the requirement to preserve the identification of contributors. The threshold was raised from $10 to $50. This does relieve a burden on campaign treasurers. But, it also opens a new loophole to allow unreported contributions to flow into a campaign. The report language makes it clear that even if a person gives in excess of $100, it need not be reported under this act, if the contributions are made in amounts under $50. I find this a dangerous new precedent.

Actually, the total effect of this bill would be to make the Commission a subcommittee of Congress. That is what it amounts to. While I am certain that this cozy arrangement quiets many fears among those already in public office, it will help continue the virtual monopoly of incumbents in American election politics.

This situation reminds me of what has happened to other regulatory agencies. It is in fashion to say that regulatory agencies have become captives of the very people they are supposed to regulate. It may not just be fashionable, it is certainly factual in this particular case. Well, Congress was regulated for a few weeks and found the prospects pretty distasteful. This bill solves that problem, it will put the Commission under the thumb of Congress forever. Congress has made another power grab, this time for the supposedly independent commission designed to govern their own reflection.

I think that is the thing that bothers me most about this particular bill, Mr. President, because there have been abuses in the past, and every Member of this body and I think every person in the American Republic, knows that. Yet Congress never prosecuted a single person. Under the old Corrupt Practices Act, it was enforcing its own election process. Not one person was ever prosecuted.

So what have we done? We created an independent commission. The very heart and soul of that was to give them independence so we could have independent enforcement of the election process and, therefore, independent protection of the American people against the abuses, and we have destroyed that independence by this particular action that is before us today.

Obviously, some violations will be taken to court under this bill, but it is strange that we have taken out all of the felony provisions. In effect, we have decriminalized campaign violations, or will have if this bill becomes law.

I admit that even under this bill it is possible that some violations will be taken to court. And do not think for a minute the incumbents have not thought of that, too. Surprisingly, there are no more felony provisions in this act.

In a sense, campaign violations have been decriminalized—or will be if this bill becomes law. The maximum jail sentence for any violation is 1 year. I would have thought that events of the last few years would have convinced us that our election process needs better protection, tougher penalties, and more severe enforcement. I cannot understand what led the conference committee to take a different direction.

Equally bad, the Justice Department is no longer able to prosecute on its own. If an aggressive district attorney finds a clear violation of the law, he cannot take the person into court. He must refer the case to the Federal Election Commission. And what if this agency, which Congress has neatly overtaken, imposes nothing but a simple fine? That is it. The Justice Department can take no further action—even if it violently disagrees with the decision. I find the total "decriminalization" of the campaign law violations one of the most disturbing features of the bill.

I question whether we can decriminalize campaign violations, in all candor, with our constituency in the American people.

One cannot, however, be certain of the full impact of this bill. It is so poorly drafted, the language so convoluted, that I doubt if any of us will know for years the real meaning of many sections. The conference report illustrates the confusion and uncertainty that exist. Why, one section of the conference report makes a suggestion that is in clear opposition to the language of the statute itself. When Congressman WIGGINS raised this point, his argument was dismissed.

If the conferees cannot agree on what this statute means, how can we expect a candidate in Tennessee or Nevada to understand it. And, now that we have tied the hands of the Commission to issue advisory opinions, we have guaranteed that those questions will remain unanswered.

I suppose for those Members who face reelection this year it may be somewhat reassuring to realize that at any minute the rug can be pulled out from under a challenger by accusing him of a violation of this act. But I might say that can also be true of incumbents. Candidates, constituents, citizens and people need to understand the law with some clarity. That is utterly impossible with this particular bill.

I find the conflict of interest in that kind of legislation so overwhelming that I cannot believe it will pass this body and be enacted into law.

Mr. President, during the original debate, I supported a simple reconstitution of the Federal Election Commission. I still do. It is essential that we do so. Rightly or wrongly, we wrote a law that set up the rules for running in elections in this country for the House, the Senate, and the Presidency. We have already unfairly distorted and dislocated the Presidential process. We have disadvantaged not only candidates but people who were supporting those candidates because we changed the rules of the game in the middle of the game. And that is not right.

I did not like the way that law was written, but, for goodness' sake, we had an obligation to see that the law was kept intact during the process of the primaries so people would know where they stood. Despite that fact, the rules were changed. People, candidates and supporters have been put into an impossible situation.

We had no choice other than to reconstitute the Election Commission, to do it cleanly and simply, and proceed under the law as it was written for the balance of this year.

After this election is over a whole lot of changes need to be made. There is no question about that. Everybody here knows that. But we should not do it during the middle of a campaign; we should not do it so people do not have a fair chance to express their views in a free society.

I think perhaps the only process that I can suggest to my colleagues in the face of this situation we now find ourselves in is to attempt to reject the conference report, enact a simple extension of the Federal Election Commission with fully independent status, and set ourselves to work for the balance of this year to see where this law must be changed so that in the ensuing elections the American people will be better served by the representative branch of this particular constitutional system of ours.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, I would like to address a couple of questions to the distinguished chairman of the committee. The Senate version of this law, Mr. President, carried the definition of the word stockholder and for some reason it was omitted from the substitute in conference. I am sure there was no attempt by that omission to deprive employees of corporations who own vested beneficial interests in the corporation stock from being within the definition of those who may be solicited by separate segregated funds. Is this not correct, in the chairman's opinion?

Mr. CANNON. I can say to my colleague there certainly was no attempt to deprive anyone of the general right of definition under the term stockholder. The conferees did not attempt to work out a description because generally the term stockholder is determined by looking at the particular State law. Certainly, if an individual has a vested beneficial interest in the stock, with the normal rights to vote and to receive dividends, if any, and to share in the profits or losses of the company in proportion to his or her percentage of ownership, all of which would accrue to an individual under the general principles of corporate law, then such an individual certainly would be considered to be a stockholder.

The conferees, as I said, did decide against an attmept to define that term and to leave that matter to the normal concepts of corporate law.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I would take it, then, an employee who has a stock acquisition plan by purchase, bonus or otherwise and who, therefore, has a vested interest in the employer corporation is not relegated to the status of a second-class stockholder position by this conference language.

Mr. CANNON. There certainly is no intent to relegate them to a secondary position. If they have a vested interest in the stock and the right to vote whatever proportionate shares they have under a stock ownership plan or whatever it may be, obviously they would be a stockholder within the meaning of the term. As I said, most State laws define in their own corporate law structure what constitutes a stockholder.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I have in mind such stock acquisition plans as Sears, Roebuck, Marriott Corp., and others. I do not think there is any attempt to deprive any person, even though an employee, of his rights as a shareholder and his right to be informed or solicited.

Mr. CANNON. There was no such intent.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I thank the chairman.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I rise, first of all, to commend the chairman of the Rules Committee for the work that has been done in bringing this measure to the point where in a few moments we will be acting on the conference committee's action.

I support the conference committee's action on the election reform bill, and I hope that it will be approved by the Senate and signed by the President.

In my view, the pending legislation wisely went beyond the steps required to deal with the reconstitution of the Federal Election Commission in the wake of the Supreme Court's decision in Buckley against Valeo.

In addition to reconstituting the Commission, the present bill contains important and urgently needed provisions to prevent the artificial proliferation of political committees, and to insure that so called independent spending is genuinely independent of a candidate and his political committees, before such spending qualifies for the exemption from the limits on campaign spending under the Supreme Court's ruling.

I also commend the conferees for reaching acceptable compromises on the other sensitive questions involved in this complex legislation. Although not all of us may agree on particular solutions reached, it seems clear that the integrity and independence of the Commission have survived the unjustified assaults upon it, and that the many other difficult issues have been resolved fairly and dispassionately.

Obviously, the President is receiving strong pressure to veto this measure. Experience under the new law will tell whether or not additional modifications are needed. But I am convinced that the conference bill is far better legislation than either the present state of the law in the wake of the disruption and uncertainty produced by the Supreme Court decision, or the result likely to be obtained if Congress tries again from scratch.

My hope, therefore, is that in recognition of these realities, the President will not succumb to the partisan advice to veto the bill—or, if he does succumb, that Congress will have the good sense to override the veto. Certainly, the overwhelming House vote for the bill sends a clear message to President Ford to sign the law.

There is, of course, one major area where the law is obviously deficient—its failure to include public financing for congressional elections. So long as we maintain the shocking double standard of public financing for Presidential elections and private financing for Senate and House elections—so long as we refuse to take congressional elections off the auction block—our goal of genuine election reform will continue to be a hollow promise.

Public financing is the wisest possible investment of the taxpayer's money. It will pay rich dividends in the form of future Congresses more responsive to the people.

The dollar checkoff method of public financing is working. And it is working better every year. According to the most recent figures available from the IRS—based on tax returns processed so far this year—25 percent of taxpayers used the checkoff on their 1975 returns, up from 23 percent in 1974. The results for the 4 years of operation of the checkoff are:

Tax year, taxpayer participation, and amount:

1972, 3 percent, $12.9 million.
1973, 13 percent, $17.3 million.
1974, 23 percent, $31.9 million.
1975, 25 percent, $17.9 million (partial results).
Total, $80.0 million.

If the present pattern of participation continues for the remaining 1975 returns still to be processed, the IRS estimates that an additional $14–16 million will be designated for the Presidential campaign fund, for a total of approximately $95 million designated to the fund since 1972.

To date, $12.6 million has been paid out to candidates in the 1976 primaries, and requests for an additional $3.7 million are pending before the FEC.

It is clear that large numbers of taxpayers believe in public financing and are using it on their tax forms to vote for clean and honest presidential elections, free of the taint of special interest contributions and the appearance of corruption.

The average taxpayer deserves the chance to vote for such elections for Congress, too, because it will end the corrosive influence of large campaign contributors and bring more effective answers by Congress on vital national challenges like inflation and employment, health and education, crime and gun control and tax reform.

Taxpayers care about these issues. And they care about integrity in Government. The annually increasing participation by taxpayers in the checkoff on their tax forms is a welcome and healthy sign that concern about election reform and honest, open government is not fading as Watergate recedes.

The best way to achieve our goal of ending the appearance of corruption and the influence of special interest money in campaign financing in congressional elections is to adopt public financing for the House and Senate. The opportunity to achieve that goal has now passed in the 94th Congress. But I intend to do my best to insure that it has the highest priority in the new Congress that convenes next January.

I know from both the statements and the record which have been made by the chairman of the Rules Committee (Mr. CANNON), who reported a bill in 1974 and supported it and fought for it in the conference that year, that the chairman stands for the public financing of congressional elections.

I believe the American people want to ensure that the representatives they are selecting for the House of Representatives and the Senate will be accountable to the people rather than to fat cat contributors.

I feel that the case has been made convincingly for the importance of public financing in the American election system. The case is equally convincing for Senate elections, House elections, and Presidential elections.

Quite clearly, if we in Congress are going to provide sauce for the goose in terms of public financing for Presidential campaigns, I think it is only sensible and logical to provide sauce for the gander in terms of congressional and senatorial campaigns.

So, I indicate this afternoon to the chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration and to my colleague, a senior member of the Rules Committee (Mr. HUGH SCOTT), who has worked closely with me in a bipartisan effort to achieve public financing for congressional campaigns, that I hope that this issue may be acted on early in the new Congress.

All of us know that the American people are going to pay for the campaigns one way or the other. If they do not pay for them through public financing, they are going to pay for them in terms of the special rules and special privileges that are given to the large concentrations of economic power that are able to wield their influence in the legislative process time and time again—and their influence and access is purchased through their campaign contributions.

That is why public financing of Presidential campaigns and congressional campaigns is the most important reform in terms of governmental responsibility and integrity that I have seen in the 14 years that I have been in the Senate.

The American people want their elected representatives to be accountable to them, and not to the large contributors. We have taken that giant step for Presidential elections, and it is time to take the same giant step for Congress.

I commend the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON), who has been tireless in the pursuit of this reform, and the members of his committee for the work that they have done and the service that they have provided to our country in this important reform.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I know the Senator from Massachusetts has had a long interest in the subject matter of public financing. I may have at one point been tempted to listen with some sympathy to his point of view.

But I do think that perhaps our experience might teach us something this year, and that is the fact that Congress can by action or inaction not only propose, but it can dispose or refuse to dispose and, in this particular case, refuse to sustain campaigns of decent people who are running for the Presidency.

The very fact that we wrote a law in which there were matching funds raised in Presidential campaigns and then allowed the Commission which disposed of the funds to lapse so that no check could be sent, tells me a great deal about the power that we are placing in the hands of this particular body when we write that kind of a law.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an observation?

Mr. BROCK. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator is familiar with the fact that the bill that was actually passed by the Senate in 1974 would not have been vulnerable on the question of the Commission's method of appointment. So I think the Senator's indictment is of Congress as a whole in fashioning legislation that was eventually challenged successfully by the Supreme Court. The fact of the matter is the bill that was recommended by the Committee on Rules and Administration in 1974 and approved by the Senate would have been upheld by the Supreme Court, and the kind of objections that the Senator from Tennessee is expressing now never would have been made.

When we are talking about the legislative mixup on this, I certainly hope that our membership will understand quite clearly that it was to no extent due to the workings and functionings of the Senate or the Committee on Rules and Administration.

Mr. BROCK. The Senator is correct on the very limited point that the original Senate bill was constitutional as now interpreted by the Court. I would not argue that.

As a matter of fact, I think it is only fair to say—and I am not trying to get in a shouting contest with the other body—that throughout the process our Senate conferees and our Senate participants in this reform movement have had more rationality, coherence, and candor than perhaps some on the other side. I think the result would have been far better had we passed the Senate effort, but the fact is we did not.

What I remain concerned about is, whatever the circumstances that led us into the constitutional challenge, the fact is that once it was made and sustained Congress lacked the ability or the will, in its entirety, to come to grips with a desperate problem for legitimate candidates and legitimate supporters throughout the 50 States, and we have markedly disadvantaged certain campaigns as a result.

I also make one other point. I have learned something else from the fact that even when the funds were going to the candidates the situation did not seem to change very much. Viable candidates remained viable, and those who did not have an appeal to the electorate failed miserably.

That is the way it always has been, and public financing is not going to change that. All it does is to require the American taxpayer to put money into the campaign of an individual with whom he thoroughly disagrees. I find that somewhat difficult to justify to my constituency. If the Senator's constituency is different, he can make his own case there. But for myself, it is very difficult for me to prove to Tennesseans that I have a right to impose a tax upon them to support a candidate with whom they disagree on virtually every fundamental issue before the American people. I think that is the basic test.

However, the question I have today is not the constitutionality. It is not the public financing. It is the fact that this bill as written, as agreed to by the conferees, is impossible of interpretation, is disadvantageous to challengers, is advantageous to incumbents, is a self-perpetuating device for the Congress of the United States, which puts a stagnation upon the American political process.

It reduces our ability to freshen it by constant turnover, by change—by improvement, if you will. It is a process by which Congress can maintain control over its own reelection standards. I think that is wrong. That is what has been wrong with the process under the old Corrupt Practices Act for the last 50 years. All we have done is change the name. This bill maintains in the hands of Congress the right to set its standards, the conduct of elections, and under which it will allow or tolerate someone to challenge it. I believe that is unfortunate for the American people, who deserve better. I believe we can write a better piece of law than this, and I hope we will do so next year.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, having already commended the contribution made by the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee, I also acknowledge the very strong contribution that has been made to this legislation by the distinguished Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK), as well as the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK), both of whom have followed this measure closely. All of us involved in the debate and the discussion of the bill know that they have been very much involved in the study and deliberation of the issues, and we appreciate the major effort they have given to the bill. They have made many very important contributions to our understanding of these complex issues. In spite of the fact that I have differed with the Senator from Tennessee on some of the issues, I think it is important to acknowledge the very important contributions the Senator from Tennessee has made to this legislation.

Mr. BROCK. The Senator from Massachusetts is very gracious. He knows that I respect him for his contribution.

Mr. PACKWOOD obtained the floor.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PACKWOOD. I yield.

INCREASED PARTICIPATION IN THE INTER-AMERICAN DEVELOPMENT BANK

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on H.R. 9721.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STAFFORD) laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9721) to provide for increased participation by the United States in the Inter-American Development Bank, to provide for the entry of nonregional members and the Bahamas and Guyana in the Inter-American Development Bank, to provide for the participation of the United States in the African Development Fund, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair be authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. SPARKMAN, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. CHURCH, Mr. MCGEE, Mr. MCGOVERN, Mr. CASE, Mr. JAVITS, and Mr. HUGH SCOTT conferees on the part of the Senate.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1976—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate continued with the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3065) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for its administration by a Federal Election Commission appointed in accordance with the requirements of the Constitution, and for other purposes.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I had hoped to address this question to the chairman, but I will address it at this time to the ranking Republican member of the committee, and perhaps the chairman can address himself to this matter when he returns to the Chamber.

There is another point in the conference report on S. 3065 which requires clarification. This concerns section 321 (b)(2)(C). It authorizes various types of organizations to use union or corporate funds, as the case may be, to pay the expenses of establishment, administration, and solicitation of a separate segregated fund. It is my understanding that the list of organizations contained in the section is illustrative but not exclusive. For example, trade associations are frequently incorporated and, of course, all are membership organizations. Accordingly, is it correct that such an association may use corporate funds to pay the expenses of establishment, administration, and solicitation of its separate segregated fund?

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the chairman will return to the Chamber shortly. Perhaps the Senator from Oregon would like to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, it has been more than 3 months now since the Buckley against Valeo Supreme Court decision established the need for legislative changes in our Federal election law. Our original deadline and extension thereof have long passed, and here we are—still trying to reach agreement on a measure which should have been disposed of with a simple extension and restructuring in less than 2 weeks.

After tinkering with every aspect of our election laws during that time, we are today being asked in the name of campaign reform to make a judgment on an extremely complex compromise proposal—the long-range ramifications of which no one can accurately predict. For one who favors a strong and truly independent Federal Election Commission and the even-handed treatment of political interest groups, the option to support the conference report on S. 3065 is not a very attractive one.

SUBSTANTIVE CHANGES UNTIMELY

When the Senate considered its version of this legislation in March, I indicated my preference for a bill which would satisfy the Supreme Court's objections without further substantive changes. The situation which dictated that type of solution then is even more compelling now—for the middle of a Presidential election campaign is hardly the time to start changing the rules.

I am not against making useful modifications in our campaign guidelines, Mr. President, but I seriously question the propriety of doing so when every candidate and committee affected is already operating under an established set of standards. That was the whole point, of course, behind the earlier effort to simply reconstitute the Commission for the present and consider more comprehensive reforms next year.

SUPPORT ESSENTIAL AMENDMENTS

Let me say without equivocation that I support the immediate restructure of an independent Federal Election Commission. I also support—as do our so-called public interest lobbies—immediate passage of provisions which would permit a smooth transition to a new Commission, as well as amendments needed to close the gaps created by the Valeo decision.

In that category, I would certainly include the amendment which places a per candidate contribution limit on political action committee and their affiliates. The provisions requiring the reporting of all "independent" expenditures in excess of $100 and those for "internal" partisan communications by labor unions and corporations should also be considered essential.

REVERSE OF REFORM

But the balance of the bill is a ridiculous and ineffective attempt to grant political advantages to special interest groups and permit total domination of the Federal Election Commission by the majority party in Congress. It represents a step backward, not a step forward, in election reform.

Accordingly, I find it most curious that nonpartisan citizen organizations such as Common Cause are giving this conference report their unqualified support as a measure which "creates a strong and effective FEC and closes key loopholes in the 1974 law." Conveniently, they have omitted the word independent from their description of the FEC—and for good reason, since everything it does will be at the pleasure of the Senate Rules and House Administration Committees.

CONGRESSIONAL VETO POWER

Apparently, these lobbyist groups are willing to overlook the fact that this conference bill will not only allow advisory opinions of the Commission to be vetoed by either the House or Senate, but will also give Congress the right to make line item rejections of individual sections of a regulation. It seems to me this represents an abandonment of the commitment to an autonomous enforcement agency which they made 2 years ago—and I would certainly hope their membership might call upon them to explain the inconsistency.

Perhaps this new concept of self-protection which we are approving for ourselves might be extended to the average citizen out there who is looking for the same type of insulation from the Government bureaucracy. I assume that Common Cause and others who are endorsing the principle for Congress will also be prepared now to accord the veto privilege to every business in America subjected to regulations issued by the other independent commissions.

SUPPRESS CITIZEN INVOLVEMENT

Although the champions of this legislation would have us believe otherwise, I think it is clear from reading the conference report that vast portions of the bill preserve and carve out special benefits for union political action committees while limiting the authority of corporate PAC's. Some of the language can even be construed as prohibiting nonpartisan undertakings—including voter education, registration, and get-out-the-vote campaigns—with rank-and-file employees.

Such restrictions on political activity, even partisan in nature, are abhorrent at a time when good government calls for more, not less, citizen involvement. Restriction of political activity is not reform, Mr. President; that comes only through regulation and disclosure of political activity while encouraging it to the fullest extent.

COMMUNICATIONS REPORTING WEAK

Of special interest to me in S. 3065 is an amendment violently opposed by labor, but finally included in the conference version as a watered-down requirement that labor unions and corporations report amounts of money spent to communicate with their members or employees advocating the election or defeat of a candidate. Unfortunately, only expenditures in excess of $1,000 per candidate per election must be reported—opening up all kinds of opportunities for avoidance.

I personally feel that—to be meaningful and effective—any expenditures in excess of $100 should be reported. I can readily understand the basis for union concern over the provision, however, and would like to illustrate it by quoting the following paragraphs from an article entitled, "Labor is Back in Politics," written by Harry Bernstein and included in the March 13, 1976, issue of the Nation:

After the nominations are made this summer, the AFL–CIO will begin its own operations on behalf of the Democratic nominee—assuming it isn't Wallace. Unions have already collected more than $4 million in voluntary contributions for the campaigns, and that money, plus a few million more dollars of similar volunteer money, can go directly into campaigns. But the cost of the computer and direct mailings to members will come out of union dues because the Supreme Court has agreed that, under the free-speech doctrine, unions have the right to spend dues money to communicate with their own members on politics.

The "soft dollars," or dues money, can be used not only for the giant computer operation but for telephone banks, mailings, for sound equipment, and for the salaries of thousands of union representatives who work on campaigns, but who do so directly for the unions and among union members. It is this kind of action that gives labor its real political punch, and Alexander Barkan, director of the AFL–CIO Committee on Political Education, says that this year the federation's political strength will be greater than ever before.

I admire in some respects, labor interest and involvement and wish their enthusiasm were shared by all sectors of the public. Whether it is or it isn't, however, the cost and extent of this type of political activity should be reported, and without any $1,000 exemption.

LAW EFFECTIVELY DECRIMINALIZED

As another "example" of closing key loopholes, the drafters of this reform legislation have all but decriminalized our Federal election law. They have done so by completely rewriting a new penalty section—making it almost impossible for anyone to go to jail for a campaign violation.

Critics of plea bargaining will be very interested, I think, in the new idea of conciliation agreements, as they will in the exonerating terms "knowing and willful" and "lack of intent to commit" with respect to penalties for offenses. I just wonder, Mr. President, if this is part of the reform package which our citizens lobbies have helped engineer.

OUTLOOK VAGUE

The more I read of the conference report on S. 3065, the more convinced I become that no one really knows what the potential ramifications might be. Vague statutory additions to an already overly complex law is a sad commentary, in my view, on a Congress which set out with the task only of replying to specific court objections.

More disturbing is the fact that—after almost 100 wasted days and a far less than perfect product—our self-proclaimed public interest lobby groups are saying we cannot waste any more time, that the bill should be signed into law as is. What, then, has happened to all the election reform purists, and why are they telling us to accept a less than satisfactory bill when we can pass a totally acceptable one?

I urge the President to veto this conference report—assuming it is agreed to this afternoon—and would challenge my colleagues to sustain that veto and return to the White House within 1 week legislation which simply reconstitutes the Commission and plugs the gaps created by Valeo. We expedited consideration of a near objection-free TV sports blackout bill when we wanted to, and surely election reform merits equal attention.

For these reasons and others that I have outlined in my text, I shall vote against the conference report.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I speak on behalf of my colleague (Mr. PACKWOOD), who was called from the floor. He had originally proposed a question to the chairman of the committee who, at that time, was unavoidably detained from the floor. Now that he has returned, I wonder, if he has been presented with the question, if the chairman would be willing to state for the record now the answer to that question.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, yes, I have been presented a copy of Senator PACKWOOD's question. I would say that his statement as to his understanding is correct. Under section 321(b)(2)(C), a trade association may use corporate funds to pay the expenses of establishment, solicitation, and administration of its separate segregated funds. This is fair and just because such association should be treated equally in the payment of operating expenses of its separate segregated funds with other types of organizations.

I point out that corporations, for example, can use corporate funds for the purpose of establishing and making a solicitation under the provisions of the act.

Mr. HATFIELD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, on behalf of my colleague, the Senator from Oregon—I see the Senator has returned to the floor. I was about ready to pose the second question in his behalf to the chairman, relating to the example of a phone bank. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. PACKWOOD. The specific question that I wanted to propound to the chairman dealt with phone banks that are put in by all kinds of organizations at the time of campaigning. I wanted to make sure that the cost of the phone banks in determining whether or not reporting must be made was an item to be included and it would not be regarded as just a normal, ongoing expense of an organization which would not be covered or would not be counted in terms of determining whether or not a threshold had been reached for purposes of reporting.

Mr. CANNON. I would say that if the phone banks were established solely for that purpose, of advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, it would be included therein. If the phone bank is established for some other purpose however, and simply is used incidentally, as we have set forth in the bill, then I think it would not be included.

Mr. PACKWOOD. What if we had this situation: The phones are put in on Labor Day for the purposes of the upcoming election, 25 phones in an organization that otherwise has 10 lines. They are used for a variety of purposes—to get out the vote, registration drives, to get people to the polls, to call people advocating the specific election or defeat of candidates. What do we have in that kind of situation, where the phone bank is put in for the purpose of the election and taken out soon afterwards?

Mr. CANNON. I think I would have to refer the Senator back to the provisions of the act. The exclusion is "Other than a communication primarily devoted to subjects other than the express advocacy of the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate."

If the phone bank were primarily used for the purpose of a registration drive or a get out the vote drive, then I would think that it would be excluded. But if it is not primarily used for that purpose, then I would think it would come under the provisions. If it is used primarily for the purpose of advocating the defeat or the election of a specifically identified candidate, then the section would apply for reporting purposes.

Mr. PACKWOOD. What if we have a situation where it is probably not used primarily for any single purpose, only 50 percent, but it is put in for the purpose of all the concomitant phone calls that go with a certain election?

Mr. CANNON. I certainly cannot engage in a colloquy with the Senator to say precisely what it is. We have defined the terms. We say if it is used primarily for the purpose of advocating the defeat or election of a candidate and it is to the extent of more than $2,000, it is reportable. That is all. It is just reportable. I would assume that the Commission would set up a rule or a regulation under this to define that type of circumstance, but I am not going to define it for them. I think that we have gone as far as we can go in what we developed in the language in the conference report.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I want to make sure that our history, however, does not prove the negative. If $10,000 worth of phones are put in for a month, phones and phone lines, and 30 percent of the time of the lines is used for advocating the specific election or defeat of a candidate, the corporation is free to allocate that cost. They should not be precluded by this legislation from saying that because it was not used solely for that purpose or primarily for that purpose, we will not allocate any of the cost at all.

Mr. CANNON. We have said, for example, that an editorial in a news magazine is not necessarily primarily for that purpose if the primary purpose of the communication or the magazine is for other purposes. I am not going to define that for the Senator, as I said earlier. I think that is a matter that the Commission will have to interpret under this provision in writing their rules and regulations. That is the best I can say. If it is primarily used for the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate and the cost of it is more than $2,000, which obviously it would be, they would have to report it, period. That is all.

Mr. PACKWOOD. That is fine.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think we are going to get into that kind of quibbling problem, because if there is any question in their minds, they are going to err on the side of reporting, because there is nothing else involved, simply the reporting.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I am satisfied with that last answer. If it is $2,000 worth of time going in on it or expenses put in on it and while it is being used, it is being used primarily to advocate the election or defeat of a candidate, that answer satisfies me.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS SUBMITTED ON FEC CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, notwithstanding that for several years now I have observed with interest, and participated in the several efforts to effect a more comprehensive scheme of governmental regulation of Federal elections, I am reminded, after perusing the conference report on S. 3065, the so-called Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976, of the old witticism that "you can't make a silk purse out of a sow's ear."

Primarily because of my opposition to continuation of public financing of Federal elections, I voted against final passage of S. 3065 as it originally passed the Senate earlier this year; and for similar reasons, I voted against the 1974 Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments. Consequently, I must admit that I was hopeful that the conference committee might avail itself of the opportunity presented the Congress by the Supreme Court's decision in Buckley against Valeo, that is the opportunity to correct those abuses generated by the legislative overexuberance of the Congress in the aftermath of Watergate. Specifically, I was hopeful that a repeal could be effected of the public financing provisions of the campaign act, and that the legislative branch would avoid the temptation to establish and/or intensify the confrontation between labor and management in the political process.

Unfortunately, and somewhat unbelievably, the conference committee bill not only would perpetuate the incestuous effects of public financing, but also the provisions relative to corporate and union fund raising constitute what is perhaps the most insidious threat to the two-party system since the Civil War.

Thus, and notwithstanding that I consistently have supported the creation and the reconstitution of a general-purpose Federal Election Commission, I will oppose this conference report; and I urge and hope that the President will veto this measure should it reach his desk.

The mischief wrought by this legislation would be sufficiently serious without the divisive and discriminatory provisions relating to the so-called Political Action Committees. The perpetuation of public financing of Federal Presidential primaries, which can be considered as nothing more than political incest, and the continuation of pervasive regulation, as opposed to disclosure, by the Federal Government of the most intimate of democratic processes are condemnable in and of themselves. Nevertheless, in all due respect to my colleagues, we are on the verge of compounding the original felony by tacitly, if not directly, encouraging direct and substantial labor-management confrontations in the political process. At this juncture, the last thing that America needs is a class confrontation, or the creation of separate labor and management political parties; but, in my opinion, that is exactly what we would be doing in passing this bill.

In conclusion, Mr. President, and as I have stated previously, the Supreme Court erred in upholding the contribution limitation and public financing provisions of the Federal Election Campaign Act. The Congress should repeal those provisions, rather than elaborate and extend them as is proposed in this legislation; and I hope the President provides us yet another chance to correct our mistakes by vetoing these amendments.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I will vote to approve the conference report on the Federal Election Commission with reluctance. I would have preferred to have acted with greater dispatch and simply reconstituted the Commission in a constitutionally valid manner with a full review of the subject to follow before the next election.

There are positive aspects to the conference report. It cures the constitutional infirmity in the FEC by making the Commissioners Presidential appointees subject to Senate confirmation. It gives the Commission primary civil jurisdiction and establishes new conciliation proceedings which may protect candidates from spurious political charges. It puts some limits on the proliferation of special interest political committees. It requires disclosure of "independent" expenditures on behalf of candidates and expenditures by corporations and unions even when directed only at their employees or members. The purpose of these provisions is to free our politics from the grip of special interests. One can only hope they will be implemented in that spirit and with a minimum of unnecessary, cumbersome redtape.

The conference dropped what I considered the most important provision—the Presidential Selection Commission sponsored by Senators MONDALE, PACKWOOD, BAKER, and myself. We need a thorough, in-depth look at how we select our Presidential candidates. Does a national or regional primary system make sense? Is public financing of primary candidates a wise expenditure of funds? Are there ways to more effectively communicate issues? We have never taken a systematic look at these and other fundamental questions which affect the manner in which we select Presidents. This Commission could have made recommendations to the Congress in time for the next Presidential election. The opportunity still exists for this Congress to establish such a Commission, and I will continue to press for one.

It is unseemly for Presidential candidates to pound at the Treasury's door for money—even candidates who are no longer actively campaigning. This was inevitable once we authorized public financing of primary candidates, an action I opposed. We cannot change the rules in the middle of the game, but I hope we can learn from this experience and end this pernicious practice as soon as this election is behind us.

Mr. President, the Congress was forced by the decision of the Supreme Court to confront campaign reform legislation in the heat of a campaign. The results were predictable—attempts by all sides to gain an advantage and ultimately a compromise giving everyone something. We should do better. I hope that none of us will feel that the job of reforming our elections is behind us.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, in opposing this conference report on the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976, I reiterate my strong opposition to public financing of Presidential campaigns.

Over the past few days, I have expressed my concern that this bill has been referred to as Watergate reform legislation. The only reform involved in this election bill is making it easier for candidates to get into the peoples' pockets to pay for their electioneering.

Thomas Jefferson believed, "to compel a man to furnish contributions of money for the propagation of opinions which he disbelieves and abhors is sinful and tyrannical." Based upon this desire to maintain the individual's voluntary right to express themselves politically, a majority of the Watergate Committee recommended against the adoption of any form of public financing in which tax moneys are collected and allocated to political candidates by the Federal Government.

The FEC is valuable in policing our election process. Full financial disclosure, contribution limits and a sharply reduced time period for raising money and campaigning are what is needed for real reform. But using Federal funds to pay for Presidential politics is a con job in the name of reform.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I am compelled to speak in opposition to the Federal Elections Commission conference report. I do not do this because I am opposed to cleaning up the electoral process. As my record clearly indicates, I have supported the establishment of the Federal Election Commission, I have supported public financing of Presidential elections and I have supported complete disclosure requirements.

While I am aware of the sense of urgency regarding this legislation and its effect on our current Presidential campaign, I cannot lend my vote to such a bill which in my opinion will benefit some groups at the expense of others.

Mr. President, I have listened to much of the debate regarding election reform and have come to the conclusion that the only real way to reform the election process is to permit only individuals to contribute funds to a candidate. A great deal of debate was heard on this issue. The Senate even voted directly on this issue. I regret the fact that this approach did not prevail, but I shall continue to support such a measure.

It is my belief that we must return our electoral process to the people. We must not permit corporate or labor political action committees to solicit enormous sums of money from their employees or members to contribute to candidates for Federal office. The conference report fails to adequately define "solicit" or "solicitation," thereby raising additional questions of what is permissible and what is not.

Mr. President, while I feel that much of this conference report is an improvement over the present law, I feel that on balance the inequities outweigh the equities. I feel that reform must come but, even though this may cause hardships among the Presidential, candidates, I must vote against this measure and urge that President Ford veto it should it reach his desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATFIELD). The question is on agreeing to the conference report. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE), the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. MONTOYA), and the Senator from California (Mr. TUNNEY) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. DURKIN) and the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) are absent on official business.

I also announce that the Senator from Maine (Mr. MUSKIE) is absent because of illness.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Maine (Mr. MUSKIE) and the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) would each vote "yea."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS) is necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS) is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 62, nays 29, as follows:

So the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATFIELD). Will the Senate please be in order?

The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, first I commend the conferees on the part of both the majority and minority, as well as the staff members, for their excellent work in trying to develop a satisfactory bill.

Mr. President, I hope that the President will see fit to sign this bill, that he will send up the names of the appointees to the Commission forthwith, so that the Commission can be reestablished, and that we can get on with the business so necessary in connection with the forthcoming elections.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, I am not entirely satisfied with the bill. Perhaps no one is. But I do believe that this is the best bill we are going to get out of this Congress and I think probably it is a choice between this bill and either no bill or a worse bill.

Under the circumstances, I have to express the hope that the President will see fit to sign it.

RELATIONS WITH THE SOVIET UNION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 406, which will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 406) relating to the importance of sound relations with the Soviet Union.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

It is the sense of the Senate that:

United States relations with the Soviet Union are a central aspect of United States foreign policy, and thus it is critically important that we should sort out the difficulties that exist in the Soviet-American relationship, and define the national interest in that relationship.

Without illusions about the fundamental differences which separate the United States and the Soviet Union, we believe that the survival of the values we cherish in our free society requires the most careful and judicious regulation of relations between these two great powers. We proceed, then, from a recognition of the fact that the United States and the Soviet Union have, and are likely to have for some time, many competitive and conflicting interests. But we believe, nevertheless, that it is in the interest of both countries to regulate this competition and these conflicts so that they do not lead to war.

The basic premise of the United States approach to this relationship is that the United States must remain unchallengeably strong militarily, both to insure United States security and to contribute to the security of our friends and allies abroad. This military strength must include a strategic capability which is fully sufficient to deter any Soviet attack on the United States or its allies, and which leaves no room for misperception by the Soviet Union of our readiness and willingness to defend our vital interests and allies.

Beyond this determination to do all that is necessary to defend and protect our Nation, we believe that the lessening of international tensions must remain a continuing United States goal.

We therefore support:

1. Efforts to conclude, as soon as practicable, negotiations on a timely basis to implement the principles of the November 1974 Vladivostok accords and in addition, to continue to negotiate to reduce mutually the strategic military forces permitted each country under those accords. These agreements, to be submitted to the Senate as a treaty, should be based upon actions founded on clearly stated and verifiable stipulations.

2. Initiatives on the part of both the United States and the Soviet Union demonstrating a commitment to the achievement of peaceful solutions in present and potential areas of conflict, in ways consistent with the mutual obligations of both powers to refrain from seeking advantages by exploiting troubled areas of the world.

3. Other diplomatic, economic, commercial, and cultural initiatives which are undertaken with a careful regard for the balance of risks and advantages, which are implemented on a mutual and reciprocal basis, which are consistent with the economic and national security interests of the United States, and which support the implementation of the Articles of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe—particularly the provisions relating to respect for human rights and cooperation in humanitarian fields.

4. Taking actions in all these matters in close consultation and cooperation with our allies.

This resolution shall be transmitted by the Secretary to the President of the United States.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on passage of the pending business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

PRESIDENT FORD'S
BILL SIGNING CEREMONY

tions for improvement in the Veterans Administration medical care systems, and I am pleased that in the last 2 years we have been able to implement those recommendations. I have asked in my last two budget submissions for approximately 9,000 new staff positions for the medical care program of the Veterans Administration, and I have also asked for over $600 million for needed repairs and construction to assure the safety and quality of VA facilities. My 1977 budget request of over $4 billion for VA medical care activities was a record high for the system.

I have considered the recommendations of Administrator of Veterans Affairs, Richard Roudebush, on another important step in our effort to provide quality medical care to our veterans—the construction of eight major replacement hospitals throughout the country. The eight proposed facilities have been the subject of a series of planning studies conducted by independent contractors. These studies were undertaken in response to a congressional expression that hospitals be built and were subsequently reviewed by the Administrator who gave me his recommendations as to the relative priority to be assigned to the construction of each proposed new hospital.

I have today advised the Administrator of my decision to proceed immediately to provide design funds for all eight hospitals. I will also seek construction funds in fiscal year 1977 for the two projects assigned the highest priority by the Administrator—Richmond, Virginia, and Bay Pines, Florida. To implement this decision, I will shortly ask the Congress to provide an additional $249 million above my previous budget request for VA construction.

I have also decided to seek construction funds for the other six replacement hospitals at the rate of two a year for the succeeding 3 fiscal years. These projects would be funded in accordance with the VA's priority ranking. In addition to Richmond and Bay Pines, the other locations are Martinsburg, West Virginia; Portland, Oregon; Seattle, Washington; Little Rock, Arkansas; Baltimore, Maryland; and Camden, New Jersey.

My actions today do not include decisions on construction details and the number of beds at each facility. These decisions will be made after further review and analysis.

Over one million people are served annually by Veterans Administration hospitals, nursing homes, and domiciliary facilities. They deserve to continue to receive care of the highest quality and the latest in medical research. This requires adequate hospital facilities. The actions I am announcing today reflect my commitment that the Nation's veterans be assured of the finest in quality medical care.

Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976

Statement by the President on Signing S. 3065 Into Law. May 11, 1976

After extensive consultation and review, I have decided that the Federal Campaign Act Amendments of 1976 warrant my signature.

I am therefore signing those amendments into law this afternoon. I will also be submitting to the Senate for its advice and consent the nominations of six persons to serve as members of the reconstituted Commission.

Shortly after the Supreme Court ruled on January 30 that the Federal Election Commission was invalid as then constituted, I made it clear that I favored a simple reconstitution of the Commission because efforts to amend and reform the law could cause massive confusion in election campaigns that had already started.

The Congress, however, was unwilling to accept my straightforward proposal and instead became bogged down in a controversy that has now extended for more than 3 months.

In the process, efforts were made to add several provisions to the law which I thought were thoroughly objectionable. These suggested provisions would have further tipped the balance of political power to a single party and to a single element within that party. I could not accept those provisions under any circumstances and I so communicated my views to various Members of the Congress.

Since that time, to my gratification, those features of the bill have been modified so as to avoid in large measure the objections I had raised.

Weighing the merits of this legislation, I have found that the amendments as now drafted command widespread, bipartisan support in both Houses of Congress and by the chairpersons of both the Republican National Committee and the Democratic National Committee.

I still have serious reservations about certain aspects of the present amendments. For one thing, the bill as presently written will require that the Commission take additional time to consider the effects which the present amendments will have on its previously issued opinions and regulations.

A more fundamental concern is that these amendments jeopardize the independence of the Federal Election Commission by permitting either House of Congress to veto regulations which the Commission, as an Executive agency, issues. This provision not only circumvents the original intent of campaign reform but, in my opinion, violates the Constitution. I have therefore directed the Attorney General to challenge the constitutionality of this provision at the earliest possible opportunity.

Recognizing these weaknesses in the bill, I have nevertheless concluded that it is in the best interest of the Nation that I sign this legislation. Considerable effort has been expended by members of both parties to make this bill as fair and balanced as possible. Moreover, further delay would undermine the fair and proper conduct of elections this year for seats in the U.S. Senate, the House of Representatives, and for the Presidency.

Effective regulation of campaign practices depends upon the existence of a Commission with valid rulemaking and enforcement powers. It is critical that we maintain the integrity of our election process for all Federal offices so that all candidates and their respective supporters and contributors are bound by enforceable laws and regulations which are designed to control questionable and unfair campaign practices.

I look to the Commission, as soon as it is reappointed, to do an effective job of administering the campaign laws equitably but forcefully, and in a manner that minimizes the confusion which is caused by the added complexity of the present amendments. In this regard, the Commission will be aided by a newly provided civil enforcement mechanism sufficiently flexible to facilitate voluntary compliance through conciliation agreements and, where necessary, penalize noncompliance through means of civil fines.

In addition, the new legislation refines the provisions intended to control the size of contributions from a single source by avoiding proliferation of political action committees which are under common control. Also, this law strengthens provisions for reporting money spent on campaigns by requiring disclosure of previously unreported costs of partisan communications which are intended to affect the outcome of Federal elections.

Following the 1976 elections, I will submit to the Congress legislation that will correct problems created by the present laws and make additional needed reforms in the election process.

NOTE: As enacted, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976 (S. 3065) is Public Law 94-283, approved May 11, 1976.

Consumer Product Safety Commission Improvements Act of 1976

Statement by the President on Signing S. 644 Into Law. May 12, 1976

The Consumer Product Safety Commission was established in 1974 to protect consumers from unreasonable risk of injury from the use of hazardous products. Today, I have signed S. 644, a bill which will enable the Commission to more effectively carry out this important mandate.

The Consumer Product Safety Commission Improvements Act of 1976 expands the Commission's authority by permitting the issuance of preliminary injunctions to prohibit distribution of products which present a substantial hazard and by establishing new procedures and timetables within which consumer safety standards must be promulgated.

Further, the act authorizes Federal preemption of State product safety laws in certain enumerated circumstances. This will not only guarantee that consumers have adequate protection, but will free industry from the costly burden of attempting to comply with a bewildering patchwork of State and local safety standards.

If consumer product regulation is to have real meaning, adequate tools must be provided the Commission responsible for protecting the American consumer. The act I have signed provides such tools.

NOTE: As enacted, the Consumer Product Safety Commission Improvements Act of 1976 (S. 644) is Public Law 94-284, approved May 11, 1976.

Department of State

Announcement of Intention To Nominate Philip C. Habib To Be Under Secretary for Political Affairs. May 12, 1976

The President today announced his intention to nominate Philip C. Habib, of San Francisco, Calif., a Foreign Service Officer of the Class of Career Minister, to be Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs. He will succeed Joseph John Sisco, who resigned effective July 1976, at which time he becomes President of American University. Mr. Habib has been Assistant Secretary of State for East Asian and Pacific Affairs since September 1974.

Born on February 25, 1920, in Brooklyn, N.Y., Ambassador Habib received his B.S. degree from the University of Idaho in 1942. He attended the University of Paris during 1942 and received his Ph. D. in 1952 from the University of California. After serving in the United States Army from 1942 to 1946, he became a teaching assistant at the University of California in 1947.

While serving as a career Foreign Service Officer, Ambassador Habib was an Assistant Agricultural Attaché, an Economic Analyst and, in 1960 to 1961, he served as the Officer-in-Charge for Under-Developed Areas in the Office of the Under Secretary's Special Assistant for Communist Economic Affairs. In 1967, he was a Political Officer, Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Af-

94th Congress, S. 3065
May 11, 1976

An Act

To amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide that members of the Federal Election Commission shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976. 2 USC 431 note.

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976".

TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION MEMBERSHIP

SEC. 101. (a)(1) The second sentence of section 309(a)(1) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(1)), as redesignated by section 105 (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Act"), is amended to read as follows: "The Commission is composed of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, ex officio and without the right to vote, and 6 members appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.".

(2) The last sentence of section 309(a)(1) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(1)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows: "No more than 3 members of the Commission appointed under this paragraph may be affiliated with the same political party.". Limitation.

(b) Section 309(a)(2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(2)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows: Term.

"(2)(A) Members of the Commission shall serve for terms of 6 years, except that of the members first appointed—

"(i) two of the members, not affiliated with the same political party, shall be appointed for terms ending on April 30, 1977;

"(ii) two of the members, not affiliated with the same political party, shall be appointed for terms ending on April 30, 1979; and

"(iii) two of the members, not affiliated with the same political party, shall be appointed for terms ending on April 30, 1981.

"(B) A member of the Commission may serve on the Commission after the expiration of his term until his successor has taken office as a member of the Commission.

"(C) An individual appointed to fill a vacancy occurring other than by the expiration of a term of office shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member he succeeds. Vacancies.

"(D) Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the Commission shall be filled in the same manner as in the case of the original appointment.".

(c)(1) Section 309(a)(3) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(3)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by adding at the end thereof

Conflict of interest.

the following new sentences: "Members of the Commission shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. Any individual who is engaging in any other business, vocation, or employment at the time such individual begins to serve as a member of the Commission shall terminate or liquidate such activity no later than 1 year after beginning to serve as such a member.".

(2) Section 309(b) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(b)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) The Commission shall administer, seek to obtain compliance with, and formulate policy with respect to, this Act and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. The Commission shall have exclusive primary jurisdiction with respect to the civil enforcement of such provisions.

26 USC 9001, 9031.
Jurisdiction.

"(2) Nothing in this Act shall be construed to limit, restrict, or diminish any investigatory, informational, oversight, supervisory, or disciplinary authority or function of the Congress or any committee of the Congress with respect to elections for Federal office.".

(3) The first sentence of section 309(c) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(c)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof the following: ", except that the affirmative vote of 4 members of the Commission shall be required in order for the Commission to establish guidelines for compliance with the provisions of this Act or with chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or for the Commission to take any action in accordance with paragraph (6), (7), (8), or (10) of section 310(a)".

Guidelines, approval.

Post, p. 481.

(d) The last sentence of section 309(f)(1) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(f)(1)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the period the following: "without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service".

Presidential appointments.
2 USC 437c note.

(e)(1) The President shall appoint members of the Federal Election Commission under section 309(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)), as redesignated by section 105 and as amended by this section, as soon as practicable after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) The first appointments made by the President under section 309(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)), as redesignated by section 105 and as amended by this section, shall not be considered to be appointments to fill the unexpired terms of members serving on the Federal Election Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(3) Members serving on the Federal Election Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act may continue to serve as such members until new members are appointed and qualified under section 309(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)), as redesignated by section 105 and as amended by this section, except that until appointed and qualified under this Act, members serving on such Commission on such date of enactment may, beginning on March 23, 1976, exercise only such powers and functions as may be consistent with the determinations of the Supreme Court of the United States in Buckley et al. against Valeo, Secretary of the United States Senate, et al. (numbered 75-436, 75-437) January 30, 1976.

(f) The provisions of section 309(a)(3) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(3)), as redesignated by section 105, which prohibit any individual from being appointed as a member of the Federal Election Commission who is, at the time of his appointment, an elected or appointed officer or employee of the executive, legislative, or judicial branch of the Federal Government, shall not apply in the case of any individual serving as a member of such Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act.

Transfer of functions.

(g)(1) All personnel, liabilities, contracts, property, and records determined by the Director of the Office of Management and Budget to be employed, held, or used primarily in connection with the functions of the Federal Election Commission under title III of the Act as such title existed on January 1, 1976, or under any other provision of law, are transferred to such Commission as constituted under the amendments made by this Act to the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

2 USC 431.

2 USC 431 note.

(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), personnel engaged in functions transferred under paragraph (1) shall be transferred in accordance with applicable laws and regulations relating to the transfer of functions.

(B) The transfer of personnel pursuant to paragraph (1) shall be without reduction in classification or compensation for 1 year after such transfer.

Savings provision.

(3) All laws relating to the functions transferred under this Act shall, insofar as such laws are applicable and not amended by this Act, remain in full force and effect. All orders, determinations, rules, and opinions made, issued, or granted by the Federal Election Commission before its reconstitution under the amendments made by this Act which are in effect at the time of the transfer provided by paragraph (1), and which are consistent with the amendments made by this Act, shall continue in effect to the same extent as if such transfer had not occurred. Any rule or regulation proposed by such Commission before the date of the enactment of this Act shall be prescribed by such Commission only if, after such date of enactment, the rule or regulation is submitted to the Senate or the House of Representatives, as the case may be, in accordance with the provisions of section 315(c) of the Act (as redesignated by section 105), and it is not disapproved by the appropriate House of the Congress.

Proposed rules or regulations, submittal to Congress.

2 USC 437h.

(4) The provisions of this Act shall not affect any proceeding pending before the Federal Election Commission on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(5) No suit, action, or other proceeding commenced by or against the Federal Election Commission or any officer or employee thereof acting in his official capacity shall abate by reason of the transfer made under paragraph (1). The court before which such suit, action, or other proceeding is pending may, on motion or supplemental petition filed at any time within 12 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, allow such suit, action, or other proceeding to be maintained against the Federal Election Commission if the party making the motion or filing the petition shows a necessity for the survival of the suit, action, or other proceeding to obtain a settlement of the question involved.

(6) Any reference in any other Federal law to the Federal Election Commission, or to any member or employee thereof, as such Commission existed under the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 before its amendment by this Act shall be held and considered to refer to the Federal Election Commission, or the members or employees thereof, as such Commission exists under the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 as amended by this Act.

2 USC 431 note.

CHANGES IN DEFINITIONS

"(H) a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value to a national committee of a political party or a State committee of a political party which is specifically designated for the purpose of defraying any cost incurred with respect to the construction or purchase of any office facility which is not acquired for the purpose of influencing the election of any candidate in any particular election for Federal office, except that any such gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value, and any such cost, shall be reported in accordance with section 304(b); or

"(I) any honorarium (within the meaning of section 328);".

Post, p. 494.

(e) Section 301(e)(5) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431(e)(5)), as amended by subsection (d), is amended by striking out "individual" where it appears after clause (I) and inserting in lieu thereof "person".

(f) Section 301(f)(4) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431(f)(4)) is amended—

(1) by inserting before the semicolon in clause (C) the following: ", except that the costs incurred by a membership organization, including a labor organization, or by a corporation, directly attributable to a communication expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate (other than a communication primarily devoted to subjects other than the express advocacy of the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate) shall, if those costs exceed $2,000 per election, be reported to the Commission";

(2) by striking out "or" at the end of clause (F) and at the end of clause (G); and

(3) by inserting immediately after clause (H) the following new clauses:

"(I) any costs incurred by a candidate in connection with the solicitation of contributions by such candidate, except that this clause shall not apply with respect to costs incurred by a candidate in excess of an amount equal to 20 percent of the expenditure limitation applicable to such candidate under section 320(b), but all such costs shall be reported in accordance with section 304(b); Post, p. 487. 2 USC 434.

"(J) the payment, by any person other than a candidate or political committee, of compensation for legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of the national committee of a political party (unless the person paying for such services is a person other than the regular employer of the individual rendering such services), other than services attributable to activities which directly further the election of a designated candidate or candidates to Federal office, or the payment for legal or accounting services rendered to or on behalf of a candidate or political committee solely for the purpose of insuring compliance with the provisions of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (unless the person paying for such services is a person other than the regular employer of the individual rendering such services), but amounts paid or incurred for such legal or accounting services shall be reported under section 304(b); or 26 USC 9001, 9031.

"(K) a loan of money by a national or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations and in the ordinary course of business, but such loan shall be reported in accordance with section 304(b);".

(g) Section 301 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (m);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (n) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs: Definitions.

"(o) 'Act' means the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 as amended by the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 and the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976; 2 USC 431 note.

"(p) 'independent expenditure' means an expenditure by a person expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate which is made without cooperation or consultation with any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate and which is not made in concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate; and

"(q) 'clearly identified' means that (1) the name of the candidate appears; (2) a photograph or drawing of the candidate appears; or (3) the identity of the candidate is apparent by unambiguous reference.".

(c) Section 302 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 432) is amended by striking out subsection (e) and by redesignating subsection (f) as subsection (e).

(d) Section 302(e)(1) of the Act, as redesignated by subsection (c), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Any occasional, isolated, or incidental support of a candidate shall not be construed as support of such candidate for purposes of the preceding sentence.".

REPORTS BY POLITICAL COMMITTEES AND CANDIDATES

SEC. 104. (a) Section 304(a)(1) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(a)(1)) is amended by adding at the end of subparagraph (C) the following new sentence: "In any year in which a candidate is not on the ballot for election to Federal office, such candidate and his authorized committees shall only be required to file such reports not later than the tenth day following the close of any calendar quarter in which the candidate and his authorized committees received contributions or made expenditures, or both, the total amount of which, taken together, exceed $5,000, and such reports shall be complete as of the close of such calendar quarter; except that any such report required to be filed after December 31 of any calendar year with respect to which a report is required to be filed under subparagraph (B) shall be filed as provided in such subparagraph.".

(b) Section 304(a)(2) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(a)(2)) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) Each treasurer of a political committee authorized by a candidate to raise contributions or make expenditures on his behalf, other than the candidate's principal campaign committee, shall file the reports required under this section with the candidate's principal campaign committee.".

(c) Section 304(b) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(b)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (12);

(2) by redesignating paragraph (13) as paragraph (14);

(3) by inserting immediately after paragraph (12) the following new paragraph:

"(13) in the case of an independent expenditure in excess of $100 by a political committee, other than an authorized committee of a candidate, expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, through a separate schedule (A) any information required by paragraph (9) stated in a manner which indicates whether the independent expenditure involved is in support of, or in opposition to, a candidate; and (B) under penalty of perjury, a certification whether such independent expenditure is made in cooperation, consultation, or concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate; and"; and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "When committee treasurers and candidates show that best efforts have been used to obtain and submit the information required by this subsection, they shall be deemed to be in compliance with this subsection.".

(d) Section 304(e) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 434(e)) is amended to read as follows:

Statements.

"(e)(1) Every person (other than a political committee or candidate) who makes contributions or independent expenditures expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, other than by contribution to a political committee or candidate, in an aggregate amount in excess of $100 during a calendar year shall file with the Commission, on a form prepared by the Commission, a statement containing the information required of a person who makes a contribution in excess of $100 to a candidate or political committee and the information required of a candidate or political committee receiving such a contribution.

Filing. Certification.

"(2) Statements required by this subsection shall be filed on the dates on which reports by political committees are filed. Such statements shall include (A) the information required by subsection (b)(9), stated in a manner indicating whether the contribution or independent expenditure is in support of, or opposition to, the candidate; and (B) under penalty of perjury, a certification whether such independent expenditure is made in cooperation, consultation, or concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate. Any independent expenditure, including those described in subsection (b)(13), of $1,000 or more made after the fifteenth day, but more than 24 hours, before any election shall be reported within 24 hours of such independent expenditure.

Indices of expenditures.

"(3) The Commission shall be responsible for expeditiously preparing indices which set forth, on a candidate-by-candidate basis, all expenditures separately, including those reported under subsection (b)(13), made with respect to each candidate, as reported under this subsection, and for periodically issuing such indices on a timely preelection basis.".

REPORTS BY CERTAIN PERSONS

SEC. 105. Title III of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431 et seq.) is amended by striking out section 308 thereof (2 U.S.C. 437a) and by redesignating section 309 through section 321 as section 308 through section 320, respectively.

2 USC 437b-439c, 441.

CAMPAIGN DEPOSITORIES

The second sentence of section 308(a)(1) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437b(a)(1)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by striking out "a checking account" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "a single checking account and such other accounts as the committee determines to maintain at its discretion".

POWERS OF COMMISSION

SEC. 107. (a) Section 310(a) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437d(a)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (8) thereof, by inserting "develop such prescribed forms and to" immediately before "make", and by inserting immediately after "Act" the following: "and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954";

26 USC 9001, 9031.

(2) in paragraph (9) thereof, by striking out "and sections 608" and all that follows through "States Code;" and inserting in lieu thereof "and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954; and"; and

(3) by striking out paragraph (10) and redesignating paragraph (11) as paragraph (10).

(b)(1) Section 310(a)(6) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437d(a)(6)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"(6) to initiate (through civil actions for injunctive, declaratory, or other appropriate relief), defend (in the case of any civil action brought under section 313(a)(9)), or appeal any civil action in the name of the Commission for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this Act and chapter 95 and chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, through its general counsel;".

Post, p. 483.

26 USC 9001, 9031.

(2) Section 310 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437d), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) Except as provided in section 313(a)(9), the power of the Commission to initiate civil actions under subsection (a)(6) shall be the exclusive civil remedy for the enforcement of the provisions of this Act.".

ADVISORY OPINIONS

SEC. 108. (a) Section 312(a) of the Act and section 312(b) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437f(a), 437f(b)), as redesignated by section 105, are amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 312. (a) The Commission shall render an advisory opinion, in writing, within a reasonable time in response to a written request by any individual holding Federal office, any candidate for Federal office, any political committee, or the national committee of any political party concerning the application of a general rule of law stated in the Act or chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or a general rule of law prescribed as a rule or regulation by the Commission, to a specific factual situation. Any such general rule of law not stated in the Act or in chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 may be initially proposed by the Commission only as a rule or regulation pursuant to the procedures established by section 315(c). No opinion of an advisory nature may be issued by the Commission or any of its employees except in accordance with the provisions of this section.

Post, p. 486.

"(b)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any person who relies upon any provision or finding of an advisory opinion in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (2) and who acts in good faith in accordance with the provisions and findings of such advisory opinion shall not, as a result of any such act, be subject to any sanction provided by this Act or by chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

"(2) Any advisory opinion rendered by the Commission under subsection (a) may be relied upon by (A) any person involved in the specific transaction or activity with respect to which such advisory opinion is rendered; and (B) any person involved in any specific transaction or activity which is indistinguishable in all its material aspects from the transaction or activity with respect to which such advisory opinion is rendered.".

2 USC 437f note.

(b) The Commission shall, no later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, conform the advisory opinions issued before such date of enactment to the requirements established by section 312(a) of the Act, as amended by subsection (a) of this section. The provisions of section 312(b) of the Act, as amended by subsection (a) of this section, shall apply with respect to all advisory opinions issued before the date of the enactment of this Act as conformed to meet the requirements of section 312(a) of the Act, as amended by subsection (a) of this section.

ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 109. Section 313 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 437g), as redesignated by section 105, is amended to read as follows:

"ENFORCEMENT

"SEC. 313. (a)(1) Any person who believes a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has occurred may file a complaint with the Commission. Such complaint shall be in writing, shall be signed and sworn to by the person filing such complaint, and shall be notarized. Any person filing such a complaint shall be subject to the provisions of section 1001 of title 18, United States Code. The Commission may not conduct any investigation under this section, or take any other action under this section, solely on the basis of a complaint of a person whose identity is not disclosed to the Commission. Complaints, filing. 26 USC 9001, 9031.

"(2) The Commission, upon receiving a complaint under paragraph (1), and if it has reason to believe that any person has committed a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or, if the Commission, on the basis of information ascertained in the normal course of carrying out its supervisory responsibilities, has reason to believe that such a violation has occurred, shall notify the person involved of such alleged violation and shall make an investigation of such alleged violation in accordance with the provisions of this section.

"(3)(A) Any investigation under paragraph (2) shall be conducted expeditiously and shall include an investigation, conducted in accordance with the provisions of this section, of reports and statements filed by any complainant under this title, if such complainant is a candidate.

"(B) Any notification or investigation made under paragraph (2) shall not be made public by the Commission or by any person without the written consent of the person receiving such notification or the person with respect to whom such investigation is made.

"(4) The Commission shall afford any person who receives notice of an alleged violation under paragraph (2) a reasonable opportunity to demonstrate that no action should be taken against such person by the Commission under this Act.

"(5)(A) If the Commission determines that there is reasonable cause to believe that any person has committed or is about to commit a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the Commission shall make every endeavor for a period of not less than 30 days to correct or prevent such violation by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion, and to enter into a conciliation agreement with the person involved, except that, if the Commission has reasonable cause to believe that—

"(i) any person has failed to file a report required to be filed under section 304(a)(1)(C) for the calendar quarter occurring immediately before the date of a general election; Ante, p. 480.

"(ii) any person has failed to file a report required to be filed no later than 10 days before an election; or

"(iii) on the basis of a complaint filed less than 45 days but more than 10 days before an election, any person has committed a knowing and willful violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954;

the Commission shall make every effort, for a period of not less than one-half the number of days between the date upon which the Commission determines there is reasonable cause to believe such a violation has occurred and the date of the election involved, to correct or prevent such violation by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion, and to enter into a conciliation agreement with the person involved. A conciliation agreement, unless violated, shall constitute a complete bar to any further action by the Commission, including the bringing of a civil proceeding under subparagraph (B).

Civil action.

"(B) If the Commission is unable to correct or prevent any such violation by such informal methods, the Commission may, if the Commission determines there is probable cause to believe that a violation has occurred or is about to occur, institute a civil action for relief, including a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or any other appropriate order, including a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of $5,000 or an amount equal to the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, in the district court of the United States for the district in which the person against whom such action is brought is found, resides, or transacts business.

Penalty.

"(C) In any civil action instituted by the Commission under subparagraph (B), the court may grant a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order, including a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of $5,000 or an amount equal to the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, upon a proper showing that the person involved has engaged or is about to engage in a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Penalty.

26 USC 9001, 9031.

"(D) If the Commission determines that there is probable cause to believe that a knowing and willful violation subject to and as defined in section 329, or a knowing and willful violation of a provision of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has occurred or is about to occur, it may refer such apparent violation to the Attorney General of the United States without regard to any limitations set forth in subparagraph (A).

Violations, referral to Attorney General.

Post, p. 494.

Penalty.

"(6)(A) If the Commission believes that there is clear and convincing proof that a knowing and willful violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, has been committed, a conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission under paragraph (5)(A) may include a requirement that the person involved in such conciliation agreement shall pay a civil penalty which shall not exceed the greater of (i) $10,000; or (ii) an amount equal to 200 percent of the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation.

Penalty.

"(B) If the Commission believes that a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has been committed, a conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission under paragraph (5)(A) may include a requirement that the person involved in such conciliation agreement shall pay a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of (i) $5,000; or (ii) an amount equal to the amount of the contribution or expenditure involved in such violation.

"(C) The Commission shall make available to the public (i) the results of any conciliation attempt, including any conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission; and (ii) any determination by the Commission that no violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 has occurred.

"(7) In any civil action for relief instituted by the Commission under paragraph (5), if the court determines that the Commission has established through clear and convincing proof that the person involved in such civil action has committed a knowing and willful violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the court may impose a civil penalty of not more than the greater of (A) $10,000; or (B) an amount equal to 200 percent of the contribution or expenditure involved in such violation. In any case in which such person has entered into a conciliation agreement with the Commission under paragraph (5)(A), the Commission may institute a civil action for relief under paragraph (5) if it believes that such person has violated any provision of such conciliation agreement. In order for the Commission to obtain relief in any such civil action, it shall be sufficient for the Commission to establish that such person has violated, in whole or in part, any requirement of such conciliation agreement. 26 USC 9001, 9031.

"(8) In any action brought under paragraph (5) or paragraph (7), subpenas for witnesses who are required to attend a United States district court may run into any other district. Subpenas.

"(9)(A) Any party aggrieved by an order of the Commission dismissing a complaint filed by such party under paragraph (1), or by a failure on the part of the Commission to act on such complaint in accordance with the provisions of this section within 90 days after the filing of such complaint, may file a petition with the United States District Court for the District of Columbia. Petitions, filing.

"(B) The filing of any petition under subparagraph (A) shall be made—

"(i) in the case of the dismissal of a complaint by the Commission, no later than 60 days after such dismissal; or

"(ii) in the case of a failure on the part of the Commission to act on such complaint, no later than 60 days after the 90-day period specified in subparagraph (A).

"(C) In any proceeding under this paragraph the court may declare that the dismissal of the complaint or the action, or the failure to act, is contrary to law and may direct the Commission to proceed in conformity with such declaration within 30 days, failing which the complainant may bring in his own name a civil action to remedy the violation involved in the original complaint.

"(10) The judgment of the district court may be appealed to the court of appeals and the judgment of the court of appeals affirming or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the district court shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. Appeals.

"(11) Any action brought under this subsection shall be advanced on the docket of the court in which filed, and put ahead of all other actions (other than other actions brought under this subsection or under section 314).

"(12) If the Commission determines after an investigation that any person has violated an order of the court entered in a proceeding brought under paragraph (5) it may petition the court for an order to adjudicate such person in civil contempt, except that if it believes the violation to be knowing and willful it may petition the court for an order to adjudicate such person in criminal contempt.

"(b) In any case in which the Commission refers an apparent violation to the Attorney General, the Attorney General shall respond by report to the Commission with respect to any action taken by the Attorney General regarding such apparent violation. Each report shall be transmitted no later than 60 days after the date the Commission refers any apparent violation, and at the close of every 30-day period thereafter until there is final disposition of such apparent Report to the Commission.

Reports.

violation. The Commission may from time to time prepare and publish reports on the status of such referrals.

Fines.

"(c) Any member of the Commission, any employee of the Commission, or any other person who violates the provisions of subsection (a)(3)(B) shall be fined not more than $2,000. Any such member, employee, or other person who knowingly and willfully violates the provisions of subsection (a)(3)(B) shall be fined not more than $5,000.".

DUTIES OF COMMISSION

Index of reports and statements.

SEC. 110. (a)(1) Section 315(a)(6) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438(a)(6)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", and to compile and maintain a separate cumulative index of reports and statements filed with it by political committees supporting more than one candidate, which shall include a listing of the date of the registration of any such political committee and the date upon which any such political committee qualifies to make expenditures under section 320(a)(2), and which shall be revised on the same basis and at the same time as the other cumulative indices required under this paragraph".

Post, p. 487.

(2) Section 315(a)(8) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438(a)(8)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by inserting immediately before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", and to give priority to auditing and field investigating of the verification for, and the receipt and use of, any payments received by a candidate under chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954".

26 USC 9001, 9031.

(b) Section 315(c) of the Act (2 U.S.C. 438(c)), as redesignated by section 105, is amended—

(1) by inserting immediately after the second sentence of paragraph (2) the following new sentences: "Whenever a committee of the House of Representatives reports any resolution relating to any such rule or regulation, it is at any time thereafter in order (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. The motion is highly privileged and is not debatable. An amendment to the motion is not in order, and it is not in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to."; and

"Rule or regulation."

(2) by adding the following new paragraph at the end thereof: "(5) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'rule or regulation' means a provision or series of interrelated provisions stating a single separable rule of law.".

ADDITIONAL ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITY

Repeal.

SEC. 111. Section 407 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 456) is repealed.

CONTRIBUTION AND EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS; OTHER LIMITATIONS

SEC. 112. Title III of the Act (2 U.S.C. 431–441) is amended—

(1) by striking out section 320 (2 U.S.C. 441), as redesignated by section 105; and

(2) by inserting immediately after section 319 (2 U.S.C. 439c), as redesignated by section 105, the following new sections:

"LIMITATIONS ON CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

"SEC. 320. (a)(1) No person shall make contributions— 2 USC 441a.

"(A) to any candidate and his authorized political committees with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $1,000;

"(B) to the political committees established and maintained by a national political party, which are not the authorized political committees of any candidate, in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $20,000; or

"(C) to any other political committee in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000.

"(2) No multicandidate political committee shall make contributions—

"(A) to any candidate and his authorized political committees with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000;

"(B) to the political committees established and maintained by a national political party, which are not the authorized political committees of any candidate, in any calendar year, which, in the aggregate, exceed $15,000; or

"(C) to any other political committee in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000.

"(3) No individual shall make contributions aggregating more than $25,000 in any calendar year. For purposes of this paragraph, any contribution made to a candidate in a year other than the calendar year in which the election is held with respect to which such contribution is made, is considered to be made during the calendar year in which such election is held.

"(4) The limitations on contributions contained in paragraphs (1) and (2) do not apply to transfers between and among political committees which are national, State, district, or local committees (including any subordinate committee thereof) of the same political party. For purposes of paragraph (2), the term 'multicandidate political committee' means a political committee which has been registered under section 303 for a period of not less than 6 months, which has received contributions from more than 50 persons, and, except for any State political party organization, has made contributions to 5 or more candidates for Federal office. "Multicandidate political committee." 2 USC 433.

"(5) For purposes of the limitations provided by paragraph (1) and paragraph (2), all contributions made by political committees established or financed or maintained or controlled by any corporation, labor organization, or any other person, including any parent, subsidiary, branch, division, department, or local unit of such corporation, labor organization, or any other person, or by any group of such persons, shall be considered to have been made by a single political committee, except that (A) nothing in this sentence shall limit transfers between political committees of funds raised through joint fund raising efforts; (B) for purposes of the limitations provided by paragraph (1) and paragraph (2) all contributions made by a single political committee established or financed or maintained or controlled by a national committee of a political party and by a single political committee established or financed or maintained or controlled by the State committee of a political party shall not be considered to have been made by a single political committee; and (C) nothing in this section shall limit the transfer of funds between the principal campaign committee of a candidate seeking nomination or election to a Federal office and the principal campaign committee of that candidate for nomination or election to another Federal office if (i) such transfer is not made when the candidate is actively seeking nomination or election to both such offices; (ii) the limitations contained in this Act on contributions by persons are not exceeded by such transfer; and (iii) the candidate has not elected to receive any funds under chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. In any case in which a corporation and any of its subsidiaries, branches, divisions, departments, or local units, or a labor organization and any of its subsidiaries, branches, divisions, departments, or local units establish or finance or maintain or control more than one separate segregated fund, all such separate segregated funds shall be treated as a single separate segregated fund for purposes of the limitations provided by paragraph (1) and paragraph (2).

26 USC 9001, 9031.

"(6) The limitations on contributions to a candidate imposed by paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection shall apply separately with respect to each election, except that all elections held in any calendar year for the office of President of the United States (except a general election for such office) shall be considered to be one election.

"(7) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) contributions to a named candidate made to any political committee authorized by such candidate to accept contributions on his behalf shall be considered to be contributions made to such candidate;

"(B) (i) expenditures made by any person in cooperation, consultation, or concert, with, or at the request or suggestion of, a candidate, his authorized political committees, or their agents, shall be considered to be a contribution to such candidate;

"(ii) the financing by any person of the dissemination, distribution, or republication, in whole or in part, of any broadcast or any written, graphic, or other form of campaign materials prepared by the candidate, his campaign committees, or their authorized agents shall be considered to be an expenditure for purposes of this paragraph; and

"(C) contributions made to or for the benefit of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be contributions made to or for the benefit of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States.

"(8) For purposes of the limitations imposed by this section, all contributions made by a person, either directly or indirectly, on behalf of a particular candidate, including contributions which are in any way earmarked or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to such candidate, shall be treated as contributions from such person to such candidate. The intermediary or conduit shall report the original source and the intended recipient of such contribution to the Commission and to the intended recipient.

"(b) (1) No candidate for the office of President of the United States who is eligible under section 9003 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to condition for eligibility for payments) or under section 9033 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to eligibility for payments) to receive payments from the Secretary of the Treasury may make expenditures in excess of—

26 USC 9003.
26 USC 9033.

"(A) $10,000,000, in the case of a campaign for nomination for election to such office, except the aggregate of expenditures under this subparagraph in any one State shall not exceed the greater of 16 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State (as certified under subsection (e)), or $200,000; or

"(B) $20,000,000 in the case of a campaign for election to such office.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be expenditures made by or on behalf of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States; and

"(B) an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a vice presidential candidate, if it is made by—

"(i) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for purposes of making any expenditure; or

"(ii) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, or an agent of the candidate, to make the expenditure.

"(c)(1) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1976), as there become available necessary data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register the percent difference between the price index for the 12 months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each limitation established by subsection (b) and subsection (d) shall be increased by such percent difference. Each amount so increased shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year. Publication in Federal Register.

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) the term 'price index' means the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics; and "Price index."

"(B) the term 'base period' means the calendar year 1974. "Base period."

"(d)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law with respect to limitations on expenditures or limitations on contributions, the national committee of a political party and a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may make expenditures in connection with the general election campaign of candidates for Federal office, subject to the limitations contained in paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection.

"(2) The national committee of a political party may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of any candidate for President of the United States who is affiliated with such party which exceeds an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States (as certified under subsection (e)). Any expenditure under this paragraph shall be in addition to any expenditure by a national committee of a political party serving as the principal campaign committee of a candidate for the office of President of the United States.

"(3) The national committee of a political party, or a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate for Federal office in a State who is affiliated with such party which exceeds—

"(A) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Senator, or of Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, the greater of—

"(i) 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State (as certified under subsection (e)); or

"(ii) $20,000; and

"(B) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner in any other State, $10,000.

Voting age population estimates, certification and publication in Federal Register.

"(e) During the first week of January 1975, and every subsequent year, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, of each State, and of each congressional district as of the first day of July next preceding the date of certification. The term 'voting age population' means resident population, 18 years of age or older.

"Voting age population."

"(f) No candidate or political committee shall knowingly accept any contribution or make any expenditure in violation of the provisions of this section. No officer or employee of a political committee shall knowingly accept a contribution made for the benefit or use of a candidate, or knowingly make any expenditure on behalf of a candidate, in violation of any limitation imposed on contributions and expenditures under this section.

Rules.

"(g) The Commission shall prescribe rules under which any expenditure by a candidate for presidential nominations for use in 2 or more States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

"(h) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, amounts totaling not more than $17,500 may be contributed to a candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to the United States Senate during the year in which an election is held in which he is such a candidate, by the Republican or Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, or the national committee of a political party, or any combination of such committees.

"CONTRIBUTIONS OR EXPENDITURES BY NATIONAL BANKS, CORPORATIONS, OR LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

2 USC 441b.

"SEC. 321. (a) It is unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress, to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election to any political office, or in connection with any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any political office, or for any corporation whatever, or any labor organization, to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election at which presidential and vice presidential electors or a Senator or Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, Congress are to be voted for, or in connection with any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any of the foregoing offices, or for any candidate, political committee, or other person knowingly to accept or receive any contribution prohibited by this section, or any officer or any director of any corporation or any national bank or any officer of any labor organization to consent to any contribution or expenditure by the corporation, national bank, or labor organization, as the case may be, prohibited by this section.

"Labor organization."

"(b)(1) For the purposes of this section the term 'labor organization' means any organization of any kind, or any agency or employee representation committee or plan, in which employees participate and which exists for the purpose, in whole or in part, of dealing with employers concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or conditions of work.

"(2) For purposes of this section and section 12(h) of the Public Utility Holding Company Act (15 U.S.C. 79l(h)), the term 'contribution or expenditure' shall include any direct or indirect payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money, or any services, or anything of value (except a loan of money by a national or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations and in the ordinary course of business) to any candidate, campaign committee, or political party or organization, in connection with any election to any of the offices referred to in this section, but shall not include (A) communications by a corporation to its stockholders and executive or administrative personnel and their families or by a labor organization to its members and their families on any subject; (B) nonpartisan registration and get-out-the-vote campaigns by a corporation aimed at its stockholders and executive or administrative personnel and their families, or by a labor organization aimed at its members and their families; and (C) the establishment, administration, and solicitation of contributions to a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes by a corporation, labor organization, membership organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock. "Contribution or expenditure."

"(3) It shall be unlawful—

"(A) for such a fund to make a contribution or expenditure by utilizing money or anything of value secured by physical force, job discrimination, financial reprisals, or the threat of force, job discrimination, or financial reprisal; or by dues, fees, or other moneys required as a condition of membership in a labor organization or as a condition of employment, or by moneys obtained in any commercial transaction;

"(B) for any person soliciting an employee for a contribution to such a fund to fail to inform such employee of the political purposes of such fund at the time of such solicitation; and

"(C) for any person soliciting an employee for a contribution to such a fund to fail to inform such employee, at the time of such solicitation, of his right to refuse to so contribute without any reprisal.

"(4)(A) Except as provided in subparagraphs (B), (C), and (D), it shall be unlawful—

"(i) for a corporation, or a separate segregated fund established by a corporation, to solicit contributions to such a fund from any person other than its stockholders and their families and its executive or administrative personnel and their families, and

"(ii) for a labor organization, or a separate segregated fund established by a labor organization, to solicit contributions to such a fund from any person other than its members and their families.

"(B) it shall not be unlawful under this section for a corporation, a labor organization, or a separate segregated fund established by such corporation or such labor organization, to make 2 written solicitations for contributions during the calendar year from any stockholder, executive or administrative personnel, or employee of a corporation or the families of such persons. A solicitation under this subparagraph may be made only by mail addressed to stockholders, executive or administrative personnel, or employees at their residence and shall be so designed that the corporation, labor organization, or separate segregated fund conducting such solicitation cannot determine who makes a contribution of $50 or less as a result of such solicitation and who does not make such a contribution.

"(C) This paragraph shall not prevent a membership organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock, or a separate segregated fund established by a membership organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock, from soliciting contributions to such a fund from members of such organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock.

"(D) This paragraph shall not prevent a trade association or a separate segregated fund established by a trade association from soliciting contributions from the stockholders and executive or administrative personnel of the member corporations of such trade association and the families of such stockholders or personnel to the extent that such solicitation of such stockholders and personnel, and their families, has been separately and specifically approved by the member corporation involved, and such member corporation does not approve any such solicitation by more than one such trade association in any calendar year.

"(5) Notwithstanding any other law, any method of soliciting voluntary contributions or of facilitating the making of voluntary contributions to a separate segregated fund established by a corporation, permitted by law to corporations with regard to stockholders and executive or administrative personnel, shall also be permitted to labor organizations with regard to their members.

"(6) Any corporation, including its subsidiaries, branches, divisions, and affiliates, that utilizes a method of soliciting voluntary contributions or facilitating the making of voluntary contributions, shall make available such method, on written request and at a cost sufficient only to reimburse the corporation for the expenses incurred thereby, to a labor organization representing any members working for such corporation, its subsidiaries, branches, divisions, and affiliates.

"Executive or administrative personnel."

"(7) For purposes of this section, the term 'executive or administrative personnel' means individuals employed by a corporation who are paid on a salary, rather than hourly, basis and who have policymaking, managerial, professional, or supervisory responsibilities.

"CONTRIBUTIONS BY GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS

2 USC 441c.

"SEC. 322. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person—

"(1) who enters into any contract with the United States or any department or agency thereof either for the rendition of personal services or furnishing any material, supplies, or equipment to the United States or any department or agency thereof or for selling any land or building to the United States or any department or agency thereof, if payment for the performance of such contract or payment for such material, supplies, equipment, land, or building is to be made in whole or in part from funds appropriated by the Congress, at any time between the commencement of negotiations for and the later of (A) the completion of performance under; or (B) the termination of negotiations for, such contract or furnishing of material, supplies, equipment, land, or buildings, directly or indirectly to make any contribution of money or other things of value, or to promise expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution to any political party, committee, or candidate for public office or to any person for any political purpose or use; or

"(2) knowingly to solicit any such contribution from any such person for any such purpose during any such period.

"(b) This section does not prohibit or make unlawful the establishment or administration of, or the solicitation of contributions to, any separate segregated fund by any corporation, labor organization, membership organization, cooperative, or corporation without capital stock for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, unless the provisions of section 321 prohibit or make unlawful the establishment or administration of, or the solicitation of contributions to, such fund. Each specific prohibition, allowance, and duty applicable to a corporation, labor organization, or separate segregated fund under section 321 applies to a corporation, labor organization, or separate segregated fund to which this subsection applies.

"(c) For purposes of this section, the term 'labor organization' has the meaning given it by section 321(b)(1).

"PUBLICATION OR DISTRIBUTION OF POLITICAL STATEMENTS

"SEC. 323. Whenever any person makes an expenditure for the purpose of financing communications expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate through any broadcasting station, newspaper, magazine, outdoor advertising facility, direct mailing, or any other type of general public political advertising, such communication— 2 USC 441d.

"(1) if authorized by a candidate, his authorized political committees, or their agents, shall clearly and conspicuously, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commission, state that the communication has been authorized; or

"(2) if not authorized by a candidate, his authorized political committees, or their agents, shall clearly and conspicuously, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commission, state that the communication is not authorized by any candidate, and state the name of the person who made or financed the expenditure for the communication, including, in the case of a political committee, the name of any affiliated or connected organization required to be disclosed under section 303(b)(2). 2 USC 433.

"CONTRIBUTIONS BY FOREIGN NATIONALS

"SEC. 324. (a) It shall be unlawful for a foreign national directly or through any other person to make any contribution of money or other thing of value, or to promise expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, in connection with an election to any political office or in connection with any primary election, convention, or caucus held to select candidates for any political office; or for any person to solicit, accept, or receive any such contribution from a foreign national. 2 USC 441e.

"(b) As used in this section, the term 'foreign national' means— "Foreign national."

"(1) a foreign principal, as such term is defined by section 1(b) of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938 (22 U.S.C. 611 (b)), except that the term 'foreign national' shall not include any individual who is a citizen of the United States; or

"(2) an individual who is not a citizen of the United States and who is not lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as defined by section 101(a)(20) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(20)).

"PROHIBITION OF CONTRIBUTIONS IN NAME OF ANOTHER

2 USC 441f. "SEC. 325. No person shall make a contribution in the name of another person or knowingly permit his name to be used to effect such a contribution, and no person shall knowingly accept a contribution made by one person in the name of another person.

"LIMITATION ON CONTRIBUTION OF CURRENCY

2 USC 441g. "SEC. 326. No person shall make contributions of currency of the United States or currency of any foreign country to or for the benefit of any candidate which, in the aggregate, exceed $100 with respect to any campaign of such candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office.

"FRAUDULENT MISREPRESENTATION OF CAMPAIGN AUTHORITY

2 USC 441h. "SEC. 327. No person who is a candidate for Federal office or an employee or agent of such a candidate shall—

"(1) fraudulently misrepresent himself or any committee or organization under his control as speaking or writing or otherwise acting for or on behalf of any other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof on a matter which is damaging to such other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof; or

"(2) willfully and knowingly participate in or conspire to participate in any plan, scheme, or design to violate paragraph (1).

"ACCEPTANCE OF EXCESSIVE HONORARIUMS

2 USC 441i. "SEC. 328. No person while an elected or appointed officer or employee of any branch of the Federal Government shall accept—

"(1) any honorarium of more than $2,000 (excluding amounts accepted for actual travel and subsistence expenses for such person and his spouse or an aide to such person, and excluding amounts paid or incurred for any agents' fees or commissions) for any appearance, speech, or article; or

"(2) honorariums (not prohibited by paragraph (1) of this section) aggregating more than $25,000 in any calendar year.

"PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS

2 USC 441j. "SEC. 329. (a) Any person, following the date of the enactment of this section, who knowingly and willfully commits a violation of any provision or provisions of this Act which involves the making, receiving, or reporting of any contribution or expenditure having a value in the aggregate of $1,000 or more during a calendar year shall be fined in an amount which does not exceed the greater of $25,000 or 300 percent of the amount of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both. In the case of a knowing and willful violation of section 321(b)(3), including such a violation of the provisions of such section as applicable through section 322(b), of section 325, or of section 323, the penalties set forth in this section shall apply to a violation involving an amount having a value in the aggregate of $250 or more during a calendar year. In the case of a knowing and willful violation of section 327, the penalties set forth in this section shall apply without regard to whether the making, receiving, or reporting of a contribution or expenditure of $1,000 or more is involved.

"(b) A defendant in any criminal action brought for the violation of a provision of this Act, or of a provision of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, may introduce as evidence of his lack of knowledge of or intent to commit the offense for which the action was brought a conciliation agreement entered into between the defendant and the Commission under section 313 which specifically deals with the act or failure to act constituting such offense and which is still in effect. 26 USC 9001, 9031. Ante, p. 483.

"(c) In any criminal action brought for a violation of a provision of this Act, or of a provision of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the court before which such action is brought shall take into account, in weighing the seriousness of the offense and in considering the appropriateness of the penalty to be imposed if the defendant is found guilty, whether—

"(1) the specific act or failure to act which constitutes the offense for which the action was brought is the subject of a conciliation agreement entered into between the defendant and the Commission under section 313;

"(2) the conciliation agreement is in effect; and

"(3) the defendant is, with respect to the violation involved, in compliance with the conciliation agreement.".

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 113. Section 319 of the Act (2 U.S.C. 439c), as redesignated by section 105, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following sentence: "There are authorized to be appropriated to the Commission $6,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, $1,500,000 for the period beginning July 1, 1976, and ending September 30, 1976, and $6,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1977.".

SAVINGS PROVISION

SEC. 114. Except as otherwise provided by this Act, the repeal by this Act of any section or penalty shall not have the effect of releasing or extinguishing any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under such section or penalty, and such section or penalty shall be treated as remaining in force for the purpose of sustaining any proper action or prosecution for the enforcement of any penalty, forfeiture, or liability. 2 USC 441 note.

"(d) WITHDRAWAL BY CANDIDATE.—In any case in which an individual ceases to be a candidate as a result of the operation of the last 26 USC 9002. sentence of section 9002(2), such individual—

"(1) shall no longer be eligible to receive any payments under Ante, p. 498. section 9006, except that such individual shall be eligible to receive payments under such section to defray qualified campaign expenses incurred while actively seeking election to the office of President of the United States or to the office of Vice President of the United States in more than one State; and

"(2) shall pay to the Secretary or his delegate, as soon as practicable after the date upon which such individual ceases to be a candidate, an amount equal to the amount of payments received by such individual under section 9006 which are not used to defray qualified campaign expenses.".

26 USC 9032. (b)(1) Section 9032(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (defining candidate) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The term 'candidate' shall not include any individual who is not actively conducting campaigns in more than one State in connection with seeking nomination for election to be President of the United States.".

26 USC 9033. (2) Section 9033 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to eligibility for payments) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) TERMINATION OF PAYMENTS.—

"(1) GENERAL RULE.—Except as provided by paragraph (2), 26 USC 9037. no payment shall be made to any individual under section 9037—

"(A) if such individual ceases to be a candidate as a result of the operation of the last sentence of section 9032(2); or

"(B) more than 30 days after the date of the second consecutive primary election in which such individual receives less than 10 percent of the number of votes cast for all candidates of the same party for the same office in such primary election, if such individual permitted or authorized the appearance of his name on the ballot, unless such individual certifies to the Commission that he will not be an active candidate in the primary involved.

"(2) QUALIFIED CAMPAIGN EXPENSES; PAYMENTS TO SECRETARY.—Any candidate who is ineligible under paragraph (1) to receive any payments under section 9037 shall be eligible to continue to receive payments under section 9037 to defray qualified campaign expenses incurred before the date upon which such candidate becomes ineligible under paragraph (1).

"(3) CALCULATION OF VOTING PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of paragraph (1)(B), if the primary elections involved are held in more than one State on the same date, a candidate shall be treated as receiving that percentage of the votes on such date which he received in the primary election conducted on such date in which he received the greatest percentage vote.

"(4) REESTABLISHMENT OF ELIGIBILITY.—

"(A) In any case in which an individual is ineligible to receive payments under section 9037 as a result of the operation of paragraph (1)(A), the Commission may subsequently determine that such individual is a candidate upon a finding that such individual is actively seeking election to the office of President of the United States in more than one State. The Commission shall make such determination without requiring such individual to reestablish his eligibility to receive payments under subsection (a). 26 USC 9037. Determination by Commission.

"(B) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1)(B), a candidate whose payments have been terminated under paragraph (1)(B) may again receive payments (including amounts he would have received but for paragraph (1)(B)) if he receives 20 percent or more of the total number of votes cast for candidates of the same party in a primary election held after the date on which the election was held which was the basis for terminating payments to him.".

(c) The amendments made by this section shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act. Effective date. 26 USC 9002 note.
