I. PURPOSE AND SUMMARY

S. 558, the Presidential Library Donation Reform Act of 2015, brings transparency to the presidential library fundraising process by requiring disclosure of donor names and contribution amounts for donations that occur while a president is still in office or are received prior to the transfer of a library to the custody of the Archives. The legislation also requires the Archives to disclose the donations on its website in a searchable, sortable, and downloadable format. Under existing law, there are no restrictions on fundraising for the libraries, funds can be raised while the president is still in office, and the source of the donations is not required to be disclosed.

II. BACKGROUND AND THE NEED FOR LEGISLATION

Presidential libraries allow the public to access information regarding past presidents and their administrations. The presidential library system formally began in 1939, when President Franklin D. Roosevelt developed the concept of a federally maintained presidential library to house his presidential papers and other historical materials.¹ Friends of President Roosevelt formed a corporation to raise funds for the construction of a library located on the grounds of his family home in Hyde Park, New York. Today, the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) administers a nationwide network of presidential libraries housing the records of presidents dating back to Herbert Hoover.² The libraries are a valuable resource for historians, academics, researchers and the public.

The Presidential Libraries Act of 1955 established the basic policy for creating federally maintained presidential libraries.³ To establish a presidential library, friends, family members and associates of an incumbent president generally establish a private foundation or other organization to raise funds to obtain a site and to construct the facility. Once completed, the facility is turned over, along with an operating endowment, to NARA. NARA operates and maintains presidential libraries using the operating endowment and federally appropriated funds. The libraries are typically located either in the former president's hometown or on a university campus. They house the official records and papers of former presidents, as well as documentary materials of the president's family and associates. To address concerns about the increasing taxpayer cost of presidential libraries, Congress amended the Presidential Libraries Act in 1986,⁴ establishing certain reporting requirements for NARA, imposing architectural and design conditions, and setting fiscal limitations on future presidential libraries, including a requirement that presidential libraries enter the federal system with an operating endowment in tow, in order to reduce the ongoing cost to the taxpayer of maintaining the libraries.⁵

Presidential libraries have become multipurpose institutes that, in addition to housing the official papers of a former president, can include museums, conference facilities, and classrooms. The cost of these facilities can be substantial. Press accounts indicate that the Jimmy Carter Presidential library cost $26 million to build,⁶ the George H.W. Bush library center cost $83 million to build,⁷ the William J. Clinton library center cost $165 million to build,⁸ and the George W. Bush library cost approximately $250 million to construct.⁹ The Barack Obama Foundation has raised between $2.9 million and $6.2 million for President Obama's library through December 2014.¹⁰ The Obama Foundation is voluntarily disclosing donations on its web site, broken into bands of the value of the donation (e.g., $200 to $100,000). However, there is no statutory provision requiring this disclosure and therefore there is no way for the public to know whether the disclosure of donors is complete and timely. It furthermore lacks specific details, such as the actual amount of the donation and the occupation of the donor.

Under current law, a sitting president can raise an unlimited amount of money for a presidential library, but has no obligation to publically report that information. Foreign governments, foreign individuals, and foreign corporations all may make donations to presidential libraries if the libraries are willing to accept them. Without transparency into these donations, a sitting president could potentially take an official action in exchange for a donation to his or her presidential library and the public would be unaware.

The opaqueness of the sources of tens of millions of dollars in donations for the benefit of a sitting president has led to bipartisan concerns of potential impropriety, a fear that donors may seek to use library donations as a means to secure special access or political favors.

Witnesses at a March 1, 2007 hearing conducted by the House Committee on Oversight and Government Reform supported the need for disclosure of presidential library donations. They argued that undisclosed contributions create a perception of impropriety and noted the benefits of disclosure to public confidence in the political process. Sheila Krumholz, the Executive Director of the Center for Responsive Politics testified:

Herein lies the central concern: that those who donate money to presidential libraries will in return receive special access to, and favors from, the president and the federal government. To minimize the potential for that sort of payback, and to build trust among a citizenry that already questions the ethics of elected officials, public disclosure of contributions to presidential library projects seems both appropriate and wise.¹¹

The Presidential Library Donation Reform Act of 2015 brings transparency to the presidential library fundraising process by requiring presidential fundraising organizations to disclose to NARA, on a quarterly basis, basic information about each donation greater than $200, including the source and date of the donation, in an electronic searchable and sortable format. This requirement would remain in place until a president leaves office or such time as NARA assumes operational control of the facility—whichever occurs later. To provide public access to the data, NARA is then required to post the disclosure information in a searchable, sortable, and downloadable format on its website.

¹¹ Statement of Sheila Krumholz, Executive Director of the Center for Responsive Politics, House Oversight and Government Reform Hearing, Reform to the Presidential Library Donation Disclosure Process, at 36, (February 28, 2007).

S. 558 would also institute criminal penalties for presidential fundraising organizations that knowingly submit false information with respect to a disclosure. Similar penalties would apply to individuals that knowingly submit false information to a presidential fundraising organization with respect to a contribution. Ultimately, these reforms will bring transparency to the presidential library fundraising process, which occurs while presidents are still in office and in a position to provide favorable treatment to potential donors.

III. LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

S. 558, the Presidential Library Donation Reform Act of 2015, was introduced on February 25, 2015, by Ranking Member Carper and Chairman Johnson and the bill was then referred to the Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs.

The Committee considered the bill at a March 4, 2015, business meeting and ordered the bill reported favorably by voice vote. Members present for the vote were Senators Johnson, Portman, Lankford, Ayotte, Ernst, Carper, McCaskill, Baldwin, Heitkamp, and Peters.

IV. SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF THE BILL, AS REPORTED

Section 1. Short title

This section provides the bill's short title, the Presidential Library Reform Act of 2015."

Section 2. Presidential Libraries

Section 2(a) adds a new section (h) to 44 U.S.C. 2112 (part of the Presidential Libraries Act) to govern the disclosure of donations made to presidential libraries.

New Section 2112(h)(1) defines two terms. "Contribution" means a contribution or contributions made by an individual or entity to a presidential library fundraising organization totaling not less than $200 (whether monetary or in-kind) in a single calendar quarter. "Presidential Library Fundraising Organization" means an organization established to raise funds to create, maintain, expand, or conduct activities at either a presidential archival depository or any facility relating to a presidential archival depository.

New Section 2112(h)(2) requires presidential library fundraising organizations to submit quarterly reports to the Archivist of the United States with information about each contributor who gave the organization more than $200 that quarter. This information should be submitted in a searchable and sortable format and shall include: (1) the total value of each contribution, (2) the source of the contribution, (3) in the case of individuals, the occupation of the source, and (4) the date of each contribution. The Archivist must then publish this information within 30 days of receiving it on a website that is free for the public to access and that is searchable, sortable, and downloadable. This reporting requirement expires on the later of the president's last day in office or the date on which the Archivist has accepted, taken title to, or entered into an agreement to use any land for the presidential library.

New Section 2112(h)(3) establishes legal penalties for any person or fundraising organization submitting false information with respect to a contribution that is made to a presidential library fundraising organization.

New Section 2112(h)(4) makes it unlawful for any person to knowingly and willfully make a contribution in the name of another person; allow the name of a person to be used by another to make a contribution; or accept a contribution made by one person in the name of another. These provisions include prohibiting the making of a contribution through a corporation or other legal entity in order to conceal the identity of the person actually providing the contribution.

New Section 2112(h)(5) authorizes the Archivist to promulgate regulations necessary to carry out the new subsection. Section 2(b) of the bill specifies that the disclosure requirements contained in the legislation apply only to contributions made after date of enactment.

V. EVALUATION OF REGULATORY IMPACT

Pursuant to the requirement of paragraph 11(b)(1) of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate the Committee has considered the regulatory impact of this bill. The legislation will not result in additional regulation, increased economic impact, adverse impact on personal privacy, or additional paperwork on any individuals or businesses. The Congressional Budget Office confirmed that S. 558 contains no intergovernmental or private-sector mandates as defined in UMRA.

VI. CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE COST ESTIMATE

MARCH 17, 2015.

Hon. RON JOHNSON,
Chairman, Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the enclosed cost estimate for S. 558, the Presidential Library Donation Reform Act of 2015.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them. The CBO staff contact is Matthew Pickford.

Sincerely,

DOUGLAS W. ELMENDORF.

Enclosure.

S. 558—Presidential Library Donation Reform Act of 2015

S. 558 would require an organization that raises funds for a Presidential library to disclose the sources and amounts of such funds. Such organizations would have to identify any contributors of $200 or more in a calendar quarter while the President is in office, as well as during the period before the federal government takes possession of the library or the President leaves office, whichever is later. Fundraising organizations would be required to provide this information to the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA). The bill would direct NARA to make this information freely available on the Internet. Finally, the legislation would establish criminal penalties, including fines, for violations of its provisions.

CBO estimates that implementing the legislation would have no significant effect on NARA's administrative costs, which are subject to appropriation. We also estimate that any increases in federal spending to enforce penalties related to the laws concerning donations to Presidential libraries would be insignificant.

Because those prosecuted and convicted under S. 558 could be subject to criminal and civil fines, enacting the legislation could increase federal revenues and associated direct spending. However, CBO estimates that such effects would not be significant in any year because of the small number of cases likely to be involved. Because the legislation could affect direct spending and revenues, however, pay-as-you-go procedures apply.

S. 558 contains no intergovernmental mandates as defined in the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act (UMRA) and would not affect the budgets of state, local, or tribal governments.

S. 558 would impose a private-sector mandate, as defined in UMRA, by requiring organizations established for the purpose of raising funds for Presidential libraries or their related facilities to submit information to NARA. The number of such organizations is small, and the cost to submit reports would be minimal. CBO estimates, therefore, that the direct cost of the mandate would fall well below the annual threshold established by UMRA for private-sector mandates ($154 million in 2015, adjusted annually for inflation).

The CBO staff contacts for this estimate are Matthew Pickford (for federal costs) and Paige Piper/Bach (for the private-sector impact). The estimate was approved by Theresa Gullo, Deputy Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.
