Purposes of Faculty Development.

- 2.1. Teaching, expanding knowledge and creativity, and devoting knowledge to public service are the primary goals of West Virginia's public colleges and universities. These goals are achieved primarily by and through college and university faculty. Therefore, the efforts of Marshall University in supporting, developing, and renewing the faculty members directly involved in helping West Virginians learn are vitally important to accomplishing the mission and goals of institutions of higher education.
- 2.2. Marshall University recognizes the general and specific benefits derived from efforts to improve faculty members' professorial and professional effectiveness. Students of our public colleges and universities rely on current, knowledgeable, and relevant instruction and benefit from research that improves teaching skill and knowledge. The people and economy of West Virginia benefit from new applications of a knowledge and technology that enable more and better jobs, a higher standard of living, and enhanced knowledge and quality of life. Faculties and individual faculty members benefit from being able to teach, acquire new knowledge, serve public needs, and perform institutional and professional roles more effectively. Our institutions of higher learning benefit from enhanced capacity and flexibility to carry out their missions in an era where it is more practical to enhance or renew skills and knowledge of existing faculty members.
- 2.3. Therefore, Marshall University affirms the unique, integral contribution of faculty members to the mission of higher education: Teaching, producing scholarly work that contributes to knowledge and creativity, and serving public and institutional needs. The University further recognizes through its policy and actions that the knowledge and skills of faculties and individual faculty members need to be developed, maintained, supported, and renewed, and that the primary responsibility for accomplishing these ends resides at the institutional level.

Faculty Development defined.

Recognized beneficial components of faculty development are professional scholarly and creative development, personal development, and organizational development.
- 3.2. Examples of valid, tangible faculty development activities include, but are not limited to: Sabbatical or academic leaves to complete a doctorate, expand existing knowledge, learn a new field needed in the curriculum, or achieve other purposes; workshops for improving faculty teaching skills; workshops and internships to enhance faculty roles in academic leadership; seed money grants that enable faculty to pursue larger, external grants or contracts; projects to improve student advising or assessment of student learning; summer grants or summer mini-sabbaticals to develop a needed new program or course, conduct research on teaching, or accomplish other beneficial aims; attendance at academic conferences and meetings; and programs to better orient faculty members and improve their skills.

- 6.2. Financial roles. Research and experience show that faculty development is most effective when dependable, consistent funding enables proper planning and implementation of development programs. In order to achieve continuity of financial support for faculty development, each public college or university should establish a benchmark level of financial commitment to faculty development which the college or university should meet or surpass each year. This level can be expressed as a percentage of its Educational and General expenditures or by some other appropriate measure. The level of financial effort should be appropriate to the University's mission and needs, and should be adjusted biennially to reflect changes in mission and needs.
